Laserna's speciality was the tonadilla or skit for one to four actors, of which he wrote at least 700, some to his own texts. 684 of these along with 78 sainetes are in Madrid (E-Mm), and several were circulated as far as Lima and Mexico City. Usually showing piquant scenes from contemporary middle and low life, these genre pieces lasted no more than 20 minutes and were inserted between acts of a play or opera. Although El majo y la italiana fingida (1778; ed. in Subirá, 1930) involves a girl who, to pose as an Italian, sings in Italian operatic style, Laserna's early tonadillas on the whole were exempt from the influence of bel canto (in 1790 he even proposed founding a school to preserve authentic Spanish traditions). His proverbial folkloric interests are exemplified in such tonadillas as La viscaína (1784) and Las provincias españolas (1789), both of which end with quotations of the most popular of all Basque folktunes, Iru damatxo donostiako ('Three young maidens of San Sebastián'), 42 years before the earliest publication of the tune. In his last period, however, he had to adopt the Italian vogue in order to have his pieces produced. Laserna also wrote the music for eight melólogos (1791–7) and for several zarzuelas, as well as instrumental pieces and prologues. Two excerpts from his melólogos are edited in Subirá (1950) and five vocal selections appear in Joaquín Nin's Classiques espagnols du chant (Paris, 1926).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ES (J. Subirá); StevensonRB

J. Gómez: 'Don Blas de Laserna: un capítulo de la historia del teatro lírico español visto en la vida del último tonadillero', Revista de la Biblioteca, Archivo y Museo del Ayuntamiento de Madrid, ii (1925), 406–30, 531–48, iii (1926), 222–40; repr. in Escritos de Julio Gómez, ed. A. Iglesias (Madrid, 1986)

J. Subirá: La tonadilla escénica, iii (Madrid, 1930), 69–78, 117–45

J. Subirá: El compositor Iriarte (1750–1791) y el cultivo español del melólogo (melodrama), ii (Barcelona, 1950), 265–6, 272–5, 422–7

J. Gômez, J.L.de Arrese and E. Aunós: El músico Blas de Laserna (Corella, 1952)

J. Subirá: Catálogo de la Sección de música de la Biblioteca municipal de Madrid (Madrid, 1965), 105–94, 337–48

R. Stevenson: 'National Library Publications in Brazil, Peru and Venezuela', Inter-American Music Review, iii (1980–01), 39–48, esp. 44

M.C. García-Matos Alonso: 'Un folklorista del siglo XVIII: "Don Preciso"', RdMc, iv (1981), 295–315, esp. 302–03

D. Preciado: 'Sobre las concidas canciones que aprovechó el teatro', La música para teatro en España: Cuenca 1986 [RdMc, x/2 (1987)], 641–4

ROBERT STEVENSON

Laserna, Estacio de. See SERNA, ESTACIO DE LA.

La Serre. See PELLEGRIN, SIMON-JOSEPH.

Las Huelgas Manuscript. See SOURCES, MS, §V, 2.

La Sirène. French firm of publishers. It was founded as Editions de la Sirène in Paris in 1918, establishing a reputation from the outset for publishing new music, and in its first year published Jean Cocteau's book Le coq et l'arlequin, illustrated by Picasso. The firm's most celebrated publication is Stravinsky's piano transcription of his Rag-Time, with cover by Picasso ; it was published in 1919 in an edition of 1000 copies. The following year La Sirène published Milhaud's Le boeuf sur le toit, with a frontispiece by Dufy. Other important early publications include Satie's Socrate and Poulenc's Bestiaire. In about 1918 La Sirène purchased the stock of Paul Dupont, whose firm, established in 1891, was later known as the Société Nouvelle d'Editions Musicales. Dupont's publications included Debussy's Nocturne for piano (1892) and Claude Terrasse's operetta Panthéon-Courcelles (1899; with a cover by Terrasse's brother-in-law Pierre Bonnard). In 1927 Michel Dillard became director; under his leadership the firm published music by Jean Françaix, Martinů, Nabokov, Tansman and others. About 1927 the firm became known as La Sirène Musicale; it was acquired by Max Eschig of Paris in 1936.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.J. Fuld and F.Barulich: 'Harmonizing the Arts: Original Graphic Designs for Printed Music by World-Famous Artists', Notes, xliii (1986–7), 259–71

NIGEL SIMEONE

Laskine, Lily (b Paris, 31 Aug 1893; d Paris, 4 Jan 1988). French harpist. She studied with Alphonse Hasselmans at the Paris Conservatoire, gaining a premier prix in 1906, and making her London début the following year. From 1909 to 1926 she was a member of the Paris Opéra orchestra and subsequently played with many other orchestras, notably those of the Koussevitzky concert series (from 1921), the Lamoureux Association (1921–40 and 1943–5) and the National Radio Orchestra (from 1934). Her international career began with appearances at Donaueschingen in 1934, followed by concerts in London, Rome, Brussels and Amsterdam. With Moyse, Delecluse and the Pro Arte Quartet, she made the first recording of Ravel's Introduction et Allegro in 1938, and she was the regular duo partner of Jean-Pierre Rampal for some 40 years. Laskine was professor of the harp at the Paris Conservatoire, 1948–58. In later years she recorded many interesting works by lesser composers, including concertos by Bochsa, Jadin, Krumpholtz and Gossec, and works for two harps with Marielle Nordmann. She is the dedicatee of Roussel's only work for harp, the Impromptu op.86 of 1919, and of Jolivet's Concerto of 1952, recorded with the composer in 1957. She was admitted to the Légion d'Honneur in 1936, and made a Chevalier in 1958. She was also a Commandeur de l'Ordre des Arts et Lettres.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Nordmann: 'Lily Laskine', American Harp Journal, x/2 (1985), 3–7

M. Nordmann: 'Lily Laskine', Bulletin de l'Association Internationale des Harpistes et des Amis de la Harpe (Paris, 1988) [commemorative issue]

W.M. Govea: Nineteenth- and Twentieth-Century Harpists: a Bio-critical Sourcebook (Westport, CT, 1995), 153–63

ANN GRIFFITHS

Laskovsky, Ivan Fyodorovich (b St Petersburg, 1799; d St Petersburg, 1855). Russian composer. His father was of Polish descent, his mother a native Russian. After serving as an officer in the Preobrazhensky Regiment from 1817 until 1832 he took a post in the war office. He studied composition with Joseph Hunke (1792–1883) and the piano with John Field. He was known as a fine pianist but is remembered particularly for his valuable contributions to the Russian piano repertory during the first half of the 19th century. Some of his earliest compositions appeared in the Harpe du Nord from 1822 onwards; a march, two waltzes and a polonaise were published in an Album musical in 1826, and thereafter his pieces appeared frequently in annual albums and journals. A nocturne and several dance pieces were published in the supplement to the Liricheskiy al'bom na 1832 god ('Album of Lyrical Songs for 1832', St Petersburg) which Laskovsky produced himself in collaboration with the composer Norov. Glinka included a number of Laskovsky's pieces in his Sobraniye muzïkal'nïkh p'yes 'Collection of Musical Pieces', St Petersburg, 1839), and Balakirev, who was a great admirer of Laskovsky's works, prepared an edition, Oeuvres complètes pour piano de Jean Laskowsky (St Petersburg, 1858), which contains 78 piano pieces (over 100 works are now known to have been written).

Laskovsky's piano compositions show a considerable technical advance on earlier Russian composers such as Genishta, Aleksandr Gurilyov and Yesaulov, and in many respects they are the precursors of the piano works of Tchaikovsky, Balakirev and other composers in the second half of the century. His mazurkas and waltzes show a certain stylistic affinity with Chopin, whose works he knew well and often performed at concerts. He also composed two sets of variations on Russian folk melodies, one of which is the Kamarinskaya, on which Field had based a set of keyboard variations and on which Glinka composed his Fantasia. Laskovsky's most notable extended pieces are a Nocturne in B♭ minor/major and a Ballade in F♯ minor; both make extensive use of the piano's range, and skilfully exploit its ability to provide dramatic contrasts between lyrical and percussive sounds. Besides solo piano music Laskovsky completed a tarantella for orchestra, a trio, and three string quartets, in E minor, G major and G minor, the last of which has been published in a modern edition (Moscow, 1947).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L.A. Barenboym and V.I.Muzalevsky: Khrestomatiya po istorii fortepiannoy muzïki v rossii (Moscow and Leningrad, 1949) [incl. Nocturne in B♭ minor/major and Ballade in F♯ minor]

V.I. Muzalevsky: Russkaya fortepiannaya muzïka [Russian piano music] (Moscow and Leningrad, 1949, rev. 2/1961 as Russkaya fortep'yannoye iskusstvo [The art of the piano in Russia]), 237–46

C. Cui: Izbrannïye stat'i [Selected articles], ed. Yu.A. Kremylov (Leningrad, 1952), 246–51

L.N. Raaben: Instrumental'nïy ansambl' v russkoy muzïke [The instrumental ensemble in Russian music] (Moscow, 1961), 134–7

N.A. Kopchevsky, ed.: Russkaya fortepiannaya muzïka, i (Moscow, 1986), 162–70

GEOFFREY NORRIS

Lasoń, Aleksander (b Siemianowice, Silesia, 10 Nov 1951). Polish composer and pianist. He studied jazz (1970–74) and composition with Józef Świder (1973–9) at the Katowice Academy of Music. In 1975 he joined the teaching staff of the academy and of the Silesian University, Cieszyn. He has received a number of awards, including first prize at the UNESCO International Rostrum (in the category of young composers) in 1980 for Symphony no.1; the Beethoven Prize of the City of Bonn for Symphony no.2, also in 1980; and a Lutosławski scholarship in 1987. His first and second quartets were performed at the ISCM World Music Days in 1985 and 1990.

Lasoń's compositional style is instantly recognizable. His music is youthful, tonally centred and openly expressive as well as being obsessive in its use of motifs and strictly organized. He shares an affinity with Bartók and with 20th-century pre-serial French music, echoes of which may be heard in the Second Symphony (1977–9). But his most representative works, including the string quartets, are those which sublimate Polish folk or neoclassical influences. Heterophonic roulades, chorale textures, powerful dynamic contrasts and rhythmic drive serve to invigorate his more abstract pieces. His later orchestral works, for example Katedra (1989) contain richer textures, while Concerto festivo achieves a heightened lyricism.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Impresje [Impressions], pf, orch, 1974; Sym. no.1, wind, 2 pf, perc, 1975; Sym. no.2 'Concertante', pf, orch, 1977–9; Góry [Mountains], 1980; Vc Conc. 'Pablo Casals in memoriam', 1985; Katedra [Cathedral], 1989; Hymn and Aria, str, 1993; Concerto festivo, vn, orch, 1995; Credo, 1997

Vocal: 7 pieśni [7 Songs] (T. Snopkowska), S, pf, 1973; 3 pieśni (K. Iłłakowicz), A, ob, pf trio, 1983; Sym. no.3 '1999', chorus, orch, 1997; Musica sacra-Sanctus, 4 male vv, org, str, 1998

Chbr and solo inst: Muzyka kameralna no.1 'Stalowawolska' [Of Stalowa Wola], pf, str qt, 1974–8; Sonata no.1, vn, 1975; Conc., pf, 3 tapes, 1976; Muzyka kameralna no.2, 2 hn, tpt, trbn, tuba, pf, 1976; Muzyka w 4 częściach [Music in 4 Movts], db, pf, 1977; Muzyka kameralna no.3, 2 ob, 2 hn, 2 tpt, tuba, perc, pf, 1978; Str Qt no.1, 1980; Wind Qnt 'Wiosna' [Spring], 1981; Muzyka kameralna no.5 '4 pory roku' [The 4 Seasons], cl, trbn, pf, str, 1981–4; Sonata no.2, vn, 1984; Concertino, vn, pf, 1986; Str Qt no.2, 1987; Str Qt no.3, 1993; Relief dla Andrzeja [Relief for Andrzej], str qt, 1995; 2 plus 2 dla Witolda, vn, vc, 2 pf, 1997

Principal publishers: PWM, Edition Modern, Tonos

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Szwajgier: 'Symfonia A. Lasonia', Wokół słowa, sensu i struktury w muzyce [On word, meaning and structure in music] (Kraków, 1977), 83–9

R. Augustyn: 'The New Generation of Polish Composers: III', Polish Music (1978), no.2, pp.12–16

B. Młynarczyk: 'II Symfonia "Koncertująca" Aleksandra Lasońia', RM, xxxiv/9 (1990), 4 only

J. Bauman-Szulakowska: 'Aleksander Lasoń: estetyka, ewolucja, inspiracje', Inspiracje w muzyce XX wieku (Warsaw, 1993), 120–27

Opcje: kwartalnik kulturlny (1997), no.17 [Lasoń issue]

ADRIAN THOMAS

Lasos of Hermione. See LASUS OF HERMIONE.

Lassen, Eduard (b Copenhagen, 13 April 1830; d Weimar, 15 Jan 1904). Belgian composer of Danish origin, active in Germany. He studied at the Brussels Conservatory, receiving prizes for piano (1844) and composition (1847), and winning the Belgian Prix de Rome (1851), which enabled him to tour Germany and Rome and meet Spohr and Liszt. Returning to Brussels in 1855, he was unable to secure a performance of his five-act opera Le roi Edgard, but this was successfully produced under Liszt in Weimar in 1857. He was offered the position of music director at Weimar and in 1858 succeeded Liszt as court music director, a post he held until his retirement in 1895. He was awarded an honorary doctorate by the University of Jena.

Lassen's operas Frauenlob and Der Gefangene did not have lasting success, though his music to Goethe's Faust gained popularity and was praised by Liszt. His solo songs and duets show a variety of treatment from the folklike Sei nur ruhig, lieber Robin or the songs with dance rhythms to the through-composed Abendlandschaft (with its more interesting modulations and accompaniment) to the rhapsodic and improvisatory Ich hab im Traum geweinet. Many of his songs, for instance Vöglein wohin so schnell, were translated into both English and French and were popular at the end of the 19th century.

WORKS

many MSS in D-WRdn

STAGE

Le roi Edgard, 1855 (romantic op, 5, Lassen and E. Pasqué), unperf.; rev. as Landgraf Ludwigs Brautfahrt, Weimar, Hof, 10 May 1857, *D-WRdn

Frauenlob (romantic op, 3, Pasqué), Weimar, Hof, 22 May 1860, *WRdn

Le captif (oc, 1, E. Cormon, after M. de Cervantes: El captivo), Brussels, Monnaie, 24 April 1865, vs (Paris, 1866), *B-Ba, *D-WRdn; rev. as Der Gefangene, Weimar, Hof, 8 April 1869, *Mbn

Incid music: Triumph der Empfindsamkeit (Goethe); Pandora (Goethe); König Ödipus; Faust I and II (Goethe); Die Göttin Diana (after Heine); Nibelungen (Hebbel); Über allen Zauber Liebe (Calderón)

OTHER WORKS

Orch: 2 syms., D, C; Vn Conc.; Festmarsch; Festouverture; Beethovenouverture; 11 Characterstücke

Vocal: cants., choruses; many solo songs with pf or inst acc. incl., 6 Lieder von Peter Cornelius, op.5 (Leipzig, 1866), 5 biblische Bilder, op.49 (London, 1882), 5 Lieder (London, 1882)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (J.A. Deaville)

La Mara [M. Lipsius], ed.: Briefwechsel zwischen Franz Liszt und Hans von Bülow (Leipzig, 1898)

A. Bartels: Chronik des weimarischen Hoftheaters 1817–1907 (Weimar, 1908)

L. Schrickel: Geschichte des Weimarer Theaters von seinen Anfängen bis heute (Weimar, 1928)

M. Marx-Weber: 'Die Lieder Eduard Lassens', HJbMw, ii (1977), 147–85

GAYNOR G. JONES

Lasser, Johann Baptist (b Steinkirchen, 12 Aug 1751; d Munich, 21 Oct 1805). Austrian composer, singer, violinist and conductor. He studied at Linz before moving to Vienna, where he probably continued his studies but also taught. In 1781 (Wurzbach) or 1782 (Lipowsky) he married the singer Johanna Roithner (who later sang at the Munich Opera until at least 1811). The couple were at Brünn (now Brno) in 1783 as members of Waizhofer's company, and in 1785 they moved on to Linz, where Lasser directed the company in the 1786–7 season. In 1788, after a brief season as director at Eszterháza, he rejoined Waizhofer, then at Graz. In 1791 the Lassers went to Munich, where he distinguished himself at court by singing arias in all four registers, and by playing a violin concerto. Apart from a successful guest appearance as singer and violinist in Berlin in 1797 he remained in Munich for the remainder of his life, well loved and respected as both man and musician.

Despite the vocal feat of his Munich court concert it is difficult to reconcile the opinions of Lipowsky and Wurzbach that he was a tenor with statements in later books that he was a bass. Apart from a Vollständige Anleitung zur Singkunst (Munich, 1798) that was published in several editions and revisions, he achieved some renown with a series of compositions: several masses, some of them published, and a handful of Singspiele dating mainly from his Graz years. His two sons Joseph Lasser (b Vienna, 7 Nov 1782) and Emanuel Lasser (b Brünn, 20 Jan 1784) achieved some distinction as musicians, the former as a pianist (successful début in Vienna in 1794), the latter as a court singer in Munich.

WORKS

Singspiele: Die kluge Witwe, Brünn, 1782; Die glückliche Maskerade, Graz, 1788; Der Kapellmeister (J.C. Bock), ?Graz, 1789, and Vienna, Freihaus, 2 July 1790; Das wüthende Heer (C.F. Bretzner), Graz, 1789; Die Modehändlerin (F. Ebert), Graz, 1790; Die unruhige Nacht (after C. Goldoni: La notte critica), Vienna, Kärntnertor, 28 May 1790, D-Bsb; Die Huldigung der Töne (?Treue) (W. von Bube), ?Graz, *c*1790; Der Jude, Graz, 1791

Cora und Alonzo (op), ?Munich, after 1791

Other works: 3 missae, op.1 (Augsburg, 1795); 6 missae, op.2 (Augsburg, 1801); Duetti e solfeggi, A-Wgm

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB(J. Kürschner); EitnerQ; LipowskyBL; MCL; WurzbachL

C. d'Elvert: Geschichte des Theaters in Mähren und Oesterreichisch Schlesien (Brno, 1851)

C. d'Elvert: Geschichte der Musik in Mähren und Oesterr.-Schlesien (Brno, 1873)

F. Grandaur: Chronik des königlichen Hof- und Nationaltheaters in München (Munich, 1878)

A. Rille: Die Geschichte des Brünner Stadttheaters (Brno, 1885)

F. Fuhrich: Theatergeschichte Oberösterreichs im 18. Jahrhundert (Vienna, 1968)

F. Neumann: Ornamentation and Improvisation in Mozart (Princeton, NJ, 1986)

F. Neumann: 'A New Look at Mozart's Prosodic Appoggiatura', Perspectives on Mozart Performance, ed. R.L. Todd and P. Williams (Cambridge, 1991), 92–116

PETER BRANSCOMBE

Lasserson, Sascha (Shlom Laybovich) (b Vitebsk, 1 May 1890; d London, 6 July 1978). British violinist and teacher of Russian birth. His first lessons were with his father, who took him to St Petersburg at the age of six, where he entered the conservatory under Nicolai Galkin. At ten he made his début in Helsinki playing a Spohr concerto. He entered Auer's class in 1900, won a silver medal in 1909 and graduated with distinction in 1911. A solo career followed, both in Russia and abroad, and in 1914 he made a tour of England. Unable to return home after the outbreak of World War I and the Russian Revolution, he settled in London. After the foundation of the BBC he was frequently heard on the radio, where he once broadcast a complete series of Beethoven violin sonatas. He was also in demand as a teacher and became one of the most distinguished representatives of the Auer School in the West. Based in London, Lasserson attracted pupils from throughout the world. A critic once described his playing as possessing 'the requisite artistic power and consummate technique, coupled with a lack of all apparent effort'. A memorial trust was founded in his name in 1979.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CampbellGV

R. Lewin: Obituary, The Strad, lxxxix (1978), 421–5

B. Underwood: 'Sascha Lasserson', The Strad, ci (1990), 976–81

MARGARET CAMPBELL

Lasson, Mathieu (b ?Cambrai, *c*1500; d Nancy, 26 Sept 1553). French composer. He had his early training at Cambrai Cathedral, which in 1517 sent him to the University of Leuven. By 1523 he was again in Cambrai, this time as a petit vicaire. In 1527 Lasson joined the ducal chapel of Antoine de Lorraine at Nancy, where following the death of Pierrequin de Thérache he quickly became the leading musical figure at court. He was elected canon and trésorier of the collegiate church of St Georges (parish church of the ducal palace), and in the early 1530s was maître des enfants of the duke's private music chapel. Following Lasson's death in 1553, his house and possessions were the object of intense legal dispute between his colleagues at Nancy and his heirs from Cambrai, suggesting that the composer was himself originally from that diocese. In addition to his duties as teacher and landlord to the boys themselves, Lasson seems to have been responsible for a wide range of musical matters: he acquired instruments for use at court and headed the corps of singers and players who typically accompanied their patron on trips to France, all in addition to the composition of sacred and secular music per se.

Lasson's extant works show the clear impression made on his compositional practice by the heavily francophile orientation of his patrons (Antoine de Lorraine and his brother Claude de Guise were raised at the royal court along with the future King François I, and both married princesses of the Bourbon household – Renée and Antoinette). Most of his compositions (seven out of nine works) are preserved in the offerings of the official French music printer, Attaingnant. Virtute magna and Congratulamini mihi reveal his command of the symmetrical responsorial motet form and flowing polyphonic fabric favoured by many composers of the early 16th century. In manibus tuis, to a centonate psalm text, takes a rather more varied approach to composition, contrasting well-paced points of imitation with sections of solemn homorhythmic writing. His Anthoni, pater inclyte seems to be a political motet in praise of Lasson's principal patron and the dynastic heritage of the Lorraine household. Lasson's chansons are remarkable for the extent to which they show his intimate comprehension of Claudin de Sermisy's emerging conception of melodic design. No other composer of provincial France seems to have assimilated his ideal to Claudin's so quickly or so thoroughly.

WORKS

ed. in Freedman (1987) unless otherwise stated; complete list of sources in Freedman (1990)

MOTETS

Edition: Treize livres de motets parus chez Pierre Attaingnant en 1534 et 1535, ed. A. Smijers and A.T. Merritt (Monaco, 1934–64) [S]

Anthoni, pater inclyte, 4vv, 1534[10], S viii
Congratulamini mihi omnes, 4vv, 1539[13]
In manibus tuis, 4vv, 1535[3], S xi
Quem dies vidi, 2vv, 1549[16], ed. in HM, lxxiv (1951) [2-voice contrafactum of La grant doulceur]
Virtute magna, 4vv, 1532[10], S xiii

CHANSONS

En l'ombre d'ung buysonnet, 4vv, 1528[9], ed. in Collegium musicum, ii (New Haven, 1960)
La grant doulceur, 4vv, 1535[14], ed. in Freedman (1990)
L'oeil a plaisir, 4vv, 1535[14]
Pour satisfaire, 4vv, 1534[14]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Lesure: ' Some Minor French Composers of the Sixteenth Century', Aspects of Medieval and Renaissance Music: a Birthday Offering to Gustave Reese, ed. J. LaRue and others (New York, 1966/R), 538–44
C. Wright: ' Musiciens à la cathédral de Cambrai', RdM, lxii (1976), 204–28
R. Freedman: Music, Musicians, and the House of Lorraine during the First Half of the Sixteenth Century (diss., U. of Pennsylvania, 1987)
P. Desaux: 'La musique sacrée à la cour de Lorraine au XVe et au début du XVIe siècle', Pays lorrain, lxix (1988), 152–8, 226–33
L.F. Bernstein: 'Melodic Structure in the Parisian Chanson: a Preliminary Study in the Transmission of a Musical Style', Studies in Musical Sources and Style: Essays in Honor of Jan LaRue, ed. E. Roesner and E.K. Wolf (Madison, WI, 1990), 121–90
R. Freedman: ' The Chansons of Mathieu Lasson: Music at the Courts of Lorraine and France ca. 1530', JM, viii (1990), 316–56

RICHARD FREEDMAN

Lassú [Lassan] (Hung.). A slow section of VERBUNKOS or CSÁRDÁS dance music.

Lassus [Lasso]. Franco-Flemish family of composers.

(1) Orlande [Roland] de Lassus [Orlando di Lasso] (b Mons, Hainaut, 1530 or, more probably, 1532; d Munich, 14 June 1594). He was one of the most prolific and versatile of 16th-century composers, and in his time the best-known and most widely admired musician in Europe.

1. EARLY YEARS. Lassus was born at Mons in Hainaut, a Franco-Flemish province notable for the number of distinguished musicians born and trained there during the Renaissance. Nothing definite is known of his parents, nor is there any solid proof that he was a choirboy at the church of St Nicholas – much less for the legend that he was three times abducted because of the beauty of his voice. The first known fact about him, attested to by his contemporary and earliest biographer, Samuel Quickelberg, is that at about the age of 12 he entered the service of Ferrante Gonzaga, a cadet of the Mantuan ducal house and a general in the service of Charles V. Gonzaga was in the Low Countries in summer 1544; when he headed south the boy Lassus presumably accompanied him. After a stop near Paris (Fontainebleau) Gonzaga returned to Italy at the beginning of 1545; he stayed in Mantua until mid-September, before proceeding to Sicily. Thus Lassus's first experience of Italy was at the Mantuan court. From Palermo, Gonzaga went as imperial governor to Milan, where Lassus apparently spent the years 1546–9. It is likely that at this time he met other musicians in the service of the Gonzagas, particularly Hoste da Reggio, a madrigalist who headed whatever musical establishment Ferrante Gonzaga maintained.

According to Quickelberg, Lassus next went to Naples (early in 1549), where he entered, informally, the service of Constantino Castrioto and lived in the household of G.B. d'Azzia della Terza, a man of letters. It is thought that Lassus began to compose while in Naples (though there may be a few pieces from the Milanese period), and that the villanescas printed in Antwerp in 1555 may have been written at this time. From Naples he went, at the end of 1551, to Rome; after a period in the household of Antonio Altoviti, Archbishop of Florence but then resident in Rome, he became maestro di cappella at S Giovanni in Laterano in spring 1553. Although young and as yet not well known as a composer – at least in print – Lassus must by this time have acquired a certain reputation as a musician in order to get a post such as this.

A little over a year later Lassus left Rome, for a visit to his parents who were ill, but they were already dead by the time he arrived. His whereabouts for a short period after this are unknown, and it has been claimed (Quickelberg; see Cardamone, 1994), though not proved (he himself never spoke of it), that he visited France and England in the company of the singer-diplomat-adventurer G.C. Brancaccio. Early in 1555 (possibly by autumn, 1554) Lassus was in Antwerp. Although he is not known to have held any official post, he seems to have made friends quickly there, with prominent figures such as Antoine Perrenot de Granvelle and with helpful people such as the printers Tylman Susato and Jean de Laet; he may have worked as a corrector in Susato's shop. In 1555 Susato printed what has been called Lassus's 'op.1', a collection of 'madrigali, vilanesche, canzoni francesi e motetti' for four voices; meanwhile Antonio Gardane in Venice had issued Lassus's first book of five-part madrigals. In 1556 the first book of five- and six-part motets appeared in Antwerp; it seems that Lassus had waited to publish his music until he had accumulated a substantial number of pieces. How much other music he had written up to this time we do not know; but it is probable that some of the madrigals appearing in Antonio Barrè's Roman anthologies of the late 1550s date from Lassus's stay in Rome, that at least one mass, the Missa 'Domine secundum actum meum', was written before 1556, and that the Sacrae lectiones novem ex propheta Iob, though not printed until 1565, belong to this period. The Prophetiae Sibyllarum, a collection of highly chromatic settings of humanistic Latin texts that was not published until after Lassus's death although it had periods of notoriety during his lifetime – including the amazed response of Charles IX of France in 1571 – may also belong to Lassus's Italian years (it survives in a manuscript containing a portrait of the composer at the age of 28).

2. MUNICH. In 1556 Lassus received and accepted an invitation to join the court of Duke Albrecht V of Bavaria in Munich. The circumstances of this appointment are not clear, but it is evident that Johann Jakob Fugger and Granvelle were involved, and that Dr Seld, the imperial vice-chancellor at Brussels, played a part in the negotiations (having first recommended Philippe de Monte for the post). Lassus was engaged as a tenor in a chapel headed by Ludwig Daser; a half-dozen other newly engaged Flemish singers also arrived in Munich in 1556–7, the result of a deliberate plan to 'netherlandize' a chapel which had perhaps come to seem too provincially German in character (Albrecht V's ambitions to revitalize his chapel may have been spurred by news of the dissolution of Charles V's chapel in 1555).

Lassus may not have been altogether happy during his first years in Munich; he may indeed have cast about for another position, as some correspondence with Granvelle indicates (see Bossuyt, 1993). His salary began to rise, but as late as 1568 he was still referred to in the chapel records as 'cantor' and 'tenor 2us'. On the other hand the title-pages of prints such as the Libro quarto de madrigali for five voices of 1567 referred to him as maestro di cappella of the Bavarian court. Whether for musical reasons or political and religious ones (Daser was a Protestant and Albrecht V, who had for some time tolerated and even encouraged reformers in Bavaria, had turned back to Catholicism, sending a representative to the Council of Trent in 1563), Lassus, who appears to have remained Catholic though he was no Counter-Reformation zealot, took over the leadership of the chapel when Daser was pensioned in 1563, a position he was to hold for 30 years (see MUNICH, fig.1). During this period the make-up of the chapel changed as more and more Italians were recruited. There was much fluctuation in numbers of singers and instrumentalists, the highpoint being reached in 1568 at the time of the young Duke Wilhelm's marriage, the low occurring after the latter's accession to the throne in 1579. But Lassus's position ended only with his death, and so firm was his hold on it that it could be inherited by his two sons in turn; in 1629 a grandson still represented the family in the chapel.

Lassus's duties included a morning service, for which polyphonic masses, elaborate or simple as the occasion required, were prepared. Judging from his enormous output of Magnificat settings, Vespers must have been celebrated solemnly a good deal of the time. It is less clear for what services much of the repertory of motets was created, though many could have fitted into celebrations of the Mass and Offices. Music for special occasions was provided by the ducal chapel; this included state visits, banquets for which 'Tafelmusik' was customary and hunting parties. Indeed Albrecht's love of musical display and his munificence towards musicians was much criticized in some court quarters. In addition Lassus supervised the musical education of the choirboys; he saw to the copying of manuscripts and perhaps to the collection of printed music for the ducal library. He also became a friend and companion to the duke and especially to his heir, the future Wilhelm V.

In 1558 Lassus married Regina Wäckinger, the daughter of a Bavarian court official. Among their children two sons, (2) Ferdinand (*b c*1560) and (3) Rudolph (*b c*1563), were to become musicians. He settled into what seems to have been a stable and comfortable existence, apparently one that he never seriously considered changing. This was varied by journeys undertaken at ducal behest. Thus in 1560 he went to Flanders to recruit singers; in 1562 he was in Prague for the coronation of the Archduke

1. Orlande de Lassus: woodcut from his 'Livre de chansons nouvelles' (1571)

Maximilian as king of Bohemia, and in Frankfurt for the latter's enthronement as 'king of the Romans'. Andrea Gabrieli joined Lassus's chapel for this visit, and may have remained in Munich for a year or two thereafter. In 1567 Lassus was in northern Italy, visiting Ferrara and Venice – and reminding Italians that, as he said in the dedication to his fourth book of five-part madrigals, good Italian music could be written even in far-off 'Germania'.

Lassus's fame was steadily growing, at home and abroad. He began, perhaps at the duke's request, to collect and put in order his own compositions, particularly the motets. The Venetian and Flemish printers who published his first works continued to issue madrigals, chansons and sacred music; in the 1560s Berg in Munich, Montanus and Neuber in Nuremberg (now Nürnberg), and Le Roy & Ballard in Paris began to print individual works, then series of volumes devoted to the music of the man becoming known as 'princeps musicorum' and the 'divin Orlande'.

In 1568 Lassus played an important part in the festivities for the wedding of Wilhelm V with Renée of Lorraine; in addition to composing music and supervising performances he is said to have performed the role of a 'magnifico' in an Italian comedia dell'arte. He was becoming something of a genuine 'magnifico': in 1570 Maximilian II conferred upon him a patent of nobility; in 1571 and again in 1573 and 1574 he visited the French court at the invitation of Charles IX; in 1574 he was made a Knight of the Golden Spur by Pope Gregory XIII. Such honours were rarely bestowed on musicians. Still, Lassus was content to remain in Munich; there seems to be no proof that in 1574 he seriously thought of moving to France, and turned back only on hearing of the death of Charles IX.

In 1573 Lassus was in Venice and Vienna for brief periods; in 1574 he visited Trent, Mantua, Bologna, Rome and Naples. His motet Domine Jesu Christe was awarded first prize at Evreux in 1575; he won again in 1583 with the Cecilian motet Cantantibus organis. He may have had as a pupil Giovanni Gabrieli, who was in Munich during the 1570s. From these years a charming correspondence between the composer and Duke Wilhelm, Albrecht's son and heir, survives; these letters, and some correspondence between Wilhelm and his father, are proof of the high regard felt by both men for Lassus. Before his death, Albrecht V made provisions that the composer was to receive his salary for the rest of his life. The five magisterial volumes of sacred works called Patrocinium musices (fig.2) appeared during these years, and numerous reprints of his earlier music testify to Lassus's continuing popularity all over Europe.

On the accession of Wilhelm V in 1579 the ducal chapel was much reduced in size. Whatever Lassus may have felt about this, he did not consider leaving. Refusing an invitation (1580) to succeed Antonio Scandello in Dresden, he wrote to the Duke of Saxony that he did not want to leave his house, garden and other good things in Munich, and that he was now beginning to feel old. His activity as a composer did not diminish, however; the years 1581–5 are marked by a number of new publications, of masses, Magnificat settings, motets, psalms and German lieder. He made a brief visit to Verona in 1582. In 1584 Ferdinand Lassus took over some of his father's duties, and the next year Lassus made a pilgrimage to Loreto. On this journey he visited Ferrara, where he heard new Italian music of an advanced style. The conservatism of his own later music was the result of deliberate choice, viewed by the composer himself with some wryness, and not because of ignorance of what was happening in Italy.

2. Title-page of Lassus's 'Patrocinium musices: missae aliquot' (Munich: Adam Berg, 1589)

Although Lassus's final years were marked by some poor health and by a 'melancholia hypocondriaca' for which he sought the help of a physician, Thomas Mermann, he continued to write music, if only intermittently. Shortly before his death he dedicated to Pope Clement VIII his last cycle of compositions, the Lagrime di S Pietro, adding to it a seven-voice motet, Vide homo quae pro te patior.

3. Letters. A series of letters from Lassus to Duke Wilhelm, son and heir of Albrecht V, survives. The letters, dated between 1572 and 1579 and for the most part written from Munich to the duke's establishment at Landshut, are celebrated for their mixture of languages, passing back and forth from a playful, half-macaronic Latin to Italian, French and German. A few are partly in doggerel verse, strengthening the supposition that Lassus wrote some of his own texts for occasional and humorous pieces. The tone of these letters and their amusing signatures ('Orlando Lasso col cor non basso'; 'Orlandissimo lassissimo, amorevolissimo'; 'secretaire publique, Orlando magnifique') show Lassus to have been on terms of easy familiarity with Wilhelm. There are occasional references to music, as in a letter of 22 March 1576, when he wrote: 'I send a copy of Io son ferito; if it seems good to you, I will hope to hear my work at Landshut or elsewhere' (this must refer to Lassus's mass written on Palestrina's well-known madrigal and published in 1589). Wilhelm apparently knew a good deal about music and liked to talk about it; thus Lassus could send him a letter (11 March 1578; fig.3) entirely made up of musical puns and jokes, mentioning other composers such as Rore, Clemens non Papa and Arcadelt, and referring jokingly to musical terms, as in the description of 'una baligia senza pause, coperta di passagi di molte cadenze fatte in falso bordone a misura di macaroni' ('a valise without rests, covered with passage-work of many cadences made from falsobordoni the size of macaroni'). These letters suggest that Lassus had read Italian epistolary writers such as Pietro Aretino and Antonfrancesco Doni; they confirm his reputation as – when the occasion required and perhaps when the mood was on him – an amusing friend and boon companion.

4. MASSES. The earliest surviving printed volume devoted entirely to masses by Lassus, issued by Claudio Merulo in Venice in 1570 (1570e), is a 'volume two'; an earlier first volume must have existed. Some of Lassus's masses belong to the first years of his residence in Munich in the late 1550s; the latest, a five-voice mass based on Gombert's Triste départ, was written as a kind of valedictory gesture near the end of his life. The 60 or so masses known to be authentic (there are a number of doubtful works in this genre) make up a not inconsiderable part of his oeuvre. Since their publication in the new Lassus edition, the traditional view that Lassus's masses are of peripheral importance in his work, and indeed of largely perfunctory character, has been modified. Certainly they were not considered of negligible value during the late 16th and early 17th centuries. Although no single mass attained the popularity of some of the more celebrated motets, many were reprinted during and after his lifetime; several groups were included in the Patrocinium musices; and Le Roy & Ballard's resplendent Missae variis concentibus ornatae of 1577–8 (1577b) suggests that the Parisian publishers planned (although they did not carry out) a complete edition of his masses.

3. Part of an autograph letter (11 March 1578) from Lassus to Duke Wilhelm (D-Mbs Galli. 942, Brief 37)

Most of Lassus's settings are parody masses, based on motets (chiefly his own), French chansons (by Gombert, Willaert, Monte and members of the Parisian school), or Italian madrigals (by Sebastiano Festa, Arcadelt, Rore and Palestrina). They provide a highly instructive anthology of the techniques of parody. His rearrangement and recomposition of his own music, as in the Missa 'Locutus sum', show Lassus's technical prowess; his striking transformation of a rather simple model, such as Daser's motet for the Missa 'Ecce nunc benedicite', illustrates his ability to raise the level of music of his lesser contemporaries. More remarkable still is the sensitivity he displayed in adapting secular models as diverse as Arcadelt's Quand'io pens'al martire, the densely polyphonic texture of Gombert's chansons, and the supple and subtle flow of Rore's madrigals. The masses based on these pieces are reminiscent of their models in style yet show no musical incongruity or technical strain. A work like the Missa 'Qual donna attende', based on Rore's distinguished madrigal, must have provided a rich treat for connoisseurs of this genre.

At the other extreme in Lassus's masses are the short, syllabic missae breves. Some of these are parodies of works, like Sermisy's La, la, maistre Pierre, themselves in concise syllabic style. The shortest of all these works is the 'Jäger' Mass or Missa venatorum, a work designed for a brief service on days the court spent hunting. Some of the masses based on plainchant are of this succinct type; an exception is the impressive five-voice Missa pro defunctis with its curious bass intonations. Whether or not because they fit post-Tridentine ideas about music for the Mass (Lassus is known to have been stubborn about changing things at Munich to conform to new ideas coming from Rome), some of the shortest and simplest of Lassus's masses were among his most popular works in the genre. It should be stressed, however, that these works do not represent him fully or entirely characteristically as a composer of masses.

5. PASSIONS. Lassus's four Passions are responsorial and of the kind cultivated by north Italian composers throughout most of the 16th century. In two of them (the St Matthew and St John) the words of the turbae and of the various individuals are set polyphonically, the first group for five-part chorus and the second for solo duos and trios; the words of Christ and the evangelists' narrative are to be chanted. The Passions according to St Mark and St Luke are shorter works in which chordal polyphony is provided only for the turbae. In the St Matthew Passion, first published in 1575, a clear stylistic distinction is made between the music of the turbae – chordal successions with ponderously decorated cadences – and the supple imitative style of the duos and trios used for the words of Peter, Judas and other characters. This work enjoyed great and lasting popularity. Various later Passions borrowed from it, and a manuscript dated 1743, complete with added thoroughbass part, shows that it was still performed 150 years after its composition. The other three Passions survive only in manuscript, with convincing though not absolutely definitive attributions to Lassus.

6. Magnificat settings and other liturgical works. Lassus's more than 100 settings of the Magnificat, all but ten of them collected in a posthumous edition (1619) by his son Rudolph, far outnumber those of any other 16th-century composer (Palestrina, for example, wrote 35). Their wide circulation in print and manuscript is testimony to their lasting popularity; only those of Morales had anything like this success. All but a few are alternatim settings of the even verses, leaving the odd verses to be chanted, as was customary, or perhaps played on the organ.

In 1567 Lassus published three cycles each containing a six-verse setting for all eight tones (1567b). He went on to write at least two more such cycles; all are based on the appropriate chant tones of the Magnificat, with widely varied use of cantus-firmus technique. Some 60 settings use the psalmodic tones; a number of others have monophonic tunes used as cantus firmi. He respected the Magnificat tones in his choice of mode, and tended not to embellish the cantus firmus when using it intact; but no brief description could do justice to the flexible virtuosity with which the time-honoured device of the cantus firmus is used in these works. There is of course much integration of cantus firmus with other voices through melodic paraphrase and contrapuntal imitation.

A Magnificat parodying Rore's celebrated madrigal Ancor che col partire was published in the collection of 1576. Some 40 of the Magnificat settings appearing in subsequent years are parody works; Lassus was the first to make consistent use of parody technique in this genre, and he seems to have liked using the procedure almost as much as he did in the masses. His own motets (and an occasional chanson) were favoured sources, but he ranged widely through 16th-century literature, from Josquin (whose Praeter rerum seriem served as model for a magnificently elaborate six-voice work) to Striggio and Vecchi, from motets to madrigals. As in the masses, parody technique is used here in an almost bewilderingly varied fashion, and with a sure instinct for blending the style of the model with that of the 'copy'.

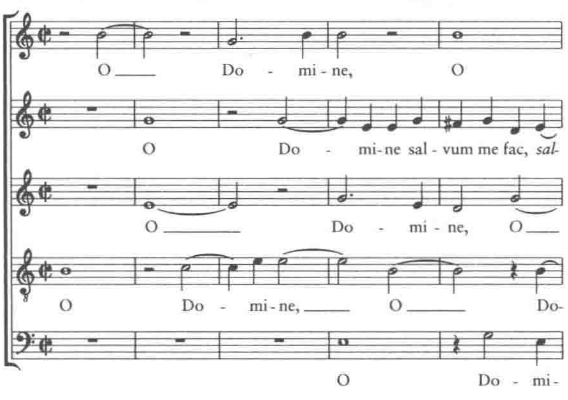
Lassus's settings of the Magnificat vary greatly in length and complexity, from concise settings resembling falsobordoni to resplendently contrapuntal works over 200 bars long. His tendency to write more compact, harmonically conceived works in his later years may be seen in these pieces, but not in any easily predictable way. The opening and closing verses are generally closer to their melodic or contrapuntal models, the middle verses correspondingly freer. All voices respect to some degree the bipartite structure of the psalm verses.

There are a large number of liturgical and quasiliturgical works in other genres. Some were printed in the composer's lifetime: the mass propers for Christmas, Easter and Pentecost in the third volume of the Patrocinium musices (1574); the Christmas Lessons of volume iv (1575) in that series; the Lamentations of Jeremiah, some of which were printed in 1585; the Lessons from Job (two sets, printed in 1565 and 1582); and the seven Psalmi Davidis poenitentiales (printed in 1584 but composed much earlier). Posthumously published works include 12 litanies (1596; four others survive in manuscript copies). None of these works was included in the Magnum opus musicum (1604) and therefore none appear in Haberl's edition. All have now been published in the new collected edition.

An important category of Office polyphony in Lassus's works is the Nunc dimittis. 13 settings survive, none of them ever printed: five, based on chant, date from about 1565, and eight (not all confirmed as genuine), parody works based on motets and madrigals, from the last period of his life. Still other groups of liturgical pieces survive only in manuscript and were apparently never printed (they were perhaps considered in a way the private property of the Bavarian court chapel): these include a group of falsobordoni, an important hymn cycle written after local adoption of the Roman hymn sequence in 1581, and a group of responsories (from the 1580s). These are now published in the new Lassus edition and have been studied by Bergquist.

7. Motets. Difficult to assess simply by reason of their enormous number, the motets of Lassus as they appear in Haberl's edition pose an additional problem: they are printed in the order assigned to them by Ferdinand and Rudolph Lassus in the Magnum opus musicum of 1604, and thus arranged by number of voices rather than in chronological order of publication (the new Lassus edition and that of Bergquist are fortunately proceeding on quite different principles). Studies of Lassus's music based on chronology have been made (Boetticher), but much remains to be done. It is not easy to be sure about relative composition dates for much of this music; the publication date is of course not an infallible guide, sometimes not even a useful one. Details of stylistic growth and change can probably be seen and analysed, but the criteria for such a study have yet to be fully developed.

In motet composition, as in the writing of madrigals, Lassus began by assimilating the styles fashionable in Italy in his youth. Rore and the Roman school around Barrè seem the two most important of these influences, as seen in the carefully conceived declamatory rhythms in all voice parts. The bold yet tonally controlled chromaticism of motets such as Alma nemes, and the use of distinctive, finely chiselled thematic material in Audi dulcis [filia] amica mea (both printed in 1555), certainly show that Lassus knew Rore's work. The motets of the Roman and Antwerp years, as well as those of the first decade in Munich, are dazzlingly virtuoso in invention and the handling of vocal textures. Videntes stellam, a two-section motet for five voices printed in 1562, is a good example of Lassus's brilliant early style. The melodic material, distantly derived from a Magnificat antiphon for Epiphany week, transforms gentle hints in the chant into dramatically descriptive motifs that rocket through the texture, a texture that is constantly varied but always clear, and always well grounded harmonically. It is no wonder that the composer of pieces such as this rapidly won for himself first place at the Bavarian court and an international reputation that would soon surpass those of all his contemporaries.



Imitation plays a large role in the contrapuntal technique of Lassus's early work, as does voice pairing; he did not of course observe these techniques as strictly as did Josquin's generation, but neither did he favour the thick texture and close-set imitation cultivated by Gombert. Everywhere there is harmonic clarity and solidity, equally apparent in pieces such as the Prophetiae Sibyl- larum, which use the chromatic vocabulary fashionable in the 1550s, as in completely diatonic works.

It has been said that Lassus made little use of canon or other constructivist elements. This is true in a statistical sense, but when he chose he could show off Netherlandish skills; for example, the seven-part In omnibus requiem quaesivi (published 1565) has a three-part canon, with one of the voices in contrary motion. Cantus-firmus writing is rarer in Lassus than in Palestrina, but on occasion Lassus could revert to the kind of cantus-firmus procedure used by Josquin and Obrecht; Homo cum in honore esset (six voices; published 1566) has a soggetto cavato as cantus firmus on the text 'Nosce te ipsum', heard successively in breves, semibreves and minims. In this eclectic revival of earlier techniques, and in many individual passages where archaisms such as fauxbourdon or use of outmoded long notes can be seen, Lassus may have been using elements of an older Netherlandish style for expressive reasons, making a musical allusion to support the meaning of a phrase of text.

Like all Lassus's music, the motets are immensely varied in musical invention and expressive detail. Nonetheless a recognizable stylistic 'set' may be observed in all the motets of the period c1555–70: thematic originality is blended with a contrapuntal fluidity that, in less distinguished pieces, approaches formula; there is plenty of chordal declamation, always marked by strength and clarity of harmony; expressive word-painting abounds but does not dominate or upset the equilibrium of a piece; and a certain succinctness – the economy of utterance that was to become increasingly evident in Lassus's later works – is noticeable (the famous six-part Timor et tremor, published 1564, is as surprising for brevity as it is celebrated for expressive power). Lassus's capacity for obtaining iridescent changes of colour in the plainest of diatonic palettes through skilful vocal scoring, a trait very marked in his later works, is present in his early motets; it is indeed one of the most characteristic of his stylistic traits (see ex.1, the opening of O Domine salvum me fac, published 1562).

Ex.1 O Domine salvum me fac

In his motets of the 1570s and 1580s, as in other works of this period, Lassus made much use of chordal declamation on short note values, varied by quickly alternating points of imitation of rather neutral melodic character. This 'villanella' style (see Boetticher), perhaps better termed 'canzonetta style', may indicate a desire for a more up-to-date vocabulary on Lassus's part. If so, that is about as far as he went; the works of the last decade are less markedly declamatory, more complex in texture and marked by a certain denseness and concentration of style that is not so much progressive as it is highly individual, a final style seen to good advantage in the six-part Musica Dei donum optimi (published 1594), a moving tribute to the composer's art (this text was also set by other 16th-century composers).

Although they cannot be categorized in any very neat way, Lassus's motets can be divided roughly under a few general headings.

(i) Didactic works. The 24 duos of 1577 (1577d) and many of the pieces for three voices must have been intended for students. In this the duos are particularly interesting. When compared with other famous 16th-century collections of duos such as those of Gero or of Lupacchino – both of them sets that were reprinted so often as to leave no doubt about their pedagogical usefulness – Lassus's psalm settings and textless bicinia are surprising in their individuality of style: they are not generic counterpoint but rather illustrations of his own contrapuntal practice. They were popular enough to be reprinted and even to be 'modernized' (in a Parisian reprint of 1601 with an added third voice), but they did not rival Gero's in longevity of use; they have about them too much of the finished and idiosyncratic composition, too little of the contrapuntal exercise. For Lassus's own pupils they must have been of great value since the writing of duos was probably the most important part of a 16th-century composer's training. It may be noted that the two-part pieces illustrate the D, E, F and G modes but not those of A and C; this supports the remark of Lechner, Lassus's pupil, that his teacher used only the traditional eight modes.

(ii) Ceremonial motets. There are a surprising number of pieces written for special occasions or to honour rulers and dignitaries; these are mostly grouped together in the Magnum opus musicum, near the beginning or end of the divisions by number of voices. Some of them provide clues to the composer's life; thus the five-part Te spectant Reginalde Poli (published 1556) may indicate that Lassus knew the English Cardinal Pole in Rome in the 1550s. Many occasional pieces honouring the Habsburgs and various secular and religious potentates throughout Germany were doubtless commissioned by the Bavarian court. By far the largest number of these are addressed to Albrecht V, to his eldest son and to other members of the ducal family (one of these, Unde revertimini, started its existence under a slightly different name as a work in praise of Henri d'Anjou, the future Henri III of France).

They vary in length and scoring (from three to ten voices) but as a matter of course are uniformly bright and festive in nature. Some, like the nine-section Princeps Marte potens, Guilelmus, are little more than a series of acclamations (in this instance addressed to Wilhelm V, his bride, and members of the imperial and ducal families); others are in full polyphonic style. A distinguishing feature of Lassus's ceremonial pieces honouring the Wittelsbachs is their personal tone, evident proof of the composer's close relationship with his employers. This is seen in Multarum hic resonat, addressed to Wilhelm on his name day in 1571, and in Haec quae ter triplici, the dedicatory piece of a collection of motets for three voices (1575) honouring Albrecht's three sons, on a text ending 'Lassus mente animoque dicat' ('Lassus' set to the composer's musical signature of la–sol). Most appealingly personal of all is Sponsa quid agis, for five voices, thought to have been composed for Lassus's marriage in 1558; here the colouristic harmony on the words 'Non me lasciviae veneris', in an otherwise diatonic framework, is a charming bit of musical allusion.

(iii) Humorous motets. Pieces with texts ranging from playfulness to burlesque are to be found among the works with Latin texts. Their music is appropriate and often witty in itself, but almost never broadly farcical; Lassus, rather like Mozart, tended to clothe his verbal jokes in exquisite musical dress. One exception is the travesty of 'super flumina Babylonis', beginning 'SU-su-PER-per' and proceeding haltingly and confusedly through both text and music, perhaps mocking the efforts of inexpert singers. Of a similar nature is Ut queant laxis, for five voices, in which the tenor sings the isolated notes of the hexachord between snatches of four-voice polyphony. In many apparently serious motets the tone-painting of individual words is so literal that one suspects a half-humorous intent, and occasionally one is sure of it: the concertato performance of motets is parodied in Laudent Deum cythara, in which five instrumental families are named, to music characteristic for each, in the space of a dozen bars (the total length of the piece).

There are drinking-songs in Latin in his output, as there are in German and French. These may be elaborate, as in the eight-part double chorus Vinum bonum. Perhaps the most amusing is the macaronic Lucescit jam o socii, whose independently rhymed series of alternating Latin and French lines sounds so much like some of the composer's letters to Duke Wilhelm that Lassus must surely be author of both text and music.

(iv) Classical and classicistic texts. The ceremonial motets are full of classical phrases. Other pieces setting either classical texts (Virgil, Horace) or humanistic 16th-century verse are to be found; there is a whole group of these near the end of the five-part section of the Magnum opus musicum. Lassus made his contribution to the list of Renaissance composers who set Dido's lament Dulces exuviae; his version is in correctly quantitative declamatory chords with little ornament, a style not far from that used for classical choruses (as in Andrea Gabrieli's music for Edippo tiranno, 1588). Most of these pieces are less academic in character, closer to the composer's normal motet style. There are, however, examples of almost completely literal quantitative settings; the five-voice setting of Tragico tecti syrmate coelites looks very much like the settings of Horatian odes used in German schools, a genre with which Lassus was evidently familiar. Related to this genre are the Prophetiae Sibyllarum, famous for their chordal chromaticism but also showing careful declamatory exactness in setting the curious half-Christian, half-pagan humanistic verse.

(v) Religious works. There are hints of ordering within the liturgical calendar in sections of the Magnum opus musicum (examples are the four-part offertories, roughly nos.124–68 in Haberl's edition, and the section in the five-part motets beginning with the Christmas antiphon Angelus ad pastores, no.192; the six-part motets also show traces of liturgical sequence). The collection also has groupings by category such as hymns, Marian antiphons, Gospel or Epistle motets etc, which are convenient for study but of little help in determining liturgical usage. As Lassus's sons included in their huge anthology a good many pieces which are motets only by virtue of being contrafacta of secular works, their methods of assemblage and editing appear too arbitrary to serve as the basis for study of the religious function of their father's motets.

A large proportion of the motets must of course have been used in performance of the Mass and Offices in the court chapel. The number of settings of Marian antiphons, some of which are very elaborate, suggest that portions of the Office were sung with great solemnity. This is also true of settings of the Pater noster, the Ave Maria, and hymns included in the Magnum opus musicum; the six-part settings of Veni Creator Spiritus and Veni Sancte Spiritus are particularly resplendent. When one recalls that many of Lassus's motet prints carried the rubric 'apt for voices and instruments' it is easy to imagine concerted performances of motets using some of the forces depicted in Hans Mielich's miniature, which shows the court chapel as assembled for chamber performance (fig.4). Among the motets appearing in tablatures, chiefly of German origin, are a group in Johannes Rühling's keyboard book (1583) which are arranged in liturgical order for Sundays and great feast days throughout the year, and thus are clearly intended for use in the liturgy.

Whether motets on religious texts were used as liturgical works, for private devotional purposes or in concert is hard to determine. Marian antiphons, for example, could certainly have been used as devotional pieces. Style may offer some clue; the Gospel motets (six voices, nos.549–58) are severely conservative and thus 'sound' liturgical whereas the Epistle motets adjacent to them are highly expressive (Cum essem parvulus, nos.570–71, with its touching delineation of the cardinal virtues and especially of charity, is one of the composer's most moving works in any genre) and thus appear devotional in character. The many psalm settings, some of them free compilations from various psalms (the celebrated Timor et tremor is among them), are difficult to judge in this regard. A thorough study of the liturgical practices at Munich might help to place many works whose function is now not clear.

The motets of Lassus were admired in their own day not only for their beauty and technical perfection but also for their rhetorical power – their ability to move the affections through the use of rhetorical devices transferred into musical idioms. Joachim Burmeister's celebrated rhetorical analysis of In me transierunt (published 1562) in his Musica poetica (1606; an expanded version of the Musica autoschediastikē, 1601) compares the motet to a classically ordered speech. 40 years earlier Quickelberg had praised Lassus's ability to 'describe an object almost as if it were before one's eyes'. One has only to think of the many striking, sharply individualized openings of motets – the exordia of classical rhetoric – in Lassus's work to see that both expressiveness and the rhetorician's trick of catching attention can hardly be missed in this music. Whether the composer proceeded as deliberately, even pedantically, as Burmeister would have it may be doubted. However, if one recalls Lassus's carefully precise declamation of classical texts it becomes clear that he knew something of the German didactic tradition linking music with the study of classical metres; it is not a large step from this to assume that he also knew how classical rhetoric was studied in the schools. The 'speaking' quality of much of this music cannot be a fortuitous property; the music is not only expressive in a general sense but affective in a precise way, clearly perceptible to the composer's contemporaries.

4. Bavarian court chapel assembled for chamber music: miniature by Hans Mielich from the Mielen Codex, 1563–70 (D-Mbs Mus.Ms.AII, f.187); Lassus is at the keyboard, surrounded by musicians playing viola da gamba, viole da braccia, bass recorder, flute, trombone, cornetts, racket and lute

8. MADRIGALS. In the mixed print issued in Antwerp by Susato in 1555 and often referred to as Lassus's 'op.1', there are seven madrigals for four voices showing the composer's grasp of the genre as a result of his Italian, particularly his Roman, years. His poetic tastes – a quatrain and a canzone stanza of Petrarch, an ottava by Ariosto, a Sannazaro poem and a pastoral in sestina (a form he particularly liked) – are typical of the period. Del freddo Rheno, a complete sestina rather in the style of the cyclic madrigals of Arcadelt and Berchem, opens the group on a note of simple tunefulness (this piece was popular with intabulators); in other madrigals the style varies from Willaert-like seriousness (Occhi piangete), through supple contrapuntal writing resembling Rore (Per pianto la mia carne), to the chordal declamation typical of the Roman madrigale arioso (Queste non son più lagrime). A certain clarity and succinctness of utterance are Lassus's personal stamp; in other respects this collection is highly eclectic. These madrigals, together with a few others including the chanson-like Appariran per me le stell'in cielo, reappeared in Lassus's first book of four-part madrigals, published by Dorico in Rome and then by Gardane in Venice, both in 1560. The strong resemblance of Lassus's early madrigals to those of his contemporaries may be illustrated by the fact that one piece in this volume, Non vi vieto, credited to Lassus and included in Sandberger's edition, is actually the work of Hoste da Reggio (if not a student work, written under the latter's direction), part of a cycle in Hoste's second book for four voices (1554). Lassus's volume was a popular one, reprinted a dozen times over the next 30 years and supplying favourite materials for lutenists' intabulations. Other early four-part madrigals appeared in Barrè's Roman anthologies of madrigali ariosi.

Also highly successful, to judge by the frequency with which they were reprinted, were the first book for five voices, first issued by Gardane in Venice in 1555, and the second, printed by Barrè in Rome in 1557 after having long been held in private hands (so says the dedicatory letter of G.B. Bruno, who is known to have been in Rome in 1554). These madrigals and, in all probability, most of those in the third book for five voices (brought out by Barrè in Rome in 1563 after, says the publisher, a diligent search for works by Orlande) must have been written before Lassus's departure from Rome in 1555. Petrarch dominates the first volume and is well represented in the others, with a six-section canzone cycle (Standomi un giorno) in a 'narrative', vibrantly declamatory style opening the second book.

The Petrarchan sonnets receive on the whole the most serious treatment, with sharply expressive thematic material in the tradition of Rore (see ex.2, the opening of Sol'e pensoso). Other forms such as the sestina, cyclic or in individual stanzas, are given lighter polyphonic dress; and the chordal declamation of the arioso madrigal may be seen (Bernardo Tasso's Vostro fui vostro son). Some works, particularly a group near the end of the second book, are clearly in an easy, 'popular' style. Even the most ambitious Petrarchan settings, however, are marked by

Ex.2 Sol' e pensoso

Lassus's ever-present clarity of tonal palette and attractiveness of melody. These madrigals are distinguished by free use of material (there is little exact imitative writing) and by much variety of speed and character in declamation, despite the fact that the misura cromatica (C) is used in only a few pieces. They do not perhaps equal the work of Rore in intensity but they do rival the older master in variety of mood and seamless technical perfection – no mean achievement for a man in his twenties. The frequent choice of texts in which the word 'lasso' appears (in six pieces scattered through the three volumes), and the invariable la–sol setting it receives, suggest a youthful desire to 'sign' his works; Lassus as a young Roman clearly wanted the world to know who he was.

From the first decade in Munich come the contents of the fourth book for five voices, written to show, in the composer's words, that the Muses were cherished and could flourish in 'Germania' as well as in Italy. Lassus visited Venice in May 1567; while there (when he was described in a letter as 'lively and a good companion') he saw to the printing of this fourth book, which he dedicated to Duke Alfonso II d'Este and then took to Ferrara to present to him. Lassus's inclination towards the cyclic madrigal is again seen here; there is a complete sestina by Petrarch at the beginning, sonnets in two parts, and another sestina (Qual nemica fortuna oltra quest' Alpe, on a text by Federico Asinari) that seems to combine local Ferrarese reference (the Po river) with a laboured geography-of-love image.

Lassus's madrigal output slowed down after this, though he contributed to the anthologies of Bavarian court madrigals assembled by Troiano (RISM 1569[19]) and Bottegari (1575). Whether a true 'middle period' in stylistic terms can be seen in these and other individual pieces appearing in various anthologies of the 1570s remains to be demonstrated.

In 1585 Lassus was again in Italy; the dedication of his volume of five-part madrigals printed in Nuremberg in that year (1585c, reissued in Venice in 1587 as the Libro quinto) is to the great Veronese patron Mario Bevilacqua, whose ridotto the composer may have visited in 1582. Here serious Petrarchan texts alternate with religious sonnets by Gabriel Fiamma. In style these madrigals, separated from the fourth book by nearly 20 years, show definite awareness of the newer Italian madrigal: not that of the chromaticists but rather that of Marenzio, with brief contrast motifs, declamation on short note values and counterpoint that is chiefly figured chordal progressions (Io che l'età più verde is an example). Lassus's older style is not completely absorbed by these novelties, and in a few pieces his earlier madrigals are recalled (the sestina Quando il giorno). How well he could write in a newer style is demonstrated by the amusing La non vol esser più mia (published 1584), a work in fully-fledged canzonetta idiom.

The madrigals for four, five and six voices dedicated to Lassus's friend the physician Thomas Mermann (Nuremberg, 1587) show some of the traits seen in the volume of 1585 but are more varied in style, often suggesting the compression and individuality of his late motet style. In this volume a five-section religious cycle to text by Beccuti ('il Copetta'), Signor le colpe mie, has been shown (by Boetticher) to be missing its first stanza, Di terrena armonia, a piece for some reason printed separately in Continuation du mellange issued by Le Roy & Ballard in 1584.

At the very end of his life Lassus set the 21 ottava stanzas of Tansillo's Lagrime di S Pietro. This cycle of seven-voice spiritual madrigals is one of the most remarkable artistic testaments in the history of music. Deliberately restrained in mood and character, planned as a magnificent tonal arch covering the whole range of 16th-century sound, the work is at once musically unified and expressively varied. Lassus's lifelong habits of concision and balance, subordinating vivid declamation and rhetorical power to inexorable musical clarity, are here given their definitive statement. The transcendentally synthetic quality of this music, blending styles as diverse as the Prophetiae Sibyllarum and the late madrigals, stands in the sharpest possible contrast to what was in other hands already becoming the drily academic stile antico.

Among Lassus's most popular Italian-texted works are the six four-voice villanescas in the 'op.1' of 1555 (these pieces are often found in anthologies of lute intabulations) and the contents of the Libro de villanelle, moresche, et altre canzoni for four, five, six and eight voices (Paris, 1581), a volume said by the composer to have been written in his old age when he should have known better. The famous Matona mia cara may serve as an example of pieces to be found in this volume, although some of the other pieces are equally amusing. All are reworkings of older material, following the time-honoured principle of using pre-existing melodies in this genre; the most outrageous texts receive elegant if simple musical setting, in its own way a final statement about this sub-species of the madrigal.

9. Chansons. Fewer in number than his madrigals, Lassus's chansons, about 150 in all, are nonetheless considerable in bulk and, more importantly, highly characteristic of the composer, who never entirely left off being a Frenchman. He wrote a number of chansons in his youth and did not by any means stop when he moved to Munich; French was in common use at the court, and chansons of various types were evidently in demand from his patrons as well as from his publishers.

To judge by their dates of publication, Lassus wrote chansons from the 1550s into the 1580s; a greater proportion than of most other categories are early works. Just as the madrigals were brought out for the most part by Roman and Venetian printers, so the chansons were published chiefly in the Netherlands (Phalèse, Susato, Laet) and in Paris (Le Roy & Ballard, Du Chemin). Their wide popularity can be seen from the frequent reprints and from their appearance in print in Lyons, La Rochelle, Strasbourg and London (Vautrollier, 1570). Some of the later reprints bear the proud description of the composer as 'Prince des musiciens de nostre temps'. The chansons were much in favour with keyboard, cittern and especially lute intabulators; the Theatrum musicum of Phalèse and Bellère (1568[23], 1571[16]) is particularly rich in Lassus's works. The English translation of Le Roy's lute tutor (London, 1574) contains 11 chansons by Lassus. A very large number of chansons, including some of the bawdiest, were 'spiritualized' in French and German religious collections (Pasquier, 1576; Berg, 1582). The bulk of Lassus's chanson output was collected in two volumes of 'meslanges' issued by Le Roy & Ballard (1576b, 1584a). Of the chansons not included in these volumes or in the important Livre de chansons nouvelles issued by Le Roy & Ballard in Paris and Phalèse in Leuven in 1571 (1571g), some have not survived complete; among these are a set of religious chansons on texts by Guy du Faur de Pibrac, published in 1581. Fortunately two of these pieces, illustrating the sobriety of Lassus's late chanson style, have been reassembled through the discovery (by Bernstein) of a set of manuscript parts in Edward Paston's library (in GB-Cfm).

Lassus turned to some of the most famous of 16th-century French poets for texts: Marot, Ronsard, Du Bellay and Baïf. The fact that he often set texts already known in musical settings is reflected in his occasional choice of Mellin de Saint-Gelais, a favourite poet among composers of the preceding generation, and also in his fondness for light verse from popular anthologies such as La fleur de poesie francoyse (1542). Occasional choice of much earlier poetry (Chartier, Villon) can also be seen. The subject matter ranges from dignified nature-poetry (Du Bellay) and Petrarchesque lyrics (Ronsard), through sententious and moralizing texts, to the familiar drinking-songs, some macaronic texts, and Rabelaisian amorous and bawdy narratives; no one wrote more amusing chansons of this last type (En un chasteau and Il esteoit une religieuse are excellent examples). There are also biblical and religious texts (the famous Susanne un jour, for example) – these apart from the contrafacta imposed by other hands on nearly all the secular chansons. There are a few real love-lyrics, some occasional pieces, and isolated soundings of familiar chanson-like themes such as 'faulte d'argent' (in Je suis quasi prest d'enrager).

In musical style the chansons are more varied than the usual blanket description given them – as either 'Parisian' patter chansons or motet-like serious pieces – would suggest. Lassus could and often did write chansons, usually light narratives or dialogues, in the classically clear and succinct style made popular in Attaingnant's anthologies. How directly and economically he went about this can be seen in a work such as Un advocat dit à sa femme (ex.3). These pieces are usually for four voices, but Lassus, who in all genres preferred five-part texture, could manage 'Parisian' style just as easily in five voices (La terre les eaux, for example). He could even write a piece that resembles, paradoxically, an instrumental canzona alla francese transcribed for voices (Si pour moy avez du souci). The light chansons are not always written in 'Parisian' fashion; the Italian patter style infecting so much of Lassus's work in his middle years may also be seen here (there is one outright 'villanelle', to Baïf's Une puce j'ay dedans l'oreill').

Many chansons begin, as do so many of the lieder, with a contrapuntal exordium, sharply delineating the character of the piece through distinctive melodic shapes; then follow patter chords or lightweight texture in which short motifs are constantly thrown back and forth among the voices. Sometimes the music changes character with every flicker of meaning in the text, as in the setting of Marot's Qui dort icy. The declamation in all the lively chansons is good; in some it is extraordinarily vivid – Marot's Bon jour et puis quelles nouvelles is given a setting of such conversational immediacy that on hearing it all barriers separating us from the 16th century seem to drop away.

The more serious chansons resemble the reflective, affective madrigals of Rore and his successors more than they do motets. Chansons such as Le temps passé (with its 'soupir' figures), Mon coeur ravi d'amour and Comme la tourterelle (with its madrigalian chromaticism) are madrigals in all but their very Gallic declamatory diction. Use of madrigalian style is sometimes but not always influenced by the text; thus Ronsard's J'espère et crains, with its laboured Petrarchan oxymorons, is given a quite restrained setting, while Vray dieu disoit une fillette, a very French text, is given such Italian touches as a long final pedal point. In a category by themselves are pieces such as La nuict froide et sombre (Du Bellay), set as an expansive, colouristic tone poem in style even though characteristically brief in actual duration.

Ex.3 Un advocat dit à sa femme

German schoolmasters would not have picked chansons by Lassus as examples of rhetorical organization and affective power; the genre was not sufficiently grand. Many of the chansons would nevertheless make good examples of the musician as rhetorician; Marot's Fleur de quinze ans, for instance, is in Lassus's hands a seduction speech of extraordinarily tight organization and persuasive musical diction.

10. German lieder. For Lassus, French by birth and Italian by musical training, composition in a German vein must have posed problems. He published no lieder until 1567; by that time he was surely fluent in setting German texts, enough for him to have written for private use, at the court, pieces Duke Albrecht liked too well to allow to circulate in print (preface to the 1567 collection). But the native tradition was very strong in Munich, where Senfl had worked until his death (1542–3); the song collections of Ott, Forster and others remained popular, and the need for new works was correspondingly less great during Lassus's early years at the Bavarian court.

The lieder are few in number only by the standards of Lassus's prolific output in other genres; if one counts the German psalms for three voices (1588) there are over 90 compositions, including several multipartite six-part sacred compositions larger in scale than most of the motets. Many of the secular pieces were famous in the composer's time and are among his best-known works today (Audite nova, for example). The proportion of sacred pieces among the lieder is high, even without counting the volume of psalms; this suggests that the German collections were intended for a somewhat different audience from that of the madrigals and the chansons.

In the preface to the third book of five-part lieder (1576), Lassus contrasted the Italian and German styles, emphasizing (and defending) the roughness of the latter. He evidently tried to cultivate a specifically German style. The results were good, certainly; but his position in the history of the lied has been described (by Osthoff, 1938) as that of an innovator who discarded German tradition, that of the Tenorlied, in favour of a style mixing elements of the madrigal, the villanella and the chanson. This is true primarily of the secular lieder; the sacred works use traditional melodies in, on the whole, as strict an adherence to cantus-firmus writing as Lassus showed in any genre.

5. Autograph MS of the alto part of Lassus's chanson 'Quand mon mary vient', 1564 (PL-GD E.2165)

In some respects Lassus was conservative as a composer of lieder. He chose texts for the most part already known in sacred and secular songbooks (one exception is the setting of Hans Sachs's Ein Körbelmacher in ein Dorff), and inclined towards folk-like ones. His German settings are rhythmically lively and correct in declamation, but not exaggeratedly so; nor are there experiments in chromaticism in the lieder. His preference for five-part texture (which he felt he had to justify as a novelty in the preface to the 1567 collection) was merely carrying over into the lieder a general preference typical of his generation.

The sacred lieder use texts and melodies common to Lutheran and Catholic songbooks with Luther's Vater unser im Himmelreich opening the first collection (the Ulenberg psalm translations are, however, Catholic and even anti-Protestant in intent). The psalm settings range from the rather simple tricinia of the 1588 collection (where they alternate with similar settings by his son Rudolph) to the great six-part psalm-motets such as Ich ruff zu dir, using paraphrased and cantus-firmus versions of the borrowed melodies, in the French–German volume of 1590.

Among the secular texts chosen by Lassus are drinking-songs and lieder in which the bad effects of liquor are lamented (Mein Fraw hilgert); possibly the constantly expressed preference for wine over beer was a personal one. Comic rustic narrative encounters (Baur, was tregst im Sacke?) are among the most famous of the lieder. There are also melancholy and satirical pieces (Die zeit, so jetz vorhanden ist), some love-songs of narrative character, and a few songs of nature-love. The traditional vein of elegiac introspection seen in the lied from Hofhaimer to Senfl was on the whole avoided by Lassus.

Many lieder begin with an imitative exordium followed by lively patter. Relationships to the villanella and lighter madrigal may of course be seen (Lassus knew the celebrated German villanella collections of Regnart), and the presence of chanson-like rhythms is frequent. The combination is a natural and convincing one; Lassus did not so much break with German tradition as simply set texts in his own style, a somewhat eclectic one in every genre. In any event the triumphantly German character of the best lieder is proof enough that he mastered the lied in his own way.

WORKS

Editions: Orlando di Lasso: Sämtliche Werke, ed. F.X. Haberl and A. Sandberger (Leipzig, 1894–1926/R1974) [S]

Orlando di Lasso: Sämtliche Werke: neue Reihe, ed. S. Hermelink and others (Kassel, 1956–) [H]

Orlando di Lasso: Sämtliche Werke. Zweite, nach den Quellen revidierte Auflage der Ausgabe von F.X. Haberl und A. Sandberger, ed. H. Leuchtmann (Wiesbaden, 1968–) [L]

Orlande de Lassus: Chansons, ed. J. Bernstein, SCC, xi–xiv (1987) [B]

Orlando di Lasso: Complete Motets, ed. P. Bergquist, RRMR, cii– (1995–) [M i–] for MSS see editions

MASSES

Liber missarum ... liber primus, 4–6vv (Venice, 1566) (RISM 1566[1]) [1566a]

Praestantissimorum divinae musices auctorum missae decem, 4–6vv (Leuven, 1570) (RISM 1570[1]) [1570c]

Quinque missae suavissimis modulationibus refertae ... liber secundus, 4, 5vv (Venice, 1570) (RISM 1570a) [1570e]

Patrocinium musices ... missae aliquot, secunda pars, 5vv (Munich, 1574) (RISM 1574b) [1574a]

Missae variis concentibus ornatae ... cum cantico beatae Mariae octo modis variato, 4–6, 8vv (Paris, 1577–8) (RISM 1577a) [1577b]

Liber missarum, 4, 5vv (Nuremberg, 1581) (RISM 1581a) [1581a]

Missa ad imitationem moduli Quand'io penso al martire, 4vv (Paris, 1582) (RISM 1582a) [1582c]

Missa ad imitationem moduli Beatus qui intelligit, 6vv (Paris, 1587) (RISM 1587a) [1587b]

Missa ad imitationem moduli Locutus sum, 6vv (Paris, 1587) (RISM 1587b) [1587c]

Missae ... liber primus, 4, 5vv (Milan, 1588) (RISM 1588[4]) [1588a]

Patrocinium musices: missae aliquot, 5vv (Munich, 1589) (RISM 1589a) [1589]

Missa ad imitationem moduli Dixit Joseph, 6vv (Paris, 1607) (RISM 1607a) [1607a]

Missae posthumae, 6, 8vv (Munich, 1610) (RISM 1610a) [1610]

Alleluia, 5vv (frag., T only of Kyrie and Gloria), H xii, 155
Alleluia, 5vv (frag., B only of Kyrie and Gloria), H xii, 157
Amar donna ['Chi passa per questa strada'], 5vv, 1589, H vi, 23
Amor ecco colei, 6vv, 1610; H viii, 93
Beatus qui intelligit, 6vv, 1587b (on own motet); H vii, 195
Bell'Amfitrit'altera, 8vv, 1610; H viii, 55
Benedicam Dominum, 5vv, MS *c*1570 (on own motet); H xi, 3
Cantorum, 4vv (inc.); H xii, 3
Certa fortiter, 6vv, 1610 (on own motet); H viii, 131
Confundantur superbi, 5vv, MS *c*1564 (on own motet); H ix, 3
Congratulamini mihi, 6vv, 1570c (on own motet); H vii, 137
Credidi propter, 5vv, 1577b (on own motet); H iii, 249
De feria, 4vv, 1577b; H iv, 87
De feria in Quadragesima, 4vv, MS 1566; H ix, 43
De feria in Septimana Sancta, 4vv, MS 1566; H ix, 51
Deus in adjutorium, 6vv, 1610 (on own motet); H viii, 211
Dittes maistresse, 5vv, 1589 (on Monte's chanson); H vi, 3
Dixit Joseph, 6vv, 1607a (on own motet); H viii, 3
Domine Dominus noster, 6vv, MS 1577 (on own motet); H x, 41
Domine secundum actum meum, 5vv, 1570c (on Jacquet of Mantua's motet); H vii, 49
Doulce memoire, 4vv, 1577b (on Sandrin's chanson); H iv, 3
Eccce Maria, 5vv (inc.) (on own motet); H xii, 51
Ecce nunc benedicite, 6vv, 1610 (on L. Daser's motet); H viii, 173
Entre vous filles, 5vv, 1581a (on Clemens's chanson); H v, 159
Frère Thibault [Sine nomine], 4vv, 1570e (on Certon's chanson); H iii, 75
Il me suffit [Beschaffens-Glück], 4vv, 1581a (on Sermisy's chanson); H v, 139
In die tribulationis, 5vv, 1589 (on Jacquet of Mantua's motet); H vi, 71
In me transierunt, 5vv (frag., T only of Kyrie and Gloria) (on own motet); H xii, 154
In principio, 6vv (inc.) (on own motet); H xii, 65
In te Domine speravi, 6vv, 1566a (on own motet); H v, 51
Io son ferito ahi lasso, 5vv, 1589 (on Palestrina's madrigal); H vi, 105
Ite rime dolenti, 5vv, 1574a (on Rore's madrigal); H iii, 133
Jäger [Venatorum], 4vv, 1577b; H iv, 73
Je ne mange poinct de porcq, 4vv, 1570e; H iii, 3
Je prens en gres, 4vv, MS 1572 (on Clemens's chanson); H ix, 77
Je suis desheritée, 4vv, MS 1583 (on J. Lupi's chanson); H x, 93
Jesus ist ein süsser Nam, 6vv, MS *c*1592; H x, 145
La, la, maistre Pierre [Ad placitum], 4vv, 1570e (on Sermisy's chanson); H iii, 27
Laudate Dominum omnes gentes, 4vv, 1588a; H vii, 3
Le berger et la bergère, 5vv, 1570e (on Gombert's chanson); H iii, 97
Locutus sum, 6vv, 1587c (on own motet); H vii, 89
On me l'a dict, 4vv, MS *c*1570 (on Certon's chanson); H ix, 61
O passi sparsi, 4vv, 1577b (on S. Festa's madrigal); H iv, 49
Osculetur me, 8vv, MS after 1582 (on own motet); H x, 187
Paschalis, 5vv, MS 1576; H ix, 131
Pilons pilons lorge [Quinti toni], 4vv, 1570e (on Sermisy's chanson); H iii, 51
Pro defunctis, 4vv, 1577b; H iv, 95
Pro defunctis, 5vv, 1589; H vi, 135
Puisque i'ay perdu, 4vv, 1577b; H iv, 23
Qual donna attende à gloriosa fama, 5vv, 1589 (on Rore's madrigal); H vi, 43
Quand'io pens'al martire, 4vv, 1582c (on Arcadelt's madrigal); H vii, 25
Qui la dira, 5vv, MS 1576 (on Willaert's madrigal); H x, 3

Requiem, 4vv (inc.); H xii, 326
Rompi de l'empio cor, 6vv, MS c1570 (on Willaert's madrigal); H xi, 45
Scarco di doglia, 5vv, 1574a (on Rore's madrigal); H iii, 175
Sesquialtera, 4vv, MS 1579; H x, 69
Sidus ex claro, 5vv, 1574a (on own motet); H iii, 217
Si rore aenio, 5vv, MS 1572; H ix, 101
Surge propera, 6vv, 1577b (on own motet); H iv, 157
Surrexit Pastor bonus, 5vv (inc.) (on own motet); H xii, 15
Susanne un jour, 5vv, 1577b (on own chanson); H iv, 121
Tempus est ut revertar, 6vv, frag. (B only of Kyrie and Gloria) (on own motet); H xii, 159
Tous les regretz, 6vv, 1577b (on Gombert's chanson); H v, 3
Triste départ, 6vv, MS 1592 (on Gombert's chanson); H x, 115
Veni in hortum meum, 5vv, 1581a (on own motet); H v, 185
Vinum [Verbum] bonum, 8vv, 1577b (on own motet); H v, 105

PASSIONS

Patrocinium musices ... passio, idem lectiones Iob, et lectiones matutinae de nativitate Christi, 4–5vv, quarta pars (Munich, 1575) (RISM 1575a) [1575]
Passio Domini nostri Jesu Christi secundum Mattheum, 5vv, 1575; H ii, 3
Passio Domini nostri Jesu Christi secundum Marcum, 4vv, MS 1582; H ii, 27
Passio Domini nostri Jesu Christi secundum Lucam, 4vv, MS 1582; H ii, 37
Passio Domini nostri Jesu Christi secundum Johannem, 5vv, MS 1580; H ii, 47

CANTICLES

Magnificat settings
(for chronology see Crook, 1994)

Magnificat octo tonorum, 4–6vv (Nuremberg, 1567) (RISM 1567b) [1567b]
Patrocinium musices ... Magnificat aliquot, quinta pars, 4–6, 8vv (Munich, 1576) (RISM 1576c) [1576c]
Patrocinium musices: Beatissimae deiparaeque Virginis Mariae canticum Magnificat, ad imitationem cantilenarum quarundam, 4–6vv (Munich, 1587) (RISM 1587c) [1587d]
Liber primus cantiones sacrae Magnificat vocant, 5, 6vv (Paris, 1602[1]) [1602]
Iubilus beatae virginis, hoc est centum Magnificat, 4–8, 10vv (Munich, 1619) (RISM 1619a) [1619]
Alma real se come fide stella (octavi toni), 5vv, 1619 (on Rore's madrigal); H xvi, 163
Amor ecco colei (septimi toni), 6vv, 1587d; H xiv, 231
Ancor che col partire (quarti toni), 5vv, 1576c (on Rore's madrigal); H xiv, 82
Aria di un sonetto (octavi toni), 5vv, 1587d (on D. Ortiz's Aria di Ruggiero); H xiv, 256
Aurora lucis rutilat (octavi toni), 10vv, 1619 (on own motet); H xvii, 124
Beau le cristal (sexti toni), 4vv, 1619 (on own chanson); H xvi, 230
Benedicta es caelorum regina (octavi toni), 6vv, 1602 (on Josquin's motet); H xv, 228
Dalle belle contrade (sexti toni), 5vv, 1619 (on Rore's madrigal); H xvi, 120
Deus in adjutorium (septimi toni), 6vv, 1587d (on own motet); H xiv, 189
Dessus le marché d'Arras (primi toni), 6vv, 1587d (on own chanson); H xiv, 158
Dies est laetitia (sexti toni), 6vv, 1602; H xv, 212
D'ogni gratia e d'amor (septimi toni), 6vv, 1619 (on Striggio's madrigal); H xvi, 188
Ecco ch'io lasso il core (secundi toni), 6vv, 1587d (? on Striggio's madrigal); H xiv, 201
Erano capei d'oro (septimi toni), 5vv, 1619 (on G.M. Nanino's madrigal); H xvii, 64
Hélas j'ai sans merci (septimi toni), 5vv, 1619 (on own chanson); H xv, 95
Il est jour (secundi toni), 4vv, 1587d (on Sermisy's chanson); H xiv, 133
Las je n'iray plus (secundi toni), 5vv, 1619 (on own chanson); H xv, 46
Mais qui pourroit (secundi toni), 6vv, 1587d (on own chanson); H xiv, 275
Margot labourez les vignes (septimi toni), 4vv, 1619 (on own chanson); H xvi, 154
Memor esto (secundi toni), 6vv, 1619 (on own motet); H xvii, 107
Mort et fortune (tertii toni), 5vv, 1587d (on Gombert's chanson); H xiv, 263
O che vezzosa aurora (secundi toni), 6vv, 1619 (on Vecchi's madrigal); H xvi, 175
Omnis enim homo (primi toni), 6vv, 1587d (on own motet); H xiv, 216
Omnis homo primum bonum vinum ponit (sexti toni), 6vv, 1602 (on Wert's motet); H xv, 181
O s'io potessi (secundi toni), 4vv, 1619 (on Berchem's madrigal); H xv, 3
Pange lingua gloriosa (septimi toni), 4vv, 1619; H xvi, 241
Praeter rerum seriem (secundi toni), 6vv, 1602 (on Josquin's motet); H xv, 248
Quando lieta sperai (quarti toni), 6vv, 1587d (on a madrigal variously attrib. Rore and Morales); H xiv, 243
Quant'in mille anni il ciel (secundi toni), 6vv, 1587d (on Nollet's madrigal); H xiv, 141
Recordare Jesu pie (septimi toni), 6vv, 1619 (on own motet); H xvi, 134
S'io credessi per morte (tertii toni), 4vv, 1619 (on A. de Reulx's madrigal); H xvi, 221
S'io esca vivo (septimi toni), 6vv, 1619 (on own madrigal); H xv, 108
Si par souhait (primi toni), 4vv, 1587d (on own chanson); H xiv, 126
Si vous estes m'amie (sexti toni), 6vv, 1619 (on own chanson); H xvii, 94
Susanne un jour (primi toni), 6vv, 1587d (on Lupi's chanson); H xiv, 174
Tant vous allez doux (sexti toni), 6vv, 1619 (on Ebran's chanson); H xv, 74
Ultimi miei sospiri (secundi toni), 6vv, 1619 (on Verdelot's madrigal); H xv, 58
Vergine bella (primi toni), 5vv, 1619 (on Rore's madrigal); H xvi, 108
Vola vola pensier [Aeria a la italiana] (octavi toni), 5vv, 1602; H xvii, 3
Vous perdez temps (septimi toni), 5vv, 1619 (on Sermisy's chanson); H xvi, 267
Primi toni, 4vv, 1576c, H xiv, 75; Primi toni (i), 5vv, 1619, H xvi, 92; Primi toni (ii), 5vv, 1619, H xvi, 108; Primi toni (iii), 5vv, 1619, H xvi, 259
Secundi toni, 5vv, 1619, H xv, 10; Secundi toni, 6vv, 1619, H xvii, 76
Quarti toni (i), 5vv, 1619, H xv, 16; Quarti toni (ii), 5vv, 1619, H xvii, 48; Quarti toni, 8vv, 1619, H xv, 138
Quinti toni, 6vv, 1619, H xvii, 14
Sexti toni (i), 5vv, 1619, H xv, 24; Sexti toni (ii), 5vv, 1619, H xv, 30; Sexti toni (iii), 5vv, 1619, H xvi, 57; [Sexti toni], 5vv, MS c1582, H xv, 201; Sexti toni, 8vv, 1576c, H xiv, 94
Septimi toni (i), 5vv, 1619, H xv, 35; Septimi toni (ii), 5vv, 1619, H xvi, 67; Septimi toni ('perpulchrum'), 7vv, 1619, H xvi, 204; Septimi toni, 8vv, 1576c, H xiv, 112; Septimi toni, 8vv, 1619, H xv, 152; Septimi toni, 10vv, MS, H xvii, 150
Octavi toni (i), 5vv, 1619, H xv, 40; Octavi toni (ii), 5vv, 1619, H xvi, 80; Octavi toni, 6vv, 1619, H xv, 126; Octavi toni (i), 8vv, 1619, H xv, 166; Octavi toni (ii), 8vv, 1619, H xvii, 31
8 settings, octo tonorum (i), 4vv, 1567b, H xiii, 245; 8 settings, octo tonorum (ii), 4vv, 1587d, H xiv, 3
8 settings, octo tonorum (i), 5vv, 1567b, H xiii, 143; 8 settings, octo tonorum (ii), 5vv, 1619, H xvi, 3
8 settings, octo tonorum, 6vv, 1567b, H xiii, 3

Nunc Dimittis settings

Come havran fin, 4vv, H xxiv, 37; Heu mihi Domini, 5vv, H xxiv, 59; Il magnanimo Pietro, 7vv, H xxiv, 29; Io son si stanco, 5vv, H xxiv, 76; Oculi mei semper ad Dominum, 6vv, H xxiv, 83; S'el mio sempre per voi, 4vv, H xxiv, 46; Susanne un jour, 5vv, H xxiv, 94; Un dubbio verno, 5vv, H xxiv, 68; Quarti toni, 4vv, H xxiv, 3; Quarti toni, 5vv, H xxiv, 54; Quinti toni, 4vv, H xxiv, 24; Septimi toni, 4vv, H xxiv, 11; Octavi toni, 4vv, H xxiv, 17

3 Benedictus Dominus Israel, 9vv, H xxiv, 105, 127, 149

Miserere mei Deus, 9vv, MS 1850s, Mbs; H xxiv, 172

MASS PROPERS

Patrocinium musices ... officia aliquot, de praecipuis festis anni ... tertia pars, 5vv (Munich, 1574) (RISM 1574c) [1574b]
Asperges me (quarti toni), 5vv, 1574b, H xxiii, 14; Asperges me (septimi toni), 5vv, 1574b, H xxiii, 20; Officium Corporis Christi, 1574b, 5vv, H xxiii, 106; Officium Natalis Christi, 5vv, 1574b, H

xxiii, 28; Officium Paschale, 5vv, 1574b, H xxiii, 53; Officium Pentecostes, 5vv, 1574b, H xxiii, 81; Vidi aquam, 5vv, 1574b, H xxiii, 3; Officium primum in Nativitate Domini, 6vv, H xxiii, 192; Epiphania Domini, 6vv, H xxiii, 203; Ascensio Domini, 6vv, H xxiii, 215; Corpus Christi, 6vv, H xxiii, 230; Resurrectio Domini, 6vv, H xxiii, 273; Feria 2a post Resurrectionem, 6vv, H xxiii, 298; Feria 3a post Resurrectionem, 6vv, H xxiii, 317; Quinquagesima, 6vv, H xxiii, 332; Officium Sancti Michaelis, 6vv, H xxiii, 346

LESSONS

Sacrae lectiones novem ex propheta Iob, in officiis defunctorum cantari solitae, 4vv (Venice, 1565) (RISM 1565e); Hxix, 3; RRMR, lv (1983)
Patrocinium musices … passio, 5vv idem lectiones Iob, et lectiones matutinae de nativitate Christi, 4vv, quarta pars (Munich, 1575) (RISM 1575a); H xix, 137
Lectiones sacrae novem, ex libris Hiob excerptea, 4vv (Munich, 1582) (RISM 1582f); H xix, 101; RRMR, lv (1983)

LAMENTATIONS

Hieremiae prophetae lamentationes, et aliae pieae cantiones, 5vv (Munich, 1585) (RISM 1585d) [1585b]
9 Lamentationes Hieremiae, 4vv, MS *c*1588; H xxii, 112
9 Lamentationes Hieremiae, 5vv, 1585b; H xxii, 3

LITANIES
all printed works in 1596[2]

Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis (i), 4vv; H xxv, 3
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis (ii), 4vv; H xxv, 5
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis (i), 5vv; H xxv, 11
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis (ii), 5vv; H xxv, 16
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis (iii), 5vv; H xxv, 20
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis (iv), 5vv; H xxv, 23
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis (v), 5vv; H xxv, 28
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis, 6vv; H xxv, 32
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis, 8vv; H xxv, 37
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis (i), 9vv; H xxv, 67
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis (ii), 9vv, MS *c*1590; H xxv, 74
Litaniae Beatae Mariae Virginis, 10vv, MS *c*1580; H xxv, 98
Litaniae Deiparae Beatae Mariae Virginis, 4vv, MS; H xxv, 113
Litaniae omnium sanctorum, 4vv; H xxv, 121
Litaniae omnium sanctorum, 5vv; H xxv, 127
Litaniae omnium sanctorum, 7vv; H xxv, 134

FALSOBORDONI
all ed. in H xxv

Dixit dominus: Primi toni (i), 4vv; Primi toni (ii), 4vv; Primi toni (i), 5vv; Primi toni (ii), 5vv; Primi toni (iii), 5vv; Secundi toni (i), 5vv; Secundi toni (ii), 5vv; Tertii toni (i), 4vv; Tertii toni (ii), 4vv; Quarti toni (i), 4vv; Quarti toni (ii), 4vv; Quinti toni, 4vv; Sexti toni, 5vv; Septimi toni (i), 4vv; Septimi toni (ii), 4vv; Septimi toni (iii), 4vv; Septimi toni, 5vv; Octavi toni (i), 5vv; Octavi toni (ii), 5vv
In exitu Israel: Toni peregrini, 4vv
Textless: Tertii toni, 4vv; Tertii toni, 5vv; Toni in Caesarea Capella consueti, 4vv

HYMNS
all in D-Mbs, c1580

Ad coenam agni providi, 4vv, H xviii, 57; Ad preces nostras, 4vv, H xviii, 45; Audi benigne conditor, 4vv, H xviii, 42; Aurea luce et decore, 4vv, H xviii, 86; Ave maris stella, 4vv, H xviii, 36; Christe redemptor omnium, Tu lumen, 5vv, H xviii, 18; Christe redemptor omnium, Beata quoque, 4vv, H xviii, 3; Conditor alme siderum, 5vv, H xviii, 14; Custodes hominum, 4vv, H xviii, 144; Deus tuorum militum (i), 4vv, H xviii, 111; Deus tuorum militum (ii), 4vv, H xviii, 122; Doctor egregie, 4vv, H xviii, 91; Exultet coelum laudibus, 4vv, H xviii, 117; Fit porta Christi pervia, 5vv, H xviii, 151; Fortem virili pectore, 4vv, H xviii, 147; Haec dies, quam fecit Dominus, 4vv, H xviii, 141; Hostis herodes impie, 5vv, H xviii, 26; In exitu Israel, 4vv, H xviii, 138; Iste confessor, 4vv, H xviii, 8; Jesu corona virginum, 4vv, H xviii, 10 [=Pater superni luminis, H xviii, 154]
Jesu nostra redemptio, 4vv, H xviii, 61; Lauda mater Ecclesia, 5vv, H xviii, 93 [=Pater superni luminis, H xviii, 171]; Lucis creator optime, 4vv, H xviii, 32; O lux beata Trinitas, 4vv, H xviii, 30; Pange lingua gloriosi, 5vv, H xviii, 71; Petrus beatus catenarum, 4vv, H xviii, 98; Quicumque Christum queritis, 4vv, H xviii, 100; Rex gloriose martirum, 4vv, H xviii, 114; Salvete flores martyrum, 4vv, H xviii, 24 [= Deus tuorum militum, H xviii, 158 = Exultet caelum laudibus, H xviii, 161]; Sanctorum meritis, 4vv, H xviii, 126; Te lucis ante terminum (i), 4vv, H xviii, 50; Te lucis ante terminum (ii), 4vv, H xviii, 166; Tibi Christe splendor patris, 4vv, H xviii, 104; Tristes erant apostoli, 4vv, H xviii, 108; Urbs beata Jerusalem, 4vv, H xviii, 132; Ut queant laxis, 4vv, H xviii, 82; Veni creator spiritus, 5vv, H xviii, 65; Vexilla regis prodeunt, 4vv, H xviii, 51

RESPONSORIES AND ANTIPHONS
all in D-Mbs

In nativitate Domini, 5vv, ?1580–85; H xxiv, 261
Pro Triduo sacro in nocturno II et III, 4vv, ?1580–85; H xxiv, 197
In die Sancto Paschae, 6vv; H xxiv, 251
In exequiis, 4vv; H xxiv, 274
Antiphonae septem ad Vesperas Corporis Christ, 6vv; H xxiv, 281
Antiphonae septem ad Vesperas Sancti Michaelis, 4vv; H xxiv, 313

MOTETS

Il primo libro dove si contengono madrigali, vilanesche, canzoni francesi, e motetti, 4vv (Antwerp, 1555) (RISM 1555[29], same contents as 1555[19]) [1555b]
Il primo libro de mottetti, 5, 6vv (Antwerp, 1556, enlarged 2/1560 as Liber decimus quintus ecclesiasticarum cantionum) (RISM 1556a/1560a) [1556/1560b]
[25] Sacrae cantiones, 5vv (Nuremberg, 1562, enlarged 2/1570) (RISM 1562a/1570b) [1562/1570h]
Primus liber concentuum sacrorum, 5, 6vv (Paris, 1564) (RISM 1564b) [1564b]
Dixhuictieme livre de chansons, 4, 5vv (Paris, 1565) (RISM 1565f) [1565a]
Modulorum … modulatorum secundum volumen, 4–8, 10vv (Paris, 1565) (RISM 1565a) [1565b]
Perornatae sacrae cantiones … liber secundus, 5, 6vv (Venice, 1565) (RISM 1565c) [1565c]
Sacrae cantiones … liber secundus, 5, 6vv (Venice, 1566) (RISM 1566c) [1566b]
Sacrae cantiones … liber tertius, 5, 6vv (Venice, 1566) (RISM 1566d) [1566c]
Sacrae cantiones … liber quartus, 6, 8vv (Venice, 1566) (RISM 1566e) [1566d]
Selectissimae cantiones, 4–6vv (Nuremberg, 1568) (RISM 1568a) [1568a]
Selectissimae cantiones, 4, 5vv (Nuremberg, 1568) (RISM 1568b) [1568b]
Cantiones aliquot, 5vv (Munich, 1569) (RISM 1569a) [1569a]
Liber secundus sacrarum cantionum, 4vv (Leuven, 1569) (RISM 1569[8]) [1569b]
Disieme livre de chansons, 4vv (Paris, 1570) (RISM 1570[9]) [1570a]
Mellange d'Orlande de Lassus, contenant plusieurs chansons, tant en vers latins qu'en ryme francoyse, 4, 5vv (Paris, 1570) (RISM 1570d) [1570b]
Selectiorum aliquot cantionum sacrarum, fasciculus adiunctis in fine tribus dialogis, 6, 8vv (Munich, 1570) (RISM 1570c) [1570g]
Moduli nunquam hactenus editi, 5vv (Paris, 1571) (RISM 1571a) [1571b]
Moduli, 4, 8vv (Paris, 1572) (RISM 1572a) [1572b]
Moduli, 6, 7, 12vv (Paris, 1573) (RISM 1573b) [1573a]
Patrocinium musices … cantionum … prima pars, 4–6vv (Munich, 1573) (RISM 1573a) [1573b]
6 cantiones latinae, 4vv, adiuncto dialogo, 8vv: 6 teutsche Lieder, 4vv, sampt einem Dialogo, 8vv: 6 chansons françoises nouvelles, 4vv, avecq un dialogue, 8vv: 6 madrigali nuovi, 4vv, con un dialogo, 8vv (Munich, 1573) (RISM 1573d) [1573c]
Liber mottetarum, trium vocum, quae cum vivae voci, tum omnis generis instrumentis musicis commodissimé applicari possunt (Munich, 1575, enlarged 2/1577) (RISM 1575b/1577d) [1575/1577a]
Les meslanges … contenantz plusieurs chansons, tant en vers latins qu'en ryme francoyse, 4–6, 8, 10vv (Paris, 1576, earlier edn. 1570, lost; repr. with sacred contrafacta, London, 1570) (RISM 1576i) [1576b]
Moduli, 4–9vv (Paris, 1577) (RISM 1577e) [1577c]
Novae aliquot et ante hac non ita usitatae cantiones suavissimae, 2vv (Munich, 1577) [incl. 12 textless bicinia] (RISM 1577c) [1577d]
Altera pars selectissimarum cantionum, 4, 5vv (Nuremberg, 1579) (RISM 1579b) [1579]
Fasciculi aliquot sacrarum cantionum, 4–6, 8vv (Nuremberg, 1582) (RISM 1582c) [1582a]
Lectiones sacrae novem, ex libris Hiob excerptea, 4vv (Munich, 1582) (RISM 1582f) [1582b]

Mottetta typis nondum uspiam excusa, 6vv (Munich, 1582) (RISM 1582e) [1582d]
Sacrae cantiones, 5vv (Munich, 1582) [1582e]
Continuation du mellange, 3–6, 10vv (Paris, 1584) (RISM 1584f) [1584a]
Psalmi Davidis poenitentiales, modis musicis redditi ... his accessit psalmus Laudate Dominum de coelis, 5vv (Munich, 1584/R1970) (RISM 1584e) [1584b]
Cantica sacra, recens numeris et modulis musicis ornata, 6, 8vv (Munich, 1585) (RISM 1585b) [1585a]
Hieremiae prophetae lamentationes, et aliae pieae cantiones, 5vv (Munich, 1585) (RISM 1585d) [1585b]
Sacrae cantiones ... recens singulari industria compositae, 4vv (Munich, 1585) (RISM 1585a) [1585d]
Tertium opus musicum, continens lectiones Hiob et motectas seu cantiones sacras, 4–6vv (Nuremberg, 1588) (RISM 1588[8]) [1588b]
Moduli quator et octo vocum (Paris, 1588) (RISM 1588c) [1588d]
Moduli quinque vocum (Paris, 1588) (RISM 1588d) [1588e]
Cantiones sacrae, 6vv (Graz, 1594) (RISM 1594a) [1594]
Lagrime di S Pietro ... con un mottetto nel fine, 7vv (Munich, 1595) (RISM 1595a) [1595]
Cantiones ab Orlando di Lasso et huius filio Ferdinando di Lasso compositae, 5vv (Munich, 1597) (RISM 1597[3]) [1597]
Prophetiae Sibyllarum ... chromatico more singulari confectae, 4vv (Munich, 1600) (RISM 1600a) [1600]
Liber primus cantiones sacrae Magnificat vocant, 5, 6vv (Paris, 1602) (RISM 1602[1]) [1602]
Magnum opus musicum ... complectens omnes cantiones, 2–10, 12vv (Munich, 1604) (RISM 1604a) [1604]
1563[3], 1564[1], 1564[2], 1564[3], 1564[4], 1564[5], 1566[17], 1567[3], 1567[13], 1568[2], 1568[4], 1583[2], 1586[4], 1590[5], 1601[3]
Accipe daque (2p. of Anna mihi dilecta veni)
Accipe qua recrees (2p. Quo fers), 6vv, 1604; S xi, 101, M xxi
Accipite Spiritum (2p. of Jam non dicam vos)
Ad Dominum cum tribularer (2p. Heu mihi), 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 49, M xvi
Adoramus te Christe (i), 3vv, 1586; S i, 57, M xix
Adoramus te Christe (ii), 3vv, 1586; S i, 57, M xix
Adoramus te, Christe (iii), 3vv, 1604; M xxi
Adoramus te Christe (i), 4vv, 1586; M xix
Adoramus te Christe (ii), 4vv, 1604: S i, 112, M xxi
Adoramus te Christe, 5vv, 1604; S v, 63, M xxi
Adorna thalamum, 4vv, 1585d: S i, 91, M xiv
Ad primum morsum, 6vv, 1594; S xix, 74, M xvi
Ad te Domine levavi (2p. Vias tuas), 5vv, 1556; S ix, 150, M i
Ad te igitur (3p. of Infelix ego)
Ad te levavi animam meam, 6vv 1582d; S xvii, 121, M xiii
Ad te levavi oculos meos (2p. Miserere nostri), 6vv, 1570g; S xvii, 125, M vii
Ad te perenne gaudium, 3vv, 1604; S i, 60, M xxi
Adversum me loquebantur, 5vv, 1562; S ix, 40, M ii
Aegra currit (2p. of Lauda mater ecclesia)
Agimus tibi gratias, 3vv, 1604; S i, 59, M xxi
Agimus tibi gratias, 4vv, 1604; S i, 131, M xxi
Agimus tibi gratias (i), 5vv, 1576b; S v, 98, M xviii
Agimus tibi gratias (ii), 5vv, 1579; S v, 100, M xviii
Agimus tibi gratias, 6vv, 1573b; S xiii, 103, M ix
Alia est enim (2p. of Quicumque vult salvus esse)
Alleluia (2p. of Alleluia Surrexit Dominus)
Alleluia laus et gloria, 4vv, 1604; S i, 68, M xxi
Alleluia Surrexit Dominus (2p. Allueluja; 3p. Dum transisset; 4p. Maria Magdalena; 5p. Ut venientes; 6p. Et valde mane; 7p. Gloria Patri), 6vv, 1592; Mbs
Alleluia, vox laeta personat (2p. Alleluia, praegaudio resultant), 5vv, 1568b, M vi
Alma nemes quae sola [Alme Deus qui cuncta tenes], 4vv, 1555b; S iii, 93, M xvli
Alma parens dilecta Deo (2p. Qua sina coelestis; 3p. Nos pia turba; 4p. Tu modo diva; 5p. Aspicent invictos), 5vv, 1604; S v, 128, M xxi
Alma Redemptoris mater, 5vv, 1597; S v, 102, M xx
Alma Redemptoris mater (i), 6vv, 1582d; S xiii, 105, M xiii
Alma Redemptoris mater (ii), 6vv, 1604; S xiii, 108, M xix
Alma Redemptoris mater, 8vv, 1604; S xxi, 14, M xxi
Alma Venus [Christe Patris verbum] (2p. Nunc elegos divae [Tu poteris]), 5vv, 1560a; S v, 37, M xvii
Amen dico vobis, 4vv, 1564[5]; S i, 119, M iii
Andreas Christi famulus, 6vv, 1585a; S xv, 1, M xv
Angelus ad pastores ait, 5vv, 1562; S iii, 139, M ii
Angelus Domini descendit (2p. Nolite timere), 6vv, 1585a; S xiii, 1, M xv
Angelus Domini locutus est, 5vv, 1571b; S v, 51, M viii
Anima mea liquefacta est, 5vv, 1582e; S ix, 42, M xii
Animam meam dilectam tradidi (2p. Congregamini), 5vv, 1565b; S v, 29, M iv
Anna mihi dilecta veni [Christe Dei soboles] (2p. Accipe daque), 4vv, 1579; S iii, 95, M xviii
Anni nostri sicut aranea, 6vv, 1566d; S xv, 53, M v
Ante me non est formatus Deus, 6vv, 1573b; S xi, 131, M ix
Aspicent invictos (5p. of Alma parens dilecta Deo)
At illi (2p. of Cum natus esset)
Audi benigne conditor (2p. Multum quidem), 5vv, 1568[2]; S vii, 86, M xvii
Audi dulcis [filia] amica mea, 4vv, 1555b; S i, 99, M xvii
Audi tellus (2p. Ubi Plato; 3p. Ubi David), 6vv, 1566d; S xv, 44, M v
Auris bona est, 5vv, 1582e; S vii, 56, M xii
Aurora lucis rutilat, 10vv, 1604; S xxi, 119, M xxii
Ave color vini clari [Ave decus coeli; Ave Christe] (2p. O quam flagrans), 5vv, 1568b; S xi, 11, M vi
Ave Jesu Christe [Maria] alta stirps, 4vv, 1579; S i, 102, M xviii
Ave Maria gratia plena, 5vv, 1604; S v, 118, M xix
Ave mater matris Dei, 4vv, 1604; S i, 132, M xxi
Ave regina coelorum, 3vv, 1575; S i, 25, M xi
Ave regina coelorum, 4vv, 1604; S i, 79, M xix
Ave regina coelorum, 5vv, 1604; S v, 104, M xxii
Ave regina coelorum (i), 6vv, 1582d; S xiii, 111, M xix
Ave regina coelorum (ii), 6vv, 1604; S xiii, 114, M xiii
Averte Domine (2p. of Domine Jesu Christe qui cognoscis)
Ave verum corpus, 6vv, 1582d; S xiii, 66, M xiii
Beata cuius (3p. of Vexilla regis prodeunt)
Beati omnes qui timent (2p. Ecce sit benedicetur), 3vv, 1575; S i, 49, M xi
Beati omnes qui timent (2p. Ecce sit benedicetur), 5vv, 1565b; S vii, 136, M iv
Beati pacifici (2p. of Beati pauperes)
Beati pauperes spiritu (2p. Beati pacifici), 4vv, 1572b; H i, 11, M xviii
Beatus homo (2p. of Quam magnificata sunt)
Beatus homo cui donatum est, 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 99, M xvi
Beatus homo qui invenit sapientiam, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 1, M xi
Beatus ille qui procul negotiis (2p. Ergo aut adulta; 3p. Libet jacere), 5vv, 1569a; S xi, 22, M vii
Beatus Nicolaus, 8vv, 1604; S xxi, 23, M xviii
Beatus qui intelligit (2p. Dominus opem), 6vv, 1565b; S xvii, 105, M iv
Beatus vir qui in sapientia morabitur, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 1, M xi
Beatus vir qui inventus est, 5vv, 1582e; S ix, 117, M xii
Beatus vir qui non abiit, 6vv, 1568a; S xv, 159, M vi
Beatus vir qui timet, 4vv, 1565b; S iii, 50, M iv
Benedicam Dominum, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 73, M xiv
Benedicam Dominum (2p. In Domino laudabitur), 5vv, 1562; S ix, 174, M ii
Benedic anima mea, 4vv, 1585d; S i, 152, M xiv
Benedic anima mea Domino (2p. Qui replet; 3p. Non secundum; 4p. Recordatus; 5p. Benedicite Domino), 6vv, 1570g; S xv, 169, M vii
Benedic Domine domum istam, 8vv, 1588d; S xix, 160, M xix
Benedicite Domino (5p. of Benedic anima mea Domino)
Benedicite gentes, 4vv, 1585d; S i, 157, M xiv
Benedicite ignis (2p. of Benedicite omnia opera)
Benedicite montes (3p. of Benedicite omnia opera)
Benedicite omnia opera (2p. Benedicite ignis; 3p. Benedicite montes; 4p. Benedicite sacerdotes), 5, 6vv, 1565b; S ix, 93, M iv
Benedicite sacerdotes (4p. of Benedicite omnia opera)
Benedictio et claritas, 6vv, 1582d; S xi, 139, M xiii
Benedictus es Domine (i), 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 49, M xiv
Benedictus es Domine (ii), 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 65, M xiv
Benedixisti Domine, 5vv, 1582e; S ix, 179, M xii
Bestia curvafia pulices [Bestia stultus homo], 5vv, 1576b; S xi, 44; H i, 67, M xviii
Bone Jesu verbum patris, 8vv, 1604; S xix, 154, M xxi
Bonitatem fecisti, 5vv, 1565b; S ix, 15, M iv
Bonum est confidere (2p. of Dominus mihi adjutor)
Caligaverunt oculi mei, 5vv, 1562; S ix, 182, M ii
Cantabant canticum Moysi (2p. Quis non timet), 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 131, M xvi
Cantantibus organis (2p. Fiat Domine), 5vv, 1582e; S v, 164, M xii
Cantate Domino canticum novum (2p. Cantate ... et benedicite), 3vv, 1575; S i, 42, M xi

Cantate Domino canticum novum (2p. Viderunt omnes), 5vv, 1565c; S vii, 142, M v
Cantate Dominum canticum novum, 6vv, 1582d, S xix, 14, M xiii
Cantate ... et benedicite (2p. of Cantate Domino canticum novum)
Cantate ei (2p. of Exurgat Deus)
Cernere virtutes, 5vv, 1568b, S iii, 114, M vi
Cerno Dei (11p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Certa fortiter, 6vv, 1582d; S xv, 82, M xiii
Christi, Patris verbum (2p. Tu poteris nostri maculas), 5vv, 1568b; M vi
Christus resurgens ex mortuis, 3vv, 1575; S i, 23, M xi
Christus resurgens ex mortuis, 5vv, 1582e; S v, 54, M xii
Circumdederunt me dolores mortis, 6vv, 1601[3]; S xv, 106, M xx
Clamaverunt ad Dominum, 6vv, 1570g; S xvii, 29, M vii
Clare sanctorum senatus (2p. Thoma), 5vv, 1562; S v, 144, M ii
Cognoscimus Domine (2p. Vita nostra), 5vv, 1564[4]; S vii, 147, M iii
Cognovi Domine (2p. Veniant mihi), 4vv, 1565b; S i, 147, M iv
Concupiscendo concupiscit (2p. Exaltabo te), 6vv, 1565c; S xvii, 145, M v
Confirma hoc Deus, 6vv, 1583[2]; S xvii, 96, M xix
Confisus Domino (2p. Inde tuo si quis), 5vv, 1564[4]; S vii, 92, M iii
Confitebor tibi Domine, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 16, M xiv
Contitebor tibi Domine, 6vv, 1594; S xix, 20, M xvi
Confitebor tibi Domine, 8vv, 1564[1]; S xxi, 56, M iii
Confitemini Domino (2p. Narrate omnia), 5vv, 1562; S vii, 131, M ii
Confitemini Domino (2p. Ipse castigavit), 6vv, 1573b; S xvii, 79, M ix
Confortamini et jam nolite, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 89, M xiv
Confundantur superbi (2p. Fiat cor meum), 5vv, 1562; S ix, 155, M ii
Congratulamini mihi (2p. Tulerunt), 6vv, 1566d; S xiii, 10, M v
Congregamini (2p. of Animam meam dilectam)
Congregati sunt inimici nostri, 5vv, 1597; S ix, 186, M xviii
Conserva me Domine (2p. Sancti qui sunt), 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 101, M xvi
Contristatus sum (2p. of Exaudi Deus orationem)
Conveniens homini est famam, 6vv, 1585a; S xv, 92, M xv
Convertere anima (2p. of Tribulationem et dolorem)
Convertere Domine (2p. of Ego dixi Domine)
Convertere Domine (2p. of In convertendo Dominus)
Coram illo (2p. of Descendit sicut pluvia)
Creator omnium Deus, 6vv, 1556; S xiii, 68, M i
Credidi propter (2p. Vota mea), 5vv, 1569a; S ix, 21, M vii
Cum dederit (2p. of Nisi Dominus)
Cum essem parvulus (2p. Nunc cognosco), 6vv, 1582d; S xv, 72, M xiii
Cum hominibus (2p. of Domine clamavi)
Cum invocarem exaudibit me (2p. Sacrificate; 3p. Signum est), 6vv, 1570g; S xvii, 43, M vii
Cum natus esset Jesus (2p. At illi; 3p. Et ecce stella), 6vv, 1566d; S xi, 141, M v
Cum rides mihi (2p. Data est), 5vv, 1577c; H i, 23, M xviii
Custodi me Domine, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 88, M xiv
Da gaudiorum (2p. of Tibi laus tibi gloria)
Da mihi intellectum (2p. of Legem pone mihi)
Da pacem Domine, 5vv, 1588e; H i, 62, M xix
Da pacem Domine (i), 6vv, 1582d; S xiii, 72, M xiii
Da pacem Domine (ii), 6vv, 1556; S xiii, 74, M i
Da pater antique, 5vv, 1569a; S v, 84, M vii
Data est (2p. of Cum rides mihi)
Date siceram (2p. of Noli regibus)
Decantabat populus Israel, 7vv, 1564[2]; S xix, 91, M iii
Declinate (2p. of Iniquos odio habui)
Deficiat in dolore vita mea, 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 22, M xvi
Delitiae Phoebi, 5vv, 1556; S xi, 81, M i
De me solus (2p. of Huc me sidero)
De ore prudentis, 5vv, 1565c; S vii, 38, M v
De profundis (6p. of Psalmi Davidis poenitentiales)
Descendit sicut pluvia (2p. Coram illo), 5vv, 1571b; S v, 3, M viii
Deus canticum novum (2p. Quia delectasti), 5vv, 1565c; S vii, 164, M v
Deus in adjutorium meum intende, 6vv, 1582d; S xvii, 160, M xiii
Deus iniqui insurrexerunt, 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 113, M xvi
Deus in loco (3p. of Exurgat Deus)
Deus in nomine tuo (2p. Ecce enim Deus), 4vv, 1565b; S iii, 44, M iv
Deus judex justus (2p. Et in eo paravit), 5vv, 1571b; S ix, 61, M viii
Deus meus in simplicitate, 6vv, 1582d; S xvii, 156, M xiii
Deus misereatur nostri, 8vv, 1566d; S xxi, 35, M v
Deus noster refugium, 5vv, 1565b; S ix, 131, M iv
Deus qui bonum vinum [Deus qui non vis mortem], 4vv, 1565a; S iii, 97, M xvii
Deus qui sedes super thronum, 5vv, 1562; S ix, 12, M ii
Deus tu conversus, 5vv, 1582e; S ix, 46, M xii
Deus tu scis insipientiam meam, 3vv, 1575; S i, 40, M xi
Dextera Domini, 4vv, 1585d; S i, 158, M xiv
Dic mihi quem portas, 8vv, 1570g; S xix, 133, M xviii
Dies enim (2p. of Lauda Sion salvatorem)
Diligam te Domine, 3vv, 1577a; S i, 48, M xi
Diligam te Domine fortitudo, 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 67, M xvi
Dilige solitudinem, 5vv, 1583[2]; S vii, 35, M xix
Diliges proximum tuum (2p. Quoniam qui talia; 3p. Fructus autem), 4vv, 1582b; S i, 113, M xix
Dissipata sit (3p. of Domine clamavi)
Diverte a malo (2p. of Venite filii audite me)
Divites eguerunt (2p. of Gustate et videte)
Dixi custodiam vias meas, 8vv, 1577c; S xxi, 48, M xviii
Dixi ergo in corde meo (2p. Possedi servos; 3p. Et omnia), 5vv, 1585b; S vii, 107, M xix
Dixit autem (3p. of Missus est angelus)
Dixit autem (4p. of Missus est angelus)
Dixit Dominus, 8vv, 1570g; S xxi, 27, M vii
Dixit Joseph undecim fratribus suis (2p. Nunciaverunt), 6vv, 1564[3]; S xv, 76, M iii
Dixit Martha, 9vv, 1577c; S xxi, 98, M xviii
Dixit mater (2p. of Nuptiae factae sunt)
Dominator Domine, 5vv, 1571b; S v, 96, M viii
Domine ad adjuvandum me, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 32, M xiv
Domine clamavi (2p. Cum hominibus; 3p. Dissipata sit), 5vv, 1573b; S ix, 140, M ix
Domine convertere, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 17, M xiv
Domine da nobis auxilium, 6vv, 1585a; S xvii, 19, M xv
Domine deduc me (2p. Sepulchrum patens), 6vv, 1566d; S xvii, 24, M v
Dominè Deus fortissime, 5vv, 1585b; S vii, 83, M xix
Domine Deus meus, 3vv, 1577a; S i, 34, M xi
Domine Deus salutis meae, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 91, M xiv
Domine Dominus noster, 6vv, 1577c; S xvii, 39, M xviii
Domine eduxisti (2p. of Exaltabo te Domine)
Domine exaudi ... auribus percipe (7p. of Psalmi Davidis poenitentiales)
Domine exaudi ... non avertas (5p. of Psalmi Davidis poenitentiales)
Domine exaudi orationem meam, 4v, 1585d; S iii, 33, M xiv
Domine fac mecum, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 63, M xiv
Domine in auxilium, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 92, M xiv
Domine Jesu Christe pastor bone, 5vv, 1585b; S v, 167, M xix
Domine Jesu Christe qui cognoscis (2p. Averte Domine), 5vv, 1577c; S v, 91, M xviii
Domine labia mea, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 66, M xiv
Domine ne in furore tuo ... miserere (2p. of Psalmi Davidis poenitentiales)
Domine ne in furore tuo ... quoniam (3p. of Psalmi Davidis poenitentiales)
Domine non est exaltatum (2p. Sicut ablactatus), 3vv, 1575; S i, 30, M xi
Domine non est exaltatum (2p. Sicut ablactatus), 5vv, 1556; S vii, 152, M i Domine non est exaltatum (2p. Sicut ablactatus), 6vv, 1585a; S xvii, 117, M xv
Domine probasti me (2p. Ecce Domine), 5vv, 1556; S ix, 34, M i
Domine quando veneris, 4vv, 1555b; S iii, 107, M xvii
Domine quando veneris, 5vv, 1568[4]; H i (nachtrag), 1, M xvii
Domine quid multiplicati sunt, 6vv, 1582d; S xvii, 110, M xiii
Domine quid multiplicati sunt (2p. Ego dormivi), 12vv, 1604; S xxi, 135, M xxi
Domine secundum actum meum, 4vv, 1573c; S iii, 13, M x
Domine vivifica me, 4vv, 1582b; S iii, 81, M xix
Dominus mihi adjutor (2p. Bonum est confidere), 6vv, 1566d; S xvii, 58, M v
Dominus opem (2p. of Beatus qui intelligit)
Dominus scit cogitationes, 5vv, 1556; S ix, 128, M i
Dulce lignum (2p. of O crux splendidior)
Dulces exuviae (2p. Urbem praeclaram), 5vv, 1570b; S xi, 57, M xvii
Dulci sub umbra, 5vv, 1597; S xi, 49, M xx
Dum meditor (7p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Dum nos Ererbi (4p. of Tibi progenies, 5vv; 3p. of Tibi progenies, 6vv)
Dum transisset (3p. of Alleluia Surrexit Dominus)
Ecce Agnus Dei (2p. of Ecce Maria genuit)

Ecce dies nigras (5p. of Porphetiae Sibyllarum)
Ecce dies venient (2p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Ecce Domine (2p. of Domine probasti me)
Ecce enim Deus (2p. of Deus in nomine tuo)
Ecce Maria genuit nobis (2p. Ecce Agnus Dei), 5vv, 1568b; S v, 15, M vi
Ecce nunc benedicite, 7vv, 1604; S xix, 114, M xxi
Ecce panis (4p. of Lauda Sion salvatorem)
Ecce quam bonum, 8vv, 1604; S xxi, 52, M xxi
Ecce sit benedicetur (2p. of Beati omnes qui timent)
Edite Caesareo Boiorum (2p. Obscura sub nocte), 8vv, 1568a; S xix, 146, M vi
Ego cognovi, 6vv, 1594; S xv, 41, M xvi
Ego dixi Domine miserere mei (2p. Convertere Domine), 3vv, 1575; S i, 55, M xi Ego dormivi (2p. of Domine quid multiplicati sunt)
Ego dormivi (2p. of Ego sum qui sum)
Ego sum panis vivus, 5vv, 1582e; S v, 71, M xii
Ego sum pauper (2p. Laudabo nomen), 3vv, 1575; S i, 44, M xi
Ego sum pauper, 5vv, 1582e; S ix, 159, M xii
Ego sum qui sum (2p. Ego dormivi), 6vv, 1570g; S xiii, 4, M vii
Ego sum resurrectio, 3vv, 1575; S i, 22, M xi
Emendemus in melius, 5vv, 1571b; S vii, 32, M viii
Emittit verbum (3p. of Lauda Jerusalem Dominum)
Ergo aut adulta (2p. of Beatus ille qui procul)
Ergo rex vivat, 8vv, 1604; S xix, 129, M xxi
Eripe me de inimicis meis, 4vv, 1573c; S i, 150, M x
Eripe me de inimicis meis, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 60, M xiv
Estote ergo misericordes, 7vv, 1564[2]; S xix, 87, M iii
Et apertis (2p. of Videntes stellam magi)
Et dicit ei Jesu (3p. of Nuptiae factae sunt)
Et ecce stella (3p. of Cum natus esset)
Et immisit os (2p. of Expectans expectavi)
Et in eo paravit (2p. of Deus judex justus)
Et Jesum benedictum (2p. of Salve regina mater)
Et Jesum benedictum (2p. of Salve regina misericordiae)
Et omnia (3p. of Dixi ergo in corde meo)
Et plus quam ecclesiam (5p. of Fertur [vertur] in conviviis vinus)
Et tamen (3p. of Quicumque vult salvus esse)
Et valde mane (6p. of Alleluia Surrexit Dominus)
Evehor invidia pressus (2p. Rumpere livor), 5vv, 1582e; S xi, 53, M xii
Exaltabo te (2p. of Concupiscendo concupiscit)
Exaltabo te Domine, 4vv, 1582b; S iii, 59, M xix
Exaltabo te Domine (2p. Domine eduxisti), 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 136, M xvi
Exaudi Deus (2p. of Timor et tremor)
Exaudi Deus orationem meam (2p. Contristatus sum), 3vv, 1575; S i, 52, M xi
Exaudi Deus orationem meam, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 20, M xiv
Exaudi Domine preces, 5vv, 1573b; S ix, 56, M ix
Exaudi Domine vocem meam (2p. Ne avertas), 5vv, 1562; S vii, 158, M ii
Exaudi me Domine, 3vv, 1575; S i, 46, M xi
Expectans expectavi Dominum, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 72, M xiv
Expectatio justorum, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 3, M xi
Exultate justi, 4vv, 1568b; S iii, 2
Exultet coelum mare, 5vv, 1571b; S iii, 144, M viii
Exurgat Deus, 4vv, 1588d; S iii, 1, M xix
Exurgat Deus (2p. Cantate ei; 3p. Deus in loco), 5vv, 1573b; S ix, 105, M ix
Fac mecum signum (2p. of Locutus sum in lingua mea)
Factus est Dominus, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 85, M xiv
Fallax gratia, 4vv, 1573c; S i, 143, M x
Feci judicium, 5vv, 1582e; S ix, 120, M xii
Felices (2p. of Salva festa dies)
Fertur [vertur] in conviviis vinus [Tristis ut Euridicen Orphaeus ab orco] (2p. Volo inter omnia; 3p. Potatores incliti; 4p. Meum est propositum; 5p. Et plus quam ecclesiam), 4vv, 1564c; S iii, 99, M xvii
Fiat cor meum (2p. of Confundantur superbi)
Fiat Domine (2p. of Cantantibus organis)
Fili quid fecisti nobis sic, 5vv, 1564[4]; S vii, 14, M iii
Fili recordare (2p. of Pater Abraham miserere)
Flemus extremus (2p. Regiam Christi), 6vv, 1604; S xix, 40, M xxi
Forte soporifera, 5vv, 1566[17]; S xi, 98, M xvii
Fratres gaudete in Domino (2p. Petitiones vestrae), 6vv, 1585a; S xv, 97, M xv
Fratres nescitis, 6vv, 1594; S xv, 95, M xvi
Fratres qui gloriatur, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 126, M xxi
Fratres sobrii, 4vv, 1569b; S i, 129, M xvii
Fremuit spiritus Jesus (2p. Videns Dominus), 6vv, 1556; S xv, 23, M i
Fructus autem (3p. of Diliges proximum)
Fuit homo missus (2p. of In principio erat verbum)
Fulgebunt justi, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 6, M xi
Futurum est (2p. of Quid prodest homini)
Gaudet exultetque (2p. of Quid trepides)
Gaude a laetare (2p. of Jerusalem plantavis)
Gaudent in coelis, 4vv, 1573b; S i, 133, M ix
Genuit puerpera regem, 6vv, 1594; S xi, 164, M xvi
Gloriamur in tribulationibus, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 144, M xxi
Gloria Patri (7p. of Alleluia Surrexit Dominus)
Gloria Patri et Spiritui Sancto, 6vv, 1566c; H i, 71, M v
Gloria pontificum Ernestus (2p. of Princeps Marte potens)
Gratia sola Dei (2p. Legitimo ergo; 3p. Res mira), 5, 1569a; S iii, 117, M vii
Gressus meos dirige, 4vv, 1585b; S iii, 70, M xiv
Gustate et videte (2p. Divites eguerunt), 5vv, 1556; S v, 73, M i
Guttur tuam (2p. of Quam pulchra es)
Haec est fides (4p. of Quicumque vult salvus esse)
Haec est vera fraternitas, 6vv, 1585a; S xiii, 167, M xv
Haec quae ter triplici, 3vv, 1575; S i, 20, M xi
Heroum soboles, 6vv, 1556; S xi, 122, M i
Heu mihi (2p. of Ad Dominum cum tribularer)
Heu mihi Domine quia peccavi, 5vv, 1556; S ix, 6, M i
Heu quantus dolor, 5vv, 1562; S xi, 51, M ii
Heu quis armorum furor (2p. Jam satio longo), 6vv, 1594; S xix, 44, M xvi
Heu quos dabimus miseranda (2p. Mens male), 6vv, 1601[3]; S xix, 48, M xx
Heu quos dabimus miseranda (2p. Mens male), 7vv, 1604; S xix, 116, M xxi
Hic belligeras (2p. of Tragico tecti syrmate coelites)
Hic sunt quos habuimus (2p. of Stabunt justi)
Hispanum ad coenam (2p. Mox importuno), 5vv, 1569a; S xi, 90, M vii
Hodie apparuit (2p. of Resonet in laudibus)
Hodie completi sunt (2p. Misit eos), 6vv, 1582d; S xiii, 32, M xiii
Homo cum in honore esset, 6vv, 1566d; S xv, 90, M v
Honorabile est, 4vv, 1573c; S i, 123, M x
Hostem repellas (3p. of Veni Creator Spiritus)
Huc ades, o Erneste, 6vv, 1585a; S xi, 105, M xv
Huc me sidereo (2p. Pungentem capiti; 3p. De me solus amor), 6vv, 1568a; S xi, 180, M vi
IL-il-LIC-lic (2p. of SU-su-PER-per)
Illumina oculos meos, 4vv, 1604; S i, 107, M xix
Illustra faciem tuam (2p. Quam multa multitudo), 5vv, 1562; S ix, 77, M ii
Immittet Angelus Domini, 4vv, 1582b; S iii, 69, M xix
Impleta sunt (2p. of Vexilla regis prodeunt)
Improperium expectavit, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 21, M xiv
Impulsus eversus sum (2p. Vox exultationis), 5vv, 1582e; S ix, 114, M xii
Inclina Domine, 4vv, 1555b; S iii, 26, M xvii
Inclina Domine, 9vv, 1604; S xxi, 106, M xxi
In convertendo Dominus (2p. Convertere Domine), 8vv, 1565b; S xxi, 63, M iv
In dedicatione templi, 6vv, 1594; S xv, 121, M xvi
In Deo salutarem meum (2p. Sperate in eo), 6vv, 1573b; S xvii, 140, M ix
Inde tuo si quis (2p. of Confisus Domino)
In Domino laudabitur (2p. of Benedicam Dominum)
In exitu Israel, 6vv, *c*1581, Mbs; H xxv, 157
Infelix ego (2p. Solus igitur; 3p. Ad te igitur), 6vv, 1566d; S xiii, 95, M v
Inferni claustra (2p. of Jesu nostra redemptio)
In hora ultima, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 151, M xxi
In illo tempore, 6vv, 1577c; S xv, 20, M xviii
Iniquos odio habui (2p. Declinate), 4vv, 1565b; S iii, 5, M iv
In me transierunt, 5vv, 1562; S ix, 49, M ii
In monte Oliveti, 6vv, 1568a; S xi, 187, M vi
In omnibus requiem quaesivi, 7vv, 1565b; S xix, 101, M iv
In pace in idipsum, 3vv, 1604; S i, 59, M xxi
In principio erat verbum (2p. Fuit homo missus; 3p. In propria venit), 6vv, 1566d; S xv, 8, M v
In propria venit (3p. of In principio erat verbum)
In quoscumque locos, 5vv, 1597; S xi, 17, M xx
In religione homo vivit, 6vv, 1585a; S xv, 66, M xv

In te Domine speravi (2p. Quonium fortitudo mea), 6vv, 1564[3]; S xvii, 87, M iii
Intende voci, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 19, M xiv
In teneris (4p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Inter animalia (2p. of Jubilemus singuli)
Inter natos mulierum, 5vv, 1571b; S v, 150, M viii
In te speravi Domine, 4vv, 1582b; S iii, 82, M xix
Inveterata sunt (2p. of Prolongati sunt dies mei)
Ipsa Deum (8p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Ipsa te cogat (3p. of Jesu nostra redemptio)
Ipse castigavit (2p. of Confitemini Domino)
Iste flos Alemannorum (2p. Languor nunc; 3p. Papa viduatam), 4vv, 1604; S i, 141, Mxxi
Jam lucis orto sidere (2p. Qui ponit aquam), 8vv, 1564[3]; S xxi, 84, M iii
Jam mea (6p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Jam non dicam vos (2p. Accipite Spiritum), 6vv, 1573a; S xiii, 38, M xviii
Jam quod quaesivi (2p. of Quocumque loco fuero)
Jam satio longo (2p. of Heu quis armorum furor)
Jerusalem (2p. of Laetatus sum)
Jerusalem plantabis vineam (2p. Gaude et laetare), 5vv, 1562; S iii, 134, M ii
Jesu corona virginum (2p. Quocumque pergis; 3p. Te deprecamur; 4p. Laus honor), 6vv, 1565c; S xiii, 174, M v
Jesu nostra redemptio (2p. Inferni claustra; 3p. Ipsa te cogat; 4p. Tu esto nostrum gaudium), 6vv, 1567[3]; S xiii, 18, M xvii
Johannes est nomen eius, 4vv, 1604; S i, 136, M xxi
Jubilate Deo omnis terra, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 62, M xiv
Jubilate Deo omnis terra (2p. Populus eius), 6vv, 1565b; S xvii, 149, M iv
Jubilemus singuli (2p. Inter animalia), 6vv, 1570g; S xi, 151, M vii
Junior fui, 6vv, 1566d; S xv, 101, M v
Justi tulerunt spolia impiorum, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 4, M xi
Justorum animae, 5vv, 1582e; S v, 139, M xii
Justus cor suum tradet, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 2, M xi
Justus Dominus (2p. of Oculi omnium)
Justus es Domine, 3vv, 1577a; S i, 35, M xi
Juvenes et virgines (3p. of Laudate Dominum de coelis)
Laetatus sum (2p. Jerusalem; 3p. Quia illic; 4p. Propter fratres), 3vv, 1575; S i, 36, M xi
Laetentur coeli (2p. Tunc exultabunt), 4vv, 1569b; S iii, 76, M xvii
Lauda anima mea Dominum, 4vv, 1573b; S iii, 75, M ix
Lauda anima mea Dominum, 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 34, M xvi
Laudabit usque ad mortem, 8vv, 1604; S xxi, 41, M xxi
Laudabo nomen (2p. of Ergo sum pauper)
Lauda Jerusalem Dominum (2p. Qui emittit; 3p. Emittit verbum; 4p. Non fecit taliter), 6vv, 1565c; S xiii, 70, M v
Lauda mater ecclesia, 5vv, 1597; S v, 171, M xx
Lauda mater ecclesia (2p. Aegra currit; 3p. Surgentem cum victoria), 6vv, 1582d; S xv, 3, M xiii
Lauda Sion salvatorum (2p. Dies enim; 3p. Quod non capis; 4p. Ecce panis), 6vv, 1577c; H i, 75, M xviii
Laudate Dominum de coelis (2p. Laudate Dominum de terra; 3p. Juvenes et virgines; 4p. Laudate eum), 5vv, 1565b; S ix, 161, M iv
Laudate Dominum omnes gentes, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 156, M xxi
Laudate Dominum omnes gentes, 12vv, 1573a; S xxi, 152, M xviii
Laudate Dominum quoniam bonus est (2p. Magnus Dominus; 3p. Praecinite; 4p. Non in fortitudine), 7vv, 1568a; S xix, 106, M vi
Laudate eum (4p. of Laudate Dominum de coelis)
Laudate pueri Dominum, 7vv, 1568a; S xix, 94, M vi
Laudavi igitur laetitiam, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 154, M xxi
Laudent Deum cythara, 4vv, 1604; S iii, 58, M xxi
Laus honor (4p. of Jesu corona virginum)
Legem pone mihi (2p. Da mihi intellectum), 5vv, 1562; S ix, 73, M ii
Legitimo ergo (2p. of Gratia soli Dei pie)
Levabo oculos meos, 4vv, 1582b; S iii, 29, M xix
Levavi oculos meos, 8vv, 1566d; S xxi, 71, M v
Libera me Domine, 6vv, 1568a; S xv, 109, M vi
Libet jacere (3p. of Beatus ille qui procul)
Locutus sum in lingua mea (2p. Fac mecum signum), 6vv, 1568a; S xiii, 62, M vi
Lucescit jam o socii (see 'Chansons')
Luna velut (6p. of Princeps Marte potens)
Luxuriosa res vinum, 6vv, 1594; S xv, 85, M xvi
Magnanimus princeps (3p. of Princeps Marte potens)
Magnus Dominus (2p. of Laudate Dominum quoniam bonum est)
Manum nomen Domini (3p. of Resonet in laudibus)
Maria Magdalena (4p. of Alleluia Surrexit Dominus)
Martini festum celebremus (2p. Plebs igitur), 5vv, 1573b; S v, 153, M ix
Matronarum decus (4p. of Princeps Marte potens)
Media vita in morte sumus (2p. Sancte Deus), 6vv, 1573b; S xiii, 90, M ix
Meditabor in mandatis, 4vv, 1582b; S iii, 83, M xix
Memento peccati tui, 5vv, 1597; S vii, 58, M xx
Me miserum (2p. of Quis mihi quia te rapuit)
Memor esto, 6vv, 1585a; S xvii, 32, M xv
Mens male (2p. of Heu quos dabimus miseranda)
Meum est propositum (4p. of Fertur [vertur] in conviviis vinus)
Mirabile mysterium, 5vv, 1556; S v, 18, M i
Mira loquor sed digna fide, 10vv, 1604; S xxi, 126, M xviii
Miserere mei Deus (4p. of Psalmi Davidis poentitentiales)
Miserere mei Domine, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 31, M xiv
Miserere nostri (2p. of Ad te levavi oculos)
Misericordias Domini, 5vv, 1573b; S ix, 9, M ix
Misit eos (2p. of Hodie completi sunt)
Missus est angelus (2p. Ne timeas Maria; 3p. Dixit autem; 4p. Dixit autem), 5, 6vv, 1565c; S vii, 16, M v
Momenta quaevis temporis, 6vv, 1601[3]; S xix, 58, M xx
Mors tua mors Christi (2p. Quisquid erit), 5vv, 1585b; S vii, 43, M xix
Mortalium jucunditas, 5vv, 1597; S xi, 20, M xx
Mox importuno (2p. of Hispanum ad coenam)
Multe tribulationes, 6vv, 1577c; S xv, 65
Multarum hic resonat, 5vv, 1571b; S iii, 112, M viii
Multifariam multisque modis, 6vv, 1594; S xi, 161, M xvi
Multum quidem (2p. of Audi benigne conditor)
Musica Dei donum optimi, 6vv, 1594; S xix, 63, M xvi
Narrate omnia (2p. of Confitemini Domino)
Ne avertas (2p. of Exaudi Dominum vocem meam)
Nec minus effulget Salome (7p. of Princeps Marte potens)
Nectar et ambrosiam, 6vv, 1594; S xi, 109, M xvi
Ne derelinquas amicus, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 134, M xxi
Ne reminiscaris, 4vv, 1577c; S i, 109, M xviii
Ne reminiscaris, 7vv, 1577c; S xix, 78, M xviii
Ne timeas Maria (2p. of Missus est angelus)
Nisi Dominus (2p. Cum dederit), 5vv, 1562; S ix, 66, M ii
Nisi ego abiero (2p. of Tempus est ut revertar)
Noli regibus o Lamuel (2p. Date siceram), 5vv, 1571b; S vii, 47, M viii
Nolite timere (2p. of Angelus Domini descendit)
Non des mulieri potestatem, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 139, M xxi
Non fecit taliter (4p. of Lauda Jerusalem Dominum)
Non in fortitudine (4p. of Laudate Dominum quoniam bonum est)
Non me lasciviae (2p. of Quid tamen)
Non moriar (2p. of O Domine salvum me fac)
Non secundum (3p. of Benedic anima mea Domino)
Non tarde (3p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Non vos me elegistis, 5vv, 1562; S v, 141, M ii
Nos pia turba (3p. of Alma parens)
Nos qui sumus in hoc mundo, 4vv, 1573b; S i, 139, M ix
Numquid redditur (2p. of Populе meus)
Nunc cognosco (2p. of Cum essem parvulus)
Nunc elegos divae (2p. of Alma Venus)
Nunc gaudere licet [Or sus, esgaions nous], 6vv, 1568a; S xix, 66, M vi
Nunciaverunt (2p. of Dixit Joseph undecim fratribus suis)
Nunc juvat immensi (3p. of Quis mihi quia te rapuit)
Nuntium vobis fero (2p. Thus, Deo), 5vv, 1571b; S v, 9, M viii
Nuptiae factae sunt (2p. Dixit mater; 3p. Et dicit ei Jesu; 4p. Omnis homo), 6vv, 1566d; S xv, 30, M v
Nuptias clares (2p. Viribus magni), 5vv, 1597; S xi, 7, M xx
O altitudo divitiarum (2p. Quis enim cognovit), 6vv, 1582d; S xi, 133, M xiii
O beatum hominem (2p. of Quam benignus es)
O bone Jesu o piissime Jesu (2p. O bone Jesu si merui; 3p. O misericordissime), 4vv, 1582b; S i, 69, M xix
O bone Jesu si merui (2p. of O bone Jesu, o piissime Jesu)
Obscura sub nocte (2p. of Edite Caesareo Boiorum)
O crux ave (4p. of Vexilla regis prodeunt)
O crux splendidior (2p. Dulce lignum), 6vv, 1568a; S xi, 167, M vi
Oculi mei semper, 6vv, 1585a; S xvii, 15, M xv
Oculi omnium (2p. Justus Dominus), 5vv, 1573b; S vii, 122, M ix
Oculus non vidit, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 2, M xi
O decus celsi genus, 6vv, 1582d; S xi, 156, M xiii
O Domine salvum me fac (2p. Non moriar), 5vv, 1562; S ix, 26, M ii
O gloriosa domina (2p. Tu regis), 6vv, 1577c; S xiii, 139, M xviii

O gloriosa domina, 6vv, 1573b; S xiii, 145, M ix
O Maria clausus hortus, 3vv, 1575; S i, 29, M xi
O Meliboee (2p. of Tityre tu patule)
O misericordissime (3p. of O bone Jesu o piissime Jesu)
Omnes de Saba venient, 8vv, 1590[5]; S xxi, 1, M xix
Omnia quae feasti, 5vv, 1562; S vii, 127, M ii
Omnia tempus habent (2p. Tempus amplexandi), 8vv, 1585a; S xxi, 77, M xv
Omnis enim homo, 6vv, 1585a; S xv, 58, M xv
Omnis homo (4p. of Nuptiae factae sunt)
Omnium deliciarum, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 132, M xxi
O mors bonum est (2p. of O mors quam amara)
O mors quam amara (2p. O mors bonum), 6vv, 1564b; S xv, 67, M iv
O peccator, 6vv, 1604; S xiii, 163, M xxi
O quam flagrans (2p. of Ave color vini clari)
O quam suavis, 6vv, 1568a; S xiii, 61, M vi
O sacrum convivium, 5vv, 1582e; S v, 68, M xii
O salutaris hostia, 5vv, 1582e; S v, 79, M xii
Osculetur me osculo, 8vv, 1582a; S xxi, 9, M xix
Pacis amans (2p. Te nunc laetetur), 6vv, 1570b; S xi, 125, M xviii
Panem nostrum (2p. of Pater noster)
Pater Abraham miserere (2p. Fili recordare), 5vv, 1571b; S vii, 1, M viii
Pater noster, 4vv, 1573b; S i, 104, M ix
Pater noster (2p. Panem nostrum), 6vv, 1585a; S xiii, 77, M xv
Pater noster, 6vv, 1565b; S xiii, 81, M iv
Pater peccavi (2p. Quanti mercenarii), 5vv, 1564c; S vii, 24, M xvii
Pauper sum ego, 4vv, 1573b; S iii, 79, M ix
Peccantem me quotidie, 4vv, 1555b; S i, 159, M xvii
Peccata mea Domine, 5vv, 1582e; S ix, 3, M xii
Peccavi quid faciam, 5vv, 1556; S vii, 100, M i
Peccavit David, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 129, M xxi
Perfice gressus meos, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 86, M xiv
Petitiones vestrae (2p. of Fratres gaudete in Domino)
Plebs igitur (2p. of Martini festum celebremus)
Popule meus (2p. Numquid redditur), 5vv, 1582e; S v, 34, M xii
Populum humilem, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 67, M xiv
Populus eius (2p. of Jubilate Deo omnis terra)
Possedi servos (2p. of Dixi ergo in corde meo)
Potatores incliti (3p. of Fertur in conviviis vinus)
Praecinite (3p. of Laudate Dominum quoniam bonum est)
Praesidium Sara, 4vv, 1570a; H i, 7, M xviii
Precatus est Moyses, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 23, M xiv
Princeps egregius (8p. of Princeps Marte potens)
Princeps Marte potens, Guilelmus (2p. Gloria pontificum Ernestus; 3p. Magnanimus princeps; 4p. Matronarum decus; 5p. Virginitatis honos; 6p. Luna velut rutilat; 7p. Nec minus effulget Salome; 8p. Princeps egregius; 9p. Vive Pater patriae), 4, 8vv, 1604; S i, 61, M xxi
Proba me Deus, 4vv, 1579; S iii, 35, M xviii
Prolongati sunt dies mei (2p. Inveterata sunt; 3p. Si ergo fas), 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 1, M xvi
Pronuba Juno tibi [Gratia summi; Qui regit astra], 4vv, 1570a; H i, 3, M xviii
Prophetiae Sibyllarum (1p. Virgine matre; 2p. Ecce dies venient; 3p. Non tarde; 4p. In teneris; 5p. Ecce dies nigras; 6p. Jam mea; 7p. Dum meditor; 8p. Ipsa Deum; 9p. Virginis aeternum; 10p. Verax ipse; 11p. Cerno Dei; 12p. Summus erit), 4vv, 1600; ed. in Cw, xlviii (1937/R)
Propterea Deus (2p. of Quid gloriaris)
Propter fratres (4p. of Laetatus sum)
Providebam Dominum, 7vv, 1604; S xix, 98, M xxi
Psalmi Davidis poenitentiales (1p. Domine ne in furore tuo … miserere; 2p. Beati quorum remissae sunt; 3p. Domine ne in furore tuo … quoniam; 4p. Miserere mei Deus; 5p. Domine exaud … non avertas; 6p. De profundis; 7p. Domine exaudi … auribus percipe), 5vv, 1584b/*R*1970; ed. in RRMR, lxxxvi–lxxxvii (1990)
Pulvis et umbra sumus, 4vv, 1573b; S i, 127, M ix
Quam benignus es (2p. O beatum hominem), 4vv, 1562; S ix, 30, M ii
Quam bonus Israel Deus (2p. Quia non est respectus), 6vv, 1594; S xix, 1, M xvi
Quam magnificata sunt (2p. Beatus homo), 6vv, 1564[3]; S xvii, 7, M iii
Quam multa multitudo (2p. of Illustra faciem)
Quam pulchra es (2p. Guttur tuam), 6vv, 1585a; S xiii, 149, M xv
Quanti mercenari (2p. of Pater peccavi)
Quare tristis es anima mea?, 4vv, 1573c; S i, 154, M x
Quare tristis es anima mea?, 6vv, 1564b; S xvii, 12, M iv
Quasi cedrus, 4vv, 1564[5]; S i, 93, M iii
Qua sina coelestis (2p. of Alma parens)
Quemadmodum desiderat cervus, 6vv, 1569a; S xix, 18, M vii
Quem dicunt homines (2p. Tu es Christus), 5vv, 1567[3]; S vii, 6, M xvii
Quem vidistis pastores?, 5vv, 1569a; S v, 1, M vii
Quia delectasti (2p. of Deus canticum novum)
Quia illic (3p. of Laetatus sum)
Quia non est respectus (2p. of Quam bonus Israel Deus)
Quia vidisti me, 4vv, 1563[3]; S i, 137, M xvii
Quicumque vult salvus esse (2p. Alia est enim; 3p. Et tamen; 4p. Haec est fides), 5vv, 1577c; H i, 32, M xviii
Qui cupit, 4vv, 1564[5]; S i, 125, M iii
Quid estis pusillanimes, 4vv, 1573c; S i, 121, M x
Quid facies, 4vv, 1582b; S iii, 100, M xix
Quid gloriaris (2p. Propterea Deus), 5vv, 1566c; S ix, 81, M v
Quid prodest homini (2p. Futurum est), 5vv, 1571b; S vii, 70, M viii
Quid prodest stulto, 5vv, 1564c; S vii, 41, M xvii
Quid tamen [sponsa quid agis] (2p. Non me lascivia), 5vv, 1571b; S xi, 64, M viii
Quid trepidas (2p. Gaudeat exultetque), 6vv, 1570g; S xi, 111, M vii
Quid vulgo memorant, 8vv, 1604; S xix, 122, M xxi
Qui emittit (2p. of Lauda Jerusalem Dominum)
Qui maris terrae (2p. of Sidus ex claro veniet)
Qui moderatur sermones suos, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 142, M xxi
Qui novus aethereo, 5vv, 1569a; S v, 80, M vii
Qui patiens est, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 137, M xxi
Qui ponit aquam (2p. of Jam lucis orto)
Qui replet (2p. of Benedic anima mea Domino)
Quis enim cognovit (2p. of O altitudo divitiarum)
Qui sequitur me, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 3, M xi
Quis est homo, 5vv, 1567[3]; S ix, 53, M xvii
Quis mihi det lacrimis, 5vv, 1573b; S v, 44, M ix
Quis mihi quis tete rapuit [Quid tibi quidnam] (2p. Me miserum; 3p. Nunc juvat immensi), 5vv, 1565b; S xi, 30, M iv
Quis non timet (2p. of Cantabant canticum Moysi)
Quisquid erit (2p. of Mors tua mors Christi)
Qui sunt hi sermones (2p. Tu solus peregrinus), 5vv, 1582e; S vii, 9, M xii
Quis valet eloquio, 5vv, 1565b; S xi, 78, M iv
Qui timet Deum, 6vv, 1594; S xv, 56, M xvi
Qui tribulant me (2p. Unam petii), 4vv, 1582b; S i, 145, M xix
Qui viderit (2p. of Vicenti dabo edere)
Qui vult venire post me, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 5, M xi
Quocumque loco fuero (2p. Jam quod quae sivi), 5vv, 1585b; S v, 65, M xix
Quocumque pergis (2p. of Jesu corona virginum)
Quod licet id libeat, 5vv, 1604; S xi, 16, M xxi
Quod non capis (3p. of Lauda Sion salvatorem)
Quo fers (2p. of Accipe qua recrees)
Quoniam ad te (2p. of Verba mea auribus percipe)
Quoniam fortitudo mea (2p. of In te Domine speravi)
Quoniam qui talia (2p. of Diliges proximum)
Quo properas, facunde nepos Atlantis?, 10vv, 1565b; S xxi, 112, M iv
Rebus in adversis, 5vv, 1569a; S vii, 68, M vii
Recordare Jesu pie, 6vv, 1594; S xv, 112, M xvi
Recordatus (4p. of Benedic anima mea Domino)
Regiam Christi (2p. of Flemus extremos)
Regina coeli laetare (2p. Resurrexit sicut dixit), 4vv, 1604; S i, 81, M xxi
Regina coeli laetare, 5vv, 1604; S v, 106, M xxi
Regina coeli laetare (2p. Resurrexit sicut dixit) (i), 5vv, 1604; S v, 109, M xviii
Regina coeli laetare (2p. Resurrexit sicut dixit) (ii), 5vv, 1604; S v, 112, M xxi
Regina coeli laetare (2p. Resurrexit sicut dixit) (i), 6vv, 1585a; S xiii, 118, M xv
Regina coeli laetare (2p. Resurrexit sicut dixit) (ii), 6vv, 1604; S xiii, 122, M xix
Regina coeli laetare (2p. Resurrexit sicut dixit), 7vv, 1604; S xix, 84, M xix
Regnum mundi, 6vv, 1573b; S xiii, 170, M ix
Res mira (3p. of Gratia soli Dei pie)
Res neque ab internis, 5vv, 1569a; S xi, 69, M vii
Resonet in laudibus (2p. Hodie apparuit; 3p. Manum nomen Domini), 5vv, 1569a; S iii, 148, M vii
Respexit Elias, 5vv, 1582e; S v, 158, M xii

Respice me (2p. of Tu Domine benignus es)
Respicit Dominus vias hominis, 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 37, M xvi
Resurrexit sicut dixit (2p. of Regina coeli laetare)
Rumpere livor (2p. of Evehor invidia pressus)
Rumpitur invidia, 5vv, 1569a; S xi, 72, M vii
Rursum contemplatus (2p. of Vidi calumnias)
Sacrificate (2p. of Cum invocarem exaudibit me)
Salve festa dies (2p. Felices), 5vv, 1568b; S xi, 1, M vi
Salve regina mater (2p. Et Jesum benedictum), 5vv, 1597; S v, 115, M xx
Salve regina mater, 6vv, 1582d; S xiii, 125, M xiii
Salve regina mater, 6vv, 1604; S xiii, 128, M xix
Salve Regina, 6vv, 1604; M xix
Salve regina mater, 8vv, 1604; S xxi, 18, M xix
Salve regina misericordiae, 4vv, 1573b; S i, 83, M ix
Salve regina misericordiae (2p. Et Jesum benedictum), 4vv, 1586[4]; S i, 89, M xix
Sancta et immaculata, 3vv, 1575; S i, 27, M xi
Sancta Maria (i), 4vv, 1604; S iii, 110, M xxi
Sancta Maria (ii), 4vv, 1604; S iii, 110, M xxi
Sancta Maria (iii), 4vv, 1604; S iii, 111, M xxi
Sancta Maria, 5vv, 1585b; S v, 135, M xix
Sancte Deus (2p. of Media vita in morte sumus)
Sancti mei, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 4, M xi
Sancti qui sunt (2p. of Conserva me Domine)
Scapulis suis, 4vv, 1582b; S iii, 12, M xix
Scio enim quod Redemptor, 4vv, 1563[3]; S iii, 105, M xvii
Sepulchrum patens (2p. of Domine deduc me)
Serve bone et fidelis, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 6, M xi
Si ambulavero in medio, 5vv, 1556; S ix, 18, M i
Si bene perpendi, 5vv, 1579; S xi, 37, M xviii
Si bona suscepimus, 5vv, 1571b; S ix, 87, M viii
Si coelum et coeli coelorum, 6vv, 1594; S xv, 115, M xvi
Sic sua virtutum (2p. Tu maxime rerum), 5vv, 1604; S xi, 4, M xxi
Si cum transierint (2p. of Stet quicumque volet)
Sicut ablactatus (2p. of Domine non est exaltatum)
Sicut mater consolator, 5vv, 1562; S vii, 97, M ii
Sicut rosa inter spinas, 2vv, 1577d; S i, 7, M xi
Sidus ex claro veniet (2p. Qui maris terrae), 5vv, 1569a; S iii, 153, M vii
Si ergo fas (3p. of Prolongati sunt dies mei)
Signum est (3p. of Cum invocarem exaudibit me)
Si qua tibi obtulerint, 6vv, 1556; S xi, 118, M i
Si quid vota valent, 5vv, 1571b; S iii, 124, M viii
Solus igitur (2p. of Infelix ego)
Sperate in eo (2p. of In Deo salutaren meum)
Sperent in te omnes, 4vv, 1585d; S i, 155, M xiv
Sponsa quid agis: see Quid tamen
Stabat mater dolorosa, 8vv, 1585d; M xiv
Stabunt justi (2p. Hic sunt quos habuimus), 5vv, 1571b; S vii, 61, M viii Stet quicumque volet potens (2p. Si cum transierint), 5vv, 1556; S xi, 44, M i
Summus erit (12p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Super flumina Babylonis, 4vv, 1585d; S iii, 25, M xiv
Surgens Jesus, 5vv, 1562; S v, 60, M ii
Surgentem cum victoria (3p. of Lauda mater ecclesia)
Surge propera amica mea et veni (2p. Surge … columba mea), 6vv, 1564b; S xiii, 158, M iv
Surge … speciosa (2p. of Surge propera amica mea et veni)
Surrexit Pastor bonus, 5vv, 1562; S v, 57, M ii
SU-su-PER-per (2p. IL-il-LIC-lic), 5vv, 1567[13]; S ix, 133, M xvii
Taedet animam, 5vv, 1562; S vii, 103, M ii
Te decet hymnus, 4vv, 1564[5]; S iii, 37, M iii
Te deprecamur (3p. of Jesu corona virginum)
Te Deum laudamus, 6vv, 1568a; S xix, 24, M vi
Te merito Daniel (2p. Subque tuo Daniel), 5vv, 1604; S v, 160, M xxi
Tempus amplexandi (2p. of Omnia tempus habent)
Tempus est ut revertar (2p. Nisi ego abiero), 6vv, 1566d; S xiii, 25, M v
Te nunc laetetur (2p. of Pacis amans)
Te spectant Reginalde Poli, 5vv, 1556; S iii, 127, M i
Thoma (2p. of Clare sanctorum senatus)
Thus, Deo (2p. of Nuntium vobis fero)
Tibi laus tibi gloria, 4vv, 1586[4]; S i, 67, M xiv
Tibi laus tibi gloria (2p. Da gaudiorum), 5vv, 1564[4]; S iii, 130, M iii
Tibi progenies unica patris (2p. Tu quae versat; 3p. Tu nostros Deus; 4p. Dum nos Erebi; 5p. Tu multa), 5vv, 1604; S xi, 40, M xxi
Tibi progenies (2p. Tu quae versat; 3p. Dum nos Erebi), 6vv, 1604; S xix, 35, M xxi
Timor Domini gloria, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 147, M xxi
Timor Domini principium, 6vv, 1594; S xv, 87, M xvi
Timor et tremor (2p. Exaudi Deus), 6vv, 1564[3]; S xix, 6, M iii
Tityre tu patulae (2p. O Meliboee), 6vv, 1560b; S xix, 68, M xvii
Tota pulchra es, 4vv, 1604; S i, 96, M xxi
Tragico tecti syrmate coelites, 5vv, 1597; S xi, 75, M xx
Tragico tecti syrmate coelites (2p. Hic belligeras), 6vv, 1604; S xix, 53, M xxi
Tribulationem et dolorem (2p. Convertere anima), 4vv, RISM 1569[8]; S iii, 8, M xvii
Tribus miraculis, 5vv, 1565c; S v, 25, M v
Tristis est anima mea, 5vv, 1565b; S v, 48, M iv
Tu Domine benignus es (2p. Respice me), 5vv, 1565b; S v, 87, M iv
Tu es Christus (2p. of Quem dicunt homines)
Tu esto nostrum gaudium (4p. of Jesu nostra redemptio)
Tui sunt coeli, 8vv, 1604; S xxi, 5, M xxi
Tulerunt (2p. of Congratulamini mihi)
Tu maxime rerum (2p. of Sic sua virtutum)
Tu modo diva (4. of Alma parens)
Tu multa (5p. of Tibi progenies, 5vv)
Tunc exultabunt (2p. of Laetentur coeli)
Tu nostros Deus (3p. of Tibi progenies, 5vv)
Tu quae versat (2p. of Tibi progenies, 5vv, 6vv)
Tu regis (2p. of O gloriosa domina)
Tu septiformis muner (2p. of Veni Creator Spiritus)
Tu solus peregrinus (2p. of Qui sunt his sermones)
Ubi David (3p. of Audi tellus)
Ubi est Abel, 5vv, 1567[3]; S vii, 80, M xvii
Ubi Plato (2p. of Audi tellus)
Unam petii (2p. of Qui tribulant me)
Unde revertimini, 8vv, 1573c; S xix, 138, M x
Unus Dominus una fides, 6vv, 1604; S xv, 124, M xxi
Urbem praeclaram (2p. of Dulces exuviae)
Ut queant laxis, 5vv, 1582e; S v, 152, M xii
Ut radios edit rutilo, 5vv, 1565b; S xi, 85, M iv
Ut venientes (5p. of Alleluia Surrexit Dominus)
Veniant mihi (2p. of Cognovi Domine)
Veni Creator Spiritus (2p. Tu septiformis muner; 3p. Hostem repellas), 6vv, 1568a; S xiii, 43, M vi
Veni dilecte mi (2p. Videamus si), 5vv, 1571b; S v, 124, M viii
Veni Domine et noli tardare, 5vv, 1583[2]; S ix, 1, M xix
Veni Domine et noli tardare, 6vv, 1570g; S xvii, 84, M vii
Veni in hortum meum, 5vv, 1562; S v, 120, M ii
Veni Sancte Spiritus, 6vv, 1582d; S xiii, 53, M xiii
Venite ad me omnes, 5vv, 1571b; S vii, 52, M viii
Venite filii audite me (2p. Diverte a malo), 5vv, 1604; S vii, 75, M xxi
Verax ipse (10p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Verba mea auribus percipe (2p. Quoniam ad te), 5vv, 1571b; S vii, 116, M viii
Verbum caro factum est, 6vv, 1564[3]; S xi, 158, M iii
Verbum caro panem verum, 3vv, 1604; S i, 58, M xxi
Verbum caro panem verum, 4vv, 1604; S i, 111, M xxi
Vere Dominus est in loco isto, 6vv, 1594; S xv, 118, M xvi
Vexilla regis prodeunt (2p. Impleta sunt; 3p. Beata cuius; 4p. O crux ave), 6vv, 1565c; S xi, 172, M v
Vias tuas (2p. of Ad to Domine levavi)
Videamus si (2p. of Veni dilecte mi)
Vide homo quae pro te patior, 7vv, 1595; S xix, 82
Videns Dominus (2p. of Fremuit spiritus Jesus)
Videntes stellam magi (2p. Et apertis), 5vv, 1562; S v, 22, M ii
Vidi calumnias (2p. Rursum contemplatus), 6vv, 1594; S xvii, 53, M xvi
Vidi impium, 5vv, 1569a; S ix, 125, M vii
Vincenti dabo edere (2p. Qui viderit), 6vv, 1594; S xiii, 56, M xvi
Vinum bonum et suave, 8vv, 1570g; S xxi, 91, M vii
Virgine matre (2p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Virginis aeternum (9p. of Prophetiae Sibyllarum)
Virginitatis honos (5p. of Princeps Marte potens)
Vita nostra (2p. of Cognoscimus Domine)
Vive pater patriae (9p. of Princeps Marte potens)
Voce mea ad Dominum clamavi, 6vv, 1604; S xix, 10, M xxi
Volo inter omnia (2p. of Fertur in conviviis vinus)
Vos quibus rector, 6vv, 1601[3]; S xii, 60, M xx
Vota mea (2p. of Credidi propter)
Vox exultationis (2p. of Impulsus eversus sum)
Vulnerasti cor meum, 6vv, 1582d; S xiii, 154, M xiii

Zachaee festinans descende, 5vv, 1566c; H i, 56, M v
12 textless bicinia, a 2, 1577d; S i, 13–24, M xi

MADRIGALS

Il primo libro di madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1555) (RISM 1555c) [1555a]
Il primo libro dove si contengono madrigali, vilanesche, canzoni francesi, e motetti, 4vv (Antwerp, 1555) (RISM 1555[29], same contents as 1555[19]) [1555b]
Secondo libro delle muse, madrigali ... con una canzone del Petrarca, 5vv (Rome, 1557) (RISM 1557[22]) [1557]
Il primo libro di madrigali, insieme alcuni madrigali d'altri autori, 4vv (Venice, 1560) (RISM 1560[17]) [1560d]
Il terzo libro di madrigali, 5vv (Rome, 1563) (RISM 1563[11]) [1563]
Quatriesme livre des chansons, 4, 5vv (Leuven, 1564) (RISM 1564d) [1564c]
Libro quarto de madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1567) (RISM 1567k) [1567a]
Second livre des chansons, 4, 5vv (Leuven, 1570) (RISM 1570[6]) [1570f]
6 cantiones latinae, 4vv, adiuncto dialogo, 8vv: 6 teutsche Lieder, 4vv, sampt einem Dialogo, 8vv: 6 chansons françoises nouvelles, 4vv, avecq un dialogue, 8vv: 6 madrigali nuovi, 4vv, con un dialogo, 8vv (Munich, 1573) (RISM 1573d) [1573c]
Les meslanges ... contenantz plusieurs chansons, tant en vers latins qu'en ryme francoyse, 4–6, 8, 10vv (Paris, 1576, earlier edn. 1570, lost, repr. with sacred contrafacta, London, 1570) (RISM 1576i) [1576b]
Continuation du mellange, 3–6, 10vv (Paris, 1584) (RISM 1584f) [1584a]
Cantica sacra, recens numeris et modulis musicis ornata, 6, 8vv (Munich, 1585) (RISM 1585b) [1585a]
Madrigali novamente composti, 5vv (Nuremberg, 1585) (RISM 1585e) [1585c]
Madrigali novamente composti, 4–6vv (Nuremberg, 1587) (RISM 1587k) [1587a]
Lagrime di S Pietro ... con un mottetto nel fine, 7vv (Munich, 1595) (RISM 1595a) [1595]
Musica nuova dove si contengono madrigali, sonnetti, stanze, canzoni, villanelle et altri compositioni, 3vv (Munich, 1595), lost
1558[13], 1561[10], 1562[7], 1566[2], 1567[4], 1567[16], 1569[11], 1569[18], 1569[19], 1570[7], 1570[15], 1575[11], 1576[5], 1579[2], 1583[15], 1584[4], 1585[17], 1594[6]
A che tenderm'amor, 4vv, 1570f; S viii, 59
Ahi che la forza (2p. of V' son gl'ingegni)
Al dolce suon (Minturno), 5vv, 1569[19]; Hi (Nachtrag)
Al fin vidd'io (6p. of Standomi un giorno)
Al gran Guglielmo nostro, 5vv, 1584a; H i, 147
Al'hor lass (2p. of S'io tal'hor muovo gli occhi)
Al'hor mi desto (2p. of Veggio se al vero apre ragion)
Al'hor nel (4p. of Si come'al chiaro giorno)
All' ultimo bisogno (5p. of Là ver' e'aurora)
Alma cortese (2p. Ch'udirai), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 12
Alma real dignissima d'impero, 4vv, 1564c; S viii, 44
Alma tu ch 'l furor (2p. of Il grave de l'età)
Almen nel suo fuggir (2p. of Io ho più tempo)
Altri non vedrà (6p. of Si come' al chiaro giorno)
Amor che ved'ogni pensier (Petrarch), 5vv, 1563; S iv, 48
Amor mi strugge 'l cor (Petrarch) 5vv, 1563; S iv, 26
Appariran per me le stell'in cielo, 4vv, 1560d; S viii, 27
Ardo sì ma non t'amo (Tasso), 5vv, 1585[17]; S viii, 144, 147 (2 versions)
Arse la fiamma e consumò, 4vv, 1587a; S vi, 83
A voi Guglielmo invitto, 5vv, 1584a; H i, 143
Bella guerriera mia (Bembo) (2p. Ma se con l'opr'), 5vv, 1563; S iv, 38
Ben convenne madonna (G. Manrique) (2p. Solo n'andrò), 5vv, 1569[19]; H i (nachtrag), 17
Ben mi credea passar mio tempo (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 67
Ben sono i premi tuoi (Fiamma) (2p. Poi che si grand'), 6vv, 1587a; S vi, 137
Ben veggio di lontan'il dolce lume (Petrarch), 4vv, 1562[7]; S viii, 37
Bianca neve è il bel collo (Ariosto), 4vv, 1573c; S viii, 78
Candid'albor del ciel, 5vv, 1557; S ii, 114
Cantai hor piango (Petrarch) (2p. Tengan dunque), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 1
Canzon la doglia e 'l pianto, 4vv, 1587a; S vi, 90
Canzon se l'esser meco (Petrarch), 4vv, 1584a; H i, 131
Che fai alma (Petrarch), 7vv, 1569[18]; S x, 23
Che fai che pensi (Petrarch) (2p. Deh non rinovellar), 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 90
Che giova posseder (Bembo), 5vv, 1587a; S vi, 110
Che più d'un giorno (Petrarch), 5vv, 1576b; H i, 140
Che se la ver' (2p. of Quel chiaro sol)
Chiara fontana (4p. of Standomi un giorno)
Chi è fermato di menar sua vita (Petrarch), 4vv, 1584a; S ii, 82
Chi'il credera (2p. of Del freddo Rheno)
Chi no'l sa di ch'io vivo (Petrarch), 5vv, 1576[5]; S viii, 123
Chi non sa come spira (2p. Ma quel ch'una), 5vv, 1587a; S vi, 113
Ch'udirai (2p. of Alma cortese)
Come la cera al foco (Fiamma), 6vv, 1585c; S vi, 66
Come la notte ogni fiamella (Ariosto), 5vv, 1584a; H i, 136
Come lume di notte (Petrarch), 4vv, 1584a; H i, 134
Come non conosch'io (3p. of La notte che segui l'horribil)
Come pianta (2p. Perchè qual peregrin), 4vv, 1587a; S vi, 87
Come sei stat' o ciel (2p. of Ove sei vita mia)
Come va 'l mondo (Petrarch) (2p. Ma 'l cieco amor), 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 101
Con lei fuss'io (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 63
Con le stell'e col sol (2p. of Del auro crin de la Tassinia bella)
Così aspettando (2p. of Mentre fiorv'amor)
Così cor mio vogliate (Ariosto), 4vv, 1587a; S vi, 80
Così quel che m'avanza (5p. of Per aspro mar di notte)
Crudel acerba inesorabil morte (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 44
Dappoi che sott'il ciel (Petrarch), 5vv, 1584a; H i, 172
Deh che fuss'io (5p. of Non ha tante)
Deh hor foss'io co'l vago (Petrarch), 4vv, 1558[13]; S viii, 26
Deh lascia anima homai (Fiamma), 4vv, 1587a; S vi, 85
Deh non rinovellar (2p. of Che fai che pensi)
Deh perchè voglio anco (Ariosto) (2p. Dunque fia ver), 5vv, 1584a; H i, 183
Deh sol che sei si chiaro, 4vv, 1570f; S viii, 61
Del auro crin de la Tassinia bella (2p. Con le stell'e col sol), 5vv, 1570f; S viii, 112
De l'eterne tue sante (Fiamma) (2p. Per questa), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 1
Del freddo Rheno (2p. Ch'il credera; 3p. Rotava ed è pur ver; 4p. Si fe cristallo; 5p. Et io qual; 6p. Hor su la nuda terra), 4vv, 1555b; S viii, 3
Dicesi che la morte (A. Marsi), 5vv, 1563; S iv, 22
Di pensier in pensier (Petrarch), 6vv, 1579[2]; S x, 3
Di persona era tanto ben formata (Ariosto), 4vv, 1573c; S viii, 72
Di qua di là (Ariosto), 5vv, 1584a; H i, 176
Ditemi vita mia, 7vv, 1584[4]; S x, 30
Di terrena armonia (Beccuti) (2p. Signor le colpe mia; 3p. Padre rivolgi; 4p. Stanco di lagrimar; 5p. Voi che di prave; 6p. Fugga), 5vv, 1584a [repr. without 1st stanza as Signor le colpe mie, 1587a]; H i, 179
Diviso m'ha (2p. of Poi che'l'iniquo e fero mio destino)
Dunque fia ver (2p. of Deh perchè voglio anco)
Ecco che pur vi lasso, 5vv, 1587a; S vi, 92
Ed a noi restare (2p. of Volgi cor mio la tua speranza)
E puro bene (2p. of Tanto e quel ben eterno amor)
Errai scorrendo (3p. of Per aspro mar di notte)
E sarebbe hora (2p. of O tempo o cielo)
Et in sembiante (2p. of Evro gentil)
Et io qual (5p. of Del freddo Rheno)
Et mentre (2p. of Quant'invidia vi port'aure)
Evro gentil se d'amoroso ardore (G.B. d'Azzia) (2p. Et in sembiante), 5vv, 1557; S ii, 121
Fiera stella s'el ciel ha forza (Petrarch) (2p. Ma tu prendi), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 50
Fugga (6p. of Di terrena armonia)
Già mi fu co'l desir (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 14
Già senz'affan' (5p. of Si come'al chiaro giorno)
Guarda 'l mio stat'a le vaghezze (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 6
Hor a cantar (2p. of Più volte un bel desio)
Hora per far (2p. of Io son si stanco sotto il grave peso)
Hor ch'a l'albergo de monton (Fiamma), 6vv, 1587a; S vi, 105
Hor che la nuova e vaga primavera, 10vv, 1575[11]; S x, 43
Hor come i rai (3p. of Quando il giorno da l'onde)
Hor qui son lasso e voglio esser (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 22
Hor su la nuda terra (6p. of Del freddo Rheno)
Hor vi riconfortate (Petrarch), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 26
Hor vi riconfortate (Petrarch), 6vv, 1584a; S x, 14
Huomini e Dei (4p. of Là ver' e'aurora)
Il grave de l'età (Fiamma) (2p. Alma tu che 'l furor), 6vv, 1587a; S vi, 126
Il mondo muta (5p. of Quando il giorno da l'onde)

Il tempo passa e l'hore (Petrarch), 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 92
Indi gl'acuti strali (3p. of Viene dolc'hymeneo)
Indi per altro (2p. of Standomi un giorno)
In divina bellezza (2p. of In qual parte del ciel)
In dubbio di mio stato (Petrarch), 4vv, 1560c; S viii, 35
In dubbio di mio stato (Petrarch), 4vv, 1562[7]; S viii, 42
In qual parte del ciel (Petrarch) (2p. Per divina bellezza), 5vv, 1557; S ii, 134
In sonno eterno (2p. of Non ha tante)
In un boschetto (3p. of Standomi un giorno)
Io che l'età più verde (Fiamma) (2p. Ma conven), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 6
Io ho più tempo (2p. Almen nel suo fuggir), 5vv, 1575[11]; S viii, 117
Io non sapea di tal vista (Petrarch), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 33
Io son si stanco sotto il fascio antico (Petrarch) (2p. Ma la sua voce), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 45
Io son si stanco sotto il grave peso (Guidiccioni) (2p. Hora per far), 5vv, 1557; S ii, 139
Io vo fuggendo (4p. of Non ha tante)
I vo piangendo i miei passati tempi (Petrarch) (2p. Si che s'io vissi), 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 116
Lagrime di S Pietro (Tansillo), 7vv, 1595; H xx
L'alto signor, dinanzi a cui (Petrarch), 5vv, 1563; S iv, 3
L'altr'hier sul mezzo giorno, 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 79
La non vol esser più mia, 5vv, 1584a; H i, 152
La notte che segui l'horribil (Petrarch) (2p. Riconosci; 3p. Come non conosch'io), 5vv, 1561[10]; S viii, 88
Lasso che (2p. of Qual nemica fortuna)
Lasso che par (2p. of Tutto 'l dì piango)
Là ver' e'aurora (Petrarch) (2p. Temprar potess'io; 3p. Quante lagrime; 4p. Huomini e Dei; 5p. All' ultimo bisogno; 6p. Ridon hor), 5vv, 1567a; S vi, 65
La vita fugge (Petrarch), 5vv, 1563; S iv, 44
Le voglie e l'opre mie (Fiamma) (2p. Non tu colle), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 17
Ma ben veggi'hor (2p. of Voi ch'ascoltate in rime)
Ma che morta (2p. of Spent'è d'amor)
Ma conven (2p. of Io de l'età più verde)
Madonna sa l'amor, 5vv, 1576b; H i, 156
Ma 'l cieco amor (2p. of Come va 'l mondo)
Malvaggio horrido gelo, 4vv, 1570f; S viii, 63
Ma quel ch'una (2p. of Chi non sa come spira)
Ma quel gran re (4p. of Per aspro mar di notte)
Ma sarò spento (6p of Non ha tante)
Ma se con l'opr' (2p. of Bella guerriera mia)
Ma tu prendi (2p. of Fiera stella s'el ciel ha forza)
Mentre che 'l cor da gl'amorosi vermi (Petrarch) (2p. Quel fuoco), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 27
Mentre fioriv'amor (2p. Così aspettando), 5vv, 1557; S ii, 111
Mia benigna fortun'e 'l viver lieto (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 37
Miser qui speme in cose mortal pone (Petrarch), 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 90
Misera che farò, 5vv, 1576[5]; S viii, 129
Mostran le braccia sue (Ariosto), 4vv, 1573c; S viii, 81
Ne però (2p. of O invidia nemica de virtute)
Nessun visse giamai (Petrarch), 5vv, 1584a; S viii, 137
Non hanno tante (2p. of Per aspro mar di notte)
Non ha tante (2p. In sonno eterno; 3p. Secchi vedransi; 4p. Io vo fuggendo; 5p. Deh che fuss'io; 6p. Ma sarò spento), 3, 5, 6vv, 1563; S iv, 6
Non hebbe (2p. of Quando il giorno da l'onde)
Non s'incolpi 'l desire, 5vv, 1563; S iv, 53
O beltà rara, 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 82
Occhi piangete accompagnate il core (Petrarch), 4vv, 1555b; S viii, 19
O che lieve è (2p. of Quel rossignuol che si soave piagne)
O d'amarissime onde, 5vv, 1561[10]; S viii, 97
O dolci parolette (Cassola), 5vv, 1570[7]; S viii, 107
O fugace dolcezza (Petrarch), 5vv, 1584a; S vi, 127
O invidia nemica di virtute (Petrarch) (2p. Ne però), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 39
Onde come colui (2p. of Quando 'l voler)
O noiosa mia vita (2p. of Ov'è condott'il mio amorose stile)
Ornando come suole, 6vv, 1587a; S vi, 154
O sempre vagh' (2p. of Si come'al chiaro giorno)
O tempo o cielo (Petrarch) (2p. E sarebbe hora), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 11
Ov'è condott'il mio amoroso stile (2p. O noiosa mia vita), 4vv, 1562[7]; S viii, 38
Ove d'altra montagn' ombra tocchi, 4vv, 1567[16]; H i (Nachtrag), 36
Ove le luci giro, 5vv, 1576b; H i, 163
Ove sei vita mia (2p. Come sei stat' o ciel), 5vv, 1561[10]; S viii, 102
O voi già stanchi (6p. of Per aspro mar di notte)
Padre rivolgi (3p. of Di terrena armonia)
Parmi che sempre sian' (4p. of Quando il giorno da l'onde)
Passan vostri trionfi (Petrarch), 10vv, 1584a; S x, 53
Pensier dicea che 'l cor (i) (Ariosto), 5vv, 1569[11]; H i (Nachtrag), 30
Pensier dicea che'l cor (ii) (Ariosto), 5vv, 1587a; S vi, 123
Per aspro mar di notte (Fiamma) (2p. Non hanno tante; 3p. Errai scorrendo; 4p. Ma quel gran re; 5p. Così quel che m'avanza; 6p. O voi già stanchi), 4vv, 1587a; S vi, 70
Perchè qual peregrin (2p. of Come pianta)
Perchè sempre nimica mia, 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 83
Perch'io veggio (Petrarch), 4vv, 1555b; S viii, 23
Per pianto la mia carne (Sannazaro), 4vv, 1555b; S viii, 13
Per questa (2p. of De l'eterne tue sante)
Pien d'un vago pensier (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 75
Più volte un bel desio (Fiamma) (2p. Hor a cantar), 6vv, 1587a; S vi, 132
Poggi, valli (6p. of Quando il giorno da l'onde)
Poi che 'l camin m'è chiuso (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 25
Poi che 'l'iniquo e fero mio destino (2p. Diviso m'ha), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 32
Poi che 'l mio largo pianto (Petrarch), 4vv, 1583[15]; S viii, 84
Poi che si grand' (2p. of Ben sono i premi tuoi)
Pon fren' al gran dolor (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 46
Prendi l'aurata lira (Fiamma), 6vv, 1587a; S vi, 158
Qual nemica fortuna (Asinari) (2p. Lasso che; 3p. Sol'io quanto; 4p. Tal hor dico; 5p. Talhor parmi la luce; 6p. Re de gli altri), 5, 6vv, 1567a; S iv, 128
Quando fia mai quel giorno, 4vv, 1570f; S viii, 65
Quando il giorno da l'onde (Fiamma) (2p. Non hebbe; 3p. Hor come rai; 4p. Parmi che sempre sian'; 5p. Il mondo muta; 6p. Poggi, valli), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 50
Quando io penso al fuggir (Fiamma) (2p. Vedi gli dico), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 39
Quando la sera scaccia (Petrarch), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 35
Quando 'l voler (Petrarch) (2p. Onde come colui), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 17
Quante lagrime (3p. of Là ver' e'aurora)
Quant'invidia (2p. of Quant'invidia ti porto avara terra)
Quanto il mio duol, 4vv, 1560d; S viii, 31
Quant'invidia ti porto avara terra (Petrarch) (2p. Quant'invidia), 5vv, 1563; S iv, 18
Quant'invidia vi port'aure (C. Besalio) (2p. Et mentre), 5vv, 1563; S iv, 32
Quel chiaro sol (2p. Che se la ver'), 5vv, 1557; S ii, 116
Quel fuoco (2p. of Mentre che 'l cor da gl'amorosi vermi)
Quel rossignuol che si soave piagne (Petrarch) (2p. O che lieve è), 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 85
Que piangon (2p. of Soleasi nel mio cor)
Queste contrarie tempre (2p. of Signor se la tua grazia è fuoco)
Queste non son più lagrime (Ariosto), 4vv, 1555b; S viii, 15
Questi ch'inditio fan (Ariosto), 5vv, 1557; S ii, 132
Questi son lasso de la mia spem', 5vv, 1563; S iv, 28
Questo e disceso (2p. of Tra verdi rami)
Re de gli altri (6p. of Qual nemica fortuna)
Riconosci (2p. of La notte che segui l'horribil)
Ridon hor (6p. of Là ver' e'aurora)
Rotava ed è pur ver (3p. of Del freddo Rheno)
Scorgo tant'altro il lume (Tansillo), 5vv, 1563; S iv, 57
Se ben l'empia mia sorte, 4vv, 1555b; S viii, 17
Se ben non veggion gl'occhi, 4vv, 1570f; S viii, 67
Secchi vedransi (3p. of Non ha tante)
Seguì già le speranze (Petrarch), 5vv, 1584a; S viii, 141
Se si alto pon gir mie stanche rime (Petrarch), 5vv, 1563; S iv, 59
Si che s'io vissi (2p. of I vo piangendo)
Si ch'io mi credo (2p. of Sol'e pensoso i più deserti campi)
Si come' al chiaro giorno (2p. O sempre vagh '; 3p. Tal ch'io possa; 4p. Al' hor nel; 5p. Già senz'affan'; 6p. Altri non vedrà), 4vv, 1566[2]; S viii, 46
Si com' i fiori da l'ardente sole, 5vv, 1570[15]; H i, 168
Si fe cristallo (4p. of Del freddo Rheno)
Signor da l'alto trono, 5vv, 1584a; H i, 150
Signor le colpe mie (2p. of Di terrena armonia)
Signor se la tua grazia è fuoco (Tansillo) (2p. Queste contrarie tempre), 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 106
Silen di rose ha 'l volto (C. Camilli), 6vv, 1594[6]; S x, 18
S'io esca vivo (Petrarch), 6vv, 1579[2]; S x, 9
S'io tal'hor muovo gli occhi (F. Ronconi) (2p. Al'hor lasso), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 58

Soleasi nel mio cor (Petrarch) (2p. Que piangon), 5vv, 1576b; S viii, 131
Sol'e pensoso i più deserti campi (Petrarch) (2p. Si ch'io mi credo), 5vv, 1555a; S ii, 71
Sol'io quanto (3p. of Qual nemica fortuna)
Solo n'andrò (2p. of Ben convenne madonna)
Sotto duo negri e sottilissimi archi (Ariosto), 4vv, 1573c; S viii, 74
Sotto quel sta (Ariosto), 4vv, 1573c; S viii, 76
Spent'è d'amor (Minturno) (2p. Ma che morta), 5vv, 1569[19]; H i (Nachtrag), 9
Spesso in poveri alberghi (Ariosto), 4vv, 1573c; S viii, 83
Stanco di lagrima (4p. of Di terrena armonia)
Standomi un giorno (Petrarch) (2p. Indi per altro; 3p. In un boschetto; 4p. Chiara fontana; 5p. Una strana fenice; 6p. Al fin vidd'io), 5vv, 1557; S ii, 89
S'una fede amorosa (Petrarch), 8vv, 1573c; S x, 36
Tal ch'io possa (3p. of Si come'al chiaro giorno)
Tal hor dico (4p. of Qual nemica fortuna)
Talhor parmi la luce (5p. of Qual nemica fortuna)
Tanto e quel ben eterno amor (Fiamma) (2p. E puro bene), 6vv, 1587a; S vi, 149
Temprar potess'io (2p. of Là ver' e'aurora)
Tengan dunque (2p. of Cantai hor piango)
Tra verdi rami (2p. Questo e disceso), 6vv, 1587a; S vi, 160
Tutto 'l dì piango (Petrarch) (2p. Lasso che par), 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 122
Una strana fenice (5p. of Standomi un giorno)
Un dubbio verno (Petrarch), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 23
Valle profonda, 10vv, 1584[4]; S x, 50
Vatene lieta homai coppia d'amici, 4vv, 1555b; S viii, 121
Vedi gli dico (2p. of Quando io penso al fuggir)
Vedi l'aurora (Petrarch), 5vv, 1584a; S vi, 120
Veggio se al vero apre ragion (Fiamma) (2p. Al'hor mi desto), 6vv, 1587a; S vi, 143
Vieni dolc'hymeneo (2p. Indi gl'acuti strali), 4vv, 1570f; S viii, 69
Vivo sol di speranza (Petrarch), 4vv, 1560d; S viii, 33
Voi ch'ascoltate in rime (Petrarch) (2p. Ma ben veggi'hor), 5vv, 1567a; S iv, 111
Voi che di prave (5p. of Di terrena armonia)
Volgi cor mio la tua speranza (F. Spira) (2p. Ed a noi restare), 5vv, 1557; S ii, 127
Vostro fui vostro son (B. Tasso), 5vv, 1557; S ii, 114
V' son gl'ingegni (Fiamma) (2p. Ahi che la forza), 5vv, 1585c; S vi, 30
Fragments of 5 madrigals; H i (Nachtrag)

OTHER SECULAR ITALIAN
villanelle unless otherwise stated

Il primo libro dove si contengono madrigali, vilanesche, canzoni francesi, e motetti, 4vv (Antwerp, 1555) (RISM 1555[29], same contents as 1555[19]) [1555b]
Libro de villanelle, moresche, et altre canzoni, 4–6, 8vv (Paris, 1581) (RISM 1581g) [1581b]

Ad altre le voi dare, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 77
Allala la pia calia, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 104
Andar a valezza (2p. of Cathalina apra finestra)
Canta Giorgia canta (morescha), 5vv, 1581b; S x, 125
Cathalina apra finestra (2p. Andar a valezza) (morescha), 6vv, 1581b; S x, 112
Chi chilichi (morescha), 6vv, 1581b; S x, 120
Ecco la ninph'ebraica chiamata, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 76
Hai Lucia buona cosa (morescha), 4vv, 1581b; S x, 86
Io ti vorria contar, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 85
La cortesia voi donne predicate, 4vv, 1555b; S x, 66
Lucia celu hai biscamia (morescha), 4vv, 1581b; S x, 97
Madonna mia pietà, 4vv, 1555b; S x, 61
Matona mia cara, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 93
Mi me chiamere, 5vv, 1581b; S x, 108
No giorno t'haggio havere, 4vv, 1555b; S x, 65
O bella fusa, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 89
Ogni giorno m'han ditt'a chi favelli, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 91
O là o che bon eccho, 8vv, 1581b; S x, 140
O Lucia miau (morescha), 3vv, 1560[14]; S x, 70
O occhi manza mia, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 103 [previously pubd 1557[20], 3vv, (inc.)]
Par ch'hai lasciato, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 82
Saccio 'na cosa, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 8
S'io fusse ciaul'ettu, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 92
S'io ti vedess'una sol volt'il giorno, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 102
S'io ve dico, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 75
Sto core mio se fosse di diamante, 4vv, 1555b; S x, 69
Tu sai madonna mia, 4vv, 1555b; S x, 63
Tu traditora, 4vv, 1555b; S x, 68 [also pubd 1555[30], 3vv, (inc.)]
Tutto'l dì mi dici, 4vv, 1581b; S x, 79
Tutto'l dì mi dici, 8vv, 1581b; S x, 130
Zanni piasi patro, 8vv, 1581b; S x, 135

CHANSONS

Il primo libro dove si contengono madrigali, vilanesche, canzoni francesi, e motetti, 4vv (Antwerp, 1555) (RISM 1555[29], same contents as 1555[19]) [1555b]
Le premier livre de chansons, auquel sont 27 chansons nouvelles, 4vv (Antwerp, 1564) (RISM 1564c) [1564a]
Quatriesme livre des chansons, 4, 5vv (Leuven, 1564) (RISM 1564d) [1564c]
Dixhuictieme livre des chansons, 4, 5vv (Paris, 1565) (RISM 1565f) [1565a]
Disieme livre de chansons, 4vv (Paris, 1570) (RISM 1570[9]) [1570a]
Mellange d'Orlande de Lassus, contenant plusieurs chansons, tant en vers latins qu'en ryme francoyse, 4, 5vv (Paris, 1570) (RISM 1570d) [1570b]
Second livre des chansons, 4, 5vv (Leuven, 1570) (RISM 1570[6]) [1570f]
Livre de chansons nouvelles, avec 2 dialogues, 5, 8vv (Leuven and Paris, 1571) (RISM 1571f and g) [1571a]
Les meslanges … contenantz plusieurs chansons, tant en vers latins qu'en ryme francoyse, 4–6, 8, 10vv (Paris, 1576, earlier edn. 1570, lost, repr. with sacred contrafacta, London, 1570) (RISM 1576i) [1576b]
Thresor de musique … contenant … chansons, 4–6vv (Geneva, 1576) (RISM 1576[4]) [1576d]
Continuation du mellange, 3–6, 10vv (Paris, 1584) (RISM 1584f) [1584a]
1559[12], 1559[13], 1561[5], 1561[7], 1564[11], 1565[8], 1565[9], 1567[8], 1567[11], 1569[19], 1583[7], 1583[8], 1587[3]

A ce matin [L'avare veut avoir], 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 28, B xi, 1
A l'eau jettes-toy (2p. of Au feu venez-moy)
Amour donne-moy pays (2p. Que doibs-je faire) (Ronsard), 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 75, B xi, 5
Ardant amour souvent, 4vv, 1565[9]; S xii, 25, B xi, 15
Ardant amour souvent [Divin amour; La ferme foi], 5vv, 1565[9]; S xiv, 84, B xi, 20
A toy je crie, 5vv, 1584a; S xvi, 118, B xi, 27
Au feu venez-moy [au feu las] (2p. A l'eau jettes-toy [A l'eau de grace vistement]) (M. de Saint-Gelais), 5vv, 1564c; S xiv, 92, B xi, 32
Au temps jadis, 5vv, 1570b; S xiv, 100, B xi, 44
Avec le jour commence ta journée, 4vv, 1583[7] [previously pubd 1581, now inc.]; B xi, 52
Avec vous [Dieu] mon amour finira, 4vv, 1555b; S xii, 37, B xi, 54
Beau le cristal, 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 94, B xi, 57
Bon jour et puis quelles nouvelles [Bon coeur amis] (2p. Mais si vous cueillez) (C. Marot), 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 53, B xi, 60
Bon jour mon coeur (Ronsard) [Christ est mon Dieu], 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 100, B xi, 68
Ce faux amour [Satan], 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 103, B xi, 70
Célébrons sans cesse, 4vv, 1576d; S xvi, 102, B xiv, 164
Ce que tu peux maintenant (G. du Faur de Pybrac), 4vv, 1583[7] [previously pubd 1581]; B xi, 74
C'estoit en ton jeune age, 5vv, 1584a; S xvi, 123, B xi, 76
Chanter je veux la gente [l'heur de l'ame], 5vv, 1569[19]; S xiv, 50, B xi, 80
Comme la tourterelle (2p. Où t'attend ta maistresse [De l'éternelle liesse]), 5vv, 1565a; S xiv, 120, B xi, 87
Comme un qui prend (Ronsard) [Que malheureuse est la troupe], 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 3, B xi, 95
Croire leger & soudain, 4vv, 1583[7] (inc.) [previously pubd 1581, now inc.]; B xiv, 170
D'amours me va (Marot) [Le monde va tout à rebours], 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 58, B xi, 100
De plusieurs choses, 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 72, B xi, 105
Dessus le marché d'Arras, 6vv, 1584a; S xvi, 152, B xi, 110
De tout mon coeur (G. Crétin), 5vv, 1564[11]; S xiv, 33, B xi, 119
De vous servir, 4vv, 1570a; S xii, 69, B xi, 126
Dis-moy mon coeur, 8vv, 1576b; S xiv, 150, B xi, 128
Dix ennemies [Mes vains desirs] tous désarmés (2p. Et me prenant), 5vv, 1576b; S xiv, 59, B xi, 155
Du corps absent, 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 55, B xi, 164
Du fond de ma pensée (Marot), 4vv, 1564a; S xvi, 159, B xi, 167

Elle s'en va de moy [Elle périt ma chair] (Marot), 5vv, 1567[8]; S xiv, 105, B xi, 169
En espoir vis et crainte, 4vv, 1555b; S xii, 52, B xi, 174
En m'oyant chanter (Marot), 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 106, B xi, 177
En un chasteau, madame [L'homme mortel contemplant], 4vv, 1570b; S xii, 14, B xi, 180
En un lieu [En ce monde] (Saint-Gelais), 4vv, 1565a; S xii, 83, B xi, 183
Est-il possible à moy [Est-il possible en ce monde], 5vv, 1561[5]; S xiv, 112, B xi, 187
Et d'où venez vous [Que devenez-vous], 5vv, 1565[8]; S xiv, 68, B xii, 1
Femme qui demande (2p. of Parens sans amis)
Fleur de quinze ans (Marot), 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 43, B xii, 7
Fuyons tous d'amour [Fuyons de vices] le jeu, 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 80, B xii, 10
Gallans qui par terre (Villon), 4vv, 1584a; S xvi, 111, B xii, 12
Guérir ma douleur, 4vv, 1584a; S xvi, 106, B xii, 15
Hâtez-vous [Haste-toi de me faire], 4vv, 1567[11]; S xii, 81, B xii, 17
Hélas j'ai sans merci, 5vv, 1584a; S xvi, 132, B xii, 19
Hélas mon Dieu, 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 46, B xii, 28
Hélas mon Francin (3p. of Mais qui pourroit)
Hélas quel jour, 4vv, 1561[5]; S xii, 47, B xii, 36
Heureux qui met en Dieu (du Faur de Pybrac), 4vv, 1583[7] [previously pubd 1581]; B xii, 39
Holà Caron (O. de Magny), 8vv, 1571a; S xvi, 81, B xii, 41
Il esteoit une religieuse [Si j'estoi où mon ame], 4vv, 1565a; S xii, 74, B xii, 60
J'aime la pierre précieuse, 5vv, 1584a; S xvi, 121, B xii, 63
J'attends le tems, 5vv, 1570b; S xiv, 48, B xii, 67
J'ay cherché la science [J'ay du ciel la science] (Saint-Gelais), 4vv, 1565[9]; S xii, 57, B xii, 72
J'ay de vou voir (Du Bellay), 4vv, 1584a; S xvi, 113, B xii, 75
Je l'ayme bien [J'aime mon Dieu et l'aimerai], 4vv, 1555b; S xii, 41, B xii, 77
J'endure un tourment (2p. Mais à quel propos [Mais de quoi me sert]), 5vv, 1565a; S xiv, 38, B xii, 80
Je ne veux plus que chanter, 5vv, 1570b; S xiv, 88, B xii, 90
Je ne veux rien qu'un baiser [que deux mots], 4vv, 1564[11]; S xii, 98, B xii, 97
J'espère et crains (Ronsard) (2p. Plus que me pique), 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 12, B xii, 101
Je vous donne en conscience (Marot), 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 70, B xii, 111
Je suis quasi prest d'enrager [de mourir], 4vv, 1570b; S xii, 54, B xii, 115
La mort est [Les dez, c'est] jeu pire (Marot), 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 58, B xii, 117
La nuict froide et sombre (Du Bellay), 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 34, B xii, 119
La peine dure, 4vv, 1584a; S xvi, 104, B xii, 122
Las je n'iray plus, 5vv, 1584a; S xvi, 126, B xii, 125
Las me fault-il, 5vv, 1561[5]; S xiv, 76, B xii, 135
Las voulez-vous, 4vv, 1555b; S xii, 3, B xii, 142
La terre les eaux (Ronsard) [La terre son Dieu va louant], 5vv, 1565a; S xiv, 7, B xii, 146
Le comple de ton sçavoir (2p. of Ton nom que on vers)
Le départir [Partir d'ici, c'est un departement], 5vv, 1565[9]; S xiv, 116, B xii, 152
Le rossignol plaisant, 5vv, 1561[7]; S xiv, 107, B xii, 157
Le sage fils est du père, 4vv, 1583[7] [previously pubd 1581, now inc.]; L xvi, 186, B xiv, 172
Le temps passé (B. d'Auriol) [Le tems perdu je souspire], 4vv, 1567[11]; S xii, 49, B xii, 163
Le temps peut bien, 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 76, B xii, 165
Le vray amy (Saint-Gelais) [Le vertueux ne s'estonne de rien], 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 62, B xii, 168
Les biens du corps, 4vv, 1583[7] [previously pubd 1581, now inc.]; L xvi, 189
L'heureux amour [plaisir qui esleve], 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 5, B xii, 171
L'homme se plaint, 4vv, 1583[7], inc. [previously pubd 1581, now inc.]; L xvi, 189, B xiv, 172
Lucescit jam o socii, 4vv, 1587[3]; H i, 121
Mais à quel propos (2p. of J'endure un tourment)
Mais a vous voir (2p. of Un bien petit)
Mais qui pourroit, 3vv, 1584a; S xvi, 107, B xii, 175
Mais qui pourroit (2p. Si mon gentil; 3p. Hélas mon Francin), 6vv, 1584a; S xvi, 137, B xii, 177
Mais si vous cueillez (2p. of Bon jour et puis quelles nouvelles)
M'amie a bien le regard, 4vv, 1584a; S xvi, 102, B xiii, 1
Margot labouréz, 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 102, B xiii, 3
Mes pas semés [Mes pas Seigneur tant esgarez], 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 87, B xiii, 5
Mon coeur ravi d'amour, 5vv, 1565[8]; S xiv, 22, B xiii, 8
Mon coeur se recommande (Marot) [Mon coeur se rend à toi; Qui laboure champ ou vigne], 5vv, 1567[8]; S xiv, 15, B xiii, 15
Monsieur l'abbé (Marot) [Maistre Robbin], 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 16, B xiii, 20
Noblesse gist au coeur, 5vv, 1570b; S xiv, 3, B xiii, 24
O comme heureux, 4vv, 1564c; S xvi, 160, B xiv, 165
O doux parler (Ronsard) (2p. O Vermeillons), 8vv, 1571a; S xii, 89, B xiii, 32
O foible esprit (Du Bellay) (2p. O jeune archer), 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 34, B xiii, 58
O jeune archer (2p. of O foible esprit)
O mère des amours Ciprine (2p. Tu sais o gentille; 3p. Or cesse doncques), 4vv, 1584a; S xvi, 109, B xiii, 63
On doit le fer battre, 4vv, 1583[8]; S xvi, 100, B xiii, 68
Or cesse doncques (3p. of O mère des amours Ciprine)
Ores que je suis dispos (Ronsard) (2p. Verse moy donc du vin nouveau), 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 24, B xiii, 71
Orsus filles (R. Belleau) [Sus, je vous pri], 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 63, B xiii, 81
O temps divers [Maudit peché qui me deffens], 4vv, 1559[12]; S xii, 67, B xiii, 84
Où t'attend ta maistresse (2p. of Comme la tourterelle)
O vermeillons (2p. of O doux parler)
O vin en vigne [Bonté divine, vien et monstre], 4vv, 1570b; S xii, 36, B xiii, 87
Paisible domaine [Qu' est-ce que Dieu donne], 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 50, B xiii, 89
Parens sans amis (2p. Femme qui demande), 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 40, B xiii, 93
Père qui habites les cieux, 5vv, 1584a; S xvi, 115, B xiii, 98
Petite folle [Troupe fidele, es-tu pas], 4vv, 1565[9]; S xii, 78, B xiii, 105
Plus que me pique (2p. of J'espère et crains)
Pour courir en poste (Marot) (2p. Pour mettre; 3p. Pour desbaucher; 4p. Pour faire), 5vv, 1571a; S xii, 61, B xiii, 109
Pour desbaucher (3p. of Pour courir en poste)
Pour faire (4p. of Pour courir en poste)
Pour mettre (2p. of Pour courir en poste)
Puisque fortune [Peché infame; Puis que peché à moi], 5vv, 1565[9]; S xiv, 125, B xiii, 125
Puisque vivre en servitude (Saint-Gelais), 4vv, 1584a; S xvi, 103, B xiii, 129
Quand me souvient (Sentant l'effort et la triste], 5vv, 1570b; S xiv, 128, B xiii, 132
Quand mon mary vient [Quand l'homme honneste], 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 23, B xiii, 136
Quand un cordier (Chartier), 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 108, B xiii, 139
Que dis-tu (Ronsard), 8vv, 1576b; S xiv, 142, B xiii, 142
Que doibs-je faire (2p. of Amour donne-moy pays)
Que gaignez vous [D'où vient cela], 5vv, 1570b; S xvi, 166, B xiii, 158
Qui bien se mire, 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 65, B xiii, 164
Qui dort icy [en nous] (Marot), 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 19, B xiii, 166
Qui veult d'amour (Bouchet) [Qui de peché veut savoir], 5vv, 1576b; S xiv, 133, B xiii, 169
Rends-moi mon coeur (Ronsard), 5vv, 1561[5]; S xiv, 18, B xiii, 174
Sais-tu dire l'Avé [Sais-tu dire bien], 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 66, B xiii, 181
Sauter danser faire les tours, 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 10, B xiii, 183
Secouré's moy [Assiste moy Seigneur] (Marot), 5vv, 1564a; S xvi, 163, B xiii, 186
Si du malheur [De ce malheur], 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 50, B xiii, 192
Si froid et chault, 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 96, B xiv, 1
Si je suis brun (2p. Ne vous soit estrange), 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 30, B xiv, 4
Si le long temps (P. du Val), 4vv, 1559[12]; S xii, 7, B xiv, 10
Si le mal ennuyeux, 4vv, 1583[7], inc. [previously pubd 1581, now inc.]; L xvi, 192, B xiv, 178
S'il y a compagnons [Il n'y a que douleur], 5vv, 1576b; S xiv, 65, B xiv, 12
Si mon gentil (2p. of Mais qui pourroit)
Si par souhait je vous [te] tenoit, 4vv, 1570b; S xii, 12, B xiv, 17
Si pour moy avez du souci (Marot) [Quand mon coeur a quelque souci], 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 85, B xiv, 20
Si vous estes m'amie, 6vv, 1584a; S xvi, 147, B xiv, 24
Si vous n'estes en bon point (Marot), 4vv, 1564a; S xii, 60, B xiv, 34

Soufflons d'autant amis (Cherchons ailleurs], 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 30, B xiv, 36
Soyons joyeux, 4vv, 1565[9]; S xii, 20, B xiv, 43
Sur tous regretz, 5vv, 1567[8]; S xiv, 26, B xiv, 46
Susanne un jour (G. Guérault), 5vv, 1567[8]; S xiv, 29, B xiv, 52
Ton [Mon] feu s'esteint, 4vv, 1559[13]; S xii, 109, B xiv, 59
Ton nom que mon vers (2p. Le comple de ton sçavoir) (Ronsard), 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 6, B xiv, 68
Toutes les nuitz (Marot), 5vv, 1563; S xiv, 130, B xiv, 73
Trop endurer sans avoir [de peché], 4vv, 1555b; S xii, 70, B xiv, 78
Tu sais o gentille (2p. of O mère des amours Ciprine)
Un advocat dit à sa femme [L'homme de bien dit à son ame], 4vv, 1570b; S xii, 8, B xiv, 81
Un bien petit (Marot) (2p. Mais a vous voir), 5vv, 1571a; S xvi, 18, B xiv, 90
Une puce j'ay dedans l'oreill' (Baïf), 5vv, 1576b; S xiv, 114, B xiv, 95
Ung doulx nenny (Marot) [Ta voix, ô Dieu, avec ton doux], 4vv, 1564[11]; S xii, 45, B xiv, 100
Un jeune moine [Quitte le monde], 4vv, 1576b; S xii, 89, B xiv, 104
Un jour concluz, 4vv, 1583[7] [previously pubd 1581, now inc.]; L xvi, 190, B xiv, 180
Un jour l'amant, 8vv, 1570b; S xiv, 136, B xiv, 110
Un jour vis un foulon [On ne peut le fol amour], 4vv, 1570b; S xii, 39, B xiv, 122
Un mesnagier, 5vv, 1570b; S xiv, 54, B xiv, 125
Un [Mon] triste coeur rempli, 5vv, 1561[5]; S xiv, 80, B xiv, 132
Verse moy donc du vin nouveau (2p. of Ores que je suis dispos)
Veux-tu ton mal [Puis qu'en mon mal], 5vv, 1559[12]; S xiv, 71, B xiv, 138
Vignon vignon vignette, 6vv, 1584a; S xvi, 144, B xiv, 142
Vive sera et toujours perdurable, 5vv, 1570f; S xiv, 11, B xiv, 147
Voir est beaucoup, 4vv, 1559[13]; H i, 126, B xiv, 183
Vous qui aymez les dames, 5vv, 1565[8]; S xiv, 45, B xiv, 154
Vray dieu disoit une fillette [une ame sainte], 4vv, 1555b; S xii, 72, B xiv, 160

GERMAN CONTRAFACTA

Al mein Anfang (= Le temps peut bien); Auss tiefer Not (= Si le long temps); Bewar mich Herr (= Ton feu s'esteint); Das sawer Tranck (= La mort est jeu pire); Frölich und frey (= Quand mon mary vient); Gott ist mein Schütz (= A ce matin); Gross Angst und Not (= Trop endurer); Gunst geht für gspunst (= Soyons joyeux); Herr Jesu Christ (= Le vray amy); Hilff uns, o Herr (= Si froid et chault); Ich rieff zu dir Herr Jesu Christ (= Au feu verez-moy); Ich rieff zu dir hilff mir (= Monsieur l'abbé); Id quid? fit, sit, Wie kann ich dirs abschlagen (= Je ne veux rien); Kein Lieb noch treu ist (= En un lieu)

Laetamini in Domino und singt in dulci jubilo (= Je l'ayme bien); Mein aininger Trost (= Petite folle); Mein Hoffnung (= Fleur de quinze ans); Merck schönes (= Hé'las quel jour); O Herre Gott mein Not (= Bon mon coeur); O trewer Gott (= Ung doulx nenny); Seit frisch (= Margot labouréz); Thue dich, o Herr (= Du corps absent); Von Morgens frü mit Gottes Lob (= Avec le jour commence ta journée), S xx, 27; Vor Zeiten was ich lieb gehalten (= Hâtez-vous); Wenn wir recht thun betrachten (= Du fond de ma pensée); Wer singen wil (= En m'ovant chanter); Wer sucht der findt (= Qui dort icy); Wolauff gut Gsellen (= Un jeune moine); Zu aller Stund (= Ardant amour souvent)

LIEDER

Neue teütsche Liedlein, 5vv (Munich, 1567) (RISM 1567l) [1567c]
Der ander Theil teutscher Lieder, 5vv (Munich, 1572) (RISM 1572g) [1572a]
6 cantiones latinae, 4vv, adiuncto dialogo, 8vv: 6 teutsche Lieder, 4vv, sampt einem Dialogo, 8vv: 6 chansons françoises nouvelles, 4vv, avecq un dialogue, 8vv: 6 madrigali nuovi, 4vv, con un dialogo, 8vv (Munich, 1573) (RISM 1573d) [1573c]
Der dritte Theil schöner, neuer, teutscher Lieder sampt einem zu End gesetzten frantzösischen frölichen Liedlein, 5vv (Munich, 1576) (RISM 1576r) [1576a]
Neue teutsche Lieder, geistlich und weltlich, 4vv (Munich, 1583) (RISM 1583a) [1583a]
Teutsche Psalmen: geistliche Psalmen, 3vv (Munich, 1588) (RISM 1588[12]) [1588c]
Neue teutsche, und etliche frantzösische Gesäng, 6vv (Munich, 1590) (RISM 1590b) [1590]
Allein Gott (3p. of Auss meiner sünden Tieffe)
Als Holophernes (6p. of Die Gnad kombt oben her)
Am Abent spat, heim khiellen Wein, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 33
Annelein, du singst fein, 4vv, 1573c; S xx, 46
Audite nova Der Bawr von Eselsskirchen, 4vv, 1573c; S xx, 51
Auff dich, mein heber Herr und Gott (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 63
Auff ihen wil ich vertrawen (3p. of Von Gott wil ich nit lassen)
Auss härtem Grundt, 4vv, 1573c; S xx, 47
Auss härtem Weh, 6vv, 1590; S xx, 99
Auss meiner sünden Tieffe (2p. Wann sich ein grimmer zoren; 3p. Allein Gott; 4p. Von Gott kein Mensch), 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 17
Bald ich von Gelt (6p. of Ich hab ein Mann)
Baur, was tregst im Sacke?, 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 29
Christ ist erstanden 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 3
Da das der Herr (2p. of Im Lant zu Wirtenberg)
Da lagens (3p. of Mit Lust thet ich aussreitten)
Daniel geworfen war (9p. of Die Gnad kombt oben her)
Daniels Knaben drey (8p. of Die Gnad kombt oben her)
Dann bey dem Herren (5p. og Ich ruff zu der mein Herr und Gott)
Dann eh er's hat begert (3p. of Der König wirdt seyn Wolgemut)
Darauff hat Gott gesandt (7p. of Die Gnad kombt ober her)
Darumb, o frommer Gott (10p. of Die Gnad kombt ober her)
Das ein das Annelein (2p. of Mit Lust thet ich aussreitten)
Das Meidlein (2p. of Einmal ging ich spatzieren)
Das Volck von Israel (4p. of Die Gnad kombt oben her)
Der g'winnen will (3p. of Hort zu eins news Gedicht)
Derhalben dann nichts (2p. pf In viel Trübsal)
Der Herr, dir ist mit dir (2p. of Maria voll Genad)
Der Herr erhöre deine Klag (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 68
Der König wirdt seyn Wolgemut (Ulenberg) (2p. Du hast ihm geben; 3p. Dann eh er's hat begert), 6vv, 1590; S xx, 128
Der Meye bringt uns der Blümlein vil (J. Klieber), 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 75
Der richter lacht (3p. of Im Lant zu Wirtenberg)
Der starcke Gott im Himmelreich (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 80
Der Tag der ist so frewdenreich, 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 71
Der Wein, der schmeckt mir also, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 11
Der Welte Pracht ist hoch geacht, 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 147
Die Fassnacht ist ein schöne Zeit, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 6
Die Gnad kombt oben her (2p. Wer Gott vertrauen thut; 3p. Wir armes Volck; 4p. Das Volck von Israel; 5p. Joseph verkauffet; 6p. Als Holophernes; 7p. Darauff hat Gott gesandt; 8p. Daniels Knaben drey; 9p. Daniel geworfen war; 10p. Darumb, o frommer Gott; 11p. Wer diss Lied hat gemacht; 12p. Hierauf sey nun gepreiset), 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 4
Die Thoren sprechen wohl (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 66
Die Welt und all ir Reichethumb (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 70
Die Zeit, so jetz vorhanden ist, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 14
Do icht lang stilt (4p. of Mein Fraw hilgert)
Dort aber wirdt (2p. of O Mensch gedenck)
Du best gebenedeyd (3p. of Maria voll Genad)
Du hast ihm geben (2p. of Der König wirdt seyn Wolgemut)
Ein Esel und das Nüssbawmholtz, 4vv, 1573c; S xx, 45
Ein guten Raht wil gehen ich (2p. In Glück und Frewd), 6vv, 1590; S xx, 83
Ein guter Wein ist Lobens werd, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 44
Ein Körbelmacher in ein Dorff (H. Sachs), 6vv, 1590; S xx, 124
Einmal ging ich spatzieren (2p. Das Meidlein), 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 98
Ein Meidlein zu dem Brunnen gieng (2p. Ich sprach o Fraw; 3p. Die Fraw gantz höflich; 4p. So danck ich Gott), 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 82
Erzürn dich nicht o frommer Christ (L. Hätzer), 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 65
Es Jagt ein Jeger vor dem Holtz, 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 88
Es sind doch selig alle die (M. Greiter), 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 77
Es thut sich als verkeren, 4vv, 1573c; S xx, 49
Es zeugen des gottlosen Wercke (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 75
Fraw ich bin euch von hertzen Hold, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 31
Frölich und frey on alle Rey, 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 149
Frölich zu sein ist mein Manier, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 38
Gebenedeyt auch (4p. of Maria voll Genad)
Gelt, Welt, dir wird (2p. of Welt, Gelt, dir wird einmal)
Gott ist auf den wir immer hoffen (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 79
Gott nimbt und geit zu jeder Zeit, 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 130
Gross ist der Herr im heilgen Thron (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 79
Halt mich o Herr in deiner Hut (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 66
Herr der du meine Stercke bist (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 67
Herr Gott mein Hort (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 72
Hierauf sey nun gepreiset (12p. of Die Gnad kombt oben her)
Hilff lieber Herr die heilig Frommen (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 65

Hort zu ein news Gedicht (2p. So fundt man; 3p. Der g'winnen will), 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 151
Ich armer Mann was hab ich than, 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 113
Ich armes Weib (5p. of Ich hab ein Mann)
Ich hab dich lieb das weist du wol (2p. Und wann du freundlich bist), 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 93
Ich hab ein Mann (2p. Wann er auffsteht; 3p. Nach dem Frühmal; 4p. Umb fünffe hin; 5p. Ich armes Weib; 6p. Bald ich von Gelt; 7p. Wann ich dann sag; 8p. Nun wars umb mich), 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 31
Ich harr auf Gott (3p. of Ich ruff zu dir mein Herr und Gott)
Ich harre auff Gott (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 76
Ich ruff zu dir mein Herr und Gott (2p. Wann du Herr wolltest; 3p. Ich harr auf Gott; 4p. Mein Hoffnung steht; 5p. Dann bey dem Herren) (Ulenberg), 6vv, 1590; S xx, 88
Ich sprach wan ich nit leuge, 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 159
Ich weiss ein Frawelein, 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 91
Ich weiss nur ein hübsches Meidlein, 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 28
Ich will auss gantzem Hertzen mein (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 64
Ich will dich Herr gebürlich loben (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 73
Ich will Gott unaufhörlich preisen (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 74
Im Lant zu Wirtenberg (2p. Da das der Herr; 3p. Der richter lacht), 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 19
Im Mayen hört man die Hanen krayen, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 24
In Glück und Frewd (2p. of Ein guten Raht wil geben ich)
In viel Trübsal (2p. Derhalben dann nichts), 6vv, 1590; S xx, 116
In wölches Hauss (3p. of Mein Mann, der ist in Krieg)
Ist doch Gott gar (2p. of Wach auff o Menschenkind)
Ist Keiner hie, der sprich zu mir, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 8
Joseph verkauffet (5p. of Die Gnad kombt oben her)
Kombt her zu mir spricht Gottes Son (G. Grünwald), 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 73
Man sieht nun wol wie stet du bist, 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 81
Maria voll Genad (2p. Der Herr, der ist mit dir; 3p. Du best gebenedeyd; 4p. Gebenedeyt auch), 6vv, 1590; S xx, 108
Mein Fraw hilgert (2p. Mein Fraw unmilt; 3p. Mein Fraw unrein; 4p. Do ich lang stilt; 5p. Sie raufft jr gnug), 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 132
Mein Fraw unmilt (2p. of Mein Fraw hilgert)
Mein Fraw unrein (3p. of Mein Fraw hilgert)
Mein Gott, mein heber trewer Gott (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 69
Mein Hoffnung steht (4p. of ich ruff zu dir mein Herr und Gott)
Mein Mann, der ist in Krieg (2p. Was soll ich euch; 3p. In wölches Hauss; 4p. Wolstu mich), 5vv, 1572a; S, xviii, 51
Mit Lust thet ich aussreitten (2p. Das ein das Annelein; 3p. Da lagens), 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 124
Nach dem Frühmal (3p. of Ich hab ein Mann)
Nun grüss dich Gott, 8vv, 1573c; S xx, 54
Nun wars umb mich (8p. of Ich hab ein Mann)
Nur närrisch seyn ist mein Monier, 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 62
O Herr, ich klag, es dir (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 62
O Mensch gedenck (2p. Dort aber wirdt), 6vv, 1590; S xx, 102
O selig dein der trewe Gott (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 74
Schaff mir Herr nicht in Eiffermut (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 71
Selig ist der auff Gott sein Hoffnung, 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 22
Selig zu preisen ist der Mann (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 61
Sie raufft jr gnug (5p. of Mein Fraw hilgert)
So fundt man (2p. of Hort zu ein news Gedicht)
So trincken wir alle, 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 145
Straff mich Herr nicht in Eiffermut (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 76
Susannen frumb, 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 109
Tritt auf en Rigel von der Thür, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 35
Umb fünffe him (4p. of Ich hab ein Mann)
Und wann du freundlich bist (2p. of Ich hab dich lieb das weist du wol)
Vater unser im Himmelreich (Luther), 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 1
Vernimb Herr meine Wort (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 62
Von Gott kein Mensch (4p. of Auss meiner sünden Tieffe)
Von Gott wil ich nit lassen (2p. Wann sich der Menschen Hulde; 3p. Auff ihn wil ich vertrawen), 6vv, 1590; S xx, 134
Vor Zeiten was ich Lieb und Werd, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 16
Wach auff o Menschenkind (2p. Ist doch Gott gar), 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 24
Wann du Herr wolltest (2p. of Ich ruff zu dir mein Herr und Gott)
Wann er auffsteht (2p. of Ich hab ein Mann)
Wann ich dann sag (7p. of Ich hab ein Mann)
Wann sich der Menschen Hulde (2p. of Von Gott wil ich nit lassen)
Wann sich ein grimmer zoren (2p. of Auss meiner sünden Tieffe)
Was heut soll sein, 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 23
Was kann uns kommen an für Not (A. Knöpken), 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 68
Was soll ich euch (2p. of Mein Mann, der ist in Krieg)
Welt, Gelt, dir wird (3p. of Welt, Gelt, dir wird einmal)
Welt, Gelt, dir wird einmal (2p. Gelt, Welt, dir wird; 3p. Welt, Gelt, dir wird), 5vv, 1576a; S xviii, 117
Wem soll man jetzund trawen, 4vv, 1573c; S xx, 50
Wer diss Lied hat gemacht (11p. of Die Gnad kombt oben her)
Wer Gott vertrauen thut (2p. of Die Gnad kombt oben her)
Wie ein hirsch gierlich schreien thut (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 77
Wie lang, o Gott, in meiner Not, 5vv, 1567c; S xviii, 27
Willig und trew on alle Rew, 5vv, 1572a; S xviii, 80
Wir armes Volck (3p. of Die Gnad kombt oben her)
Wir haben Herr mit unsern Oren (Ulenberg), 3vv, 1588c; S xx, 78
Wohl kombt der May, 4vv, 1583a; S xx, 40
Wolstu mich (4p. of Mein Mann, der ist in Krieg)

DOUBTFUL AND MISATTRIBUTED WORKS

Masses: Deus misereatur, 8vv (on Lassus's motet) (? by A. Grothusius), H xii, 99; Mon coeur se recommende à vous, 5vv, MS 1579 (on Lassus's chanson) (? by J. Eccard), Hxi, 233; Missa Octavi toni, 5vv (by Neuner), H xii, 306; Officium mortuorum, 4vv (? by J. de Kerle), H xi, 263; Or sus à coup, 4vv (Antwerp, 1607) (RISM 1607c) (on Crecquillon's chanson) (? by J. Lockenburg); Se salamandre, 4vv, MS c1570 (on Crecquillon's chanson) (? by J. Lockenburg), H xi, 113; Si me tenez, 6vv, MS c1576 (on Crecquillon's chanson) (? by J. Vaet), H xi, 179; Surrexit Pastor bonus, 5vv, MS c1576 (on Lassus's motet) (? by Ivo de Vento), H xi, 135
8 Magnificat settings; MS; H xvii, 182–293
Motets: In conspectu angelorum, 8vv, 1570d; Lucesit jam pariter, 4vv, 1584 (RISM 1584a)
Madrigal: Non vi vieto per questo (Ariosto), 4vv, 1560d (? by Hoste da Reggio); S viii, 29

(2) Ferdinand de Lassus (b Munich, *c*1560; d Munich, 27 Aug 1609). Singer and composer, eldest son of (1) Orlande de Lassus. He entered the Bavarian court chapel in 1584; in 1585 he was in Hechingen, in the service of Friedrich von Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, but at the beginning of 1590 he was again in Munich and Landshut. In 1602 he succeeded Johann à Fossa as Kapellmeister at Munich. In 1585 he married; eight children were born of this marriage (including Ferdinand, 1592–1630, who became a musician, studied in Rome, and was Kapellmeister in Munich, 1616–29). His music, where different in style from his father's, shows some turn-of-the-century characteristics.

WORKS

Cantiones sacrae, 6vv (Graz, 1587)
Cantiones ab Orlando di Lasso et huius filio Ferdinando di Lasso, 5vv (Munich, 1597[3]); ed. in RRMR (forthcoming)
Apparatus musicus, 8vv, bc (org) (Munich, 1622)
Works in 1583[2], 1585[17], 1588[8], 1596[2], 1602[1], 1604[7], 1616[2], 1623[2], 1624[1], D-Mbs

(3) Rudolph de Lassus (b Munich, *c*1563; d Munich, 1625). Organist and composer, second son of (1) Orlande de Lassus. He entered the Bavarian court chapel in 1585. Having served briefly as organist at the Hohenzollern court in Hechingen in 1586, he returned to Munich the next year, becoming first organist in 1589 and remaining in that post until his death. In 1609 he became court composer to the duke. He married some time before 1590 and had four children. Together with his brother (2) Ferdinand he assembled and published the Magnum opus musicum (1604), the enormous if incomplete corpus of his father's motets. Rudolph established himself as a composer through his share, one half, of the Ulenberg psalm settings published in 1588 (Rudolph's contributions alternate regularly with those of Orlande in this volume). His father's influence remained important; several of Rudolph's Magnificat settings are parodies of works by Orlande. He went so far, however, as to write some works making use of thoroughbass and of soprano duets in the style of the early 17th century. Rudolph was a fairly prolific composer and may deserve study aside from the matter of his father's influence.

WORKS

Teutsche Psalmen: geistliche psalmen, 3vv (Munich, 1588[12]); ed. W. Lipphardt (Kassel, 1928/R)
Cantiones sacrae, 6vv (Munich, 1601[3]); ed. in RRMR, (forthcoming)
Selectae aliquot cantiones, 4vv (Munich, 1606)
Circus symphoniacus commissi in arenam Phonomachi, 9, 11, 12vv (Munich, 1607)
Triga musica qua missae odaeque Marianae triplice fugantur: in Viadanae modo, 4–6vv (Munich, 1612)
Virginalia Eucharistica, 2–8vv (Munich, 1615)
Ad sacrum convivium modi sacri, 2–6vv (Munich, 1617)
Alphabetum Marianum triplici cantionum, 2–4vv, bc (org) (Munich, 1621)
Cygnaeum melos, una cum litaneis, 2–4vv cecinit (Munich, 1626)
Missae (Ingolstadt, n.d.), lost
Works in Pantheon musicum (Paris, 1600), 1585[17], 1590[1], 1596[2], 1604[7], 1610[18], 1616[2], 1622[2], 1623[2], 1624[1], 1627[2], 1628[3], A-Wn, D-Mbs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BoetticherOL; EinsteinIM; FasquelleE; MGG1 (W. Boetticher)
R. Eitner: 'Chronologisches Verzeichniss der gedruckten Werke von H.L. Hassler und Orlandus de Lassus', MMg, v (1873), suppl.
C. van den Borren: Orlande de Lassus (Paris, 1920/R)
A. Sandberger: Ausgewählte Aufsätze zur Musikgeschichte (Munich, 1921/R), i, 1–168
E.E. Lowinsky: Das Antwerpener Motettenbuch Orlando di Lasso's und seine Beziehungen zum Motettenschaffen der niederländischen Zeitgenossen (The Hague, 1937); Eng. trans. in E.E. Lowinsky: Music in the Culture of the Renaissance and Other Essays, ed. B. Blackburn (Chicago, 1989), 385–431
H. Osthoff: Die Niederländer und das deutsche Lied, 1400–1640 (Berlin, 1938/R), 139ff
K.J. Levy: '"Susanne un jour": the History of a 16th Century Chanson', AnnM, i (1953), 375–408
B. Meier: 'Alter und neuer Stil in lateinisch textierten Werken von Orlando di Lasso',AMw, xv (1958), 151–61
H. Leuchtmann: Die musikalische Wortausdeutungen in den Motetten des Magnum opus musicum von Orlando di Lasso (Strasbourg, 1959)
W. Frei: 'Die bayerische Hofkapelle unter Orlando di Lasso: Ergänzungen und Berichtigungen zur Deutung von Mielichs Bild', Mf, xv (1962), 359–64
W. Boetticher: Aus Orlando di Lassos Wirkungskreis (Kassel, 1963)
W. Boetticher: 'Wortausdeutung und Tonalität bei Orlando di Lasso', KJb, xlvii (1963), 75–104
R. Eras: 'Zur Deutung von Mielichs Bild der bayerischen Hofkapelle', Mf, xvi (1963), 364–7
W. Boetticher: 'Über einige neue Werke aus Orlando di Lassos mittlerer Madrigal- und Motettenkomposition (1567–1569)', AMw, xxii (1965), 12–42
S. Hermelink: 'Jägermesse: Beitrag zu einer Begriffsbestimmung', Mf, xviii (1965), 29–33
W. Boetticher: 'New Lasso Studies', Aspects of Medieval and Renaissance Music: a Birthday Offering to Gustave Reese, ed. J. LaRue and others (New York,1966/R), 17–26
K. Morawska: 'Kompozycje Orlanda di Lasso w repertuarze instrumentalnym', Muzyka, xiii/3 (1968), 3–21
W. Boetticher: 'Weitere Beiträge zur Lasso-Forschung', Renaissance-muziek 1400–1600: donum natalicium René Bernard Lenaerts (Leuven, 1969), 61–70
S. Hermelink: 'Die Gegenquintsprungkadenz, ein Ausdrucksmittel der Satzkunst Lassos', GfMKB: Bonn 1970, 435–8
D. Kämper: Studien zur instrumentalen Ensemblemusik des 16. Jahrhunderts in Italien, AnMc, no.10 (1970)
H. Leuchtmann: 'Lassos Huldigungsmotette für Henri d'Anjou 1573', Mf, xxiii (1970), 165–7
W. Mitchell: 'The Prologue to Orlando di Lasso's Prophetiae Sibyllarum', Music Forum, ii (1970), 264–73
C.V. Palisca: 'Ut oratoria musica: the Rhetorical Basis of Musical Mannerism', The Meaning of Mannerism, ed. F.W. Robinson and S.G. Nichols (Hanover, NH, 1972), 37–65
H. Leuchtmann: 'Orlando di Lasso in München', Oberbayerisches Archiv, xcvii (1973), 1–12
J. Bernstein: 'Lassus in English Sources: Two Chansons Recovered', JAMS, xxvii (1974), 315–25
B. Meier: Die Tonarten der klassischen Vokalpolyphonie (Utrecht, 1974; rev. Eng. trans., 1988)
M. Ruhnke: 'Lassos Chromatik und die Orgelstimmung', Convivium musicorum: Festschrift Wolfgang Boetticher, ed. H. Hüschen and D.-R. Moser (Berlin, 1974), 291–308
W. Boetticher: 'Anticipations of Dramatic Monody in the Late Works of Lassus', Essays on Opera and English Music in Honour of Sir Jack Westrup, ed. F.W. Sternfeld, N. Fortune and E. Olleson (Oxford, 1975), 84–102
J. Erb: Parody Technique in the Magnificats of Orlando di Lasso (diss., Harvard U., 1975)
J. Haar: 'A Madrigal Falsely Ascribed to Lasso', JAMS, xxviii (1975), 526–9
H. Leuchtmann: Orlando di Lasso (Wiesbaden, 1976–7)
H.-W. Gross: Klangliche Struktur und Klangverhältnis in Messen und lateinischen Motetten Orlando di Lassos (Tutzing, 1977)
D. Arnold: 'The Grand Motets of Orlandus Lassus', EMc, vi (1978), 170–81
H. Leuchtmann: 'Ariostos Stanza "Pensier dicea" in Lassos Vertonungen von 1569 und 1587', Musik in Bayern, xvii (1978), 61–7
P. Bergquist: 'The Poems of Orlando di Lasso's "Prophetiae Sibyllarum" and their Sources', JAMS, xxxii (1979), 516–38
G.R. Hoekstra: 'An Eight-Voice Parody of Lassus: An Introduction and the Complete Music of André Pevernage's "Bon jour mon coeur"', EMc, vii (1979), 367–77
K. Berger: 'Tonality and Atonality in the Prologue to Orlando di Lasso's Prophetiae Sibyllarum', MQ, lxvi (1980), 484–504
M. van Daalen: 'Der Utrechter Lasso-Codex aus der Bayerischen Hofkapelle in München', TVNM, xxx (1980), 85–112
H. Leuchtmann, ed.: Die Münchner Fürstenhochzeit von 1568: Dialoge (Munich, 1980)
H. Leuchtmann: 'Ein Porträt von Ferdinand de Lasso?', Musik in Bayern, xx (1980), 85–8
H. Hell and H.Leuchtmann: Orlando di Lasso: Musik der Renaissance am Münchner Fürstenhof (Wiesbaden, 1982)
J. Roche: Lassus (London, 1982)
C. Wearing: 'Orlandus Lassus (1532–1594) and the Munich Kapelle', EMc, x (1982), 147–53
H. Hell: 'Ist der Wiener Sibyllen-Codex wirklich ein Lasso-Autograph?', Musik in Bayern, xxviii (1984), 51–64
N. O'Regan: 'The Early Polychoral Music of Orlando di Lasso: New Light from Roman Sources', AcM, lvi (1984), 234–51
S. Schulze: Die Tonarten in Lassos 'Busspsalmen' mit einen Vergleich von Alexander Utendals und Jacob Reiners 'Busspsalmen' (Neuhausen-Stuttgart, 1984)
H. Hell: 'Ein unbekanntes Dies Irae von Orlando di Lasso', Musik in Bayern, xxxi (1985), 29–41
H. Leuchtmann: 'Ein neugefundener Lasso-Brief', Festschrift Rudolf Elvers zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. E. Hertrich and H. Schneider (Tutzing, 1985), 349–57
R. Orlich: Die Parodiemessen von Oralndo di Lasso (Munich, 1985)
D. Zagar: The Polyphonic Hymns of Orlando di Lasso: A Liturgical and Repertorial Study (diss., U. of Minnesota, 1985)
K. Berger: 'The Common and the Unusual Steps of Musica Ficta: A Background for the Gamut of Orlando di Lasso's "Prophetiae Sibyllarum"', RBM, xxxix–xl (1985–6), 61–73
P. Bergquist: 'Orlando di Lassos Nunc Dimittis-Vertonungen', Musik in Bayern, xxxiii (1986), 5–28
W. Boetticher: 'Ueber einige in Jüngerer Zeit hinzugewonnene Sätze Orlando di Lassos', RBM, xxxix (1985–6), 74–9
K. Forney: 'Orlando di Lasso's "Opus 1": the Making and Marketing of a Renaissance Music Book', ibid., 33–60
J. Haar: 'The Early Madrigals of Lassus', ibid., 17–32
H. Van Hulst: 'Lassus et ses éditeurs: Remarques à propos de deux lettres peu connues', ibid., 80–100
H. Leuchtmann: 'Tu traditora: Orlando di Lasso bearbeitet eine villanesca', Quaestiones in musica: Festschrift für Franz Krautwurst zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. F. Brusniak and H. Leuchtmann (Tutzing, 1989), 337–46
D. Cardamone and D.L.Jackson: 'Multiple Formes and Vertical Setting in Susato's First Edition of Lassus's "Opus 1"', Notes, xliv (1989–90), 7–24
J. Erb: Orlando di Lasso: A Guide to Research (New York, 1990)
M. Farahat: 'Villanescas of the Virtuosi: Lasso and the Commedia dell'arte', Performance Practice Review, iii (1990), 121–37

H. Leuchtmann: 'Zum Ordnungsprinzip in Lassos Magnum Opus Musicum', Musik in Bayern, xl (1990), 46–72
N. McGuinness: Orlando di Lasso's Motets in the 'Patrocinium Musices', vol.1 (1573) (diss., U. of California, Berkeley, 1990)
R. Bartoli: 'L'apprendistato italiano di Orlando di Lasso', Studi musicali, xx (1991), 235–65
P. Berquist: 'Why Did Orlando di Lasso not publish his Posthumous Motets?', Festschrift für Horst Leuchtmann zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. S. Hörner and B. Schmid (Tutzing, 1993), 13–25
I. Bossuyt: 'Lassos erste Jahre in München (1556–1559): eine "cosa non riuscita"?', ibid., 55–67
J. Erb: 'Zu Lassos "Laibacher" Magnificat', ibid., 127–34
J. Winemiller: 'Lasso, Albrecht V and the Figure of Job: Speculation on the History and Function of Lasso's Sacrae lectiones ex propheta Job and Vienna, Mus. ms. 18.744', JMR, xii (1993), 273–302
D. Crook: Orlando di Lasso's Imitation Magnificats for Counter-Reformation Munich (Princeton, 1994)
J. Haar: 'Lasso as Historicist: the Cantus Firmus Motets', Hearing the Motet: St Louis 1994, 265–85
N. O'Regan: 'G.P. da Palestrina, Orlandus Lassus and the Arciconfraternità del Sanctissimo Crocefisso in Rome', Palestrina, Lassus, Monteverdi: Duisberg 1994 (forthcoming)
Orlando di Lasso: Munich 1994
Orlando Lassus and his Time: Antwerp 1994 [Yearbook of the Alamire Foundation, i (1995)] [incl. D. Cardamone: 'Orlando di Lasso and Pro-French Factions in Rome', 23–47]
D. Melamed: 'Who Wrote Lassus's Most Famous Piece?', EMc, xxvi (1998), 6–26
P. Bergquist, ed.: Orlando di Lasso Studies (Cambridge, 1999)
J. Haar: 'Orlando di Lasso, Composer-Print Entrepreneur' (forthcoming)
J. Haar: 'A Wedding Mass by Lasso', JM (forthcoming)

JAMES HAAR

Last, James [Hans] (b Bremen, 17 April 1929). German composer and bandleader. An accomplished jazz bass player, James Last confected an easy-listening style in which almost any type of music could be reduced to a medley of soft pop dance tunes. After leading his own band and working as an arranger and record producer, in 1965 he perfected his formula with the album Non-Stop Dancing which linked together the melodies of 26 recent hit songs over a cheerful dance rhythm. The party atmosphere was cemented by the addition of laughter, cheers and clapping between each section, and the success of this album led Last and his orchestra to undertake annual European tours for a number of years. Further volumes of Non-Stop Dancing followed as well as albums based on themes, such as Classics Up To Date, In South America and James Last plays Andrew Lloyd Webber. Guest artists on Last's recordings included pianist Richard Clayderman and singer Astrud Gilberto. As a composer, Last wrote Fool (recorded by Elvis Presley), Happy Heart (recorded by Andy Williams), Games That Lovers Play (Eine Ganze Nacht), recorded by Eddie Fisher and The Seduction, the theme from the 1980 film American Gigolo.

DAVE LAING

Lasus [Lasos] of Hermione (b Hermione [now Kastri], Argolis; *fl c*530–20 BCE). Greek lyric poet and the earliest music theorist. According to Herodotus (vii.6.3), Lasus was at Athens at some time between 527 and 514 BCE. A brief fragment of the text of one of his compositions has survived, the beginning of a hymn to Demeter (Edmonds, frag.1). During his lifetime he was famous chiefly as a composer of dithyrambs; Aristophanes (Wasps, 1410) referred to a competition between him and Simonides, and in the late classical period dithyrambs were spuriously attributed to him. By tradition he was one of the teachers of PINDAR.

The original (wrongly emended) text of the Byzantine Suda and a brief reference by Pseudo-Plutarch (On Music, 1141c) credit him with a radical innovation: the introduction of dithyrambic rhythm and tempo (agōgē, actually a broader concept; see Privitera, p.75n.) into other forms of composition. Music sung to the kithara would thus have become more like music sung to aulos accompaniment: for example, the diatonic whole tone may have been subdivided into microtones. Lasus cannot, however, be termed a forerunner of the dithyrambists associated with the 'new music' movement; it is significant that the fragment of the Cheiron of PHERECRATES preserved by Pseudo-Plutarch (On Music, 1141d–42a) does not list him among the ravishers of Mousikē.

Aristotle's famous pupil ARISTOXENUS wrote in the Harmonics (i.3; da Rios, p.7) that Lasus did research in acoustics, and three centuries later THEON OF SMYRNA (Hiller, p.59) made a similar reference, associating him with Pythagorean inquiry. The link here between practice and theory, if genuine, is unusual.

Research has broadly confirmed the Suda's statement that Lasus 'was the first to write a treatise On Music'. His ideas and gnomic sayings were considered subtle and profound at an early period – Aristophanes parodied one of them in the Wasps (1411) – and he was sometimes numbered among the Seven Sages. In the 5th century CE Martianus Capella (On the Marriage of Philology and Mercury, ix.936) claimed that originally (primo) Lasus distinguished the harmonic, rhythmic and metrical aspects of music; his claim echoes a tradition believed to go back through ARISTIDES QUINTILIANUS and perhaps MARCUS TERENTIUS VARRO to an original source. From the 5th century BCE Lasus's theories were evidently heeded and remembered, whether or not he ever wrote them down.

WRITINGS

J.M. Edmonds, ed. and trans.: Lyra graeca, ii (London and Cambridge, MA, 1924, 2/1928/R), 222ff
D.L. Page, ed.: Poetae melici graeci (Oxford, 1962), 364ff
D.A. Campbell, ed. and trans.: Greek Lyric, iii (Cambridge, MA, and London, 1991), 296–311

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Abert: 'Lasos (2)', Paulys Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Altertumswissenschaft, xii/1 (Stuttgart, 1924), 887–8
A.W. Pickard-Cambridge: Dithyramb, Tragedy and Comedy (Oxford, 1927, rev. 2/1962 by T.B.L. Webster), 12ff, 23–4
F. Lasserre, ed.: Plutarque: De la musique (Olten, 1954), 34ff
L. Richter: Zur Wissenschaftslehre von der Musik bei Platon und Aristoteles (Berlin, 1961), 14–15
G.A. Privitera: Laso di Ermione nella cultura ateniese e nella tradizione storiografica (Rome, 1965); reviewed by E.K. Borthwick, Classical Review, new ser., xvii (1967), 146–7
G. Wille: Musica romana (Amsterdam, 1967), 645–6
G.F. Brussich: 'Laso d'Ermione, testimonianze e frammenti', Quaderni triestini per il lessico della lirica corale greca, iii (1975–6), 83–135
G. Comotti: 'Pitagora, Ippaso, Laso e il metodo sperimentale', Harmonia mundi: musica e filosofia nell'antichità: Rome 1989, 20–29

WARREN ANDERSON/THOMAS J. MATHIESEN

László, Alexander [Sándor] (b Budapest, 22 Nov 1895; d Los Angeles, 17 Nov 1970). Hungarian pianist, composer and conductor. He studied the piano and composition at the National Hungarian Royal Academy of Music. In 1915 he moved to Germany, made successful European concert tours as a pianist and began composing dance-pantomimes. He directed the Dresden PO on a tour of Sweden in 1921. Between 1920 and 22 he recorded 31 'Welte-Mignon' player piano rolls, mainly featuring transcriptions of Romantic orchestral works. From 1925 to 1927 he devoted his energies to the colour-organ (see COLOUR AND MUSIC, §3 and FARBLICHTMUSIK), for which he became internationally known. He was director of the abstract film Pacific 231, made in 1928, and with the coming of sound films in that year became a conductor in studios as well as teaching at the German School of Theatre and Film in Munich. In 1933, when the National Socialists took power in Germany, being half Jewish by birth, he returned to Budapest, where he became production manager at the Synchron film studios; thereafter he composed numerous scores for both feature films and documentaries.

In 1938 he emigrated to the United States. In New York he made further developments in music for colour-organ and gave a number of lectures; he also taught at the New York College of Music, made appearances as a pianist and resumed his career as a composer (his Improvisations on 'Oh Susanna' of 1940 enjoyed popular success). From 1943 onwards he worked in Hollywood as a conductor and composer of film scores (writing 59 by 1963), while also composing for television in the 1950s and later. His music for the cinema – mostly for low-budget productions – encompasses every genre: melodrama (The Great Flamarion, 1945), crime (Accomplice, 1946), children's entertainment (Banjo, 1947), educational (The Narcotics Story, 1958), adventure, science fiction and horror. Contemporary film reviews frequently comment on the excellence of his scores. On television he was best known for the music to the series 'My Little Margie'.

László's versatility as a musician and the melodious, programmatic style of his writing revealed an affinity with cinema even before 1943. With his knowledge and experience of music and film, belonged to that group of émigré musicians who adapted their multifarious skills to the opportunities they encountered. As a result they suffered few problems of acculturation in their exile.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Das Märchen (dance-pantomime), 1916; Die schöne O-Sang (dance-pantomime), 1919; Musik zu Shakespeare's ein Sommernachtstraum, op.12, 1926; The Pirate's Opera (J. Gay and L. Regehr), 1966; Wanted: Sexperts and Serpents for our Garden of Maidens (musical), 1968

Orch: 4D-122, pf conc., op.17, 1940; Improvisations on 'Oh Susanna', op.16, 1940, arr. pf; Mechanized Force, op.18, 1941, arr. pf; Hollywood Conc., pf, orch (1944, 1950); Sonata quasi conc., pf, orch, before 1951 [after Mozart and Grieg]; Mana Hawaii, 1960; The World of Century Twentyfirst: a Musical Panorama, 1962; Pacific Triptych, 1963; Quorum eroticum, amateur orch, 1967; Roulette hématologique, 1969

Film, TV: Boykott (dir. R. Land), 1930; Westfront 1918 (dir. G.W. Pabst), 1930; Der bebende Berg (dir. H. Beck-Gaden and L. Nusser), 1931; My Little Margie, 1952–5; This is your Life, 1952–61; Waterfront, 1954–6; Structural Music, 38 vols. (1950–) [collection of cinema music]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Jewanski: 'Die Farblichtmusik Alexander Lászlós', Zeitschrift für Kunstgeschichte, lx/1 (1997), 12–43

J. Jewanski: '"Your taste and mine are meeting each other ...": Künstlerische und biografische Parallelen zwischen László Moholy-Nagy und Alexander László', Über Moholy-Nagy: Bielefeld 1995, ed. G. Jäger and G. Wessing (Bielefeld, 1997), 215–24

J. Jewanski: 'Auf der Suche nach dem Gesamtkunstwerk: der Pianist Alexander László und die Farblichtmusik', Piano News, i/2 (1998), 28–32

J. Jewanski: '"Ich brauche mich mit 'Geschäften' nicht mehr zu befassen, nur mit Kunst": Alexander László und die Weiterentwicklung seiner Farblichtmusik im amerikanischen Exil', Exilforschung, xvi (1998), 194–228

J. Jewanski: 'Wie ein Komet am Sternenkimmel: die Erstaufführung von Alexander Láslós Farblichtmusik am 16. Juni 1925', Grenzgänge–Übergänge: Musikwissenschaft im Dialog: DVSM no.13: Frankfurt 1998

JÖRG JEWANSKI

László, Ferenc [Francisc] (b Cluj [now Cluj-Napoca], 8 May 1937). Hungarian-Romanian music critic and flautist. He graduated from the Academy of Music in Cluj in 1959 and then became flautist in the Sibiu State Philharmonic (1959–65), chamber music instructor at the Cluj Music School (1966–70), senior assistant and later associate professor in the chamber music department of the Bucharest Academy of Music (1970–91), and associate professor and later professor of chamber music and organology at the Academy of Music in Cluj-Napoca (1970–91). He gave up his playing career in the 1970s, and began to concentrate more on journalism and musicology. A self-taught musicologist, he has written extensive criticism and numerous studies, notably on the music of Bartók, in both Romanian and Hungarian. He is the founding president of the Romanian Mozart Society and the artistic director of the Cluj Mozart Festival.

WRITINGS

'Johann Sebastian Bach: Musikalisches Opfer', Din activitatea cercurilor ştiinţifice ale Conservatorului Gh. Dima din Cluj (Cluj, 1957), 17–32

ed.: Bartók-könyv 1970–1971 [Bartók book] (Bucharest, 1971)

'Untersuchungen zum "zweiten" Opus 1, Nr. 1', MJb 1971–2, 149–56

'Contribuţii la studiul formei de sonată la Mozart', Studii de muzicologie, ix (1973), 481–504

ed.: Bartók-dolgozatok [Bartók papers] (Bucharest, 1974) [incl. 'Széljegyzetek egy Bartók-kézirat margójára' [Notes on a Bartók MS], 29–39; summaries in Eng., Ger.]

ed.: 99 Bartók-levél [99 letters of Bartók] (Bucharest, 1974)

'Geneza trioului cu pian la Mozart' [The genesis of Mozart's piano trios], Studii de muzicologie, x (1974), 302–10

ed.: Béla Bartók şi muzica românească [Bartók and Romanian music] (Bucharest, 1976)

Zenei ügyelet: publicisztikai írások 1971–1974 [Musical watch: journalistic writings] (Bucharest, 1976)

ed.: Béla Bartók: scrisori [Letters] (Bucharest, 1976–7)

Bartók Béla: tanulmányok és tanúságok [Bartók: studies and testimonies] (Bucharest, 1980)

'Nochmals über die Entstehungsgeschichte der rumänischen Folkloresammlung von Maramuresch', SMH, xxiii (1981), 329–51

'Viaţa lui Philipp Caudella' [Caudella's life], Studii de muzicologie, xvi (1981), 177–202

ed.: Bartók-dolgozatok 1981 [Bartók papers] (Budapest, 1982)

A százegyedik év: Bartókrol, Enescuról, Kodályról [The 101st year: on Bartók, Enescu and Kodály] (Bucharest, 1984)

ed.: Utunk Kodályhoz [Our way to Kodály] (Bucharest, 1984)

'Muzica românească a lui Béla Bartók' [The Romanian music of Béla Bartók], Studii de muzicologie, xix (1985), 39–73

'Béla Bartóks neun Violinduos über rumänische Volksweisen', Sandor Veress: Festschrift, ed. A. Traub (Berlin, 1986), 129–56

Zenén innen, zenén túl: publicsztikai írások [Before music, beyond music: journalistic writings] (Bucharest, 1987)

Gen, specie şi formă în muzica de flaut a lui J.S. Bach [Genre, species and form in J.S. Bach's flute music] (Bucharest, 1989)

Klavír és koboz: tények, értelmezések és föltevések Liszt Ferenc 1846–47-es hangversenyútjával kapcsolatban [Piano and Cobsa: facts, interpretations and suppositions on Liszt's 1846–7 concert tour] (Bucharest, 1989)

'Walachische Melodie: o melodie populară românească de joc în creaţia lui Franz Liszt' [A Romanian folk dance melody in Liszt's works], Muzica, ii/2 (1991), 125–46

Béla Bartók şi lumea nostră: aşa cum a fost [Bartók and our world, such as it was] (Cluj-Napoca, 1995)

'Rumänische Stilelemente in Bartóks Musik: Fakten und Deutungen', SMH, xxxvi (1995), 413–28

ed.: Zenetudományi írások [Musicological writings] (Bucharest, forthcoming)

ANDRÁS BENKŐ/R

László [Singer], Zsigmond (b Nagytétény, 23 May 1893; d Budapest, 28 July 1981). Hungarian musicologist. He studied literature at the University of Leipzig (1913–14), continuing at the University of Vienna, and took the doctorate in 1917 at the Pétér Pázmány University of Sciences, Budapest. Since its founding in 1919, László was a member of the Budapest Choral and Orchestral Society, eventually becoming its administrative director. In 1943 he founded the Goldmark Music School and served as its principal (1945–8). In 1939, in response to new and more restrictive anti-Semitic legislation in Hungary that banned Jewish performers from the legitimate stage, he initiated the Arts Programmes of the National Hungarian Jewish Cultural Society, which became the only performing venue for such musicians as Annie Fischer and Janos Starker. The performances were noted in Budapest for their artistic excellence; they continued until the Nazi invasion of Hungary in March 1944. In 1945 László was one of the founders of the Free Union of Hungarian Musicians. He was a prolific translator of song texts from several languages and contributed librettos to vocal works by Hungarian composers, including the text of Szelényi's Spartacus.

László's research concerned the prosody of Hungarian poetry and music from the Middle Ages to the 20th century, eventually broadening his inquiry to the study of the relationship of rhyme, metre and text setting throughout Western European music and literature. He published monographs on Liszt's early years and on the relationship of Liszt and Russian musicians of the 19th century, and iconographies of Erkel and Liszt.

WRITINGS

'Nyelvmelódia és hangminőség: Sievers és Rutz módszerei' [The relationship of speech melody and vocal quality: the methods of Sievers and Rutz], Egyetemes philologiai közlöny, xxxix/1 (1915), 7–19

A kuruc balladák [The Kuruts ballads] (Budapest, 1917)

Liszt Ferenc és az orosz zene [Liszt and Russian music] (Budapest, 1955, 2/1986)

Erkel Ferenc élete képekben [Erkel's life in pictures] (Budapest, 1956, 2/1961; Russ. trans., 1964)

'Vers és dallam: Szabolcsi Bence tanulmányai' [Verse and melody: the essays of Szabolcsi], Muzsika, ii/10 (1959), 43–4

Ritmus és dallam: a magyar vers és ének prozódiája [Rhythm and melody: the prosody of Hungarian verse and song] (Budapest, 1961)

Az ifjú Liszt, 1811–1839 [Liszt's early years] (Budapest, 1962)

'Der Zusammenhang von Sprache und musikalischer Intonation als Voraussetzung der Rezeption', Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Martin-Luther-Universität Halle-Wittenberg: gesellschafts- und sprachwissenschaftliche Reihe, xii (1963), 571–8

'A prozódiától a dramaturgiáig: Bartók Béla' [From prosody to dramaturgy], Magyar zene, iv/4 (1964), 368–94

Franz Liszt: sein Leben in Bildern (Kassel, 1967; Eng. trans., 1968; Fr. trans., 1978; Hung. orig., 1978)

'Major Ervin 1901–1967', Magyar zene, vii/5 (1967), 533–4

'Ritmus és dallam: válasz bírálóimnak' [Rhythm and melody: a response to my critics], Magyar zene, viii/3 (1968), 237–54

A rím varázsa [The magic of rhyme] (Budapest, 1972)

'Szó és ének Kodály dallamvilágában' [Words and song in Kodály's melodies], Kodály Zoltán emlékére, ed. F. Bónis (Budapest, 1977), 51–6

'Velem nem történt semmi …: töredékek egy félbenmaradt életrajzból' [Nothing happened to me …: fragments from an abandoned memoir], Magyar Izraeliták Országos Képviselete Évkönyv, ed. S. Scheiber (Budapest, 1982), 309–12

Költészet és zeneiség: prozódiai tanulmányok [Poetry and musicality: essays in prosody] (Budapest, 1985)

ed. M. Horák: 'Ősi hittel, becsülettel a hazáért!': OMIKE – Országos Magyar Izraelita Közművelődési Egyesület 1909–1944 ['With ancient faith and rectitude for the country!': OMIKE – the National Hungarian Jewish Cultural Society] (Budapest, 1998)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Scheiber: 'László Zsigmond halálára' [On László's death], Élet és irodalom (8 Aug 1981)

I. Raics: 'László Zsigmond 1893–1981', Magyar Izraeliták Országos Képviselete Évkönyv, ed. S. Scheiber (Budapest, 1982), 346–8

ANDRÉ BALOG

Lateiner, Jacob (b Havana, 31 May 1928). American pianist. From 1934 to 1940 he studied in Havana with Jascha Fischermann, and in 1940 he went to the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia and studied with Isabelle Vengerova. He also worked in the chamber music classes of Primrose and Piatigorsky. He made his début in 1945 with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Ormandy, as winner of the Philadelphia Youth Competition. In 1947 he was engaged by Koussevitzky for the Tanglewood Summer Festival and he made his New York recital début the following year. By this time he had already made many appearances in the USA and had toured Australia. After service in the US army he continued his career and from 1954 he played throughout the USA and made a number of appearances in Europe. Lateiner has been associated particularly with Beethoven (on whom he has taught courses and lectured) and with contemporary American music. In 1967 he gave, with the Boston SO under Leinsdorf, the first performance of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto (which he had commissioned) and in 1968 of Sessions's Third Piano Sonata. He frequently played and recorded chamber music with Heifetz and Piatigorsky. From 1963 to 1970 he taught at the Mannes College, and in 1966 he joined the faculty of the Juilliard School of Music.

RONALD KINLOCH ANDERSON/R

Latere, Petit Jean de. See DE LATRE, PETIT JEAN.

Lates, James (b ? *c*1740; d Oxford, 21 Nov 1777). English composer and violinist. He was a son of David Francisco Lates, a Hebrew scholar who taught modern languages at Oxford University. According to Sainsbury, he studied in Italy and is described by Lewis as 'the first Oxford Jewish composer'. The local newspaper reported his marriage on 29 October 1768 to Miss Joanna Day, 'a Lady of exceeding good Accomplishments, with a very handsome Fortune'. He played in the Holywell Music Room orchestra, probably as principal second violin, and in other concerts in the vicinity of Oxford (including Henley and Banbury) from the late 1750s until his death, and was connected with the Duke of Marlborough's musical establishment at Blenheim. An early appearance in 1757 at a benefit concert and ball for Miss Lates (probably a sister) in Abingdon featured 'Master Lates' playing first violin and a solo; by 1761 he was referred to, again performing as first violin and soloist in a benefit concert at Henley, as 'Mr. Lates, Junior, from Oxford'. His earliest known works, the op.1 violin duets, have a rhythmic life rare in his more galant later music, even the flute duets of op.2. In the op.3 violin solos there is occasional Baroque-style instrumental figuration within a primarily galant idiom; in spite of pallid slow movements, a feature of nearly all Lates's music, these are among the most interesting English violin solos of the period. The op.4 trio sonatas, each in three movements, are marked by their leisurely, languishing style of galant melody; the writing is generally homophonic, although the single movement marked 'Fuga' (in Sonata III) maintains a stately contrapuntal style. The op.5 sonatas, dedicated to the Duke of Marlborough, 'for whose private amusement they were principally composed' (according to the dedication), are for the rare combination in English music of violin, cello and basso continuo, no doubt following the example of C.F. Abel's op.9 (*c*1770); they are each in two movements, the first usually in a moderate tempo, the second a minuet (a movement form favoured by Lates). Lates's music is old-fashioned for its date, but there is a gentle, relaxed charm to his melodic lines, and a sureness of general technique, which make his opp.4 and 5 among the most interesting products of the late flowering of the trio sonata in England.

Lates's name is sometimes given as John James, which may be due to confusion with his son of that name. Another son, Charles (1771–*c*1810), was a professional pianist and organist, and published keyboard music and songs; in 1793, when he graduated BMus at Oxford, he was organist of Gainsborough, Lincs.

WORKS

all published in London

op.
1	Six Duets, 2 vn (1761)
2	Six Duets, 2 fl/vn (1761)
3	Six Solos, vn, bc (1764)
4	Six Sonatas, 2 vn, bc or fl, vn, bc (*c*1768)
5	Six Trios, vn, vc, bc (1774)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SainsburyD
J.H. Mee: The Oldest Music Room in Europe (London, 1911)
S.J. Sadie: British Chamber Music, 1720–1790 (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1958)
S. Sadie: 'Music in the Home II', Music in Britain: the Eighteenth Century, ed. H.D. Johnstone and R. Fiske (Oxford, 1990), 313–54
D.M. Lewis: The Jews of Oxford (Oxford, 1992)
R. Stowell, ed.: The Cambridge Companion to the Violin (Cambridge, 1992)

STANLEY SADIE/SUSAN WOLLENBERG

Latham-Koenig, Jan (b London, 15 Dec 1953). English conductor and pianist. He studied conducting at the RCM with Norman Del Mar, and piano with Kendall Taylor and Lamar Crowson. He appeared as a pianist as well as conductor up to 1981, but then concentrated almost exclusively on conducting. He founded the Koenig Ensemble in 1976 as an orchestra of flexible size and eclectic repertory, and has been a guest conductor with major London and regional orchestras. He has also conducted widely abroad and was a member of the Cantiere Internazionale d'Arte at Montepulciano from 1981 to 1986. An admired opera conductor, he made his débuts with the ENO in 1987 (Tosca), the Royal Opera in 1985 (La bohème) and the Vienna Staatsoper in 1988 (Macbeth), gave the premières of Bussotti's L'ispirazione (Florence) and Fedra (Rome), both in 1988, and broadcast a cycle of Weill operas and cantatas on WDR. Several of these have appeared on disc, including Mahagonny, Happy End and Der Silbersee, in addition to Leoncavallo's La bohème (which he conducted at Venice in 1990), Donizetti's Elisabetta and Poliuto and Nørgård's opera-ballet Siddhartha. From 1989 to 1992 Latham-Koenig was musical director of the Orquestra Clássica do Porto, which he formed at the instigation of the Portuguese government. In 1997 he was appointed musical director of both the Opéra du Rhin, Strasbourg, and of the Strasbourg PO.

NOËL GOODWIN

Latilla, Gaetano (b Bari, 12 Jan 1711; d Naples, 15 Jan 1788). Italian composer. As a boy he sang in the choir of Bari Cathedral. He then moved to Naples where, in March 1726, he enrolled as a student in the Conservatorio di S Maria di Loreto. The chief music masters there were Francesco Mancini and Giovanni Veneziano, one of whom must have been responsible for Latilla's training during his late adolescence. Latilla began his professional career in 1732 by composing a comic opera, Li marite a forza, for the Teatro dei Fiorentini in Naples, and he wrote other comic operas for that theatre during the next five years.

His first successes outside Naples occurred around 1738 when he obtained commissions for comic operas at several Roman theatres and for a serious opera, Demofoonte, at the S Giovanni Grisostomo in Venice. Gismondo (as La finta cameriera) and Madama Ciana were performed in opera houses throughout Italy, helping to establish the notion of full-length comic opera outside the circle of its Neapolitan dialect origins. These works set the seal on his popularity, and from then until about 1755 he was constantly in demand as an opera composer. He was assistant maestro at the Roman basilica S Maria Maggiore, where he worked from 31 December 1738 until April 1741. The libretto for Siroe names him as a 'virtuoso' to the Duke of York. On 14 December 1753 he was engaged as maestro di coro at the Venetian Ospedale della Pietà; for reasons unspecified in the documents this appointment was terminated on 14 March 1766. In March 1762 he was also made assistant maestro at S Marco under Galuppi; he was still in this post in 1770 when Charles Burney met him in Venice and obtained much useful information from him on the history and constitution of the Venetian conservatories. Burney remarked that he seemed 'in great indigence', and in fact his popularity among opera audiences had dwindled by this time. Later, Burney reported a rumour that Latilla finally fell foul of the Venetian state authorities and was thrown into prison there. He had left Venice and was in Naples again by 1774, where he spent the last years of his life writing a few compositions and teaching. One of his composition pupils during this period was Thomas Attwood, who later took lessons from Mozart in Vienna.

Because Latilla's official posts were all with religious or charitable foundations, it is likely that he composed a quantity of church music. Few such works have survived. He composed some religious music while serving at the Pietà, where there were several gifted female solo singers among the pupils; Latilla's surviving Miserere (GB-Lbl), while Neapolitan in many of its features, contains the kind of highly elaborate vocal writing that was specially suited to these singers. No-one has yet established what music he wrote for S Maria Maggiore or S Marco. His chief extant instrumental compositions are six quartets published in London. Only six of his three-act operas and two of his short operas (both adaptations of larger works) remain intact. The earliest, the comic opera Angelica ed Orlando of 1735, dates from the same period as the operas of his almost exact contemporary Pergolesi, though its music bears less resemblance to Pergolesi's than to that of another Neapolitan, Leonardo Leo. Over the following decades Latilla changed his style considerably to conform with new tastes. The lyrical items of his heroic opera Antigono of 1775, the last of his compositions that has survived, are characterized by longer melodic lines and heavier accompaniments than those of his earlier works, and the racier and less lilting style he adopted seems to have been an attempt to come to terms with the latest music of Niccolò Piccinni, Antonio Sacchini and others among the new generation of Neapolitan composers.

WORKS

STAGE

music lost unless otherwise stated

Li marite a forza (comic opera, 3, B. Saddumene), Naples, Fiorentini, spr. 1732
L'Ottavio (commedia per musica, 3, G.A. Federico), Naples, Fiorentini, wint. 1733
Gl'Ingannati (commedia per musica, 3, Federico), Naples, Fiorentini, aut. 1734
Angelica ed Orlando (commedia per musica, 3, F.A. Tullio, after L. Ariosto), Naples, Fiorentini, aut. 1735, GB-Lbl
Lo sposo senza moglie (I due supposti conti) (commedia per musica, 3, C. Palma), Naples, Nuovo, aut. 1736
Temistocle (dramma giocoso, 3, P. Metastasio), Rome, Tor di Nona, carn. 1737, A-Wgm
Gismondo (commedia per musica, 3, Federico), Naples, Fiorentini, sum. 1737; rev. as La finta cameriera (3, G. Barlocci), Rome, Valle, spr. 1738, B-Bc, I-Fc; rev. as Don Calascione (3), London, King's, 21 Jan 1749, Favourite Songs (London, 1749); rev. as La finta cameriera (int, 2), Naples, Nuovo, aut. 1745, B-Bc; Paris, Opéra, 1752, F-Po; rev. as La giardiniera contessa (1), B-Bc
Demofoonte (dramma per musica, 3, Metastasio), Venice, S Giovanni Grisostomo, carn. 1738
Polipodio e Rocchetta (int, 2), Rome, Argentina, carn. 1738
Madama Ciana (commedia per musica, 3, Barlocci), Rome, Pallacorda, Feb 1738; rev. as L'ambizione delusa, Turin, 1747; rev. as Gli artigiani arricchiti (int, 2), Paris, Opéra, 25 Sept 1753, F-Pn, Po
Romolo (dramma per musica, 3), Rome, Delle Dame, carn. 1739, attrib. Latilla and Terradellas, extracts D-Dl, I-BGi
Siroe (dramma per musica, 3, Metastasio), Rome, Delle Dame, carn. 1740, A-Wgm
Alceste in Ebuda (dramma per musica, 3, A. Trabucco), Naples, S Carlo, 20 Jan 1741
La vendetta generosa (dramma per musica, 3), Naples, Fiorentini, aut. 1742
Zenobia (dramma per musica, 3, Metastasio), Turin, Regio, carn. 1742, arias D-Dl and I-Nc
La gara per la gloria (divertimento teatrale, 3, B. Vitturi), Venice, S Moisè, carn. 1744
Amare e fingere (dramma per musica, 3), Naples, Nuovo, carn. 1745
Il concerto (melodramma per musica, 3, P. Trinchera), Naples, Nuovo, spr. 1746
Catone in Utica (dramma per musica, 3, Metastasio), Rome, Capranica, carn. 1747
Il vecchio amante (dramma per musica, 3, Barlocci), Turin, Carignano, carn. 1747; also as La commedia in commedia
Adriano in Siria (dramma per musica, 3, Metastasio), Naples, S Carlo, 19 Dec 1747, aria I-Gl
Il barone di Vignalunga (commedia per musica, 3, A. Palomba), Naples, Nuovo, 1747
Ciascheduno ha il suo negozio (dramma per musica), Madrid, Buen Retiro, 1747
La Celia (commedia per musica, 3, Palomba, Naples, Fiorentini, aut. 1749
Amore in Tarantola (dramma per musica, 3, Abate Vaccina), Venice, S Moisè, aut. 1750
[?] L'astuzia felice (dramma per musica, 3, C. Goldoni), Turin, Carignano, spr. 1750; or *c*1777
Il giuoco de' matti (commedia per musica, 3, Palomba), Naples, Nuovo, aut. 1750
La Maestra (commedia per musica, 3, Palomba), Naples, Fiorentini, carn. 1751, rev., with G. Cocchi and G. Cordella, of Cocchi's La maestra, 1747
L'opera in prova alla moda (dramma per musica, 3, G. Fiorini), Venice, S Moisè, carn. 1751
Urganostocar ('tragedia tragichissimama di lieto fine', 3, Fiorini), Venice, S Moisè, carn. 1751, perf. with L'opera in prova alla moda
La pastorella al soglio (dramma per musica, 3, G.C. Pagani), Venice, S Moisè, Ascension 1751, D-Wa
Griselda (dramma per musica, 3, A. Zeno), Venice, S Cassiano, aut. 1751, arias Dl
Gl'impostori (dramma per musica, 3), Venice, S Moisè, aut. 1751
L'isola d'amore (commedia in musica, 3, A. Rigo), Venice, S Moisè, carn. 1752
Olimpiade (dramma per musica, 3, Metastasio), Venice, S Cassiano, aut. 1752, arias Dl
Alessandro nell'Indie (dramma per musica, 3, Metastasio), Venice, S Cassiano, carn. 1753, collabs. unknown
Antigona (dramma per musica, 3, G. Roccaforte), Modena, Corte, carn. 1753
Il protettor del poeta (int, 2, G. Puccinelli), Rome, Valle, carn. 1754
Venceslao (dramma per musica, ?3, Zeno), Barcelona, 1754
La finta sposa (dramma per musica, 3), Bologna, Formagliari, carn. 1755
Tito Manlio (dramma per musica, 3, Roccaforte), Rome, Capranica, carn. 1755, P-La
Ezio (dramma per musica, 3, Metastasio), Naples, S Carlo, 10 July 1758, La, US-CA
L'amore artigiano (dramma per musica, 3, Goldoni), Venice, S Angelo, carn. 1761, I-Tco
Merope (dramma per musica, 3, Zeno), Venice, S Benedetto, carn. 1763, BGi
La buona figliuola supposta vedova (dramma comico per musica, 3, A. Bianchi), Venice, S Cassiano, carn. 1766
Gl'inganni amorosi (commedia per musica, 3, P. Mililotti), Naples, Fiorentini, carn. 1774
Il maritato fra le disgrazie (commedia per musica, 3, G. Palomba), Naples, Fiorentini, aut. 1774
Antigono (dramma per musica, 3, Metastasio), Naples, S Carlo, 13 Aug 1775, Nc, P-La
I sposi incogniti (commedia per musica, 3, Mililotti), Naples, Nuovo, 1779

SACRED VOCAL

music lost unless otherwise stated

L'immaculata concezione della Santissima Vergine (componimento sacro), Genoa, Oratorio S Filippo Neri, 1739
Sanctorum Patrum in Abrahae sinu expectatio (cant., 2), Venice, Pietà, 1755
Carmina Sacra, Venice, Pietà, 1756
Judith triumphans (orat), Venice, Pietà, 1757
Modulamina sacra (motet), Venice, Pietà, 1760
Miserere, E♭, SATB, 2 hn, str, bc, Venice, Pietà, *c*1760, GB-Lbl
Sacra Esther historia (orat), Venice, 14 Sept 1761
La pietà essultante nel santissimo natale, Venice, Pietà, 25 Dec 1761
La colpa abbattuta (componimento sacro), Palermo, Oratorio S Filippo Neri
Omnipotenza e misericordia divina [characters Omnipotenza, Umanità, Misericordia, Lucifero] (orat), 4vv, D-MÜs
Messa in pastorale, 2vv, org, I-Nc
Salve regina, SA, str, bc, GB-Lbl
Bonum est confiteri (motet)
Matutino, dum surgit (cant.), cited by Mondolfi
Motets ?written for Pietà, Venice, all in I-Vc: Aurum voluptas, per Ellena, S, bc; Ave Regina, per Ellena, S, bc; Ave Regina, per Gregoria, A, bc; Furen furens hostis, per Josepha, S, bc; Mormorate, per Ellena, S, bc; Non timeo, per Josepha, S, bc; Regina celi, per Ellena, S, bc; Regina celi, per Iseppa, S, bc; Regina celi, per Marina, S, bc; Surge aurora luminosa, per Ellena, S, bc; Ut errant, per Josepha, S, bc

OTHER WORKS

Componimento per musica da cantarsi nel giorno natalizio di Maria Amalia Walburga, Rome, 1738
Componimento per musica da cantarsi nel giorno natalizio di Carlo Borbone, Rome, 1739
Works in Solfèges d'Italie . . . composés par Leo, Durante, Scarlatti, Hasse (Paris, 1772)
Various arias and ensembles, vv, insts, B-Bc, D-Bsb, GB-Lbl, I-Gl, US-Wc
6 Quartettos, 2 vn, va, vc obbl (London, n.d.)
Trio, fl, vn, bc, I-Gl
Sinfonia, 2 vn, 2 ob, 2 hn, bc, B-Bc
Sinfonia à 8, D, D-Bsb
Sinfonia, G, Bsb

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BurneyH; BurneyFl; Grove5 (A. Loewenberg); FlorimoN; MGG1 (A. Mondolfi)

G.G. Ferrari: Aneddoti piacevoli e interessanti occorsi nella vita di G.G.F. da Roveredo (London, 1830); ed. S. di Giacomo (Milan, 1929)

T. Wiel: I teatri musicali veneziani del Settecento (Venice, 1897/R)

M. Bellucci La Salandra: 'Saggio cronologico delle opere teatrali di Gaetano Latilla', Japigia [Bari], v (1935), 310

T. Walker: 'Orazio: the History of a Pasticcio', MQ, xxxviii (1952), 369–83

D. Arnold: 'Orphans and Ladies: the Venetian Conservatories (1680–1790)', PRMA, lxxxix (1962–3), 31–47, esp. 46

S.H. Hansell: 'Sacred Music at the Incurabili in Venice at the Time of J.A. Hasse, II', JAMS, xxiii (1970), 505–21

G. Ellero: 'Origini e sviluppo storico della musica nei quattro grandi ospedali veneziani', NRMI, xiii (1979), 160–67

S. Mamy: L'influence des chanteurs napolitains sur l'evolution de l'opéra baroque tardif vénitien au théâtre San Giovanni Grisostomo de Venise (1701–1755) (diss., U. of Paris, 1983)

M. Marx-Weber: 'Neapolitanische und Venezianische Miserere-Vertonungen des 18. und frühen 19. Jahrhunderts', AMf, xliii (1986), 136–63

B.D. Mackenzie: The Creation of a Genre: Comic Opera's Dissemination in Italy in the 1740s (diss., U. of Michigan, 1993)

MICHAEL F. ROBINSON/DALE E. MONSON

Latin America. Term applied to those areas of Central and South America where Spanish, Portuguese and French are spoken. The countries constituting Latin America and the Caribbean present cultural and musical traits mainly derived from their tri-ethnic cultural heritage. The expression of that heritage, however, is not homogeneous in the various countries and regions, but is dependent on various factors, such as the ethno-history of a specific country and the dynamics of its cultural history in contemporary times. Thus, in a number of cases, one strain of that heritage has predominated over the other two. In fact, many parts of what is called Latin America are virtually devoid of any Latin cultural elements. Until recently, some lowland Amerindian cultures, for example, and some Amerindian groups of the Andean highlands and Central America had remained relatively untouched by European or mestizo traditions. In other cases the prevailing cultural influences have been more sub-Saharan African than European. Thus the study of folk and traditional music in individual countries or territories is bound to be somewhat artificial, although there are common cultural traits in very large geographical areas and among ethnic groups with similar historical developments.

The systematic search for origins along the lines of the tri-ethnic heritage in Latin American and Caribbean musical expressions has had dubious benefit in relation to the configuration of contemporary societies. The general tendency in Europe and North America to view Latin America as a monolithic cultural area has often resulted in simplistic and reductionist generalizations of traditional musics of Latin America. The actual diversity of the musics of the Latin American continent has become clearer since the 1960s as a result of more extensive field research carried out by scholars from Latin America, Europe and North America. And yet, for some areas, not enough empirical knowledge of the vast music corpora of the continent has been accumulated to allow meaningful cross-cultural comparisons among music cultures that share a common ethno-history but have developed different expressions, as, for example, in the case of Afro-Caribbean communities of Cuba, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, Western Colombia and north-eastern Brazil. One could argue that the prominent social stratification which typifies Latin America's social organization elucidates to a large extent musical expressions that function as symbols of class identity. This stratification provides the keystone to account for the various musical performative practices to be found in both rural and urban areas of the continent. And yet the lines of demarcation of such stratification can be blurred when one considers the thorny issue of self-identity of social groups vis à vis other groups and nations. Identity is frequently a process of negotiation resulting in various strategies of expression, including music.

Throughout the area the tri-ethnic heritage results in fundamentally mestizo (culturally and racially mixed) musical traditions whose nature varies according to the degree of prevalence of any one of the three sources. For the sake of clarity we refer to Iberian-American and Afro-Hispanic or Afro-American traditions, although the boundaries and borders of such traditions at the end of the 20th century reveal many more complexities. Indeed the old categories tend to fade away as people increasingly share the same space, frequently relying on several existing traditions while creating new ones. It should be borne in mind, therefore, that a great deal of fluidity prevails in most regions of Latin America and the Caribbean in terms of social stratification, ethnicities, regionalism, religions and generations. Because of their essential mestizo character, the musics of Latin America cut across ethnic and sometimes social lines. Moreover, the consequence of this fluidity has precipitated musical change in the whole continent, only a portion of which we seem to be aware of at the beginning of the 21st century.

The folk, traditional and popular musics of the region present therefore a very complex picture that can only be ascertained at the culture-specific level. Here, however, only an overview can be presented: for more detailed discussion, see entries on the individual countries.

I. Indigenous music

The indigenous cultures of Latin America are neither obsolete nor waning in musical richness. Many Amerindian communities, though threatened by acculturation, development and hegemonic political programmes have managed to conserve their intrinsic character while incorporating new musical ideas and instruments. Linguists have differed over the number of indigenous languages found in the Americas. Depending on the classificatory methods used, South America alone has been estimated to have between 73 (Brinton) and 117 distinct languages (Loukotka, 1968). In his classic study, Loukotka lists over 2000 dialects from Venezuela to Tierra del Fuego. This linguistic diversity is reflected in an equally complex soundscape in which Amerindian, African, European and criollo musical traditions intermingle in instrumentation, concept, context and musical structures (see AMERICAS, §II).

A few groups have managed to keep their distance from encroaching urban, Eurocentric influences. Nestled in remote mountain areas or dense rainforests, people like the Kogi of Colombia or the Lacandón of the Mexico-Guatemala border have preserved the integrity of their pre-Columbian musical traditions. But even the Kogi and Lacandón are keenly aware of their neighbours, and sometimes 'borrow' repertories from other communities.

The fluidity of form and concept in indigenous cultures defies belaboured definitions and categories, which attempt to differentiate 'pure' from 'acculturated' forms; 'Indian' from 'mestizo'; and rural folk from urban popular idioms. The contemporary musical panorama reflects change as a dynamic reality of peoples who have lived with conquest for 500 years.

The complexity and dynamism of this continually changing heritage are rooted in ancient times. In the 14th and 15th centuries the Nahuatl-speaking Aztecs or Mexicas of central Mexico turned the flourishing metropolis of Tenochtitlan into a centre for ritual, science and the performing arts. They took many ideas from the people they conquered and created a system of schools (cuicacalli) in which knowledge could be transmitted. In the high Andes, the Inca aristocracy propagated their hegemonic statecraft, their elaborate ceremonial calendar, their sophisticated approaches to agriculture and road building and their musical ideas about the interrelationships of hocket and melody throughout their vast empire. Urbanization, ethnic enclaves caused by mass migrations, acculturation through conquest and syncretism were important variables in pre-Columbian musical life, just as they are today.

These parallels are mentioned to underline certain areas of continuity between pre- and post-conquest musical traditions. They are in no way meant to minimize the systematic genocide of an indigenous population that in the 15th century equalled that of Europe, including Russia (Dobyns). The survival of Amerindian musics despite this onslaught points to the tenacity and strength of many notions of sound and cosmology nourished by a rich past. The emphasis of ethnomusicology on the 'ethnographic present' tends to obscure the fact that the present is but a small microcosm of human patterns that have cycled through many historical permutations.

1. Historical patterns. Many documents that would have provided a more coherent understanding of the indigenous musical past were systematically destroyed by zealous missionaries in the 15th and 16th centuries; yet, as Eric Wolf aptly points out, the Indians of the Americas are not 'people without a history'. A few enlightened priests, such as Bernardino de Sahagún, Diego Durán and Bartolomé de las Casas (1951) carefully recorded the cultural patterns and contributions of the people of the Americas. Through their efforts, and the testaments of Fernando Alvarado Tezozomoc, Fernando de Alva Ixtlixóchitl, Domingo Francisco Antón Muñón Chimalpain Cuauhtlehuanitzin, 'El Inca' Garcilaso de la Vega, Felipe Guaman Poma de Ayala, Santacruz Pachacuti Yamqui and other native writers of Mexico and Peru, we can discern historical patterns that continue to inform indigenous music-making (for compilations of early indigenous chroniclers see Cornejo Polar, León Portilla and Wachtel). The richest footprints of the indigenous past are embedded in oral histories and performance traditions which persist to this day. Together, these written and oral histories point out several patterns that illuminate our later discussion of contemporary traditions.

The names of historical indigenous cultures most recognized today are Aztec, Maya and Inca. These peoples, located in central Mexico, Central America and highland Peru, were all empire builders who extended their governments, their scientific achievements, and their philosophies and theologies through trade and conquest. But even the Aztec, Maya and Inca recognized that their kingdoms were built on the achievements of earlier cultures. The Aztecs invoked the deeds of the Toltecs who had preceded them. Though they destroyed many of the records of the Toltecs to rewrite history in their own image, the Aztecs/Mexicans acknowledged artists, poets and composers of great worth with the greatest of compliments: 'You are a true Toltec!'. Likewise, the Quechua-speaking Incas perfected their understanding of ceramics, acoustics, poetry, ritual and statecraft through what they had inherited from earlier Nasca, Moche and Tairona cultures. Thus the evidence for indigenous musical cultures of the Americas begins at least 3000 years ago, with the emergence of cultures that fashioned stone and clay into sound-producing instruments which have survived decay and can be studied by contemporary archaeomusicologists. We can also assume that musical sounds and instruments were brought across the Bering Strait from Asia in migrations which began 40,000 to 70,000 years ago.

Archaeological studies show great sophistication in acoustical thinking and in instrument-building technologies among pre-Columbian peoples. Studies by Martí, Nyberg, Olsen (1986, 1988), Silva Sifuentes, Rawcliffe and many other scholars show several notable characteristics in early American music: instruments were usually built by specialists who combined their knowledge of acoustics, ceramic techniques, metallurgy, mathematics and ritual purpose into a vast array of experiments with timbre, form and tonal distribution. Tonal organization seems more important here than tonal range. Thus, the Tairona and Nasca peoples of the Andes experimented with multiphones, creating aerophones that could produce more than one pitch at a time. They also created wind instruments that used combination frequencies to produce sharp-edged sounds called beat frequencies (Benade, 1960). These acoustical properties are characteristic of aerophones fashioned in the shape of snakes, jaguars or other animals with supernatural associations. Thus, the peculiar acoustical combinations gave the gods a distinct 'voice' which could be invoked in ritual contexts.

In both Mexico and the Andes, multiphonics were sometimes coupled in aerophones with multiple chambers. Ancient wind instruments from Veracruz contained chambers within chambers, all blown through the same aperture. An increase in air shifted resonance deeper and deeper into the flute or ocarina, producing a jump in pitch as well as a shift in resonance location. These pitch-jump whistles are unique to the pre-Columbian world and are one more example of sophisticated acoustical engineering. Duct flutes excavated in Mexico, Ecuador and Peru may have as many as four interconnected chambers, two blowholes and myriad combinations of partials and overtones. As Susan Rawcliffe (1988, p.58) summarizes:

> What is remarkable about these pre-Columbian flutes is their diversity of form, timbre and partials, and tunings. Perhaps these instruments were meant to be played alone or accompanied by unpitched instruments. Perhaps ensemble pitch was organized around single related tones. Perhaps melodic contour or timbre was valued more than pitch or the kind of tonal organization we think of as scales. Certainly pitch relationships were organized in ways that challenge the 'scientific' acoustical principles developed by Europeans.

Archaeomusicologists of the Andes disagree as to whether the clay globular flutes of ancient times were played in ensembles (Olsen, 1988; Stevenson). Iconographic representations of musicians and instruments in pre-Columbian Andean ceramics imply that instruments were grouped into families and served specific purposes. Thus, performing practices were unique to each instrumental grouping, determined primarily by ritual context, supernatural association and social and hierarchical functions. Raft pipes (panpipes) in the early pottery traditions of South America are always depicted in pairs, with one raft pipe tied to its mate by a rope or string. This pairing implies that these instruments were used, as they are today, to create interlocking parts. In this style of performance, each instrument is equipped with only half the tones needed to complete a melodic idea. In the contemporary panpipe traditions of Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru and northern Chile and Argentina, sicuri or zampoña players are paired into ira and arca parts, and interweave their notes to form a complete melody (analogous to the hocket technique in Europe).

Pre-Columbian traditions lead us into a view of performance that links the ways in which we must study the musics of both the past and the present. First, musical traditions cannot be extricated from a larger panoply of performance that often includes dramatization, text, dance and symbolic gesture, costume and body ornamentation and representations through all of these devices of larger views of the cosmos referenced in the microcosm of performance. Second, the phenomenon we usually call text creates multiple levels of communication. For example, the ancient hymn to the rain god Tlaloc found in the Madrid Codex compiled by Sahagún inflects a discourse that was chanted as a four-way dialogue between a congregation, priests, a sacrificial victim and the rain god. Although the goal of the ritual and its chants is the exchange of precious human blood for the nourishment of rain, it also contains a subtext central to 15th-century Nahuatl thought: just as plants nourish the human body, the sacrificed body becomes the food of plants, thus reversing or inverting the food chain and 'loaning' the sacrificial victim to the organic world of plants so that the cycle of life may always be renewed. This notion of transmogrification is evident in the opening stanza of the hymn as translated by Willard Gingerich (1977, p.79):

Ahvia! Mexico teutlaneviloc amapanitlan nauhcampa ye moquetzquetl
ye kena ichocayan.

(Ahuia! Mexico seeks a loan of the god; paper-flag places in the four directions;
men stand forth;
finally the time of its weeping.)

The ancient hymn, which focusses on the 'loan' of a human life for renewed life on the planet, reflects a continued concern with the importance of sacrifice in the maintenance of balance in the cosmos. The pictographic texts of the Aztec and Maya and the oral traditions of the Andes outline a web of intricate relationships between aspects of creation. The interconnectedness of the universe is activated and maintained through intricate rituals involving music, dance and dramatic texts. Among the texts that survived the onslaught of Spain are the Popol Vuh, the Chilam Balam and Rabinal Achi of the Maya; and the vast collections of songs left behind by Aztec poet-composers. Inca literature was equally rich, and included plays as the Apu Ollantay and the wealth of epic songs known as the Cantares históricos. Many song forms, such as the harawi, were designated for performance on specific occasions and were divided into female (sung) and male (instrumental) genres (Harrison; Gruszczyńska-Ziólkowska). Among the Aztecs, Maya and Inca words were given so much ceremonial power that specialized priesthoods were developed to interpret sacred texts.

The great poet-composers of the Aztec world drew on the images of myth, ritual, nature and warfare to create a vast literature. Nezahualcóyotl (1402–72), Axayácatl (father of Montecuhzoma II) and the other great sages and composers of Mexico were known as tlamatinime, a title indicating that they embodied the highest notions of aesthetics and were masters of 'flowers and song', the metaphor for artful composition. The cuicapicque, who specifically composed songs for public rituals, were later folded into the service of the conquering Catholic Church, and continued to receive privileged treatment well into the 16th century. Like their amauta counterparts in Peru, who composed in the imperial runasimi and other Andean languages, the sages of Mexico documented the deeds of heroes and mused about the nature of Creation. The tlamatinime drew on theological tenets developed by the Toltecs, problematizing the nature of gods and men. Thus, in the Cantares mexicanos manuscript (Cantares mexicanos, MS, n.d., f.62*r*), an anonymous poet sings:

Where is the place of light, for He who gives life hides Himself?

And also in reference to the notion of Ometéotl, the god of duality inherited from the Toltecs (Cantares mexicanos, MS, n.d., f.35*v*):

Where shall I go?
Oh, where shall I go?
The path of the god of duality.
Is your home in the place of the dead?
In the interior of the heavens?
Or only here on earth is the abode of the dead?

The recreation of myths and cosmic forces through ritual enactment conflated time and space, giving humans access to ancestral and supernatural realms. The vehicle that opened the gates between these co-existing realities was performance, wherein music, poetry and dance commingled to open doors to other domains of experience.

All of these symbolic performances enact a relational world, i.e. a world in which music and dance embody the connections between various elements of creation. Thus music, or the act of performance, references the relation of humans to non-humans, of humans to other life forms, of humans to geographic and mythical places, of humans to ancestors, of humans to their past, of individuals and groups to community and of humans to their emotions. These emphases provide the framework for our discussion of contemporary Amerindian traditions.

2. CONTEMPORARY PERFORMANCE TRADITIONS. A great deal of confusion has been engendered by scholarly attempts to classify peoples of the Americas into what are rather artificial groupings: indio, mestizo, criollo, acculturated, unacculturated. Usually, these categories are based on assumptions about racial purity, intermarriage, cultural contact as a purely post-colonial phenomenon and other fictions imposed by outsiders. Many so-called mestizo, or mixed-blood communities identify with the music of the indios. Many indio communities listen to rock and roll, cumbias and Mexican rancheras on the radio and at their public gatherings. Mass media, migration and an increased awareness of the politics of representation have created a musical continuum in many villages that stuns and confounds colonialist analytical categories. To further muddle our discussion, communities in Peru and Mexico often proclaim themselves as mestizo or indio, and structure their public festivals according to their conceptions of these terms. But even these self-designations are rooted in a concern with the relational world, for they describe an affinity with larger patterns of authority and cultural hegemony. Indio has usually signalled location at the bottom of the socioeconomic ladder; mestizo indicates a broader access to the Euro-focussed metropolis, as well as the pervasive influence of the Spanish language; criollo identifies the speaker with a culture of European origins and New World permutations. These are linguistic, economic, racial and cultural distinctions that negate the complexity of how traditions have been perpetuated and transmitted in Latin America. As used in Peru, Bolivia and parts of Mexico, mestizo refers not so much to racial phenotype as it does to the presence of bilingualism, styles of clothing and speech and socioeconomic status.

(i) Bridging cultural spaces through performance. In his research among Aymara-speaking musicians in the Lake Titicaca region of Peru, Thomas Turino shows how music reflects the fluid nature of culture and identity. The people of Conima, a town situated 12,500 feet above sea level, organize their social and religious life around religious fiestas that merge Catholicism with pre-Columbian agricultural rites. Sicus, or raft pipes (panpipes), vertical duct flutes or pinkillus (or pincullos), pitu transverse flutes, drums called cajas, chants, dances and specific costumes punctuate fiestas that embody the social stratifications and spiritual dynamics of the community. In the annual Fiesta de la Candelaria (Candlemas Feast) celebrated on 2 February, the symbolism of the church is merged with the celebration of corn and of the 'birth of the potato', crops that are the main sources of sustenance in this region. Plant fertility and courtship are interwoven in songs, dances and instrumental pieces played on cajas and pinkillus.

The human and spiritual relationships traced in ritual contexts carry over into all genres of Conimeño music, creating an ethos of social interdependence that is reflected in the structure of siku, or panpipe melodies. Sikus are divided into two rows of tubes, known as ira and arca. In some communities, the division of a siku into two separate but interdependent sections played by two musicians is equated with male (ira) and female (arca) (Baumann; Grebe, 1980). Adjoining pitches are alternated between the ira and arca rows, resulting in melodies such as the one shown in ex.1.

Ex.1 Sikuri Choclo/Ligero genre by Qhantati Ururi (Filiberto Calderón) (Turino, 1993)

Conimeños put great emphasis on competition and originality. Thus, each performance of this piece will expand its possibilities within an aesthetic that stresses repetition and contrast within a minimal body of musical information. Tonal materials rely on two basic scale formations: a six-note pattern with flattened third and seventh and a natural minor scale.

Just as important as its distinctive style is the significance of this style of music as a reflection of changing national attitudes towards indigenous peoples. In the past, Conimeños who immigrated to the sprawling coastal city of Lima might have been shunned because of their musical styles and cultural ways; but today the sound of panpipes has become emblematic of the rise of indigenous rights in the Andes. In fact, hybrid forms of panpipe music which adjust intonation to European notions of pitch have come to evoke Andean culture throughout Europe and the Americas. While shifting from regional voices of the disenfranchised to national symbols of 'Andeanness', the idiosyncratic musical idioms of Peruvian communities have been appropriated and glossed into a larger web of commodities and cultural representations (Fairley). This itinerary illustrates the way a tradition can navigate the complex waters of indio, mestizo and national identities.

The importance of performance as a way of enacting human relationships is also evident among the contemporary Suyá of Amazonian Brazil. Anthony Seeger (1979) has shown that Suyá men compose akia songs as badges of individual identity that bridge the social and physical space between the men's hut in the centre of the village and each man's natal household. Men in a village group sing their individual songs at the same time, shouting their message so that their sisters and mothers can hear their distinctive voices and styles above those of other performers. The akia repertory uses the village as a resounding space in which complex kinship ties are enacted in performances that are simultaneous yet conceptually independent. Although each rendition exhibits new aspects of composition, ex.2 illustrates how three men executed their songs in the same village performance space in 1976.

Ex.2 Three Suya Amto Akia from the 1976 Mouse Ceremony (Seeger 1979)

Akia songs emphasize the individuality of each male composer/performer. Stylistic characteristics reflect this intention through a strained, loud, almost shouted sound begun by each man in the highest part of his vocal range. Melodies terrace downwards, and need not begin or end on any particular pitch (this is true of many other indigenous singing styles as well).

Akia are intended as idiosyncratic statements of individuality that link each performer acoustically to the women who raised him. In contrast to Akia, the ngere repertory among the Suyá has a fixed tempo, a flat melodic contour, and purposefully unison, blended vocal style. In ngere performances men, sometimes joined by women, perform as part of their moiety or name-based ceremonial group. Texts conceal the secret of a supernatural entity associated with the moiety. This animal or plant protector is also the source of the song. Seeger (1987), in collaboration with Roseman, has demonstrated that ngere songs make noticeable and measurable rises in pitch during the execution of the song. In ex.3, numbered pitches indicate significant jumps in pitch location. For example, the number 3 indicates B♭ minus 39 cents; and the number 4 indicates F♯ plus 35 cents.

Although pitch stability is important in Western analyses of sound, it is neither named nor critiqued by the Suyá. The rising pitch phenomenon is absorbed as part of the natural path of the song. Seeger's analysis of the issue of rising pitch in ngere is noteworthy, for it signals that, as among the Conimeños of Peru, an aesthetic quite distinct from the tenets and priorities of Western music criticism is at play. In fact, the ideas that inform many indigenous musical systems can seldom be depicted accurately through conventional staff notation.

Ex.3 Ngere song (Seeger, 1987)

The examples examined thus far emphasize originality and repetition, the relationship of the individual to the kin or name group and the relationship of the community to the spirit world. One of the most remarkable examples of performing human-supernatural relationships through specific musical structures comes from the Tepehua and Otomí Indians of Mexico. In a landmark article published in 1967, Charles Boilès demonstrated that in ritual contexts, Tepehua violinists articulate intervallic relationships that generate specific text associations. He called these violin melodies 'Tepehua thought-songs', for their textual references hold startling lexical specificity. Using extensive analysis of Otomí linguistics, poetics structures and field research, Boilès was able to translate the semantic signals of the Halakiltunti ceremonies used in healing illnesses, securing rain and restoring harmony in community life. Ex.4 illustrates a text generated by intervals holding this semantic code:

Ex.4 Otomí Halakiltunti ceremony (Boilès, 1967)

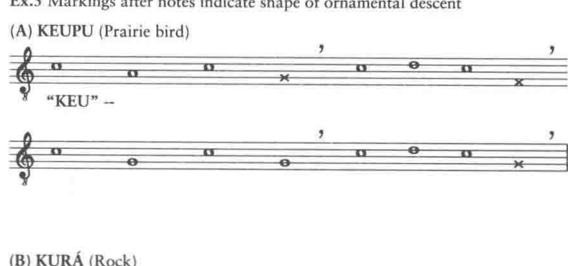
Textual translation of violin intervals:

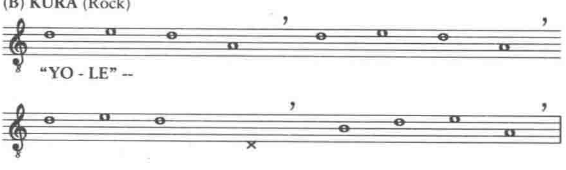
> There was the thought,
>
> Which thought it had been,
> Yet it still is.
>
> Hardly had it been born
> When there existed lads and lasses.
>
> Even though they were not Old Ones,
> In this manner they grasped the way.
>
> Thus were they given the thought;
> Thus was the life given them by their fathers.
>
> When the music begins,
>
> It refers to when the thought entered.
> It wants to say it is happy.
>
> Yonder it has to grasp the music
> Because it knows where it is.
>
> Now it knows where to come in,
> For when it arrived where were its fathers,
> It greeted them.

Boilès asserted that all traditional Tepehua could hear these violin melodies and easily translate them into words. Intervallic relationships in indigenous performance are rarely this specific. Meanings associated with texts are usually much more abstract. In the vocal genre known as tayil among the Mapuche of Andean Argentina, the combination of melodic contours with non-lexical texts is used to identify particular lineages. Texts of short, repeated syllables carry abstract references to the totemic association of each lineage. The Mapuche word for sheep is ufisha, but the sung ritual signature of ufisha kimpeñ, the sheep lineage, is we-ke. Thus, the phonemes 'we, we-ke' identify the shared lineage soul of families who constitute the sheep kin group. Examples of three distinct lineage chants can be seen in ex.5.



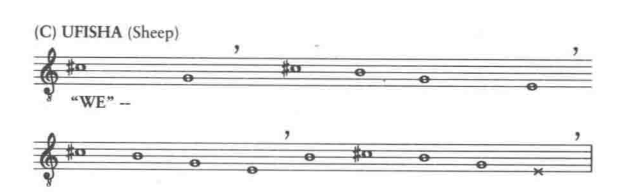
The melodic contour and signature syllables that characterize each totemically centred tayil constitute a sonic pathway to the ancestors and creator beings. This repertory can only be performed by women, whose ability to give birth gives them a direct channel to the dimension of ancestral time called takuifí or alüalüntu. In ritual contexts, women perform or 'pull forth' this chant for their fathers, husbands, sons or kinswomen. As in the case of the Suyá akia, each performance is considered an independent sonic event, even when it occurs simultaneously with other performances of the same chant. Thus, each woman begins her rendition on her own pitch and may not try to link her performance rhythmically or tonally to the chanting of her kinswomen.

Each tayil consists of four phrases that act as 'conjugations' of the chant into four dimensions of time and space: the first phrase connects the intention of the woman who is performing to the heart of the person she is performing for. The second phrase pulls the lineage soul out of the recipient of the chant, bringing that shared soul into sacralized space. The third phrase catapults the lineage soul into the domain of sacred ancestral time. The entry of the chant into this dimension is marked by a specific pitch and timbre referred to as chempralitún, the pivotal sound that engenders transformation. The fourth phrase brings the transformed or re-energized soul back into the present and safely places it back in the body of its owner (Robertson).



The Tarahumara of western Mexico also use sound to bridge spatio-temporal domains. For example, Arturo Salinas has demonstrated that the large, double-headed frame drums of the Tarahumara are used across vast geographic spaces to create an experience of concentric sonic layering (A. Salinas Sound layering in Tarahumara Drumming, unpublished manuscript, Washington, 1988).

Ex.5 Markings after notes indicate shape of ornamental descent



(A) KEUPU (Prairie bird)

(B) KURÁ (Rock)

(C) UFISHA (Sheep)

When Tarahumara peoples gather in a central location for celebratory purposes, they begin their drumming performances at the periphery of each village. Drummers pound their instruments for hours as they slowly approach the central fiesta space. The effect on the celebrants is of layers of rhythm and timbre which circle in on the nexus of celebration. Each village brings a distinct rhythm into prominence. The intention of the performers is not necessarily to articulate specific rhythms, but rather to create patterned layers of sound that weave a sonic tapestry as village kin groups converge. The end result, moving through these concentric circles of sound, is an experience of sound that mirrors Tarahumara village organization.

Not all performance happens in public or in large social contexts. As in other parts of the world, parents sing lullabies to their children, lone shepherds play their flutes for their flocks, and travellers compose nostalgic songs and improvisations that link them to home and family. But even in these instances of isolated solo performance, individuals rely on the musical patterns that mark them as members of a social group, for even the explorations of isolated composers are directly linked to an indelible cultural identity and soundscape.

(ii) Myth, ritual and performance. All of these examples imply that indigenous musical traditions are anchored to theories of sound, time and space and to more complex theories of what sound is, how it can be structured and how it can be used to articulate community values and beliefs. In turn, these theories of what music is and what it does are rooted in rich oral traditions that link performance to myth and ritual.

One of the oldest belief systems of the Americas is linked to the jaguar (Hill, 1993; Reichel-Dolmatoff, 1975; Robertson, 1998). Beginning about 1300 BCE, the Olmecs of eastern Mexico fashioned stone into gigantic representations of their jaguar god. In the oral traditions of the Baniwa of the north-western Amazon the jaguar Yaperikuli gives birth to the primordial hero, Kuai. The voice of the jaguar is contained in the resonant bass voice of wooden trumpets. Furthermore, Wright asserts that 'whenever the jaguar-song occurs in myth or shaman-song, it indicates a transformation – Ipadámawa – is being made' (1981, p.82). In creation myths, the female jaguar brings fire to the world, thus signalling a transformational moment in history when the hearth becomes the nexus of villages and kin groups.

In many initiation rites, the novice must face his or her own terror of encountering the ancestral jaguar. Among the Barasana of Colombia, male initiates are warned of the power of the he trumpets, which contain the terrifying voice of the jaguar ancestor. As they are played during the ritual, these instruments come to life and pass the life-giving breath of the ancestor into the initiate. Passing through fear and being touched by the fierce life force of the archetypal jaguar brings the initiates into full membership in the community.

Initiation rituals are frequently representations of the tension between genders. Among many peoples of the lowland rainforests, male social control is enacted, sanctioned and maintained through rituals that exclude women and separate them from contact with the sacred flutes performed by men (Basso; Murphy). Given their shape, construction and male symbolic association, anthropologists and ethnomusicologists have assumed these instruments to be phallic objects that assert male primacy. However, myths prevalent among the Mundurucú, Kalapalo, Mehinaku, Trumaí and neighbouring groups narrate that women used to be the owners of the flutes. Through abuses of power and sexual privilege, women lost ownership of the flutes and must now be controlled by men. Ellen Basso, one of the few women to do research in this region, tells us that during certain times of the month, Kalapalo male elders hide these instruments in the rafters of the men's house because the flutes are 'menstruating'. This fact implies that the flutes are not (or not only) a representation of the phallus, but rather an embodiment of the birth canal and of a kind of female power coveted by men.

The complexity and multivalence of ritual symbols and performance defy reductionistic interpretations. Such is the case in the Baile de moros y cristianos, the dance of Moors and Christians; another ritual of broad distribution in the Americas. Versions of this 15th-century dance–drama, linked to the expulsion of the Moors from Spain in 1492, can be found wherever Spain extended her empire. From New Mexico to Bolivia, this representation of the triumph of 'good' (Christianity) over 'evil' (Islam) is known variously as 'Las Moritas', 'Los Santiagos', 'Los Alchileos', 'Los Matachines' and other names (Warman Gryj). Spanish chroniclers of the 16th century tell us that the dance was first performed in Cotzacoalcos to honour Hernán Cortés. Predictably, Mexican versions of this drama incorporate the mistress of Cortés as a central figure of conquest. Known as Malinalli in Nahuatl, her native tongue; as Doña Marina to the Spaniards; and as La Malinche to her mestizo descendants, this woman played a key role in the initial encounter between Spaniard and Amerindian. She was a gifted translator and linguist, a political mediator and a respected cacique (chief). Ironically, her liaison with Cortés identifies her to some as a betrayer of the Amerindian. The breadth of her identity parallels the breadth of musical and instrumental traditions in which this dance repertory is played. In Mexico alone, Moros y cristianos instrumentation can range from harp and guitar to chirimía (shawm) and huehuetl or teponaztli drums; from fiddle and rattle to marimbas. The rattles and wooden drums are pre-Columbian in origin. The marimba is believed by some to be an indigenous instrument and by others to be an African import. The shawm and string instruments were introduced by Spanish conquerors and missionaries. Again, the multiple origins and associations of these instruments signal the complex cultural intricacies and variations wrought by conquest. Today these types of dramatic performances are perpetuated throughout Latin America by cofradías, or religious brotherhoods centring on a patron saint (see Moreno Chá; Uribe-Echevarría; Verger). The proliferation and diffusion of cofradías is on the rise, and continually expands to include new costumes, dances and songs. This form of popular religiosity, born originally of indigenous attempts to assimilate and 'convert' Catholicism to local beliefs, has attracted people of all social classes who are willing to dance or sing for the saints in exchange for supernatural intervention.

The most broadly distributed and musically diverse category of indigenous performance regards healing the body and spirit through sound. Healing is facilitated by the ability of a shaman (an anthropological term of Siberian origin) to mediate between the human and spirit worlds. This ancient role is linked to music in pre-Columbian ceramics from the Recuay, Wari and Chincha periods of Peru, where the healer is shown playing flutes, panpipes and drums. Detailed descriptions and transcriptions of healing songs among the Mapuche of Chile, the Warao of Venezuela and the Mazatec of Mexico are provided by Balada (1981), Grebe (1980) and Olsen (1996). These authors demonstrate that the details of performance, ranging from rattle and drum rhythms to the timbre and structure of songs, are relevant to the curing process. In his analysis of a Mariusa healing ceremony in Venezuela, Briggs (The Effectiveness of Poetics, unpublished manuscript, Briggs, 1991, cited in Olsen, 1996, p.190) delineates the relationship of the ceremonial rattle to actual healing procedures conducted by the wisiratu, or shaman, for a sick child:

> ... The slow tempo rattling enables the kareko in the rattle – who are the shaman's helpers – to establish contact with the kureko aurohi 'the fevers of the stones', in the child, and this part of each section is referred to as dokotebuyaha 'starting up the song'. The fast tempo rattling that follows is termed hebu nayaha 'spanking the hebu'. Here the shaman either leans forward or crouches above the patient so that the rattle is directly over his body. With the increase in tempo and the intensity of movement, the revolutions become more ellipsoidal than circular, with rapid downthrusts constituting the blows to the hebu. This 'spanking' loosens the hebu's grip on the child, paving the way for its extraction.

Specific tones, timbres and rhythms, sometimes combined with hallucinogens, also serve to establish and regulate the shaman and patient's state of consciousness, and move the ceremony through successive stages in which the malady may be diagnosed, treated and transformed with the aid of the spirit world.

Indigenous communities are not static cultural entities. They continue to be permeated by internal and external changes that often modify or nullify ancient practices or even generate new genres of performance. In highland communities of Peru, the ancient ceremony honouring the sun, Intip Raymin, was incorporated into Corpus Christi celebrations. In recent times, Peruvians have reinvented a version of what they now call Inti Raimi, an elaborate pageant of pseudo-Inca characters played by criollos for the benefit of tourist audiences. But many traditionally rooted historical dramas have re-emerged in the 20th century as statements of Amerindian identity.

Among the Chamula of southern Mexico, Passion cults in which ritual players impersonate Jesus Christ constitute a central part of village life. The theme of the fiesta is not really Jesus of Nazareth but 500 years of resistance to external authority structures. In particular, the people of Chamula (a village in the state of Chiapas) commemorate the Caste War of 1867–70. This rebellion originated in Chamula. The indigenous leaders of this war exhorted their followers to reject the Catholic Church. On Good Friday of 1868 they crucified a young boy named Domingo Gómez Checheb so that he could be worshipped as the Indian Christ of Chamula. According to Bricker (1973, p.89), 'There is abundant evidence that the Christ whom the Passion impersonates is the Indian Christ rather than the Ladino [Spanish-speaking] Saviour'. The focus on 'Indianness' is further marked by the playing of drums and cane flutes of pre-Columbian origin.

Luis Millones has documented a play popular in the Carhuamayo area of Peru that depicts the life, uprising, defeat and execution of Atahualpa (on 29 October 1532), the last Inca to lead an uprising against the Spanish invaders. The play 'The Death of Atahualpa' conflates the image of Santa Rosa de Lima, patron saint of many Andean communities, with the concept of Pachamama, the pre-Hispanic Earth Mother. The story is staged with elaborate costumes, songs and dances executed by the Inca Atahualpa and his entourage of warriors, priests and Coyas (royal consorts of the Inca). In a heightened dramatic moment, the invading conqueror, Francisco Pizarro, stealthily penetrates the formation of royal women dancing to the sound of drums and panpipes, draws his dagger and slits the throat of the lead Coya. Chicha (corn liquor), a symbol of life-sustaining wira energy, flows from the throat of the massacred ancestral mother to the ground. In this moment the course of history is forever changed and historical drama and ritual become one in the narrative of a people.

3. History, context and performing practice. In pre-Columbian times, repertories, instruments and ideas were traded over vast geographies. Both Guaman Poma de Ayala and Garcilaso de la Vega, chroniclers of the Inca empire, asserted that the panpipes we have come to associate with the descendants of the Incas were actually imported from other lands. These instruments, which seem to have originated somewhere in the central Andes some 7000 years ago (Pérez de Arce) were traded out of the Peruvian area and then returned to their general place of origin many centuries later. Through trade and imperial expansion, the Incas redistributed this instrument as far north as Panama and as far south as Patagonia. The conch-shell trumpet (Strombus galeatus) was also traded from the Caribbean Sea into the Andes. It is possible that the scale patterns, rhythms, dance styles and spiritual practices were also exported through the routes created by commerce. This would explain the wide distribution of various kinds of pentatonic scales, for example.

Today musical ideas are more commonly traded by radio and television. It is not uncommon for the Mapuche of Chile and Argentina to listen to Mexican mariachi music on the radio and imitate the ranchera falsetto style at their social gatherings. In Peru, composers of huaynos may reach a relative who is hiding from the authorities by performing their compositions at independent radio stations and folding hidden political messages into their Quechua and Aymara texts.

From Mexico to Bolivia, instruments are seen as belonging to 'families'. This kinship between instruments may be determined by their mode of production or by associations provided by contexts. Among the Aymara of Bolivia, one characteristic that marks Amerindian identity in performance is that panpipes should only be played with other panpipes, tarkas with tarkas, kenas with kenas; or, at least, when all these wind instruments are combined in one performance they should not be mixed with string instruments. Mixing winds with guitar or the armadillo-backed charango is a practice that identifies a genre and its performers as mestizo. This does not mean that traditional Aymara performing groups cannot perform a wide variety of styles, but instrumental combinations do signal cultural associations and socioeconomic variables.

Tonal organization among indigenous peoples defies the facile categories devised by scholars to describe how we, as Westerners, might apprehend performance. Pentatonic scales are common in the Americas; but in early ethnomusicology (Aretz, 1952; Izikowitz, 1934; Vega, 1946) scholars tended to reduce the music of a community to the particular scale that had caught their fancy. Thus, cultures that used many different scales became characterized by the tonal patterns of a single genre, a reductionistic practice that haunts us to this day. The key questions that have yet to be answered satisfactorily by ethnomusicology are, 'How many systems of musical organization co-exist within one performance region? How are tone, rhythm and timbre perceived by the members of a particular culture? How does music interface with other ways of knowing the universe?'. Until we are able to decode the subtleties of time and tune as heard and used by indigenous people we will only be describing ourselves.

Ex.6 Lullaby from San Blas Luna; Panama (Wilbert; 1976)

Regardless of how disparate or unusual indigenous tunings of musical structures may sound to the European ear, performance is always intentional and carries embedded assumptions about the nature of sound, the efficacy of form and the purpose of making music. McCosker has demonstrated that among the San Blas Cuna of Panama even lullabies, which are improvised to both comfort and educate children, follow a specific and predictable format. An example of the melodic characteristics of one of these lullabies is given in ex.6.

Intentionality of construction and inflection are important in indigenous approaches to tonal organization. In the archaeological heritage of central Chile we find pifilca flutes that were carved in stone or wood with a double bore that narrowed in the middle and flared at the ends. The resulting timbre created a shrill sense of dissonance that could be magnified by playing several of these flutes at once (Pérez de Arce). As in the timbre of Bolivian tarkas, the voice of the pifilca is meant to draw the attention of ancestors and supernaturals to the ritual ground. Among contemporary Araucanian Indians pifilcas are often made out of mountain bamboo. The same effect is achieved by cutting the stalks to specific lengths, pairing them and tuning them with water so that they generate shrill tones less than a major 2nd apart.

Rituals change; repertories change. It is true that many aspects of Amerindian life and performing practice have been altered, repressed and even rendered extinct by encroaching national and ladino interests. In Brazil, the fragility of rainforest cultures equals the fragility of rapidly disappearing ecosystems. But the survival of Amerindian cultures over 500 years of struggle attests to their tenacity and depth. Among the Aztecs, Maya and Inca of pre-conquest times, music education played a central part in socialization, empire building and ritual coherence. Linda O'Brien has shown that among the contemporary Tzutuhil-Maya of Atitlán, Guatemala, music continues to be a central vehicle for enculturation. Performance is at the core of traditions that the Tzutuhil speak of as 'the heart and centre of the world', the 'ancient source of power and contentment' and the 'roots of life' (1976, p.384). Music is an essential key for understanding the world of the indigenous peoples of Latin America; for we find that both before and long after European presence, theirs is a sonic universe.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. de Sahagún: Historia general de las cosas de Nueva España, ed. C.M. de Bustmante, i, v, vii–ix, xi (Mexico City, 1829–30; Eng. trans., 1950–82)

B. de las Casas: Historia de las Indias, ed. Marques de la Fuensanta del Valle and J.L. Sancha Rayón (Madrid, 1875–6; ed. A. Millares Carlo, Mexico City, 1951)

D.G. Brinton: 'Studies in South American Native Languages', Journal of the American Philosophical Society, xxx (1982)

Cantares mexicanos (Mexico City, 1904) [facs. of MS *c*1700 in Biblioteca nacional]

F. Densmore: Music of the Tule Indians of Panama (Washington, DC, 1926)

N.E. Garray: Tradiciones y cantares de Panama: ensayo folklórico (Brussels, 1930)

W. Heinitz: 'Chirimía- und Tambór-Phonogramme aus Nordwest-Guatemala', Vox, xix/1–2 (1933), 4

K.G. Izirkowitz: Musical and Other Sound Instruments of the South American Indians (Göteborg, 1934/R1970)

F. Guaman Poma de Ayala: Neuva corónica y buen gobierno (Paris, 1936) [facs. of MS in DK-Kk]

F. Baltasar de Matallana: 'La música indigena taurepan', Boletin Latino-americano de música, iv (1938), 649

J. Castillo: Música Maya-Quiché (Quezaltenango, 1941)

A. Prado Quesada: Apuntes sintéticos sobre la historia y producción musical de Costa Rica (San José, Costa Ria, ?1941)

P.A. Colbacchini and P.C. Albisetti: Os Boróros orientais (Brasil, 1942)
I. Garcilaso de la Vega: Comentanos reales de Ios Incas (Buenos Aires, 1945)
R. González Sol: Fiestas civicas, religiosas y exhibiciones populares de El Salvador (San Salvador, 1945, 2/1947)
P. Verger: Fiestas y danzas en el Cuzco y en los Andes (Buenos Aires, 1945, 2/1951)
C. Vega: Los instrumentos musicales aborigenes y criollos de la Argentina (Buenos Aires, 1946)
R. Pineda Giraldo: 'Aspectos de la Magia en la Guajira', Revista del Instituto etnológico nacional, iii/1 (1947), 1–163
A. Arias Larreta: Literaturas aborígenes de América (Los Angeles, 1951/R)
I. Aretz: 'Músicas pentatónicas en Sudaméŕica', Archivos venezolanos de folklore, i/2 (1952), 283
M. de Baratta: Cuzcatlán tipico: ensayo sobre etnofonia de El Salvador (San Salvador, 1952)
M. Schneider: 'Contribucion a la música indigena de Matto Grosso, Brasil', AnM, vii (1952), 159
S. Martí: Instrumentos musicales precortesianos (Mexico City, 1955, 2/1968)
E.M. von Hornbostel: 'La música de los Makuschi Taulipang y Yekuana', Archivos venezolanos de folklore, iii/4 (1955–6), 137
M. León Portilla: La filosofía nahuatl, estudiada en sus fuentes (Mexico City, 1956/R; Eng. trans., 1963, as Aztec Thought and Culture)
F. Bose: 'Die Musik der Chibcha und ihrer heutigen Nachkommen', International Archives of Ethnography, xlviii (1958), 149–98
M. León Portilla, ed.: Visión de los vencidos: relaciones indígenas de la conquista (Mexico City, 1959/R; Eng. trans., 1962/R, as The Broken Spears: the Aztec Account of the Conquest of Mexico)
L. Paret Limardo de Vela: 'Folklore musical de Guatemala', Congreso internacional de folklore: Buenos Aires 1960, no.176
L.P. Ramón y Rivera: 'Musica indigena de Venezuela', Boletin del Instituto de folklore, iii (1960), 333
C. Sáenz de Santa María, ed.: Obras completas del Inca Garcilaso de la Vega, ii–iv: Los comentarios reales de los Incas (Madrid, 1960)
J.H. Steward, ed.: Handbook of South American Indians (New York, 1963)
I. Halmos: 'Melody and Form in the Music of the Nambicuara Indians, Mato Grosso, Brazil', SM, vi (1964), 317–56
M.A. Guzman Anleu: Danzas de Guatemala, Folklore de Guatemala, i (Guatemala City, 1965)
I. Halmos: 'Das Verhältnis von Instrument, Stimmung und Tonart in Langsflöten-Melodien der Nambikuara-Indianer', Abhandlungen und Berichte des Staatlichen Museums für Völkerkunde Dresden, xxiv (1965), 49
L.P. Ramón y Rivera: 'Música de los motilones', in O. d'Empaire: Introducción al estudio de la cultura Bari (diss., Central U. of Venezuela, Caracas, 1965), 156
R. Toledo Palomo: Los bailes del Tum en los siglos XVI y XVII, Folklore de Guatemala, i (Guatemala City, 1965)
H.F. Dobyns: 'Estimating Aboriginal American Population: an Appraisal of Techniques with a New Hemispheric Estimate', Current Anthropology, vii (1966), 395–416
C. Boilés: 'Tepehua Thought-Song', EthM, xi (1967), 267–92
D. Durán: Historia de las Indias de Nueva España e islas de Tierra Firma, ed. A.M. Garibay (Mexico City, 1967) [written 1557–81]
M. León Portilla: Trece poetas del mundo azteca (Mexico City, 1967)
M. León Portilla: Tiempo y realidad eb el pensamiento maya (Mexico City, 1968, 2/1986; Eng. trans., 1973, 2/1988)
C. Loukotka: Classification of South American Indian Languages, ed. J. Wilbert (Los Angeles, 1968)
G. Reichel-Dolmatoff: Desana: simbolismo de los indios tukano del Vaupés (Bogotá, 1968, 2/1986; Eng. trans., 1971, as Amazonian Cosmos: the Sexual and Religious Symbolism of the Tukano Indians)
R. Stevenson: Music in Aztec & Inca Territory (Berkeley, 1968)
L.F. Ramón y Rivera: 'Formaciones escalsticas en la etnomúsica latinoamericana', YIFMC, i (1969), 200
N. McQuown and J. Pitt-Rivers, eds.: Ensayos de antroplogía en la Zona Central de Chiapas (Mexico City, 1970)
N. Wachtel: La vision des vaincus: les Indiens du Pérou devant la conquête espagnole, 1530–1570 (Paris, 1971; Eng. trans., 1977)
J. Castillo: Música Maya-Quiché (Quezaltenango, 1941)
A. Prado Quesada: Apuntes sintéticos sobre la historia y producción musical de Costa Rica (San José, Costa Rica, ?1941)
A. Warman Gryj: La danza de moros y cristianos (Mexico City, 1972)
V.R. Bricker: Ritual Humor in Highland Chiapas (Austin, 1973)
R. Murphy: 'Social Structure and Sex Antagonism', Peoples and Cultures of Native South America, ed. D.R. Gross (Garden City, NY, 1973)
R. Gablis: 'Métodos de curación entre los Cunas y los Otomi: estudio comparativo', América indigena, xxiv/4 (1974), 939
P.K. Jones: 'Una breve descripción de la cutura musical Chirripo', América indigena, xxxiv/2 (1974), 427
E. Lopez de Piza: 'Xirinachs de Zent, una comunidad Cabécar de Costa Rica', América indigena, xxxiv/2 (1974), 439
B. and J. Nietschmann: 'Cambio y continuidad: los indigenas Rama de Nicaragua', América indigena, xxxiv/4 (1974), 905
J.L. Nyberg: An Examination of Vessel Flutes from Pre-Hispanic Cultures of Ecuador (diss., U. of Minnesota, 1974)
M.W. Helms: Middle America: a Culture History of Heartland and Frontiers (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1975)
G. Reichel-Dolmatoff: The Shaman and the Jaguar: a Study of Narcotic Drugs Among the Indians of Colombia (Philadelphia, 1975)
S. McCosker: 'San Blas Cuna Indian Lullabies', Enculturation in Latin America, ed. J. Wilbert (Los Angeles, 1976), 29–66
L.L. O'Brien: 'Music Education and Innovation in a Traditional Tzutuhil-Maya Community', ibid., 377–94
A. Estrada: Vida de María Sabina: la sabia de los hongos (Mexico City, 1977/R; Eng. trans., 1981, as María Sabina: her Life and Chants)
W. Gingerich: 'Tlaloc, his Song', Latin American Indian Literatures, i/2 (1977), 79–88
T. Gregor: Mehinaku: the Drama of Daily Life in a Brazilian Indian Village (Chicago, 1977)
J.E. Silva Sifuentes: Instrumentos musicales pre-colombinos (Lima, 1978)
J. Uribe-Echevarría: Fiesta de la Virgen de Candelaria en Copiapó (Valparaíso, 1978)
J. Hill: 'Kamayurá Flute Music: a Study of Music as Meta-Communication', EthM, xxiii (1979), 417–32
C. Robertson: '"Pulling the Ancestors": Performance Practice and Praxis in Mapuche Ordering', EthM, xxiii (1979), 395–416
A. Seeger: 'What Can We Learn When They Sing? Vocal Genres of the Suya Indians of Central Brazil', EthM, xxiii (1979), 373–94
M.E. Grebe: 'Relaciones entre música y cultura: el kultrún y su simbolismo', Revista INIDEF, iv (1970–80), 7–25
M. de Civrieux: Watunna: an Orinoco Creation Cycle (San Francisco, 1980)
M.E. Grebe: Generation Models, Symbolic Structures, and Acculturation in the Panpipe Music of the Aimara of Tarapaca, Chile (diss., Queen's U. of Belfast, 1980)
R. Wright: History and Religion of the Baniwa Peoples of the Upper Rio Negro Valley (diss., Stanford U., 1981)
M.P. Baumann: 'Music of the Indios in Bolivia's Andean Highlands (Survey)', World of Music, xxiv.2 (1982), 80–96
E.R. Wolf: Europe and the People Without History (Berkeley, 1982)
J. Estrada, ed.: La música de Mexico, i: Período prehispánico (ca. 1500 a.C. a 1521 d.C.) (Mexico City, 1984)
E.B. Basso: A Musical View of the Universe: Kalapalo Myth and Ritual Performances (Philadelphia, 1985)
E. den Otter: Music and Dance of Indians and Mestizos in an Andean Valley of Peru (Delft, 1985)
D. Olsen: 'The Flutes of El Dorado: an Archaeomusicological Investigation of the Tairona Civilization of Colombia', JAMIS, xii (1986), 107–36
A. Seeger: Why Suyá Sing: a Musical Anthropology of an Amazonian People (Cambridge, 1987)
Musical Repercussions of 1492: Washington DC 1988 [incl. C. Robertson: 'The Dance of Conquest', 9–30; S. Rawcliffe: 'Complex Acoustics in the Pre-Columbian Flute Systems', 35–63; D. Olsen: 'Implications of Music Technologies in the Pre-Columbian Andes', 65–88; L. Millones: 'The Death of Atahualpa', 237–56; E. Moreno Chá: 'Encounters and Identities in Andean Brotherhoods', 413–27]
J. Bierhorst: The Mythology of South America (New York, 1988)
J. Fairley: '"The Blind Leading the Blind": Changing Perceptions of Traditional Music: the Case of the Peruvian Ayllu Sulca', Music in the Dialogue of Cultures: Berlin 1988, 272–89
L.E. Sullivan: Icanchu's Drum: an Orientation to Meaning in South American Religions (New York, 1988)

R. Harrison: Signs, Songs, and Memory in the Andes: Translating Quechua Language and Culture (Austin, 1989)
A. Cornejo Polar: 'El comienzo de la heterogeneidad en las literaturas andinas: voz y letra en el "diálogo" de Cajamarca', Revista crítica de literatura latinoamericana, xvii (1990), 155–207
M.R. Key, ed.: Language Change in South American Indian Languages (Philadelphia, 1991)
R. Wright: Stolen Continents: the Americas through Indian Eyes since 1942 (Boston, 1992)
C.L. Briggs: 'Personal Sentiments and Polyphonic Voices in Warao Women's Ritual Wailing: Music and Poetics in a Critical Collective Discourse', American Anthropologist, xcv (1993), 929–57
J.D. Hill: Keepers of the Sacred Chants: the Poetics of Ritual Power in an Amazonian Society (Tucson, AZ, 1993)
T. Turino: Moving Away from Silence: Music of the Peruvian Altiplano and the Experience of Urban Migration (Chicago, 1993)
W.B. Taylor and F. Pease, eds.: Violence, Resistance, and Survival in the Americas: Native Americans and the Legacy of Conquest (Washington DC, 1994)
A. Gruszczyńska-Ziółkowska: El poder del sonido: el papel de las crónicas españolas en la etnomusicología andina (Lima, 1995)
V.L. Hyatt and R. Nettleford, eds.: Race, Discourse, and the Origin of the Americas: a New World View (Washington DC, 1995)
J. Pérez de Arce: Música en la piedra: música prehispánica y sus ecos en Chile actual (Santiago, 1995)
D.A. Olsen: Music of the Warao of Venezuela: Song People of the Rainforest (Gainesville, FL, 1996)
H. Tomoeda and L. Millones, eds.: La tradición andina en tiempas modernos (Osaka, 1996)
C. Robertson: 'Myth, Cosmology, and Performance', The Universe of Music: Latin America, ed. M. Kuss (New York, 1998)

II. Iberian and mestizo folk music

The Spanish and Portuguese presence in the western hemisphere for over five centuries obviously resulted in various forms of retention and transformation of music and dance expressions of Iberian origin. Latin American and Spanish Caribbean countries retained not only Iberian traditions in songs and dances but also developed genres of their own emanating from those traditions generally referred to as criollo (originally meaning 'born in the New World' of Iberian origin). Particularly significant was the widespread retention of the old Iberian romancero or ballad repertory in all of Spanish and Portuguese America, the adoption and adaptation of Iberian musical instruments (especially string instruments), of dance genres, and of specific style and performance characteristics. Concurrently, the contact of Europeans with Amerindian cultures created musical traditions that exhibit varying combinations of elements of corresponding origin. The hybridization of these traditions is clearly not homogeneous in the various countries and territories, since it depends on numerous factors such as the nature and structure of native cultures, the relative degree of acculturation, the level of native resistance to the process of colonialization and the relative importance attributed to a given region by the colonizers. Thus, the degree to which a single culture predominates, whether Iberian, Amerindian or African, varies greatly among nations, and, within nations, among regions.

1. Mexico, Central America and the Caribbean. 2. South America: (i) Songs (ii) Dances, autos and dramatic dances.

1. MEXICO, CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN. The existence of a fairly sophisticated musical system by high Amerindian cultures of the Aztecs and Mayas in pre-Columbian Mesoamerica is demonstrated by archaeological evidence, the testimony of early Spanish missionaries in the form of detailed chronicles, and the study of Mexican codices and Amerindian language lexicons. At the time of the conquest in 1521, the Aztecs in central Mexico ruled over a large confederation of peoples; and their empire extended to present-day El Salvador. From their own domination of older Amerindian cultures, they inherited numerous ideas of instrument making and performance techniques.

The early missionaries in Mexico and Central America tried hard to suppress the native Amerindian musical culture. While they did not entirely succeed, as a result of their effective work much of the folk music of the Hispanic tradition found its way into the culture of almost all Mexican and Central American Amerindian groups. For example, obvious traces of Gregorian chant intonation and of old European modal melodies can be found in the shamanic chanting and singing performance of the Mazatec Indians in Oaxaca, Mexico. Moreover, songs of the Otomí Indians of north-east Mexico follow the characteristic triplet figurations of Spanish folksong and have elements of major tonality emphasizing tonic and third, as shown by the studies of Vicente Mendoza, a well-known authority on Mexican traditional music. Other Otomí songs give even greater evidence of European influence in their parallel 3rds and 6ths. Concurrently, these songs retain traditional Amerindian traits, such as small range and short melodies with but a few tones. Regardless of the origins of the varied elements of their musical expressions, contemporary Amerindian groups have fully assimilated them as integral parts of their cultures.

Despite its strong Amerindian roots, Mexican and Central American folk music derives substantially from its Spanish heritage. This Hispanic domination is not only the result of the early missionary work in the area but also of the Amerindians' highly praised aptitude to learn and assimilate European music, a fact made possible by the existence of strong indigenous musical traditions in pre-Columbian times. Contemporary mestizo music exhibits a variety of scales, but the classic European major and minor modes predominate, especially in the various regional sones and other song types. Iberian folk polyphony (parallel 3rds and 6ths) as well as hemiola rhythmic structure constitute conspicuous traits of Mexican and Central American folk music in both instrumental and vocal performances. Likewise, Spanish popular literary forms (décima, copla) are the most frequently found in folksongs of the area.

Several membranophones, idiophones and aerophones of pre-Columbian origin are still in use in contemporary Mexico and Central America. The huehuetl single-headed drum is still played in central, southern and south-eastern Mexico. The teponaztli slit drum is even more widespread, as is its Mayan counterpart, the tun or tunkul, in Guatemala. Turtle-shell rasps continue to accompany sones in the isthmus of Tehuantepec. Whistle flutes, vertical flutes with varying numbers of finger-holes and panpipes are found throughout the area. The African-derived marimba is especially popular in Oaxaca, Chiapas and from Guatemala to Costa Rica in various forms. Despite the numerous attempts in Guatemala to prove the pre-Columbian origin of the marimba, there is no definite archaeological evidence to indicate that the original marimba de tecomates (i.e. of calabash resonators tuned to a diatonic scale) is of Amerindian provenance, despite the popularity of the instrument among Amerindians since the 18th century. The Guatemalan marimba was probably introduced in the early colonial period by African slaves, since it is remarkably similar to African xylophones, not only in its actual construction but in the particular buzzing sound resulting from a vibrating membrane attached to a circle of wax around an opening at the bottom of the resonators. All other folk instruments are derived or adapted from European instruments. Particularly significant are string instruments, including the standard violin, diatonic harp (the largest one of 35 strings), and a large number of instruments relating to the Spanish vihuela and guitar families, among them the standard guitar, the vihuela (five-string with convex shape), jarana or guitarra de golpe (five-string small guitar), requinto (six-string guitar somewhat smaller than the classic guitar), cuatro, guitarra huapanguera (eight strings in five courses), guitarrón (large five-string bass guitar), bajo sexto (six courses of double strings), mandolin and psaltery. The accordion (primarily the diatonic, button type) is the principal instrument of the northern conjuntos (or ensembles) but also appears as far south as Chiapas. The tradition of the brass band, developed in both Amerindian and mestizo communities, has proliferated everywhere. This is in part due to military service and military band traditions and constitutes a matter of civic pride in all communities.

The major genre of mestizo folk music in Mexico is the son which, despite its many regional differences, can be defined as music associated with dance, with specific literary form and verse contents and with specific regional instrumental ensembles. Although primarily an instrumental genre, the son includes singing as a rule, in alternating instrumental ('música') and vocal ('verso') sections. The main secular vocal genres of Mexican mestizo folk music are the corrido and the canción. Related to the Spanish romance, the corrido is the main ballad of Mexico, Central America and some of the Spanish Caribbean countries. Set in the usual copla (four-line stanza of octosyllabic lines) or décima form (ten-line verse), the corrido (also designated as romance, historia, tragedia, bola, mañanitas, versos etc.) exhibits a general melodic structure of one or two symmetrical and isometric phrases, repeated as often as the text demands it (the length varies from six to 78 stanzas), in typical strophic form. Corridos deal with a wide array of subjects, from old chivalry and love stories to historical events and figures (particularly significant is the corrido repertory of the Mexican Revolution of 1910), to local current events and sociopolitical protest. The corrido singer or corridista follows certain general formulae in telling the story: calling the audience's attention, statement of the place and date of the event to be narrated and the name of the main character of the story; presentation of the main parts of the story; message; farewell of the main character and the corridista. A corrido is performed by one or two voices, with the accompaniment of guitar, violin and guitar, accordion or harp. With the increased popularity of conjuntos norteños (northern ensembles consisting of accordion, bajo sexto and double bass) and mariachis (developed in the state of Jalisco and consisting of male voices, violins, guitars, vihuelas, jaranas, guitarrón and trumpets), corridos written by popular composers such as José Alfredo Jiménez (1926–72) are sung by a solo voice with the support of an orchestra, in Mariachi or norteño style.

Although the term canción is applied generically to any song, it is more specifically understood as a Mexican mestizo song of lyric expression, outside any dance context (with a few exceptions, such as the polka songs of northern Mexico and the waltz songs of Tehuantepec). The wide range of sources of this lyric expression explains the great diversity of the genre, but many of the characteristics of 19th-century Italian opera and musical comedy have exerted profound influence on the canción, such as long, expanded melodic phrases and operatic vocal style of performance. Vicente Mendoza has classified the canción according to the following criteria: the metre of the versification, the musical structure, the geographical features which it describes, the area of the country in which it is sung, the character of the tune, the age or occupation of the users and the rhythm of the accompaniment expressed in terms of European dance forms. The canción appears both in rural and urban contexts. Numerous songs of the canción romántica mexicana (Mexican romantic song) type, written by such venerated composers of popular music as Agustín Lara, Tata Nacho and Guty Cárdenas, have won such lasting recognition that they are part of the repertory of the whole mestizo population. Among the songs of the northern region of Mexico (canciones norteñas) are rancheras, extremely popular sentimental songs with march-, polka- or waltz-influenced accompaniment in varying tempos. An affected performance style (ringing vocal production, contrasting dynamics) is particularly appropriate for conveying the melodramatic character of many rancheras.

Numerous dramatic dances of Iberian origin, such as the dance of Christians and Moors, illustrate the integration of indigenous and mestizo Christian and musical practices in Mexico and Central America. In Mexico the tradition of the concheros is especially symbolic of that integration. Also known as danzantes de la conquista ('dancers of the conquest'), corporaciones de danza Azteca or chichimeca ('corporations of Aztec dance or chichimeca'), they supposedly represent defeated Amerindians who converted to Catholicism and became active soldiers of spiritual conquest in the 16th century. Contemporary concheros consider themselves the descendants of the ancient Mexicans, marking their identity through Amerindian dress, elaborate feather headdresses, use of teponaztli and huehuetl, and observance of some ritual elements which could be pre-Hispanic. Their main melodic and harmonic instrument is the concha, a guitar of five courses of double strings made from an armadillo shell, from which their name derives. Mandolins are also added to the ensemble. They wear large jingles (huesos) made of seed shells around their ankles. They organize themselves as a sort of spiritual army, with military titles, but their musical instruments are their weapons, their rituals entirely musical and choreographic. The two principal ceremonies are the velación, private rite to Catholic saints and to the spirits of ancestor-concheros (known as ánimas conquistadoras or 'conquest souls') and the danza itself. The latter is a public ceremony, performed at least four times a year, in four major sanctuaries, of which those of Chalma and Villa de Guadalupe are the most important. The greeting, offering and praise songs follow a familiar Hispanic-mestizo style, in call and response, with the choral answers in characteristic parallel 3rds and 6ths; popular Catholic hymns and alabanzas (praise hymns) are the main genres. Only instrumental music (mandolins, conchas, huehuetl, teponaztli) accompany the public dance. Since the 1970s, the danza azteca and the conchero groups have spread throughout the south-western United States, from Texas to California, as a strong key symbol of Mexican-American identity.

The 'Spanish' Caribbean, composed of the islands of Cuba, the Dominican Republic and Puerto Rico, demonstrate more their Hispanic than their African heritage, although the contribution of the latter to mestizo folk music is considerable. Hispanic-related genres among the Cuban guajiros (rural farmers) of the eastern provinces and the interior of the country, include the song types décima guajira, guajira and punto, all exhibiting the same main stylistic peculiarities as most Iberian-mestizo folk music throughout Latin America. The décima represents the improvised song text, frequently in controversias, poetic-singing contests. As a song and dance, the punto is found not only in Cuba but in the Dominican Republic, Puerto Rico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama. Among Puerto Rican jíbaros (peasants) the prevailing genre is the seis whose Spanish character comes not only from the use of the décima espinela in its song text but also from the frequent harmonies based on the 'Andalucian cadence' (a descending conjunct motion of the roots of alternating major and minor triads) and a specific tense vocal style associated with cante hondo or flamenco music. The typical accompanying ensemble of the seis includes a guitar, a tiple (small guitar of five courses of single or double strings), a bordonúa (large six-string guitar) and the Puerto Rican cuatro (a guitar-like instrument with five courses of double strings).

The impact of African culture on Caribbean music is so pre-eminent that the most important genres of song and dance music belong properly to the Afro-Caribbean tradition (see §III below).

2. South America.

(i) Songs. Because song functions in conjunction with dancing in a very high proportion of repertories, there are relatively few independent song genres in South American folk music. Throughout the continent one finds several song types derived from the old Spanish romance, the typical ballad dating to the early Renaissance, based on the décima (ten-line verse) form or four-line stanzas with octosyllabic lines (the copla poetic structure, with rhyme schemes of ABCB, known as rima romancera). Under different local names, romances have been preserved, sometimes in their original form (e.g. in the Chocó province of Colombia) and sometimes with significant variations which reveal the characteristic feeling and world view of the mestizos of a given region. Improvised coplas of a narrative nature frequently replace the romance as the ballad genre (although they are derived from it), especially in Mexico, Colombia, the Andean countries and Argentina. Typically, romances and coplas describe, in an epic lyrical manner, famous historical events of a region, the feats of a folk hero or episodes of daily life. Apart from their poetic and musical value, they often provide significant sociological data, expressed for the most part in metaphorical language. Ex.7 shows two versions of a traditional romance known in Lima, Peru. Entitled La esposa difunta o la aparición, its origin has been traced to 16th-century Spain. The regular two- and four-bar phrases and their isometric structure are characteristic of Spanish folksong. Literary versions of the same romance have been collected from New Mexico, California, Mexico and Nicaragua to the Spanish Caribbean, Venezuela, Ecuador and several provinces of Argentina, confirming the wide diffusion of the romance tradition.

Ex.7 La esposa difunta o la Aparición, two versions (Romero, C1952)

Other folksongs, such as the Argentine and Chilean tonadas and tonos, have maintained other old Spanish literary forms. The glosa and the décima are, respectively, a quatrain which sets the basic subject or story and a development of the basic subject in a stanza of ten octosyllabic lines. This structure is found in Chilean, Peruvian, Ecuadorian and Colombian décimas, Argentine estilos and cifras, and in many other genres, such as the guabina of Colombia or the romances and xácaras of Luso-Brazilian folk music. The classical rhyme scheme of the Spanish décima, abbaaccddc, known as décima espinela (after Vicente Espinel who first introduced it in the 16th century), prevails in most of the folksong types mentioned.

Actual Iberian folk melodies extant in Spain and Portugal, however, are very rare in Latin America. Children's songs (particularly round-play songs and lullabies) seem to be the notable exceptions, for many of them remain basically the same in both areas. The problem of determining the sources of Iberian tunes in Latin American folk music is generally unsolved. But we can say with some certainty that the tunes sung in Latin America are for the most part not simply imports from Spain and Portugal, although the texts more frequently are. They are more usually songs composed in Latin America in the styles brought from Europe, or those brought from Europe centuries ago but so changed by oral tradition that their European relatives can no longer be recognized. It should also be considered that perhaps the European tunes have themselves undergone change. This situation is not paralleled among the minority groups living in South America, including Germans, East Europeans and Italians, for although they have preserved many songs brought from Europe, they have not created much new material in corresponding styles.

An extensive study by Grebe in 1967 of the Chilean verso (also known as canto a lo poeta), a traditional type of sung poetry, has conclusively shown stylistic similarities with Spanish medieval and Renaissance genres such as cantigas and villancicos, especially regarding modality, cadential practices and both strict and free metrical and rhythmic styles. The poetas or cantores perform versos accompanying themselves with a guitar or more commonly the guitarrón (not to be confused with the Mexican instrument of the same name), an older type of guitar of 25 strings, 21 of them grouped in five courses, the remaining four (sympathetic) strings directly attached in pairs to the table of the soundbox on each side of the neck. The accompaniment alternates mostly between tonic and dominant chords. Quite apart from their poetry, which ranges from biblical stories to Spanish historical and legendary accounts of the Middle Ages, the musical behaviour and customs of the folk cantores reveal striking similarities to the Spanish medieval juglar and other European types of troubadour.

Archaic musical elements are also found in the cantoria (generic term for poetic singing of a predominantly narrative nature) of north-east Brazil, as well as in some folk melody types associated with the desafio (challenge), used in singing contests, with frequently improvised texts consisting of questions and answers performed by two singers, often in antiphonal structure with instrumental interludes (by a viola, a Portuguese folk guitar of five courses of double strings) between the vocal sections. The most common literary form of desafio in Brazil is the six-line heptasyllabic stanza, common in Portuguese folk poetry. One of the most popular song types associated with the desafio is the embolada, found throughout Brazil's hinterland but originally from the north-east. Mostly improvised, it is declamatory in character and presents a typical refrain in addition to the six-line stanza. As in many Brazilian songs, the refrain makes use of alliteration, assonance and onomatopoeia in a syncopated melodic line with many repeated tones and an unusually fast tempo. The text of the embolada, based on stereotyped models, comments on local customs and criticizes figures and events of the community in a very humorous, satirical and provocative manner.

Song genres similar to the desafio and forming part of the song-duel tradition of southern Europe are widely used elsewhere in South America, such as the contrapunto and cifra in Argentina and Uruguay, the payas in Chile and porfías in Venezuela.

Lyrical love songs abound in South American folk music. Generically known as tonadas in the Spanish-speaking countries and toadas in Brazil, they appear, typically, in four-, five-, or ten-line stanzas, sometimes incorporating a refrain. The Argentine estilo will serve as an example. According to Isabel Aretz (1952), the estilo is a well-defined lyrical song genre made up of two melodic ideas, the 'theme', properly speaking, and somewhat faster strain known as alegre. The overall form of the song is ternary, ABA. The text of the estilo is generally set in quatrains or in décimas. The estilo is also common in Uruguay. Ex.8 illustrates the characteristics of the genre: guitar accompaniment (both picked and strummed styles), vocal duet in parallel 3rds and the theme and alegre sections.

A fairly important body of folksongs in South America comes from folk and popular religious customs accompanying the liturgical calendar of the Catholic church. Here too the repertory exhibits a close relationship with the Iberian peninsula. The hymns and songs of praise brought over by Spanish and Portuguese missionaries are variously known as alabados, alabanzas, salves (hymns of praise) in Spanish, and cantigas de romarias (songs of pilgrimage) in Portuguese. Most of them are predominantly modal and follow the traditional pattern of folk hymn singing, i.e. alternation of the estribillo (the refrain), performed by the chorus and the copla (stanza), performed by one or two soloists. In the Chocó province of Colombia, inhabited mostly by black Colombians, alabados, romances and salves are performed antiphonally at various wakes for an adult or a child to pay tribute to the dead person; the text is improvised and frequently alludes to the life story of that person. In responsorial style, these songs maintain an archaic character through the modal structures of the solo lines and polyphonic choral responses in parallel 4ths and 5ths. Many religious folksongs are associated with the Christmas season. Thus the traditional Spanish villancico has developed into many folksong types, known as aguinaldo, adoración, coplas de Navidad, esquinazo and others in the various countries. While most of them obviously relate to their Spanish counterpart, they also show many mestizo or criollo characteristics. For example, the Venezuelan villancicos and aguinaldos are in 2/4, 6/8 or 3/4 metres, with regular phrases of two- and four-bar lengths, major and minor mode or bi-modality, melodies in parallel 3rds with a range not exceeding a 6th, almost total absence of modulation and chromaticism and syllabic setting of the text. All are features occurring in the Hispanic-American Christmas repertory. But most aguinaldos differ from the Spanish villancico in their complex rhythmic accompaniment, provided by an ensemble consisting of cuatro (a small four-string guitar, different from the Puerto Rican instrument of the same name) and various percussion instruments, based on the alternation of binary and ternary rhythmic figures common in mestizo dances such as the merengue and the guasá. The melodies of the Venezuelan aguinaldos tend also to be more syncopated than those of the Spanish villancico. Ex.9 shows some of the features of the aguinaldo.

Ex.8 Estilo (Aretz, 1952)

Work songs also constitute an important part of the South American folksong repertory. The various genres of work song naturally reflect the predominant agricultural labour in the rural areas. The Spanish zafra song refers to the olive harvest in Spain, and the same term is generally used for the sugar cane harvest in the Caribbean

Ex.9 Aguinaldo. Venezuela (Aretz, 1962)

So-mos la Ven - ce - do - ra
CUATRO
CHARRASCA
MARACAS
FURRUCO
TAMBORA etc
de - ja su sa - lu - do to - do Ve - ne - zue - la
F C7
le qui - tó su es - cu - do So-mos la Ven - ce - do - ra F F C7 F C7
de - ja su sa - lu - do to-do Ve - ne - zue - la
B♭ B♭ F
le qui - tó su es - cu - do
C7 F

and for any type of agricultural work in the Atlantic coastal area of Colombia. The copla forms the most common basis for the texts of the Colombian zafras, although interjections, typical cries (gritos), the addition of syllables at the beginning and ending of verses and the occasional insertion of new verses give the performances an improvisatory character. In the same area of Colombia, cattle-herding songs known as vaquerías are performed in responsorial fashion between several vaqueros walking or riding in front and at the rear of the herd. According to List (B1983), the terms zafra and vaquería refer in the strictest sense to singing styles rather than to song genres. The two are similar in their rather free form, which is made up of various improvised combinations of melodic patterns, and in the style of vocal production, which favours a very high tessitura. A comparable type of herding song is the Brazilian aboio de gado performed by vaqueiros in south-central and north-east Brazil. It is stylistically different from its Portuguese counterpart in that it involves non-lexical syllables, has no recurrent pulse, and is sometimes sung in parallel 3rds in the highest tessitura with long sustained tones and vocal glissandi. Another type of Brazilian work song, the aboio da roça, functions in general agricultural labour contexts and emphasizes a rhythmic pulse matching the pace and rhythm of the corresponding labour.

(ii) Dances, autos and dramatic dances. South America enjoys a well-known distinction in the category of secular folk and popular dances, many of which originated in the Iberian peninsula and retain significant traits specific to much Spanish folkdancing (zapateado shoe tapping, finger snapping, use of scarf or handkerchief). This is the case of the Argentine chacarera, whose name is derived from chacra meaning 'farm' (from the Quechua Indian chagra 'cornfield'). The chacarera was probably created by the farmers of the pampas, the plains of the province of Buenos Aires. Musically, the Spanish ancestry is also evident in the use of hemiola rhythm (alternating 6/8 and 3/4 metres) in the instrumental introduction. Another important criolla (i.e. native but of Hispanic origin) dance widespread throughout the Argentine countryside is the gato, from which other dances are derived. Its dance figures include shoe-tapping steps performed by women who, like female flamenco dancers, lift their long skirts to show agile foot movements. Male dancers perform another very familiar figure known as escobillado (or escobilleo), a very fast movement consisting of swinging one foot after the other while scraping the ground. Rhythmically, the most characteristic formula of the gato alternates 6/8 and 3/4 metres (the hemiola rhythm again).

The zamba is one of the many Argentine couple-dances. A danza de pañuelo (scarf dance) also found in Peru, Chile and Ecuador, it involves a symbolic code in use and function of the scarf. The history of the zamba is rather obscure. A late colonial Peruvian criolla dance known as zamacueca (or zambacueca) was introduced into Argentina during the first half of the 19th century. Out of this dance emerged the zamba, on the one hand, and the cueca on the other. The latter has become one of the most familiar dances of Bolivia and Chile. In Peru and the western provinces of Argentina the name chilena was used to designate the Chilean cueca. As a result of the Pacific war (1879) between Peru and Chile, in Peru the chilena became the marinera. Thus, the names zamba, cueca, chilena, and marinera have acquired specific meanings in the various countries. Although they are all flirtation dances and share the same basic rhythmic organization (with 6/8 and 3/4 metres), they differ in melodic types, tempos and instrumental accompaniment. The Chilean cueca presents a more complex poetic and musical structure: two musical phrases are set to a text made up of three elements, i.e. a cuarteta (quatrain), a seguidilla (seven lines) and a pareado (two lines). In actual performance, a number of extemporized stock verbal interjections (muletillas) may be added at will in any of the three basic components.

Among the main social dances of the Andes is the huayno (commonly called huayño in Bolivia), popular among Amerindians and mestizos from north-west Argentina to Ecuador, where it is known as sanjuanito (a term that could be derived from use of the diminutive huaynito rather than San Juan). Originally an Amerindian dance, the huayno has been adopted by mestizos as their own and continues to be very relevant in contemporary societies. Huayno music can be strictly instrumental or both vocal and instrumental. Vocal Amerindian huaynos are generally sung in the native languages (Quechua and Aymara), although lyrics in both Spanish and Quechua are not uncommon. Aymara huaynos tend to be strictly instrumental, performed by sicuri bands (panpipes) or pincullo (vertical flute) or tarka (duct flute) ensembles. In lively tempo, the huayno appears most of the time in duple metre and in binary form, consisting of two phrases of equal length (frequently isometric) repeated ad libitum. Versions alternating triple and duple metre (or compound duple), or simply alternating binary and ternary divisions in a single metre, are fairly frequent. Ex.10 shows one of the most typical versions of the huayno, from the Cuzco area, with a standard descending anhemi-pentatonic tune (mode E♭–C–B♭–A♭–F), with common syncopated lines and the usual cadential falling minor 3rd.

Especially in the Andean region of South America it is difficult in many contexts of music-making to differentiate the musical features of Amerindian origin from those of the European tradition, as the elements of the two cultures combined to form inseparable units. While mestizo culture and society have been dominant (and hegemonic), mestizo music and dance have incorporated more of the Amerindian heritage of the area than any other region of South America and European-derived elements have been 'Andeanized' to a great extent. European string instruments (violin, guitar, harp and mandolin), for example, are performed in a uniquely Amerindian manner and represent an important aspect of Amerindian aesthetic systems. Mestizo, criollo and Amerindian genres are often integrated in actual performance, for example the yaravi (a song type of pre-Columbian origin) often precedes the huayno, while the huayno and marinera frequently form a logical pair.

Ex.10 Typical huayno kaypipas, Cuzco, Peru; coll. C. Pagazu Galdo, transcr. R. Holzmann (Pagaza Galdo, *c*1967)

Many Brazilian folkdances and corresponding musical genres exhibit considerable European retentions. For example, many of the round-dance types used in the fandangos of southern Brazil are popular rural revelries in which regional dances, such as the tirana, tatu, balaio, recortado, chimarrita and many others are performed. Thus fandango was transformed in Brazil into a generic term, which suggests that the Spanish dance of the same name was once popular there, as it was in Portugal. The numerous designations of these dances derive from their song texts. The singing, in which stanza and refrain alternate and which is always in parallel 3rds and 6ths, is the responsibility of the viola players. In the coastal area of the southern states, the fiddle is common, and in Rio Grande do Sul the accordion has become a popular accompanying instrument of the fandango dances.

The transfer of the Roman Catholic religion to South America has generated a series of more or less complex autos (folk religious plays with dance and music) and popular dramatizations of the Christian liturgical festivities, such as the Nativity and the journey of the Magi, the Lent and Easter cycle, and the Holy Cross, as well as the commemoration of saints' days. Many of these dramatic dances resulted at first from the Iberian catechetical theatre and became true rituals as cycles of syncretic religious feasts. Among these feasts Carnival has remained the most popular. Syncretism with Amerindian and African belief systems and practices is often present. In Brazil, for example, the central subject of many dramatic dances is always religious. Conversion and resurrection as symbolic rites of passage are the main themes of such dances as congada, marujada, moçambique, quilombo, caiapó and cabocolinhos, among others. In the catechization process, the medieval crusades represented in the Iberian peninsula as dances of Christians and Moors (Danza de Moros y Cristianos) were incorporated in similar dances in Hispanic America, where the native infidels became the 'Moors'.

In Paraguay, northern Argentina and Brazil, the Jesuits in particular were responsible for diffusing many of these dances and for giving them unity and uniformity. Indeed, the congada, for example, known all over Brazil, combines elements of the popular religious theatre of the peninsula with Afro-Brazilian traditions and customs, such as the coronation of black kings during the slave period. But in spite of its name and the fact that blacks participate in it in large numbers, the history of the dance suggests that it is not of African origin, but simply a remembrance of and inspiration from the Chanson de Roland (the well-known medieval French chanson de geste) wisely turned to the advantage of the catechist-missionary. The songs accompanying the cortège, which is led by the main characters (including Roland himself and Charlemagne), show typical traits of Portuguese folksongs. A number of dramatic dances also refer to the great maritime exploration of Spain and Portugal in the 15th and 16th centuries, but always in conjunction with their civilizing mission of converting the native populations of the conquered territories.

In the Andean area, on the other hand, many indigenous dances of Aymara and Quechua Amerindian origin, including pantomime dances, have become traditional for celebrating Catholic religious feasts. Particularly widespread are the numerous festivals honouring patron saints in various cities, towns and villages. These patronal fiestas involve Amerindians and mestizos in various combinations of pre-Columbian and Spanish traditions of dances and songs. Numerous other dramatic dances are reminiscent of events from the Conquest period or of the glory of the past, such as the well-known Baile del Inca, reminding one of the last Inca leader Atahualpa's cruel death.

III. Afro-American music

The sub-Saharan African presence in the cultural history of Latin America and the Caribbean has been deeply significant not only in the preservation of African diasporic cultural expressions, under slavery conditions, but also in the creation of sui generis cultural traditions resulting from the absorption of imposed foreign cultural values and, through this process, in the strongly influential contribution to various aspects of mestizo expressive culture thoughout Latin America. Despite centuries of oppression and racial discrimination, Latin Americans of African descent have been integrated and acculturated to such a large extent that the general acceptance of what constitutes, ethnically and culturally, an Afro-American in the Latin American context is not as unequivocal as in North America. As a result, the definition of 'black' music becomes extremely complex, for, with the exception of a few important religious contexts of music making in which African musical elements and functions are strongly preserved, Afro-Iberian and Afro-Caribbean music represent another significant phase of mestizo culture. In many areas, acculturation of African peoples has affected other ethnic groups or the wide range of mestizo groups. In such cases we are confronted with ethnically diverse groups with a remarkably homogeneous 'black' culture. Race alone, therefore, cannot be considered a sole criterion for identifying Afro-Iberian musical styles, and while Africanisms are stressed here, it should always be borne in mind that Afro-Iberian music cuts across ethnic lines.

1. Mexico, Central America and the Caribbean. The African contribution to Mexican folk music has been traditionally neglected or minimized. Only in the 1980s did Mexico begin to recognize the 'third root' (tercera raíz) of its traditional music and the Caribbean affinity of some of its expressions. Mexican scholars began then to search for the specific elements of what they called the 'Afro-mestizo' traditions of mostly the Gulf Coast (Huasteca region, the southern portion of Veracruz and the state of Tabasco) and the Pacific coastal area in Jalisco, the 'tierra caliente' (hot land) of Michoacán and Guerrero, and of the 'Costa Chica' (small coast) of Guerrero and Oaxaca states. The music of the Afro-mestizo communities of the Costa Chica reveals the most obvious African-related percussion practice, as seen in the sones de artesa and sones de diablos. In addition, the complex rhythmic structures of the son jarocho, the jarabe, the chilena, gusto and zapateo have been assigned some African influence, mostly in relation to the frequency of the hemiola pattern and the reliance on percussive effects, even with string instruments such as the harp and jaranas.

In Guatemala, Honduras and Belize the Garífuna, who are descendents of maroons and Caribs from St. Vincent, retain a remarkably African-like musical tradition in their main dances and instruments, such as the drum garaon performing the rhythm and dance known as punta or culeado, urbanized and modernized as the punta rock. A genre of ritual song, the dugu, also constitutes a significant aspect of Garífuna culture in Honduras. Nicaragua and Costa Rica have low percentages of black population (mostly along the Atlantic coast, around Bluefields and Limón, respectively), most of it with close historical and cultural ties to the British Caribbean (Jamaica and Trinidad). Thus some of the musical expressions of that population are related to Jamaican spiritual baptists, calypso and Carnival celebration. In Panama a large number of people of African descent (both slaves during the Colonial period and Caribbean blacks) play an important role in contemporary folk music. This African musical heritage is best expressed in the mimetic dance–theatre known as los congos, performing congadas, coming from a black colonial tradition, and also in the types of drums accompanying most Panamanian folk dances and in their dancing style (Afro-Hispanic sensual choreography), including the national dance, the tamborito, and the well-known Afro-Panamanian and Afro-Colombian cumbia.

In the Caribbean predominantly West African religions have been retained with considerable transformation in Cuba, Haiti, Jamaica and Trinidad. It is in the sacred contexts of Cuban Santería, Haitian Vodou, Jamaican Kumina, and Trinidadian Shango music that traditional African elements are most strongly preserved. These Afro-Caribbean religions recognize the African Yoruba (orishás) and Fon (voduns) deities (or some local reinterpretations of them) and are based on a belief system and on practices essentially African. Varying degrees of syncretism, however, are found almost everywhere. Most religious groups show features of Christian beliefs, although not necessarily a recognition of a Christian god or saint. Often, as a result of socio-historical accommodation to the conditions of slavery, a Catholic saint has been assimilated into the personality of an African deity, or, more likely, the saint served originally to camouflage the African god. The equivalence of saints and deities is not uniform throughout the area. As developed in these countries, these African religions are monotheistic (the recognition of a supreme God), animistic in nature, and involve a pantheon of major and lesser deities, each of which is worshipped with characteristic ceremonies, songs and drum rhythms. The ritual performance activities are almost always rendered liturgically meaningful through songs which correspond to the various myths involving the deities. The most obvious African features prevailing in these activities include the offerings to the god (with the ritual use of blood through animal sacrifices), initiatory rites, ritual dancing with a highly symbolic choreography, personification of the deities through spirit possession, and divinatory practices, among others.

The most important Afro-Cuban religions include the Lucumí (derived from the Yoruba of Nigeria), the Kimbisa or Mayombé (from the Congo area) and the Abakuá (combining beliefs of the other cults; its members are referred to as ñáñigos). Various societies such as the Regla de Ocha (Santería), Regla de Palo Monte, and Regla Arará, among others, present complex corpora of ritual elements in which music and dance are fully integrated. Lucumí music typically is made up of responsorial singing (the solo lines often performed by the cult leader or the master drummer), with monophonic choral responses, accompanied by drums and bells. The Yoruba sacred batá drums (double-headed with each head of a different size) are played with bare hands, as in Nigeria, in a battery of three: the largest (iyá, i.e. 'mother') played by the master drummer with frequent improvisations, the medium-sized (itótele) and smallest (okónkolo) drums performing a set rhythmic pattern with slight variants (ex.11). Cycles of songs are performed in a prescribed ritual order, according to specific liturgical functions, and the texts of the songs appear mostly in the Yoruba and various Congo languages.

Among the Haitian cult groups are the Vodou or Rada religion (from the Arada-Nago family), the Pétro group (Congo-Guinée family) and other lesser family groups. The Vodou religious group is entirely based on the Fon religion of the ancient kingdom of Abomey and Alada in present-day Benin, but with a number of mythical reinterpretations and the development of a religious language based on Creole, including the names of the deities (lwa) which, nevertheless, retain the same general attributes of the African voduns. The practices of initiation, mandatory offerings to the deities, ritual dancing and songs as integral parts of the spirit possession phenomenon are also observed in Haitian traditional religions.

Ex.11 Lucumi Batá drum pattern to the deity Obba. From Fernando Ortíz, La africanía de la música folklórica de Cuba (Havana: Ediciones Cardenas y Cia., 1950), pp. 417–18

The Afro-Dominican folk music tradition has been deliberately neglected in the Dominican Republic as a result of a prevailing strong Hispanocentric ideology in that country. But the African presence is evidenced in certain collective worksongs and through the use of the palos and atabales (long drums), mostly associated with the rituals of religious brotherhoods (cofradías), such as the Brotherhood of the Holy Spirit of Villa Mella and that of St. John the Baptist of Baní. In addition, the music of the gagá groups (the Lenten carnivalesque vodou-related societies) originally from Haiti (known there as rarás) is considered a bonafide Haitian-Dominican expression. Likewise, Dominican vodú or espiritismo has gradually gained popularity since the 1980s. The main genre of traditional secular dance music, the folk merengue (especially the Cibao regional variant called perico ripiao), reveals a number of Afro-Dominican musical and dance features, as do other mestizo genres.

The countries of Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago preserve various aspects of Afro-Caribbean religious music: non-Christian groups in the case of the Shango religion in Trinidad and of the Kumina and Rastafarians in Jamaica; Christian groups as in the Spiritual Baptists or 'Shouters' of Trinidad and the Pukkomina, Spiritual Baptists and Revival Zions of Jamaica. Specific types of songs, drum music and performance practices show traditional African elements in the non-Christian religions, and harmonized choruses and Anglo-American hymnody among the Christian groups. All, however, tend to follow a predominantly overlapping responsorial practice. The music of the Revivalist groups is very similar to black Protestant music of the southern USA, combining various types of traditional hymnody with an important body of 19th century gospel hymns. The influence of the latter in Jamaica is such that the hymns are referred to as 'sankeys' from Ira D. Sankey, the American evangelist singer and lead musician associated with the revivalist group of Dwight L. Moody.

In the area of secular music Caribbean songs and dances owe much to the Afro-Caribbean heritage. Afro-Cuban genres (with European and African roots) such as the son, guaracha, and rumba reveal a sub-Saharan African conception of rhythmic organization in which timbric contrast (in both voices and instruments) has great significance. In the son, for example, so central in Cuban and Caribbean music at large, the various instruments (especially bongos, tres guitar, marímbula [rumba box], claves, maracas and tumbadora) present various rhythmic cells, known as tumbaos, forming cross-rhythmic and polyrhythmic textures, with much freedom and exciting variants. Improvisation is paramount in the rumba (existing in three different choreographic forms: guaguancó, yambú and columbia) in which the highest-pitched drum (quinto) is free to improvise at will, establishing a sort of dialogue with the improvising solo voice and a form of challenge with the male dancer, while the tumbadora and the palitos (sticks on woodblock) establish a contrast with regular mostly unchanging patterns, paralleling the set harmonized choral responses. The son summarizes in many different ways the basic elements and qualities of Afro-Cuban and, by extension, Afro-Caribbean music. Other closely related styles and genres, such as the nengón, changüi, guaracha and hybrids (guaguancó-son, bolero-son, etc.), attest to the centrality of the Cuban son. Even the pan-Hispanic genre of popular music that emerged in the late 1960s, salsa, owes a great deal to the son (see §IV).

Afro-Puerto Rican folk music traditions developed originally in the southern coast of the island in and around Ponce. The bailes de bomba and the plena are the genres with the strongest Afro-Caribbean connection. Bomba designates a dance and its music dating back to the times of slavery and the generic drums (barrel-like single-headed cylindrical instruments) used in it. Besides the various sizes of bomba drums, other instruments participate in the dance performance, especially the burlador (the largest drum functioning as the main improviser), the requinto (a smaller drum), wooden sticks (the cuás), claves and maracas. The bailes de bomba (bomba dances) were performed in the sugar cane fields and might have had some religious relationship, but in contemporary times they animate various secular social 'fiesta' occasions. The bomba involves responsorial singing in which the soloist may improvise songtexts. As a brief narrative song, the plena has emerged since the 1920s as a major genre of Puerto Rican working class identity, frequently commenting in critical and satirical terms on local socio-political issues. Its connection to Afro-Puerto Rican musical tradition is due mainly to Afro-Caribbean related rhythms and dance character, as well as the use of conga drums, bongos, the pandereta (hand drums) of Spanish origin but performed sui generis, and melodic instruments such as the Puerto Rican cuatro.

A number of song and dance genres are associated with Carnival celebration throughout the Caribbean. In Cuba, the Santiago Carnival is especially noteworthy, with its percussion groups (descargas) and the various parading dance and musical comparsas. In Trinidad, calypso song, calypso tent and steel drum ensembles have all been associated with Carnival celebration (see §IV).

2. SOUTH AMERICA. Afro-American music in South America is found in various forms primarily in Suriname, the Guyanas, Venezuela, Colombia, Brazil, and secondarily in smaller enclaves in Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, and Uruguay. The relationship of music expressions and black ethnicity and identity is by no means homogeneous in South America. As opposed to many Caribbean countries, with very few exceptions, black communities in South America are mostly minorities, despite the varying regional distribution of the black population. In most cases, they are marginalized and often adopt the ideology of négritude as the essence of their cultural, sometimes class, identity. At the same time, many black communities also share in and contribute to the Iberian-American mestizo expressions, so that they exhibit a truly unique form of expression, thereby transcending ethnic origin in favour of regional or national integration.

As in the Caribbean, it is in the sacred and secular ritual music repertories that the more black African stylistic elements are found. African religions (generically known as candomblé in Bahia) are retained in Brazil and the songs, rhythmic patterns and percussion improvisation of the most traditional groups follow, by and large, West African styles and functions, especially Yoruba and Fon religious practices as transferred and developed in that country. Such styles include anhemitonic pentatonic and hexatonic descending melodies, percussion accompaniment, and responsorial performing practices, with monophonic choral responses and African-related vocal production. Although the styles are strongly African the repertories are most likely of local elaboration. Cycles of songs are performed in a fairly well-established ritual order, as invocations and offerings to the gods (Yoruba orixás, Fon voduns). Songtexts appear in various languages, from Yoruba (Nagô), Fon and various Congo languages to Portuguese, and, among some groups, a combination of these. Typically, songtexts refer to the various myths associated with the deities, as reinterpreted in Brazil. Music fulfils primarily a sacralizing function and as such is totally integrated within the liturgical precepts of the Afro-Brazilian religions. The latter represent a focal point of resistance to the dominating culture and serve as an important symbolic source of Afro-Brazilian identity in contemporary times.

The rhythmic structure of candomblé music reveals a typically African sense of rhythm whereby regular motoric unchangeable parts are contrasted with improvised parts. Ritual drumming occurs as an accompaniment to song performances and solo (ex.12). Specific rhythmic patterns are associated with specific gods, such as alujá for Xangô, the god of thunder and fire, bravum for Ogum, the warrior deity and god of metal tools, aguerê for Oxossi, the hunting god, and igbim for Oxalá, the god of creation. To each rhythm corresponds a given choreography also associated with a specific god. The type of interlocking rhythmic organization so common in traditional West African and Afro-Cuban religious music does not prevail in Brazil. However, the African type of hemiola is quite frequent. Cone-shaped, single-headed drums, known in Bahia as atabaques, are played in a battery of three different sizes. The largest drum, called rum, is played with a stick and a bare hand by the master drummer who, through his improvisations, controls the ritual dance. The middle-sized drum, the rumpi, and the smallest drum, the lê, played with sticks in Gêge-Nagô music, perform standard, unchanging patterns. The agogô (cowbell), played with a metal stick, completes the accompanying ensemble. As drums constitute a very significant symbol of communication with the Orixás, they go through a sort of 'baptism' ceremony before they can be used in ritual contexts. The sacred role of drummers (alabês) is recognized by means of a confirmation ceremony. Their primary function is to call the gods, hence to bring about spirit possession of the initiates, but they themselves never fall into a trance while drumming.

Since the 1950s Brazilian music has gained a greater following as a result of the popularity across the country of the umbanda religion, a combination of candomblé beliefs, popular Catholicism, spiritualism, and Kardecism. Umbanda music displays stylistic changes that illustrate the effective penetration of national values into strong regional and urban cultural settings. Indeed umbanda music responds to a deliberate attempt to cater to all segments of urban society, especially the lower middle-class. And it does so by relying on a nationally omnipresent and familiar style, namely the folk-urban type of dance music most readily associated with the samba. In contradistinction to the traditional candomblés, umbanda music repertory is in constant elaboration, albeit stylistically restricted. But this stylistic limitation appears the most effective in attracting worshippers from the whole gamut of the social strata. In effect, it seems that caboclo and umbanda religions and their expressive means (mostly music and dance) may have been the most important factor for the cultural and regional integration of Brazil in the last three decades of the 20th century.

Ex.12 Brazilian Ketu cult song (Field collection of Gerard Béhague). Transcribed by Robert E. Witmer and Gerard Béhague. Text omitted.

Among the secular ritual contexts of music-making the Afro-Bahian game–dance known as capoeira is considered by some to come from Angola, by others to have been the creation of black Brazilians during slavery. Most probably capoeira is a local elaboration of some African model. From a game–fight believed to have been practised by slaves during resting periods in the fields, it developed into a sort of martial art with subtle choreographic movements and rules, a well-defined musical repertory of songs and accompanimental rhythms. Although capoeira originated in Bahia, it extended to other major coastal cities, especially since the 1940s, and became a main martial art taught in military schools. The traditional dance is known as capoeira Angola, which gives a linguistic justification to believers of the Angolese origin. The choreographic development involves a series of figures known as golpes, of which the ginga (swaying motion) is fundamental, performed by couples of male dancers–fighters (capoeiristas) simulating various attack and defence motions, using the feet only and turning head over heels, among other types of figures. The synchronization of movements between the attack of one dancer and the defence of the other (and vice-versa) is remarkable. The game of capoeira is accompanied by an ensemble of musical bows (berimbau de barriga), tambourine (pandeiro), cowbell (agogô), and at least one drum, and the singing follows a responsorial practice. As the main instrument the berimbau has a calabash resonator and is played with a wooden stick together with a basket rattle (caxixi). By using a coin as a bridge, the bow can produce two distinct pitches (generally a second apart), but the simultaneous performance of several bows of different sizes allows multi-part and harmonic textures. Specific rhythmic patterns, known as toques, include the São Bento grande, São Bento pequeno, Iúna, Santa Maria, Angola, and cavalaria among others, with specific functions and references to the dance. They differ mostly in tempo rather than in actual rhythmic structure.

Capoeira songs (some 139 have been collected) constitute a rich source of Afro-Bahían expressive culture relating to slavery time, to local language and poetics. With the exception of the song of the hymn of the capoeira and to ladainhas (litanies), the capoeira song repertory borrows a great deal from other corpora, such as children's game songs of the ciranda genre. Other songs invoke religious themes and figures, such as Santa Maria, mãe de Deus (St. Mary, mother of God).

Traditionally capoeira has been taught and practiced in academias (academies) whose leaders are referred to as mestres (masters). Among the numerous mestres of the history of capoeira none has enjoyed as much fame as Mestre Bimba who developed a new form called capoeira regional, adding a number of dance figures resembling some of the strokes of other martial arts.

Other South American countries with significant Afro-Hispanic musical traditions are Venezuela and Colombia. Afro-Venezuelan music is found mostly in the central coastal area of the Federal District, the Barlovento and Guarenas-Guatire region in the state of Miranda and portions of the state of Aragua. Drum ensembles and various forms and genres are clearly related to a black African ancestry. In Barlovento especially, the main types of drums known as mina, redondo, tambora and furruco (a friction drum) form part of the various ensembles associated with a number of celebrations, such as the fiestas of San Juan. In addition, ensembles of quitiplás (bamboo stamping tubes), accompany dances and songs performed on social occasions that are unrelated to ritual festivities.

The black and mestizo populations of Colombia are located primarily in the Atlantic and Pacific coastal regions. Costeño musical cultures in both areas combine elements of the tri-ethnic heritage, with a very significant African contribution. For example, in Palenque de San Basilio on the northern coast the funeral songs performed in responsorial fashion at wakes and burials of members of the Cabildo Lumbalú (studied by List, B1983) not only contain a large number of words of probable Bantu origin but are accompanied by African-related drums. Likewise, the conjunto de gaitas, one of the most important traditional ensembles of the region, includes drums easily connected to African instruments in both physical properties, timbres, and performance practices. The cumbia, one of the well-known dance-song genres of the area, exhibits a polyrhythmic organization. In the Pacific lowlands, the currulao or marimba dance (studied by Whitten, B1974) represents a secular ritual in which a symbolic confrontation of power between men and women is enacted musically: the men performing the marimba, the drums (cununos and bombos), with the glosador (leading male vocalist), all in competition with the female singers (respondedoras) who shake guasás, or rattles. The resulting texture (numerous ostinati in a dense polyrhythm) and performance characteristics (responsorial, use of falsetto and hocket techniques) represent one of the most traditional African sounding musics to be found in the Americas. This genre is also known in the Afro-Ecuadorian province of Esmeraldas where the African marimba also predominates. Outside of Esmeraldas the only other region where Afro-Ecuadorian music is found is the Chota valley where contemporary black musicians cultivate mostly the bomba, in addition to the urban popular genres of the day.

The black presence in Peru and Bolivia has been culturally and demographically less significant than that of the Ameirndian. However, from the beginning of the Spanish conquest, Peru was an important centre of black slavery with corresponding significance in the development of mestizo culture, primarily along the coastal areas. Black culture, nevertheless, had little national impact until the 1950s, when a revival and reconstruction of the African heritage in Afro-Peruvian music were initiated by local intellectuals of African ancestry. Typical musical genres, such as the festejo, socabón and agua de nieve, were rightfully claimed as Afro-Peruvian. Thereafter, a number of Afro-Peruvian performing groups appeared and had real impact on Peru's urban culture. In Bolivia, the rediscovery of Afro-Bolivian music and culture is even more recent and affects a number of trends in contemporary popular music.

The African contribution to Argentine and Uruguayan musical life has also been minimized, despite the early recognition by such writers as Vicente Rossi (D1926) and Lauro Ayesterán (D1953) of the black impact on the musical life of the Río de la Plata region. Although practically extinct by the end of the 19th century, the well-known dance, candombe, was revived at various times in the 20th century in both Montevideo and Buenos Aires.

Finally, the presence and contribution of blacks (both slaves and free blacks) in colonial art–music of Latin America and the Caribbean need to be acknowledged. Whether composers or performers, the numerous black musicians retained in the annals of the music histories obviously did not and could not cultivate particular musical styles that related in any way to sub-Saharan Africa. The system of cofradías and hermandades/irmandades(confraternities and brotherhoods) inherited from the Iberian peninsula and implanted in Hispanic America and Brazil thoughout the colonial period helped in preserving some aspects of black identity. Musically, the only genre performed in churches that retains some aspect of that identity was the villancico to pseudo-black dialects cultivated in Spain, Portugal and Latin America. Even cathedral chapelmasters from Mexico to Bolivia were fond of this type of villancico known as negro, guineo, negrilla and negrito. The late and post-Colonial periods actually saw a large number of very significant black composers and performers, such as some of the figures of the Minas Gerais (Brazil) and Venezuelan church-music composers of the late 18th century, and the prolific and creative figure of José Maurício Nunes García, active in Rio de Janeiro. The Cuban composer-violinist José White and his contemporary Brindis de Salas, and the Argentine pianist-composer-conductor Zenón Rolón are some of the examples of successful black musicians of the 19th century.

IV. Urban popular music

1. Historical overview. 2. Specific genres: (i) Transformation of 19th-century European popular music (ii) The urbanization of the huayno (iii) Popular music and political identities (iv) The salsa phenomenon.

1. Historical overview. The expression 'urban popular music' refers essentially to the music produced in major cities for a predominantly urban population of consumers. It is disseminated through various formats, from sheet music to commercial recordings, from radio or television programmes to video tapes and is therefore closely related to various forms of mass media. In Spanish and Portuguese, música popular has meant traditionally music of the people, including what folklorists and ethnomusicologists designate as folk and traditional music as well as urban music. The semantic differentiation between folk and popular music began to appear most prominently in the 1950s, when folklore musical or simply folklore became common and música popular gradually came to be understood in the modern sense of pop/commercial music. Recognizing that the term 'popular' can have multiple meanings, Carlos Vega (A1966) later opted for 'mesomusic' which he defined as follows:

> Mesomusic is the aggregate of musical traditions (melodies with or without words) functionally designed for recreation, for social dancing, for the theatre, for ceremonies, public acts, classrooms, games etc. adopted or accepted by listeners of [the] culturally modern nations. During recent centuries, improvements in communication have favoured the dissemination of mesomusic to such a degree that today the only exceptions to its influence are the more or less primitive aborigines and the national groups that have not yet completed their process of modernization. But, since mesomusic is not an exclusively Western music rather a 'common music' of mankind, there can exist eccentric foci with dispersal over wide areas of the world. Mesomusic, then, coexists in the minds of urban groups along with fine-art music, and participates in the life of rural groups along with folk music.

In effect, this definition is only useful at the most general level of functionality and fails to consider the specific attributes of the makers and consumers of 'mesomusic'. In addition, it tends to be too inclusive, admitting all species or genres that are deemed outside the art music, folk music or traditional music repertories. In its basic conceptualization, however, 'mesomusic' is the equivalent of the contemporary use of urban pop music.

Repertories, genres and behaviours associated with urban popular music generally reflect the social stratification of a particular urban area, whether social strata are defined along socio-economic, generational or ethnic lines, although such relationships are not to be thought of as a one-to-one correspondence. Additionally, certain Latin American and Caribbean popular music movements, genres and styles have emerged from socio-political participation and criticism, thereby reflecting certain ideological positions of specific social groups. The pervasiveness of mass media since the 1970s has extended the consumption of popular music outside urban areas. It is quite clear, therefore, that popular music cuts across the traditional dichotomy of urban–rural and its corresponding social strata differentiation. But for that reason, it is not to be thought of as always and only representing the 'middle' or 'neutral' level of a given stratification.

The socio-aesthetic significance of popular music for Latin American and Caribbean people has been recognized by only a few. The Cuban writer and musicologist Alejo Carpentier acknowledged the strong identity marker inherent in popular music:

> Habanera, Argentine tango, rumba, guaracha, bolero, Brazilian samba invaded the world with their rhythms, their typical instruments, and their rich percussion arsenal nowadays incorporated by right to the battery of symphonic ensembles. And now musics from Mexico, Venezuela and the Andes (and a renewed tango in sound and style) are heard everywhere, with their bandoneones, guitars, kenas of very old ancestry, llanera harps ... All music due to the inventiveness of semicultivated, popular, populachero (common, vulgar) musicians, or however they might be called by certain clerical verses, well versed in the arts of harmony, counterpoint and fugue. But musics that have been much more useful, quite frankly, for the strengthening of a national accent of our own, than certain 'symphonies' on indigenous themes, inumerous orchestral 'rhapsodies' with strong folk background, symphonic poems of 'vernacular inspiration' (almost always terribly impressionist ...), that remain only as documents, reference titles, milestones of local history, in the archives of conservatories ... For there is something evident: Latin American music must be accepted en bloc, in and of itself, recognizing that its most original expressions can just as well come from the street as from the academies. In the past, peasant musicians, instrumentalists from the slums, obscure guitarists, movie-theatre pianists (such as those in Rio de Janeiro who caused Darius Milhaud's admiration), are the ones that gave to this music its identity cards, its presence and style. And there rests the essential difference, in our opinion, between European music history and that of Latin America, where, in still recent periods, a good local song could result in a stronger aesthetic enrichment than a moderately successful symphony that added nothing to the universal symphonic repertory (Carpentier, A1977, pp.17–18).

Without dismissing, however, the value and place of art music in Latin America, Carpentier advocated an integrated view of all traditions, with particular importance assigned to popular music. Vega also stated that 'mesomusic is the most important music in the world; not the greatest, from a Western point of view, but the most important' (A1966, p.9), in the sense of its overwhelming place in music consumption and in national economies.

Urban popular music has been studied in Latin America by folklorists and sociologists from their respective disciplinary vantage points, generally to illustrate other domains of popular culture. Other social scientists of a materialistic philosophical persuasion have tended to relate popular music trends to specific ideologies and social struggles. These approaches have certainly contributed to the understanding of certain aspects of popular music phenomena, but they have failed, for the most part, to elucidate fully the processes of creation and consumption and ultimately the meanings of specific musics. Music tends to be viewed as a product rather than as a cultural practice; thus the potential relationships of music as a sound phenomenon and as a vehicle of cultural communication are generally neglected.

Since the beginning of the 20th century, Latin American music historians have given some attention to the popular music of their countries. This was usually only in conjunction with parallel folk music genres, or in dealing with the sources of musical nationalism drawn upon by art music composers. Such treatment was justified in the early 20th century because the majority of popular music forms were urban renditions of folk music songs and dance genres, with the development of sui generis types appearing at a later period. Musicologists for the most part have ignored popular music because of their perception of its limited aesthetic value and as a result of historical musicology's 'élitist idealism' (Shepherd, A1982, p.148). Only since the 1960s has popular music been considered worthy of serious study. The amount and quality of scholarly study remains uneven, however, among the various Latin American and Caribbean regions and among the traditions of popular music.

Historical and sociological data relating to popular music trends and productions in Latin America are very incomplete. Systematic compilation of sheet music collections, a major anthology of popular music and a comprehensive gathering of historical documents dealing with early recordings and music broadcasts do not exist. Similarly lacking is a holistic musicological analysis of the extensive repertories produced in the various republics since about 1850, the approximate time at which urban music had developed a distinctive, relatively cohesive identity. In the 20th century bibliographical tools providing precise figures to measure the popularity of specific pieces at a given time among specific segments of society were not thoroughly developed. Information provided for U.S. popular music by, for example, Your Hit Parade broadcasts (1935–58) and Billboard weekly charts from 1940 does not exist in Latin America. The study of the historical development of popular music is of necessity sketchy and can only stress those areas for which reliable data exist.

It was not until the latter part of the 19th century that major urban areas in Latin America and the Caribbean developed what can be called in retrospect urban popular music markets. At first, such markets relied primarily on the growing urban middle class whose members consumed music produced through the music sheet format propagating the most fashionable dance music and song genres of a particular period. In general terms, this music stemmed from two major sources: the urbanization of folk and dance forms, on the one hand, and on the other, the direct influence of light theatrical musical genres cultivated in most Latin American cities since at least the early part of the 19th century. At that time, popular music developed primarily as an upper-class activity involving semi-popular theatrical genres and salon music and as a parallel to art music traditions. It is difficult, however, to attempt to trace a homogenous, unbroken tradition of urban music because of insufficient documentary sources. Independence at first and, later, the abolition of slavery facilitated the interaction between urban and rural areas, although, with the few exceptions of the largest cities, the interpenetration of folk and urban cultures remained quite dynamic in many cities and towns well into the 1940s. In general, the first characteristic popular music genres emerged in the last quarter of the 19th century. Since that time, the most obvious process of urbanization has consisted in urban renditions (with specific instrumental groups and special types of arrangements) of folk music genres. Thus, performing characteristics rather than the structural contents of urban popular forms represented at that time the distinguishing features of that music.

In the 20th century the gradual influence of North American Tin Pan Alley and other popular genres had clear repercussions in the hybrid forms that developed in the 1920s and 30s, such as the rumba-fox, the Inca-fox and samba-fox. The big band era of jazz of the 1930s and 40s also left a lasting imprint on the performing media of many classical Latin American urban popular forms. From the 1950s Cuban, Puerto Rican and Brazilian musicians, in particular, developed Latin expressions of jazz, and the period of the 1960s to the 90s saw adaptations of rock and roll and rock music often fused with some aspects of local folk-urban traditions, which gave rise to substantial innovations in various types of rock nacional. At the same time, folk music in urban contexts has gained wide recognition and acceptance largely through the emergence of the peña setting in the 1960s, the point of departure for a new style often associated with political movements of the time, which within a short period took on a pan-Ibero-American character.

The impact of 20th-century media, at first through radio and the recording industry, then through television (beginning in earnest in the 1960s) and videotape (in the 1970s and 80s), was as important for the development of Latin American popular music as in other major regions of the world. While urbanization of rural areas was facilitated by mediated popular music expressions it did not prevent existing diversification. Indeed, the adoption of internationally fashionable popular music genres and styles created new forms but as a rule did not replace the most familiar national genres, whether boleros, canciones, sones, valses, guarachas, rumbas, cuecas, huaynos, tangos or sambas. Clearly these have their own stylistic historical development associated with specific periods, countries, composers–musicians and ensemble groups. The appearance of the long-playing disc in the early 1950s had interesting and long-lasting effects on popular music, the most notorious being the reworking of earlier recorded compositions, for example, the expansion of old compositions (limited to three-minute recordings in the 1930s) by the Brazilian Pixinguinha and his band Velha Guarda. Television and later videotape recordings actually facilitated the creation of mass-mediated performing genres, motivating huge popular music festivals in most major Latin American and Caribbean cities from the late 1960s. Latin America was swift to adopt the newest technologies in sound production and reproduction. Electric and electronic musical instruments were not only an integral part of the various trends and figures of rock nacional (with international festivals such as two huge events of 'Rock in Rio' in 1985 and 1991), but became integrated alongside more traditional acoustic instruments.

It hardly seems an exaggeration to view popular music as the ultimate vehicle of symbolism of national identity, mediated by radio and television. Regardless of the size and geographical complexity of a specific country, radio penetrated virtually everywhere by the 1940s and 50s and television by the 60s, thus cutting across regionalism, however strongly present. Certain trends of popular music came to be perceived by the majority of the population as true syntheses of various regional musical styles, thereby transcending the provincial boundaries and acquiring an image of unified national identity. For example, the corridos composed by the Mexican José Alfredo Jiménez (1926–72) combine the ballad tradition with Mariachi accompaniment and arrangements, and ranchera-like performing singing style. Thus, the commercial music industry in its desire to win and control national markets promoted systematically any music genre and style that had the potential of transcending regional and social-class boundaries. On the international level, the industry promoted whatever stereotypical images existed at a specific time, conveying through international markets preconceived ideas of the exoticism of Latin American musics. Not surprisingly the multinational recording companies operating in most Latin American countries contributed substantially to the exploitation of local popular musicians through the imposition of specific arrangements and performing styles thought to be most marketable, even though such styles frequently misrepresented the real expressions of local popular music. In addition, the impact of the North American and western European record producers on numerous occasions had rather negative effects on Latin American composers and musicians living in those areas, in that they were forced to make aesthetic concessions in order to sell their products in those markets.

From a socio-political perspective, various innovative aspects and trends in Latin American popular music since the 1960s have been considered by some Latin Americans as reflecting a new era of musical neo-colonialism. The cultivation of modernistic pop music currents by Latin American musicians was seen as a yielding to the tendencies and characteristics of imported technology and mass-produced musical items. This has been interpreted by some as a renouncement of the basic values of the musicians' original culture, thus becoming, directly or indirectly, artistic agents of international capitalism. The adoption and adaptation of internationalized pop music styles has been perceived, therefore, as part of an anti-nationalist process. Moreover, considering that no more than 10% of Latin American populations have the means of becoming regular consumers of the products of mass culture, it was thought that modernizing popular music could alienate poor majorities. In his study of the mechanisms of music colonization, the Cuban writer Leonardo Acosta equates music merchandizing of Latin American popular products with cultural colonialism:

> It is worth pointing out that, although the diffusion of our popular music was a positive fact, reflecting to a great extent its creativity, aesthetic quality and rhythmic and sound vitality, the fact of its appropriation by the Yanqiu music enterprises for many years also had negative consequences, such as the distortion and commercialization of this music, and the falsification of its most authentic values (A1982, p.54).

He singles out Xavier Cugat as the 'pioneer in the spoliation and distortion' of Latin American music and its characteristics in favour of a commercial music with 'tropical flavour'.

The model of modernity with its commercial concessions to the international markets came primarily from the United States where 'Latin' popular music has been produced by American recording companies and the Hollywood film industry since the 1920s. This domination of the commercial promotion of the international entertainment industry has been interpreted by some as the result of the political and economic dependency of Latin American countries which have consequently followed the market economy of their dominators. In the specific case of Brazilian popular music, José Ramos Tinhorão expressed his view of the situation as follows:

> Thus, while for the pride of the colonized middle class, the multinational (recording industry) was in the process of internationalizing the sounds of Brazil from its headquarters (much in the same manner that bankers were internationalizing the result of the labour of millions of Brazilians, through the collection of a debt of 120 billion dollars), the most humble social strata, heirs of a cultural continuum of almost five centuries, continued to play their bombos vigorously in the traditional metre of 2/4, waiting for their turn in History, perhaps in the 21st century (D1990, p.276).

Although there is justifiable ground for this type of interpretation, one should not forget or minimize the importance of the process of integration of international pop music in certain local popular cultural movements. However, rather than a mere copy of original models, the 'modernizing' and innovative trends of Latin American and Caribbean popular musics, jazz, rock, reggae, funk, heavy metal, new wave and other genres have become perfectly legitimate expressions of creative artists who reflect the values of the specific segments of urban society with which they are associated. The results of their creative efforts reveal assimilation and transformation of imported styles into their own musical sensibility to which they add their own, different meanings. In addition, it must be recognized that the major urban areas of Latin America have not only been a natural part of the international scene but have contributed to it in their own unique ways. Elements of confrontation between the national and international popular styles have forced specific and deliberate choices, but such choices have been made by popular musicians according to their perception of their own aesthetic and ideological needs of a particular moment. One such need has been the collective identity of the new class structure of the industrialized urban world since the 1960s, especially among international youth movements as sub-cultures for which certain genres and styles of North American and British popular music of the 1960s (Elvis Presley, the Beatles and the Rolling Stones, among others) became a sort of lingua franca, transcending nationalities. Latin American urban areas have gone through this process of development in much the same manner as industrialized societies. In those areas, there can be no doubt that the classic distinction between First and Third Worlds hardly applies in terms of the mechanisms of musical production and socio-economic patterns of consumption, although the obvious different meanings assigned to that lingua franca in these respective worlds remain.

Concurrently, the establishment of international commercial music markets did not prevent Latin American countries from developing their own local popular music with little or no influence from international trends. In effect, various musical expressions emerging since the 1920s correspond to various strata of a particular urban society at a particular time. This is why one finds not one but many popular musics in the major cities of Latin America and the Caribbean. These musics, however, have generally enough in common to create a sense of regional or national identity. In addition, they frequently function in a large number of social contexts which intersect the boundaries of various social groups. The function of popular music as a facilitator of national integration explains, to a great extent, the process of urbanization in Latin America and the Caribbean of mestizo folksong and folkdance genres. In numerous cases, it was because most people shared a common knowledge, enjoyment and consumption of such genres that they appeared suitable to urban popular composers as natural sources of national music. Therefore, almost all major folk music genres have at one time or another been used as the very foundation of national popular music. These include the son in Mexico and Guatemala; the son and rumba in Cuba; the bambuco, vallenato and cumbia in Colombia; the joropo in Venezuela; the huayno/huayño and the cueca/marinera complexes, and the saya in the Andean countries; the zamba, chacarera, gato in Argentina; and the samba of Brazil.

2. Specific genres.

(i) Transformation of 19th-century European popular music. The pervasive European 19th-century salon music tradition left a strong imprint on Latin American urban popular music and provided an important source for numerous popular genres of the early 20th century. Fashionable European and other foreign genres of popular music have always been present in major cities in which some segments of society tended to emulate their European counterparts. The main 19th-century ballroom dances such as the waltz, mazurka, polka, schottishe and contredanse were readily adopted in all cities and with time underwent the process of 'creolization', that is, transformation into local, national genres. The waltz, particularly, served as a forerunner to a large number of popular dances on the whole continent, each with different names: pasillo or vals del país in Colombia and Ecuador; vals criollo or peruano in Peru; vals melopeya in Venezuela; vals mexicano in Mexico; and other similar, hybrid types such as the Brazilian valsa-choro. Likewise, the polka originated several native genres of popular music, from the Mexican polka in the conjunto norteño tradition, to the Brazilian polka-tango and polka-choro of the late 19th century. Similarly, the prevailing romantic character of many popular song types originated within the same canción tradition, its gentility happily combined with the criollo traditions of Latin American cities. The canción and chanzoneta/cançoneta complex was at first cultivated in the popular, lyrical spectacles of the genres of musical comedy, operetta and zarzuela. This important source of sentimental song of popular appeal has generally been neglected but the connections are everywhere evident. Several such songs have also been combined with slow dance types, thereby creating unique blends and genres, such as the Cuban and Mexican bolero, the Argentine tango-canción and the Brazilian samba-canção and sambolero. The romantic, sentimental song tradition which has its origins in the Italian operatic tradition of the early 19th century provided the basis of development of popular musical genres which transcended, in general, the stereotypes of their European sources and acquired their own innately local character. Perhaps more than any other, these song genres have contributed to the development of truly national popular musics.

(ii) The urbanization of the huayno. The urbanization process of traditional music in the Andean area is perhaps best reflected in the dance-song known as huayno in Peru and Chile, huayño in Bolivia and sanjuanito in Ecuador. Present in both Amerindian, peasant and mestizo communities, although with considerable differences, the Peruvian huayno and the Bolivian huayño developed in the 20th century as the respective national folkdance music par excellence. In Peru especially, the migratory movement of people towards Lima and other coastal cities which grew to unprecedented proportions in the early 1950s facilitated the urbanization process of several folk music genres. In a relatively short time a social basis which could support an urban market for highland music was created, part of a general socio-cultural phenomenon which has been referred to as the 'Andeanization' of Lima. In his study of a commercial catalogue of Peruvian 78 r.p.m. records, J.M. Arguedas (C1967) discovered that by 1953 almost 160 titles of popular highland music records had been issued in Lima, with music from the Mantaro valley most in evidence. The demand continued to increase so that by 1967, 3000 titles of highland Andean music had been issued in Lima. Among these titles, huayno pieces seem to have predominated. Lima had by that time a number of provincial migrant composers specializing in highland music through which they not only expressed traditional topics associated with huaynos (including glorification of provincial towns and villages and love subjects) but also themes of social concern and conflict of particular relevance to the migrant population. A number of social clubs for weekend get-togethers favoured the interaction of highland migrants through music and dance. Although at first it was the original migrant population and its descendants which made up the market, the popularity of the huayno gradually extended to other sections of urban society. The mass media fulfilled an important role in this diffusion, especially when several Lima radio stations, particularly Radio Agricultura, began to broadcast popular highland music regularly. In the process of its urbanization, the huayno went through a number of transformations, affecting not only the traditional instrumentation of performing groups but also vocal styles. As such, the urban huayno came to be referred to as the urban, mestizo huayno. While the majority of such urban huayno melodies retain their predominant pentatonic structure, a few of their traditional syncopated patterns and cadential formulas, their harmonic support tended to be provided by guitars, accordion and occasional brass instruments, rather than the traditional kena, harp and charango.

In the 1960s the Colombian cumbia, first performed in the highlands in band arrangements, began to gain popularity in Peruvian cities. This popularity extended to the whole of the country through radio and commercial recordings. The new style of Peruvian cumbia came to be known as chicha (according to some after the name of the homemade, fermented beer-like, alcoholic beverage known throughout the Andes among Amerindian and mestizo communities). Three sub-styles of chicha have been identified in Peru: the chicha criolla popular (without any national influence); the chicha chola (highland Amerindian-influenced); and the chicha selvática (from the jungle area). The first is performed by Limeño musicians without any trace of local adaptation. The second sub-type, also known as cumbia andina, cumbia folk or tropical andino, appears strongly associated with the Andean mestizo huayno. Among numerous groups specializing in this type of chicha are the Shapis, Alegría, Chacalón and Nueva Crema, all active in the capital city. The chicha selvática, also known as cumbión, in a faster tempo than the other sub-styles, is performed by groups such as the Mirlos, who came originally from the Amazonian area. The mass media have also had a significant impact on popular bands of Peruvian cumbia, with the introduction of a variety of foreign musical genres such as rock and roll and various Afro-Caribbean dance types. Most of these bands include two or three electric guitars, an electric bass, electric organ, conga drums, bongos and bells, all supporting the vocal soloist. Curiously but significantly, chicha music is enjoyed by the most underprivileged segments of urban society, while the Andean cumbia finds its followers among the younger generations of highland migrant workers. Indeed, the mestizo huayno provides a certain continuity with the highland version, while the cumbia rhythm links the identity of its consumers with the youth of the Andes at large.

(iii) Popular music and political identities. A number of specific occasions and events involve a kind of popular music-making which has a highly symbolic function in terms of social relationships. In this respect, Carnival, a democratic event which celebrates not only social solidarity but also contradictions and antagonisms, is particularly important in Latin America and the Caribbean. As a result, Carnival and other festivals of popular culture frequently display specific power relations. On such occasions, music, especially musical styles, performing media and venues, often serve as effective markers of the identity of the social groups involved. In Brazil, for example, especially in Rio and Bahia, despite the assumed symbolic elimination of social barriers in daily life during the Carnival period, people have very different experiences of Carnival, depending on their socio-economic class, race, gender and even sexual preference. Following Mikhail Bakhtin's view of the carnivalesque, anthropologist Roberto da Matta has stressed that Carnival provides an opportunity for the forging of new social relations in a multicultural and multiracial society by its lessening of firm identities and its inversion of social and political order. While at a general level, Carnival may indeed appear as a ritual of social integration, at more specific levels, it serves as the vehicle of self-expression of traditionally marginalized groups. Moreover, the symbolic dichotomy casa/rua ('home/street') perceived by da Matta operates during Carnival in semi-private clubs and public spaces respectively. In these symbolic spaces contrasting types of activities and relationships occur, the club recreating the privacy of a home shared with relatives and friends, as opposed to the street in which impersonal forces dominate. While the predominant music genres, the Carnival samba and march, function in both contexts, the performing media and the general music behaviour of participants set them apart. The club orchestras present more polished renditions of the fashionable samba pieces of the season while de-emphasizing the heavier percussion of the street blocos (spontaneous groupings of musicians and merrymakers). Even the street musical performances differ between the northern poorer districts and those of the more affluent southern areas of Rio de Janeiro. In the latter, streets are cordoned off to mark a specific territory and identity of the local residents, while the tendency in the former is to leave an open space for all to participate.

In Cuba and Chile the 1960s and 70s movements of nueva trova and nueva canción respectively illustrate the involvement of musicians with specific sociopolitical movements, ideologies and events, while pursuing independent careers.

(iv) The salsa phenomenon. No other popular music since the 1970s has become as strong an identity symbol for Hispanic-American and Latino populations throughout the continent as salsa music. Although the basic model for salsa was the Cuban son, the new genre developed at first in New York City among Latino communities, made up primarily of Puerto Ricans, Cubans and to a lesser degree Dominicans and other West Indians. The term salsa ('sauce') thus designates a hybrid genre of dance music and song in which one can find echoes of Caribbean musical forms and styles, aspects of which bear affinity with the Cuban son, such as the Puerto Rican plena, the Dominican merengue, the Haitian meringue and later cadans, and the Trinidadian calypso and soca. At first, it was the music of the barrios (urban ghettos) of New York Caribbean migrants but it extended to other major Caribbean, Venezuelan and Colombian cities and because the musical expression of an urban-industrial working class. The main features of salsa music stress many elements of Afro-Caribbean music, such as responsorial performing practice, polyrhythmic organization around various ostinatos (similar to the son's tumbaos) and some improvisation, and combination of percussion (conga drums, bongos, timbal, cencerro or cowbell, clave and güiro) with double bass (or electric bass), guitar (tres) and brass instruments (trumpets and trombone). Salsa song lyrics in the Spanish language cover a wide array of subjects, from unrequited love to overt socio-political topics of concern to the Latino urban poor in general. In the 1980s the songs of Rubén Blades, the Panamanian star resident of the USA, had a particular appeal as they carried a strong political or existential message reflective of and resonant with the culture of the barrio. In essence, salsa in the 1970s and 80s provided an effective model of nationalistic and vindicative expression of marginalized social groups, and in the 90s enjoyed widespread popularity throughout the continent and the world.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A General. B Mexico, the Caribbean and Columbia. C The Andean area. D Argentina, Uruguay and Brazil

A: GENERAL

G. Chase: A Guide to Latin American Music (Washington DC, 1945, enlarged 2/1962/R as A Guide to the Music of Latin America)

B. Nettl: Folk and Traditional Music of the Western Continents (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1965, 2/1973, rev. 3/1990 by V. Woodring Goertzen

R. Bastide: Les amériques noires, les civilisations africaines dans le Nouveau Monde (Paris, 1967, 3/1996); Eng. trans., 1971), 41b, 83, 118, 137, 174, 178, 224

R. Stevenson: 'The Afro-American Musical Legacy to 1800', MQ, liv (1968), 475–502

E. Southern: The Music of Black Americans: a History (New York, 1971, 3/1977)

E. Southern, ed.: Readings in Black American Music (New York, 1971, 2/1983)

J.W. Work: 'African Music in British and French America', MQ, ix (1973), 61–91

I. Aretz: Sintesis de la etnomusicología en América Latina (Caracas, 1980)

L.F. Ramon y Rivera: Fenomenología de la etnomúsica latinoamericana (Caracas, 1980)

L. Acosta: Música y descolonización (Mexico, 1982)

J. Shepherd: 'A Theoretical Model for the Sociomusicological Analysis of Popular Music', Popular Music, ii (1982), 145–77

G. Béhague: 'Popular Music', Handbook of Latin American Popular Culture, ed. H.E. Hinds Jr. and C. Tatum (Westport, CT, 1985), 3–38

C. Vega: 'Mesomusic: an Essay on the Music of the Masses', EthM, x (1966), 1–17

A. Carpentier: 'América Latina en la confluencia de coovdenadas históricos y su repercussión en la música', América Latina en su Música, ed. I. Aretz (Mexico, 1977), 7–19

J.M. Schechter: 'The Current State of Bibliographic Research in Latin American Ethnomusicology', Latin American Masses and Minorities: Their Images and Realities, ed. D. Hazen (Madison, 1987), 334

G. Béhague: 'Latin American Folk Music', Folk Traditional Music of the Western Continents, ed. B. Nettl (Englewood Cliffs, 1990/R), 179–206

I. Aretz: Historia de la etnomusicología en América Latina: desde la época precolombina hasta nuestros días (Caracas, 1991)

G. Béhague: 'Music', Latin American and the Caribbean: A Critical Guide to Research Sources, ed. P.H. Covington (Westport, CT, 1992), 567
Z. Gómez G and V.E. Rodríguez: Música latinoamericana y caribeña (Havana, 1995)

B: MEXICO, THE CARIBBEAN AND COLOMBIA

D. Diderot: 'Calinda', 'Negrès', 'Bamboula', Encyclopédie, ou dictionnaire raisonné des sciences, arts et des métiers (Paris, 1751–80), ii, 474; xi, 80; xv, 874
P. Young: West-India Melodies or Negro Tunes (London, ?1822)
I. Castellanos: Instrumentos musicales de los afrocubanos (Havana, 1927)
R.M. Campos: El folklore musical de las ciudades (Mexico City, 1930)
J.I. Perdomo Escobar: Historia de la música en Colombia (Bogota, 1938, 4/1975, 5/1980)
H. Courlander: Haiti Singing (Chapel Hill, NC, 1939/R)
E. Grenet, ed.: Popular Cuban Music (Havana, 1939)
P. Bowles: 'On Mexico's Popular Music', MM, xviii (1940–1), 225
D. Castañeda: Balance de Agustín Lara (Mexico City, 1941)
H. Menéndez Peña: Monografías y cantares huastecos (Mexico City, 1944)
A. Carpentier: La música en Cuba (Mexico City, 1946, 3/1988)
V.T. Mendoza: El corrido de la revolución mexicana (Mexico City, 1956/R)
R. Nettel: 'Historical Introduction to "La Calinda"', ML, xxvii (1946), 59–62
M. Talavera: Miguel Lerdo de Tejada (Mexico City, n.d.)
V.T. Mendoza, ed.: Canciones mexicanas [Mexican Folk Songs] (New York, 1948, 1968)
F. Ortíz: La africanía de la música folklorica de Cuba (Havana, 1950, 2/1965)
V.T. Mendoza: 'Música indígena otomí', Revista de estudios musicales, ii/5–6 (1950–51), 527
F. Ortíz: Los bailes y el teatro de los negros en el folkore de Cuba (Havana, 1951, 2/1981)
F. Ortíz: Los instrumentos de la música afrocubana, i–v (Havana, 1952–5)
L.F. Ramón y Rivera: El joropo, baile nacional de Venezuela (Caracas, 1952, 2/1987)
R. Stevenson: Music in Mexico: A Historical Survey (New York, 1952/R)
S. Martí: Instrumentos musicales precortesianos (Mexico City, 1955), 2
V.T. Mendoza: Panorama de la música tradicional de México (Mexico City, 1956, 2/1984)
R.A. Waterman: 'African Influence on the Music of the Americas', Acculturation in the Americas: ... XXIXth International Congress of Americanists, New York, 1949, ed. S. Tax (Chicago, 1952), 207–18; repr. in Music as Culture, ed. K.K. Shelemay (New York, 1990), 17–28
J. Sesto: La bohemia de la muerte (Mexico City, 1958)
H. Courlander: The Drum and the Hoe: Life and Lore of the Haitan People (Berkeley, 1960/R, incl. 186 transcrs. of Haitian songs and drum rhythms by M. Kolinski), 203–313
V.T. Mendoza: La canción mexicana (Mexico City, 1961, 2/1982)
I. Aretz and L.F. Ramón y Rivera: Cantos navideños en el folklore venezolano (Caracas, 1962)
R. Ayala: Musicosas (Mexico, 1962)
A. de María y Campos: La revolución mexicana a través de los corridos populares (Mexico City, 1962)
V. Chenoweth: The Marimbas of Guatemala (Lexington, KY, 1964)
S. Martí and G.P. Kurath: Dances of Anahuac: the Choreography and Music of Precortesian Dances (Chicago and New York, 1964)
H. de Grial: Músicos mexicanos (Mexico City, 1965)
C.L. Boilès: 'The Pipe and Tabor in Mesoamerica', YIAMR, ii (1966), 43–74
I. Aretz: Instrumentos musicales de Venezuela (Cumaná, 1967)
G. Basqueiro Fóster: La canción popular de Yucatán (Mexico City, 1970)
J.S. Garrido: História de la música popular en México (1896–1973) (Mexico City, 1974, 2/1981)
N.E. Whitten Jr: Black Frontiersmen: A South American Case (New York, 1974)
M.E. Davis: Voces del purgatorio: Estudio de la salve dominicana (Santo Domingo, 1981)
E.T. Stanford: 'La música popular de México', La música de México, ed. J. Estrada, i: Historia; v. Período Contemporáneo (Mexico, 1984–6)
G. List: Music and Poetry in a Colombian Village (Bloomington, 1983)
J. Duany: 'Popular Music in Puerto Rico: Towards an Anthropology of Salsa', LAMR, v (1984), 186–216
A. León: Del canto y el tiempo (Havana, 1984)
O. Alén R: La música de las Sociedades de Tumba Francesa en Cuba (Havana, 1986)
R.A. Pérez Fernández: La música afromestiza mexicana (Havana, 1987)
A. Arrivillaga Cortés: 'La música tradicional Garífuna en Guatemala', LAMR, xxi (1990), 251–80
J. Robbins: 'The Cuban Son as Form, Genre, and Symbol', LAMR, xxi (1990), 182–200
P. Manuel, ed.: Essays on Cuban Music: North America and Cuban Perspectives (Lanham, MD and London, 1991)
R.R. Smith: 'Arroz Colorao: Los Congos de Panama', Music and Black Ethnicity: The Caribbean and South America, ed. G.H. Béhague (New Brunswick and London, 1994), 239
P. Manuel: Caribbean Currents, Caribbean Music, From Rumba to Reggae (Philadelphia, 1995) [with K. Bilby and Mar Largey]

C: THE ANDEAN AREA

J. de la Torre: Aclamación festiva (Lima, 1716), 26
N. Garay: 'Folklore musical colombiano', Revista gris (1894), 240
R. and M. d'Harcourt: La musique des Incas et ses survivances (Paris, 1925, rev. 2/1957 by S.L. Moreno as La Música de los Incas, 5/1980)
P. Humberto Allende: 'La musique populaire chilienne', 1er congrès internacional des art populaire (Prague, 1928), 118
C. Raygada: Panorama musical del Perú (Lima, 1936)
L. Sandoval: Selección de canciones populares chilenas (Santiago, 1937)
A. Acevedo Hernández: Canciones populares chilenas (Santiago, 1939)
T. Vargas: Aires nacionales de Bolivia (Cochabamba, 1940)
P. Garrido: Biografía de la cueca (Santiago, 1943, rev.2/1976 by L.A. Sanchez)
C. Vega: 'La forma de la cueca chilena', RMC, nos.20–21 (1947), 7–23; nos.22–3 (1947), 15–19
E. Romero: El Romance tradicional en el Perú (Mexico, 1952)
J.M. Arguedas: 'Análisis de un catálogo comercial de discos peruanos', Revista del Club de Folklore, i (1967), 5
M. and R. d'Harcourt: La musique des Aymara sur les hauts plateaux boliviens (Paris, 1959)
R. Holzmann, ed.: Panorama de la música tradicional del Perú (Lima, 1966)
C. Pagaza Galdo: Cancionero andino sur (Lima, 1967)
M. Ester Grebe: The Chilean Verso: a Study in Musical Archaism (Los Angeles, 1967)
E. Pereira Salas: Guía bibliográfica para el estudio del folklore chileno (Santiago, 1952)
R. Stevenson: Music in Aztec & Inca Territory (Berkeley and London, 1968/R)
S. Zapata Agurto: 'Psicoanalisis del vals Peruano', Revista ciencias psicológicas y neurológicas, v/1–2 (1968), 5
C. Bolaños et al: Mapa de los instrumentos musicales de uso popular en el Perú (Lima, 1978)
S. Claro-Valdés: Oyendo a Chile (Santiago, 1979)
C.A. Coba A: Instrumentos musicales populares registrados en el Ecuador, i, ii (Otavalo, 1980/84)
G. Abadía M: Instrumentos de la música folklórica de Colombia (Begotá, 1981)
J.A. Lloréns Amico: Música popular en Lima: criollo y andinos (Lima, 1983)
C. Bolaños et al: La música el el Perú (Lima, 1985)
R. Romero: 'La música tradicional y popular', La música en el Perú (Lima, 1985), 217–83
J.M. Schechter: The Indispensable Harp: Historical Development, Modern Roles, Configurations and Performance Practices in Ecuador and Latin America (Kent, OH, 1991)
T. Turino: Moving Away From Silence, Music of the Peruvian Altiplano and the Experience of Urban Migration (Chicago, 1993)

D: ARGENTINA, URUGUAY AND BRAZIL

R. Almeida: História da música brasileira (Rio de Janerio, 1926, 2/1942), 9ff, 137ff, 156ff
V. Rossi: Cosas de negros (Córdoba, 1926, 2/1958 by H.J. Becco)

A. Ramos: 'Os instrumentos musicaes dos candomblés da Bahia', Bahia médica, iii/7 (1932), 194
C. Vega: Danzas y canciones argentinas (Buenos Aires, 1936)
M. Lira: Brasil sonoro (Rio da Janeiro, 1938)
O. Barbosa: Samba (Rio de Janeiro, 1933, 2/1978)
A. Ramos: 'A sobrevivencia da dança e da música', O folclore negro do Brasil (Rio de Janeiro, 1935, 2/1954), 118
D. Pierson: 'The Candomblé', Negroes in Brazil (Chicago, 1942), 275–317
M.J. Herskovits: 'Drums and Drummers in Afro-Brazilian Cult Life', MQ, xxx (1944), 477–92 [repr. in The New World Negro: Selected Papers in Afroamerican Studies, ed. F.S. Herskovits (Bloomington, IN, 1966)]
C. Vega: Los instrumentos musicales aborígenes y criollas de la Argentina (Buenos Aires, 1946)
V. Maríz: A canção brasileira (Oporto, 1948, 4/1980, Rio de Janeiro, 1959)
O. Alvarenga: Música popular brasileira (Rio de Janeiro, 1950, 2/1982)
I. Aretz: El folklore musical argentino (Buenos Aires, 1952)
C. Vega: Las danzas populares argentinas, i (Buenos Aires, 1952, rev. 2/1968 by E. Moreno Cha)
L. Ayestarán: La música en el Uruguay (Montevideo, 1953)
R. Tavares de Lima: Melodia e ritmo no folclore de São Paulo (São Paulo, 1954, 2/1961)
V. Gesualdo: Historia de la música en la Argentina (Buenos Aires, 1961, 2/1978 [1526–1851])
A. Maynard Araújo: Folclore nacional (Sao Paulo, 1964, 2/1967)
L. Rangel: Sambistas e chorões (São Paulo, 1964)
A. Vasconcelas: Panorama da música popular brasileira (São Paulo, 1964)
F.K. Lange: Os compositores na Capitania General das Minas Gerais (Marília, 1965)
C. Vega: 'Las pespecies homónimas y afines de"los orígenes del tango argentino"', RMC, no.101 (1967), 49–65
F. García Jiménez: Estampas de tango (Buenos Aires, 1968)
F.K. Lange: La música en Villa Rica, Minas Gerais, siglo XVIII (Santiago, 1968)
B. Matamoro: Carlos Gardel (Buenos Aires, 1971)
B. Matamoro: Historia del tango (Buenos Aires, 1971)
J. Ramos Tinhorão: Música popular de índios, negros e mestiços (Petrópolis, 1972, 2/1975)
J. Ramos Tinhorão: Pequeña história da música popular (Petrópolis, 1974)
R. da Matta: Carnavais, malandros e herois: para uma sociologia do dilema brasileira (Rio de Janeiro, 1979)
H. Ferrer: El libro del tango: arte popular de Buenos Aires, i: Crónica del tango; ii: Diccionario A-J; iii: Diccionario K-Z (Buenos Aires, 1980)
O. Luduena and E. Aguirre: Enciclopedia de la música folklórica argentina y latinoamericana (Rosario, 1985)
T. Oliveira Pinto, ed.: Brasilien, Einführung in Musiktraditionen Brasiliens (Mains, 1986)
J. Ramos Tinhorão: História social da música popular brasileira (Lisbon, 1990)

CAROLINA ROBERTSON (I), GERARD BÉHAGUE (II–IV)

Latin jazz. A term applied to jazz in which elements of Latin American music, chiefly its dance rhythms, are particularly prominent. In striking contrast to most genres of jazz, in which triple subdivisions of the beat are prevalent, Latin jazz utilizes duple subdivisions. But unlike the rhythms of ragtime and jazz-rock, where the beat also undergoes duple subdivision, Latin-jazz rhythms are constructed from multiples of a basic durational unit, grouped unequally so that the accents fall irregularly in a one- or two-bar pattern. The habanera (or danza) rhythm (ex.1) is the simplest and most common of these groupings.

Ex.1 Habanera rhythm or

The rhythmic ostinato may be played by members of a conventional rhythm section (piano, guitar, double bass and drums) or by Latin American instruments, particularly Afro-Cuban or Brazilian percussion such as the conga drum, bongos, cowbells and cuíca; the bass line often oscillates between the roots and fifths of chords.

Latin ostinatos were part of Jelly Roll Morton's piano style. During the 1930s new Latin dances entered the mainstream of American popular music and occasionally found their way into jazz. In the 1940s Machito formed the Afro-Cubans, in which big-band instrumentation and arranging techniques were combined with Cuban percussion and musical structures; from 1948 to the 1960s he engaged famous jazzmen, including Charlie Parker, as soloists. In 1947 Dizzy Gillespie established his Afro-Cuban jazz orchestra, which included the conga drummer Chano Pozo, and in the same year Stan Kenton introduced the Brazilian guitarist Laurindo Almeida and the bongo drummer Jack Costanzo into his jazz orchestra.

During the 1950s the mambo, the merengue and the cha cha cha were quickly incorporated into the repertories of big bands that played jazz for dancing. In small bop groups Latin tunes regularly supplemented the normal fare of swing standards, ballads and blues. The 1960s witnessed the emergence of strong Brazilian influences on jazz: the energetic samba and the quiet bossa nova reached a wide audience through the recordings of Stan Getz. In the late 1960s Airto Moreira initiated a second period of Brazilian influence by introducing Brazilian rhythms and dozens of native instruments into jazz-rock groups in the USA, most notably in those of Pat Metheny since the 1980s. The late 1980s and the 1990s witnessed a resurgence of Afro-Cuban jazz, particularly under Jerry Gonzalez and Gillespie.

See also AFRO-CUBAN JAZZ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveJ
J.S. Roberts: The Latin Tinge: the Impact of Latin American Music on the United States (New York and Oxford, 1979)
J.S. Roberts: Latin Jazz: the First of the fusions, 1880s to Today (New York, 1999)

BARRY KERNFELD

Latin secular song, early. See EARLY LATIN SECULAR SONG.

Latio, Giovanni [Latius, Joannes]. See DE LAET, JEAN.

La Tombelle, (Antoine Louis Joseph Gueyrand) Fernand (Fouant) de (b Paris, 3 Aug 1854; d Château de Fayrac, Dordogne, 13 Aug 1928). French organist and composer. He first studied music with his mother, a pupil of Liszt and Thalberg. At the Paris Conservatoire he studied the organ with Guilmant and composition with Théodore Dubois. When the Trocadéro organ concerts began in 1878 he became an active associate of Guilmant, and also made successful recital tours. From 1885 to 1898 he was Dubois's assistant at St Marie-Madeleine. When the Schola Cantorum was founded by Bordes, d'Indy and Guilmant (1894) La Tombelle devoted much time to realizing the aims of its revised programme, the improvement and enlarging of the organ repertory and the foundation of a modern school of church music. From 1896 to 1904 he was professor, and later inspector, of harmony at the Schola Cantorum, and collaborated in the production of the Répertoire moderne de musique religieuse. He also contributed articles to La tribune de St Gervais, the magazine of the Schola, which began in 1895.

Before turning to sacred works La Tombelle composed much secular music, including orchestral pieces, songs, choral music, two operettas, Un bon numéro and Un rêve au pays du bleu (both 1892), piano solos and duets, a violin sonata and a trio op.35 (1894). He was also a prolific composer of sacred music: masses, oratorios, motets, canticles, hymns and organ and harmonium pieces. Ferchault stressed the traditional form and language of most of La Tombelle's music. He published a book L'oratorio et la cantate (Paris, 1911) and a Méthode d'harmonium.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (G. Ferchault) [with list of works]
A. Gastoué: Obituary, La tribune de St Gervais, xxv (1928), 170–72

E. BORREL/DAVID CHARLTON

La Torre, Jerónimo [Jerónimo de] (i) (b ?Zaragoza /Calamocha; d Valencia, 20 July 1672). Spanish composer and organist. He was possibly the 'Jerónimo La Toria' who applied for the post of organist at S María del Mar, Barcelona, in 1627, but on 17 July that year he secured a similar post in Tarragona, and in November 1636 was appointed organist of Barcelona Cathedral. He was apparently held in high esteem by the cathedral chapter, which in 1642 offered him financial assistance and took his side in a dispute with the viceroy, who had ordered him to leave Catalonia (then allied with the French against the Austrian monarchy). La Torre was nevertheless advised to obey the viceroy's command, but his salary was paid and his post kept open while a substitute carried out his duties. He probably formally resigned his Barcelona post in 1645; on 3 June that year he was made second organist at Valencia Cathedral, where again he was highly regarded and well rewarded. In 1665 he suffered a hand injury that forced his retirement; Cabanilles was appointed to succeed him.

The music of La Torre awaits scholarly investigation, and it is not yet possible to distinguish his works from those of his namesake (perhaps a relative) Jerónimo La Torre (ii). Those surviving in Tarragona, Barcelona and Valencia are probably by the elder composer, those extant (or inventoried) at Zaragoza by the younger, while those existing elsewhere are possibly by either.

WORKS

probably authentic

Gozos de las virtudes y milagros del seráphico y gran patriarca S Bruno, fundador de la sagrada orden de la Cartuxa, 4vv (Barcelona, 1702)
Salve regina, SSAT, SATB, hp, other acc., E-VAcp
8 tonos: Cupidillo bendado suspende, 4vv, acc., Tac; Hiriéronme tan apri, 4vv, Bc, ed. in J. Pavia i Simó; Hoy un retrato a gusto, 2vv, Bc; Loco estoy, 1v, bc, Bc; Mísera navecilla, 4vv, VAc; O que mal viven, 4vv, acc., Tac; Para divertir a Filis, 4vv, Bc, ed. in J. Pavia i Simó; Traidor corazón, qué tienes, 4vv, acc., Bc

by Jerónimo La Torre (i) or (ii)

Lamentation, 8vv, J
Lit, S, SATB, hp, org, Ac
9 tonos: Cantad jilguerillos, 1v, Ce, ce, ce, luces divinas, 4vv, Filomela canora, 1v, Gilguerillo volante, 2vv, Loco estoy de contento, 1v, Mariana de mayo, 2vv, Viendo el sacristán, 4vv, all at Canet de Mar; Ce, ce, luces divinas, SSAT, acc., SEG
Aquel sol, villancico, 3vv, bc, GU
Duet in Tiso y Angélica (ballet), Mn
Tonada in the Ballet de l'herbolario, Mn
Tonadillas and letrillas, Mn
Comedia de S Alejo, frags., Mn
12 frags.: comedias, cantadas, zarzuelas, aires de ballet, Mn
2 canciones, 4vv, Crisóstomo Ripollès's private collection (according to Mitjana, EMDC, I/iv, 1920)
12 versets, org, J

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DEUMM ('Torre, Jerónimo de la', A. Basso); MGG1 (M. Querol)
R. Mitjana y Gordón: 'La musique en Espagne', EMDC, I/iv (1920), 1913–2351
J. Climent: 'Organistas valencianos de los siglos XVII y XVIII: Organistas de la catedral', AnM, xvii (1962), 179–208
L. Siemens Hernández: 'La Seo de Zaragoza, destacada escuela de órgano en el siglo XVII', ii, AnM, xxiii (1968), 129–56
S. Ramon i Vinyes: Los órganos de la catedral de Tarragona: Caixa Provincial de Tarragona (Tarragona, 1974)
J. Pavia i Simó: La música a la catedral de Barcelona durant el segle XVII (Barcelona, 1986)
L. Siemens Hernández: Tecla Aragonesa, ii: la Escuela de órgano de la Se ode Zaragoza en el siglo XVII: Andrés de Sola y Jerónimo Latorre (Zaragoza, 1988)
J.V. Gozález Valle and others: 'Regesta de noticias referentes a la música en las actas capitulares de la Seo de Zaragoza, 1645–1675', Aragonia Sacra, v (Zaragoza, 1990)
'Torre, Jeroni de la', Gran enciclopèdia catalana, ed. J. Carreras i Martí (Barcelona, 2/1992)
J.V. Gozález Valle and others: Actas Capitulares de la Seo y el Pilar – acuerdos conjuntos a partir de 1676 –, tomo 1676–1680

JOSEP PAVIA I SIMÓ

La Torre, Jerónimo [Jerónimo de; 'El Cojo'] (ii) (fl Zaragoza, 1674–1700). Spanish organist and composer. He was known as El Cojo ('the cripple') because of a physical defect, which did not, however, prevent his becoming an accomplished organist. On 20 September 1674 he was appointed assistant organist of the cathedral of La Seo, Zaragoza, and three years later, on 21 August 1677, he was made principal organist at Zaragoza's other cathedral, Nuestra Señora del Pilar. In March 1695 he became maestro de capilla at El Pilar, a post that he resigned in 1699, when he took holy orders at the convent of S Ildefonso in Zaragoza. In 1700 the chapter sought his advice in appointing his successor. His namesake Jerónimo la Torre (i) may have been a relative.

WORKS

probably authentic

Mass, 4vv, E-Zac
Mass, 4vv, CAL, Zac
San, Zac, ed. in L. Siemens Hernández (see bibliography in LA TORRE, JERÓNIMO (i)) Conceptio tua (motet), SSAT, SATB, vn, hp, org, Zac
72 other sacred vocal works, 1–12vv, lost, listed in 2 early 18th-century inventories in Zac

Gloria de dominical (9 versets), org, Zac, ed. in L. Siemens Hernández (see bibliography in LA TORRE, JERÓNIMO (i))

For other works possibly by Jerónimo La Torre (ii) and for bibliography see LA TORRE, JERÓNIMO (i).

JOSEP PAVIA I SIMÓ

Latour, Francis Tatton. One of the original partners in the music-publishing firm of CHAPPELL.

Latre, Petit Jean de. See DE LATRE, PETIT JEAN.

Latrobe [La Trobe], Christian Ignatius (b Fulneck, Leeds, 12 Feb 1758; d Fairfield [now in Manchester], 6 May 1836). English composer. His family was of Huguenot descent; his father, Benjamin Latrobe, was superintendent of the Moravian Brethren in England and moved in the highest political and intellectual circles. He was educated among the Moravians at Niesky, Upper Lusatia (1771–84), and became a minister in the Moravian Church on his return and secretary of the denomination in England in 1795. He took part in various missions, including one to South Africa in 1815–16, and published accounts of his own and other Moravian missionary activities. Latrobe was never a professional musician and was apparently self-taught, yet his achievement was considerable.

His first compositions were instrumental, including three fine piano sonatas (London, *c*1790) dedicated to Haydn, with whom he was on friendly terms. It was Graun's Der Tod Jesu and Haydn's Stabat mater (according to his own account) that 'first gave him the idea of the powers of vocal music, in the expression of every feeling of which a devotional mind is capable'. He composed and edited much church music for both Moravian and general use, and a few pieces of Anglican cathedral music. His most important Moravian publication was Anthems for One or More Voices Sung in the Church of the United Brethren (London, 1811), which is indispensable to the study of Moravian music. It includes a dozen of his own compositions. He also edited the first English collection of Moravian hymn tunes (London, 1790), which remained in use for a century and more; the tunes were chiefly drawn from C.F. Gregor's Choral-Buch (Leipzig, 1784), but 13 of them were probably composed by Latrobe. In 1828 he published a collection of his own sacred music.

A publication of wider influence was Latrobe's six-volume Selection of Sacred Music (London, 1806–26), which introduced to the British public the church music of such European composers as Graun, Hasse, Pergolesi, Haydn and Mozart (for contents see Grove's Dictionary, 1st–3rd edns, 'Latrobe'). The music was published in vocal score with fully written-out accompaniments, some of them with the original text, others in translation. This pioneering work opened an entirely new realm of music, most of it Catholic in origin, to English Protestants. It anticipated Novello's publications, in which Latrobe also played an acknowledged part. Although he disapproved of opera, Latrobe delighted in the operatic style in church music. He was the first English composer to use the style of Haydn's later masses with confidence and skill. His settings of the canticles are markedly more expressive and dramatic than those of contemporary Anglican composers (they are probably too long, however, for normal cathedral use). In such works as his cantata The Dawn of Glory (London, 1803/R) operatic recitative and aria are successfully adapted to sacred English words, with sensitive attention to word-setting and with richly varied accompaniments.

One of Latrobe's sons, John Antes Latrobe (1799–1878), named after the American Moravian composer John Antes, took orders in the Church of England, and was incumbent of St Thomas's, Kendal (1840–65); he wrote a number of books on music, the most important of which, The Music of the Church Considered in its Various Branches, Congregational and Choral (London, 1831), gives a detailed picture (though in stilted language) of Anglican church music before the Oxford Movement.

WORKS

all published in London

Original Anthems … Adapted for Private Devotion or Public Worship (1828) [incl. Morning and Evening Service, G, 1817; Dies irae, 1823; Magnificat, D, 1823; Evening Service, G, 1828; 2 Agnus Dei; 9 anthems; 2 duets; 8 arias, ariettas; *c*17 hymn tunes]

2 other anthems: Anthem for … the Jubilee of George III (1809); Miserere mei (1814)

2 cantatas: The Dawn of Glory (C.I. Latrobe), solo vv, chorus, pf (1803/R); In Memory of a Beloved Sister (J.A. Latrobe), 1v, pf (1826)

6 Airs, the Words on Serious Subjects (W. Cowper, H. More), 1v, pf (*c*1812)

3 pf sonatas, op.3 (*c*1790), ed. in The London Pianoforte School 1766–1860, vii (New York, 1985)

EDITIONS

Hymn-Tunes Sung in the Church of the Brethren (London, 1789–90/R)

A Selection of Sacred Music from the Work of Some of the Most Eminent Composers of Germany and Italy (London, 1806–26)

Anthems for One or More Voices Sung in the Church of the United Brethren (London, 1811) [incl. 12 of Latrobe's compositions]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (J.C. Haddon; also 'Latrobe, John Antes'); SainsburyD

E. Holmes: 'The Rev. Christian Ignatius Latrobe', MT, iv (1851), 249–50, 255–6

Brief Notices of the Latrobe Family (London, 1864)

C.E. Stephens: The Musical Works of Christian Ignatius Latrobe (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1971)

N. Temperley: The Hymn Tune Index (Oxford, 1988)

NICHOLAS TEMPERLEY

Latry, Olivier (b Boulogne-sur-Mer, 22 Feb 1962). French organist. A pupil of Gaston Litaize at the Conservatoire at Saint Maur-des-Fossés (organ) and Jean-Claude Raynaud at the Paris Conservatoire (harmony), he succeeded his teacher at Saint Maur in 1990, then became organist at Notre Dame in Paris and organ professor at the Conservatoire (1995). He has given the premières of works by many contemporary composers, including Xavier Darasse, Claude Ballif and Renaud Gagneux, and rapidly attained recognition through his exceptional technique and the breadth of his repertory, which ranges from the 17th century to the present. This is reflected in his numerous concerts, both in France and abroad (Canada, the USA, South America, Australia, Japan), and in his recordings of music by Bach, Handel, Mozart and Vierne, as well as Duruflé and Schumann, whose complete organ works he has recorded. Latry also ranks as one of the great improvisers of his generation.

FRANÇOIS SABATIER

Lattuada, Felice (b Caselle di Morimondo, nr Milan, 5 Feb 1882; d Milan, 2 Nov 1962). Italian composer. He embarked on a teaching career in primary schools in Milan and was at first self-taught musically, but in 1907 he entered the Milan Conservatory where he studied composition with V. Ferroni, graduating in 1912. In 1928 his opera Don Giovanni won the Concorso Nazionale della Pubblica Istruzione, judged by Alfano, Casella, Gasco and Mascagni. He was director of the Civica Scuola di Musica in Milan from 1935 to 1962. From his earliest works Lattuada showed a preference for a musical idiom deriving from late-Romantic tradition. In his theatre music his style remains close to verismo and is often emphatic, as Riccardo Allorto observed (Ricordiana, 1957) about his opera Caino. In his orchestral and chamber music his position as a follower of existing trends is confirmed by the Sinfonia romantica of 1912, his String Quartet, which won the Concorso Certani in Bologna in 1918, and his Violin Sonata, all works of a strongly lyrical, expressive character. The subjects and rhetorical tone typical of Italian music between the wars are exemplified by such works as the symphonic poem La consacrazione del bardo (1931) and the Canto augurale per la Nazione eletta for tenor, chorus and orchestra (1933) on D'Annunzio's lauda dedicated to Mussolini. Lattuada's son Alberto (b 1914) is a well-known film director and their collaboration, developed during the 1940s, led to a large number of soundtracks, in which the composer's style frequently diverges from the director's innovative approach.

WORKS

Ops: La tempesta (prol, 3, A. Rossato, after W. Shakespeare), Milan, Dal Verme, 23 Nov 1922; Sandha (tragedia indiana, 1, F. Fontana), Genoa, Carlo Felice, 21 Feb 1924; Le preziose ridicole (commedia, 1, Rossato, after Molière), Milan, Scala, 9 Feb 1929; Don Giovanni (4, Rossato, after J. Zorrilla y Moral: Don Giovanni Tenorio), Naples, S Carlo, 18 May 1929; La caverna di Salamanca (1, V. Piccoli, after M. de Cervantes), Genoa, Carlo Felice, 1 March 1938; Caino (1, Lattuada and G. Zambianchi, after Byron), Milan, Scala, 10 Jan 1957

Orch: Sinfonia romantica, 1912; La consacrazione del bardo, 1931; Cimitero di guerra, 1943; Preludio e fuga, 1946; Impressioni sinfoniche, 1954; Banchetto magico; Danza orientale; Divertimento giocoso; Divertimento rustico; Sogno

Vocal: Canto augurale per la Nazione eletta (G. D'Annunzio), T, chorus, orch, 1933; Il mistero della Passione di Cristo; 4-pt madrigals; songs

Chbr: Str Qt, 1918; 3 madrigali, vn, pf; 12 preludi, pf; Sonata, vn, pf; Str Qt

Film scores: Giacomo l'idealista, 1943; Il bandito, 1946; Il delitto di Giovanni Episcopo, 1947; Le luci del varietà (dir. F. Fellini), 1951; Il cappotto, 1952; La lupa, 1953

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DEUMM (A. Sommariva)

A. Procida: '"Don Giovanni" di Rossato e Lattuada', Musica d'oggi, vi (1929), 270–71

F. Lattuada: La passione dominante (Bologna, 1951) [autobiography]

A. Fino: La Civica scuola di musica di Milano (Milan, 1978)

F. Nicolodi: Musica e musicisti nel ventennio fascista (Florence, 1984)

RAFFAELE POZZI

Latvia (Latvija). Country in eastern Europe. It is on the eastern shores of the Baltic Sea, founded in 1918. It was annexed to the Soviet Union in 1940, although few other nations formally recognized this incorporation. The country regained its national independence in 1991.

1. Art music. II. Traditional music.

I. Art music

The earliest evidence of musical life in what is now the territory of Latvia consists in some archaeological finds of end-blown flutes and strung rattles dating from the Neolithic period. By the end of the 1st millennium the tribes living in this area had developed a number of instruments, such as flutes with five finger-holes and the kokle, a type of plucked zither (see §2(iii) below). Although some professional elements were probably present, by the time of the Teutonic conquest in the 12th century the musical culture of the Baltic population was based on folk traditions (see §2 below).

While the Latvian population was reduced to serfdom and did not develop an art culture until the 19th century, the Germans developed their own, significant musical life; it was based mainly on German values and no local trend or school developed. Most musical activities were concentrated in the country's capital, Riga. The Chronicon livoniae of Henricus de Lettis mentions the native population listening to Catholic mysteries as early as 1205. From the 14th century to the 16th, Riga's musical life was that of a typical Hanseatic city with its Stadtmusikanten, companies of musicians and guilds. In the 16th century Lutheranism prevailed and German political supremacy came to an end. The first liturgical songbooks with Latvian texts were published in Königsberg (after 1945 Kaliningrad) in 1587 and in Riga in 1615. From the early 17th century Latvian musicians were participating in the active Polish and Czech music companies. From the 17th century to the 19th, city and country life were closely in touch with west European musical achievements; Riga's collegium musicum, Musikalische Gesellschaft and City Theatre promoted musical activities. Another musical centre from the late 16th century was the court of the dukes of Kurzeme at Mitau (now Jelgava); musicians such as J. Fischer, F.A. Veichtner and J.A. Hiller were engaged at the court orchestra and opera.

In the 18th and 19th centuries many organs were installed in Latvian churches; some 250 historic instruments have been maintained to the present day. From the 18th century onwards significant numbers of virtuoso performers gave concerts in Jelgava and Riga, en route from Western Europe to St Petersburg. In the 18th century educated Latvian circles had close ties with the University of Königsberg. J.G. Herder, who was the first to publish Latvian folksongs in Western Europe, came from Königsberg to live in Riga between 1764 and 1769, as did the well-known music publisher J.F. Hartknoch (1740–89) and many other cultural and educational figures.

In the second half of the 19th century, against a background of Latvian national aspiration, a national school of Latvian music developed, of which Kārlis Baumanis was an early representative. He was the author of the text and music of the Latvian national hymn Dievs, svētī Latviju ('God bless Latvia'). Although Catholic and Lutheran liturgical music had deep roots in Latvia, its impact on Latvian music was limited to the early period when Jānis Cimze in particular was active in collecting and arranging folk music. Choral music was the form of art music that developed earliest and it has remained one of the most important genres. This is reflected in immense Latvian song festivals; the first of these took place in 1873, and they have continued in an uninterrupted tradition, held every five years on a specially constructed outdoor stage in Riga with as many as 15,000 participants. The 21st festival took place in 1993.

Early 19th-century music education in Latvia on a professional level was available only at some seminaries for teachers and music schools; conductors, composers and other musicians wanting more than a teaching diploma went abroad, mainly to St Petersburg. Latvian art music at the end of the 19th century, like other east European national schools, was strongly influenced by folk music. Most of the early Latvian composers (Andrejs Jurjāns, Jāzeps Vītols and Emīlis Melngailis) frequently used folksong quotations and arrangements. Another group (Alfrēds Kalniņš and Emīls Dārziņš) avoided direct quotations, but folk music characteristics are an integral part of their works.

The short life of the independent Latvian republic (1918–40) saw years of rapid growth: the Latvian National Opera was founded (the first Latvian opera, Baņuta by Alfrēds Kalniņš, was produced in 1920), as were the Latvian Conservatory, seven schools of music, the first permanent symphony orchestra (the Latvian RSO, 1926) and several chamber groups. Different musical styles flourished in those years: nationalist Romanticism (Jāzeps Vītols, Alfrēds Kalniņš and Jāzeps Mediņš), post-Wagnerism (Jānis Mediņš and Jānis Kalniņš) and impressionism (Jānis Ķepītis and Jānis Zālītis).

From 1940 music in Latvia came under Soviet control, and many musicians suffered repression or were forced to emigrate. Thus in 1944 a number of Latvian musicians and composers, including J. Vītols, J. Kalniņš and Jānis Mediņš, left Latvia and continued their work in the West. In the Latvian SSR some institutions were broadened (e.g. a chair of musicology was established at the conservatory) and some new ones were founded (the State Philharmonia, a composers' union and a special musical high school). In 1948 Latvian music, like all Soviet music, was under heavy party criticism. Latvian composers experienced strong ideological pressure from the Communist Party, and many works were created of little or no lasting value. From the 1950s composers in Latvia were influenced by the postwar European avant garde; however, on the whole postmodernism in Latvian music has been tempered by a strong vein of neo-Romanticism and neo-classicism. The best-known Latvian composers at the end of the 20th century included Pauls Dambis (b 1936), Maija Einfelde (b 1939), Artūs Grīnups (1931–89), Imants Kalniņš (b 1941), Romualds Kalsons (b 1936), Juris Karlsons (b 1948), Pēteris Plakidis (b 1947), Pēteris Vasks (b 1946) and Imants Zenzaris (b 1951). Latvian composers working abroad included Ā. Ābele (1889–1967), Volfgangs Dārziņš (1906–62), Jānis Kalniņš (b 1904), Talivaldis Kenins (b 1919) and Gundaris Pone (1932–94).

Despite ideological constraints after World War II, the Latvian National Opera also renewed its activities, and was known as the State Opera and Ballet Theatre of the Latvian SSR until 1990. Conductors in the years after 1944 included Leonīds Vīgners, Edgars Tons, Richards Glāzups and Aleksandrs Viļumanis. Between the 1960s and the 1980s the theatre's repertory expanded to include 20th-century operas, among them many works by Latvian composers. Internationally known Latvian musicians of the postwar period include the conductors Arvīds Jansons, Mariss Jansons and Imants Kokars; the soprano Žermēna Heine-Vāgnere; the tenors Kārlis Zariņš, Jānis Sproģis and Ingus Pētersons; the violinists Ieva Graubiņa-Bravo, Rasma Lielmane-Kortesa and Valdis Zariņš; and the pianist Artūrs Ozoliņš.

Since the restoration of national independence in 1990, concert life in Latvia has been decentralized, professional associations of musicians restored and musical contacts with Western Europe renewed. The country also hosts regular international music festivals.

See also RIGA.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Latvijas Konservatorija: 1919–1929 (Riga, 1930)
J. Vītoliņš, ed.: 'Latviešu mūsika', Mūzikas vēsture (Riga, 1934–7), 499–601
K. Lesiņš: Problēmas un sejas latviešu mūzikā [Problems and personalities in Latvian music] (Riga, 1939)
O. Grāvītis: Kratkiye biografii latïshskikh kompozitorov [Short biographies of Latvian composers] (Riga, 1955)
K. Mediņš: Latviešu dziesmu svētki [Latvian song festivals] (Riga, 1955)
J. Brauns: 'No latviešu instrumentālās mūzikas vēstures' [From the history of Latvian instrumental music], Latviešu mūzika, ii (1962), 129
J. Brauns: Vijolmākslas attīstība Latvijā [The development of the art of the violin in Latvia] (Riga, 1962)
A. Darkevic and E. Vitoliń, eds.: Muzykalnaja kultura Latvijskoi SSR (Moscow, 1965, 2/1976)
E. Arro: 'Die deutschbaltische Liederschule', Musik des Ostens, iii (1965), 175–239
L. Kārkliņš, ed.: Ocherki muzïkal'noy kul'turï sovetskoy Latvii [Essays on Soviet Latvian musical culture] (Leningrad, 1965)
V. Bērzkalns: Latviešu dziesmu svētku vēsture 1864–1940 [The history of Latvian song festivals] (Brooklyn, NY, 1965)
V. Bērzkalns: Latviešu dziesmu svētki trimdā 1946–1965 [Latvian song festivals in exile] (Brooklyn, NY, 1968)
V. Bērziņa: Eju pārvērsties skaņā: Operas un baleta mākslinieku portreti [Transforming into sound: portraits of opera and ballet artists] (Riga, 1969)
J. Braun: 'Die Anfänge des Musikinstrumentenspiels in Lettland', Musik des Ostens, vi (1971), 88–125
L. Kārkliņš, ed.: Ocherki muzïkal'noy kul'turï sovetskoy Latvii (Leningrad, 1971)
J. Vītoliņš and L. Krasinska: Latviešu mūzikas vēsture [A history of Latvian music], i (Riga, 1972)
S. Verinja: Muzykalnyi teatr Latvii i zarozhdenie latyshskoi natsionalnoi opery [The musical theatre of Latvia and the emergence of the Latvian national opera] (Leningrad, 1973)
L. Kārkliņš: Kompozitory i muzykovedy Sovetskoi Latvii [Composers and musicologists of Soviet Latvia] (Riga, 1974)
V. Briede-Bulāvinova: Latviešu opera (Riga, 1975)
N. Grīnfelds: Padomju Latvijas mūzika (Riga, 1976)
L. Apkalns: Lettische Musik (Wiesbaden, 1977)
N. Grjunfeld: Istoria latyshskoi muzyki (Moscow, 1978)
O. Grāvītis: Izcilākie tautas kori [Outstanding choirs] (Riga, 1979)
V. Briede: Jaunās balsis: Latvijas operas debitanti 70. gados [New voices: the new singers of the Latvian opera in the 1970s] (Riga, 1981)
V. Bērzina: Tautas muzikālā atmoda latviešu publicistu skatījumā [The musical awakening of the people as seen by Latvian publicists] (Riga, 1983)
J. Braun and K. Brambats, eds.: Selected Writings on Latvian Music: a Bibliography (Münster, 1985)
V. Briede: Latviešu operteātris [Latvian operatic theatre] (Riga, 1987)
I. Grauzdiņa: Tūkstoš mēlēm ērgeles spēlē [Organ music in Latvia] (Riga, 1987)
L. Mūrniece, ed.: Muzyka Sovetskoi Latvii (Riga, 1988)
L. Kārkliņš: Simfoniska muzika Latvija (Riga, 1990)
L. Lesle: 'Auflehnung gegen eine brutale Macht: Neue Musik aus Lettland', Das Orchester, xlv/3 (1997), 12–18

II. Traditional music

Latvian traditional music characteristically has a large number of recitative-style forms and thus differs essentially from that of its southern (Lithuanian) and eastern (Russian and Belarusian) neighbours. It is more readily comparable to that of the Estonians, to the north. Another characteristic feature is the existence of various forms of vocal polyphony, although in Latvia polyphony is not as varied in form and as widespread as it is in Lithuania, Belarus and Russia. In this sense, Latvia forms a transitional stage between these three countries and Estonia, where polyphony plays an even smaller role than in Latvia, and where it has been documented only in the south and south-east, close to the Latvian and Russian borders. As distinct from its close neighbours, Latvian tradition has no form of lament.

The expression 'Latvian traditional music' for the most part is synonymous with the term 'Latvian peasant music', as its most important genres are concerned with the annual agricultural work and ceremonial cycle. The music of family festivals (name-giving, weddings, funerals) also has a deep connection with the everyday life and world view of those working on the land. Traditional music in practice survives chiefly in south-east Latvia and in some communities in the south-west, although even in these areas it is often no longer performed in its former contexts.

1. STRATIGRAPHY AND STYLE. On the basis of material collected systematically from the second half of the 19th century, an older indigenous stratum of traditional music can be distinguished from a later one marked by considerable outside influence. The former is an integral part of old peasant custom and usage (seasonal and family festivals, traditions connected with work, etc.), and to a large extent is pagan in character.

Ex.1 A recitative-style wedding/midsummer solstice song with drone, from the Alsunga community, western Latvia

One of the most extensive stylistic groups consists of the recitative-like songs (teiktās dziesmas), which feature a narrow range (a 3rd or a 4th) and a syllabic relationship of notes to text. Their melodic and rhythmic structures are largely determined by elements of linguistic prosody such as word stress, syllabic quantity (i.e. the physical length of syllables) and syllabic intonations. (Syllabic intonations – descending, ascending, broken off or drawn out – constitute what might be called melodic microcurves within the long syllables.) These factors cannot be adequately notated; for instance, the fine rhythmic variations produced by a sequence of different syllabic quantities are usually reduced in notation to a series of quavers.

Although the area of distribution of recitative songs covers almost the whole country, the group shows pronounced stylistic homogeneity while covering a broad range of functions. Many recitatives can be performed in several traditional contexts. In some areas it was known for the same recitative-style melody to be sung at weddings, baptisms, funerals, the midsummer festival, and so on (of course to different texts). Most recitatives are strophic, each strophe having two sections of four bars each, or 4 + 6 [4+2] bars. In many places they were or still are performed with a drone (ex.1).

Refrain songs form a second group in this older stratum, with melostrophes consisting of sets of four-bar, three-bar or more rarely five-bar melodic lines on the following patterns (R=refrain): 2 + 2R, 2 + 1R or 2 + 3R. The melostrophes can be made up of melodic lines with different structures, so that as well as symmetrical strophic models such as (2 + 2R) + (2 + 2R), asymmetrical models occur, for instance (2 + 2R) + (2 + 1R) or (2 + 2R) + (2 + 3R) + (2 + 1R), etc. The dominant metre is duple time, with 3/4 time sometimes occurring in the refrains. The elements forming a melodic line are rhythmically contrasted: the verse line with its strictly syllabic relationship between notes and text consists principally of notes of short duration, usually transcribed as quavers, while the refrains are often dominated by longer notes, transcribed as crotchets. Longer notes can also occur. In these refrain songs melisma, if it exists at all, is very simple, usually consisting of one syllable sung to two notes, in the refrain sections (ex.2). (Narrow-range midsummer solstice songs with more elaborately melismatic refrains are found only in south-eastern Latvia.)

Ex.2 Midsummer song with refrain, from the Bērzaune community in eastern Latvia.

Eastern and central Latvia are the main areas of distribution of refrain songs and their function is confined to seasonal customs. There are smaller groups consisting of carnival songs (meteņu dziesmas with the refrains Paņudis, paņudis! and Ē, vastalāvi!), Easter songs (Lieldienu dziesmas, refrains Šūvo, šūvo! and, among the Livs of the north Kurzeme coast, Čičor, čičor!) and spring songs (rotāšanas dziesmas, refrain Rotā, rotā!). Most numerous, however, are the midwinter songs (kaladu dziesmas, refrains Kalado, kalado!, Udobru, judobru!, Tolderā, tolderā!, etc.) and midsummer songs (Jāņu dziesmas or līgotnes, refrains Līgo, līgo!; in south-east Latvia Rūtuo, rūtuo! Leiguo, leiguo!, etc.). These last occur in particularly great variety, and, unlike the other refrain songs, they often have a wide range and show the influence of functional harmony in their melodic structure. The līgotnes and singing with a drone are regarded as musical emblems of national cultural identity. Refrain structures are also found in lullabies, children's songs and herdsmen's songs. The area of distribution of these refrain songs extends beyond Latvia into southern Estonia and eastern Lithuania.

As well as these two main stylistic groups of the older stratum there are many smaller ones. Narrow-range work songs and spring songs have been recorded, particularly in eastern and western Latvia. They are performed very slowly and forcefully, always in the open air and usually accompanied by a drone. In south-eastern Latvia there are narrow-range songs for the rye harvest and the hay harvest which show a certain similarity to south-eastern Lithuanian and Belarusian harvest songs in their profuse ornamentation and rubato-like style of performance. Many western Latvian midwinter songs (those without a refrain), wedding and funeral songs consist of a primitive melodic framework, with melostrophes usually having two lines of melody, each sung on only one or two notes of recitative. Herdsmen's calls are another stylistic phenomenon: they are often in the nature of short, powerfully sung vocalises and were used by the herdsmen or boys as a means of communicating with one another and with their homes. There is a differentiated system of acoustic signals on every farm, used in daily communication with the livestock.

Wide-range modal vocal melodies are widespread in Latvia, in particular Aeolian and Ionian and various hypomodal tunes of a lyric or lyrical-epic character. Many of these modal melodies have a changing tonic note. The wide-range modal tunes occur particularly frequently as wedding, wooing, drinking and war songs; unlike the recitative songs, their rhythm is strictly dependent on the musical metre, and they are self-contained, with more individuality in their melodies than the narrow-range tunes, although like the latter they usually have little ornamentation.

The majority of texts of songs from the older stratum consists of quatrains or six-line verses (dainas), without end rhymes and trochaic in metre (*c*95%), or more rarely dactylic. Two lines make up a melostrophe and can appear with or without various repetitions of one or both lines or sections of lines. In content and in poetic form the quatrains and six-line verses are self-contained, and are linked within the text of a song not by the continuation of a narrative but only by a thematic motif or key word, such as 'sun', 'oak tree', 'cuckoo', etc. They display various different aspects of such a theme, so to speak, and often their number and the order in which they appear is not predetermined.

The later stratum comprises music based on the principles of functional harmony, created under the influence of stimulus from Central Europe from the 18th century onwards. Quite frequently melodies of this type are sung to dainas texts. There is a large group of songs known as *ziņ̧*es (from the German verb singen: to sing): these have rhyming texts, and are generally satirical or love songs. Ziņģes are frequently drinking songs, and their texts, often from literary sources and, unlike the dainas, with a known author, can be transmitted either orally or in writing (by means of rough copies or printed sources). German and other models can often be detected in the melodies of these ziņģes; Lutheran hymns are the prototypes of a number of them. Scholars consider that the distribution of ziņģes began because of the activities of the philologist and Lutheran pastor Gotthard Friedrich Stender (1714–96; in Latvia he is known as 'Vecais Stenders'). He published a volume of poems entitled Jaunas ziņģes ('New Songs') in 1774, hoping that the 'new Latvian airs' it contained would oust the pagan and unseemly dainas from peasant custom and usage. Of all the various genres of traditional music the ziņģes have had the greatest influence on 20th-century Latvian pop music, and are regarded as one of its sources.

There are strong sacred music traditions of recent origin in the Catholic south-east of Latvia, which is otherwise a Protestant country. Some Catholic hymns are sung outside churches, spontaneously performed by the people in rituals with no priestly participants. The performers transmit the melodies orally, although the texts are usually learnt from written copies or hymnbooks. At ceremonies in honour of the Virgin Mary, for instance, conducted in May around wayside shrines or prayer-crosses in the open air, the 'Songs of Mary' (Marijas dzīsmes) are performed. When someone dies relatives and neighbours meet at the dead person's house, usually on the day of death itself and then every day until the funeral, to sing psalms (psaļmes) and funeral songs. The ceremony called 'psalm-singing' by the singers, is actually a complete Office for the Dead, introduced into south-eastern Latvia by Jesuit missionaries at the end of the 18th century. This ritual which lasts about two hours is repeated at memorial ceremonies held every year in October or early November. These and other forms of traditional sacred music are widespread and still flourishing in many local versions in the south-east of the country.

2. POLYPHONY. Polyphony is widespread, but there are large areas, particularly in the north, where there are no records of any polyphonic tradition. In areas where polyphonic singing exists or did exist, there are almost always strong traditions of monophonic group performance as well.

The drone songs which are part of the older stratum of traditional music are found in greater concentration in the south-west and south-east. The drone is almost exclusively a pedal drone in the south-west, while in the south-east there is also a considerable number of songs with syllabic drone. The drone almost always occurs in combination with narrow-range melodies, particularly of the recitative type. Refrain songs with drone have been recorded in eastern Latvia. Drone songs are usually two-part, although some transcriptions from the early 20th century show three-part polyphony, the result of the superimposition of a syllabic and a pedal drone. Various transcriptions show a regular alternation of syllabic and pedal drone within the confines of the melostrophe. The melostrophe of a typical drone song begins with a melodic line performed by the leading woman singer (teicēja) alone. In the next section either she sings the upper part alone, or it is continued by another or several women singers, while the others sustain the drone (see ex.1). In the vast majority of cases, the drone represents the lower part of the range employed by the melody (within the two-part section). Both constant and changing forms of the pedal drone have been recorded. The pedal drone is usually the key note, and a changing drone usually occurs because the drone part follows a change of key note in the melody. The pedal drone is sung on a vowel, usually e or a. The syllabic drone nearly always occurs in combination with ostinato elements: the drone part is provided with neighbouring notes on the 2nd below, and often oscillates rapidly between the key note and the subtonic. Constant syllabic drones occur rarely; the drone part recites the text at the same time as the main part.

At the end of the 19th century, several polyphonic phenomena were documented which represent the synthesis of elements of drone songs and sutartinės. The latter are a form of old Lithuanian polyphony found throughout the north-east of Lithuania; its characteristics are the dominance of the 2nd as a harmonic interval, complementary rhythms, the simultaneous performance of different texts and polymodality.

More recent homophonic polyphony based on functional harmony is found chiefly and in great variety in the Catholic south-east, with a small 'island' of this phenomenon in the south-west. There is wide distribution of simple songs sung in uninterrupted or predominating parallel 3rds. In addition, there are some in which the parts have greater melodic individuality and are much ornamented. Besides a type of polyphony with strict functional differentiation of the parts, there is another more reminiscent of heterophony influenced by functional harmony. Some examples display evidence of interaction between the ostinato-like syllabic drone and the harmonic parallel 3rds.

The major key predominates, although not always with the same character: for instance, melodies from the older stratum sometimes feature as the main parts, and when studied in isolation are not in the major key, but have a narrow-range tetrachordal or trichordal construction which takes on the character of the major only when fitted into the polyphonic structure. Two-part or three-part polyphony predominates, although the number of parts is not strictly regulated, and depends on the specific experience and skills of the singers. Even in what is basically a two-part polyphonic song, divergences in the supporting part can lead to sporadic occurrences of three-part polyphony.

Homophonic polyphony with a high solo supporting part is chiefly found in the eastern areas of the Catholic part of the country bordering on Russia. Songs in this category are in three or four parts. In three-part polyphony of this kind the main part is the middle or, more rarely, the lower part; in four-part polyphony it lies between the high supporting part and the higher of the two low parts. The high supporting part is taken by one woman singer with a particularly high, penetrating voice; the other parts are performed by several singers. Their number, although not usually large, is not subject to any rules. The high supporting part sometimes comes in only after the semi-cadence, sometimes just before the cadence, etc., but never at the very beginning of the melostrophe. It may take various forms: for instance, introduced in parallel 3rds to the main part, an octave above the lower accompanying part, at a distance of an octave with deviations, etc. Songs with high supporting part are performed powerfully, at a slow tempo and often in the open air, and have various functions.

In south-west Latvia, homophonic polyphony, chiefly in two-part songs, is found in the small neighbouring communities of Bārta and Nīca near the Lithuanian border. The melody is heard in the upper part. The melostrophe begins with a short solo introduction performed by the leading woman singer; then the two-part chorus comes in, or the melody may be continued by the soloist alone while the chorus sings the lower part. In many respects this two-part polyphony resembles Lithuanian homophonic polyphony. Although it is also represented among the wedding songs and in other genres, most of the songs in this form are spring songs to be performed in the open air. They are popularly known as leiši (sing. leitis, 'Lithuanian').

3. Instrumental music and instruments. A feature of Latvian traditional music is the strong predominance of vocal over instrumental and vocal-instrumental music, although this impression could be caused by the tendency of earlier collectors to concentrate on documenting mostly vocal music. Documentary records of traditional instrumental music are few, and are mostly dance-tunes of Central European origin. The range of traditional instruments, however, is extensive: it is known to have included over 30 varieties of idiophone, for example, clappers, bells, jingles, jew's harp, klabata (wooden soundingboard), the čagana and trideksnis (hand-held rattles); membranophones such as the paupenes (kettledrums), cylindrical drums made from a hollowed-out tree trunk, etc.; chordophones – the kokle and cītara (board zithers), the spēles (musical bow), the dūdas (bumbass or bladder and stick), monochords and violins, etc.; and aerophones (reed pipes, various types of flute and whistle, horns with finger-holes, wooden trumpets, bagpipes, etc.). Traditional musical instruments were played in four main contexts: while herding animals; as part of rituals, ceremonies and customs; for accompanying dance; and for self-entertainment.

Most of the aerophones are herdsmen's instruments used for signalling and entertainment. Trumpets and horns of various kinds also served to give signals during hunting, and were played for certain wooing and wedding ceremonies. Hand-held rattles (trideksnis, eglīte, etc.) also played an important part in wedding ceremonies. The kokle board zither (related to the Lithuanian kanklės, the Estonian kannel, the Finnish kantele and the north-west Russian gusli) has a special place among traditional instruments. In the late 19th and the 20th century it has been regarded as a symbol of Latvian national cultural identity. The body of the kokle (often used in the plural form kokles) is trapezoidal, with one end narrower than the other. It is made of a single piece of hollowed-out wood, to which a thin board is fitted, with soundholes cut out of it first. The strings (earlier of gut, nowadays usually metal) radiate from the narrower to the broader end, and vary between five and 12 in number. The last traditional players of the kokle died in the middle decades of the 20th century, and there is little documentary information about playing styles. During the Soviet period modified instruments, many of them chromatic, were developed, and large ensembles of kokles in various sizes were formed on the model of the Russian balalaika orchestras. A standardized 13-string kokle became popular among exiled Latvians in the West, particularly as a teaching aid, largely through the work of New York based musician Andrejs Jansons.

The dūkas (also somu dūkas and dūdas) bagpipe seems to have played a special part in the life of the peasants of the 16th to 18th centuries, as one of the few instruments that was played at weddings and dances. This was probably the consequence of a Livonian law forbidding 'non-Germans', i.e. Latvians and Estonians, to play any instruments at weddings except bagpipes and percussion. The violin was probably introduced during the second half of the 17th century, and as it became more widespread it obviously took over some of the functions and repertory of other instruments, particularly the bagpipe.

Dance music of Central European provenance became well established in Latvia in the second half of the 19th century. Waltzes, polkas, anglaises, various quadrilles and promenade dances, etc., were generally accompanied by an instrument ensemble consisting of one or two violins, a zither and a bass instrument such as bumbass, or in the 20th century, in eastern Latvia, by a button-key accordion, played either solo or as one of the instruments in the band.

4. The folk music revival movement. The roots of the revival date from the late 19th century, when Jurjāns and others began to research and write about Latvian folk music. In the 1920s and 30s there were sporadic attempts to bring traditional music closer to the educated urban population, such as performances by folk singers organized in towns and cities. After the occupation of Latvia by the USSR in 1940 and World War II, certain forms of traditional music such as the folkloric ballet were encouraged in the context of soviet amateur art. In the 1950s and 60s a number of ethnographic ensembles were formed in order to cultivate their local traditions; their participants (or most of them) were traditional folksingers (examples are the Rikava ensemble in the south-east, the Bārta and Suitu sievas ensembles in the south-western coastal area, etc.). Their repertory mingled stylized and traditional forms. At the end of the 1970s the new revival movement took off, especially in towns, with the aim of reviving traditional forms of music. At the same time, it was a movement of protest – initially latent, subsequently overt – against the soviet policy of Russification, and it encouraged the preservation of the national and cultural identity: it was a kind of prelude to the political changes of the 1980s and early 90s. This movement saw itself as countering the stylized forms taken by amateur folkloric art, which was condemned for its willingness to be part of the propagandist showcase of the soviet regime and its betrayal of genuine traditions.

(The most important representatives of the 1980s were the Skandinieki, Klinči, Sendziesma and Senleja ensembles.) Since the end of the 1980s, the revival movement has moved towards stylistic pluralism, and will now even admit synthesis with rock music (as in the Iļģi ensemble). It has become multi-ethnic by association with minority traditional music groups (Jewish, Russian, Gypsy, etc.). The Baltica International Folklore Festival, which takes place every year in one of the three Baltic states, has been central to the revival movement since 1988.

5. MINORITIES. Most of the documentary records of the traditional music of the Livs (in Latvian, lībieši), a small Finno-Ugrian ethnic group living in north-west Latvia on the Baltic coast, and like the Letts part of the original population of Latvia, are from the first half of the 20th century. It displays no essential differences from Latvian music, and indeed no special relationship with Estonian or Finnish traditional music. Liv ensembles such as Līvlist or Kāndla have been prominent in the revival movement. From the 17th century onwards, the eastern and in particular the Catholic areas of Latvia often provided refuge for large groups of Old Believers from Russia, who came to the Baltic area in several waves after the schism of 1653–6 in the Russian Orthodox Church, when they were subject to persecution. Documentation from the 1930s shows that at this period the Latvian Russians still to some extent preserved their own traditional music, and recordings from the 1990s show that even today there are isolated places where certain of these traditional forms (ballads and dance-songs, some of them in polyphonic performance) can still be traced, if with difficulty. Russian children's ensembles are an important part of the revival movement.

6. RESEARCH AND SOURCES. The earliest sources for traditional Latvian music date from the 16th and 17th centuries; the first notated melody appeared in Syntagma de origine Livonorum by Fridericus Menius (Dorpat, 1632). Systematic collection of traditional music began in the late 1860s with the activities of the educationalist and composer Jānis Cimze (1814–81). The central figure in the late 19th and early 20th century was Andrejs Jurjāns (1856–1922), editor of the first scholarly publication on the subject, Latvju tautas mūzikas materiāli (1894–1926). The most important institution in the inter-war period was the Latvian Folklore Repository (Latviešu Folkloras krātuve), founded in 1925, which among other things organized the recording of traditional music, and assembled 155 wax cylinders and discs and 16,271 transcriptions between 1926 and 1941. The results of the extensive collecting work by the composer Emilis Melngailis (1874–1954) were published in Latviešu mūzikas folkloras materiali (1951–3). The major postwar institution was the Institute of Folklore, founded in 1945 to continue the work of the Latvian Folklore Repository; it was later known as the Department of Folklore of the Institute of Language and Literature at the Academy of Sciences, and reverted to the name of the Latvian Folklore Repository in 1992. It conducted field work expeditions, assembled transcriptions and tape recordings in the archives, and under the direction of Jēkabs Vītoliņš initiated the publication of Latviešu tautas mūzika in five volumes (1958–86). The research work begun by Jurjāns has been continued in the 20th century by, among others, J. Graubiņš, J. Sprogis, M. Goldin, K. Brambats, J. Braun, A. Klotiņš, V. Bendorfs, Ī. Priedīte, Z. Sneibe, V. Muktupāvels, M. Boiko, and A. Beitāne.

BIBLIOGRAPHY
AND OTHER RESOURCES

A. Jurjāns: 'Latviešu tautas mūzika' [Latvian folk music], Balss (3, 14 Feb 1879)
A. Jurjāns: Latvju tautas mūzikas materiāli [Latvian folk music material] (Riga, 1894–1926)
A. Bielenstein: Die Holzbauten und Holzgeräte der Letten, ii (Petrograd, 1918), 716–35
J. Graubiņš: Talsu novada tautas dziesmas [Folksongs from the Talsi district] (Riga, 1935)
O. Loorits: Die Volkslieder der Liven (Tartu, 1936)
J. Sprogis: Jāņu dziesmu melodijas/Johannis lieder-Melodien (Riga, 1941)
J. Sprogis: Senie mūzikas instrumenti un darba un godu dziesmu melodijas Latvijā [Ancient music instruments and melodies of work and ceremonial songs in Latvia] (Riga, 1943) [with Ger. summary]
E. Melngailis: Latviešu mūzikas folkloras materiāli [Latvian folk music material] (Riga, 1951–3) [contains 4345 melodies]
J. Vītoliņš, ed.: Latviešu tautas mūzika (Riga, 1958–86)
J. Vītoliņš: 'Die lettischen Hirtenlieder', Deutsches Jb für Volkskunde, xiii/2 (1967), 213–37
K. Brambats: 'Die lettische Volkspoesie in musikwissenschaftlicher Sicht', Musik des Ostens, v (1969), 25–48
V. Urtāns: 'Drevneishie muzikalniye instrumenti na teritorii Latvii' [The oldest music instruments in the territory of Latvia], Studia archaeologica in memoriam Harri Moora (Tallinn, 1970), 226–42 [with Ger. summary]
J. Braun: 'Die Anfänge des Musikinstrumentenspiels in Lettland', Musik des Ostens, vi (1972), 88–125
I.D. Fridrikh: Russkiy fol'klor v Latvii [Russian folklore in Latvia] (Riga, 1972)
J. Vītoliņš: 'Tautas mūzika' [Folk music], Latviešu mūzikas vēsture, J. Vītoliņš and L. Krasinska, i (Riga, 1972), 7–67
V. Bendorfs: 'Latviešu valodas prosodijas īpatrīou ietekme uz tautasdziesmu melodiku' [The influence of the characteristics of Latvian prosody on the melodic structure of folksongs], Latviešu mūzika, xii (1977), 76–81
A. Klotiņš: 'Mūzikas folklora un mēs' [Musical folklore and us], Literatūra un māksla (24 Nov 1978)
C. Jaremko Niles: The Baltic Folk Zithers: an Ethnological and Structural Analysis (thesis, UCLA, 1980)
K. Brambats: 'The Vocal Drone in the Baltic Countries: Problems of Chronology and Provenance', Journal of Baltic Studies, xiv (1983), 24–34
Ī. Priedīte: Ko spēlēja sendienās [What was played in times past] (Riga, 1983)
V. Muktupāvels: Tautas mūzikas instrumenti Latvijas PSR teritorijā [Folk instruments in the territory of the Latvian SSR] (Riga, 1987)
V. Bendorfs: 'Latviešu tautasdziesmu melodikas elementu senums un cilme' [The age and origin of elements of the melodic structure of Latvian folksongs], Latvijas PSR Zinātņu Akadēmijas vēstis (1988), no.10, pp.73–7 [with Russ. summary]
Ī. Priedīte: Tautas mūzikas instrumenti [Folk music instruments] (Riga, 1988) [summaries in Ger., Russ.]
Z. Sneibe: 'Ziņge: melodikas cilme un attīstība' [The ziņge: the origin and development of its melodic structure], Latvijas PSR Zinātņu Akadēmijas vēstis (1988), no.10, pp.63–72 [with Russ. summary]
V. Bērziņa: Tautasdziesmas gājums [The path of the folksong] (Riga, 1989)
A. Klotiņš and V. Muktupāvels: 'Traditional Musical Instruments and the Semantics of their Functions in Latvian Folk Songs', Linguistics and Poetics of Latvian Folk Songs, ed. V. Vīķis-Freibergs (Kingston and Montreal, 1989), 186–217
Z. Sneibe: 'Latviešu ieražu dziesmu melodiju formveides modeļi un to funkcionālais konteksts' [Formal models of Latvian ceremonial folksongs and their functional context], Latvijas Zinātņu Akadēmijas vēstis (1991), no.4, pp.34–46 [with Russ. summary]
M. Boiko: 'Sledï sutartines v Latvii' [Traces of the sutartinės in Latvia], Pribaltiyskiy muzïkovedcheskiy sbornik, iv (1992), 61–81
M. Boiko: 'Latvian Ethnomusicology: Past and Present', YTM, xxvi (1994), 47–65
A. Beitāne: Vokālā daudzbalsība ar augšējo pavadbalsi Šķilbēnu pagastā [Vocal polyphony with a higher accompanying voice in the Šķilbēni parish] (thesis, Latvian Academy of Music, 1995)

M. Boiko: 'Volksmusikbewegung im Baltikum in den 70er und 80er Jahren: Kontexte, Werte, Konflikte', Verfemte Musik: Komponisten in den Diktaturen unseres Jahrhunderts, ed. J. Braun, V. Karbusický and H.T. Hoffmann (Frankfurt, Berlin and Berne, 1995), 349–57
M. Boiko: Die litauischen Sutartinės: eine Studie zur baltischen Volksmusik (diss., U. of Hamburg, 1996)
G. Šmidchens: A Baltic Music: the Folklore Movement in Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, 1968–1991 (diss., U. of Indiana, 1996)
Z. Sneibe: 'Latvian Folk Songs in the 18th–19th Centuries: Tradition and Change', Historical Studies on Folk and Traditional Music, ed. D. Stockmann and J.H. Koudal (Copenhagen, 1997)

RECORDINGS

Latviešu folklora: Alsunga [Latvian folklore: Alsunga], Melodiya M30-42327-8 (1981)
Latviešu folklora: Rikava, Melodiya M32-44793-4 (1982)
Latviešu folklora: Briežuciems un Rekava, Melodiya M30-46001 005 (1984)
Latviešu folklora: Auleja, Melodiya S30 24885 002 (1986)
The Latvian SSR: Musical Folklore, rec. 1926–84, Melodiya M30 46913 005 (1986)
Balsis no Latvijas/Voices from Latvia: Latvian Folklore Ensembles, AUSS (1994)
Voix des Pays Baltes: Chants Traditionnels de Lettonie, Lithuanie, Estonie, Inédit. W 260055 (1994)
Suitu sievas: Lejaskurzeme [The Suiti women: Lower Kurzeme], Annemarie Classics RRLV 0009–2 (1997)

JOACHIM BRAUN/ARNOLDS KLOTIŅŠ (I), MARTIN BOIKO (II)

Lau, Heinz (b Stettin, 8 Sept 1925; d Berlin, 21 June 1975). German composer. He studied with Ernst Gernot Klussman, Jarnach, Wilhelm Keller and Wilhelm Maler, and also, from 1954 to 1957, with Hindemith. In 1963 he was appointed lecturer in improvisation and harmony at the Pädagogische Hochschule in West Berlin, where he was made professor in 1971; in addition, he became editor of musical education programmes for Sender Freies Berlin in 1973. In the same year he was made a member of the Amriswil Academy, Switzerland. His work was important to the German youth music movement from 1950; his songs in particular had a long-lasting influence (e.g. Singt ein Vogel, Scheint die helle Sonne, Die Luft ist blau).

WORKS
(selective list)

Choral: Anbetung des Kindes (J. Weinheber), 1951; O Musica (after Peuerl), 1951; Die Weihnachtsgeschichte, chorus, insts, 1952, rev. 1957; Die Himmel erzählen, 1952; Lob des Tanzes, 1953; Mein Lied für Europa (Forestier), 1953; Dona nobis pacem, 1954; Die helle Sonne, chorus, insts, 1955; Regenkantate, chorus, insts, 1958; Die Weihnachtsgeschichte, 1961; Olympische Ode (Pindar), chorus, insts, 1963; Missa brevis canonica, solo vv, chorus, 1968; Klangstudien, children's vv, insts, tape, 1970; Die Weihnachtsgeschichte, improvisation for children, 1972
Requiem für eine Verfolgte – in memoriam Anne Frank (Eich, P. Celan, etc.), T, str qt, 1961; Competition, org, solo vv, insts, tape, 1971
Disputation, orch, 1972
Many songs and short choral pieces, chbr works, film and radio music

Principal publishers: Möseler, Pelikan (Zürich)

KLAUS L. NEUMANN

Laub, Ferdinand (b Prague, 19 Jan 1832; d Gries, nr Bolzano, 18 March 1875). Czech violinist and composer. His father taught him the violin as a child of four and he began to appear publicly when he was six; in 1841 Ole Bull praised his virtuoso playing. He was accepted straight into the second year at the Prague Conservatory, where he studied from 1843 to 1846 under Mořic Mildner, in his last year attracting the attention of H.W. Ernst (who later dedicated to Laub one of his Mehrstimmige Studien) and of Berlioz, who invited him to Paris. In December 1846 he went on a concert tour of Austria and Germany but was prevented from going to Paris by the 1848 Revolution. From 1848 to 1850 he worked in Vienna as a soloist with the orchestra of the Theater an der Wien and studied counterpoint with Sechter. At the end of 1850 he was invited by Balfe to take part in the national concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre in London (March to August 1851); he also appeared in Berlin, Paris and St Petersburg. In 1853 he succeeded Joachim as Konzertmeister in Weimar, where he came to know Liszt and played chamber music with him. From 1855 to 1857 he was violin professor at the Stern Conservatory in Berlin, and in 1856 was appointed chamber virtuoso to the Prussian king.

Between 1858 and 1865 Laub's performing career was at its peak. He appeared as soloist in all the major European cities and organized quartet evenings in Berlin (1858–62) at which he systematically performed all the Beethoven quartets; in Vienna (1862–6) he was made chamber virtuoso (1863) and organized successful chamber evenings in competition with Hellmesberger. He appeared with his most eminent contemporaries, including Clara Schumann and Bülow (Berlin, 1858), Rubinstein and Leschetizky (St Petersburg, 1859), Smetana (Göteborg, 1860), Patti and Jaëll (England, 1862) and Joachim (London, 1862). In 1866 he accepted the post of violin professor at the conservatory in Moscow, where he was acclaimed as soloist, chamber player and conductor and was much in demand as a teacher. He made deep friendships with the foremost Russian artists and contributed significantly to the high standard of the city's musical life; Tchaikovsky dedicated his Third String Quartet op.30 to Laub's memory in gratitude for the performances of his first two quartets (as leader of the Russian Musical Society's quartet). A year before his death Laub went for treatment to Bohemia, where he appeared in public for the last time in August 1874.

In his time Laub was renowned for his beautiful tone, his technical virtuosity and his unfailing sense of style. His wide repertory embraced such virtuoso works as the concertos of Mendelssohn, Joachim, Ernst, Paganini and Spohr, and his interpretation of the Beethoven concerto was particularly celebrated. He was one of the first violinists to perform the Bach sonatas. His instruments included an Amati, a 1706 Guarneri and a 1727 Stradivari. He composed a number of technically demanding violin pieces and some vocal works. His son Váša (Václav) Laub (b Berlin, 31 Dec 1857; d Khabarovsk, 23 Nov 1911) studied under his father in Moscow, in Prague under Karel Bendl (1875) and at the organ school (1879). He was a choirmaster and piano teacher in Moscow, military conductor in Port Arthur (from 1900) and the composer of numerous piano and orchestral pieces, songs and choruses.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ČSHS; MoserGV
V.V. Mareš: 'Ferdinand Laub', Lumír, viii (1858), 467–70
J.W. von Wasielewski: Die Violine und ihre Meister (Leipzig, 1869, rev. 8/1927/R by W. von Wasielewski), 353
A. Kalvoda: O českém houslistovi Ferdinandu Laubovi: dokumenty [On the Czech violinist Laub] (Křivoklát, 1912)
K. Hůlka: 'Ferdinand Laub', HR, vi (1912–13), 24–9
F. Žídek: Ferdinand Laub (Prague, ?1945)
L.S. Ginzburg: Ferdinand Laub (Moscow and Leningrad, 1951)
B. Šich: Ferdinand Laub (Prague, 1951) [incl. list of works]
R. Budiš: Slavní čeští houslisté [Famous Czech violinists] (Prague, 1966)

L.S. Ginsburg: 'Čeští přátelé P.I. Čajkovského' [Tchaikovsky's Czech friends], Svazky-vztahy-paralely (Brno, 1973), 11–24
F. Žídek: Čeští houslisté tří století [Czech violinists of three centuries] (Prague, 1979, 2/1982)
M.M. Semyakin: 'Stranitsï zhizni chetïre pokoleniye' [Pages from the lives of four generations], MAk, ii (1995), 167–71

ALENA NĚMCOVÁ

Laub, Thomas (Linnemann) (b Langaa, Fyn, 5 Dec 1852; d Gentofte, nr Copenhagen, 4 Feb 1927). Danish church musician and composer. After taking his matriculation examination in 1871 he first studied theology, but from 1873 to 1876 he attended the Copenhagen Conservatory, where he was taught by the distinguished theorist J.C. Gebauer. It was probably due to Gebauer's influence that during these years he became interested in the Cecilian movement within church music. On a trip to Italy in 1882–3 he became acquainted with classical vocal polyphony, and he saw the reform movement for himself in Germany in 1886. He then began his life's work for a revival of Danish ecclesiastical music, work which also came to embrace the medieval Danish ballad and popular song. From 1884 to 1891 he was organist at Helligåndskirke in Copenhagen, following Gebauer, and in 1891 he succeeded Gade as organist at Holmens Kirke, a position he held until two years before his death. The commotion this appointment aroused showed clearly how far he had already departed from the 19th-century tradition of ecclesiastical music in Denmark. From the first, Laub put his energies into purifying what he saw as the corrupt tradition of 18th- and 19th-century psalmody. For him, Gregorian chant was unsurpassed as a melodic basis for ecclesiastical vocal music, and the chorale was the most beautiful expression of devotional music. He strove to re-create this tradition by restoring the melody, rhythm and harmony of the hymns to their original form and by composing anew in the old spirit. He also put his views in writings, as well as in arrangements and his own compositions, of which the most important is the collection Dansk kirkesang (1918). His untiring work and valuable artistic achievements aroused much debate and great opposition during his life, but his efforts have left a deep mark on 20th-century Danish church music. In 1922 the Danish Hymn Society was founded to spread his ideas, and 'Laubianismen' became a strong movement within Danish ecclesiastical musical practice.

Laub also wanted to restore the medieval ballad, whose melodies are known mainly from copies made in the 19th century, to what he saw as its genuine form on a foundation of Gregorian chant and modal melody. But although his attempts at restoration, particularly his polyphonic arrangements, hold many beauties, they represent a view of art music on a popular substratum that has been abandoned in the light of research into the ballad genre. Laub shared his interest in popular community singing with other contemporary composers in the years after 1900. In his efforts to re-create a simple song tradition with models in, among others, J.A.P. Schulz, he joined with Nielsen and also with Oluf Ring and Thorvald Aagaard to publish the most popular collection of tunes of the time, Folkehøjskolens melodibog (1922), containing some of the most beautiful of Laub's own secular melodies, which, as Nielsen expressed it, are 'never at any point self-assertive, but continuously, lovingly, both adorn and subserve the songs'.

WORKS
(selective list)

SACRED

80 rytmiske koraler (Copenhagen, 1888)
Kirkemelodier, firstemmig udsatte (Copenhagen, 1888–90)
Salmemelodier i kirkestil (Copenhagen, 1896–1902)
Forspil og melodier: forsøg i kirkestil (Copenhagen, 1909)
Dansk kirkesang: gamle og nye melodier (Copenhagen, 1918, suppl. 1930)
Aandelige sange (Copenhagen, 1925)
24 salmer og 12 folkeviser, ed. M. Wöldike (Copenhagen, 1928)
Liturgisk musik, ed. M. Wöldike (Copenhagen, 1937)

SECULAR

10 gamle danske folkeviser (Copenhagen, 1890)
Danske folkeviser med gamle melodier (Copenhagen, 1899–1904, 2/1930) with C. Nielsen: En snes danske viser (Copenhagen, 1915–17)
Ti Aarestrupske ritorneller (Copenhagen, 1920)
Tolv viser og sange af danske digtere (Kolding, 1920, 2/1938) with C. Nielsen, O. Ring and T. Aagaard: Folkehøjskolens melodibog (Copenhagen, 1922, suppl. 1927)
30 danske sange for 3 og 4 lige stemmer (Copenhagen, 1922)
Faerøske og danske folkevisemelodier udsatte for mandskor af Henrik Rung og Thomas Laub, ed. K. Clausen (Copenhagen, 1942)
Danske folkeviser, ed. M. Wöldike and A. Arnholtz (Copenhagen, 1948)
Sange med klaver, ed. H. Glahn and M. Wöldike (Copenhagen, 1957)

WRITINGS

Vor musikundervisning og den musikalske dannelse (Copenhagen, 1884)
Om kirkesangen (Copenhagen, 1887)
'Studier over vore folkevisemelodiers oprindelse og musikalske bygning', Dania, ii (1892–3), 1, 149–79
'Vore folkevisemelodier og deres fornyelse', Danske studier, xi (1904), 177–209
Musik og kirke (Copenhagen, 1920, 2/1938)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBL (J.P. Larsen)
C. Nielsen: Levende musik (Copenhagen, 1925, 10/1950; Eng. trans., 1953)
P. Hamburger: Bibliografisk fortegnelse over Thomas Laubs litteraere og musikalske arbejder (Copenhagen, 1932)
P. Hamburger: Thomas Laub: hans liv og gerning (Copenhagen, 1942)
E. Dal: Nordisk folkeviseforskning siden 1800 (Copenhagen, 1956)
M. Wöldike: 'Erindringer om Laub og Carl Nielsen', Dansk kirkesangs årsskrift 1967–8, 11ff
A.H. Hauge: Thomas Linneman Laub (1852–1927) and his Influence on the Revitalization of Danish Music (diss., U. of Boston, 1969)
E. Ransby: 'Tilblivelsen af Thomas Laubs Kirkesangsreform' [The origin of Thomas Laub's reform of Danish congregational singing], Dansk Kirkesangs årsskrift 1982, 101–112
H. Tongaard and P. Thyssen: 'Enigheden og afstanden mellem Thomas Laub og Carl Nielsen i deres syn på salmemelodier' [Agreement and contention between Thomas Laub and Carl Nielsen in their views on Psalm melodies], Dansk Kirkesangs årsskrift 1989–93, 55–70

NIELS MARTIN JENSEN

Laube, Anton (b Brüx [now Most, Czech Republic], Bohemia, 13 Nov 1718; d Hradčany, Prague, 24 Feb 1784). Bohemian composer. His letter of application in 1771 to succeed F.X. Bixi as Kapellmeister at Prague Cathedral reveals that he was a composer and choirmaster at St Gall, Prague. He was granted the appointment on 29 October 1771, and he held this post until his death.

Laube wrote both sacred and secular music in an early Classical idiom similar to Brixi's. His church compositions have a homophonic texture of striking simplicity. They were performed throughout Bohemia during his lifetime, but soon after his death objections were raised to their almost complete lack of counterpoint. As a composer of instrumental music, Laube was known both in Bohemia and abroad (some of his works were listed in the Breitkopf catalogues, 1763–71). His symphonies, the earliest of which probably date from about 1750, are mostly in three movements, though some follow the Classical four-movement arrangement. The movements in sonata form have distinctly marked secondary themes. Laube's identity with the composer of several Singspiele performed in Berlin in 1776 (titles cited by Graf) has not been established.

WORKS

Inst: 6 syms., CZ-Bm, 1 doubtful; 1 sym., Pnm; 9 syms., Bu (6 microfilm), 1 ed. in The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. B, xiii (New York, 1984); Bn Conc., C, Pnm; Bn Conc., d, listed in Breitkopf catalogue (1766); Concertino, F, eng hn, Pnm; 11 serenades, 2 ob, 2 hn, 2 bn, Pnm; Sonata, C, fl, vn, vc, listed in Breitkopf catalogue (1763); 2 trios, E, C, 2 vn, vc, listed in Breitkopf catalogue (1771); Trio, 2 vn, vc, D-Mbs

Vocal: 12 songs, S, pf, B-Br; Die thränende und versöhnte Magdalena (Easter orat), CZ-Bb; masses, TeD, Requiem, other sacred works, mostly Bm, Pnm, Pp, see Podlaha, Kouba

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookB; ČSHS; DlabacžKL; WurzbachL [bibliography]

G.J. Dlabacž: 'Versuch eines Verzeichnisses der vorzüglichern Tonkünstler in oder aus Böhmen', Materialien zur alten und neuen Statistik von Böhmen, ed. J.A. Riegger, xii (Leipzig and Prague, 1794), 225–98, esp. 253

A. Podlaha: Catalogus collectionis operum artis musicae quae in bibliotheca capituli metropolitani pragensis asservantur (Prague, 1926), pp.iv–v, xxviii, xxxi, nos.804–36

H. Graf, ed.: Das Repertoire der öffentlichen Opern- und Singspielbühnen in Berlin seit dem Jahre 1771 (Berlin, 1934)

J. Kouba and others, eds.: Průvodce po pramenech k dějinám hudby [Guide to sources of musical history] (Prague, 1969)

J. Havlík: Symfonie Antonína Laubeho a Josefa Bárty (diss., U. of Prague, 1975)

MILAN POŠTOLKA

Laubenthal, Rudolf (b Düsseldorf, 18 March 1886; d Pöcking, nr Starnberg, 2 Oct 1971). German tenor. He studied with Lilli Lehmann in Berlin and made his début in 1913 at the Charlottenburg opera, where he remained until 1923, the year of his Metropolitan début as Walther. He sang in the first American performances of Jenůfa, Die ägyptische Helena and Švanda the Bagpiper. At Covent Garden (1926–30) he sang Erik, Siegfried, Tristan and Walther. He continued to appear in Munich, Vienna and other European theatres until 1937. His repertory included Arnold (Guillaume Tell), Hoffmann and John of Leyden (Le prophète). A handsome man and an intelligent actor, he was renowned as Tristan and Siegfried, and recorded excerpts from both roles.

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/R

Lauber, Anne (b Zürich, 28 July 1943). French-Canadian composer of Swiss origin. She studied at the Lausanne Conservatoire (1963–7) with Andor Kovách and Jean Perrin, among others, and privately with Darius Milhaud. In 1967 she moved to Montreal, becoming a Canadian citizen in 1972. She pursued postgraduate study at the University of Montreal (MMus 1982, DMus 1986), where her teachers included Serge Garant and André Prévost. She has taught at the University of Quebec (Montreal and Trois-Rivières campuses), Concordia University and the University of Montreal. Lauber's compositions demonstrate her assimilation of many contemporary musical techniques. Her earliest works are tonal. With the Divertimento (1970), however, her style began to evolve towards serialism, an approach employed in the 5 Pieces for Organ (1978). In the film score L'affaire Coffin (1979) and later in Valse concertante (1982) she used both tonal and atonal languages. The lyrical and romantic qualities of her writing have made her music popular with the public. As a conductor, she has worked with the Montreal, Ville d'Anjou and Sherbrooke youth orchestras. (*EMC*2, M. Gagné)

WORKS

Orch: Divertimento, str, 1970; Conc., str, 1976; Poème pour une métamorphose, 1978; Fantaisie sur un thème connu, pf, orch, 1981; Osmose, 1981; Colin-Maillard, 1982; Valse concertante, pf, orch, 1982; Au-delà du mur du son (P. Tardif-Delorme), sym. tale, 2 nar, orch, 1983; Conc., str qt, str, 1983; Vn Conc., 1984; Conc., vn, str, 1986; Conc. '3 Moods', db, str, 1988; Conc., pf, str, 1988; Ouverture canadienne, str, 1989

Vocal: 3 poèmes de Monika (M. Merinat), B, pf, 1976; Mélodie (S.-D. Garneau), T, pf, 1979; Le petit prince, nar, pf, 1979; Contrastes (Lauber), S, pf, 1980; La joue de la poupée (Mérinat), 2 nar, 6vv, vc, 1982; Jesus Christus (orat, B. Lacroix), 5 solo vv, SATB, orch, 1984; Le songe (A. Grandbois), nar, fl, str qt, 1985; Requiem, 4 solo vv, chorus, orch, 1988–9

Chbr and solo inst: Cinq éléments, fl, vn, sax, bn, tuba, 1974; Sonata no.1, va, pf, 1975; Wind Qnt, 1976–7; Divertissement, fl, gui, 1978; Mollésiennes, fl, pf, 1978; 5 Pieces, org, 1978; Sonata no.2, va, pf, 1979; Monologue, pf, 1980; Movt, cl, pf, 1980; Movt, db, pf, 1980; Movt, fl, pf, 1980; Movt, hn, pf, 1980; Movt, va, pf, 1980; Movt, vc, pf, 1980; Movt, vn, pf, 1980; Arabesque, gui, 1983; Pf Qnt, 1983; 3 Intermezzi, db, pf, 1987; Pf Qt, 1989; Scherzo, pf, 1989

Film scores: L'affaire Coffin, 1979; Marie Uguay, 1981

Principal publishers: Canadian Music Centre, Doberman-Yppan

SOPHIE GALAISE

Lauchery, Etienne (b Lyons, Sept 1732; d Berlin, 5 Jan 1820). French dancer, choreographer and teacher. He was an influential figure in the history of the ballet en action. A pupil of his father, Laurentius (1713–83), an actor and dancer at the Mannheim Hoftheater, he probably studied in Paris, and then worked as a dancing master and ballet dancer at the Mannheim court (1756–64). In about 1763 he began his career as a choreographer at the court of Hessen-Kassel, creating more than 50 ballets. A printed collection of these ballets (Kassel, 1768) suggests that he was familiar with the theories and practical works of Noverre. The music for most of these ballets was composed by his former Mannheim colleagues Christian Cannabich, C.J. Toeschi and Ignaz Fränzl as well as by Noverre's collaborators at Stuttgart, F.J. Deller and Rudolph. Lauchery wrote his own music for at least two of his ballets and, as in a letter by Leopold Mozart (11 December 1777), he also composed violin duos. From 1772 to 1778 he directed the ballet and ballet school at Carl Theodor's court in Mannheim, reviving his most successful ballets from Kassel and creating a series of new ones. In 1778 he moved to Munich with Carl Theodor, but soon returned to Mannheim (1779–81) and then Kassel (1781–87). The establishment of a ballet school at the recently renovated Royal Opera House, probably modelled on that at Mannheim, offered him the opportunity from 1788 to cultivate the new dramatic dance style in Berlin as well.

In total Lauchery created about 100 ballets. The music for many is lost, but the large number of surviving texts reveal the variety of subjects treated by him. Lauchery clearly had an affinity to the comic genre, but he also went his own way in the serious and heroic ballet, even while acknowledging Nouverre's example. His work, which approached the beginnings of Romantic ballet, was continued by his son and pupil Albert (1779–1853).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Kloïber: Die dramatischen Ballette von Christian Cannabich (Munich, 1928)
S. Dahms: 'Etienne Lauchery, der Zeitgenosse Noverres', Mozart und Mannheim: Mannheim 1991, 145–55
S. Dahms: 'Das Repertoire des "Ballet en action": Noverre-Angiolini-Lauchery', De editione musices: Festschrift Gerhard Croll, ed. W. Gratzer and A. Lindmayer (Laaber, 1992), 125–42
S. Dahms: 'Ballet Reform in the Eighteenth Century and Ballet at the Mannheim Court', Ballet Music from the Mannheim Court I, ed. P. Corneilson and E.K. Wolf, RRMCE, xlv (1996), pp.ix–xxiii
P. Corneilson and E.K. Wolf: 'Mannheim Ballet Sources, 1758–1778', ibid., pp.xxiv–xxxiii

SIBYLLE DAHMS

Lauclos, Henri de. See L'ENCLOS, HENRI DE.

Laúd (Sp.). Term (from Arab. 'ŪD) for the lute, which was introduced to Spain by Arabs during the 13th century. Together with bandurria and guitars, it appears in folk ensembles known as rondallas and is used to accompany song and dance forms such as the jota (see SPAIN, §II, 4 and 5). The back of the resonator is flat, not pear-shaped as in the 'ūd. In Spain the instrument is played with a púa (plectrum). The laúd español appears also in Puerto Rican folk music. In Cuba a laúd with seven courses of double strings may substitute for a guitar in the accompanimental ensemble for the dance punto guajiro.

JOHN M. SCHECHTER

Lauda (It.: 'praise'; pl. laude [laudi]). The principal genre of non-liturgical religious song in Italy during the late Middle Ages and Renaissance. In its monophonic form, the lauda also constitutes the primary Italian repertory of late medieval vernacular song, and is distinguished from most neighbouring repertories in its strictly urban, non-courtly context. The religious lauda endured into the 19th century, and extant repertory remains an important source of popular Italian texts and music.

1. Social context. 2. Repertory and performing practice: (i) Monophonic (ii) Polyphonic.

1. SOCIAL CONTEXT. Changes in the form and style of the lauda were conditioned largely by the shifting currents of religious devotion, politics and styles of music and poetry. The lauda arose in the city-states of central Italy during the 13th century, and was a product of the complementary forces of mendicant (especially Dominican and Franciscan) urban missionary zeal and the emerging guild-based communes of Tuscany and Umbria. The early lauda took shape in close proximity to the practice and the affective rhetorical style of mendicant preaching. The roots of the lyrical lauda tradition can be traced to the 'Canticle of the Sun' by St Francis of Assisi (1182–1226), Altissimu, onnipotente bon Signore/tue so le laude, la gloria, et l'onore (I-Af 338, with empty music staves). St Francis urged his followers to 'go through the world preaching and praising God, … first one of them who knew how to preach should preach to the people and that after the sermon they were to sing the praises of God [laudes Domini] as minstrels of the Lord [joculatores Dei]'. Mendicant sermons and lauda singing shared many themes and goals: the creation in their listeners of the complementary devotional states of penance and praise (see the early lauda text Benedictu, laudatu et glorificatu lu Patre), and the promotion of Marian veneration, particularly in response to rampant heresies that tended, as did the Cathars, to deny the divinity of the incarnate Christ (see Raina potentissima). The two main contexts for lauda singing around the mid-13th century were both lay: Marian confraternities organized primarily by the Dominicans (particularly in response to the preaching of St Peter Martyr in 1244–5), and the great penitential processions of flagellants that were the product of millenarian hysteria, charismatic urban preaching (both authorized and unauthorized) and cities plagued by war and pestilence.

The popular devotional activities of lauda singing and ritual scourging assumed institutional form only after this time, however, and the lay confraternities of laudesi (compagnie delle laude) and disciplinati (battuti, flagellanti) arose in conjunction with the late 13th-century stabilization of the guild-based communal governments and the establishment of the mendicant orders in the same Tuscan and Umbrian cities. Throughout the 14th and 15th centuries relatively unbroken traditions of lauda-singing were maintained by both types of confraternity, but the paraliturgical services of the laudesi confraternities provided the lauda's primary context.

The earliest known laudesi company was founded in 1267 at the Dominican church of Camporegio in Siena (earlier dates are no longer tenable). Most of the laudesi confraternities were founded in the mendicant convents of Tuscan and Umbrian communes shortly after this time, and institutional lauda singing was soon legitimized by the granting of episcopal and papal indulgences. In Florence, which sustained a lauda-singing culture of unparalleled vigour and longevity, all but one of the city's 12 companies appeared during about 1270–1330, and were either newly formed or derived from the older Marian confraternities in which lauda singing had been at most an incidental, ad hoc activity. The evidence is scant for laudesi activity in cities outside Florence such as Lucca, Pisa and Siena, where the mid-century ravages of the Black Death may have severely damaged the infrastructures that supported confraternal institutions. 14th-century Florence remained a favourable environment for the laudesi, and here the once ad hoc devotion was rapidly transformed by several interrelated circumstances that converged with particular strength in Florence at this time: the proliferation of saint's day feasts in general; a dramatic rise in the number of bequests for lauda services (lauda 'vigil' or vigilia alle laude) on the feasts of these various saints; the professionalization and elaboration of laudesi activities brought on by the financial and legal obligations of these bequests; and the consequent rise of professional lauda singers, ornate service books (laudari) and a technically demanding repertory of paraliturgical songs. It is in this context that the remarkably florid laude in the Florentine laudario I-Fn BR18 (see ex.2) are to be understood.

The monophonic repertory of the 14th century was performed primarily in the daily ferial services (around the time of Compline) as well as in the annual festal cycles of the confraternities, which were conducted in a host church before a consecrated altar and altar painting. Most lauda vigils included some combination of prayers, readings, a candle procession and offering with lauda singing, a brief sermon and further lauda singing that led to confession. By the late 14th century, the laudesi companies increasingly focussed upon their festal services, particularly those of a patron saint, which might involve the hiring of civic wind and brass players (pifferi and trombetti), extra singers and instrumentalists, a procession with lauda singing and elaborate services on both the eve and the day of the feast with the performance of special laude proper to the feast. During the 15th century the Florentine laudesi companies at the churches of Santo Spirito (the proprietors of I-Fn BR18) and S Maria del Carmine continued to serve the obligations of their bequests for lauda vigils, but otherwise devoted their resources to the annual staging of elaborate sacre rappresentazioni in which one or two interpolated laude were sung. Most laudesi companies had adopted polyphonic singing by about 1430, and expanded their chapels to accommodate the subsequent shifts from two- to three- and four-part singing. Beset by declining membership and economic inflation in the early 16th century, few companies could sustain the expense of polyphonic choirs, and in the vastly changed devotional environment of the Counter-Reformation the laudesi companies ceded their ancient devotion to the clergy of their host churches.

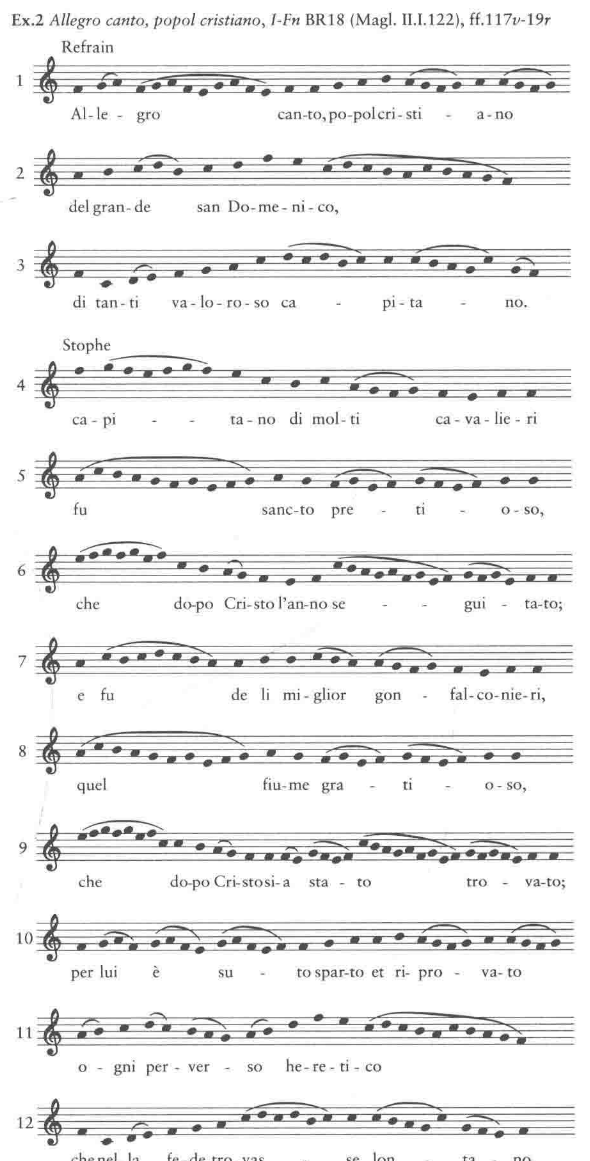
Lauda singing occupied a distinctive if less central place in the activities of the disciplinati confraternities that arose in the early 14th century. No musical sources for the disciplinati survive, but the texts in the extant laudarii reveal a penitential tone and a powerful urge to identify affectively and actively with the suffering and death of Christ and the martyred saints as a means to redemption. Cultivating an ambience of darkness, secrecy and self-denial, the disciplinati singers appear not to have aspired to the elaborate, professional and public character of the laudesi singing; but surviving documents of companies from Bologna, Florence and, above all, Umbrian cities such as Assisi, Perugia, Cortona and Orvieto reveal the integral role of the lauda in a variety of contexts: funerals and suffrages of the dead, Holy Week services, processions and in the privacy of an oratory in conjunction with the central devotion of ritual scourging (the latter two a legacy of the 13th-century penitential processions). The early 14th-century statutes of the Confraternita di S Stefano in Assisi call for ritual scourging followed immediately by the singing of a vernacular lauda, the singer of which is charged with '[moving] the hearts of the brothers to tears more than words move the mind'. The lauda played a particularly important role in the disciplinati's Holy Week services, above all during the mandato (foot-washing) service on Holy Thursday. In Umbria the lauda, especially the narrative Passion lauda, underwent a distinctive transformation from devozione to rappresentazione, and by the early 15th century these dramatic laude were fully staged productions.

While laude were sung primarily during the services of laudesi and disciplinati companies throughout the 14th and 15th centuries, lauda singing was gradually adopted during this period in other contexts favourable to popular devotion. Laude were recited or sung in conjunction with mendicant sermons, particularly during Lent, and appeared with increasing frequency in private devotional and clerical settings. The great Florentine lauda poet Feo Belcari (1410–84) was informed of the death of his sister in a Florentine convent with a letter describing how in her final moments she 'entered into a devout state and began singing the lauda that begins Partiti core et vanne all'amore, then upon her request her close companions gathered and sang a lauda that eased her passage from this life'. Widespread clerical appropriation of lauda composition and performance began near the end of the 15th century, however, when the polyphonic lauda was often promoted in the context of religious reform as a substitute for more complex styles of polyphony. In Florence, the Dominican friar Girolamo Savonarola advocated lauda singing throughout the churches and confraternities of the city, and thereafter the lauda was cultivated almost exclusively in Dominican convents in Tuscany loyal to the friar's memory. Most of the 15th-century sources of polyphonic laude (see §2(ii) below) come from monastic environments in Venice or the Veneto, many of which were connected with a Benedictine reform movement that rejected more complex polyphony. Petrucci's Laude libro primo (1508) is devoted entirely to the works of a Venetian priest, Innocentius Dammonis, and it is likely that this and Petrucci's next lauda collection contain repertory performed both in Venetian convents and by lay and clerical singers in the services of Venetian confraternities (scuole). Petrucci's Laude libro secondo (1507/8) contains a number of works by Mantuan court composers such as Cara and Tromboncino, probably for use in church services, processions and private courtly devotions in Mantua and perhaps also in other north Italian courts such as Milan and Ferrara. The final creative phase of the lauda took place in Counter-Reformation Rome, where the composition, publication and performance of laude for Filippo Neri's Congregazione dell'Oratorio was conducted, once again, in a clerical environment of religious reform.



2. Repertory and performing practice.

(i) Monophonic. While there are more than 200 extant confraternity laudarii that transmit texts, only two survive with musical notation, along with a number of musical fragments from dismembered laudarii. The late 13th-century Cortona laudario (I-CT 91) belonged to the Confraternita di S Maria delle Laude attached to the church of S Francesco in Cortona, but its 65 laude (with music for 46) were probably drawn by its scribe from the general area of Siena, Arezzo and Cortona. The Florence laudario (I-Fn BR18, olim Magl.II.I.122) was copied during the early 14th century for the Compagnia delle laude di Santo Spirito, a modest laudesi company that met at the Florentine church of Santo Spirito. It contains 97 laude (88 with music) that would have been performed by the one or two singers this company retained into the early 15th century. Ziino (1978) has demonstrated that a group of the surviving musical fragments come from a single laudario which belonged to the Compagnia di S Agnese, a Florentine laudesi company situated in the church of S Maria del Carmine. The paraliturgical function of these confraternity service books is revealed in their format and style: laude are grouped in sections devoted to Mary, a cycle for the liturgical year and, in the richly illuminated Florence laudario, a large sanctorale section. The notation in both collections is the rhythmically neutral quadratic notation used in contemporary chant manuscripts.

The only known authors of medieval laude are Jacopone da Todi, Guittone d'Arezzo and a certain Garzo. The otherwise anonymous poetic repertory is extremely varied in both quality and subject matter. Many texts are didactic in intent, such as some of the older Marian laude with their anti-heretical language (e.g. Madonna sancta Maria in I-CT 91) or laude that narrate the events of a saint's vita (e.g. Vergine donzella in CT 91 and Fn BR18). Most employ a vivid and affective language intended to draw the participant into a devotional state of penance or praise. The subject matter is adapted from a variety of sources, including the Bible, liturgical texts and more popular devotional literature such as Iacobus de Voragine's Legenda Aurea. Apart from the oldest 13th-century texts, which tend to be formally diverse, the medieval lauda repertory is distinguished by the pervasive application of the poetic scheme of the BALLATA. Originally a dance-song with a choral refrain (similar to the French virelai and the English carol), the clearly secular ballata form was adapted to sacred texts during the later 13th century, probably within the institutional framework of the new confraternities, and held fast in the lauda repertory to the end of the 14th century when it began to be displaced by a new array of poetic forms linked to an emerging polyphonic practice. In its strictest and most frequent form, the lauda-ballata consists of a two-line, end-rhyming choral refrain (repeated after each successive strophe) and a four-line, soloistic strophe made up of piedi (two lines of identical versification and end-rhyme) and a volta (two lines that repeat the versification and, usually, the music of the refrain). Laude rarely follow this ballata minore scheme strictly, however, and particularly in the Florence laudario one finds not only more irregular line lengths but also variations upon the longer stanzaic forms of the ballata mezzana and ballata maggiore.

Ex.1 Onne homo ad alta voce, I-CT 91, ff.55*r*-57*r*

Ex.2 Allegro canto, popol cristiano, I-Fn BR18 (Magl. II.I.122), ff.117*v*-19*r*

Like the texts, the melodies of the lauda repertory range freely in style and character from chant to popular song, variously showing traces of processional intonations, dance-tunes, indigenous popular song styles, litanic, hymnodic and sequential structures, troubadour song, the modes of ecclesiastical chant and an incipient major–minor tonality. Exx.1 and 2 show melodies in two contrasting styles. Onne homo ad alta voce (ex.1), in honour of the Holy Cross, appears in both laudarii and is an example of the simpler lauda style: the melodic motion is conjunct, the word-setting is mostly syllabic (with occasional two- to four-note ligatures on individual syllables) and it lies within the range of any male voice. Like many of the simpler mode 1 (protus) lauda melodies, it sounds rather austere and exhibits some structural irregularities (the piedi – lines 3–4 – differ, and the volta – lines 5–6 – is a varied recapitulation of the refrain). A lauda in honour of St Dominic from the Florence laudario, Allegro canto, popol cristiano (ex.2), reflects the professionalization of the Florentine laudesi: it demands control of a much wider range and engages in an effusive and florid virtuosity that is characteristic of many laude found in the sanctorale section of that Florence manuscript. The overall structure is absolutely regular (strict repetition among the three pairs of piedi, and between refrain and volta), and the major-tonality melodies tend to cascade within clearly-defined octave gamuts in a manner similar to the cantus parts in polyphonic madrigals by contemporary Florentine composers such as Donato da Cascia and Lorenzo Masini.

The two main sources share 20 texts and 14 melodies, and the Florence laudario contains nine melodies that appear two or more times with different texts (contrafacta). Ave, donna sanctissima is transmitted in both sources, and reveals the melodic plasticity of a repertory conditioned by oral and improvisatory traditions. Melodic intervals of a third or more might be filled in, and a variety of ornamental notes ranging from single anticipatory or appoggiatura-like notes to clusters of notes in stock formulae (abundant in ex.2 and other florid laude like it) might be applied. Entire phrases, including finals, might differ significantly, although this is not as common as was once assumed.

It is just this melodic flexibility that argues against the application to the lauda repertory of rigid or artificial rhythmic schemes, such as those proposed by Riemann (Vierhebigkeit), Beck and Aubry (Modal rhythm) and Anglès ('modified mensural'). Rhythmic solutions to the performance of monophonic laude must be sought in the extra-liturgical environment of the late medieval Italian cities, where the possibilities ranged from unmeasured recitation to dance-song and flexible mensural applications. The rhythmic transcriptions in Liuzzi's monumental La lauda e i primordi della melodia italiana (1935) are untenable, and the facsimiles must be used with great caution. There are numerous scribal errors in both manuscripts with respect to clefs, custodes and melodic transpositions. The Florence laudario is especially problematic, for some time after its initial compilation the codex was damaged and the tops and sides trimmed and repaired, during which process the top staff on every folio was mutilated, the parchment restored and the music recopied. The recopied music is, however, entirely corrupt, a fact taken into account in only one recent edition (RRMMA, xxix, 1995), which proposes emended versions of these passages.

The 13 monophonic Latin songs in a mid-14th-century antiphoner (I-Tn Bobbiese F.I.4) are related to the lauda by virtue of their more popular melodic style and the use of the ballata form. The usual designation of these songs as 'Latin laude' is understandable but problematic given their anomalous features against the vast and relatively uniform backdrop of the medieval lauda repertory. As mensurally-notated songs in Latin emanating from environments unconnected with Trecento lauda production and lay confraternity performance (a Benedictine convent near Genoa), they stand outside the lauda tradition. One of these Latin songs, Vernans rosa, is also transmitted in I-Fn BR19, a 14th-century Florentine laudario, but is relegated to an appendix of Latin monophonic and polyphonic works and designated a 'sequentia'.

(ii) Polyphonic. Exceptional early examples of polyphonic laude are the two sacred ballata texts set by Trecento composers, Niccolò del Proposto's Dio mi guardi di peggio and Jacopo da Bologna's Nel mio parlar di questa donn'eterna. Though the melodic style of these works is simpler than that found in their composers' secular compositions, it is unrelated to the contemporary monophonic repertory in the Cortona and Florence laudarii which was largely ignored by or unknown to polyphonic composers.

In Florence more than 60 extant manuscript and print sources from about 1380 to 1560 bear witness to a vast and continuous cantasi come tradition that was unique to that city. These are collections of lauda texts, some copied into private devotional miscellanies, others intended for a wider circulation, that bear the rubric 'cantasi come' (to be sung like) followed by the title of a song to which the lauda was to be sung. The oldest collections, such as I-Rvat Chigiano L.VII.266, contain the last appearances of monophonic lauda titles and secular polyphony drawn from late 14th-century Florentine sources. The approximately 65 laude in these early sources with cantasi come links to Florentine polyphony overwhelmingly favour the music of the formally compatible ballata settings and a traditional polyphonic texture of two voices with text in both parts. Landini's settings seem to have been great favourites – the laude O Gesú Cristo padre and Or che non piangi both called for the music of his La bionda trezza, for example – but the two-voice ballatas of Giovanni da Cascia, Gherardello da Firenze, Niccolò da Perugia, Andrea da Firenze, Bartolino da Padova, Guilielmus de Francia, Ciconia and Paolo da Firenze were called upon as well. The link between lauda texts and Trecento polyphony must have been forged in the wealthier Florentine laudesi companies such as that of Orsanmichele, where the elaborate musical establishment brought together as many as a dozen professional laudesi, a music master versed in polyphonic practices, lute and medieval fiddle players, and, from 1378 to 1426, the organist and composer Giovanni Mazzuoli.

In the course of the 15th century the lauda underwent a profound change as it lost its exclusive association with the lay confraternities and the ballata form and entered into the broader and shifting currents of emerging polyphonic styles and new poetic forms. This is most evident in the numerous sources from the next, Medicean period of the Florentine cantasi come tradition (*c*1430–90). Lauda poetry assumed the new and more varied forms of popular poetry found in the later FROTTOLA (such as the strambotto, barzelletta and capitolo), the chief poets being Feo Belcari, Francesco d'Albizo, Lorenzo de' Medici and Lucrezia Tornabuoni (Lorenzo's mother). The cantasi come rubrics indicate a broad array of music: there are Italian and French songs and a handful of Latin, Spanish, Flemish and German songs, many in extant polyphonic settings found in Florentine sources as well as in sources from northern Italy to Naples. The regional unwritten traditions of viniziane, napolitane and siciliane also found their way to Florence, where they jostled with local repertories of festival music such as canti carnascialeschi, trionfi, May songs, music for Holy Week, the individual creations of singers such as 'Benolio' and Piero di Mariano, and a local aria fiorentina for the singing of strambotti, rispetti and balli. Chief among the non-Florentine tributaries are the veneziane or giustiniane, named for LEONARDO GIUSTINIANI (*c*1383–1446), whose laude and popularizing love songs are ubiquitous in late 15th-century cantasi come sources. The central document of this period is I-Fn Magl.VII.690, an autograph manuscript prepared by Feo Belcari between 1468 and his death in 1484, which appears to have determined for subsequent sources (particularly the printed sources, such as the four prints of 1486–1507 ed. Galletti, 1863) the general cosmopolitan nature of the cantasi come sources and many specific links. Belcari's lauda Tutto per noi is always paired in the later sources with the Frye-Binchois Tout a par moy, just as his Merzé ti chiamo Vergine Maria was always linked to the music of Giustiniani's Mercé te chiamo o dolce anima mia (a two-part setting survives in I-Bu 2216). Whereas the prerequisites for a musical model with a foreign text were generally compatibility of poetic form and perhaps a similar sounding incipit, a deeper process of travestimento spirituale was often involved in the borrowing of music associated with popular (or notorious) Italian secular texts. Florentine Carnival songs (e.g. Visin, visin, visin chi vuol spazzar camin, which lent its music to Iesù, Iesù, Iesù, ogniun chiami Iesù) were especially ripe for this treatment. Belcari's lauda Hora mai sono in età extols the virtue of monastic retreat, while its musical model, the Neapolitan barzelletta Hora mai che fora son (in a four-part setting in E-E IV.a.24) is a secular song about a girl who rejects the convent.

Parallel to (but interactive with) the Florentine lauda tradition was a written, modo proprio repertory of polyphonic lauda settings from the Veneto. The majority of manuscripts that contain 15th-century laude in musical settings, copied between about 1420 and 1500, come from monastic environments in Venice (I-Vnm Cl.IX.145) and the Veneto (I-Bu 2216; I-Bc Q15; I-PAVu Aldini 361 and perhaps I-Fn Panciatichiano 27), and from Benedictine monasteries belonging to a reform order, the Congregatio Sanctae Iustinae, that originated in the Veneto (US-Wc ML171 J6; ZA-Csa Grey 3.6.12; I-MC 871). The poetic forms are those popularized by Giustiniani's verse (and music): the strambotto, capitolo, ode, frottola and classical ballata. The laude in these sources are generally in two and three parts, and particularly in ZA-Csa, a retrospective Benedictine anthology copied around 1500, the textures vary from simple note-against-note settings (Giustiniani's Quando Signor Jesú) to contrapuntal settings with broken rhythms, cadence patterns and problematic text underlay that suggest (like the setting of Giustiniani's Piangeti cristiani) the travestimento of a northern-European chanson. The majority of the settings in these sources, however, are in what may be considered an indigenous style of Italian polyphony that emerged in written form during the 15th century: the text-setting is syllabic and homorhythmic, and there is a close rhetorical correspondence between poetic and musical phrases, with clearly articulated, simultaneous cadences in all parts. The two similar versions of L'amor a me venendo in ex.3 date from the first half of the 15th century, and suggest a transition from improvisatory to written practice. The comparatively refined mensural duet in I-PAVu appears to have been derived from the rudimentary, organal texture in the Vnm version through compositional adjustments to part-writing, text underlay and the rhythmic and melodic structure of the lines. This same text appears with new music in Razzi's Libro primo (a three-part setting), and in Petrucci's Laude libro primo (a four-part setting by Dammonis). Such simple frameworks lent themselves to a more florid treatment of the cantus, and works such as Con desiderio io vo' cercando (from I-Bu 2216) probably reflect an older 15th-century tradition of improvisatory singing associated with the musical settings of Giustiniani's poetry (the aria veneziana) that was known in both Venice and Florence (ex.4). Three-part textures were favoured in the later 15th-century lauda repertory, and were sometimes created, as in ex.5, by the addition of a lower part to an older cantus-tenor duet. Giustiniani's very popular lauda O Jesù dolce was strongly associated with a two-part musical setting found (with variations) in both ZA-Csa and Razzi; the Panciatichiano 27 version in ex.5 is a version of this cantus-tenor duet, adjusted to accommodate a bass part that provides a quasi-tonal, root-position movement.

Ex.3 L'amor a me venendo, I-Vnm It. Cl. IX. 145, f.144*r*; I-PAVu Aldini 361, f.2*v*

Later settings of this text include one for four parts in Petrucci's Laude libro primo, and a five-part setting by Palestrina (Ziino, 1975).

Petrucci's Laude libro primo (1508) and Laude libro secondo (1507/8) may be regarded as the culmination of this Venetian modo proprio tradition, when the lauda reached a height of popularity and influence in tandem with the closely related musical settings of the frottola (*c*1490–1530). Of the 66 pieces in Petrucci's first book, all by the otherwise obscure Venetian priest Innocentius Dammonis, 51 have Italian texts and 15 Latin. By contrast, Petrucci's second book is devoted mostly to laude by north Italian frottola composers such as Cara, Tromboncino and Lurano, and contains 23 settings of Italian texts and 31 of Latin. The two books exhibit a variety of styles: most of the works are for four voices, some stylistically related to the older three-part, note-against-note lauda textures. The majority are in a style closer to that of the frottola, with a melodic upper voice patterned after the text, moderately active lower voices and a functional bass part. But there are also works in more complex imitative and non-imitative polyphonic textures, which employ more learned devices such as canon, cantus firmus and soggetto cavato (see Glixon).

Ex.4 Con desiderio io vo' cercando, I-Bu 2216, f.45*r*

Ex.5 O Yesù dolce, I-Fn Panciatichiano 27, f.50*v*

Petrucci's designation of these books as lauda collections is problematic, however. The fact that a lauda could stylistically resemble a frottola (some were contrafacta of frottolas) but also have a Latin text and complex textures (some of Petrucci's Latin pieces in his second book were lifted from his motet prints) obscured the contours of the lauda as a distinct genre; this may partly explain why it virtually disappeared from northern Italy not long after Petrucci's prints were published. Equally problematic, therefore, is the idea advanced by Osthoff and Lowinsky that the early 16th-century lauda influenced the new style of sacred music in mass and motet settings by composers such as Weerbeke, Compère and Josquin (the first part of whose homorhythmic motet Tu solus qui facis mirabilia was included in Petrucci's second book of laude with the text O mater Dei et hominis). Given the presence of motets and motet textures in Petrucci's two lauda books, and the generic ambiguity of the lauda and the Italian motet in the early 16th century, the extent and nature of the influence of the lauda upon the motet remains unclear.

The next printed collection of laude to appear after Petrucci's two books was Serafino Razzi's Libro primo delle laudi spirituali (1563). This, too, was the culmination of a tradition, the Florentine cantasi come practice, for in the dedicatory letter the printer Filippo Giunta declared that he had long wanted a collection of laude with music 'abandoning that silly way of saying cantasi come this and come that'. Razzi also compiled four manuscript collections of laude (I-Fn Pal.173) and published the Santuario di laudi (1609). Many of the lauda texts in his Libro primo were written during the early 16th century by Dominican friars, most of them active at some point in Savonarola's convent of S Marco, among them Angelo Bettini, Niccolò Fabroni and Razzi himself. Razzi's publications are extremely important for their transmission of what he called 'arie antiche', two- and three-part settings from late 15th-century Florence, many of them travestimenti spirituali of such Carnival songs as Lorenzo de' Medici's Quant'è bella la giovinezza (with the text Quant'è grande la bellezza di te, Vergin santa e pia) and Poliziano's May song Ben venga Maggio (with Lucrezia Tornabuoni's text Ecco'l Messia).

Razzi's 1563 anthology was timed to coincide with the closing months of the Council of Trent, when the reform of sacred music was under consideration, and the Counter-Reformation provided the impulse to the final creative phase of the lauda in Rome. Lauda singing was introduced to the Roman churches by two Florentines, the composer Giovanni Animuccia and the priest Filippo Neri. Neri had sung laude as a boy at S Marco, Florence, in the 1520s, and was an ardent admirer of Savonarola; during the 1550s he introduced lauda singing to the informal gatherings in an oratory that eventually received papal recognition as the Congregazione dell'Oratorio. In his capacity as Neri's maestro di cappella, Animuccia published in Rome in 1563 (with Razzi's encouragement) his Primo libro delle laudi. This began a long series of prints written and published for Neri's Congregazione: Animuccia published another collection in 1570, and there followed another 11 books between 1577 and 1600, edited primarily by Francisco Soto de Langa and Giovenale Ancina. During this same period, post-Tridentine lauda collections were also printed throughout Italy – in Venice, Genoa, Turin, Ferrara, Brescia and Naples. A few of the Roman laude had narrative or dramatic texts and are antecedents of the early Baroque oratorio volgare that evolved primarily in the context of the spiritual exercises conducted in Neri's oratory.

The Florentine origins of the Roman practice are evident in both the text and music. The verse types are still those of the frottola, and the predominantly three- (and occasionally four-) part homophonic textures are similar to those in Razzi's 1563 anthology. Some of the repertory also derives, as does Razzi's, from Florentine practice of the period 1480–1520, including music for Belcari's Giú per la mala via and d'Albizo's Giovanetti con fervore. Animuccia preserved Belcari's original cantasi come link between the text of his Lodate Dio and the music (with a more elaborate melody) for Poliziano's Ben venga maggio.

The lauda declined at the end of the 16th century with the rise of the oratorio, but lauda prints continued to be issued into the early 19th century. Through these, the tradition of travestimento spirituale was perpetuated, as in Matteo Coferati's Corona di sacre canzoni, o laude spirituali (1675), which includes about 140 secular melodies with sacred texts for each.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EDITIONS AND FACSIMILES

M. Padoan, ed.: Lodi devote per uso della dottrina christiana (Como, 1621/R)

K. Jeppesen and V.Brøndal, eds.: Die mehrstimmige italienische Laude um 1500 (Leipzig, 1935/R)

F. Liuzzi, ed.: La lauda e i primordi della melodia italiana (Rome, 1935/R)

G. Cattin, ed.: Laudi quattrocentesche del Cod. Veneto Marc. It. IX. 145 (Bologna, 1958)

G. Cattin: Italian Laude and Latin Unica in Ms. Capetown, Grey 3. b. 12, CMM, lxxvi (1977)

F. Luisi, ed.: Laudario giustinianeo (Venice, 1983)

C. Terni, ed.: Laudario di Cortona (Florence, 1988)

B. Wilson and N.Barbieri, eds.: The Florence Laudario: an Edition of Florence, Biblioteca nazionale centrale, Banco rari 18, RRMMA, xxix (1995)

M. Dürrer, ed.: Altitalienische Laudenmelodien: das einstimmige Repertoire der Handschriften Cortona und Florenz (Kassel, 1996)

STUDIES

MGG1 (K. Jeppesen); MGG2 (M.J. Bloxam); SmitherHO, i

G.C. Galletti: Laude spirituali di Feo Belcari, di Lorenzo de' Medici, di Francesco d'Albizzo, di Castellano Castellani e di altri, comprese nelle quattro più antiche raccolte (Florence, 1863)

A. d'Ancona: La poesia popolare italiana (Livorno, 1878, 2/1906)

D. Alaleona: 'Le laudi spirituali italiane nei secoli XVI e XVII, e il loro rapporto coi canti profani', RMI, xvi (1909), 1–54

A. Tenneroni, ed.: Inizii di antichi poesie italiane religiose e morali: con prospetto dei codici che le contengono e introduzione alle laudi spirituali (Florence, 1909)

E.J. Dent: 'The Laudi Spirituali in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries', PMA, xlii (1916–17), 63–95

V. de Bartholomaeis, ed.: Laude drammatiche e rappresentazioni sacre (Florence, 1943/*R*1967)

B. Becherini: 'La musica nelle "sacre rappresentazioni" fiorentine', RMI, liii (1951), 193–241

F. Ghisi: 'Strambotti e laude nel travestimento spirituale della poesia musicale del Quattrocento', CHM, i (1953), 45–78

F. Ghisi: 'La persistance du sentiment monodique et l'évolution de la polyphonie italienne du XIVe au XVe siècle', L'Ars Nova: Wégimont II 1955, 217–31

G. Vecchi: 'Tra monodia e polifonia: appunti da servire alla storia della melica sacra in Italia nel secolo XIII e al principio del XIV', CHM, ii (1956–7), 447–64

H. Anglès: La música de las Cantigas de Santa María del Rey Alfonso el Sabio, iii/2 (Barcelona, 1958), 483–516

G. Cattin: 'Contributi alla storia della lauda spirituale', Quadrivium, ii (1958), 45–75

G. Corsi: 'Madrigali inediti del Trecento', Belfagor, xiv (1959), 72–83, 329–40

G. Cattin: 'Il manoscritto Venet. Marc. Ital. IX, 145', Quadrivium, iv (1960), 1–60

G. Cattin: 'Le composizioni musicali del Ms. Pavia Aldini 361', L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento: convegni di studio 1961–1967, ed. F.A. Gallo, 1–2

F. Ghisi: 'Gli aspetti musicali della lauda fra il XIV e il XV secolo, prima metà', Natalicia musicologica Knud Jeppesen septuagenario collegis oblata, ed. B. Hjelmborg and S. Sørensen (Copenhagen, 1962), 51–8

P. Damilano: 'Fonti musicali della lauda polifonica intorno alla metà del secolo XV', CHM, iii (1962–3), 59–90

P. Damilano: 'Laudi latine in un antifonario bobbiese del Trecento', CHM, iii (1962–3), 15–57

F. Ghisi: 'Antiche canzoni popolari nella "Corona di sacre laudi" di Matteo Coferati (1689)', Liber amicorum Charles van den Borren (Antwerp, 1964), 69–81

S.W. Kenney: 'In Praise of the Lauda', Aspects of Medieval and Renaissance Music: a Birthday Offering to Gustave Reese, ed. J. LaRue and others (New York, 1966/R), 489–99

B.J. Blackburn: 'Te Matrem Dei laudamus: a Study in the Musical Veneration of Mary', MQ, liii (1967), 53–76

H. Anglès: 'The Musical Notation and Rhythm of the Italian Laude', Essays in Musicology: a Birthday Offering for Willi Apel, ed. H. Tischler (Bloomington, IN, 1968), 51–60
G. Cattin: 'Le composizioni musicali del Ms. Pavia Aldini 361', L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento II, ed. F.A. Gallo (Certaldo, 1968), 1–21
G. Cattin: 'Polifonia quattrocentesca italiana nel codice Washington, Library of Congress, ML 171 J6', Quadrivium, ix (1968), 87–102
A. Ziino: Strutture strofiche nel laudario di Cortona (Palermo, 1968)
W. Osthoff: Theatergesang und darstellende Musik in der italienischen Renaissance (15. und 16. Jahrhundert) (Tutzing, 1969)
H.E. Smither: 'Narrative and Dramatic Elements in the Laude Filippine, 1563–1600', AcM, xli (1969), 186–99
G. Cattin: 'Tradizione e tendenze innovatrici nella normativa e nella pratica liturgico-musicale della Congregazione di S. Giustina', Benedictina, xvii (1970), 254–99
F.A. D'Accone: 'Le compagnie dei laudesi in Firenze durante l'Ars Nova', L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento II ed. F.A. Gallo (Certaldo, 1970), 253–80
K. von Fischer: 'Quelques remarques sur les relations entre les laudesi et les compositeurs florentins du Trecento', L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento III ed. F.A. Gallo (Certaldo, 1970), 247–52
G. Cattin: 'La poesie di Savonarola nelle fonti musicali', Quadrivium, xii (1971), 259–80
A. Ziino: '"Con humiltà di core": ipotesi su un caso adattamento musicale', Quadrivium, xii (1971), 71–9
A. Ziino: 'Frammenti di laudi nell'Archivio di Stato di Lucca', Cultura neolatina, xxxi (1971), 295–312
G. Cattin: 'Nuova fonte italiana della polifonia intorno al 1500 (MS. Cape Town, Grey 3.b.12)', AcM, xlv (1973), 165–221
A. Ziino: 'Adattamenti musicali e tradizione manoscritta nel repertorio laudistico del Duecento', Scritti in onore di Luigi Ronga (Milan and Naples, 1973), 653–77
A. Ziino: Aspetti della tradizione orale nella musical medioevale (Lanciano, 1973)
A. Ziino and F.Carboni: 'Laudi musicali del 16 secolo: il manoscritto Ferrajoli 84 della Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana', Cultura neolatina, xxxiii (1973), 273–329
G. Varanini: 'Il manoscritto Trivulziano 535: laude antiche di Cortona', Studi e problemi di critica testuale, viii (1974), 52–65
E.M. Cambon: The Italian and Latin Lauda of the Fifteenth Century (diss., Tulane U., 1975)
F.A. D'Accone: 'Alcune note sulle compagnie fiorentine dei laudesi durante il Quattrocento', RIM, x (1975), 86–114
A. Ziino: 'Testi laudistici musicali da Palestrina', Studi palestriniani [I]: Palestrina 1975 (Rome, 1977), 381–408
G. Cattin: 'Musiche e le laude di Castellano Castellani', RIM, xii (1977), 183–230
J. Jaenecke: 'Eine unbekannte Laudensammlung des 15. Jahrhunderts', Renaissance-Studien: Helmuth Osthoff zum 80. Geburtstag, ed. L. Finscher (Tutzing, 1977), 127–44
C. Barr: 'Lauda Singing and the Tradition of the Disciplinati Mandato: a Reconstruction of the Two Texts of the Office of Tenebrae', La musica al tempo del Boccaccio e i suoi rapporti con la letteratura: Siena and Certaldo 1975 [L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento, iv, ed. A. Ziino (Certaldo, 1978)], 21–44
G. Cattin: 'I "cantasi come" in una stampa di laude della Biblioteca Riccardiana (Ed.r.196)', Quadrivium, xix (1978), 5–52
V. Moleta: 'The Illuminated Laudari Mgl1 and Mgl2', Scriptorium, xxxii (1978), 29–50
A. Ziino: 'Laudi e miniature fiorentine del primo Trecento', Studi musicali, vii (1978), 39–83
J.H. Grossi: The Fourteenth Century Florentine Laudario Magliabechiano II, I, 122 (B.R. 18): a Transcription and Study (diss., Catholic U. of America, 1979)
B. Toscani, ed.: Le Laude dei Bianchi (Florence, 1979)
M. Fabbri: 'Laude spirituali di travestimento nella Firenze della Rinascenza', Arte e religione nella Firenze de' Medici (Florence, 1980), 145–58
B. Toscani: 'Contributi alla storia musicale delle laude dei Bianchi', Studi musicali, ix (1980), 161–70
G. Varanini, L.Banfi and A.C. Burgio, eds.: Laude cortonesi dal secolo XIII al XV (Florence, 1981–5)
C. Barr: 'Musical Activities of the Pious Lay Confraternities of Quattrocentro Italy: a Chronicle of Change', Fifteenth Century Studies, viii (1983), 15–36
G. Cattin: '"Contrafacta" internazionali: musiche europee per laude italiane', Musik und Text in der Mehrstimmigkeit des 14. und 15. Jahrhunderts: Wolfenbüttel 1980 (Kassel, 1984), 411–42
N. Pirrotta: Music and Culture in Italy from the Middle Ages to the Baroque (Cambridge, MA, 1984)
E. Diederichs: Die Anfänge der mehrstimmige Lauda vom Ende des 14. bis zur Mitte des 15. Jahrhunderts (Tutzing, 1986)
O. Mischiati: 'Per una bibliografia delle fonti stampate della lauda (1563–1746)', Note d'archivio per la storia musicale, new ser., iv (1986), 203–26
C. Barr: The Monophonic Lauda and the Lay Religious Confraternities of Tuscany and Umbria in the Late Middle Ages (Kalamazoo, MI, 1988)
C. Barr: 'Music and Spectacle in Confraternity Drama of Fifteenth Century Florence: the Reconstruction of a Theatrical Event', Christianity and the Renaissance, ed. T. Verdon and J. Henderson (Syracuse, NY, 1990), 377–404
C. Del Popolo, ed.: Laude fiorentine: Il lauderino della Compagnia di San Gilio, 2 vols (Florence, 1990)
J. Glixon: 'The Polyphonic Laude of Innocentius Dammonis', JM, viii (1990), 19–53
G. Rostirolla: 'Laudi e canti religiosi per l'esercizio spirituale della dottrina cristiana al tempo di Roberto Bellarmino', Bellarmino e la controriforma: Sora 1986, ed. R. Di Maio and others (Sora, 1990), 663–849
M.J. Bloxam: '"La contenance italienne": the Motets on "Beata es Maria" by Compère, Obrecht, and Brumel', EMH, xi (1992), 39–89
G. Cattin: 'Le laude intonate sulle musiche del codice Squarcialupi/The Laude set to the Music of the Squarcialupi Codex', Il codice Squarcialupi MS Mediceo Palatino 87, Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana di Firenze, ed. F.A. Gallo (Florence and Lucca, 1992), 243–52
F. Luisi: '"Ben venga Maggio": dalla canzone a ballo alla Commedia di maggio', La musica a Firenze al tempo di Lorenzo il Magnifico: Florence 1992, 195–218
P. Macey: '"Infiamma il mio cor": Savonarolan Laude by and for Dominican Nuns in Tuscany', The Crannied Wall: Women, Religion, and the Arts in Early Modern Europe, ed. C.A. Monson (Ann Arbor, 1992), 161–89
P. Macey: 'The Lauda and the Cult of Savonarola', Renaissance Quarterly, xlv (1992), 439–83
W. Prizer: '"Laude di popolo", "laude di corte": some Thoughts on the Style and Function of the Renaissance Lauda', La musica a Firenze al tempo di Lorenzo il Magnifico: Florence 1992, 167–94
B. Wilson: Music and Merchants: the Laudesi Companies of Republican Florence (Oxford, 1992)
P. Macey: 'Some New Contrafacta for Canti Carnascialeschi and Laude in Late Quattrocento Florence', La musica a Firenze al tempo di Lorenzo il Magnifico: Florence 1992 (Florence, 1993)143–66
T. Karp: 'Editing the Cortona Laudario', JM, xi (1993), 73–105
R. Nosow: 'Binchois' Songs in the Feo Belcari Manuscript', Binchois Studies: New York 1995
B. Wilson: 'Indagine sul Laudario Fiorentino (Florence, B.N. Banco rari 18)', RIM, xxxi (1996), 243–80
B. Wilson: 'Madrigal, Lauda, and Local Culture in Trecento Florence', JM, xv (1997), 137–77
B. Wilson: 'Music, Art, and Popular Devotion at the Florentine Cathedral, ca. 1280–1480', Cantate Domino: Florence 1997 (forthcoming)
P. Macey: Bonfire Songs: Savonarola's Musical Legacy (Oxford, 1998)
B. Wilson: 'Song Collections in Early Renaissance Florence: the "Cantasi Come" Tradition and its Manuscript Sources', Recercare, x (1998), 69–104
D. Fallows: A Catalogue of Polyphonic Songs, 1415–1480 (Oxford, 1999)
B. Wilson: 'Hora mai che fora son: Savonarola and Music in Laurentian Florence', Proceedings of the International Conference "Una città e il suo profeta: Firenze di fronte al Savonarola" (Florence, forthcoming)

BLAKE WILSON

Lauda Sion (Lat.: 'praise, O Sion'). The sequence for Corpus Christi (LU, 945); the text is by Thomas Aquinas, set to a melody originally used for several of Adam of St Victor's sequences, resembling most closely that of Laudes crucis. It was one of the four sequences retained by the Council of Trent (1543–63). There are settings by Brumel (an alternatim paraphrase of the plainchant) as well as by Lassus, Victoria and Palestrina (three) (see SEQUENCE (i), §11). Among more recent settings is the imaginative work by Edmund Rubbra, for double chorus with soprano and baritone soloists.

JOHN CALDWELL

Lauder, Sir Harry (Maclennan) (b Portobello, nr Edinburgh, 4 Aug 1870; d Strathaven, 26 Feb 1950). Scottish baritone music-hall singer and composer. As a young man he won prizes at local singing contests and gained attention at concert parties, and after deciding to become a professional entertainer in 1894 he toured Scotland with the violinist Mackenzie Murdoch.

Lauder's most successful years as a singer coincided with the most popular years of the music hall, between 1900 and World War I. During this time he became known not only in the best London music halls but also, through concert tours, in Europe and North America. During both world wars he was an ardent recruiter, and was knighted for his efforts (1919). He performed at Buckingham Palace and for several American presidents. Later he made many gramophone recordings for the Victor label.

Lauder's stage personality was a stereotyped Scotsman, with a kilt and a generalized brogue. He often included an interlude of patter before the final verse of a song, sometimes ending with a jolly laugh; he preferred the sentimental appeal of love-songs and images of his home country, and usually ended his performances in a serious vein with Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep or The End of the Road. Lauder composed many of his own songs, of which more than 90 have been published, including a comedy sketch with four songs, The Night Before; the two major published collections of his works are Harry Lauder's Songs (arr. C. Greenwood, London, 1942) and Francis & Day's Album issued in five volumes (London, 1907–*c*1930). All the songs follow accepted popular formulae, and have little in common with Scottish folk music except for the occasional use of bagpipe effects in the accompaniment or a hexatonic scale. They usually have an instrumental introduction, two or more verses and a chorus. Most are firmly in the major mode, with diatonic melodies built on the repetition or sequential use of symmetrical two- or four-bar triadic phrases. Some of Lauder's tunes have become internationally known in oral tradition, including I love a Lassie (1905), A Wee Deoch-an-Doris (1910), Roamin' in the Gloamin' (1911) and The End of the Road (1924). The principal publishers of his works were Francis, Day & Hunter (London) and T.B. Harms (New York). He published ten books of stories and memoirs, notably Roamin' in the Gloamin' (London, 1927) and Ticklin' Talks (London, 1934).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (I. Brown)

G. Malvern: Valiant Minstrel: the Story of Sir Harry Lauder (New York, 1943)

Obituary, The Times (27 Feb 1950)

G. Irving: Great Scot: the Life Story of Sir Harry Lauder the Legendary Laird of the Music Hall (London, 1968)

G. Lauder-Frost and W.Wallace: Harry Lauder in the Limelight (Lewes, 1988)

D. Baker and L.F.Kiner: The Harry Lauder Discography (Metuchen, NJ, 1990)

DEANE L. ROOT

Lauder, James (*b c*1535; d after 1592). Scottish composer. He was musical servitor to Mary Queen of Scots and King James VI. In 1552–3, as prebendary of the choir of St Giles's Cathedral in Edinburgh, he was granted leave to travel to England and France to further his musical studies. In 1562 he received payment 'be the Quenis grace preceptis and speciale command', and in 1566 he was presented to a chaplaincy in St Giles's. After Mary's defeat and flight to England, Lauder was named as one of her valets de chambre at Tutbury Castle in 1569, and subsequently in Scotland there are numerous references to payments to him in court records from the 1570s to the 1590s. When James VI began to set up court in the 1580s, Lauder was sent to London to buy for him 'two pair of virginallis', and probably became a member of 'the Castalian Band' of poets and musicians at the Scottish court under the leadership of the poet Alexander Montgomerie (though with James as its figurehead). In 1584 Lauder composed his beautiful My Lord of Marche Paven for consort of viols; other consorts are probably his work (e.g. MB, xv, 78), and as a known friend of Montgomerie he may well be the composer of partsong settings of Montgomerie's poems such as In throu the windoes and Evin dead behold I breathe (MB, xv, 53, 55), which show many stylistic similarities to the pavan. The last we hear of Lauder is in 1593, when he was among those appointed by the Edinburgh Council to examine 'Mr Jhonn Chalmers, quha desyres the office of maister of the sang schole ... as alsua of his knawledge in playing upoun the virginalls'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Extracts from the Records of the Burgh of Edinburgh, ii: 1528–57 (Edinburgh, 1871), 176; v: 1589–1603 (Edinburgh, 1927), 103

J. Bain, ed.: Calendar of State Papers Relating to Scotland and Mary, Queen of Scots, 1547–1603, ii: 1563–9 (Edinburgh, 1900), 696

J.B. Paul, ed.: Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, xi: 1559–66 (Edinburgh, 1916), 214

J. Beveridge and G. Donaldson, eds.: Register of the Privy Seal of Scotland, v: 1556–67 (Edinburgh, 1957), ii, 191

K. Elliott, ed.: Music of Scotland, 1500–1700, MB, xv (1957, 3/1975), [song texts ed. H.M. Shire]

H.M. Shire: 'Musical Servitors to Queen Mary Stuart', ML, xl (1959), 15–18

H.M. Shire: Song, Dance and Poetry of the Court of Scotland under King James VI (Cambridge, 1969), 75–9, 261–2

K. Elliott and F. Rimmer: A History of Scottish Music (London, 1973), 38–40

K. Elliott: 'Another one of Thomas Wood's Missing Parts', Innes Review, xxxix/2 (1988), 151–8

KENNETH ELLIOTT

Laudes. Chants sung at Matins, at some of the Little Hours and at Mass in the Mozarabic rite. The Mass laudes correspond to the Roman alleluias. See MOZARABIC CHANT, §§3(vii) and 4(viii).

Laudes regiae. A set of acclamations sung initially in honour of, and in the presence of, the king or emperor. The oldest set dates from the 8th century; a variety of forms were used in several different contexts throughout the Middle Ages.

In its most characteristic form (found in a Frankish manuscript dating from about 796–800, with text only), the Laudes regiae include (1) the triadic acclamation 'Christus vincit, Christus regnat, Christus imperat' ('Christ conquers, Christ reigns, Christ commands'), the most distinctive element of the Laudes; (2) several acclamations for pope, emperor, and others, each introduced by the 'hail' formula 'Exaudi Christe' ('Hear, O Christ!'); these acclamations are interspersed among (3), invocations to each of a list of saints, with the response 'tu illum adiuva' ('help him!' – 'him' being the pope, emperor, or other personage just acclaimed in the 'Exaudi'); (4) a series of attributes of Christ ('King of kings ...') each followed by the triad 'Christus vincit ...'; (5) doxologies addressed to Christ; (6) 'Christe audi nos/ Kyrie eleison', as at the end of litanies; (7) congratulatory wishes, in particular the ancient imperial acclamation 'multos annos' ('long life').

The whole series was chanted by precentors and responded to either by a schola or by all those present. The chant (first preserved in 10th-century manuscripts) is syllabic with more or less frequent two-note neumes, depending on the version. It uses formulae that are hard to locate stylistically with reference to those of the Roman chant; the Laudes formulae come closest to some of the lection tones (not the psalm tones), but more likely they represent a Frankish adaptation of a Gallican, Visigoth, or Byzantine tone of some kind. The reciting note, flanked by whole tones, leaping up a minor 3rd and dropping a 4th, is either a or d, or g with a b♭ above. This 'subtonal' tone is cognate with the older prayer and lection tones of the first millennium.

The Laudes regiae show contact with litanies on one hand (especially the Litany of the Saints) and with military hails for the Roman emperor on the other. Both elements might be traced far back in Roman culture; but it should be noted that the litanies in question are not at all characteristic of Gregorian chant and liturgy, being (apparently) instead the products of Irish or insular devotions and liturgies of the 8th century. And the imperial formulae of pagan Rome had never been put together in such a developed form – a form that gives every sign of Frankish origin, reflecting Carolingian syncretism as well as the desire to adopt imperial customs. The Laudes regiae were the most forceful expression of a tendency towards sets of loosely connected, highly stylized exclamations; this tendency reappeared in many different ways in Frankish chant, contributing to its individuality with regard to the Gregorian repertory.

Originally destined (it would seem) for Charlemagne himself, the Laudes formulae were eventually adapted for bishops or popes, and were perhaps used on a wide variety of occasions even apart from the reception of a princely personage. Indeed, some early sources indicate use at Easter or Pentecost, perhaps simply as a festival observance.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E.H. Kantorowicz: Laudes regiae: a Study in Mediaeval Ruler Worship and Liturgical Acclamations (Berkeley, 1946/R)
E.J. Cowdrey: 'The Anglo-Norman Laudes regiae', Viator, xii (1981), 37–78

For further bibliography see PLAINCHANT.

RICHARD L. CROCKER

Laudi, Victorino (b Alcara [now Alcara li Fusi], province of Messina; fl 1597). Italian composer. Schmidl's statement that he was born at Alcama is incorrect. He was maestro di cappella of Messina Cathedral; his only extant work is Il primo libro de madrigali con dialogo (Palermo, 1597), for five and eight voices. According to Mongitore, he contributed some pieces to a five-voice anthology, now lost, entitled Madrigali di diversi autori siciliani (Palermo, 1603).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SchmidlD
A. Mongitore: Bibliotheca Sicula, ii (Palermo, 1708–14/R), 272–3
P.E. Carapezza: 'I duo della scuola siciliana', preface to Scuola polifonica siciliana: Musiche strumentali didattiche, MRS, ii (1971), pp.xi–li [with Eng. trans.]

PIER PAOLO SCATTOLIN

Lauds (from Lat. laudes: 'praises'). One of the services of the DIVINE OFFICE, traditionally sung during the gradual brightening of the sky that precedes sunrise. Sometimes called 'matutina laus' or 'matutini', Lauds has its origins in the morning prayer of the early Church: the 'cathedral' tradition of the early Office cultivated a service held at daybreak consisting of fixed psalms (the 'Lauds' psalms), prayers and canticles. Fixed psalms are characteristic of Lauds in some eastern Churches, as for example in the Byzantine morning office Orthros, but to a limited extent only in the West.

In its modern western form, the service begins with five selections of biblical poetry joining the praise of God and that of the new light. Each of the five is prefaced and followed by an antiphon, often a Proper one linking the theme of the day with that of the hour. The five selections for most Sundays and feasts are as follows (the numbering is that of the Vulgate): Psalm xcii, Dominus regnavit; Psalm xcix, Jubilate Deo; Psalms lxii, Deus, Deus meus, and lxvi, Deus misereatur nostri, together; the Old Testament canticle Benedicite omnia opera (Daniel iii. 57–88 and 56, Song of the Three Young Men); and the psalms sometimes themselves called 'laudes', cxlviii–cl, Laudate Dominum de caelis, Cantate Domino canticum novum and Laudate Dominum in sanctis eius. On weekdays the first psalm is Psalm li, Miserere mei, Deus. The second and fourth of the selections change from day to day in an ordinary week according to the following scheme: Monday, Psalm v, Verba mea, the canticle Confitebor tibi, Domine (Isaiah xii.1–6, the Canticle of Isaiah); Tuesday, Psalm xlii, Judica me, Deus, the canticle Ego dixi (Isaiah xxxviii.10–20, the Canticle of Ezekiel); Wednesday, Psalm lxiv, Te decet hymnus, the canticle Exultavit cor meum (1 Samuel ii.1–10, the Canticle of Hannah); Thursday, Psalm lxxxix, Domine refugium, the canticle Cantemus Domino (Exodus xv.1–19, the Canticle of Moses); Friday, Psalm cxlii, Domine exaudi, the canticle Domine audivi (Habakkuk iii. 2–19, the Canticle of Habakkuk); and Saturday, Psalm xci, Bonum est confiteri, the canticle Audite caeli (Deuteronomy xxxii.1–43, the Canticle of Moses). (This was the plan in use during the Middle Ages. In the reformed breviary of Pius X, 1911, substantial changes were made, among them the inclusion of a second complete series of canticles.)

A short lesson, the chapter, is followed in the monastic cursus by a short responsory and a hymn, in the Roman cursus by a hymn only. On Sundays this is Aeterne rerum conditor. A different hymn is prescribed for each ordinary weekday; there are also some Proper hymns for Lauds of feast days. A short versicle and response follow. Lauds reaches its climax in the chanting of the New Testament canticle Benedictus Dominus Deus (Luke i.68–79, the Canticle of Zechariah). The association of this text with daybreak seems particularly felicitous: in it Zechariah speaks of his new-born son, John the Baptist, as one who will 'go before the Lord to prepare his ways', and says that 'the day shall dawn upon us from on high to give light to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace'. The antiphon for this canticle is often marked 'in evangelio' in the manuscripts. The term indicates the source of the canticle and also refers to the fact that the text of the antiphon itself is frequently taken from or based on the gospel read in the Mass of the day. This can be seen, for example, in the Sundays after Epiphany. In some manuscripts a series of antiphons is given for each of these Sundays (see I-IV CVI, f.15*v*, and LXIV, ff.41*v*–43*r*; and CAO, i–ii, 1963–5, nos.26, 33–5). They are in different modes and sometimes overlap in their retelling of the Gospel lesson; thus the additional antiphons must have been intended as substitutes for the first (perhaps for the days following the Sunday).

The music for Lauds thus consists of a simple formula for the versicle and response, the tones to which the psalms and canticles are chanted, the hymn, the antiphons and, in the monastic cursus, the short responsory. For a few feasts in some manuscripts of the 12th and later centuries, a prosa is substituted for the hymn; and in place of the versicle there appears another prosa (H. Villetard: Office de Pierre de Corbeil, Paris, 1907, pp.102–3, 153–5), or an alleluia verse prosula, sometimes with the same basic text as the versicle (F-Pn lat.17296, ff.37*v*, 42*r*; lat.12044, ff.15*r*, 18*v*, 39*r*; F-LA 263, f.96*r*; see D. Hughes: 'Music for St. Stephen at Laon', Words and Music: The Scholar's View … in Honor of A. Tillman Merritt, ed. L. Berman, Cambridge, MA, 1972, p.150). The concluding formula for Lauds, 'Benedicamus Domino–Deo gratias', may be replaced by a poem in two strophes of accentual verse ending with these phrases (see AS, 53).

For bibliography see DIVINE OFFICE.

RUTH STEINER/KEITH FALCONER

Lauermann, Herbert (b Vienna, 7 Nov 1955). Austrian composer. After studying composition with Ernst Vogel (1970–75), he enrolled in the Vienna Hochschule für Musik und Darstellende Kunst, where he studied music education (diploma 1979) and composition with Urbanner (diploma 1983). He later taught music at the Gymnasium in the Vienna suburb of Stockerau (1976–94) and at the Vienna Hochschule (from 1987). He first received international acclaim with a performance of his church opera, Simon, at the Carinthian Summer Music Festival in 1984.

As a composer, Lauermann's primary ambition has been to formulate his ideas directly, imaginatively and honestly with the aid of all the compositional means available to him and, at the same time, to engage his listener in a process of musical experimentation that leads to a new level of understanding. Towards these ends, he has sought new formal solutions that serve the direct, sensual experience of sound. His honours include the Theodor Körner prize (1980), the Publicity Prize of Austro Mechana (for his opera KAR) and the Maecenas-Kunstsponsoring-Preis (1994).

WORKS

Stage: Simon (church op, H. Vogg), 1983, Ossiach, 6 Aug 1984; Wundertheater (chbr op, 2 pts, C. Fuchs, after M. de Cervantes), 1987, Vienna, 6 Nov 1988, rev. Klagenfurt, 19 June 1990; KAR (Fuchs), 1993–4, Reisseck Dam, 22 July 1994; see also Orch [Das Ehepaar, 1981]

Orch: Das Ehepaar (F. Tanzer), S, spkr, chbr orch, 1981, rev. for stage 1986; Chbr Sym., 1984; Phantasy on Me, 1984–5; Caccia 'Ah! Dov'è il perfido?', 1989; Desert, chbr orch, 1990; Sinfonietta, 1993; Verbum IV 'An die Sonne', 1996

Vocal: Beziehungen?, double chorus, conductor, 1981; In Hoffnung treiben (cant., E. Rentrow), 8vv, chbr ens, 1982; Round (Tanzer), female v, cl, vn, pf, 1984–6; 3 Kleine Chöre (T. Riegler, D. Strigl), chorus, 1986; Motetus I (G.M. Hopkins, F. Villon, Tanzer), chorus, 1986; Zeit und Ewigkeit (C. Morgenstern, H. von Melk, Frau Ava), song cycle, medium v, pf, 1988; Abzählreime (children's rhymes), children's chorus, 1991

Chbr and solo inst: Verbum I, pf, 1978; Echoes (Tanzer), spkr, fl, ob, vn, va, vc, cel/pf, xylorimba, 1979; Verbum II, vn, 1980; Str Qt, 1982; Bagatelles, sax qt, 1986; Variations, ob, pf, 1987; Motetus II, 7 fl, 1990; Höhlenmusik, brass qnt, 1991; Verbum III 'Poem', cl, hn, mand, gui, hp, pf, 1992; Trans, 2 pf, perc, 1994; Waves, pf, 1994–5

Principal publisher: Doblinger

RAINER BONELLI

Laufenberg [Loufenberg], Heinrich [Heinricus de Libero Castro] (b ?Freiburg, *c*1390; d Strasbourg, 31 March 1460). German-Swiss poet and musician. Although his patronymic refers to Laufenburg (formerly Laufenberg) on the Upper Rhine, east of Rheinfelden, it is never used to indicate his place of origin in the extant archival material. Instead, the acrostics in the didactic poems Regimen and Spiegel menschlichen Heils provide the information that Laufenberg was 'von frybvrg ein priester' and 'ein priest von fribvrg', which possibly indicates that he came from Freiburg im Breisgau. An entry in the Heidelberg University matriculation records of 20 December 1417 mentions a 'Heinricus Loffenburg de Rapperswil cler. Constanc. Dyoc.'; this could of course refer to another man, but the town name has also been corrected to 'Rupperswil', which is close to the town of Zofingen, where Laufenberg was dean of the collegiate foundation of St Mauritius in 1433 and 1434. However, he had previously been in Freiburg, where the records mention him as capellanus and viceplebanus in 1421, and he bought a house there in 1424. He was probably in Zofingen between about 1430 and 1440: he is documented as absent from his benefice at Freiburg Cathedral from 1436 to 1438, and he is not mentioned again as 'Heinrich ze Friburg Dechan' until 1441. He resigned from the office of dean in 1445 and left Freiburg to enter the monastery of the Knights Hospitaller in Strasbourg, a favourite retreat of highly esteemed clerics in their old age. He died there, according to the monastery's necrology, on 31 March 1460.

Laufenberg's literary work consists primarily of two large didactic poems in rhyming couplets, the Regimen of 1429 (a work of about 6000 lines on the subject of health; ed. H.H. Menge, Göppingen, 1976) and the Spiegel menschlichen Heils of 1437 (a translation in about 15,000 lines of the Speculum humanae salvationis). He also wrote a Buch der Figuren (a collection of Marian prefigurations, *c*15, 370 lines; 1441), a small group of discourses in rhyming couplets and some prose (a didactic dialogue between a father confessor and a female penitent). Of these works only the Regimen has been preserved complete, since it was widely distributed in the 15th century; there are seven extant manuscripts and an incunabulum. The other works were preserved as unica in the library of the Hospitallers in Strasbourg, including the rhymed discourses and the prose work, copied in the same manuscript as Laufenberg's songs, about 120 in all. This manuscript (shelfmark B.121) was transferred to the Bibliothèque de la ville, Strasbourg, at the time of secularization, but was destroyed by fire in 1870.

The songs, the texts of which were edited by Wackernagel before the manuscript was lost, were copied with their melodies in more or less chronological order (many of the songs were dated in the manuscript). Otherwise the transmission pattern of the songs was small and scattered. While a number of the songs in the manuscript bear the ascriptions 'heinrich' or merely 'h', there are also songs by other authors such as the Monk of Salzburg and Heinrich von Mügeln. The presence of the Monk of Salzburg's songs, along with the contrafactum of a two-voice song, Wolauf, lieben gesellen vnuerczait/Seit willi-kommen her Martein by the Monk or one of his circle (Wackernagel, 54*; cf C. März: Die weltlichen Lieder des Mönchs von Salzburg, Tübingen, 1999, pp.34–54, 497–501) and Laufenberg's translation of popular hymns and sequences into German, suggests that he was inspired by the older poet. The contrafactum texts, Woluff mit andaht alle cristenheit and Bis wilkommen, Maria, maget rein, were entered some distance apart in the songbook F-Sm B.121, so that in the circumstances polyphonic performance seems somewhat unlikely. No edition of the melodies has appeared, but Wachinger (1979) indicated sources for 17 of the melodies (also mentioning a facsimile of Wackernagel's copies of the melodies, preserved as F-Sn 2371).

The frequently raised question of whether Heinrich Laufenberg was the same man as Heinricus de Libero Castro, a composer included in F-Sm 222 (also lost), is difficult to answer. First, it is striking that the manuscript, the oldest part of which can be traced back to Zofingen, and which finally ended up in the monastery of the Knights Hospitaller, travelled the same way as Laufenberg. It may be that Laufenberg either drew up the codex himself or acquired it at an early date. He repeatedly mentioned his origin as 'von Freiburg', which is easily equated with its latinized form 'de Libero Castro'; Heinricus de Libero Castro is represented in the manuscript by a series of pieces for several voices in simple polyphony but using relatively complex notation. Although the only evidence for Heinrich Laufenberg's engagement with polyphonic composition is his contrafactum of the hymn to St Martin mentioned above, it does not seem out of the question that Heinrich Laufenberg and Henricus de Castro were the same man, but the issue remains unresolved.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.F. Massmann: 'Heinrich von Loufenberg', Anzeiger für Kunde des teutschen Mittelalters, i (1832), cols.41–8

P. Wackernagel, ed.: Das deutsche Kirchenlied von den ältesten Zeit bis zu Anfang des 17. Jahrhunderts, ii (Leipzig, 1867/R), nos.701–98 [most extensive edn of texts]

E.R. Müller: Heinrich Laufenberg: eine litterar-historische Untersuchung (Berlin, 1888)

L. Denecke: 'Laufenberg, Heinrich', Die deutsche Literatur des Mittelalters: Verfasserlexikon, ed. W. Stammler and K. Langosch (Berlin, 1933–55)

B. Wachinger: 'Laufenberg, Heinrich', Die deutsche Literatur des Mittelalters: Verfasserlexikon, ed. K. Ruh and others (Berlin, 2/1977–)

B. Wachinger: 'Notizen zu den Liedern Heinrich Laufenbergs', Medium aevum deutsch: Beiträge zur deutschen Literatur des hohen und späten Mittelalters: Festschrift für K. Ruh zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. D. Huschenbett and others (Tübingen, 1979), 349–85

L. Welker: 'Heinrich Laufenberg in Zofingen: Musik in der spätmittelalterlichen Schweiz', Schweizer Jb für Musikwissenschaft, new ser., xi (1991), 67–77

LORENZ WELKER

Lauffensteiner, Wolff Jacob (b Steyr, bap. 28 April 1676; d Munich, 26 March 1754). Austrian lutenist. He was the son of Wolff Jacob Lauffensteiner, towerkeeper in Steyr, and Anna Susanna Werfferin. By 1709 he had settled in Graz as a lutenist. From 1712 he was a valet and lutenist in the service of the Bavarian court, and was in the service of the Bavarian princes during their internment in Graz; he taught them the lute and other instruments. In 1715 he went with the prince's retinue to Munich, entering the private service of the prince, Duke Ferdinand; as valet he accompanied his master in the field and on his travels. In 1739, on the duke's death, he was granted a pension. For his services to the electoral House of Bavaria Duke Clemens August, Archbishop of Cologne, appointed him chamber counsellor (Hofkammerrat).

Lauffensteiner's works include several ensemble concertos in suite or partita form. His music as a whole is highly idiomatic for the lute, in a style uniting traditional French forms, textures and ornaments with a tendency towards italianate cantabile melody over a supporting bass line. In this his pieces, of which over 100 movements survive, come close to those of S.L. Weiss, to whom his music is frequently misattributed in manuscript sources – a measure of its high quality in the estimation of his contemporaries.

WORKS

ENSEMBLE

Conc., g, lute, 2 vn, vc, B-Br II 4089 (also for solo lute attrib. S.L. Weiss, lost; see BrookB); conc., F, lute, vn/fl, b, US-NYp Harrach 11; 2 concs., B♭, F, P-Wu Rps.mus.37 (lute pt only); conc., F, lute, vn, b, A-Su M.III.25 (lute pt only)

Sonata, A, 2 lutes (or lute, vn/va da gamba, vc), D-As Tonk.2°, inc., ed. H. Neeman (Berlin, 1927)

[12] Symphonie da camera, 1750, lost [mentioned in Munich court document]

SOLO LUTE

Suites: 4 suites, D, b, F, A, A-GÖ (variants of nos.1 and 2, KR L77), ed. in MAM, xxx (1973); suite, c, CZ-Bm A.13.269, ed. in MAM, xxx (1973); suite, B♭, D-Mbs 5362 (inc.), GB-HAdolmetsch II.B.2 (attrib. Weiss), US-NYp Harrach 14; 2 suites, D, B♭, GB-HAdolmetsch II.B.2; suite, D, Harrach family's private collection, Vienna; suite, B♭, GB-Lspencer, ed. P. Lay and R. Spencer (Harrow, 1987)

Suite movts: 2 menuets, bourée, D-Mbs 5362; 2 menuets, gay, Mbs 5362; sarabande, E, Mbs 5362; gigue, courante, menuet, A, GB-HAdolmetsch II.B.2; 3 preludes, d, A-Wgm 7763/92, 2 ed. in MAM, xxx (1973); menuet, d, D-KNu 1.P.56, ed in F. Giesbert, Lautenbuch 'Livre pour le lut' Köln, 18. Jahrhundert (Mainz, 1965)

DOUBTFUL

Bourée, B♭, lute, CZ-POm (attrib. Weiss, A-Su M.III.25); Sonata à 5, 2 vn, 2 va, 'basso viola', lost (listed in 1710 catalogue; see Flotzinger)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookB; GerberL

E.G. Baron: Historisch-theoretische und practische Untersuchung des Instruments der Lauten (Nuremberg, 1727/R; Eng. trans., 1976)

H. Federhofer: 'Die Grazer Stadtpfarrmatrikeln als musikgeschichtliche Quelle', Zeitschrift des Historischen Vereines für Steiermark, xlv (1954), 158–68, esp. 163

R. Flotzinger: 'Rochus Berhandtzky und Wolff Jacob Lauffensteiner. Zum Leben und Schaffen zweier Lautenisten in kurbayerischen Diensten', SMw, xxvii (1966), 200–40

HANS RADKE/TIM CRAWFORD

Laugier, Abbé Marc-Antoine (b Manosque, Basses-Alpes, 25 July 1713; d Paris, 7 April 1769). French writer. A man of wide cultural interests educated by Jesuits, he preached at the French court, edited the austere weekly Gazette de France and spent many years in Germany as an ambassador's secretary. His writings include a 12-volume history of the Venetian republic, works on painting and architecture and a 78-page essay, Apologie de la musique françoise contre M. Rousseau (Paris, 1754), penned during the Querelle des Bouffons in response to Rousseau's Lettre sur la musique françoise.

A staunch advocate of French music, Laugier nevertheless defended his views in the Apologie candidly, thereby avoiding the anti-philosophe stance characteristic of many of the debate's pro-French pamphlets. He disagreed with Rousseau's severe criticisms of French music and his theory of a close association between a nation's music and the character of its language, arguing that many French poets had proved the beauty of the French language and that it was possible to temper its worst effects. Moreover, since for Laugier the essential elements of music were harmony, tempo and melody – music depended far less on language than on génie – it was the composer's imagination that ultimately moved the soul rather than the way in which language shaped musical character and style. The faults Rousseau perceived in French music merely showed that the nation lacked composers of genius. Laugier defended the unrivalled expressive powers of earlier generations of composers, particularly Lully, Campra and Lalande, but agreed with Rousseau that performance standards had declined because performers took too many liberties. Unlike Rousseau, he offered solutions to these problems and appreciated that both French and Italian styles had their merits and failings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Goldschmidt: Die Musikästhetik des 18. Jahrhunderts (Zürich, 1915/R)
L. Reichenburg: Contribution à l'histoire de la 'Querelle des Bouffons' (Philadelphia, 1937/R)
A.R. Oliver: The Encyclopedists as Critics of Music (New York, 1947/R)
A.M. Whittall: La Querelle des Bouffons (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1963)
E. Cook: Duet and Ensemble in the Early Opéra-Comique (New York, 1995)

ELISABETH COOK

Laukhuff. German family of organ builders. Andreas Laukhuff (i) (b Bretzfeld, 11 March 1798; d Pfedelbach, 12 Dec 1871) learned his craft with J.E. Walcker in Cannstat, near Stuttgart. He married the latter's daughter and took over direction of the shop in 1823, as his brother-in-law E.F. Walcker had moved to Ludwigsburg. Laukhuff in turn moved to Pfedelbach in 1842, where three sons were born to his second wife: August (1850–86), who assumed direction of the firm in 1871; Adolf (1857–1937); and Andreas (ii) (1858–1933), the leading figure after August's premature death. The firm moved to larger premises in Weikersheim in 1878 and further developed the then novel idea, initiated under August, of supplying organ parts to others. This ensured commercial stability, the company rapidly growing from 40 employees in 1880 to 300 in 1930; it is still conceivably the world's largest firm devoted exclusively to organ building. The overall technical development in Germany was embraced, from slider-chests to cone valve chests with mechanical then pneumatic action. Between the World Wars a type of cinema organ, the Lichttonorgel, was developed in conjunction with Edwin Welte. In 1933 the firm passed to Andreas's sons Otto (1898–1989) and Wilhelm (1903–81); they in turn were succeeded by their sons Hans-Erich (b Würzburg, 15 March 1944) and Peter (b Weikersheim, 17 March 1937). In certain cases, especially for local churches or for export, Laukhuff builds entire instruments, but the firm is universally known in the organ world as a supplier of every possible component for pipe organs, from adjustment nuts to wind-chests and 32′ pipes.

KURT LUEDERS

Lauksmin [Lauxmin], Zygmunt (b Żmudź district, Lithuania, *c*1596; d 11 Sept 1670). Polish-Lithuanian writer on music. He was a Jesuit and studied philosophy and classical languages at the Vilnius Academy, 1619–22. He taught at the Jesuit colleges of Płock, Nieśwież, Braniewo and Kroża, and also from 1635 at the Vilnius Academy, of which he was pro-rector from 1655 to 1657. In addition to numerous writings on rhetoric and classical languages, he published (anonymously) three musical treatises. Ars et praxis musicae is a practical handbook on the singing of Gregorian chant; it was known to Brossard and has been cited in many subsequent lexicographical writings on music. The Graduale introduces new polyphonic sections to the mass Ordinary and contains revisions of Polish hymns.

THEORETICAL WORKS

Ars et praxis musicae in usum studiosae iuventutis in collegiis Societatis Jesu (Vilnius, 1667, 3/1693); ed. V. Jurkstas (Vilnius, 1977)
Graduale pro exercitatione studentum (Vilnius, 1667, 3/1742)
Antiphonale ad psalmos, iuxta ritum S Romanae ecclesiae, decantandos necessarium (Vilnius, 1667, 3/1742)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberNL; SMP; WaltherML
S. de Brossard: Dictionaire de musique (Paris, 1703/R, 3/*c*1708/R); ed. and trans. A. Gruber (Henryville, PA, 1980)
A. Chybiński: Słownik muzyków dawnej Polski do roku 1800 [Dictionary of early Polish musicians to 1800] (Kraków, 1949)
J. Trilūpaitienė: 'Zygmut Lauksmin a życie muzyczne Akademii Wileńskiej' [Lauksmin and the musical life of the Vilnius Academy], Muzyka, xxxvi/1 (1991), 101–16

MIROSŁAW PERZ

Laul, Reyn Genrikhovich (b Tallinn, 20 March 1939). Estonian musicologist and composer. He attended the Leningrad Conservatory, where he studied musicology with A.G. Shnitke (graduating in 1964) and composition with V.N. Salmanov (graduating in 1967). He was appointed lecturer in the department of music theory at the conservatory in 1970, later becoming assistant professor (1983) and professor (1993). His main area of research is the theory of musical analysis. He has written books on this subject and in 1990 gained the doctorate with a dissertation that discussed the logical functions of the motif in the form-structuring process. He has also studied the composers of the Second Viennese School. In 1972 he gained the Kandidat degree with the dissertation Stil′ i kompozitsionnaya tekhnika A. Shyonberga [The Style and Compositional Technique of Schoenberg] (diss., 1972; Leningrad, 1972), which was the first dissertation on Schoenberg to be written in the Russian Federation. In response to the difficulties he had in defending this work, Laul composed the Kantata dlya baritona i fortepiano na slova otzïva na kandidatskuyu dissertatsiyu Laula o Shyonberge (Cantata for Baritone and Piano to the Words of a Comment on Laul's Candidate Dissertation on Schoenberg, 1973, rev.1997). His other compositions include a set of variations for chamber orchestra (1967), a concerto for string orchestra (1967), a symphony (1973), Musica trista, a work for orchestra in memory of Shostakovich (1976), three piano sonatas (1963, 1971, 1976), a sonata for violin and piano (1965) and a string quartet (1981). His compositions show the influence of Western European music of the first half of the 20th century, particularly the works of Schoenberg and Hindemith. Laul became a member of the Russian Federation Composers' Union in 1969.

WRITINGS

'O tvorcheskom metode A. Shyonberga' [On Schoenberg's creative method], Voprosï teorii i ėstetiki muzïki, ix (1969), 41–70

'Printsipï formoobrazovaniya v simfonicheskikh proizvedeniyakh K. Debyussi' [The principles of formation in the symphonic works of Debussy], Debyussi i muzïka XX veka, ed. V. Gurkov and others (Leningrad, 1983), 39–63

'Ob osobennostyakh kompozitsionnoy tekhniki A. Veberna pozdnego perioda tvorchestva' [On the particularities of Webern's compositional technique in the works of his later period], Teater, muusika, kino, no.4 (1984), 76–86

Moduliruyushchiye formï [Modulating forms] (Leningrad, 1986)

Motiv i formoobrazovaniye [Motif and formation] (Leningrad, 1987)

Logicheskiye funktsii motiva v protsesse formoobrazovaniya [The logical functions of the motif in the process of formation] (diss., Moscow State Conservatoire, 1990; Leningrad, 1990)

'O funktsional'noy dinamike sonatnoy formï venskikh klassikov (ėtyud po pobochnoy partii)' [On the functional dynamic of the sonata form of the Viennese classics (a study of second subjects)], Forma i stil', ii, ed. E. Ruchievskaya and others (Leningrad, 1990), 109–28

'Klassik muzïki so slozhnoy sud'boy (O Shyonberge)' [A musical classic with a difficult fate (On Schoenberg)], Schönberg, ed. K. Pappel (Tallinn, 1991), 9–19

'Slozhnïye pozitsionnïye sdvigi motivov v tematicheskom razvitii muzïki Bramsa' [Complex positional displacements of motifs in the thematic development of the music of Brahms], I. Brams: chertï stilya, ed. A. Shnitke (St Petersburg, 1995), 148–71

'U istokov formirovaniya stilya Khindemita' [At the sources of the formation of the style of Hindemith], Trudï kafedrï teorii muzïki, i, ed. L. Ivanova and N. Afonina (St Petersburg, 1995), 32–50

'Muzïka Shostakovicha v kontekste bol'shevistskoy ideologii i praktiki (opït slushaniya)' [The music of Shostakovich in the context of Bolshevist ideology and practice (an experiment in listening)], D.D. Shostakovich: sbornik statey k 90-letiyu so dnya rozhdeniya, ed. L. Kovnatskaya (St Petersburg, 1996), 141–57

'Pamyat' o bolshom muzïkante' [Memory of a great musician], Pamyati N.S. Rabinovicha: ocherki, vospominaniya, dokumentï, ed. D. Bukin (Washington DC, 1996), 108–12

'Elements of Chess Strategy in Beethoven's Art of Thematic Process', A Composition as a Problem, ed. M. Humal (Tallinn, 1997), 58–68

ELENA TITOVA

Launay, Denise (b Paris, 7 Oct 1906; d Paris, 13 March 1993). French musicologist and librarian. She studied musicology with André Pirro and Paul-Marie Masson at the Sorbonne, counterpoint and fugue with Marcel Caussade and the organ with Dupré at the Paris Conservatoire (also with André Marchal and Gaston Litaize) and qualified as a teacher at the Ecole Normale de Musique in 1936. Subsequently she was a librarian at the Bibliothèque Nationale for over 30 years (1939–71), including seven (1960–67) when she was seconded to the CNRS; she was also organist at Notre Dame de Lorette, Paris (from 1943), and a lecturer at the musicology institute of the University of Paris (from 1970).

Launay's research, informed by her experience as a librarian and organist, was concerned with the 17th and 18th centuries in France, especially sacred music. She produced several editions of French music both sacred (for example works by Du Caurroy, Courbes, Mauduit, Formé, Péchon, Du Mont, Bouzignac, Charpentier, Gaillard and Moulinié) and secular (court airs by Boësset). These complement her writings, the most important of which is La musique religieuse en France du Concile de Trente à 1804, the result of a lifetime of research and the foremost reference work on the subject. Her articles include many contributions, mainly on French musicians of the 17th and 18th centuries, for major dictionaries and encyclopedias.

WRITINGS

'Guillaume Bouzignac', Musique et liturgie, no.21 (1951), 3–8

'La Fantaisie en France jusqu'au milieu du XVIIe siècle', La musique instrumentale de la Renaissance: Paris, 1954, 327–38

'Notes sur Etienne Moulinié, maître de la musique de Gaston d'Orléans', Mélanges d'histoire et d'esthétique musicales offerts à Paul-Marie Masson, ii (Paris, 1955), 67–78

'A propos d'une messe de Charles d'Helfer: le problème de l'exécution des messes réputées a cappella en France, aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles', Le 'Baroque' musical: Wégimont [IV] 1957, 177–94

'Les motets à double choeur en France dans la première moitié du XVIIe siècle', RdM, xxxix–xl (1957), 173–95 with A. Verchaly: 'Les prolongements de la Renaissance (1600–1650)', Précis de musicologie, ed. J. Chailley (Paris, 1958), 214–31

'A propos de quelques motets polyphoniques en l'honneur de St Martin: contribution à l'histoire du motet aux XVIe et XVIIe siècles', RdM, xlvii (1961), 67–80

'La Paraphrase des psaumes de Godeau et ses musiciens', RdM, l (1964), 30–75

'Essai d'un commentaire de Titelouze par lui-même', RMFC, v (1965), 27–50

'Les rapports de tempo entre mesures binaires et mesures ternaires dans la musique française, 1600–1650', FAM, xii (1965), 166–94

'A propos de deux manuscrits musicaux aux armes de Louis XIII', FAM, xiii (1966), 63–7

'Après le Concile de Trente, la Contre-Réforme en France', 'Deux grands savants du temps de la Contre-Réforme: Mersenne et Kircher', Encyclopédie des musiques sacrées, ed. J. Porte (Paris, 1969–70), ii, 404–14; iii, 646–8

'L'art du compositeur de musique: essai sur la composition musicale en France au temps d'Henri IV et de Louis XIII', Musica antiqua III: Bydgoszcz 1972, 209–46 [incl. Pol. summary]

ed.: La Querelle des Bouffons [a repr., with introduction and index, of 61 pamphlets pubd Paris, 1752–4] (Geneva, 1973)

'Church Music in France: (a) 1630–60', NOHM, v (1975), 414–37

'La "Paraphrase des Pseaumes" de Godeau et les musiciens qui l'ont illustrée', Antoine Godeau, 1605–1672: Grasse 1972, ed. Y. Gérard (Paris, 1975), 235–50

'La Querelle des Bouffons et ses incidences sur la musique', IMSCR XII: Berkeley 1977, 225–33

'Un esprit critique au temps de Jumilhac: Dom Jacques Le Clerc', EG, xix (1980), 197–219

'Les musiciens français itinérants au XVIIe siècle', La découverte de la France au XVIIe siècle: Marseille 1979 (Paris, 1980), 621–33

'Jehan Alain (1911–1940): sa vie et son oeuvre', Grand jeu (1981), April 3–13

'L'enseignement de la composition dans les maîtrises, en France, aux XVIe et XVIIe siècles', RdM, lxviii (1982), 79–90

'Les "Enfances" du Grand Motet', Le grand motet français: Paris 1984, 29–37

'Le temps de la basse continue: première période (1600–1661)', Précis de musicologie, ed. J. Chailley (Paris, 2/1984), 195–212

'Les deux versions musicales d'Andromède: une étape dans l'histoire du théâtre dans ses rapports avec la musique', Pierre Corneille: Rouen 1984, ed. A. Niderst (Paris, 1985), 413–41

'Notes sur la préhistoire du Département de la musique', Etudes sur la Bibliothèque nationale et temoignages reunis en hommage à Thérèse Kleindienst (Paris, 1985), 97–105

'André Caplet (1878–1925), Le miroir de Jésus, mystère du rosaire: poèmes d'Henri Ghéon', Beiträge zur Geschichte des Oratoriums seit Händel: Festschrift Günther Massenkeil, ed. R. Cadenbach and H. Loos (Bonn, 1986), 407–37

'L'italianisme et la musique religieuse en France au temps de Mazarin', La France et l'Italie au temps de Mazarin: Grenoble 1985, ed. J. Serroy (Grenoble, 1986), 335–48

'La musique en France de 1600 à 1661 vue à travers la presse contemporaine', Storiografia della critica francese nel seicento, ed. G. Forestier and others (Bari-Paris, 1986), 303–24

'Les airs italiens et français dans les ballets et les comédies-ballets', Jean-Baptiste Lully: Saint Germain-en-Laye and Heidelberg 1987, 31–49

'La musique à Paris, malgré la Fronde', La Fronde en questions: Marseille 1988, ed. R. Duchêne and P. Ronzeaud (Aix-en-Provence, 1989), 339–49

'La musique à Venise vers 1645', RdM, lxxvii (1991), 269–77
La musique religieuse en France du Concile de Trente à 1804 (Paris, 1993)

EDITIONS

Anthologie du motet latin polyphonique en France (1609–1661), PSFM, 1st ser., xvii (1963)
M.-A. Charpentier: Te Deum (Paris, 1969)
Anthologie du psaume français polyphonique (1610–1663) (Paris, 1974–6)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Duron: Obituary, RdM, lxxix (1993), 405–10 [incl. full list of writings]

CHRISTIANE SPIETH-WEISSENBACHER/JEAN GRIBENSKI

Launis [Lindberg], Armas (Emanuel) (b Hämeenlinna, 22 April 1884; d Nice, 7 Aug 1959). Finnish composer and ethnomusicologist. After studying composition and the cello at the orchestra school of the Helsinki Philharmonic Society (1901–7) he was a pupil of Klatte at the Stern Conservatory, Berlin (1907–8), and of von Baussnern in Weimar (1909). He taught theory at his old Helsinki school (1906–14) and was a singing master at the Finnish Lyceum in that city (1916–29). In 1922 he founded the Helsinki Folk Conservatory, which he directed until 1930. Thereafter he lived in France. He was principally a composer of operas, in a rather unimaginative and derivative style drawing on Finnish and other folk music (he published several articles on and collections of Samish Yoik tunes and Baltic peasant song). The librettos, which he wrote himself, are of high quality. Some operas exist only in vocal score and are unperformed.

WORKS
(selective list)

Ops: Seitsemän veljestä [The 7 Brothers], 1913; Kullervo, 1917; Aslak Hetta, 1922; Noidan laulu [The Sorcerer's Song], 1932; Kesä jota ei koskaan tullut [The Summer which Never Came], *c*1936; Karjalainen taikahuivi [The Karelian Magic Kerchief], 1937; Oli kerran [Once upon a Time], *c*1939; Jehudith, 1940; Jäiset liekit [The Icy Flames] (ballet-opera), *c*1957
Inst pieces excerpted from ops, 2 orch suites, chbr pieces, choral/solo songs, incid music
MSS in FIN-Hyf
Principal publishers: Ahjo, Choudens, Weinberger

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.Tomasi: Armas Launis: notes biographiques (London, 1940)
Armas Launis: henkilötietoja 60-vuotispäivän johdosta (Helsinki, 1944)

HANNU ILARI LAMPILA/ERKKI SALMENHAARA

Laurencie, Lionel de la. See LA LAURENCIE, LIONEL DE.

Laurencinus Romanus. See LORENZINO.

Laurenti. Italian family of instrumentalists, singers and composers. Its members made significant contributions over a period of nearly 100 years (*c*1670–*c*1765) to the musical life of Bologna (where the family originated and, continued, in the main, to live) and other Italian cities, notably Venice. The precise family relationship of different musicians bearing the surname of Laurenti is in several cases impossible to establish, and their occasional confusion in their own day (and in later musicological writings) has made some attributions to individuals hazardous.

(1) Bartolomeo Girolamo Laurenti (b Bologna, 1644; d Bologna, 18 Jan 1726). Composer and violinist. Laurenti studied under the violinist E. Gaibara. He was a founder member of the Accademia Filarmonica in 1666, and joined the orchestra of S Petronio as a first violinist, at one stage sharing a first-violin desk with Torelli and taking some solos. He was also employed at other Bolognese churches and visited numerous Italian cities as a virtuoso. There seems to be no evidence to confirm (or refute) a belief that Corelli studied with him. In 1706 he retired from S Petronio on full pay (a rare privilege indicative of the esteem in which he was held). He had a small quantity of instrumental music published, all in Bologna: 12 Suonate per camera a violino e violoncello op.1 (1691); one sonata in Carlo Buffagnotti's collection of Sonate per camera a violino e violoncello (*c*1700); and a set of Sei concerti a tre, cioè violino, violoncello ed organo op.2 (1720) of which no example survives. The duo sonatas, pieces in the chamber idiom which dispense with keyboard continuo, are attractive examples of a neglected genre.

Two other musicians bearing the family name belonged to the same generation as Bartolomeo Girolamo and may have been his brothers. Rocco Laurenti (*b c*1649; d Bologna, 1709) was Perti's organ teacher and was appointed organist at S Petronio in 1676. He was also one of the first members of the Accademia Filarmonica. Leonardo Laurenti (*b c*1652) was a trumpeter who, having already received occasional employment at S Marco, Venice, was engaged there on a permanent basis in July 1689, remaining until at least 1711. He was among the original members of the Sovvegno di S Cecilia in 1687.

(2) Girolamo Nicolò Laurenti (b Bologna, 4 June 1678; d Bologna, 26 Dec 1751). Composer and violinist, son of (1) Bartolomeo Girolamo. He replaced his father in the S Petronio orchestra when the latter retired. Instructed in violin-playing by his father as well as by Torelli and T.A. Vitali, Girolamo Nicolò enjoyed a similar career (and a similar longevity). In 1698 he was admitted to the Accademia Filarmonica. Evidently much in demand outside Bologna, he earned Quantz's praise for his direction of the orchestra of the opera house of S Giovanni Grisostomo at Venice in February 1726. He was rewarded with the directorship of the S Petronio orchestra, conferred on him by Perti in 1734. His published works comprise a trio sonata in the Corona di dodici fiori armonici (Bologna, 1706) and a set of six Concerti a tre violini, alto viola, violoncello e basso op.1 (Amsterdam, 1727). There are six of his concertos in manuscript (two in the Henry Watson Library, Manchester, four in the Sächsische Landesbibliothek, Dresden), and single concertos in the Archivio di S Petronio, Bologna (autograph), and the Österreichische Nationalbibliothek, Vienna. The Biblioteca del Conservatorio Benedetto Marcello, Venice, possesses 25 'ricercari' for unaccompanied violin and one violin sonata by him. The concertos in Dresden, probably dating from the 1720s or early 1730s, are attractive works in post-Vivaldian style.

(3) Pietro Paolo Laurenti (b Bologna, 26 Aug 1675; d Bologna, 25 March 1719). Composer, string player and singer, son of (1) Bartolomeo Girolamo. According to Fétis he was a Franciscan and managed to accommodate a great diversity of musical activities in both sacred and secular spheres. His first instrument was the violin; he then devoted himself to the cello; but it was as a viola player that he was engaged at S Petronio in December 1691. In the period 1695–1706 he was listed among the violinists but he returned to the ranks of the viola players, 1706–12. He was admitted to the Accademia Filarmonica as a cellist in 1698 and as a composer (having studied with Perti) in 1701. He was elected principe of the academy in 1701 and again in 1716. From 1703 he was maestro di cappella at the Collegio dei Nobili in Bologna. Pietro Paolo was noted as a singer in church when young, and was active as an opera singer in the last nine years of his life. He sang in Lotti's Teuzzone at Bologna in 1711–12 and made his final appearance in 1718–19 at Venice. His works reflect this many-sided career. The surviving instrumental works comprise a published trio sonata, two cello sonatas and a sinfonia in manuscript. Six operas of his were performed in Bologna between 1701 and 1714; 11 of his oratorios are known, all but one performed in Bologna (the first nine are attributed to B.G. Laurenti in older reference works).

WORKS

music lost unless otherwise stated

OPERAS

first performed in Bologna

Attilio Regolo in Affrica, Casa Bevilacqua, 1701; Esone ringiovenito, 1706; L'Iride dopo la tempesta, 1709; Li diporti d'amore in villa, 1710; Sabella mrosa d'Truvlin, 1710; Il teatro in festa, 1714

ORATORIOS

performed in Bologna unless otherwise stated

La conversione alla santa fede del re di Bungo giapponese, Faenza, 1703; Sospiri del cuore umano, 1703; S Radegonda, reina di Francia, Faenza, 1703; I pastori al presepio, 1704; La croce esaltata, 1704; L'eloquenza del mare, 1705; La fede consolata, 1705; Mosè infante liberato dal fiume, 1707; S Sebastiano, 1710; Li giuochi di Sansone, 1718; Il bambino Gesù in braccio al S Felice di Cantalice

OTHER SACRED VOCAL

Domine ad adjuvandum, 8vv, D-MÜs; Domine ad adjuvandum, 2vv, I-Baf

INSTRUMENTAL

1 trio sonata in Corona di dodici fiori armonici (Bologna, 1706); 2 sonatas, vc, bc, D-WD; sinfonia a 4, A-Wn

(4) Antonia Maria [Novelli] Laurenti ['La Coralli', 'Corallina'] (fl 1714–41). Contralto, possibly the daughter of (1) Bartolomeo Girolamo. She was one of the most celebrated opera singers of her day. Her earliest appearance in opera was in Padua in 1714, and she sang in many northern Italian theatres thereafter. In 1719 F.M. Veracini engaged her for the Dresden opera at the high salary of 2375 thalers. After her departure in 1720 we find her listed as 'virtuosa di camera di S Maestà il re di Polonia' (Friedrich August I of Saxony) for a Vivaldi opera staged at Venice in 1721. Under her nickname 'La Coralli' she is referred to obliquely in Benedetto Marcello's satire Il teatro alla moda (1720). Antonio Denzio invited her to Prague in 1726. There she married the tenor Felice Novelli on 8 March 1727. The pair returned to Italy and thereafter often performed in the same productions. Laurenti's last known appearance was at Ferrara in the pasticcio Sirbace (1741).

(5) Angelo Maria Laurenti (b Bologna, 28 June 1688; d Bologna, *c*1760). Composer, string player and organist, son of (1) Bartolomeo Girolamo. He joined the S Petronio orchestra in 1706 as a viola player and held this appointment until 1742, when he became second and finally (in 1753) first organist of the basilica. His oratorio L'Attalia was performed in Bologna in 1716.

(6) Lodovico Filippo Laurenti (d 1757). Composer and string player, son of (1) Bartolomeo Girolamo. He was appointed as a viola player to the S Petronio orchestra in February 1712, replacing his elder brother (3) Pietro Paolo. His only known instrumental compositions are a printed set of Suonate da camera pel violoncello e basso op.1, of uncertain date and place of publication. His oratorio La morte di Maria Estuarda, regina di Scozia was performed at Bologna in 1718. In 1725 he reportedly left Bologna to enter the service of a nobleman.

Another Laurenti whose name, like Leonardo's, is not known from Bolognese sources, and whose connection with the family is therefore conjectural, was Saverio Laurenti, joint composer with Antonio Boroni of an opera, La pupilla rapita, staged at Venice in 1763, and of an oratorio, Gioas, re di Giuda (in I-Ras). Nothing further is known of him.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CaffiS; DEUMM (C. Vitali); FétisB; MGG1 (F. Giegling); RicciTB; RicordiE; ScheringGIK

O. Penna: Catalogo degli aggregati della Accademia filarmonica di Bologna (MS, 1736, I-Baf); facs. (Bologna, 1973)

G.B. Martini: Serie cronologica de' principi dell'Accademia de' filarmonici di Bologna (Bologna, 1776/R)

F. Vatielli: Arte e vita musicale a Bologna (Bologna, 1927/R)

R. Monterosso: 'I musicisti cremonesi', Mostra bibliografica dei musicisti cremonesi: catalogo storico-critico degli autori e catalogo bibliografico, ed. S. Bassi (Cremona, 1951), 3–106

R. Emans: 'Die Musiker des Markusdoms in Venedig 1650–1708, 2. Teil', KJb, lxvi (1982), 65–81, esp. 67

O. Gambassi: La cappella musicale di S Petronio (Florence, 1987)

D.E. Freeman: The Opera Theater of Count Franz Anton von Sporck in Prague (Stuyvesant, NY, 1992)

MICHAEL TALBOT/ENRICO CARERI

Laurentius de Florentia [Laurentius Masii]. See LORENZO DA FIRENZE.

Laurenzi [Laurenti, Lorenzi], Filiberto [Filibertus de Laurentiis] (b Bertinoro, nr Forlì, probably in 1619 or 1620; d ?after 1659). Italian composer. His birthdate may be deduced from the inscription 'aetatis ann. XXIIII' appended to the portrait in his 1644 book, but the portrait and its inscription may date from earlier than 1644. From late spring 1631 to 30 September 1633 he was a soprano at S Luigi dei Francesi, Rome. He probably began his career as an opera composer while in Rome: in a manuscript of Castelli's libretto for Il favorito del principe, first performed there in 1640, he is credited with the musical setting (now lost). Late in 1640 he moved to Venice together with the singer ANNA RENZI, who was his pupil and with whom he remained associated until at least 1644. Laurenzi is not known to have held a post in Venice, though on 20 November 1641 he dedicated his Concerti ed arie to Giovanni da Pesaro, procurator-elect of S Marco, perhaps in the hope of obtaining employment. This collection includes settings of texts both by contemporary Roman poets such as Domenico Benigni and Ottaviano Castelli and by poets such as Orazio Persiani and Giulio Strozzi who were working in Venice in the mid-17th century. The longest single work in the book is the serenata Guerra non porta, to a text by Giulio Strozzi, written for a celebration for Giovanni da Pesaro. The work, which is scored for various combinations of one to five voices and includes instrumental movements, opens with a short passage for solo soprano and two violins written in the genere concitato. The rest of the volume consists mainly of strophic arias but also includes sets of strophic variations, among them a very florid setting for solo voice of Persiani's sonnet Già del sacro Leon. For Carnival 1642–3, Venice, Laurenzi contributed most of the music for the opera La finta savia, and a year later he rehearsed and performed in (and may have written the music for) Deidamia, staged at the Teatro Novissimo. For Carnival 1647 in Rome he wrote music for a carro musicale, Il trionfo della fatica, the libretto of which ends with the same duet as that found at the conclusion of the surviving manuscripts of Monteverdi's L'incoronazione di Poppea. The course of his career after 1651, when he collaborated on the opera L'esiglio d'Amore for Ferrara, is uncertain, but he may have been the Filiberto Laurenti mentioned in connection with a performance at S Petronio, Bologna, in 1659.

WORKS

DRAMATIC

Il favorito del principe (op, O. Castelli), Rome, Residence of the French Ambassador, 1640, lib F-Pn

La finta savia (op, G. Strozzi), Venice, SS Giovanni e Paolo, carn. 1642–3 (Venice, 1643); collab. G.B. Crivelli, B. Ferrari, A. Leardini, T. Merula, V. Tozzi; Laurenzi's arias pubd as Arie ... raccolte da G.B. Verdizotti nel dramma della Finta savia, 1v, bc [op.2] (Venice, 1643)

Il trionfo della fatica (carro musicale), Rome, carn. 1647

L'esiglio d'Amore (op, F. Berni), Ferrara, Grande di Corte, 1651 (Ferrara, 1651); collab. A. Mattioli

OTHER VOCAL

Concerti ed arie, 1–3vv, con una serenata, 5vv, 2 vn, chit [op.1] (Venice, 1641)

Spiritualium cantionum, liber primus, 1v, op.3 (Venice, 1644)

Arie siciliane, 1v; lost, cited in Indice

BIBLIOGRAPHY

OG ('Finta savia, La'; J. Whenham); SchmitzG

G. Strozzi: Le glorie della signora Anna Renzi romana (Venice, 1644)

Indice di tutte le opere di musica che si trovano nella Stampa della Pigna di Alessandro Vincenti (Venice, 1649); ed. in Mischiati I

C. Sartori: 'La prima diva della lirica italiana: Anna Renzi', NRMI, ii (1968), 430–52

A. Schnoebelen: 'Performance Practices at San Petronio in the Baroque', AcM, xli (1969), 37–55

W. Osthoff: 'Filiberto Laurenzis Musik zu "La finta savia" im Zusammenhang der frühvenezianischen Oper', Venezia e il melodramma nel Seicento: Venice 1972, 173–97

M. Murata: Operas for the Papal Court, 1631–1668 (Ann Arbor, 1981)

J. Whenham: Duet and Dialogue in the Age of Monteverdi (Ann Arbor, 1982)

B. Glixon: 'Private Lives of Public Women: Prima Donnas in Seventeenth-Century Venice', ML, lxxvi (1995), 509–31

JOHN WHENHAM

Laurenzini. See LORENZINO.

Lauri-Volpi [Volpi], Giacomo (b Rome, 11 Dec 1892; d Valencia, 17 March 1979). Italian tenor. He studied at the Rome Conservatory with Cotogni and later with Rosati. He made his début (under the name Giacomo Rubini) at Viterbo in 1919 as Arturo (I puritani) and in 1920 sang Des Grieux (Manon) under his own name in Rome. Engaged at La Scala as the Duke of Mantua in 1922, he sang there regularly in the 1930s and 40s. He was a member of the Metropolitan Opera from 1923 to 1933, singing in 232 performances of 26 operas; his roles included Calaf in the American première of Turandot (1926) and Rodolfo in the first Metropolitan Luisa Miller (1929). His only Covent Garden appearances were in 1925 as Chénier and 1936 as the Duke, Cavaradossi and Radames, perhaps his most striking role. He sang Boito's Nero to open the Teatro Reale dell'Opera, Rome, in 1928 and Arnold in the centenary production of Guillaume Tell at La Scala in 1929. His repertory also included Raoul (Les Huguenots), Otello and Manrico. His bright, ringing tone and beautiful legato made him one of the finest lyric-dramatic tenors of his day; his many recordings capture the virile brio of his exemplary style. He wrote a number of books, including Voci parallele (Milan, 1955) and Misteri delta voce umana (Milan, 1957).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Williams and T. Hutchinson: 'Giacomo Lauri-Volpi', Record Collector, xi (1957), 245–72; xii (1958–60), 34–5, 66–7, 108; xx (1971–2), 239 [with discography]

R. Celletti: '"Il tenore eroico" del melodramma celeste', Musica e dischi, no.143 (1958), 47; no.145 (1958), 47; no.146 (1958), 39

P. Caputo, ed.: 'Tre generazioni di artisti festeggiano Lauri-Volpi', Musica e dischi, no.200 (1963), 44

J.B. Steane: The Grand Tradition (London, 1974/R), 180–83

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/ALAN BLYTH

Lauro, Antonio (b Ciudad Bolívar, 3 Aug 1917; d Caracas, 18 April 1986). Venezuelan guitarist and composer. He originally studied the piano at the Caracas Conservatory but later changed to the guitar after hearing the Paraguayan guitarist Agustín Barrios. He wrote works for a wide variety of media, but it is those written and arranged for the guitar that have enjoyed international fame. His output, much of which was published only in his last years, included a concerto, a sonata, Suite Venezolano and Suite, Homenaje a John Duarte; but he is particularly identified with his numerous Valses venezolanos, characterized by rhythmic vitality, teasing hemiolas and lyrical melody. For some years Lauro was a member of the folk music trio Los Cantores del Trópico.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Guitar International, xv/1 (1986) [Antonio Lauro Commemorative issue]

A. Bruzual: Antonio Lauro: un músico total (Caracas, 1995)

JOHN W. DUARTE

Lauro, Domenico [Laurus, Dominicus] (b Padua, 1540; d ?Mantua, after 1607). Italian composer and priest. The frequency of the name 'Lauro' among 16th-century Paduan musicians has led to confusion; it is unlikely that he was the 'Laurus Patavinus Mantuae' mentioned by Bernardino Scardeone (De antiquitate Patavinis, Basle, 1560). He was probably a student of Francesco Stivori, since the latter included four of Lauro's madrigals in his own first two books (RISM 1583[17] and 1585[33]) and they also collaborated on a book of three-part madrigals (RISM 1590[22]). Lauro apparently went to Mantua in 1598 to be maestro di cappella at the cathedral; Sartori stated (in MGG1) that in 1598 he was maestro di cappella at Padua Cathedral, but his name does not appear in the chapel documents there and there seems to be no reason to doubt statements by Canal, Bertolotti and Zacco that Lauro was then working in Mantua.

Lauro's extant works include three masses, one motet and 14 madrigals. The four-voice motet Hodie Cristus attributed to 'Laurus' must be the work of a much earlier composer, since the manuscript dates from about 1530; both Eitner and Sartori, however, listed the work as being by Domenico Lauro. Lauro's work is typically Venetian and his masses use the fully developed concerted style.

WORKS

Madrigali ... libro primo, 3vv (Venice, 1590[22])

[3] Missae, 8vv, insts, org (Venice, 1607)

Works in 1583[17], 1585[33], 1590[17], 1592[3]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BertolottiM; EitnerQ

T. Zacco: Cenni biografici di illustri scrittori e compositori di musica padovani (Padua, 1840)

N. Pietrucci: Biografia degli artisti padovani (Padua, 1858), 69

P. Canal: Della musica in Mantova (Venice, 1881/R)

PATRICIA ANN MYERS

Lauro, Hieronymo del [Alauro, Hieronymo] (fl 1514–17). Italian composer. 11 frottolas by him have survived in Petrucci's 11th frottola book (RISM 1514[2]), Antico's fourth book (1517[2]) and Judici's Libro primo de la fortuna (1530[1]; recte 1526). He may well be younger than the major frottolists, including Cara and Tromboncino, since his works do not appear before 1514. He set both the new, more refined verse forms and the established frottola types. His style matched his taste in verse, which avoided the frivolous and favoured the pains and torments of love. As in many frottolas, the cantus parts are almost syllabic, while the inner parts provide a more florid and continuous accompaniment, supported by a simple harmonic bass. An exception is the more solemn Latin ode Laura romanis, a dedicatory piece, prompted perhaps by the opportunity it affords for play on words.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Einstein: 'Das elfte Buch der Frottole', ZMw, x (1927–8), 613–24

K. Jeppesen: La frottola, i (Århus and Copenhagen, 1968) [incl. titles of works]

JOAN WESS/WILLIAM F. PRIZER

Lausanne. City in Switzerland. In the Middle Ages it was a cathedral city and from the 10th century was influenced by the musical traditions of the monastery of St Gallen. From 1536 to 1798 it was dominated by the Bernese and accepted the Reformation and its musical ideas. The cathedral organ, constructed in 1411, was demolished in 1537; the Geneva Psalter by Loys Bourgeois was imposed and later replaced by that of François Gindron, who also composed 'Proverbs' and motets. Guillaume Franc, who came from Geneva, taught church music in the College of Lausanne from 1545 until his death in 1570. As in Geneva, secular music declined during the 16th century, and in the 17th and 18th centuries only church music was publicly performed. Nevertheless, a few families played chamber music, and a number of famous musicians visited Lausanne (including Mozart in 1766).

In the 19th century musical life slowly gathered momentum after the foundation in 1812 of a musical society which established an orchestra in 1827 and presented adventurous programmes with some of the best soloists of the time. During the second half of the century local music was particularly influenced by German or German-speaking Swiss musicians who directed the Beau-Rivage Orchestra, founded in 1872 as a professional ensemble of 45 performers. Choral singing also became important, under the direction of Hugo von Senger, Rudolph Herfurth, Jean-Bernard Kaupert and Gustave-Adolphe Koëlla, founder of the conservatoire (1861). During this period the town was visited by Liszt (1836), Mendelssohn (1842), Wagner and Gounod, and later Fauré, Skryabin and Paderewski.

At the beginning of the 20th century Emile Jaques-Dalcroze and Gustave Doret were the dominating personalities; they brought native works allied to the French school into the previously very Germanic repertory. In 1908 at the Théâtre du Jorat, Mézières (near Lausanne), René Morax founded a new type of musical theatre directed towards a wide public, and collaborated with Doret and, later, with Honegger. World War I ended the existence of the Lausanne SO, which had replaced the Beau-Rivage Orchestra, but brought about the meeting between Stravinsky and C.F. Ramuz and their collaboration in The Soldier's Tale, performed at the Théâtre de Lausanne in 1918. After the war musical life developed more swiftly, particularly through the excellence and variety of the subscription concerts given by the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under Ernest Ansermet. This ensemble is based in Geneva but plays an essential role in Lausanne life. A rival orchestra was set up and supported by Suisse Romande Radio (1935–8) and, though it could not survive, a need was felt after World War II for a chamber ensemble to complement the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande. The Orchestre de Chambre de Lausanne, founded in 1945 by the conductor Victor Desarzens, has gained an international reputation and taken part in many European festivals. It gives ten subscription concerts a year and often plays on Radio Lausanne; its programmes are eclectic and do much to promote contemporary music, including works by Lausanne composers (A.-H.-G. Fornerod, Raffaele d'Alessandro, Hans Haug, Constantin Regamey, Julien-François Zbinden, Jean Perrin and Jean Balissat).

Lausanne has at least six large mixed choirs, of which two are professional. As well as the concerts of old and new works they present each year, there are chamber concerts organized by the Société pour l'Art, various recitals (though fewer now than in the past) and concerts of organ music. Many of the soloists are trained in the town's two academies, the Conservatoire de Musique de Lausanne and the Institut de Ribaupierre.

Radio Lausanne has commissioned and performed new works by Honegger, Jean Binet, Jacques Ibert and Henri Sauguet and taken part in the performance of important works by Frank Martin. Large-scale concerts take place in the cathedral or at the suburban Théâtre de Beaulieu, where opera performances are occasionally given. After its inauguration in 1954, this theatre became the centre for the annual Festival de Lausanne (1956–84) featuring guest orchestras and opera companies. Since the founding of Opéra Lausanne in 1988, a winter season of opera has been given at the Théâtre de Lausanne, now known as the Théâtre Municipal.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (A. Clark)

J. Burdet: La musique dans le pays de Vaud sous le régime bernois, 1536–1798 (Lausanne, 1963)

P. Meylan: René Morax et Arthur Honegger au Théâtre du Jorat (Lausanne, 1966/R)

J. Burdet: La musique dans le canton de Vaud au XIXe siècle (Lausanne, 1971)

J. Burdet: La musique dans le canton de Vaud, 1904–1939 (Lausanne, 1983)

J.-P. Pastori: Le Théâtre de Lausanne 1869–1989 (Lausanne, 1989)

PIERRE MEYLAN/ANDREW CLARK

Lausch, Laurenz (b ?1737/8; d Vienna, 23 Nov 1794). Austrian music copyist and publisher. He apparently began his commercial music copying business in Vienna on 27 March 1782; by 13 August 1783, when he moved his premises to the Kärntnerstrasse, he was calling himself a music publisher (though the business at that time handled only the retail sale of printed and manuscript music). A few publications from his firm appeared between 1797 and 1801, possibly including the first printed edition of Haydn's Gott erhalte Franz den Kaiser. Lausch dealt primarily, though not exclusively, in vocal music: on 1 July 1786 he advertised parts for Mozart's Le nozze di Figaro; a similar set for Don Giovanni was announced on 24 May 1788. The German war-song K539, written on 5 March 1788, was available from Lausch as early as 19 March in parts and vocal score.

Although several copies from his shop are signed, it is impossible to identify any one hand as Lausch's; almost certainly he had several employees, some of whom may have been temporarily subcontracted. By the same token, there is no guarantee that the copies offered by him – including the parts to Figaro, Don Giovanni and K539 – were authorized by local composers. Some works may have been acquired dishonestly: on 7 October 1787 Haydn complained to Artaria that one of his copyists had stolen the op.50 string quartets and passed them on to Lausch (Robbins Landon).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WeinmannWM
H.C. Robbins Landon, ed.: The Collected Correspondence and London Notebooks of Joseph Haydn (London, 1959), 70–71
D. Bartha and L. Somfai: Haydn als Opernkapellmeister (Budapest and Mainz, 1960), 427
O.E. Deutsch: Mozart: die Dokumente seines Lebens (Kassel, 1961; Eng. trans., 1965, 2/1966; suppl. 1978)
A. Weinmann: Wiener Musikverlag 'am Rande' (Vienna, 1970)
A.P. Brown: 'Notes on Some Eighteenth-Century Viennese Copyists', JAMS, xxxiv (1981), 325–38
C. Eisen: New Mozart Documents (London and Stanford, CA, 1991)
D. Edge: 'Recent Discoveries in Viennese Copies of Mozart's Concertos', Mozart's Piano Concertos: Text, Context, Interpretation, ed. N. Zaslaw (Ann Arbor, MI, 1996), 51–65

CLIFF EISEN

Lauska [Louska, Lausca], Franz [Franz Seraphicus; Franz Seraphinus; František Ignác] (b Brno, 13 Jan 1764; d Berlin, 18 April 1825). Moravian piano teacher and composer. He may have been a pupil of Albrechtsberger when studying in Vienna in 1784. After a period in Italy he served at the Bavarian court in Munich and undertook concert tours. From 1798 he was active in Berlin as a pianist, a composer and principally a teacher, most notably of Meyerbeer and the Prussian royal family. He conducted the Sing-Akademie in rehearsals during Zelter's absence in 1802, and later joined Zelter's Liedertafel, for which he composed many songs. Lauska was a friend of Carl Maria von Weber and probably also knew Beethoven, for whom he read the proofs of several compositions.

Lauska's piano sonatas, capriccios and polonaises are pleasing, uncomplicated works in the idiom of the time, intended for both connoisseurs and amateurs, particularly his own pupils.

WORKS

Pf (most works pubd in Hamburg, Leipzig or Berlin): 25 sonatas; rondos, variations, polonaises, capriccios etc.; pieces for beginners and amateurs
Other inst: Sonate facile, pf, vn, op.18 (Munich, 1802–3); Sonata, pf, vc, op.28 (Berlin, *c*1881); Introduzzione e rondoletto, pf, vc (Berlin, *c*1818–19); Conc., hpd/pf, orch, D-Bsb
Songs: 9 deutsche Lieder und Variationen, vv, pf, op.2 (Hamburg, 1792); 12 songs, 1v, gui (Mainz, n.d.); 5 Tafel-Lieder, solo vv, 4 male vv (Berlin, n.d.); other songs for male vv (see Ledebur, 317); separate songs, some in Bsb
Sacred vocal: Mass, Off, inc., CZ-Pu; Quando corpus morietur, 4vv, 1825

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ČSHS; DlabačžKL; EitnerQ; GerberNL; MGG1 (J. Bužga) [incl. detailed list of works]
J.P.S. Schmidt: 'Nekrolog von Lauska', Berliner allgemeine musikalische Zeitung (1825), 155, 163, 171, 180
C. von Lederbur: Tonkünstler-Lexicon Berlin's (Berlin, 1861/R), 317
U. Wagner: Das Wirken böhmischer Komponisten im Raum Berlin/Potsdam (diss., U. of Halle, 1988)

UNDINE WAGNER

Laute (Ger.). See LUTE.

Lautenklavier [Lautenklavecimbel, Lautenwerck] (Ger.). See LUTE-HARPSICHORD.

Lautenzug (Ger.). See BUFF STOP.

Lauterbach, Johann Christoph (b Culmbach, Bavaria, 24 July 1832; d Dresden, 28 March 1918). German violinist. In 1850 he entered the Brussels Conservatory as a pupil of Bériot and Fétis, received the gold medal in 1851, and during Léonard's absence the next year took his place as professor of violin. In 1853 he became Konzertmeister and violin professor at the Munich Conservatory. He moved in 1861 to Dresden, where he was second Konzertmeister in the Königliche Kapelle, succeeding to first place in 1873. There he led a string quartet whose members included the cellist Grützmacher, and taught at the conservatory. Lauterbach toured extensively in Europe and spent two seasons in England, appearing in London at the Philharmonic Society on 2 May 1864 and 15 May 1865. He published a few pieces for the violin.

DAVID CHARLTON

Lauterbach & Kuhn. German firm of music publishers. It was founded in Leipzig in 1902 by Karl Lauterbach and Max Kuhn. In the same year the firm began its relationship with Max Reger, publishing most of his works from op.66 to op.103, including three of the composer's greatest variation sets, on themes by Bach (op.81), Beethoven (op.86) and Hiller (op.100). Reger's Sinfonietta for orchestra op.90 (1905), dedicated to 'meinem lieben Freunden Karl Lauterbach und Dr. Max Kuhn', was published by the firm. In 1903 it began a series of posthumous Hugo Wolf publications, including Penthesilea (in a truncated edition by Josef Hellmesberger) and the Italian Serenade, both issued in full scores and in arrangements for piano duet by Reger. These were followed by the String Quartet, Das Fest auf Solhaug, Christnacht and the Lieder aus der Jugendzeit (edited by Ferdinand Foll). The firm's publications usually have distinctive Jugendstil title-pages and outer wrappers. Lauterbach & Kuhn was bought by Bote & Bock at the end of 1908.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Reger: 'Hugo Wolf's künstlerischer Nachlass', Süddeutsche Monatshefte, i/2 (1904)
F. Stein: Thematisches Verzeichnis der im Druck erschienenen Werke von Max Reger einschliesslich seinen Bearbeitungen und Ausgaben (Leipzig, 1953)

NIGEL SIMEONE

Lauto (It.). See LUTE.

Lauverjat, Pierre (b ?last quarter of the 16th century; d ?Bourges, after 1625). French composer. At least from 1613 to 1625 he was chaplain of the Ste Chapelle, Bourges, and Master of the Choristers at its choir school. Between 1613 and 1623 Ballard published eight masses for four and five voices. They were apparently highly esteemed: for example, in 1621–2 six were purchased for the choir school of Troyes Cathedral. Obeying the decrees of the Council of Trent he always took a Latin cantus firmus from liturgical sources – hymns, psalms and antiphons. He was an excellent contrapuntist and composed in the style usually employed in France for masses in the early 17th century: his counterpoint is very sparingly ornamented and written according to the traditional modal system, yet it is strongly marked by modern tonality. His melodic writing is rather stiff in his earliest works but becomes freer in those published in 1617 and even more so in those of 1623: his last works display solid musical qualities. It is noteworthy that his requiem mass (1623) contains, besides the Ordinary of the Mass for the Dead (with the two graduals, the Roman and the Parisian), the Libera me and the three nocturns.

WORKS

Missa 'Confitebor tibi', 5vv (Paris, 1613)
Missa 'Fundamenta ejus', 5vv (Paris, 1613)
Missa 'Ne morieris', 5vv (Paris, 1613)
Missa 'Tu es petrus', 5vv (Paris, 1613)
Missa 'Iste confessor', 4vv (Paris, 1617)
Missa 'Legem pone', 4vv (Paris, 1617)
Missa 'O gloriosa Domina', 4vv (Paris, 1623)
Missa pro defunctis, 4vv (Paris, 1623)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A.-E. Prévost: Histoire de la maîtrise de la cathédrale de Troyes (Troyes, 1906; repr. in La vie musicale dans les provinces françaises, i, Geneva, 1972)
D. Launay: La musique religieuse en France du concile de Trente à 1804 (Paris, 1993)

DENISE LAUNAY/JAMES R. ANTHONY

Laux, Karl (b Ludwigshafen, 26 Aug 1896; d Dresden, 27 June 1978). German musicologist. He studied while a POW in England with Blume, and later at Heidelberg University, taking the doctorate in 1926 with a dissertation on Schleiermacher's theory of education. He worked in music publishing in Mannheim (1926–34) and Dresden (1934–45) and then as a music critic before being appointed rector of the Dresden Musikhochschule (1951–63). He was vice-president of the Gesellschaft für Musikforschung (1959–68) and in 1956 became president of the Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft in Zwickau. His extensive publications on contemporary music stem from his ten years as a practising music critic; their emphasis is primarily on analysis and cultural history. As a music historian he concerned himself with a wide variety of periods, and particularly with Weber, Bruckner, Joseph Haas, Bach's sons and Schumann; his book on music in Russia and the Soviet Union (1958) was the first comprehensive work on the subject in German.

WRITINGS

Der Erziehungsgedanke bei Schleiermacher (diss., U. of Heidelberg, 1926)
Joseph Haas: Portrait eines Kunstlers – Bild einer Zeit (Mainz, 1931, 2/1954)
'Orchester- und Kammermusik', Atlantisbuch der Musik, ed. F. Hamel and M. Hürlimann (Berlin, 1934, 9/1959), 556–608
Der Thomaskantor und seine Söhne (Dresden, 1939)
Anton Bruckner (Leipzig, 1941, 2/1947)
Musik und Musiker der Gegenwart (Essen, 1949)
Johann Sebastian Bach (Berlin, 1950)
ed., with H.H. Dräger: Bach-Probleme: Festschrift zur Deutschen Bach-Feier (Leipzig, 1950)
'Dresden ist doch gar zu schön: Schumann in der Sächsischen Hauptstadt: eine Ehrenrettung', Robert Schumann: aus Anlass seines 100. Todestages, ed. H.J. Moser and E. Rebling (Leipzig, 1956), 25–42
Joseph Haas (Leipzig, 1958)
Die Musik in Russland und in der Sowjetunion (Berlin, 1958)
Ottmar Gerster (Leipzig, 1961)
Die Dresdner Staatskapelle (Leipzig, 1963; Eng. trans., 1964)
ed.: Das Musikleben in der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik (Leipzig, 1963)
'Carl Maria von Webers Münchner Beitrag zur deutschen Oper', Festschrift Hans Engel, ed. H. Heussner (Kassel, 1964), 221–30
Carl Maria von Weber (Leipzig, 1966, 3/1989)
'Wesen und Wandel des philharmonischen Gedankens', Musa – mens – musici: im Gedenken an Walther Vetter (Leipzig, 1969), 337–46
Kunstansichten: Ausgewählte Schriften Carl Maria von Webers (Leipzig, 1969)
Robert Schumann (Leipzig, 1972)
'Burkhard-Haas-Hindemith: eine schöpferische Freundschaft: ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Donaueschinger Kammermusiktage und zur Joseph-Haas-Biographie', Musicae scientiae collectanea: Festschrift Karl Gustav Fellerer, ed. H. Hüschen (Cologne, 1973), 363–72

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Schaefer: 'Karl Laux 75?', MG, xxi (1971), 521 only

HORST SEEGER

Lauxmin, Zygmunt. See LAUKSMIN, ZYGMUNT.

Lavagnino, Angelo Francesco (b Genoa, 22 Feb 1909; d 21 Aug 1987). Italian composer. He studied composition with Mario Barbieri, Renzo Bossi and Vito Frazzi at the Milan Conservatory, and graduated in 1933. He directed the Liceo Musicale in Genoa from 1929 to 1938 and taught courses in film music at the Accademia Musicale Chigiana in Siena from 1949 to 1962. At first he devoted himself to composing concert works, essentially traditional but with some modernist pretensions in a style derived from the school of Pizzetti. After 1950 he turned his attention exclusively to music for film (including documentaries), composing around 250 scores and winning two Nastri d'argento. He produced most of his best work for films on the subject of exploration (e.g. Magia verde, 1954, Continente perduto, 1955, L'ultimo paradiso, 1957, La muraglia cinese, 1958, Calypso, 1959) creating a skilful blend of exoticism and original ideas. He was one of the first Italian specialist composers to work with foreign directors, including Henry Hathaway (Legend of the Lost, 1957), René Clément (Che gioia vivere!, 1961) and Christian-Jacque (Madame Sans-Gêne, 1961). His finest collaboration, however, remains his work on Orson Welles's Othello (1952), where the openly rhetorical nature of the music paradoxically amplifies the metaphysical tone of the film.

WORKS
(selective list)

Op: Malafonte (A.R. Borella), Antwerp, 1952
Orch: Tempo alto, orch poem, 1938; Vn Conc., 1941; Pocket Sym., str, 1949; Sinfonia, 1949
Chbr: Qt, A, str, 1938; Trio, 2 vn, va, 1939; Qnt, C, pf, str, 1942; Sonata, vn, pf, 1943
Sacred: L'annunciazione, sacred conc., 3 vn, str, 1945; Messa chigiana, 1946
Film scores: Othello (dir. O. Welles), 1952; Un americano a Roma (dir. S. Vanzina), 1955; Legend of the Lost (dir. H. Hathaway), 1957; Policarpo ufficiale di scrittura (dir. M. Soldati), 1958; Ferdinando I re di Napoli (dir. G. Franciolini), 1959; Che gioia vivere! (dir. R. Clément), 1961; Madame Sans-Gêne (dir. Christian-Jacque), 1961; Marco Polo (dirs. H. Fregonese and P. Pierotti), 1962; Chimes at Midnight (dir. Welles), 1966; Falstaff (dir. Welles), 1966
Documentary films: Magia verde, 1954; Continente perduto, 1955; L'ultimo paradiso, 1957; La muraglia cinese, 1958; Calypso, 1959

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A.F. Lavagnino: 'La musica nel disegno animato', La musica nel film, ed. E. Masetti (Rome, 1950), 63–8
M. Giusti, ed.: 'Conversazione con Angelo Francesco Lavagnino', Filmcritica, xxxi (1980), 230–34
E. Comuzio: Colonna sonora: dizionario ragionato dei musicisti cinematografici (Rome, 1992)

SERGIO MICELI

Lavallée, Calixa [Calixte] (b Ste Théodosie de Verchères [now Calixa-Lavallée], Quebec, 28 Dec 1842; d Boston, 21 Jan 1891). Canadian composer and pianist. Son of Augustin Pâquet dit Lavallée, an instrument builder and bandmaster, and of a mother partly of Scottish descent, Lavallée received his early musical training in St Hyacinthe and Montreal. Having become proficient on the piano, the violin and the cornet, he worked as a travelling theatre musician from about 1857. He won an instrumental competition in New Orleans and was asked by the Spanish violinist Olivera to accompany him on a tour that took him as far as Brazil. In 1861 and 1862 Lavallée was enrolled as a bandsman in a northern regiment during the American Civil War. There followed years as a teacher and travelling musician in Montreal, California, New Orleans and Lowell, Massachusetts, until he was appointed conductor and artistic director of the New York Grand Opera House (more minstrel-show theatre than opera house) in about 1870. After the closing of the theatre in 1872, Lavallée returned for a time to Montreal, where friends raised money to enable him to complete his education at the Paris Conservatoire (1873–5). His teachers included Bazin, Boieldieu fils and Marmontel.

Lavallée returned to Canada convinced of his mission to develop the latent talent of the young dominion through the foundation of a state-supported conservatory and opera company. He set up a studio (an embryonic conservatory) with Frantz and Rosita Jehin-Prume and became choirmaster at a Montreal church. Performances of Gounod's Jeanne d'Arc and Boieldieu's La dame blanche under Lavallée's direction enchanted the public but failed to convince the Quebec provincial authorities that music education should be subsidized. Officials encouraged Lavallée to write a cantata for the welcome of a new governor-general in 1879 but failed to reimburse him for his expenses. In the following year the music committee for the Fête Nationale des Canadiens-français, an event planned to coincide with the St John the Baptist Day celebrations on 24 June, invited Lavallée to write a patriotic tune to which Judge Adolphe B. Routhier then provided the words O Canada; first performed at the festival, this has become the national anthem of Canada. The accepted English version of the text is substantially that written in 1908 by R. Stanley Weir.

Soon after composing the anthem, Lavallée once again moved to the USA, where he received the recognition he had missed at home. He became music director of the Roman Catholic cathedral in Boston and a teacher at the Carlyle Petersilea Music Academy there. His opéra comique, The Widow, was performed in several American cities in 1882, and many of his works were published, including TIQ, a melodrama on 'the Indian question' and the US government's approach to it. He became active in the Music Teachers' National Association, organizing some of the first all-American concerts from 1884. He became the MTNA's president in 1886 and represented the USA at the London conference of the National Society of Professional Musicians in 1888. Lavallée died of tuberculosis. His remains were transferred to Montreal in 1933.

Nearly all of Lavallée's unpublished music is lost and, since the published works were those written for the broad public, it is easy to get the impression that Lavallée catered to popular taste. All accounts, however, indicate that he was a serious musician, at home in the classics as much as in the operettas of his day. The piano piece Le papillon enjoyed popularity in Europe as well as North America for many decades. Lavallée's greatest talent lay in melodic invention. Logan summed up his place in Canadian music: '. . . though others preceded him and were more effective than he as a formative force in promoting musical education and taste in Canada, Lavallée must be regarded as the first native-born Canadian creative composer – first in time, in genius, in versatility of achievement and in meritorious musicianship'. Twenty compositions by Lavallée are included in The Canadian Musical Heritage, i, vii, x, xv, xxi, xxii.

WORKS

STAGE

Lou-Lou (comic op, 3), 1872, not perf., lost
The Widow (oc, F.H. Nelson), Springfield, IL, 1882, vs (Boston, 1882)
TIQ, or The Indian Question Settled at Last (melodramatic musical satire, 2, W.F. Sage, P. Hawley), vs (Boston, 1883)

ORCHESTRAL AND CHORAL

Ouverture – Patrie, 1874; Sym., 4vv, orch, ded. City of Boston, *c*1885; both lost
Cantata en l'honneur du Marquis de Lorne (N. Legendre), perf. Quebec, 11 June 1879, lost
Hymne à la paix, lost; orch version by E. Lapierre, CBC Music Library, Montreal
Tu es Petrus, offertorium (Boston, 1883)
3 ovs., band (Boston, 1885–8): Bridal Rose, Golden Fleece, King of Diamonds

CHAMBER, PIANO, SONGS

2 str qts; Pf Trio; Sonata, vn, pf; Suite, vc, pf: all lost
Grande fantaisie, op.75; Meditation: both cornet, pf (Boston, *c*1880)

L'oiseau mouche, op.11, pf (Montreal, *c*1866)
Grande marche de concert, op.14; Souvenir de Tolède, op.17; Le papillon, étude de concert, op.18: all pf (Paris, *c*1875)
Marche funèbre, hommage à Pie IX, pf (Montreal, *c*1878)
Valse de salon, op.39; Mouvement à la pavane, op.41: both pf (Boston, 1886)

O Canada, chant national (Quebec, 1880)
Andalouse, bolero, op.38, 1v, pf (Boston, 1886)

Many other pf pieces and songs, Eng. and Fr. texts, some lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DCB (G. Potvin); EMC2 (G. Potvin)
J.D. Logan: 'Canadian Creative Composers', Canadian Magazine, xli (1913), 486–94
S. Salter: 'Early Encouragements to American Composers', MQ, xviii (1932), 76–105
E. Lapierre: Calixa Lavallée (Montreal, 1936/R)
H. Kallmann: A History of Music in Canada 1534–1914 (Toronto, 1960/R), 132ff, 239ff

HELMUT KALLMANN

Laval University. University in QUEBEC; its Ecole de Musique was founded in 1922.

Lavaux, Nicolas [?Amable] (fl Paris, 1736–67). Oboist and composer. The preface to his op.1 contains an apology for his incomplete knowledge of French. The earliest mention of him is in a privilege of 1736 granted for his six sonatas op.1 and his airs for musettes and vielles: he is described as 'maître de musique et ordinaire de la musique' to the Prince of Carignan (Victor-Amédée of Savoy), Intendant of the Paris Opéra. Lavaux appeared at least twice in the Concert Spirituel, probably in his own compositions, in 1741 (a concerto) and 1749 (an oboe-violin duet). An Amable Lavaux listed as an oboist in the Concert Spirituel troupe of 1755 (and named by Fétis as a Parisian flute teacher) is probably the same person as Nicolas. Several of Lavaux's dance pieces were composed for the Théâtre de la Comédie Italienne (which may suggest an Italian origin). In July 1767 he testified on behalf of the Bureau d'Abonnement Musical when the legality of musical subscription series was in question.

Lavaux's instrumental duets enjoyed a long-lived popularity. His sonatas op.1 were listed in Bailleux's catalogue between 1767 and about 1786, and the Bureau d'Abonnement Musical listed the sonatas op.7 from 1769 until 1782. When the Parisian music teacher Toussaint Bordet advertised his own new duets in 1758, he pointed out that they were in the style of the duets of Lavaux. Bordet's description of these as 'more interesting than difficult' equally fits those of Lavaux.

WORKS

printed works published in Paris, unless otherwise stated

6 sonates, 2 fl/other insts, op.1 (1739)
Airs, musettes/vielles (1739), cited in Privilège Général
Premier Divertissement (*c*1740–50); nos.1, 3, dances for any insts; no.2, fl/ob/vn, inst acc.; no.4, 3 suites en duo
Sonates, 2 vn, op.7 (n.d.), ?lost
Transcrs., hpd, F-Pa
Works in: Minuetti diversi (*c*1745); Vaudeville, menuets, contredances et airs détachés chantés (*c*1745); Deuxième livre ou recueil d'airs en duo (1755); Amusement des compagnies (The Hague, 1761); Recueil de contredanse, menuet et cotillon écrie par Caillat, 1767, Pn; Sixième recueil nouveaux d'airs (*c*1775)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB
M. Brenet: 'La librairie musicale en France de 1653 à 1790, d'après les Registres de privilèges', SIMG, viii (1906–7), 401–66
M. Benoit: Versailles et les musiciens du roi, 1661–1733 (Paris, 1971)
A. Devries: Editions et commerce de la musique gravée à Paris dans la première moitié du XVIIIe siècle: les Boivin, les Leclerc (Geneva, 1976)

PEGGY DAUB

La Venture, Johannes à. See LONGUEVAL, ANTOINE DE.

Lavenu. English family of music publishers and musicians. Lewis Lavenu (d London, 17 Aug 1818), a flautist, was in business as a music publisher in London from early 1796. From 1802 to 1808 he was in partnership with Charles Mitchell, the firm being known as Lavenu & Mitchell. At Lavenu's death his widow Elizabeth Lavenu succeeded to the business. She married the violinist Nicolas Mori as (see MORI family, (1)) her second husband in 1826, and he continued the firm as Mori & Lavenu from about 1827.

Mori was succeeded at his death in June 1839 by his stepson Louis Henry Lavenu (b London, 1818; d Sydney, 1 Aug 1859), who had studied at the RAM (composition with Bochsa and Potter) and had served as a cellist at the opera and for the Westminster Abbey Festival of 1834 before becoming a partner in the family firm. He maintained the firm until 1844 when it was taken over by Addison & Hodson. Lavenu also composed and published a few of his songs and short piano pieces; his operetta, Loretta: a Tale of Seville, on a libretto by Alfred Bunn, was successfully produced at Drury Lane on 9 November 1846. Dissatisfied with his position, Lavenu emigrated to Australia in 1854 and became music director at the theatre in Sydney.

The house of Lavenu was among the most prolific music publishing firms of the early 19th century, with a wide range of new vocal and instrumental music in its catalogue. From 1832 to 1839 it was one of the principal English publishers of Mendelssohn's works, Mori having led the orchestra at many of the composer's Philharmonic Society concerts. It also ran a circulating music library, and by 1808 had obtained royal patronage as music sellers to the Prince of Wales.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Humphries-SmithMP
H. Love: The Golden Age of Australian Opera (Sydney, 1981)

PETER WARD JONES

Lavergne [La Vergne, Delavergne], Antoine-Barthélemy (de) (b ?1670; d Paris, 1726). French organist and composer. He was organist of the church of St André-des-Arts in Paris from at least 1703, and held the same position at St Etienne-du-Mont from 1705 in succession to his teacher, Jean-Baptiste Buterne. He was assisted (in 1723) and replaced (in 1726) in that parish by Claude-Nicolas Ingrain. Lavergne composed an opera La princesse d'Elide to a libretto by Roy, based on Molière, intended for the Académie Royale de Musique but not performed. It was published by Ballard in 1706 and follows the model of Lully's opéras-ballets.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; LabordeMP; MGG1 (D. Launay)
M. Benoit and N. Dufourcq: 'Documents du minutier central: musiciens français du XVIIIe siècle', RMFC, viii (1968), 243–56; x (1970), 197–220

GUY BOURLIGUEUX

La Viéville, Jean Laurent le Cerf de. See LE CERF DE LA VIÉVILLE, JEAN LAURENT.

Lavigna, Vincenzo (b Altamura, nr Bari, 21 Feb 1776; d Milan, 14 Sept 1836). Italian composer and teacher. From 1790 to 1799 he studied in Naples at the Conservatorio di S Maria di Loreto under Fenaroli and Valente. In 1801 he moved to Milan, where, thanks to the protection of Paisiello, his first opera, La muta per amore, ossia Il medico per forza, was performed at La Scala in 1802. In the same year he became maestro al cembalo at La Scala, and in 1823 teacher of solfège at the Milan Conservatory. Between 1802 and 1810 he wrote operas and ballets, which enjoyed a fair degree of success at La Scala and other north Italian opera houses. These works are quite traditional, functional if somewhat severe, with inspired melodies and well-conceived harmony. Upon retiring from his post at La Scala in 1832 Lavigna taught privately. From 1832, having been denied admission to the Milan Conservatory, Verdi studied counterpoint and composizione ideale with Lavigna. Lavigna admired Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven and Bach, and taught his students using practical examples drawn from the works of these composers.

WORKS

STAGE

La muta per amore, ossia Il medico per forza (farsa giocosa, G.M. Foppa), Milan, Scala, 14 June 1802
Gengis-Khan (ballet), Milan, Aug 1802
L'idolo di se stesso, Ferrara, Comunale, carn. 1803
Emilio e Carolina, ossia La fortunata riconciliazione (ballet), Milan, Scala, 1804
L'impostore avvilito (melodramma giocoso, L. Romanelli), Milan, Scala, 11 Sept 1804, *I-Mr
Eraldo ed Emma (op, Romanelli), Milan, Scala, 1805, collab. S. Mayr and F. Orlandi
Coriolano (op, Romanelli), Turin, Regio, 15 Jan 1806
Le metamorfosi (dramma eroicomico, Foppa), Venice, Fenice, spr. 1807
Hoango (op, G. Boggio), Turin, Regio, carn. 1807; rev. as Orcamo (melodramma serio, Romanelli), Milan, Scala, 28 Feb 1809
Di posta in posta (melodramma giocoso, Romanelli), Milan, Scala, 2 July 1808

Palmerio e Claudia (op, ? after Romanelli), Turin, Regio, 20 Jan 1809
Chi s'è visto s'è visto (dramma, A. Anelli), Milan, Scala, 23 April 1810
Dances for Teseo (cant., V. Monti), collab. V. Federici and A. Rolla

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DEUMM (P. Mioli)
O. Serena: I musicisti altamurani (Altamura, 1895)
C. Censi: 'Gli studi e i maestri', Musica, vii/36 (1913), 2–3
G. de Napoli: 'Nel centenario verdiano: due musicisti altamuresi maestri a Verdi', Rassegna pugliese di scienze, lettere ed arti, xxx/Oct (1913)
G. de Napoli: 'Il maestro di Giuseppe Verdi, V. L.', La Lettura (1928), Feb, 138–44
G. de Napoli: La triade melodrammatica altamurana: Giacomo Tritto, Vincenzo Lavigna, Saverio Mercadante (Milan, 1931)

GIOVANNI CARLI BALLOLA/ROBERTA MONTEMORRA MARVIN

Lavignac, (Alexandre Jean) Albert (b Paris, 21 Jan 1846; d Paris, 28 May 1916). French teacher and musicologist. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire with Marmontel, Bazin, Benoist and Ambroise Thomas, winning premiers prix in solfège (1857), piano (1861), harmony and accompaniment (1863) and counterpoint and fugue (1864), and a second prix for organ (1865). In 1871 he returned to the Conservatoire as a lecturer in solfège; four years later he was made a professor and from 1891 he taught harmony classes. He wrote songs and light piano pieces, but is better known for his writings, both pedagogical and historical. His numerous works for use in teaching solfège and harmony remain in wide circulation. The Cours complet . . . de dictée musicale, written at the request of Thomas, then director of the Conservatoire, prompted the introduction of dictation courses in several European conservatories. Lavignac's Ecole de la pédale, a collection of material drawn from various piano methods, was apparently the first book devoted entirely to this subject. His most important historical project was the founding of the Encyclopédie de la musique et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire which he edited until his death. Publication was resumed in 1920 under the editorship of Lionel de La Laurencie, on whose death in 1933 the work was abandoned. The Encyclopédie covers both history and practical techniques of music and is noteworthy for its sizable portion on non-European music; the dictionary section never materialized. In La musique et les musiciens he discusses form as an elastic process, an attitude maintained by his pupil Debussy. Lavignac defends the binary concept of sonata form and describes the 'liberty and adventure' that faces a composer. Even so, he extols the virtues of pre-established tonal and formal paradigms, revealing his standing on the cusp of tradition and change at the century's end.

WRITINGS

Cours complet théorique et pratique de dictée musicale (Paris and Brussels, 1882)
Preface to M. Simon: Cours complet ... des principes de musique (Paris, 1886)
Ecole de la pédale (Paris, 1889, ?2/1927)
La musique et les musiciens (Paris, 1895, rev., enlarged 1950; Eng. trans., 1899, with addns by H.F. Krehbiel, 4/1903)
Le voyage artistique à Bayreuth (Paris, 1897, rev. 1951 by H. Busser; Eng. trans., 1898, as The Music Dramas of Richard Wagner, 2/1904/R)
Les gaités du Conservatoire (Paris, 1899) with 20 others: Collection complète des leçons d'harmonie (Paris, 1900)
L'éducation musicale (Paris, 1902, 4/1908; Eng. trans., 1903)
Notions scolaires de musique (Paris and Brussels, 1905–6)
Cours d'harmonie théorique et pratique (Paris, 1907)
Abrégé de la théorie des principes fondamentaux de la musique moderne (Paris, 1909, 2/1914)
Théorie complète des principes fondamentaux de la musique moderne (Paris and Brussels, 1909)
Solfège des solfèges (Paris, 1910–11; Eng. trans., 1924, as Singing Exercises)
ed.: Encyclopédie de la musique et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire (Paris, 1920–31) [vols.i–iii only, work continued by L. de La Laurencie]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Pierre: Le Conservatoire national de musique et de déclamation: documents historiques et administratifs (Paris, 1900)
R. Terry: 'Music Education in France', British Journal of Music Education, ii (1985), 227–51

ELISABETH LEBEAU/JAMES R. BRISCOE

La Vigne, Nicolas Martin de. See DEROSIERS, NICOLAS.

Lavín, Carlos (b Santiago, 10 Aug 1883; d Barcelona, 27 Aug 1962). Chilean composer and ethnomusicologist. He studied music in Valparaiso and Santiago, but most of his early education was acquired independently. A Chilean government scholarship enabled him to study with Pénau and Caplet in Paris and with Hornbostel at Berlin University (1922–34), during which period he visited folk-music archives and institutes in Spain, France, Germany, Romania and Greece. His interest in folk music, that of the Araucanian Indians, had been stimulated largely by the achievements of Felix de Augusta, and he had begun fieldwork in 1907. After his return from Europe he was on the research staff of the institute of folklore at the University of Chile (1945–8) and he directed the folk-music archive of the Institute for Musical Research (1948–60). He published essays on indigenous music and other musical subjects, and he contributed entries on Spanish American musicians to the Riemann Musik Lexikon (Mainz, 1959).

WORKS
(selective list)

La encantada (ballet), 1925; Cadencias tehuelches, vn, pf, 1926; Lamentaciones huilliches, A, orch, 1926; Suite andine, pf, 1926; Las misiones, pf, 1930; Fiesta araucana, orch, 1932; Danza blanca (ballet), 1936; film scores

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Salas: La creación musical en Chile, 1900–1951 (Santiago, 1951)
J. Urrutia-Blondel: 'Carlos Lavin compositor', RMC, no.99 (1967), 61–84
I. Vásquez de Acuña: 'Evocación de don Carlos Lavín', RMC, no.162 (1984), 125–31

JUAN A. ORREGO-SALAS/LUIS MERINO

La Violette, Wesley (b St James, MN, 4 Jan 1894; d Escondido, CA, 29 July 1978). American composer. He was brought up in Spokane, Washington, and graduated in 1917 from the Northwestern University School of Music. After serving with the US Army in France during World War I, he attended the Chicago Musical College (DMus 1925), where he was eventually appointed dean. From 1933 to 1940 he taught at De Paul University, Chicago, and also served as director of De Paul University Press, established for the publication of American music. During this period he was president of the Chicago section of the ISCM and was active in organizing the first Yaddo Festival. Subsequently he settled in southern California and taught both privately and at the Los Angeles Conservatory; he also lectured on philosophy, religion and the arts. La Violette is the author of Music and its Makers (Chicago, 1938) and wrote several books on religious mysticism, one of which, The Crown of Wisdom

(Los Angeles, 1949), was nominated for the Nobel Prize for Literature. Frequently atonal and often contrapuntal, as in the Second String Quartet, La Violette's music is nevertheless conservative and straightforward, with broad lines and marked rhythms. His mysticism is reflected most clearly in the vocal works, many of which are settings of his own texts.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Shylock (op, La Violette, after W. Shakespeare), 1929; Schubertiana (ballet), 1935; The Enlightened One (op, La Violette), 1955

Orch: Penetrella, str, 1928; Osiris, 1929; Vn Conc. no.1, 1929; Sym. no.1, 1936; Pf Conc., 1937; Vn Conc. no.2, 1938; Conc., str qt, orch, 1939; Sym. no.2 'Miniature or Tom Thumb', 1940; Music from the High Sierras, 1941; Sym., band, 1942

Chbr and solo inst: Str Qt no.1, 1926; Pf Qnt, 1927; Sonatina, 2 vn, pf, 1931; Str Qt no.2, 1933; Sonata, vn, pf, 1934; Str Qt no.3, 1936; Sonata, vn, pf, 1937; Sonata, fl, pf, 1941; Qnt, fl, str qt, 1943

Vocal and choral works, incl. The Road to Calvary (cant., La Violette), 1952; Song of the Angels (choral sym., La Violette), 1952

MSS in US-Wc

Principal publishers: De Paul UP, Delkas

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Anderson2
C.R. Reis: American Composers of Today (New York, 1930, enlarged 4/1947/R as Composers in America: Biographical Sketches)
B. Kremenliev: 'Wesley La Violette', Music of the West Magazine, vii/9 (1951–2), 9
F. Kelley: 'Prez among Doctors', Metronome, lxxii/9 (1956), 24 only

MICHAEL MECKNA

Lavista, Mario (b Mexico City, 3 April, 1943). Mexican composer. He began his formal studies in 1963 with Chávez (composition) and Halffter (analysis) at the National Conservatory. In 1967 he went to Paris, where he studied composition with Marie and also attended courses given by Xenakis and Pousseur. The following year he was a pupil of Stockhausen in Cologne and took part in the Darmstadt summer courses. He returned to Mexico in 1969 to teach composition at the National Conservatory and founded the group Quanta which specialized in improvisation. In 1972 he was invited to work at the electronic music laboratory of Japanese radio and television (NHK) in Tokyo, where his compositions included Contrapunto. He founded the journal Pauta – one of the most important music publications in Spanish – in 1982, and in 1987 he was appointed a member of the Academy of Arts in Mexico. Outside Mexico he has lectured, and been performed, widely, particularly in the USA, where Lacrymosa was given its première by the American Composers Orchestra in 1994. As a teacher of composition and analysis he has had a strong influence on recent generations of Mexican musicians.

Lavista's early works explore contemporary techniques, for example in Cluster or Kronos (for 15 alarm clocks). As his music has evolved, he has assimilated an eclectic range of influences to form an unmistakable style. Like Berio, he has explored new timbres from traditional instrument sources particularly in the use of wind multiphonics. In the dimensions of time and pitch space, Cage's strong influence has resulted in markedly static sonorities. The gradual transformation of such sonorous textures across a work's span is characteristic. Formal aspects of the music often derive too from literary sources – particularly epigrams, such as that inspired by Gulliver, which heads Lyhannh; and pictorial images, as in Jaula for prepared piano, a work triggered by 'musical' pictures by Arnaldo Cohen and Rufino Tamayo, whose Las músicas dormidas portrays two reclining figures whom Lavista has imagined dreaming his own music.

WORKS

Dramatic: Judea (film score, N. Echevarría), 1973, Los inocentes (incid music, W. Archibald), 1977; María Sabina (film score, Echevarría), 1978; Niño Fidencio (film score, Echevarría), 1982; Aura (op, 1, J. Tovar after C. Fuentes), 1988; Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz (film score, Echevarría), 1988

Vocal: Monólogo, B, fl, db, vib, 1966; 2 canciones (O.Paz), Mez, pf, 1966; Homenaje a Beckett (J.E. Pacheco), SATB, 1968; Hacia el comieinzo (O. Paz), 1984; 3 nocturnos (R. Bonifaz Nuño, O. Paz), Mez, orch, 1986; Ofrenda, a rec, 1986

Orch: 6 piezas, str, 1965; Continuo, 1971; Ficciones, 1980; Lyhannh, 1982; Aura, 1989 [from op]; Clepsidra, 1990; Lacrymosa, 1994

Chbr and solo: 5 piezas, str qt, 1965; Divertimento, fl, ob, cl, bn, hn, 5 wood blocks, 3 short wave radios, 1968; Diacronía, str qt, 1969; Game, fl ens, 1971; Diafonía, pf, perc, 1973; Diálogos, vn, pf, 1974; Antífona, fl, 2 bn, perc, 1974; Quotations, vc, pf, 1976; Trío, vn, vc, pf, 1976; Canto del alba, fl, 1979; Dusk, db, 1980; Cante, 2 gui, 1980; Nocturno, G-fl, 1981; Marsias, ob, wine glasses, 1982; Reflejos de la noche, str qt, 1984; Cuicani, fl, cl, 1985; Madrigal, cl, 1985; Vals, fl, cl, str qt, 1986; Responsorio in memoriam Rodolfo Halffter, bn, perc, 1988; Cuaderno de viaje, vc, 1989; El pífano, retrato de Manet, pic, 1989

Other: Kronos, 15 alarm clocks, 1969; Espaces trop habités, tape, 1969; Alme, synth, 1971; Contrapunto, synth, 1972; Talea, music box, 1976; Pieza para caja de música, music box, 1977; Lamento a la muerte de Raúl Lavista, amp b fl, 1981

Pf: Pieza para un pianista y un piano, 1970; Cluster, 1973; Pieza para dos pianistas y un piano, 1975; Jaula, prep pf (any number), 1976; Simurg, 1980; Nocturno, 1980; Correspondencias, 1983, collab. Muench

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L.J. Cortez, ed.: Mario Lavista, textos en torno a la música (Mexico City, 1988) [incl. writings by Lavista]
Y. Moreno: La composición en México en el siglo XX (Mexico City, 1994)

RICARDO MIRANDA-PÉREZ

La Volée, Jean de (fl 1663–88). French harpsichord player, violinist and composer. Some time after 1660 he travelled to England and was admitted as one of 'the King's French musicians' by a warrant of 23 July 1663, along with Nicolas Fleury and Claude Desgranges. In May 1673 he sought naturalisation as John Volett, probably as a defence against the Test Act, which prohibited Catholics and aliens from holding official positions at court and in government. His name appears in a list of violinists who performed in Crowne's Calisto (1675), and he was still in England during winter 1687/8, when he received a New Year's gift from Catherine of Braganza.

His surviving works are in the form of string trios for two trebles and bass. Two of the sources are fragmentary (GB-Lbl, Och), but a third (B-Bc) comprises complete parts for 41 pieces arranged in suites. The style is similar to trios by Grabu and Lebègue, with the upper parts crossing frequently, and there are some attractive dance movements, though many lack the harmonic sophistication of comparable works by Locke.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AshbeeR
E. Boswell: The Restoration Court Stage 1660–1702 (London, 1960)
A. Walkling: 'Masque and Politics at the Restoration Court: John Crowne's Calisto', EMc, xxiv (1996), 27–62

PETER LEECH

Lavolta. See VOLTA (i).

Lavotta, János (b Pusztafödémes, 5 July 1764; d Tállya, 11 Aug 1820). Hungarian composer and violinist. His title of nobility was 'izsépfalvi és kevelházi'. He was taught the violin by his father, János Lavotta sr, an official of the council of government at Pozsony (now Bratislava) and later at Buda. He attended secondary schools at Nagyszombat (Trnava) and Pozsony, and studied law at Pozsony and Pest. He continued his musical education in Pozsony with Bonaventura Sabodi, Ferenc Hossza, Joseph Zistler and the military bandmaster Glanz. After a short period of military service at Pozsony, Lavotta went to Vienna in 1784 for further musical studies, and in 1786 moved to Pest. From 1788 to 1791 he was an official of the council of government and in 1791–2 tutor to the sons of Count Károly Zichy. It was not until 1792 that Lavotta decided upon a musical career. In 1792–3 he conducted, as music director, the orchestra of the Hungarian Actors' Society in Pest and Buda. From about 1797 to 1799 he lived in Miskolc, and in 1802–4 in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca), where he was director of the theatre orchestra. From 1804 Lavotta led an unsettled life, wandering restlessly and seeking hospitality at the country houses of noblemen, although he had a music shop at Debrecen in 1816–17. While visiting his friend Fülep Eöri, a doctor in Tállya, he died, his health completely ruined by alcoholism.

Like János Bihari and Antal Csermák, Lavotta belonged to the generation of violin virtuosos and composers that was responsible for the creation of a new Hungarian national style, the classical verbunkos. Lavotta was the first member of the Hungarian upper class in that era to devote himself entirely to music, and he was also the first professional musician to be recognized as an equal by the upper class. As a composer he showed less refinement than Csermák, and lacked the powerful originality of Bihari. As well as displaying the new national style, his works also show the influence of the German and Polish music of his time. Apart from dances he composed various pieces of programme music, including Nobilium hungariae insurgentium nota insurrectionalis hungarica (1797), a suite in 18 movements. In this work Lavotta attempted for the first time to adapt the new Hungarian music to more advanced, cyclical forms. For these and similar attempts to combine the melodic and formal resources of eastern and western Europe Lavotta's contemporaries extolled him as a cultivated innovator, in contrast to Bihari, who was the instinctive, unrefined gypsy. Only two series of his compositions appeared in print during his lifetime, Ungarische Werbungs Tänze for two violins and bass (Vienna, 1810), and Verbunkós nóták oder Aecht ungarische National-Tänze for piano (Vienna, 1814). Shortly after his death some of his verbunkos dances were published in various collections, such as Magyar nóták Veszprém vármegyéből ('Hungarian dances from County Veszprém', vols.1 and 4), edited by Ruzitska (Vienna, 1822–4), Nemzeti Magyar tántzok ('Hungarian national dances'), edited by A. Mohaupt (Pest, 1823–4), Pannonien oder auserlesene Sammlung ungarischer Tänze, vol.2, and Flora oder vaterländische Tänze aus Ungarn älterer und neuerer Zeit, vols.1 and 2, edited by G. Mátray (Vienna, 1826, 1829). His manuscripts, consisting chiefly of verbunkos dances, German dances, minuets, contredanses and polonaises, are in the music collection of the National Széchényi Library in Budapest (H-Bn).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Bernáth: A' bájoló hegedűs, vagy is A' híres virtuosus 's diletant hegedűs Lavotta János életének leirása [The magic violinist, or A biography of the famous virtuoso and dilettante violinist Lavotta] (MS, 1818, H-Bn)
G. Bernáth: Lavotta élete [Lavotta's life] (Pest, 1857)
M. Markó: Emlékkönyv izsépfalvi és kevelházi Lavotta János halálának századik évfordulójára [Memorial album for the 100th anniversary of the death of Lavotta] (Budapest, 1920)
S. Szilágyi: Lavotta János (Budapest, 1930) [incl. list of Lavotta's MSS in H-Bn]
B. Szabolcsi: A XIX. század magyar romantikus zenéje [Hungarian Romantic music of the 19th century] (Budapest, 1951)
E. Major and I. Szelényi: A magyar zongoramuzsika 100 éve [100 years of Hungarian piano music] (Budapest, 1956)
B. Szabolcsi and F.Bónis: Magyar táncok Haydn korából [Hungarian dances from the time of Haydn] (Budapest, 1959, 2/1977)
E. Major: Fejezetek a magyar zene történetéből [Chapters from the history of Hungarian music] (Budapest, 1967)
G. Papp: 'Die Quellen der "Verbunkos-Musik"', SM, xxi (1979), 151–217; xxiv (1982), 35–97
I. Mona: Magyar zeneműkiadók és tevékenységük 1774–1867 [Hungarian music publishers and their activity 1774–1867] (Budapest, 1989)
F. Bónis: Ungarische Tänze (Vienna, 1993)

FERENC BÓNIS

La Voye-Mignot, de (d 1684). French mathematician and theorist. His first name is not known. He was admitted as a junior member to the French scientific academy in 1666 and is known to have written on the disciplines of geometry and zoology as well as on music. His Traité de musique (Paris, 1656, enlarged 2/1666; It. trans., 1659; Eng. trans., 1972) is a systematic, practical guide, principally for beginners, to the elements of music and of composition in both simple and figural counterpoint. The second edition is provided with an additional part, which deals in large measure with aesthetics in music and includes definitions of musical terms. The author shows interest in elements of style characteristic of music from Italy and England, both of which he claims to have visited. A manuscript allemande (D-Kl; concordance in S-Uu) attributed to 'la Voÿs' may be by him.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Carlez: 'Le traité de musique de La Voye-Mignot, théoricien du XVIIe siècle', La Semaine Musicale, x (9 March 1865), 1–4
Institut de France: index biographique des membres et correspondants de l'Académie des sciences (Paris, 1968), 322
H. Schneider: Die französische Kompositionslehre in der ersten Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts (Tutzing, 1972)
A. Cohen: Music in the French Royal Academy of Sciences (Princeton, 1981), 6–7
W. Seidel: 'Französische Musiktheorie im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert', Entstehung nationaler Traditionen: Frankreich, Geschichte der Musiktheorie, ix (Darmstadt, 1986), 95–100

ALBERT COHEN

Lavrangas, Dionyssios (b Argostolion, Kefallinia, 17 Oct 1860; d Razata, Kefallinia, 18 July 1941). Greek composer, conductor and teacher. Fascinated as a child by the performances of visiting Italian opera companies, he studied the violin with Nazaro (alias Lazaro) Serao and harmony with Gideon Olivieri and Tzanis-Metaxas. Accounts of his musical training have had to rely on his book T'apomnimonevmata mou ('My memoirs', *c*1940), which has since been proved inaccurate, especially in matters of dating. (For instance it avoids any reference to his birth date, which, from *c*1930, Lavrangas gave as 1864.) But it is thought that he left in around 1878 for Naples, where he studied privately with Mario Scarano (harmony and counterpoint) and Augusto Ross (piano), later attending the composition courses of Lauro Rossi and Paolo Serao at the S Pietro a Majella Conservatory. He then moved on to Paris, where he remained probably until the end of 1885. He reports having studied for three months with Delibes and later with Massenet at the Conservatoire. He also mentions private lessons with Dubois (harmony), Anthiome (piano) and Franck (organ). During this time he returned occasionally to Kefallinia to conduct and, when his studies were over, it was as a touring opera conductor that he made his living. In 1894 he settled in Athens as director (until about 1896) of the Philharmonic Society. There, together with the conductor Ludovicos Spinellis, he founded the Elleniko Melodrama (Greek Opera) company, which made its début with a performance of La bohème under Spinellis (1900). By 1935, when Lavrangas retired, the company had staged 13 Greek and 38 foreign (mainly Italian) operas in Athens, the provinces and abroad. Lavrangas was also active at the Athens Conservatory as a teacher of the piano, harmony and choral singing (1900–05), at the Piraeus League Conservatory (?*c*1905–10), at the Hellenic Conservatory as artistic director of the opera school (1919–24) and at the National Conservatory as a teacher of solfège and sight-reading (1926–34). In addition he became head of the music department of the publishing house of Fexis (*c*1900), and he wrote music criticism for Eleftheron vima and Ethnos in the 1920s. He was awarded the Golden Cross of King George and the National Award for Arts and Letters, both in 1919.

Lavrangas's work with the Elleniko Melodrama helped to establish opera in Greece, but he had less influence than Kalomiris on the development of Greek composition. His works make conservative use of folk elements, with a colourful orchestration, derived from Bizet and Delibes, which helps to compensate for the simplicity of harmony and development. In the operas he was substantially indebted to Massenet and other French composers, but he learnt from Italian opera his flowing melody, effective at moments of drama (e.g. the Puccinian touches at the conflagration scene of Dido) or comedy (e.g. the Rossinian Fakanapas). The revival, in 1992, of Act 1 of Dido suggests an acute and professional sense of stage timing. He took little care of his manuscripts, which are widely scattered; some works may have been destroyed during the 1953 earthquake in the Ionian Islands.

WORKS

(selective list)

OPERAS

Elda di Vorn (3, F. Guidi), ?1886, lost; Galatea (5, Guidi, after S. Vassiliadis), ?1887, lost; La vita è un sogno (4, E. Golisciani), *c*1890, lost; Ta dyo adelfia [The Two Brothers] (3 scenes, I. Tsakassianos, Lavrangas), 1899–1900, Athens, 24 April 1900, vocal score extant; Mayissa [Sorceress] [after La vita è un sogno: Act 4] (1, Lavrangas), 1901, Athens, 8 Oct 1901; O lytrotis [The Redeemer] (3, Z. Papantoniou), *c*1902, Corfu, 24 Feb 1934

Dido (4, P. Dimitrakopoulos), *c*1906, Athens, 10 April 1909; Mavri petalouda [Black Butterfly] (1, S. Sperantzas), 1923, Athens, 25 Jan 1929, vocal score extant; Aida, 1928 or before, lost [after Verdi]; Ikaros, 1930 or before; Ena paramythi [A Fairy Tale] (comic op, 3, D. Bogris), 1930, vocal score extant; Fakanapas (comic op, 2, Lavrangas, after Scribe), 1935, Athens, 2 Dec 1950; Frosso (3, Lavrangas), 1938, unperf.

OTHER DRAMATIC WORKS

I aspri tricha [The White Hair] (operetta, 3, N. Laskaris, H. Anninos), Athens, 22 March 1917, vocal score extant; Sporting Club (operetta, 3, Lavrangas, S. Vekiarellis), Athens, 4 Aug 1917, ?lost; Dipli fotia [Double Flame] (operetta, 3, Dimitrakopoulos), Athens, 10 Jan 1918, ?lost; To dachtylidi tou Pierrotou [Pierrot's Ring] (film score), Athens, 22 March 1918, lost; Apollon ke Dafni (ballet, 8 scenes), A. Doxas, 1920, New York, 1927, ?lost

Satore [retrograde of erotas = love] (operetta buffa/vaudeville, 3, Doxas), 1927, unperf., vocal score extant; O agapitikos tis voskopoulas [The Shepherdess's Lover], score for 1st Gk. sound film, Athens, 25 Jan 1932; Kapia nychta sti Sevilli [A Night in Seville] (ballet, 6 scenes), Doxas, 1933, ?lost; O tragoudistis tou kazinou [The Casino Singer] (operetta, 3, Doxas, Sylvio), Athens, 7 July 1934, collab. 9 others; Persefoni (ballet, Z. Papamichalopoulos), 1936, part of vocal score extant

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: 2 intermezzi lirici, G, D, str, hp, ?1885–7; Barcarolle, G, str, ?before 1900; Remvasmos [Rêverie], C, str, ?before 1900; Gk. Suite no.1, ?1903; Prelude, E♭, 1905; Romanesca, after 1913, ?lost; Canon, D, vn, vc, hp, str, 1919; Impressions religieuses, 1920; Capriccio sur deux thèmes grecs, vn, pf/orch, 1921; Gk. Suite no.2, 1922; Jota navarra, perf. 1923; Romanesca, intermezzo, d, 1924; Seguidilla, intermezzo, d, 1937; La vita è un sogno, suite, 1939 [from op]; Introduzione e fuga, c, n.d.; Ouverture orientale

Other inst: Nanourisma (La berceuse de ma fille), A modal, vn, pf, 1910 or 1911; Toccatina, Passepied, D, str qnt, 1913–14; Berceuse, vn, pf, perf. 1921, lost; Ispaniki serenata [Spanish Serenade], vn, pf, perf. 1921, lost; Sérénade grecque, G, vn, pf, 1937; Suite, D, str qnt, 1937 [movts. 1–2, 4 based on Canon, Menuet de l'éminence grise, Toccatina, Passepied]; Airs de ballet, pf; Nocturne, E modal, pf; Valse brillante, B♭, pf; Menuet de l'éminence grise, str qnt

VOCAL

Choral: Kritikos Ymnos [Hymn of Crete] (Polémis), 3-pt male chorus, pubd in Hestia (8 Nov 1887); O paedes Hellenon [Ye Children of Greece], 2vv, orch, 1889, doubtful authorship; O naftis tou Ioniou [Sailor of the Ionian Sea] (barcarolle, Mavroyenis), F (chorus, orch)/4-pt male chorus, 1889; Pentathlon (I. Polemis), T, B, male vv, orch, 1896; Kreesa [Cretan Woman], 2-pt chorus, pf, ?1898; Asmata tis Thias Liturgias [Chants of the Holy Liturgy], TTBB, 1913; Hymnos ton progonon [Hymn of the Ancestors] (G. Drossinis), unison vv, orch, perf. 1924, version for Bar, ?pf, perf. 1921; Hymnos tis Ellinikis Dimokratias [Hymn of the Hellenic Republic] (I. Polémis), vv, wind band, arr. 1v, pf, perf. 1924; Missa solemnis, D, S, T, B, chorus, org, orch, 1931

Songs (1v, pf): Pethaeno ya se [For Thee I Perish] (M. Avlihos), pubd in To Asty (Aug 1887); 3 hellenika tragoudia (Polémis, Papantoniou), ?before 1918; To traghoudhi tis Smyrnis [The Song of Smyrna] (A. Doxas), 1919; Exotica (Polémis); Ela na yiris [Come, lie down] (G. Tsokopoulos), 1921 or before; Dipli agapi [Double Love] (Polémis), Xypna [Wake Up] (A. Nikolaras); Fthinoporon [Autumn] (K. Hatzopoulos), perf. 1921; Pénthimoi skopoi [Mournful Tunes] (S. Sperantzas), perf. 1921; Elegion (Dimakopoulos), ?1921; Souroupo [Dusk] (K. Tsoukalas), 1930; Arapiki serenata (Lavrangas), 1938; [14] Hellinika tragoudia (Polémis, G. Avazos, G. Athanas, V. Messolonghitis) [incl. 2 nos. from Exotica]; Thymissi [Memory] (G. Markoras); Dyo bouboukia [Two Flower Buds] (M. Hieropoulos); Hymnos tis irinis [Hymn to Peace] (Palamas), A♭, S, pf/orch; Serenade, A; I lyra mou [My Lyre] (Anacréon); Thymissi [Remembrance] (Y. Markoras); Ta matia sou [Your Eyes] (D. Heliakopoulos)

Many other songs and choral pieces

MSS in Athens at Dionyssios Lavrangas Archive, National State Opera Library

Principal publishers: Fexis, Greek Ministry of Education, Konstantinidis, Union of Greek Composers

WRITINGS

Enchiridion harmonias [Harmony handbook] (Athens, 1903)

Stichia theoretikis ke praktikis anagnosseos ke diaeresseos tis moussikis [Rudiments of score-reading] (Athens, 1912)

Engolpion moussikis technis [Handbook of musical art] (Athens, 1937)

T'apomnimonevmata mou [My memoirs] (Athens, *c*1940)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I.A. Tsitselis: 'Lavrangas Dionyssios', Kefalliniaka symmikta, i (Athens, 1904), 285–7

G. Sklavos: 'Dionyssios Lavrangas', Pangefalliniakon imerologion, i (1937), 114–20

A. Hadziapostolou: Historia tou Hellinikou melodramatos (Athens, 1949)

S.A. Evanghelatos: Historia tou theatrou en Kefallinia 1600–1900 (diss., Athens U., 1970)
G. Leotsakos: 'I haménes ellinikés operes, i o afanismos tou moussikou mas politismou' [The lost Greek operas, or the destruction of our musical civilization], Epilogos '92 (Athens, 1992), 398–428, esp. 416–19
Y.E. Raftopoulos: Dionyssis Lavrangas, 1860–1941 (Athens, 1993)

GEORGE LEOTSAKOS

Lavrovskaya [Lawrowska], Yelizaveta Andreyevna (b Kashin, Tver′ province, 1/13 Oct 1845; d Petrograd, 4 Feb 1919). Russian mezzo-soprano. She studied at the St Petersburg Conservatory. In 1867 her performance in a student presentation of Gluck's Orfeo greatly impressed the Grand Duchess Yelena Pavlovna, who sent her to Paris to take lessons from Pauline Viardot. In 1868 she made her professional début in the contralto role of Vanya in Glinka's A Life for the Tsar, and later sang Ratmir in Ruslan and Lyudmila. This testifies to her considerable range of voice, for she was to sing Carmen, Mignon and many other mezzo-soprano roles (although she refused to sing the role of Laura in Dargomïzhsky's The Stone Guest for being 'not sufficiently singable'). She was also well known as a sensitive recitalist and concert singer, not only in Russia but also in western Europe; she sang at the Monday Popular Concerts at the Crystal Palace, London, in 1873 and at the Paris Exhibition in 1878. She was much admired by Balakirev, at whose Russian Musical Society and Free School concerts she regularly appeared, and she sang at the first concert given by Tchaikovsky in 1871. He dedicated to her his Six Romances op.27 (1875), and it was she who in 1877 suggested to him Pushkin's Yevgeny Onegin as a suitable subject for an opera. She made further appearances at the Mariinsky, St Petersburg (1889–90 season), as well as at the Bol′shoy, Moscow (1890–91 season). In 1888 she was appointed professor of singing at the Moscow Conservatory; Tchaikovsky considered her to be an 'excellent' teacher. In 1871 she married Prince Tsertelev.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V.A. Zhdanov and N.T.Zhegin, eds.: P.I. Chaikovskiy: perepiska s N.F. fon Mekk [Correspondence with N.F. von Meck], i: 1876–78(Moscow, 1934; Eng. trans., 1993)
B. Yagolim: 'Ye.A. Lavrovskaya: k 30-letiyu so dnya smerti' [On the 30th anniversary of her death], SovM (1949), no.3, p.76
V.A. Zhdanov, ed.: P.I. Chaikovskiy: pis′ma k blizkim (Moscow, 1955); Eng. trans. as Tchaikovsky: Letters to his Family, ed. P. Young (London, 1981)
V.A. Bagadurov: Ocherki po istorii vokal′noy pedagogiki [Essays on the history of vocal training] (Moscow, 1956)

EDWARD GARDEN

Lavrovsky, Leonid Mikhailovich (b St Petersburg, 6/18 June 1905; d Paris, 26 Nov 1967). Russian choreographer. See BALLET, §3(iii).

Lavry [Lavri], Marc (b Riga, 22 Dec 1903; d Haifa, 24 March 1967). Israeli composer and conductor of Latvian birth. He studied in Riga, at the Leipzig Conservatory, and privately with Scherchen and Glazunov. After working as an opera conductor in Saarbrücken (1926–8), he became the musical director and conductor of Rudolf von Laban's dance theatre in Berlin. He went on to conduct the Berliner SO (1929–32) and the Riga Opera (1932–4). In 1935, with the ascent of Nazism, he emigrated to Palestine. Between 1941 and 1947 he conducted the Palestine Folk Opera and Palestine Orchestra, and from 1950 to 1958 he was director of Kol Zion LaGola, an Israeli Radio Broadcast for the Diaspora. He settled in Haifa as an honorary citizen in 1962. As well as writing oratorios, chamber works and orchestral music, he composed many popular songs and incidental scores for theatre productions.

Like other emigrant composers in Israel, Lavry composed in a style influenced by his new surroundings. His symphonic poem Emek ('Valley', 1937), based on one of his most popular songs, is considered the first symphonic horra, a traditional dance characterized by short symmetrical phrases, simple harmonies and duple metre. Shir ha'shirim ('Song of Songs', 1940) features modal writing, horra patterns and melismatic passages. These compositional attributes are typical of Lavry's style, which became identified with Israeli music more generally during the 1940s. He believed that music should be communicative and thus relatively simple and comprehensible; musical compositions, he argued, should be dominated by melodies however complex. His opera Dan ha'shomer ('Dan the guard', 1945) was the first opera to be composed and produced in Israel. Max Brod's libretto tells the story of members of a Kibbutz who are both surrounded by the enemy and facing inner conflicts among themselves. The work combines Hassidic dances, Jewish prayer tunes and Israeli folksongs within a Romantic framework influenced by Puccini.

WORKS
(selective list)

Op: Dan ha'shomer [Dan the guard] (M. Brod), 1945, Tel-Aviv, 1945; Tamar and Judah (3, L.I. Newman), 1958, concert perf., Kol Israel 1959

Orch: Fantastische Suite, 1930; Emek [Valley], sym. poem, 1937; The Adventures of Benjamin III, 1938; Hora, 1939; Vn Conc., 1939; Stalingrad, sym. poem, 1943; Pf Conc. no.1, 1945; Sym. no.1 'Tragic', 1945; Israeli Dances, 1947; Kukiah [Cuckoo Bird], 1947; Pf Conc. no.2, 1947; Yerushalayim, sym. poem, 1953; Va Conc., 1953; Country Dances from Israel, 1954; Negev, sym. poem, 1954; Sym. no.4, 1957; Suite concertante, fl, va, hp, 1959; T'munot me'Yerushalayim [Pictures from Jerusalem], 1960; Fl Conc., 1965; Hp Conc., 1968

Choral: Shir ha'shirim [The Song of Songs] (orat, Brod), S, T, Bar, B, SATB, orch, 1940; Taschach [Liberation], solo vv, SATB, orch, 1951; Zichron Wine Song (A. Broides), solo vv, SATB, 1952; Avodat ha'kodesh [Sacred service], cantor, SATB, orch, 1954; Kitatenu ba'laila tzo'edet [Our Platoon Marches in the Night] (Broides), chorus, orch, 1956; Esther ha'malka [Queen Esther] (orat, H. Lavry), solo vv, 3 choruses, orch, 1959; Gideon (orat, H. Hefer), 1962; Al mordot ha'Carmel [The Slopes of Carmel] (Sh. Huppert), sym. poem, A, SATB, orch, 1963; Orit mesaperet [Orit Tells] (children's cant., M. Deshe)

Other vocal (for 1v, pf, unless otherwise stated): 7 Songs, 1937–48; Songs for Children, 1946; Chalamti chalom [I've Dreamed a Dream] (Sh. Shalom), 1949; Song of the Emek (R. Elias), 1v, orch, 1949; Kineret (A. Hameiri), 1949; Hora (R. Avinoam), 1952; Land of Carmel, 1962; Selected Songs, 1964

Chbr and solo inst: Jewish Suite, str qt, 1931; Al nahar'ot Bavel [On the Banks of Babylon], str, 1936; Hora, str qt, pf, 1939; 4 Pieces, vn, pf, 1950; 3 Jewish Dances, vn, pf, 1951; 5 Country Dances, pf, 1952; Israeliana I, pf, 1955; 3 Pieces, hp, 1959; Ima [Mother], A, hp, str, 1964

Principal publishers: Israeli Music Publications

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Gradenwitz: Music and Musicians in Israel (Tel-Aviv, 1959, rev. 2/1977)
Y. Cohen: 'Marc Lavry', Neimey Zmirot Israel [The heirs of the psalmist] (Tel-Aviv, 1990), 94–7
J. Hirschberg: Music in the Jewish Community of Palestine 1880–1948 (New York, 1995)

MIRI GERSTEL

Law, Andrew (b Milford, CT, 21 March 1749; d Cheshire, CT, 13 July 1821). American singing teacher and tune book compiler. He graduated from Rhode Island College (Brown University) in 1775 and was ordained as a Congregational minister in 1787. Active in music for half a century, Law was the most travelled American musician of his age, and the most prolific compiler of sacred music collections. At first he remained in New England, based at the family home in Cheshire, teaching singing schools and compiling tune books, which were printed by his brother William. From 1783 he travelled mostly outside New England, teaching from his tune books and hiring others to do the same, in an attempt to extend his influence southwards. In 1793, declaring a preference for more technically accomplished psalmody, he organized his publications into a comprehensive vocal method, The Art of Singing, and worked to promote this method in New England (to 1798) and Philadelphia (1798–1802). He then devised a staffless shape-notation (1803), issued tune books using it, and worked towards its acceptance mostly from Philadelphia, where he lived from 1806 until 1813. After 1813 he resumed his travels and continued to teach and publish until his death. A contentious, self-righteous Calvinist, Law received little financial benefit from the ascendancy of his reform views, partly because in his shape-note tune books he stubbornly refused to employ a staff.

WRITINGS

Select Harmony (Cheshire, CT, 1779, 2/1782–7)
The Rudiments of Music (Cheshire, CT,1783, 4/1793)
The Art of Singing (Cheshire, CT, 1794–6, 4/1810) [three-part work made up of The Musical Primer, The Christian Harmony and The Musical Magazine]
Harmonic Companion (Philadelphia, 1807, 4/1819)
Essays on Music (Philadelphia, 1814–21)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Lowens: Music and Musicians in Early America (New York, 1964), 58–88
R. Crawford: Andrew Law, American Psalmodist (Evanston, IL, 1968/R)

See also PSALMODY (ii), §II, 2 and SHAPE-NOTE HYMNODY.

RICHARD CRAWFORD/NYM COOKE

Lawes, Henry (b Dinton, Wilts., bap. 5 Jan 1596; d London, 21 Oct 1662). English composer and singer, elder brother of WILLIAM LAWES. He was the leading English songwriter of the mid-17th century.

1. LIFE. Lawes may have been a chorister at Salisbury Cathedral, where his father was a lay vicar. He was employed by John Egerton, Earl of Bridgewater, to teach his daughters music; this may have been as early as 1615 or possibly after 1622 (when John Attey seems still to have held the position). There is some evidence that he may also have been patronized by William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, whose house at Wilton was within a few miles of where Lawes was born. He was 'pistoler' of the Chapel Royal on 1 January 1626 and Gentleman on 3 November in the same year. His appointment as one of Charles I's musicians 'for the lutes and voices' dated from 6 January 1631.

In this capacity he must have taken part in various court masques of the 1630s. He may have written music for Thomas Carew's masque Coelum Britannicum (18 February 1634), but none survives. He did, however, collaborate with his brother William in providing songs for Davenant's masque The Triumph of the Prince d'Amour (23 February 1636), and may also have been involved in Aurelian Townshend's Masque for Lady Hatton (1 March 1636). He supplied extensive musical episodes for plays put on at Oxford on 29–30 August 1636 for the king's visit: William Strode's The Floating Island and William Cartwright's The Royal Slave.

Beyond the court Lawes was closely involved in the production of Milton's Comus, performed at Ludlow Castle on 29 September 1634 to mark the Earl of Bridgewater's appointment as Lord President of the Council of Wales. Lawes seems to have been responsible for approaching Milton to write the piece, and it was he who first published it in 1637. As music master to the earl's children, Lawes wrote the songs (mainly for himself, as the Guardian Spirit and the shepherd Thyrsis) and no doubt coached his charges in their parts, including Lady Alice Egerton as the Lady. Milton and Lawes probably also collaborated over Arcades, another family entertainment, possibly to celebrate the 75th birthday of the childrens' grandmother, Alice, dowager Countess of Derby, in May 1634.

In 1638 Lawes published settings of George Sandys's metrical psalms and ten years later Choice Psalmes. It was for the latter that Milton wrote his famous sonnet:

> [To my Friend Mr. Henry Lawes]
> Harry, whose tunefull and well measur'd song
> First taught our English Music how to span
> Words with just note and accent, not to scan
> With Midas eares, committing short and long.

During the Commonwealth Lawes was a much sought-after teacher 'for the Voyce or Viole'; among his pupils were Mary Harvey (Lady Dering) and the singer Mary Knight. Fashionable concerts were held at his house: the Duchess of Newcastle 'went with my Lord's brother to hear music in one Mr. Lawes his house, three or four times'. His circle seems to have included aristocrats and intellectuals, among them those associated with the poet Katherine Philips (the 'Matchless Orinda'), as well as pupils past and present. To the daughters of the old Earl of Bridgewater, he dedicated his first book of Ayres and Dialogues (1653), 'most of them being Composed when I was employed by Your ever Honour'd Parents to attend Your Ladishipp's Education in Musick'. The preface to this book condemns his fellow countrymen's predilection for foreign music and recounts the famous story of his setting of the list of contents of Cifra's Scherzi et arie (1614), which had been much acclaimed and hailed as 'a rare Italian Song'. In the preface to his Second Book of Ayres, and Dialogues (1655) he again mounted this hobby horse, complaining of the unthinking admiration with which Italian music was accepted in England (at, he felt, his own expense).

In 1656 Davenant's First Dayes Entertainment at Rutland House and The Siege of Rhodes were performed. A contemporary report of the former states that 'the first song was made by Hen: Lawes, ye other by Dr. Coleman who were the Composers'. For The Siege of Rhodes, which was a proper opera 'with the Story sung in Recitative Musick', Lawes wrote the vocal music for the first and last acts, the other composers being Cooke and Locke; all the music is lost. A third book of Ayres and Dialogues by Lawes appeared in 1658, and John Playford published 37 more songs posthumously in 1669, 'transcribed from his Originals, a short time before his Death, and with his free consent for me to Publish them, if occasion offer'd'.

At the Restoration Lawes was reinstated in both his old positions in the King's Musick and the Chapel Royal and was made, in addition, 'Composer in ye Private Musick for Lutes and Voices'; his anthem Zadok the priest was sung at the coronation on 23 April 1661. Later that year Pepys mentioned that Lawes 'lies very sick' (30 December), and he died the following October, naming 'Elianor my deare and loving wife' as executrix. He died on 21 October 1662 and was buried in Westminster Abbey four days later. Portraits of him include one dated 1622 in the South Canonry at Salisbury Cathedral, another (roughly 20 years later) in the Faculty of Music, Oxford (fig.1), and the engraving by Faithorne (made from the latter) published in his collection of 1653.

1. Henry Lawes: portrait by an unknown artist, c1642 (Faculty of Music, Oxford)

2. WORKS. Although he was primarily a songwriter, Lawes wrote a fair amount of sacred music. The 1638 psalms comprise 24 tunes in various metres to be fitted to Sandys's metrical versions of the psalms. Tuneful and dignified, some of them, for example those known as 'Whitehall' (Psalm viii), 'Falkland' (Psalm xii), 'Battle' (Psalm xxxi), 'Psalm 32' and 'Farley Castle' (Psalm 52), are still in use as hymn tunes. Although the Choice Psalmes (1648) also take their texts from Sandys, they are quite different in style. The idiom is that of vocal chamber music, with three voices in a pseudo-declamatory imitative style supported by basso continuo. The collection was intended as a memorial volume to Lawes's brother William, who was killed at the Siege of Chester in 1645; in addition to 30 of Henry's settings there are an equal number by his brother, some canons, and several elegies on William's death by other composers.

About two dozen anthems by Lawes are known, though only six survive complete (mainly in GB-Lbl Add.31434). The verse anthem My soul the great God's praises sing may be regarded as representative. Setting Carew's metrical version of Psalm civ, the solo verse sections adopt the declamatory style of Lawes's songs, while the full sections are mostly homophonic (and somewhat inexpertly handled). Its symphonies, though arranged for organ, are adapted from one of his brother's five-part consort ayres. Its inclusion in Select Psalmes of a new Translation, to be Sung in Verse and Chorus of Five Parts, with Symphonies of Violins, Organ, and Other Instruments, Novemb. 22. 1655 (published as a wordbook without music), shows that in essentials Lawes had anticipated the Restoration orchestral anthem well before 1660; indeed, the manuscript in which it appears (Lbl Add.31434) probably dates from the mid-1640s.

Lawes's known songs number 433. The most important printed sources are his three books of ayres and dialogues and the collections published by Playford between 1652 and 1669 (fig.2). The autograph songbook (GB-Lbl Add.53723, facs. in ES, iii, 1986) containing 325 songs is also very important. Although he may not have begun to compile it until after 1636 or so, it probably represents the output of 30 or more years up to 1650, arranged in roughly chronological order. In this manuscript there is clearly a gradual transition from the unsophisticated solemnity and rather stiff manner of the earlier songs to altogether freer settings with wonderfully flexible declamation and great subtlety and variety of feeling. These latter are the songs of Lawes's maturity and probably date from the years following his appointment as a musician to the king in 1631, when he came into contact with the circle of court poets. Among these he favoured most the exquisite Carew: there are 37 settings of his poems in the manuscript (concentrated mainly between ff.95*v* and 121), as well as 16 of Waller's, 14 of Herrick's and some of the most celebrated anthology pieces of Suckling and Lovelace. The last part of the manuscript is dominated by settings of the little-known poet Dr Henry Hughes, who seems to have belonged to the entourage of Queen Henrietta Maria in the early 1640s.

2. 'Sweet lovely nimph!', dialogue by Henry Lawes from 'Select Ayres and Dialogues' (1669⁵, vol.ii)

Some of Lawes's settings, such as that of Herrick's Bid me but live (MB, xxxiii), are simple strophic songs in triple time, enlivened by syncopations and hemiola rhythms. On the other hand Suckling's No, no, fair heretic (MB, xxxiii), though basically strophic, is set in the declamatory style. The music closely follows the argumentative nature of the verse, necessitating modification of detail in the second stanza to suit a different phraseology, but the final epigrammatic couplet of each stanza is in tuneful triple time, thus giving shape and point to the song as a whole. The essentially rhetorical nature of Lawes's declamation is well illustrated in the through-composed setting of Carew's When thou, poor excommunicate (MB, xxxiii). Vocal contour, rhythm, punctuation, phrasing and cadences are all perfectly adapted to the self-dramatizing manner of this type of poetry. Only rarely does Lawes attempt true recitative. Each of his published songbooks begins with one, but none is quite so effective as Lanier's Hero and Leander. His setting of Cartwright's 'Ariadne's Lament' ('Theseus! O Theseus, hark! but yet in vain'; in Ayres and Dialogues, 1653, and also in Lawes's autograph songbook) invites comparison but is much less charged with dramatic feeling. There is no sign of Monteverdi's influence, though he may well have provided the inspiration.

Early editions of Carew (1640), Waller (1645), Milton (1645), Suckling (1646) and Cartwright (1651) all advertised the fact that Lawes had set their songs, as did the titles of individual poems by Herrick and Lovelace. Burney suspected that such praise by poets for a composer could only mean that the music was in some way deficient and he duly found cause for censure. Even as to 'just note and accent' he pointed out certain faults, although a closer look at the particular instances he cites suggests that he was hasty as well as unsympathetic in his judgment. Undoubtedly sympathy is needed in approaching the songs of Lawes, for experience shows that details that look stiff and awkward on paper come vividly to life when properly performed. Indeed the decline in his reputation since his own day may be attributed to the fact that his songs became material for study and analysis rather than for performance. Any critical rehabilitation will therefore need to take into account the style required for their performance; there are signs that as this is done some former critical judgments will have to be reversed.

WORKS

Editions: Henry Lawes: 10 Ayres for Contralto (or Baritone) and Keyboard, ed. T. Dart, English Songs, i (London, 1956) [D]
English Songs 1625–1660, ed. I. Spink, MB, xxxiii (1971) [S]
all published in London

SACRED VOCAL

A Paraphrase upon the Psalmes of David: by G[eorge] S[andys]: set to New Tunes for Private Devotion, 1v, bc (1638)

Choice Psalmes put into Musick, 3vv, bc (1648[4]), 4 ed. C. Dearnley, The Treasury of English Church Music, iii (London, 1965)

25 anthems (all but 6 inc.), 4 ed. C. Bartlett, Three Psalms and a Carol (Wyton, Cambs., 1989)

SECULAR

for details of songs see Day and Murrie, Bickford Jorgens and Spink (forthcoming)

433 songs and dialogues, 1–3vv; Ayres and Dialogues ... First Booke (1653), 2 in D; The Second Book of Ayres, and Dialogues (1655), 4 in D; Ayres and Dialogues ... Third Booke (1658), 4 in D; in 1652[8], 1652[10], 1653[7], 1659[5], 1663[6], 1667[6], 1669[5]/R, 1673[4], 1678[4]; principal MS sources: F-Pn, GB-Eu, *Lbl (facs. in ES, iii, 1986), Ob, US-NYp; 27 in S

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDECM; SpinkES

E.J.Dent: Foundations of English Opera (Cambridge, 1928/R)

C.L.Day and E.B. Murrie: English Song Books, 1651–1702 (London, 1936/R)

W.McC. Evans: Henry Lawes, Musician and Friend of Poets (New York, 1941/R)

E.F. Hart: 'Introduction to Henry Lawes', ML, xxxii (1951), 217–25, 328–44

V. Duckles: 'English Song and the Challenge of Italian Monody', Words to Music, ed. V. Duckles and F.B. Zimmerman (Los Angeles, 1967), 3–42

R.J.McGrady: 'Henry Lawes and the Concept of "Just Note and Accent"', ML, l (1969), 86–102

P.J.Willetts: The Henry Lawes Manuscript (London, 1969) [GB-Lbl Add.53723]

I. Spink: Henry Lawes (Oxford, forthcoming)

IAN SPINK

Lawes, William (b Salisbury, bap. 1 May 1602; d Chester, 24 Sept 1645). English composer and musician, younger brother of HENRY LAWES. Another brother, John, was also a musician. William wrote copiously for voices and instruments, with facility equal to Henry's, whose fame lay mainly in vocal music, and with more versatility. An abiding claim to attention lies in his innovatory chamber works, especially those for viols or violins with continuo. He was equally the leading composer of dance, and of music for drama (including the masque), in the period 1630–45.

1. Life. 2. Works: introduction and sources. 3. Instrumental music. 4. Vocal and stage music. 5. Assessment.

1. LIFE. On attaining a position as lay vicar at Salisbury Cathedral in 1602, Thomas Lawes moved his young family to Sarum Close. His son William, six years younger than Henry, may have received his earliest education at the free school in the close, or even sung with his brothers as a chorister in the cathedral. A posthumous account by Thomas Fuller, a friend of Henry Lawes, reveals that William's talent was early recognized by Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford, who had him apprenticed to John Coprario. At the earl's Wiltshire estates nearby in Amesbury, Lawes could have encountered Alfonso Ferrabosco (ii), who was an honoured visitor. An unsubstantiated report by Henry Hatcher (1843) places William in the private music of Charles, Prince of Wales, before the age of 23, and states that the association continued after Charles became king in 1625. Records confirm no court post before 1635, when Lawes obtained a situation for the lute vacated by the death of John Laurence; still, such an appointment was unlikely without casual involvement in the day-to-day supply of music, perhaps from some courtier's retinue. After 1626 (the death of Coprario) and in the period before 1635, the activities of Lawes can only be guessed from musical sources. The Shirley Partbooks (see below) are a type of work required of a novice; undertaken by Lawes for provincial gentry, copying Jacobean fantasy repertory and adding new dances. In the footsteps of Henry (and John too, a singing-man at Westminster Abbey), William began by about 1630 to establish a reputation in the capital for performance on the new 12-course theorbo that led to the renown later recalled by poets. Early on he was friendly with, or influenced by, musicians of St Paul's Cathedral such as John Tomkins. His standing was high enough by 1633 for Bulstrode Whitelocke to select him in partnership with Simon Ives (afterwards a London wait) as composer for James Shirley's prestigious masque mounted by the Inns of Court to demonstrate loyalty to the crown, The Triumph of Peace (performed 1634). To the following decade can be assigned composition of all the brilliant chamber works, alongside a presiding involvement with court masques, and provision of play songs for the royal troupes in the theatres at Blackfriars and at the palaces, in chief at Whitehall's Cockpit-in-Court.

By 1639 court routine was interrupted, as the resort by royal authority to military measures obliged it to migrate erratically. At some point, perhaps soon after autumn 1642 when the king found in Oxford an alternative home to rebellious London, Lawes enlisted as a soldier; by then it became clear that the exchequer could no longer maintain manpower inessential to the war effort. He may have been present at the Siege of York in April–June 1644, the occasion of a casual round written for the royalist garrison at Cawood (the Archbishop of York's castle). He met his death in 1645 during the action around the Siege of Chester, where the king arrived on 23 September, possibly with Lawes in his entourage. A circumstantial account by Fuller reveals that in order to save him from exposure to shot Lawes had been appointed commissary in General Charles Gerrard's regiment of foot, based first in Oxford but active in Wales from May 1644. The ruse backfired when he joined a sortie led by Gerrard from the north of the city in the late afternoon of 24 September, which was halted by a counter-attack and subjected to murderous crossfire. Here, or in the neighbouring engagements that lasted until dusk, Lawes died. The king, engrossed by the loss of a kinsman in the action, found time to institute a special mourning for Lawes, whom he apparently honoured with the title 'Father of Musick'. The occasion was excuse for royalist poets to score political points, notoriously in a pun by Thomas Jordan: 'Will. Lawes was slain by such whose wills were laws'. Similar estimates of Lawes, varying in their appositeness, were published once the major action of the war was over: by Robert Herrick in Hesperides (1647–8), Robert Heath in Clarastella and John Tatham in Ostella (both 1650). The greatest tribute came by the publication of his three-part psalm settings, edited by his brother Henry who matched them with an equal quantity of his own. These Choice Psalmes (1648) contain commendatory verse by literati including Aurelian Townshend and James Harington, and occasioned the first publication of John Milton's celebrated sonnet extolling Henry Lawes: a magnanimous gesture from an opponent, to royal servants, in the highly charged atmosphere before the king's execution. The volume also included eight moving musical tributes from colleagues, including Simon Ives, John Jenkins, John Wilson and Henry himself. William left no known family. A rakish youthful portrait supposed to be of him (see illustration) was given to the Oxford Music School in the 18th century by Philip Hayes, professor of music. Other likenesses of the period have with equally meagre documentation been suggested as portrayals.

Portrait thought to be of William Lawes by an unknown artist, 2nd quarter of the 17th century (Faculty of Music, Oxford)

2. WORKS: INTRODUCTION AND SOURCES. Lawes's large output was disseminated solely by manuscript during his life. Choice Psalmes was the first publication made of any part, and consists of 30 three-part sacred vocal settings accompanied by figured bass, one elegy and ten sacred canons. Lawes ranked high among composers selected by John Playford (i) for his publications of popular airs after 1651; but among many genuine two-part dances there, simpler versions of movements from the esoteric chamber works may have misrepresented his achievements to the succeeding generation. A good selection of his secular vocal music, including popular arrangements into the form of glees of original single songs, also reached print from that date until 1678. The work that had brought him widest notice in his lifetime, The Royall Consort, circulated in accurate manuscript copies until 1680, at which point it finally succumbed to the decisive shift in fashion towards the italianate high Baroque. His other great collections fared less well, and were probably relegated by the time of the monarchy's restoration in 1660. An appreciation of his considerable output for the Caroline court of the 1630s is thus heavily dependent upon the autographs, which survive principally in the Oxford Music School collection (now in the Bodleian Library) to which they were possibly donated or bequeathed with prescience by Henry Lawes.

The chief of these are two holograph scores, GB-Ob Mus.Sch.B.2 and B.3, both bound in brown calf and stamped with the arms of Charles I after the manner of presentation volumes to royal musicians. (Matthew Locke's working score, GB-Lbl Add.17801, bears an identical stamp; so does the earlier set of books containing repertory of the Jacobean wind ensemble, now Cfm Mu 734, and an organ part for Copranio's violin works, Lbl R.M.24.k.3: as pointed out by Robert Ford in a private communication). The first book bears the initials W.L., the second H.L. In them Lawes scored suites of fantasies and dances for viols in four to six parts. The first volume contains in addition drafts of incidental music for court masques, rounds and canons, suites for two bass viols to the organ, a violin fantasy in D major, and a suite for two lutes; the second, pavans and fantasies for the 'Harpe Consorts', and the first six suites of the ten that form The Royall Consort, in the 'new version' revised for two violins, two bass viols and two theorbos. The other Music School autographs are: partbooks D.238–40, containing string parts for the violin fantasia-suites, the harpe consorts and the bass viol duets; D.229, harp and organ parts for these works and for the setts for viols in five and six parts. The British Library holds three distinct autographs: a sole surviving bass partbook for the viol consort works; the personal songbook; and the Shirley Partbooks, copied about 1626 and later for the Shirley family, baronets (later Earls Ferrers) of Staunton Harrold, Leicestershire: respectively GB-Lbl Add.17798, 31432, 40657–61. A set of three holograph partbooks for lyra viol consorts (Och 725–7) contains works by Lawes, Simon Ives and Robert Tailour. Contents of these are part-duplicated by one final known autograph partbook from a now incomplete set, also for three lyra viols: US-CA, Houghton Library MS Mus.70. For The Royall Consort, non-autograph partbooks in varying states of wholeness and accuracy abound, as to a lesser degree they do for the other major chamber works.

3. Instrumental music. Lawes was represented in the 20th century as a natural successor to the fantasy writers of the Jacobean age, composing abstract contrapuntal works for viols with organ continuo. His fantasies in five and six parts are indeed a highpoint of his output and of the genre, but are unusual in several ways. They were written mostly in the later 1630s, about a decade after the decease of all the major Jacobean writers, at a time when few of Lawes's senior contemporaries apart from John Jenkins still cultivated the forms. (Others yet alive like Martin Peerson and William Cranford of St Paul's are minor figures, even if by their experiments they offer precedents for the harmony and linear style of Lawes.) Lawes leads to the smaller-scale four-part fantasy of Matthew Locke only in that he prefigured the method of grouping fantasies into considered 'setts'. His practice was to place fantasies unsystematically with pavans and almans, the staider dances that had already entered the Jacobean contrapuntal repertory as 'grave music'. He also extended the role played by organ continuo, giving it a more independent part than before. He had no exact successor in the field of these larger-scale 'setts' (the term 'suite' appears to be anachronistic by about two decades), apart from John Hingeston, composer to the court of Oliver Cromwell, who may indeed have worked to similar ends: furnishing audience music for court entertainment. Lawes's mannerisms are extremer than those of any other writer before or after on several counts. He is set apart by a wilful angularity in his part-writing that flouts strict contrapuntal imitation, linked to an additional dissolution of polyphonic norms by free admittance of a discord created by irregularly resolved or even unresolved harmonic progression, or by dissonant auxiliary notes. These practices recur in the other genres he handled, and owe much to his training on lute and lyra viol. Another persistent trait is the early Baroque admittance of 6-3 chording as equally valid to 6-4, a practice discarded by the second half of the century. The general style leads directly on from the earlier Jacobean interest in the Italian mannerist madrigal, and its empirical theorizing, both found in Coprario. The clearest parallel, however unlikely as a direct influence, is the radical, even post-contrapuntal, part-writing developed by Monteverdi in the epoch-making five-part madrigals of his fourth book (1603), where inner voices of the fabric are subordinated to the chamber treble dialogue over a characterful bass line. Lawes when writing for instruments alone achieved comparable successes to these, in succinctness of dramatic effect and in the vivid expression of extreme emotional states. His fantasies expand the bounds of the form less by length than by increased sectionalism, by variety in mood and (to judge from surviving indications of practice) by tempo change; also a richness of incidental detail created through his idiomatic handling of instrumental writing. His flair for textures large or small so as to vary them through informal concertato interplay, without allowing either of the customarily paired treble parts to dominate, is masterly (ex.1). Little modified, this style re-emerges for late appearances of a form that as danced was obsolete by his adulthood, the pavan. His almans in six parts are in the same solid configuration; but those for five parts are lighter, and rescored from danced originals.

The violin works of 'trio sonata' structure stand at the like remove from the previous generation. These 'fantasia-suites', perhaps written around the time of his royal appointment, are patterned on the models pioneered for the court ensemble by Coprario: fantasies in two series for one and two violins, both accompanied by bass viol and a semi-independent polyphonic part for chamber organ (ex.2). The three-movement form is completed by

Ex.1 Consort Suite in G minor a 6, 1st movt 'Fantazy'

TREBLE VIOL 1
TREBLE VIOL 2
TENOR VIOL 1
TENOR VIOL 2
BASS VIOL 1
BASS VIOL 2

85

90

Ex.2 Fantasia–Suite no.7 in D minor, Fantasia

two aires (dances): an alman and galliard, capped by an extra 'close' or coda of no great substance. Lawes expanded on his master's practice, again hardly so much by sheer length as by imbuing every phrase with telling detail, and well-situated dissonance that, without distorting, emphasizes paragraphs of clear tonal direction. Unlike Coprario's suites, both series by Lawes observe a set key-order, sign of the growing feeling for tonality in the 1630s found also in the works of Jenkins. The irregular linear style takes its point of departure from Coprario but is more daring; it is paralleled less in the violin writing of the early Italian Baroque, if a pattern is sought for its vivid rhetoric, than in the solo vocal monody, such as that by Marco da Gagliano or Saracini (again implying no immediate borrowing).

The suites for two bass viols pay homage to the previous reign; they re-use dances of Ferrabosco (ii) in a keyboard short score, against which is set extravagant division writing, much as variations were extemporized. Lawes reset some of his own dances in this way, a mark of the rapid acceptance of his work in the later 1630s.

The music for lyra viols is close to the extemporized aspects of suite-formation, as it must initially have begun. Lawes often wrote in the scordatura HARP WAY tunings (ex.3 shows a saraband for solo lyra viol in the 'harp way sharp' tuning, defhf); for ensembles of three lyras, where sonorous fantasies after the example of Coprario and Ferrabosco are found, he preferred the very wide accord known as 'eights', with strings tuned in pairs of 4ths and 5ths (fhfhf, as unisons on adjacent strings were shown through stopped-fret position). The three instruments alternate at three different levels, alto–tenor–bass. Phraseology here is closer to popular dance-strains, as in the solo lyra viol music. The ensemble works show the same feeling for idiomatic writing that shines out in the least of the solo trifles, where occur early examples of repetition bass, which otherwise took long to attain the status of art music in England.

The rest of Lawes's output is more innovatory and has closer links to the violin's dance fashions, which dominated court music in his decade. The Royall Consort began as dance sequences in the so-called string quartet scoring (two treble, tenor and bass instruments with continuo), perhaps so written before Lawes's official connection with court, and comparable to similar sequences by Charles Coleman that are also datable to the early or mid-1630s. In this scoring, and with these writers rather than any other, the standard dance-order in Baroque suites in England seems to have begun. Lawes was possibly the leader in composing fluid alman–corant–saraband sequences, followed in a couple of instances by morrises, and preceded by the occasional pavan or pavan–alman: all regular and danceable. Probably originating as loose ordres in the keys D minor–D major, they lack a series title in autograph sources. He later expanded and regrouped these suites, at the same time rescoring them and adding others in more varied keys. This process was first appreciated by Lefkowitz (1960) who demonstrated with insight how sources are divided into 'old' and 'new' versions, and correlated the two scorings with the comments of Edward Lowe, professor of music at Oxford after the Restoration. Lowe attributed to the composer a dissatisfaction with the role of the tenor part: this is borne out in the altered scoring, which attests that Lawes reworked the tenor and bass parts into two equal basses that alternate the functions of the original tenor and basso seguente, 'because the Middle part could not bee performd with equall advantage to be heard as the trebles were' (in Lowe's phrase). Lawes then raised the level of the collection by adding some abstract pieces: two fantasies, to make full use of a potential six-part scoring available through the practice of doubling theorbos on the basso continuo line. Extra pavans were included, one of them in C major, which while nominally in the usual four real parts uniquely took the opportunity to expand into six-part divisions in its variation repeats (ex.4). The example of Lawes may have stimulated the appeal of this scoring (two trebles, two bass, continuo) in the two decades after the mid-1630s; but even at the beginning of the period a tendency was emerging to discard it for the underlying trio sonata scoring (two trebles, bass, continuo). The Royall Consort owed its longevity and acclaim, recorded with incredulity by Charles Burney, to the assurance with which its two-treble writing foreshadowed the future.

Dances in suite form (alman–corant–corant–saraband or alman–alman–corant–saraband) for a 'harpe consort' of violin, bass viol, harp (metal-strung Irish harp) and theorbo continuo occur in the composer's partbooks, added after the violin suites. With only a few precursors (possibly by Coprario) in one manuscript (GB-Och 5), they were fitted to the personnel of the court ensemble. As single dances some had wide popularity, which may reveal their origins: less in simplified adaptations from complex scorings, than in the expansion of aires for treble, bass or even song. Later, Lawes appended to them pavans and fantasies: these were not disseminated beyond the inner circle, but reveal his budding intentions to refit all his chamber suites at the same level of seriousness. For the pavans, there are fully written-out variation repeats found in the autographs.

The one surviving suite for two lutes is peripheral, in that the first piece is an accommodation of an alman by René Mesangeau, for single lute in one of the accords nouveaux, published first in Paris by Ballard (RISM 1638[7], p.22). To it Lawes simply added a contrepartie, perhaps as a tombeau for the originator (d 1638). Both parts to the two following corants, to which he put his name, seem to be his own work. For keyboard, most extant music consists of palpable arrangements from his more popular dances and symphonies. It has been assumed that Lawes's abilities did not extend so far as this medium. One alman however, setting a known masque tune by Orlando Gibbons, was copied by Benjamin Cosyn with an attribution to Lawes, as part of a keyboard alman–corant–saraband suite in F-Pc Rés.1185. As with Mesangeau, the practice implicates Lawes in person in the arrangement, since the associated saraband is clearly his own composition. One other suite, also possibly original in this form, was in its several versions popular long enough for inclusion in Musicks Hand-Maid (1663); constituent dances vary between sources. Called 'The Golden Grove' after its alman, it may refer to the Welsh seat of the Earl of Carbery, who preceded General Gerrard in the general command in Wales during the Civil War. If truly composed de suite by Lawes, as his string music shows him well capable, he was in advance of the times, since elsewhere in surviving sources this lead is not followed for about half a decade after his death.

Datings for the major works of the 1630s, as for all of Lawes's output, is tentative; but the indications from sources favour an order of Royall Consort (old version), setts for three lyras, violin works, 'harpe consorts', five-part viol setts, bass viol divisions and six-part viol setts, Royall Consort (new version) and additions to harp consorts.

4. VOCAL AND STAGE MUSIC. The declamatory solo songs by Lawes are overshadowed, in quantity and in a superior gift for representing a poem's rhetoric through 'just note and accent', by those of his brother Henry. Rather than try to compete, William may have preferred to set light 'ballads' for salon society in current dance styles, in either duple or triple metre, the sort of strains that often variegate his songs of declamatory form. His output is strongly weighted in this direction by many songs for plays and other unidentified entertainments. It is not possible fully to assess the output for vocal ensemble above three parts, either sacred or secular, since little is known. Defects in transmission here affect other pre-Civil War composers, including those like Henry Lawes who officially worked for the Chapel Royal. Fortunately, enough survives of William's self-confident work for the court masque of the time to make the musical part assessable, principally that for The Triumph of Peace (1634), as printed by Lefkowitz (1970). His and Henry's innovatory three-part through-composed psalm settings are in a distinct polyphonic idiom; with some advance in harmonic modernity, they work a vein of sacred song similar to examples (some with continuo) by Thomas Tomkins, Thomas Ford and Jenkins. Apart again are 12 'psalms to the common tunes', in verse anthem form. They employ up to three professional adult male voices in the verses, but devote the chorus passages, in strong contrast, to organ-accompanied Geneva tunes, presumably for unison rendition by congregation.

The solo songs are best represented in his own songbook which, like Henry's, appears to have begun as a retrospective collection – around the time 1638–9 in William's case. Work datable after 1641 is not represented within it; another marker is the series of seven contiguous Herrick settings, which probably dates from an association during Herrick's stay in London in 1640 (Henry's songbook carries a similar cluster). Some of the earlier stage work that Lawes copied is variant in its literary text. Possibly a sign of revision, it makes it harder to correlate with dated occasions for performance; whether for example the dialogue setting from Ben Jonson's The King's Entertainment at Welbeck (1633) is really the composer's earliest known commission is for that reason dubious. However songs and incidental music from 1634 up to the outbreak of war, for plays mounted at court by the King's Men and Queen Henrietta's Company, and for the chief court masques, were undoubtedly quick to follow the success of The Triumph of Peace. Lawes was associated with 'Beeston's Boys' from their beginning, a mysterious rival troupe formed in 1637 with royal complaisance. The following schedule is founded on suggestions by Lefkowitz, some dates being necessarily approximate:

1633	Ben Jonson, Entertainment at Welbeck
1634	John Fletcher, The Faithful Shepherdess (revived)
	William Davenant, Love and Honour (revived 1637)
	James Shirley, The Triumph Of Peace
1636	William Cartwright, The Royal Slave (Oxford production)
	Davenant, The Triumphs of the Prince d'Amour
	Jonson, Epicoene, or The Silent Woman (revival)
	Shirley, The Duke's Mistress
1637	Francis Beaumont, Fletcher, Cupid's Revenge (revival)
	Jasper Mayne, The City Match
	John Suckling, Aglaura (or second version, 1638)
1638	William Berkeley, The Lost Lady
	Davenant, Britannia triumphans
	Davenant, The Unfortunate Lovers
	John Ford, The Lady's Trial
	Suckling, The Goblins
1639	Fletcher, The Mad Lover (revival)
	Henry Glapthorne, Argalus and Parthenia
1639–40	William Cavendish (with Shirley), The Country Squire
	Suckling, The Tragedy of Brennoralt
1641	Richard Brome, A Jovial Crew
	John Denham, The Sophy
	Shirley, The Cardinal
undated	Thomas Middleton, The Widow (revival)
	Shirley, The Triumph of Beauty (school masque)

William's forthright, extrovert style has been adjudged more closely related to those of John Wilson and Nicholas Lanier (ii) than to the subtler melody of his brother, and the better suited to theatre taste. Some of his long-popular catches were also designed for the stage. This work bespeaks a sardonic temperament akin to Cavalier poets like Sir John Suckling, to whom working conditions brought him close, and whose quick wits were similarly not drawn to fine delineation of internal states of mind. He was however at home with deliberate large-scale tonal schemes, as found in his masque music, in a way that presages later entertainments and opera (see MASQUE, §4).

Though without a post in the Chapel Royal, William composed two anthems (now lost) for use there, one involving novel use of symphonies for cornetts and sackbuts. Of the other anthems of uncertain date, two had widespread cathedral use, including The Lord is my Light, long in the repertory owing to its measured and powerful declamation. The 'psalms to the common tunes' juxtapose high-church practice with low. Verses in florid continuo style are joined to simple choruses made up of hymn tunes intended for a Calvinist laity, both segments fitted to standard texts by Sternhold, Hopkins and others. It is possible that this unprecedented alloy of genres was evolved to allay the stresses of civil war siege, either in the Oxford garrison or elsewhere, as in York. The shorter, published three-part psalms too may have been promoted by wartime conditions. Most were written to the metrical verse paraphrases of George Sandys, published in 1636. Henry Lawes as editor drew attention to their origin in the king's service. This could imply use in the campaigning chapel from the year 1639 onwards, when a full complement of singers may have been unavailable. As a set, they pointedly harp on themes of the god of battles and the exile of Judah; they include much contorted writing. One penitential setting furthermore (Psalm vi; not Sandys) had its bizarre head-motif prominently quoted at the beginning of the last of Lawes's six-part viol suites to be written (*c*1641). With these psalms was printed an even more dissonant lament, for Lawes's friend John Tomkins (d 1638): Music, the master of thy art is dead (ex.5).

5. ASSESSMENT. The distinctive voice of Lawes is positioned in the early phase of the Baroque as squarely as Monteverdi, and represents the understanding at its fullest of the Italian seconda pratica among English composers in the reign of Charles I, up to 1642: the household musician George Jeffreys is the only other convert as total. The instrumental work of Lawes is notable as an advance on the practice of native Jacobean writers by the power and grace of its 'aire' or melodiousness, comparable in fluency to the otherwise very different John Jenkins. Lawes was paramount in assimilating (rather than just appreciating) all available influences, including French suite-form; this gives his instrumental works an importance that is no longer disputable. Still, the degree of upheaval to musical traditions in the mid-17th century, and the hesitations before a secure foundation was relaid after civil war, have made the place of Lawes, an unusually direct victim of extra-musical forces, as hard to establish as any composer of his time. His provision for masques is, for all its serviceability, as unrevivable in full as are the ephemeral entertainments to which it is tied. For instruments, his powerful chamber works were a culmination of court tastes in the early Stuart age, partly influenced from France by the vagary of dynastic marriage; the failure of the court left no obvious path open to successors. Large-scale fantasies, the stylized dances of variation division suites, fantasia-suites for violins, and lyra viol ensembles, outlasted him by little more than 15 years. He was more influential for the new bourgeois audience in what may have seemed to him slighter attainments: the metrical Choice Psalmes; the generality of his dances, both those from The Royall Consort (but not its grand pavans and fantasies) and the compilations made by Playford in print and by others in manuscript. His compositional practice, in its harmonic boldness and melodic abruptness, could not be ignored by contemporaries of rank, and seeded itself effectively in the common parlance – specifically in younger men like Matthew Locke and Christopher Gibbons, and thereafter more diffusely. Even a senior traditionalist colleague, John Jenkins, was affected in style and choice of forms. There is no direct evidence however that Henry Purcell paid note to the achievement of Lawes; to judge from scathing remarks in the preface to his Sonnata's (1683), he may even have deliberately slighted its preoccupation with mere dance forms, the mark of an era when Gallic influence was highest and the detour away from strict counterpoint most extreme. Even so it speaks highly for Lawes that without his direct or indirect example the harmonic profundity of later composers including Purcell, who turned the educated ear most decisively back to the disciplines of counterpoint, would have been inconceivable.

Ex.5 Music, the Master of thy Art

WORKS

Editions: The Rounds, Catches and Canons of England, ed. E.F. Rimbault (London, 1865) [R]

Masque of Comus (Milton), ed. F. Bridge (London, 1908/*R*1956) [B]

William Lawes: Select Consort Music, ed. M. Lefkowitz, MB, xxi (1963, 2/1971) [L]

Trois masques à la cour de Charles Ier d'Angleterre, ed. M. Lefkowitz (Paris, 1970) [M]

English Songs, 1625–1660, ed. I. Spink, MB, xxxiii (1971) [S]

Four Hundred Songs and Dances from the Stuart Masque, ed. A.J. Sabol (Providence, RI, 1978, enlarged 2/1982) [A]

British Library Manuscripts, Part II, English Song 1600–1675, 2nd ser., ii, ed. E.B. Jorgens (New York, 1986) [facs. of autograph songbook GB-Lbl Add.31432] [J]

For further source information see Lefkowitz, 1960

* – incl. autograph

† – incl. inc. copy

through-numbering of bowed-string works based on DoddI

INSTRUMENTAL CONSORT

The Royall Consort (nos.1–67), 'old version', 2 tr, t, b insts, bc (2 theorbos), GB-Ob; ed. D. Pinto (London, 1995): Setts nos.1–3, d, 4 movts (nos.10–13) Lbl; Setts nos.4–6, D, 2 movts (nos.26–7) Lbl; Sett no.7, a; Sett no.8, C; Sett no.9, F; Sett no.10, B♭

The Royall Consort (nos.1–67), 'new version', 2 vn, 2 b viols, bc (2 theorbos); ed. D. Pinto (London, 1995): Sett no.1, d, *Ob, Och, 6 movts (nos.2–7) Lbl; Sett no.2, d, Lbl, *Ob, Och, 2 movts (nos.11–12) W; Sett no.3, d, Lbl, *Ob, Och; Sett no.4, D, Lbl, *Ob,

Och; Sett no.5, D, Lbl, *Ob, Och; Sett no.6, D, *Ob, Och, 5 movts (nos.37–41) Lbl; Sett no.7, a, Lbl, Och; Sett no.8, C, Lbl, Och; Sett no.9, F, Lbl, Och; Sett no.10, B♭, Lbl, Och

Arr. tr, b: nos.54, 58, 61, 1655[5]; no.41, 1662[8]

Consort setts (nos.68–83), 2 tr, a/t, t, b viols, org, *GB-Lbl, *Ob, US-NH, F.B. Zimmerman's private collection, Philadelphia; ed. D. Pinto (London, 1979): Sett no.1, g, 2 movts (nos.68–9) GB-Ob, ed. in L, 1 movt (no.70), Ob [2 tr, t, b insts, seeOTHER INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE: Other suites]; Sett no.2, a, 1 movt (no.73), version in g, tr, b insts, Ob, US-NH [see alsoKEYBOARD, 'Mr Laws flat tune'], 1 movt ed. in L; Sett no.3, c, 1 movt (no.75), 2 tr, b insts), *GB-Lbl, W, 1 movt, d (no.76), 2 tr, t, b insts, Lbl, 1 movt (no.77, as sym. in anthem attrib. H. Lawes), tr, b insts, Lbl, 1 movt ed. in L, 1 movt ed. in [Arkwright] (1909–10); Sett no.4, F, 1 movt (no.79), 2 tr, ?2 b insts, G, D-Hs [2 tr, t, b insts, seeOTHER INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE: Other suites], ed. L. Ring (London, 1965); Sett no.5, C, 1 movt (no.83), 2 tr, b insts, *GB-Lbl, ed. H. Mönkemeyer (Wilhelmshaven, 1966)

Consort setts (nos.84–100), 2 tr, a/t, t, 2 b viols, org, *GB-Lbl, *Ob, Och, F.B. Zimmerman's private collection, Philadelphia; ed. D. Pinto (London, 1979): Sett no.1, g, 2 movts (nos.85–6) ed. A. Dolmetsch and P. Grainger (New York, 1944); Sett no.2, C, ed. H. Mönkemeyer (Wilhelmshaven, 1966); Sett no.3, F, ed. L. Ring (London, 1967); Sett no.4, B♭, 1 movt (no.96) ed. in L; Sett no.5, c, ed. in L

OTHER INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE

Setts for division viols (nos.101–7), 2 b viols, org: Sett no.1, g, *GB-Ob, ed. J. Richards (London, 1972); 2 movts (nos.101, 103), 2 tr, t, b insts, bc, Ob [seeOTHER INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE: Other suites], 1 movt (no.102), tr, b insts, Ob, 1655[5]

Sett no.2, C, *Ob; nos.104–5, 'Paven and Almane of Alfonso' Ferrabosco (ii), ed. in L; no.106 inc., no.107 resetting of Royall Consort no.33

Setts 'For the Violls' (nos.108–113), 2 tr, 2 b viols, *GB-Ob; ed. R. Taruskin (Ottawa, 1983); ed. R. Nicholson, William Lawes: Fantasies and Aires (London, 1985): Sett no.1, c, 1 movt (no.109) *Lbl, 1 movt (no.110), d, *Lbl; Sett no.2, C, 1 movt ed. in M

Fantasia-suites (nos.114–37), vn, b viol, org, GB-Lbl, *Ob, Och, L. Ring's private collection, Hexham, Northumberland; ed. in MB, lx (1991): Sett no.1, g, ed. in L; Sett no.2, G, 1 movt (no.118) 1655[5], 2 tr, ?2 b insts, D-Hs; Sett no.3, a; Sett no.4, C; Sett no.5, d, ed. C. Arnold (London, 1957); Sett no.6, D; Sett no.7, d, ed. in L; Sett no.8, D, ed. in Lefkowitz (1960)

Fantasia-suites (nos.138–61), 2 vn, b viol, org, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, *Ob, Och, L. Ring's private collection, Hexham, Northumberland: Sett no.1, g, ed. in L; Sett no.2, G, ed. G. Dodd (London, 1977); Sett no.3, a, 1 movt (no.144) ed. in M; Sett no.4, C, ed. G. Dodd (London, 1967); Sett no.5, d, ed. C. Arnold (London, 1957); Sett no.6, D, ed. in L; Sett no.7, d, ed. in L; Sett no.8, D, 1 movt (no.159) pr. in Meyer (1946)

Harpe consorts (nos.162–91), vn, b viol, harp, bc (theorbo), *GB-Ob: Sett no.1, g, Och, 1662[8], 1 movt (no.162) Mch, 2 movts (nos.162–3) 1651[6] [seeKEYBOARD], ed. in L; Sett no.2, g, Och; Sett no.3, G, Och, 3 movts (nos.170–71, 173) 1651[6] [seeKEYBOARD]; Sett no.4, d, Och, 1655[5], 1 movt (no.177), kbd, Och [see alsoSECULAR VOCAL: 'O my Clarissa', 2nd version], 1 movt ed. in Lefkowitz (1960); Sett no.5, D, Och, 1655[5]; Sett no.6, D, Och, 1 movt (no.182) 1655[5] [seeKEYBOARD]; no.187, G, Och; no.188, G (pavan), ed. in L; no.189, D, on pavan for harp by 'Cormacke' [McDermott], ed. in L; no.190, on 'Paven of Coprario', 2 b insts, ed. in L; no.190, d (fantasy)

Other suites, 2 tr, t, b insts, bc; ed. D. Pinto, William Lawes: The Royall Consort (old version) (London, 1995): Sett no.1, g (nos.101, 103, 338, 70, 339, 337), GB-Ob; 2 movts (nos.101, 103), 2 division b viols, org, Ob [see alsoKEYBOARD: Consort setts andINSTRUMENTAL CONSORT], 4 movts Lbl, 3 movts Och, 2 movts W; 3 movts ed. L. Ring (London, 1964)

Sett no.2, G (nos.79, 320, 80, 322–3), Ob, 2 movts Lbl, 1 movt Lbl, Ob, 2 movts D-Hs [seeINSTRUMENTAL CONSORT: Consort setts]

Airs in d (nos.78, 260, 264), GB-Lbl, Och [seeKEYBOARD]

Symphonies, mainly from masques The Triumph of Peace, 1634 [TP], The Triumphs of the Prince d'Amour, 1636 [TPA], Britannia triumphans, 1638 [BT]: all ed. in M: in C: no.200 (TP), GB-Lbl, *Ob, 1649[8], ed. in Dent (1928), ed. in A; no.201 (TP), Lbl, *Ob, 1666[4]; no.209 (BT), Lbl, *Ob, 1649[8]; no.210 (TP) probably by S. Ives, sources in Holman (1975–6), also Ob (attrib. Lawes), 1649[8]; no.215 (TPA), Lbl, *Ob, 1655[5], ed. in Dent (1928), ed. in A in c: no.231 (BT), *Ob, US-NH, 1655[5]; no.232 (from 'Deere, leave thy home': seeSECULAR VOCAL), GB-Lbl, *Ob, 1655[5]; no.239 (TPA), *Ob

in G: nos.311–12 (TPA), Och (tr, a, b insts), US-NH, 1655[5]

in g: no.343, GB-Lbl (tr, a, b insts), US-NH, 1651[6], ed. in B; no.345, GB-Lbl (tr, a, b insts), US-NH, 1651[6]

in a: no.380 (TP), GB-Lbl, *Ob, 1678[4]

Aires and dances, tr, b insts unless otherwise stated, GB-Lbl, Llp, Ob, Och, W, US-NH, 1651[6], 1655[5], 1662[8], 1666[4] (cittern), 1672[5], 1678[4]: in C: nos.200–15 [no.205, arr. as 'Come lovely Cloris': seeSECULAR VOCAL]; in c: nos.221–39; in D: nos.246–51; in d: nos.256–88; in e: nos.296–300; in F, nos.306–7; in G: nos.311–28; in g: nos.336–70 [no.346, arr. as 'Clorinda when I goe away': seeSECULAR VOCAL]; in a: nos.380–87; in B♭: nos.391–8

Fantasies, preludes, dances, 1–3 lyra viols (by tuning): Harpway sharp (defhf): nos.421–35, 441–51, A-ETgoëss, IRL-Dm, GB-HAdolmetsch, *Lbl, *US-NH, 1652[7]

Harpway flat (edfhf): nos.461–7, 471–81, A-ETgoëss, GB-HAdolmetsch, Lbl, Mp, R. Spencer's private collection, Woodford Green, Essex, 1661[4]

High harpway sharp (fdefh): nos.491, 496–9, IRL-Dm, GB-HAdolmetsch

High harpway flat (fedfh): nos.511–14, 521–7, HAdolmetsch, Mp, *US-CA, 1661[4]

Eights (fhfhf [A′–D–A–d–a–d′]): nos.541–6, 555–79, IRL-Dm, GB-HAdolmetsch, Mp, Ob, *Och, Chester, Cheshire Record Office, *US-CA, no.567 ed. in M, nos.568, 573 ed. in L

French set (efdef): no.591, R. Spencer's private collection, Woodford Green, Essex

(ffcdh): no.596, GB-Mp

KEYBOARD

all for virginals/harpsichord

Suite (based with variants on alman by O. Gibbons), a, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, Och, 1 movt in S.R. Lancelyn Green's private collection, Bebington, Wirral, Merseyside, 1 movt in 1651[6]; ed. in M, 1 movt ed. in MB, xx (1962)

Symphony, Saraband, a (nos.343, 345 in g: seeOTHER INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE: Aires and dances), US-NYp, 1663[7]

'The Golden Grove' alman and suite, a (nos.361–3 in g), GB-Och, Lbl, Llp, variant in 1663[7]; tr, b insts (nos.361–4), g, Ob, 1662[8]; cittern (nos.361–2), 1666[4]; 1 movt ed. in M

Saraband, a, Llp, Och, 1663[7]; (following 'Golden Grove', nos.361–2)

Country Dance, a, addn to 'Golden Grove', Och

'Mr Laws flat tune', g [cognate of no.73; seeINSTRUMENTAL CONSORT: Consort setts], US-NYp, ed. in CEKM, xliv (1982), variant for lyra viol, GB-Mp [see alsoSECULAR VOCAL: 'Corinna false!']

Alman, Corant (nos.162–3), g, with anon. Saraband, Ob [see Harpe Consort no.1]

Alman, Corant (nos.170–71), G, Llp, 1663[7] [see Harpe Consort no.3]

Saraband, G, 1663[7] (in suite with nos.170–71 from Harpe Consort no.3)

Alman (no.182 from Harpe Consort no.6), D, US-NYp

Jig (no.251), D, NYp; tr, b insts, 1662[8]

Symphonies, C (nos.200–01), Huntingdon, Cromwell Museum, GB-Lbl

Saraband (no.264), d, Ctc, Lbl, Och; 2 tr, t, b insts, Och; lute, R. Mathew: The Lutes Apology (1652); lyra, Cu; tr viol, The English Dancing Master, ed. J. Playford (1651): ascribed only in Ctc

Jigg, G (no.313), arr. B. Cosyn as 'Coranto', US-NYp; tr, b insts, GB-Och, 1655[5]; vn, The Dancing Master (4/1670) as 'The Lord Chamberlins Delight'
Coranto, g (no.339a, see OTHER INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE: Other suites), arr. B. Cosyn, US-NYp
Symphony, a (no.380), Huntingdon, Cromwell Museum
See also OTHER INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE: Harpe consorts

PLUCKED STRINGS

Suite: alman (arr. from R. Mesangeau, 1638[7]), 2 corantos, 2 lutes, *GB-Ob; ed. L. Sayce and C. Wilson (London, 1998)
Alman, 2 corantos, cittern (incl. no.396), 1666[4], see KEYBOARD: 'The Golden Grove' suite

SECULAR VOCAL

dramatic works and printed poetry collections containing songs are given in parentheses

A hall, a hall, to welcome our freind (J. Suckling: The Tragedy of Brennoralt, 1639), 3vv, *GB-Lbl
Ah cruell love (To Pansies) (R. Herrick: Hesperides, 1648), 1v, *Lbl
A health to the northerne lasse (Suckling: The Goblins, 1638), 3vv, *Lbl, US-NYp
A knot of good fellows, catch, 3vv, 1667[6]; M
All these lye howling (J. Fletcher: The Mad Lover, revived 1639), glee, 2vv, NYp
Amarilis, teare thy haire, 1v, *GB-Lbl, 1669[5] (adaptation, attrib. H. Lawes); ed. in Lefkowitz (1960)
And may your language be of force (W. Davenant: The Triumphs of the Prince d'Amour, 1636), madrigal, 3vv, chorus 4vv, *Ob; A, M
A pox on our gaoler (W. Cartwright: The Royal Slave, 1636), catch, 4vv, 1667[6]; R
A round, a round, boys (R. Brome: A Jovial Crew, 1641), catch, 3vv, 1667[6]
Aske me noe more where Jove bestowes (T. Carew), 1v, *Lbl, 1678[4]; ed. in Lefkowitz (1960)
Behold how this conjunction thrives (Davenant: The Triumphs of the Prince d'Amour, 1636), 1v, chorus 4vv, Eu (inc.), *Ob†; A, M
Beliza, shade your shining eyes, 1v, *Lbl
Be not proud, pretty one (Love's Affection), 1v, *Lbl, Ob (a 3), 1669[5] [also with text: I can love for an hour, Eu (inc.), Lbl, Ob (inc.)]
Bess black as a charcole, catch, 3vv, 1667[6]
Brisk clarett and sherry, catch, 3vv, *Ob (only incipit texted)
Britanocles the great and good appears (Davenant: Britannia triumphans, 1638), 5vv, *Ob; M
Call for the ale, catch, 4vv, Lbl, *Ob, 1652[10]; R
Can bewtye's spring admitt, 1v, *Lbl
Cease, warring thoughts (J. Shirley: The Triumph of Beautie, before 1645), madrigal, 3vv, Eu (inc.), *Ob†; ed. in Lefkowitz (1960)
Charon, O Charon, hear a wretch opprest (Charon and Amintor), dialogue, 2vv, 1669[5]; S
Charon, O gentle Charon, let me wooe thee (Charon and Phylomel), dialogue (Herrick: Hesperides, 1648), 2vv, *Lbl, Ob, 1652[8]
Clorinda, when I goe away ('Elizium': see OTHER INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE: Aires and dances), 1v, Ob†, US-NYp
Cloris, I wish that Envye were as just, 1v, *GB-Lbl
Come, Adonis, come away (J. Tatham: Ostella, 1650), 1v, US-NYp (2vv), 1659[5], 1678[4]; S
Come, Amarillis, now let us be merry, catch, 4vv, 1667[6]
Come away, see the dawning of the day (Shirley: The Triumph of Peace, 1634), ?4vv (?inc.), *GB-Ob; M
Come, Cloris, hye wee to the bower (H. Reynolds), 3vv (inc.), Eu (inc.), Ob (inc.)
Come follow me brave hearts, catch, 3vv, 1667[6]
Come, heavy hart, whose sighs thy sorrowes shew, dialogue, 2vv, *Lbl
Come, let us cast the dice (Shirley, or W. Cavendish: The Country Captain, 1640), catch, 3vv, Lbl, 1651[6]
Come, let us have a merry heart, catch, 3vv, 1667[6]
Come lovely Cloris, 3vv, 1672[5] [see also OTHER INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE: Aires and dances]
Come, my Daphne, come away (Strephon and Daphne) (Shirley: The Cardinal, 1641), dialogue, 2vv, *Lbl, 1652[8]
Come, my lads, catch, 6vv, *Ob (only incipit texted)
Come, quaffe apace this brisk Canary wine, catch, 3vv, 1652[10]
Com, shepherds, com, com away (Beaumont and Fletcher: The Faithful Shepherdess, 1607, revived 1634), 1v, US-NYp; ed. in Cutts (1963)
Come, take a carouse, 3vv, *GB-Lbl
Corinna false! it cannot be, 1v, 1678[4] [attrib. H. Lawes; see INSTRUMENTAL CONSORT: Consort setts, no.73]
Cupids wearie of the court, 1v, *Lbl, US-NYp, 1678[4]
Dainty fine aniseed water, catch, 3vv, 1652[10]
Damon, good morrowe, may the morning queene, ?3vv (?inc.), GB-Eu (inc.), Ob (inc.)
Deere, leave thy home and come with me (A Sonnet) (W. Herbert), madrigal, 4vv (inc.), Eu (inc.), *Ob†
Deerest, all faire is in your browne, 1v, *Lbl, US-NYp; M
Doris, see the am'rous flame, 1v, *GB-Lbl
Dost see how unregarded now (Sonnet) (Suckling: Fragmenta aurea, 1646), 1v, *Lbl
Drink tonight of the moonshine bright, catch, 3vv, Lcm, 1652[10]; R
Erly in the morne, 1v, *Lbl
Fair as unshaded light (To the Queene, entertained … by the Countesse of Anglesey) (Davenant: Madagascar, 1638), 1v, 1678[4]; ed. in Gibbs (1972)
Faith, be noe longer coy (A Motive to Love) (Wit's Interpreter, 1655), 1v, *Lbl, US-NYp, 1652[8], 1666[4] [as Fie, be no longer coy, for cittern, with text added]; S
Far well, faire sainct (On his mistress crossing the sea) (T. Cary, in R. Fanshawe: Il pastor fido, 1647), 1v, *GB-Lbl, 1678[4]
Feare not, deere love (Secresie Protested) (T. Carew, 1640), madrigal, 5vv (inc.), *Ob†
Fill, fill the bowele, glee, 2vv, US-NYp
Gather ye rosebuds while ye may (Herrick: Hesperides, 1648), 1v, *GB-Lbl, Ob, US-NYp, 1652[7], 1666[4] [for cittern, with text added]; S
Gather ye rosebuds while ye may (Herrick: Hesperides, 1648), 3vv, GB-Eu (inc.), Gu, Lbl, Ob (inc.), 1652[8] [arr. from preceding setting]; S
God of winds, when thou art growne brethles, 1v, *Lbl
Goe, bleeding hart, before thou die, madrigal, 3vv (inc.), *Ob
Good morrow unto her (Shirley), 3vv, Eu (inc.), Ob (inc.), US-NYp
Goose law'd with Goose for cousin Gander's land, catch, 3vv, 1652[10]; R
Had you but herd her sing, 1v, *GB-Lbl, 1678[4]
Hang sorrow and cast away care, catch, 3vv, Lbl, 1652[10]; R
Harke, harke, how in every grove (Cupid's Call) (Shirley, 1646), 1v, US-NYp
Harke, jolly lads, catch, 3vv, *GB-Ob (only incipit texted)
Hast you, nimphs, make hast away (Nimph and Shepherd), dialogue, 2vv, 1669[5]
Ha we to the other world, catch, 4vv, 1652[10]; R
Heark, faire one (R. Lovelace: Lucasta, 1649) (text only)
Hence, flatt'ring hopes, 1v, *Lbl
Hence, ye prophane, far hence away (Shirley: The Triumph of Peace, 1634), 1v, chorus 4vv, *Ob; ed. in Dent, A and M
Here's a jolly couple, 1v, US-NYp
He that will not love (Not to Love) (Herrick: Hesperides, 1648), 1v, *GB-Lbl, 1669[5]
I burne, and beg of you to quench or cool me (To the Dewes) (Herrick: Hesperides, 1648), 1v, *Lbl
I can love for an hour (Love's Flattery) (Wit's Interpreter, 1655), 1v, US-NYp, 1653[7]; S
I can love for an hour (Love's Flattery) (Wit's Interpreter, 1655), 1v, GB-Eu (inc.), Lbl, Ob (inc.) [music as Be not proud, pretty one]
I doe confesse, catch, 3vv, *Ob (only incipit texted)
If you a wrinkle on the sea have seene, 1v (inc.), *Lbl
If you will drink Canary, catch, 3vv, Lbl, *Ob, 1652[10]; R
I keepe my horse, I keepe my whore (The Cuttpurse Song) (T. Middleton: The Widow), 1v, US-NYp
Ile tell you of a matter, catch, 3vv, 1652[10]
I'm sick of love (To the Sycamore) (Herrick: Hesperides, 1648), 1v, *GB-Lbl, Ob
In envye of the night (Shirley: The Triumph of Peace, 1634), 1v, *Lbl, US-NYp; ed. in Lefkowitz (1960), A and M
It is folly to be jolly, catch, 3vv, 1658[5]
It tis hir voice, 1v, *GB-Lbl
I would the god of love would dye (Shirley, 1646), 1v, *Lbl
Lets cast away care, catch, 3vv, *Ob, 1651[6]; R
Listen near to the ground, catch, 3vv, 1658[5]
Love, I obey, shoot home thy dart, 1v, *Lbl, 1678[4]
Love is lost and gone astray, glee, 2vv, in J. Playford: A Brief Introduction to the Skill of Musick (London, 4/1662)
Lovers rejoice, your paines shall be rewarded (Beaumont and Fletcher: Cupid's Revenge, revived 1637), 1v, *Lbl
Love's a child and ought to be won with smyles (H. Glapthorne: Poems and Argalus and Parthenia, 1639), 1v, *Lbl, 1678[4]

Love throws more dangerous darts, 3vv (inc.), Eu (inc.), Ob (inc.)
May our three gods so long conjoyne (Davenant: The Triumphs of the Prince d'Amour, 1636), 4vv, *Ob; A, M
Music, the master of thy art is dead (On the memory of my friend, John Tomkins) (? W. Lawes), madrigal, 3vv, 1638, *Ob, 1648[4]
Never let a man take heavily, catch, 3vv, *Ob, 1652[10]; R
Noe, noe, faire heriticke (Suckling: Aglaura, 1638), 1v, US-NYp [also attrib. H. Lawes]; S
Now in the sad declenshion of thy time, 1v, *GB-Lbl
Now, my lads, now let's be merry (catch), 3vv, 1667[6]
Now that the spring hath fill'd our veins (W. Browne in Merry Drollery, 1661), glee, 2vv, Lbl, 1652[8]
Now the sun is fled downe, dialogue (Cartwright: The Royal Slave, 1636), 2vv, chorus 5vv, F-Pc, US-NYp [also attrib. H. Lawes]; S
O draw your curtaynes and apeere (Davenant: Love and Honour, 1634), lv, *GB-Lbl, US-NYp, 1678[4]; ed. in Gibbs (1972)
O let me still and silentt lye, 1v, NYp
O love, are all those arrowes gone, 1v, *GB-Lbl
O my Clarissa, thou cruel faire, 1v, Och, US-NYp, 1652[10], 1666[4] [for cittern, with text added]
O my Clarissa, thou cruel faire, 3vv, GB-Gu, Lbl, 1653[7]; ed. in M [version for harpe consort ed. in Lefkowitz (1960)]
On, on, compassion shall never enter heere, 1v, chorus 3vv, *Lbl
Orpheus, O Orpheus, gently touch thy Lesbian lyre (Trialogue between Alecto, Orpheus and Euridice), 3vv, *Lbl, 1678[4]
O tell me, Damon, canst thou prove (Wit's Interpreter, 1655), 1v, US-NYp, 1652[8] [probably by W. Webb]
O the fickle state of lovers (F. Quarles), glee, 2vv, GB-Ob, US-NYp, 1653[7] [also attrib. H. Lawes]
O thinke not Phoebe cause a cloud (Shirley, 1646), 1v, *GB-Lbl
Perfect and endles circles are, 1v, *Lbl, Llp
Pleasures, bewty, youth attend yee (Love in the Spring) (J. Ford: The Lady's Trial, 1638), 1v, *Lbl, US-NYp, 1669[5]; S
Renounce this humour and attend, 1v, NYp
Sacred love whose vertues power, dialogue, 2vv, NYp
See how Cawoods dragon looks, catch, 3vv, 1658[5]; R
See how in gathering of their may, catch, 3vv, GB-Lbl, 1652[10]
Singe, singe his praises that do keep our flocks (Fletcher: The Faithful Shepherdess, revived 1634), 3vv (inc.), Eu (inc.), Ob (inc.); ed. in Cutts (1963)
Sing out pent soules (Lovelace: Lucasta, 1649) (text only)
Soe well Britanocles o're seas doth raigne (Song of Galatea) (Davenant: Britannia triumphans, 1638), 1v, choruses 3, 5vv, *Ob; M
Some drink boy, some drink (Suckling: The Goblins, 1638), catch, 3vv, Lbl, *Ob, 1667[6]
Somnus, the 'umble god (J. Denham: The Sophy, 1641), 1v, US-NYp
Stand still and listen, catch, 3vv, *GB-Ob, 1652[10]
Stay, Phoebus, stay (Songe) (E. Waller), 1v, *GB-Lbl
Still to bee neate, still to bee dresst (B. Jonson: Epicoene, or The Silent Woman, 1609, revived 1636), 1v, US-NYp; ed. in Lefkowitz (1960)
Sullen care, why dost thou keepe, 1v, NYp
Suppose her fair, suppose I know itt, 1v, NYp, 1678[4] [also attrib. A. Coates]
Tell me noe more her eyes (H. Moody in Wit's Interpreter, 1655), 1v, *GB-Lbl, US-NYp, 1652[8]
That flame is born of earthly fire (Love's Constancy), 1v, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl, 1669[5]
The angry steed, the phyph and drum (Davenant: The Triumphs of the Prince d'Amour, 1636), 1v, chorus 4vv, *Ob; A, M
The balmes rich swet, the myrrhs sweet teares (Davenant: The Triumphs of the Prince d'Amour, 1636), 2vv, chorus 4vv, *Ob; A, M
The catts as other creatures doe, 3vv, *Lbl, US-NYp; M
The larke now leaves his wattry nest (Davenant), dialogue, 2vv, NYp; ed. in Gibbs (1972)
The pot, the pipe, the quart, the can, catch, 4vv, GB-Lbl, 1658[5]; R
There can bee noe glad man (Wit and Drollery, 1661), 1v, chorus 3vv, US-NYp
The wise men were but seven, catch, 3vv, GB-Lbl, 1652[10], 1666[4] [for cittern, with text added]; ed. in Lefkowitz (1960) and R
Thinke not I could absent myself this night (Shirley: The Triumph of Peace, 1634), 2vv, chorus 4vv, *GB-Ob; ed. in Dent (1928), A and M
Those lovers only hapye are, 1v, *Lbl
Though I am not Bachus preist, catch, 3vv, *Ob (only incipit texted)
Thou that excellest, 1v, Lbl, US-NYp
Tis no shame to yeild to beauty, 1v, chorus 3vv, NYp
Tis not, boy, thy amorous looke, dialogue, 2vv, *GB-Lbl
To bed, to bed (Davenant: Britannia triumphans, 1638), 5vv, *Ob; M
Tom, Ned and Jack, catch, 3vv, *Ob (only incipit texted)
To whome shall I complaine, 1v, *Lbl, US-NYp, 1678[4]; S
Upp, ladies, upp, prepare your taking faces (Cupid's Progress), 1v, *GB-Lbl, US-NYp, 1669[5]; M
Virgins, as I advise, forbeare, 1v, *GB-Lbl, 1678[4]
Vulcan, O vulcan, my love (Venus and Vulcan), dialogue, 2vv, 1653[7]
Warrs are our delight, catch, 6vv, Lbl, *Ob, 1652[10]; M
Wee shoe noe monstrous crockadell (J. Mayne: The City Match, 1637), 1v, US-NYp
What hoe, wee come to bee merry (Ford: The Lady's Trial, 1638), 3vv, *GB-Lbl
What if I die for love of thee, dialogue, 2vv, Lbl, Och, US-NH
What should my mistresse doe with haire (One that loved none but deformed women) (Shirley, ? intended for The Duke's Mistress, 1636), glee, 1v, chorus, 2vv, NYp
What softer sounds are these (Joy and Delight) (Jonson: Entertainment at Welbeck, 1633), dialogue, 2vv, *GB-Lbl
When by thy scorne foule murderess (The Apparition) (J. Donne, 1633), madrigal, 3vv (inc.), Eu (inc.), Ob (inc.)
When death shall snatch us from these kidds (Thirsis and Dorinda) (text: A. Marvell, 1681), dialogue, 2vv, Lbl
When each lynes a faithfull drinker, 3vv, *Lbl, US-NYp
When I by thy faire shape (Lovelace: Lucasta, 1649), 1v, NYp
Wher did you borrow that last sigh (W. Berkeley: The Lost Lady, 1638), 1v, *GB-Lbl, US-NYp
Wherefore do my sisters stay? (Shirley: The Triumph of Peace, 1634), madrigal, 1v, chorus 3vv, *GB-Ob, ed. in Dent (1928), A and M
Whieles I this standing lake swathed up with ewe (Justiciae Sacrum) (Cartwright, 1651), 1v, *Lbl
White though yee bee (On the Lillyes) (Herrick: Hesperides, 1648), 1v, *Lbl, 1669[5]
Whither goe yee?, catch, 3vv, *Ob
Why doe you dwell soe longe in clouds (Shirley: The Triumph of Peace, 1634), 3vv (inc.), Eu (inc.), Ob (inc.); ed. in Cutts (1963), Walls (1976) and M
Why move these princes of his traine so slow? (Davenant: Britannia triumphans, 1638), 1v, choruses 2, 4, 5vv, *Ob; M
Why should fond man be led about, 3vv (inc.), Eu (inc.), Ob (inc.)
Why should great bewty vertuous fame desire (Davenant), 1v, *Lbl, US-NYp, in H. Lawes: Second Book of Ayres and Dialogues, 1–3vv (London, 1655) ed. in Gibbs (1972) and S
Why soe pall and wan, fond lover (Suckling: Aglaura, 1637), 1v, Carlisle, Bishop Smith's Partbooks, US-NYp ed. in Lefkowitz (1960) and S
Wise nature that the dew of sleep prepares (Davenant: Britannia triumphans, 1638), 1v, chorus 3vv, *GB-Ob; M
Yee feinds and furies, come along (Davenant: The Unfortunate Lovers, 1638), 1v, *Lbl, 1678[4]; ed. in Gibbs (1972)
Your love, if vertuous, will shew forth (T. Jordan: A Royal Arbor, 1664) (text only)

SACRED VOCAL

anthems; full unless otherwise stated

All people that on earth doe dwell, verse, 3vv, GB-Och; ed. G. Dodd (London, 1970)
All yee tht feare him, praise the Lord, verse, 3vv, DRc, Och
Before the mountains were brought forth, Lbl, Ob (text only)
Behold how good and joyful a thing it is, 3vv, 1648[4]
Cast mee not, Lord, out from thy face, verse, 3vv, Och
Come sing the great Jehovah's praise, 3vv, Lbl, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Gloria Patri et Filio, 3vv, 1648[4]
Have mercy on us, Lord, verse, 3vv, Och; ed. G. Dodd (London, 1970)
How hath Jehovah's wrath, 3vv, Lbl, 1648[4]
How like a widow, 3vv, 1648[4]
How long wilt thou forget me, O Lord, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
I am weary of my groaning, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
In resurrectione, 3vv, 1648[4]
In the substraction of my yeares, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
I to thy wing for refuge fly, 3vv (inc.), *Ob
Judah in exile wanders, 3vv, 1648[4]
Let all in sweet accord clap hands, 3vv, Lbl, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Let God arise, verse, 1v, Lbl, Och, Y
Let God, the God of battell, rise, 3vv, Lbl, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Lord, as the hart imbost with heat, 3vv, Lbl, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Lord, in thy wrath reprove mee not, verse, 3vv, Och

Lord, thy deserved wrath asswage, 3vv, Lbl, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Memento, memento, Domine, 3vv, 1648[4]
My God, my rock, regard my cry, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
My God, O why hast thou forsook, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Ne irascaris, Domine, 3vv, 1648[4]
Oft from my early youth, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
O God, my God, wherefore doest thou forsake me, verse, 3vv, DRc, Och
O God, my strength and fortitude, verse, 3vv, Och
O Lord, consider my distresse, verse, 3vv, Och
O Lord, depart not now from mee, verse, 3vv, DRc, Och
O Lord, in yee is all my trust (The Lamentation), verse, 3vv, Och
O Lord, of whom I doe depend (Humble Suite of a Sinner), verse, 3vv, Och
O Lord, turne not away thy face (The Lamentation of a Sinner), verse, 3vv, Och
O sing unto the Lord a new song, 3vv, 1648[4]
Out of the horrour of the deep, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Praise the Lord enthron'd on high, 3vv, Lbl, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Sing to the king of kings, 3vv, Lbl, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
The Lord is my light, verse, 4vv, DRc, Lbl, Och, Y, W. Boyce, Cathedral Music (London, 1760–78), ii
They that go down into sea in ships, Y (inc.)
They who the Lord their fortresse make, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Thou mover of the rowling spheres, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
Thou that art inthron'd above, 3vv, 1648[4]
To thee I cry, Lord, hear my cries, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
To thee, O God, my God, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
To the God whom we adore, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
When man ffor sinne thy judgment feeles, verse, 1v, Lbl
Who is this that cometh out of the wildernesse, Lbl (text only)
Yee nations of the earth, 3vv, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]

canons

Gloria in excelsis Deo, 3vv, 1648[4]
Happy sons of Israel, 3vv, Lbl, *Ob†, 1648[4]
Jesus is harmonious, 3vv, Lbl, 1648[4]
Lord, thou hast been favourable, 3vv, Lbl, *Ob†, 1648[4]
Regi, regis, regum (2 versions), 4vv, *Ob, 1648[4]
Re, me, re, ut, sol, 3vv, *Ob
She weepeth sore in the night, 4vv, Lbl, Ob (inc.), 1648[4]
These salt rivers of mine eyes, 3vv, 1648[4]
Tis joy to see, 3vv, *Lbl, 1648[4]
Why weepst thou, Mary? 3vv, 1648[4]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDECM; BurneyH; DoddI; HawkinsH; MeyerECM; MeyerMS; SpinkES
T. Fuller: A History of the Worthies of England (London, 1662/R); ed. P.A. Nuttall (London, 1840/R)
A. Wood: Manuscript Notes on the Lives of English Musicians (MS, ?*c*1680,GB-Ob Wood D 19 [4]), f.83*v*
H. Hatcher and R. Benson: The History of Modern Wiltshire, vi: Old and New Sarum, ed. R.C. Hoare (London, 1843)
G.E.P. Arkwright: 'A Pavan by William Lawes', MA, i (1909–10), 108–18
E.J. Dent: Foundations of English Opera (Cambridge, 1928/R)
R. Erlebach: 'William Lawes and his String Music', PMA, lix (1932–3), 103–19
D.H. Robertson: Sarum Close (London, 1938, 2/1969)
W.McC. Evans: Henry Lawes, Musician and Friend of Poets (New York, 1941/R)
C.W. Hughes: 'John Gamble's Commonplace Book', ML, xxvi (1945), 215–29
V.H. Duckles: 'The Gamble Manuscript as a Source of Continuo Song in England', JAMS, i/2 (1948), 23–40
C. Arnold: 'Early Seventeenth-Century Keyboard Parts', ML, xxxiii (1952), 151–3
J.P. Cutts: 'British Museum Additional MS 31432: William Lawes' Writing for Theatre and Court', The Library, 5th ser., vii (1952), 225–34
V.H. Duckles: John Gamble's Commonplace Book: a Critical Edition of New York Public Library MS Drexel 4257 (diss., U. of California, Berkeley, 1953)
W.L. Woodfill: Musicians in English Society from Elizabeth to Charles I (Princeton, NJ, 1953/R)
M.C. Crum: 'Notes on the Texts of William Lawes' Songs in B.M. MS Add. 31432', The Library, 5th ser., ix (1954), 122–7
C. Arnold and M.Johnson: 'The English Fantasy Suite', PRMA, lxxxii (1955–6), 1–14
I. Spink: 'English Seventeenth-Century Dialogues', ML, xxxviii (1957), 155–63
J.P. Cutts: 'Seventeenth-Century Songs and Lyrics in Edinburgh University Library, Music MS Dc.1.69', MD, xiii (1959), 169–94
M. Lefkowitz: 'New Facts concerning William Lawes and the Court Masque', ML, xl (1959), 324–33
A.J. Sabol: Songs and Dances for the Stuart Masque (Providence, RI, 1959)
I. Spink: 'English Cavalier Songs, 1620–1660', PRMA, lxxxvi (1959–60), 61–78
M. Lefkowitz: William Lawes (London, 1960)
J.P. Cutts: 'William Lawes's Writing for the Theater and the Court', JAMS, xvi (1963), 243–53
R.J. McGrady: The English Solo Song from William Byrd to Henry Lawes (diss., U. of Manchester, 1963)
J.P. Cutts: 'Drexel Manuscript 4041', MD, xviii (1964), 151–202
M. Lefkowitz: 'The Longleat Papers of Bulstrode Whitelocke: New Light on Shirley's Triumph of Peace', JAMS, xviii (1965), 42–60
A.J. Sabol: 'New Documents on Shirley's Masque "The Triumph of Peace"', ML, xlvii (1966), 10–26
I. Spink: 'Sources of English Song, 1620–1660', MMA, i (1966), 117–36
M.C. Crum: 'Early Lists of the Oxford Music School Collection', ML, xlviii (1967), 23–34
P. le Huray: Music and the Reformation in England, 1549–1660 (London, 1967, 2/1978)
V. Duckles: 'The Music for the Lyrics in Early Seventeenth-Century English Drama: a Bibliography of the Primary Sources', Music in English Renaissance Drama, ed. J.H. Long (Lexington, KY, 1968), 117–60
C.D.S. Field: The English Consort Suite of the Seventeenth Century (diss., U. of Oxford, 1970)
M. Lefkowitz: Trois masques à la cour de Charles Ier d'Angleterre (Paris, 1970)
J.T. Johnson: The English Fantasia-Suite, ca. 1620–1660 (diss., U. of California, Berkeley, 1971)
H. Poulos: Giovanni Coperario and William Lawes: the Beginnings of Pre-Commonwealth Violin Music (diss., Indiana U., 1971)
B.A.R. Cooper: 'The Keyboard Suite in England before the Restoration', ML, liii (1972), 309–19
A.M. Gibbs: Sir William Davenant: the Shorter Poems and Songs from the Plays and Masques (London, 1972)
D. Pinto: 'William Lawes' Consort Suites for the Viols, and the Autograph Sources', Chelys, iv (1972), 11–16
P. Holman: 'The "Symphony"', Chelys, vi (1975–6), 10–24
P. Walls: 'New Light on Songs by William Lawes and John Wilson', ML, lvii (1976), 55–64
D. Pinto: 'William Lawes' Music for Viol Consort', EMc, vi (1978), 12–24
D. Buch: 'On the Authorship of William Lawes's Suite for Two Lutes', JLSA, xvi (1983), 12–14
D. Pinto: 'William Lawes at the Siege of York, 1644', MT, cxxvii (1986), 579–83
I. Woodfield: 'The First Earl of Sandwich, a Performance of William Lawes in Spain and the Origins of the Pardessus de Viole', Chelys, xiv (1985), 40–44
P. Holman: 'The Harp in Stuart England: New Light upon William Lawes's Harp Consorts', EMc, xv (1987), 188–203
L. Ring: 'The Harp for Lawes', EMc, xv (1987), 589–90
A. Ashbee: The Harmonious Musick of John Jenkins, i: The Fantasias for Viols (Surbiton, 1992)
P. Holman: Four and Twenty Fiddlers: the Violin at the English Court, 1540–1690 (Oxford, 1993)
D. Pinto: For the Violls: the Consort and Dance Music of William Lawes (London, 1995)
P. Walls: Music in the English Courtly Masque, 1604–1640 (Oxford, 1996)
A. Ashbee, ed.: William Lawes (1602–1645): Essays on his Life, Times and Work (Aldershot, 1998)

DAVID PINTO

Lawrence, Ashley (Macdonald) (b Hamilton, NZ, 5 June 1934; d Tokyo, 7 May 1990). British conductor of New Zealand birth. After graduating from Auckland University, he moved to London and studied at the RCM and with Rafael Kubelík, joining the conducting staff of the Royal Ballet in 1962. In association with the choreographer Kenneth MacMillan as director of ballet, Lawrence became music director for the ballet of the Deutsche Oper, Berlin, in 1967, and then for the Stuttgart Ballet at the Württembergisches Staatstheater in 1969. He returned to Britain two years later as principal conductor of the BBC Concert Orchestra (1971–89), and in 1972 became, in addition, principal conductor of the Royal Ballet (music director, 1973–89). He made a special study of the needs of musical performance in relation to dance; his experience in a wide repertory from light to symphonic music helped to set and maintain musical standards of unusual distinction in the dance performances he conducted at Covent Garden and elsewhere, notably in the major ballet scores by Stravinsky and Tchaikovsky, and in Mahler's Das Lied von der Erde. His regrettably few recordings include Britten's ballet The Prince of the Pagodas and works by Delius and Grainger.

NOËL GOODWIN

Lawrence, Gertrude [Klasen, Gertrud Alexandra Dagmar Lawrence] (b London, 4 July 1898; d New York, 6 Sept 1952). English actress, singer and dancer. She was a child performer in pantomime and musicals and from 1916 appeared in revue in London. She introduced 'Parisian Pierrot' by her lifelong friend Noël Coward in his revue London Calling (1923), and her New York début in the London show André Charlot's Revue of 1924 (in which she sang 'Limehouse Blues') brought her immediately to the attention of leading American songwriters; her first successful song was You were meant for me by Noble Sissle and Eubie Blake. George and Ira Gershwin wrote the musicals Oh, Kay! (1926, including 'Someone to Watch Over Me') and Treasure Girl (1928) for her. Lawrence also performed spoken drama in both England and the USA, notably Private Lives (1930) with Noël Coward, but in 1933 appeared on Broadway in Porter's Nymph Errant, her songs including the witty 'The Physician'. After a period divided between London and New York, she resumed her position as a leading Broadway musical actress when she appeared in Weill's Lady in the Dark (1940), which was written for her and included the sultry song 'The Saga of Jenny'. In 1950 she suggested to Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein II a musical adaptation of the film Anna and the King of Siam; the work that resulted, The King and I (1951), marked the climax of her career and was her last stage role.

Lawrence was a most distinguished, fervent, inexhaustible, and sophisticated actress: Atkinson described her as 'a unique phenomenon – a superb performer in any medium, exuberant, supple, and animated, a formidable craftsman in the arts of the stage'. According to Rodgers, despite a narrow vocal range and 'an unfortunate tendency to sing flat ... Gertrude had a distinctive quality all her own', and a 'style and feel for music [which] would compensate for her faulty pitch'. Lawrence made at least 13 recordings, wrote the autobiography A Star Danced (New York, 1945), and her life was the subject of the film Star! (1968).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Aldrich: Gertrude Lawrence as Mrs. A (New York, 1954)
B. Atkinson: Broadway (New York, 1970)
R. Rodgers: Musical Stages (New York, 1975), 270ff
S. Morley: A Bright Particular Star: A Biography of Gertrude Lawrence (London, 1981)
B. McClung: American Dreams: Analyzing Moss Hart, Ira Gershwin, and Kurt Weill's 'Lady in the Dark' (diss., U. of Rochester, Eastman School of Music, 1995)

DEANE L. ROOT

Lawrence, Marjorie (Florence) (b Dean's Marsh, nr Melbourne, 17 Feb 1909; d Little Rock, AR, 13 Jan 1979). Australian soprano, active in France and the USA. She studied in Paris and made her opera début at Monte Carlo in 1932 as Elisabeth in Tannhäuser. In 1933 she first appeared, as Ortrud, at the Paris Opéra, where, during the next three years, she sang Brünnhilde, Salome (Hérodiade), Rachel (La Juive), Aida, Donna Anna, Brunehild (Sigurd), Brangäne and Valentine. She made her Metropolitan début in New York as the Walküre Brünnhilde on 18 December 1935, continuing to appear there for six seasons, mostly in the Wagnerian repertory but also as the heroines of Alceste, Salome and Thaïs. (She later became a naturalized American.) Although she had polio in 1941, she resumed her career in 1943 in specially staged performances during which she was always seated. In 1946 she returned to Paris as Amneris. Lawrence possessed a large, vibrant and expressive voice. Her singing, though not always secure, gave pleasure because of its physical impact and distinctive sound. She left vivid examples of her art on disc, notably her Brünnhilde, Brunehild, Senta and Salome.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Lawrence: Interrupted Melody: the Story of my Life (New York, 1949)
J. Rockwell: Obituary, New York Times (15 Jan 1979)
W. Hogarth: 'Majorie Lawrence', Record Collector, xxxii (1987), 2–18

MAX DE SCHAUENSEE/ALAN BLYTH

Lawrowska, Yelizaveta Andreyevna. See LAVROVSKAYA, YELIZAVETA ANDREYEVNA.

Lawson, Colin (James) (b Saltburn-by-the-Sea, Yorks. (now Cleveland), 24 July 1949). English clarinettist. He was a pupil of Thea King before and during his university education at Oxford and Birmingham and at Aberdeen, where he gained a PhD (1976) in performance practice. Most of his performing activity has been on early clarinets with the Hanover Band, the English Concert and the London Classical Players, and guest soloist with many other period ensembles. He has toured widely in Europe, Canada and the USA as a concerto soloist. He researched and, in 1988, commissioned a basset clarinet to perform his restoration of the original text of Mozart's Clarinet Concerto. His research has also found a practical outcome in his many pioneering recordings of music for chalumeau and early clarinets, including Spohr's Clarinet Concerto no.1 and, on copies of Mühlfeld's original instruments, Brahms's sonatas. Combining performance with an academic career at Sheffield University, Lawson has written many articles on the early clarinet.

WRITINGS

The Chalumeau in Eighteenth-Century Music (Ann Arbor, 1981)
Mozart's Clarinet Concerto (Cambridge, 1996)
ed.: The Cambridge Companion to the Clarinet (Cambridge, 1995)

GEORGE PRATT

Law Wing-fai (b Haikou, Hainan, 29 July 1949). Hong Kong Chinese composer and teacher. Brought up in Macau and Hong Kong, Law studied composition with Hsu Tsang-houei at the Taiwan Normal University, graduating in 1972. He absorbed a wide variety of Western influences while studying with John Crawford at the University of California, Riverside (MA 1979). Returning to Hong Kong, he worked initially in the film industry before teaching composition at Lingnan College (1980–84); he subsequently became head of the composition department of the Hong Kong Academy of the Performing Arts. In 1995 he studied electronic and computer music at Stanford. Law's music has won numerous prizes and has been widely performed in major Asian cities.

Alone among Hong Kong composers of his generation, he stayed away from colonial musical life during his formative years and this resulted in the formation of a highly original, unpredictable style that strongly challenges the performer and shows a special sensitivity to instrumental colours. Pieces for chamber ensemble such as Dionysus Fantasia (1979) and Sun Soundic (1983) have been performed to great acclaim. The 1972 première of Silkworm marked the first successful attempt to apply avant-garde techniques to a Chinese instrument, in this case the pipa. An accomplished guitarist, Law has displayed his partiality to plucked strings in the prominence of the pipa in many of his works. In the late 1990s he was influenced strongly by the shapes and principles of Chinese calligraphy, reflected in pieces such as Visions Beyond (1996) and A Thousand Sweeps (1997).

WORKS

Dance dramas: Honglou Zui Yu, 1983; Song of the Good Earth, 1983; Sun and Moon (Fame and Love), 1985; Femme Fatale, 1987; Chinese Song of the Earth II, 1990; Homeland, 1990; Rouge, 1991; Suppressed Romance, 1991; Parting at River Yi, 1993

Incid music: Dragon Dance, 1980; The Emperor and the Nightingale, 1985; Synopsis, 1990

Orch: Qian [Bamboo Lot], 1977; When Clouds Rise, 1978; Rice Field Dance, 1979; Pipa Conc., 1986; Musica Concertata, 1987; Ov., 1989; Sphere Supreme, 1992; Phantasm, vc, orch, 1993; Praeludium, 2 ob, 2 hn, str, 1994; Visions Beyond, 1996; A Thousand Sweeps, pipa, orch, 1997

Chin. orch: Soundscapes, 1983; Perc Conc., 1986; Puck Ballade, 2 pipa, orch, 1990; Tang Capriccio, 1996

Chbr: Mulberry Grove Dance, fl, gui, 1975; Si Zhu Kou [A Link of Silk and Bamboo], fl, va, pf, 1978; Dionysus Fantasia, 3 fl, pf + cel, 2 perc, 1979; Sun Soundic, fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, tape, 1983; Sleeve Dance, 2 pf, perc, 1984; The Drunken Tai Bai, dizi, sheng, yangqin, zheng, 1985; Incense Offerings, xiao, erhu, pipa, zheng, 1986; Plus One, str qt, 1987; Caprice in G, vn, pf, 1988; Fantasia, hpd, gui, 1988; Kunk, 4 pf, 2 perc, 1989; Qian Si [Stretching Strands of Silk], pipa, str qt, 1994; Ink Spirit, pipa, str qt, 1995, arr. pipa, Chin. str orch, 1996; Season without a Name, fl, ob, cl, str qt, pf, 1996; Vortex, 2 pf, 1996

Solo inst: 3 Little Pieces with a Spiritual Touch, pf, 1972; Silkworm, pipa, 1972; Misty, pipa, 1974; Cantilena for One Finger, pipa, 1985; Intermezzo, gui, 1988; Toccata, mar, 1991; Of Butterflies and Frogs, pf, 1992; Shake 'n Roll, pipa, 1995; In One Stroke, pipa, 1996

Vocal: Neither out far nor in deep, A, cl, 1978; Garden Song, SATB, pf, 1982; Hope, children's choir, pf, 1991; Chou Si, 3 high vv, orch, Chin. orch, 1993; My Ambition, children's chorus, pf/orch, 1993; Yu Lin Ling [A Bell Ringing in Heavy Rain], SATB, pf, 1993; What is the Taste of Sorrow, A, vn, pf, 1994; Chou Nu Er, SATB, pf, 1996; When Mountains Roar, chorus, 4 Chin. insts, orch, 1997

Over 30 film and TV scores

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D.P.L. Law: 'Hong Kong', New Music in the Orient, ed. H. Ryker (Buren,1991), 225–48

B. Mittler: 'New Music from Hong Kong and Taiwan', CHIME, no.9 (1996), 4–44

W.C. Tsui, ed.: Hong Kong Composers' Guild Directory (Hong Kong, 1997), 169–74

HARRISON RYKER

Lay, François. See LAYS, FRANÇOIS.

Laye, Evelyn (b London, 10 July 1900; d London, 17 Feb 1996). English soprano. She first appeared as Nancy Ping in Mr Wu (Brighton, 1915) and made her London début at the Gaiety in The Beauty Spot (1918). In the 1920s she played the title roles in such shows as Die lustige Witwe (1923), Madame Pompadour (1924), Die Dollarprinzessin (1925), Betty in Mayfair (1926), Lilac Time (1928) and The New Moon (1929). The role of Sari Linden in Coward's Bitter Sweet was written for her and, although she did not create the role, she introduced it to Broadway to great acclaim in 1929. Her films included The Night is Young (1936), in which she introduced Romberg's 'When I Grow Too Old to Dream'. After touring for most of the 1940s and early 50s she returned to the West End in the long-running Wedding in Paris (1954), and was subsequently in Charlie Girl and Phil the Fluter (both 1969). She appeared as Mme Arnfeldt in Sondheim's A Little Night Music (1979) and was still appearing on stage as late as 1992. She was made a CBE in 1973 and wrote the autobiography Boo, to my Friends (London, 1958).

□

Layer [level, structural level] (Ger. Schicht). In Schenkerian analysis (see ANALYSIS, §II, 4–6), one of a set of polyphonic representations of a piece or movement in which only some of the piece's harmonic and contrapuntal content is given. Layers are hierarchical; each subsumes and elaborates upon the content of the preceeding one until the final layer – represented by the score of the piece itself – is arrived at. (For examples of layer analyses, see ANALYSIS, figs.17–20.)

The conceptual starting-point of a piece is its 'background' layer (Ger. Hintergrund); this is represented by the fundamental structure, or URSATZ , comprising a linear descent to the first note of the tonic triad (URLINIE) supported by the harmonic progression from the tonic to the dominant and back to the tonic (this is called the bass ARPEGGIATION). The layer whose representation most resembes the score of the piece itself, lacking only some detail, is called the 'foreground' (Ger. Vordergrund); this is usually the only layer before the score itself that shows the piece's rhythmic design and thus corresponds bar-for-bar with the piece. Between the background and the foreground lies the 'middleground' (Ger. Mittelgrund), made up of one or more layers. Schenker somtimes numbered these erste Schicht ('first [middleground] layer'), zweite Schicht etc., the number of middleground layers being dependent upon the complexity of the piece and the amount of analytical detail he wished to show.

The analytical process is a reductive one; that is, it begins with the surface of a piece and proceeds to the foreground, the middleground layers and ultimately the Ursatz. But since analysis was, for Schenker, essentially the reverse of composition, he presented and discussed the layers in reverse order of their derivation, beginning with the simple Ursatz and ending with remarks on the content of the piece itself. In explaining the content of a subsequent layer, it would then be necessary to illustrate with musical notation (and, usually, to describe also in words) the various methods of PROLONGATION used to achieve increasing harmonic and contrapuntal complexity. The number of prolongations increases as one approaches the foreground; for this reason the musical representation of the foreground layer and the accompanying verbal commentary (if present) are the longest. Most of Schenker's analyses end with some remarks on the piece itself, the layer beyond the foreground; Schenker called this the Ausführung (literally 'elaboration', but more accurately rendered as 'realization').

For very short pieces it is possible to align all the analytical layers vertically, so that the methods of prolongation needed to get from one to the next may be studied conveniently. For pieces of moderate length, however, it is more practical for the foreground layer to be presented as a separate graph.

WILLIAM DRABKIN

Layolle, Alamanne de [Aiolli, Alamanno] (b ?Lyons, *c*1521–5; d Florence, 19 Sept 1590). Italian composer and organist. He grew up in Lyons, where his father, the Florentine composer Francesco de Layolle, settled in 1521. A Lyonnaise document of 1551 calls him 'a player of instruments'. According to Fétis, he was named organist at St Nizier, Lyons, in the preface to his volume of four-voice Chansons et vaudevilles published by Gorlier in 1561 (now lost). (Plantin's catalogue states that the same volume contained pieces for four to six voices.)

In 1565 Layolle emigrated to Florence, where he followed a career as a performer (organist at the Badia Fiorentina, 1570–75) and teacher (among his pupils was the daughter of Benvenuto Cellini, who mentioned him in the celebrated Autobiography). He also seems to have been associated with the Florentine printing firms of Giunta and Marescotti, for frequent legal disputes among the three parties are recorded during the 1570s and 80s. He may have collaborated with the latter in producing the 1582 collection of three-voice madrigals 'by the most excellent authors of our times' since he is represented by more works than any other composer in the volume. These madrigals, three of which use texts previously set by his father, and a five-voice setting of the Benedictus are the only known vocal works by him. His most important surviving work is the Intavolatura di M. Alamanno Aiolli, a holograph volume (I-Fl 641) now much mutilated and reduced in content, discovered in 1961. This collection contains 16 keyboard arrangements (several incomplete) of some of the best-known works of the time, among them Janequin's La guerre and Lassus's Susanne un jour, as well as selections from the sixth intermedio of the comedy La pellegrina, presented in Florence in 1589. The arrangements are distinguished by Layolle's aptitude for inventing and developing new material that greatly enhances the original pieces in their new settings, and by his ability to write sensitively and idiomatically for the keyboard.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB

G. Tricou: 'Les deux Layolles et les organistes lyonnais du XVIe siècle', Mémoires de la Société littéraire, historique et archéologique de Lyon (1898), 229; repr. in Documents sur la musique a Lyon au XVI siecle (Lyons, 1899)

F.A. D'Accone: 'The Intavolatura di M. Alamanno Aiolli', MD, xx (1966), 151–74

F. Dobbins: Music in Renaissance Lyons (Oxford, 1992)

FRANK A. D'ACCONE

Layolle, Francesco de [Francesco dell'Aiolle, dell'Aiolli, dell'Ajolle, dell'Aiuola] (b Florence, 4 March 1492; d Lyons, *c*1540). Italian composer and organist. There was some confusion about his identity because Einstein suggested that there were two musicians with this name. Archival research, however, has confirmed that he was the first, and at that time the only, member of his family to become a professional musician. His musical career began shortly after his 13th birthday, when he was appointed a singer in the chapel of the Florentine church of the SS Annunziata. There he became acquainted with the organist and composer Bartolomeo degli Organi, from whom he eventually received private instruction. The master-pupil relationship was evidently a close one, and in later years he married Maddalena Arrighi, a younger sister-in-law of Bartolomeo. He was a friend of Andrea del Sarto, who in 1511 painted Layolle's portrait, together with his own and that of the architect Jacopo Sansovino, in a fresco depicting the journey of the Magi in the atrium of the SS Annunziata. Layolle remained in Florence until 1518. According to his pupil Benvenuto Cellini, he had by that time established a reputation as 'a fine organist and an excellent musician and composer'. In 1521 he settled in Lyons, where he lived until his death.

He also enjoyed the friendship of several Florentine men of letters, among them the poet Luigi Alamanni, who dedicated the sonnet Aiolle mio gentil cortese amico to him and spoke flatteringly of him in two other works (Egloga prima and Selve). The writer Antonio Brucioli introduced him, Alamanni and Zenobi Buondelmonte as interlocutors in one of his Dialoghi della morale philosophia (Venice, 1538, 2/1544). These men were among the principal figures in a group of Florentine republicans who unsuccessfully conspired to overthrow the Medici government in the spring of 1521. When the plot was discovered, Alamanni and Buondelmonte fled to Lyons, where Layolle gave them shelter. Although this and subsequent actions leave no doubt that Layolle's sympathies lay with the republicans, the records of the judicial proceedings, in which the conspirators were condemned in absentia, show that he was not directly involved in the plot.

In Lyons he was employed as the organist at the Florentine church of Notre Dame de Confort and also composed, collected and edited music for a few of the printing firms there. After a brief association with the bookseller Etienne Gueynard, marked by the publication in 1528 of the Contrapunctus seu figurata musica, he joined forces with JACQUES MODERNE. During the decade 1530–40 they worked in close collaboration; from the prefaces to the 1532 and 1540 editions of the Liber decem missarum it may be deduced that Layolle not only contributed to but also edited the various volumes of sacred music issued by Moderne. Possibly in the early 1530s Moderne also published the six volumes of his sacred works that are now lost. Their association continued until the composer's death, the date of which, although not documented, has generally been accepted as 1540, the last year in which new music of his appeared in dated publications of Moderne. Bibliographical evidence seems to confirm this date, for it was apparently in 1540 that Moderne issued Layolle's volume of the Cinquanta canzoni, which closes with a lament on the composer's death.

Layolle entered fully into the artistic and intellectual life of Lyons. Lionardo Strozzi, writing in 1534, spoke of often making music there with members of the Florentine community, among them Layolle. In 1537 the poet Eustorg de Beaulieu published a rondeau in praise of 'a beautiful garden on the Saône in Lyons belonging to maistre François Layola, a most expert musician and organist'. He was also a close friend of the banker Luigi Sostegni, who forwarded some of his compositions to Rome in 1538. In his letter of acknowledgment the poet Annibale Caro stated that they were well received.

Layolle cultivated all the principal forms of vocal polyphony current in his time. Although it would appear that he was primarily a composer of secular music, his church music must also have included the contents of the six lost volumes of motets, each of which (according to a contemporary catalogue of the Colombina Library, Seville) contained 12 works. Since at present only 11 of his extant motets can be assigned to these publications, some 61 remain lost. In addition there are three masses, one listed in the Colombina catalogue and two others mentioned by Zacconi in his Prattica di musica (Venice, 1592), which likewise seem not to have survived. Layolle apparently contributed more pieces to the Contrapunctus of 1528 than the three ascribed to him in the volume. Sutherland, on the basis of internal musical evidence, showed that all of its pieces are the work of one composer, most probably Layolle.

The extant sacred works illustrate his mastery of the most advanced techniques of his day and reveal that he was one of the first Italians to fuse successfully Italianate tonal-harmonic precepts with Franco-Flemish contrapuntal techniques. Missa 'Adieu mes amours', uses both parody and cantus firmus techniques: throughout the work only the first phrase of the chanson melody is used, employed as a tenor ostinato in various rhythmic patterns. Presentation of the entire melody is reserved for the last Agnus Dei, when in an expanded five-part texture, it is set out in the tenor beneath a freely composed canon for two altos. This mass also shares some thematic similarities with one of his motets, Libera me, Domine, which follows it in both editions of the Liber decem missarum. The parody technique is more fully exploited in Missa 'O salutaris hostia', where several voices of the polyphonic model are drawn upon simultaneously. Missa 'Ces fascheux sotz', composed between 1532 and 1540, is also a parody mass in which Gardane's two-part chanson is extensively reworked into a complex and spirited fantasy for four voices.

The variety of contrapuntal techniques and the beauty of the melodies and harmonies in the motets also confirm Layolle's place in the front rank of composers of his generation. It is possible that Layolle paraphrased a traditional melody in the first section of the lovely Christmas motet for four voices, Noe, noe, noe. The cantus firmus technique is prominent in Media vita and Salve, virgo singularis; in the four-voice Ave Maria an ostinato derived from the antiphon's first phrase, provides the basis of the structure. Canons are successfully interwoven into the fabric of Ave virgo sanctissima, Libera me, Domine and Congregati sunt. Another setting of Ave Maria is a three-part canon.

Apart from a few early works, the bulk of his secular Italian music survives in two collections, the Venticinque canzoni a cinque voci (1540) and the Cinquanta canzoni a quatro voci, published by Moderne. Entitled canzoni, these pieces are in fact madrigals. Their texts, drawn from a number of poets – among them, Petrarch (the most frequently represented), Alamanni, Machiavelli and the brothers Strozzi – are typical of those set by the earliest masters of the genre. They also display many of the general musical characteristics found in contemporary madrigals. Several of the four-voice canzoni were in fact published in some of Arcadelt's madrigal books; however, they were either omitted or ascribed correctly to Layolle in most later editions of the same volumes. One work, Lasciar il velo, was popular enough to be mentioned by Doni in his Dialogo della musica (Venice, 1554). It was also published in lute transcriptions by both Crema (1546) and Gintzler (1547), as well as in an ornamented vocal arrangement by Maffei (1562).

Two works in the collection of five-voice canzoni have French texts and are based on popular chansons. Another, Sì ch'io la vo seguire, makes use of a cantus firmus, unusual for madrigals of this period. The remaining works with French texts, published by Moderne in the first five volumes of Le parangon des chansons, display a diversity of styles. Notable among them are the canonic duo Les bourguignons, which celebrates the raising of the siege of Péronne in 1536, and Ce me semblent, written in the manner of the Parisian chanson made popular by Claudin.

WORKS

Edition: Music of the Florentine Renaissance: Francesco de Layolle, Collected Works, ed. F.A. D'Accone, CMM, xxxii/3–6 (1969–73) [D iii–vi]

SACRED

Missa 'Adieu mes amours', 4vv, D vi; Missa 'Ces fascheux sotz', 4vv, D vi (on Gardane's chanson); Missa 'O salutaris hostia', 4vv, D vi
7 penitential psalms, 4vv, D vi
35 motets (1 attrib.), 2–6vv, D v

SECULAR

Venticinque canzoni a cinque voci (Lyons, 1540) [includes 2 chansons], D iii
Cinquanta canzoni a quatro voci (Lyons, ?1540) [includes anon. lament], D iv
3 madrigals and 9 chansons in other collections, D iii

3 masses and *c*61 motets, lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EinsteinIM
G. Tricou: 'Les deux Layolles et les organistes lyonnais du XVIe siècle', Mémoires de la Société littéraire, historique et archéologique de Lyon (1898), 229
R. Gandolfi: 'Intorno al codice membranaceo . . . N.2440', RMI, xviii (1911), 537–49, esp. 540
H.E. Wooldridge: The Oxford History of Music, ii (London, 1932), 101
N. Bridgman: 'Giovanni Camillo Maffei et sa lettre sur le chant', RdM, xxxviii (1956), 3–34, esp. 22
C.W. Chapman: 'Printed Collections of Polyphonic Music Owned by Ferdinand Columbus', JAMS, xxi (1968), 34–84
D. Sutherland: Francesco de Layolle (1492–1540): Life and Secular Works (diss., U. of Michigan, 1968)
S.F. Pogue: Jacques Moderne, Lyons Music Printer of the Sixteenth Century (Geneva, 1969), 34
D. Crawford: 'Reflections on Some Masses from the Press of Moderne', MQ, lviii (1972), 82–91
D.A. Sutherland, ed.: The Lyons Contrapunctus (1528), RRMR, xxi–xxii (1976)
R.J. Agee: 'Ruberto Strozzi and the Early Madrigal', JAMS, xxxvi (1983), 1–17, esp. 9

FRANK A. D'ACCONE

Layriz [Layritz], Friedrich (Ludwig Christoph) (b Nemmersdorf, Franconia, 30 Jan 1808; d Unterschwaningen, Franconia, 18 March 1859). German theologian and hymnologist. He studied theology, philosophy and philology at the universities of Leipzig (PhD 1829) and Erlangen, where he joined the theology faculty in 1833. In 1837 he became rector of Merkendorf and in 1842 of St Georgen, near Bayreuth. In 1846, as the result of a fierce controversy with Elias Sittig on the subject of hymnological reform, he was forced to leave for Unterschwaningen.

Layriz was an important figure in the early stages of the 19th-century revival and reform of Lutheran liturgy and music. He campaigned with energetic persistence for the polyrhythmic rather than the isometric form of the chorale, and for a return to the old melodies and the original manner of singing them. Although the effect of his work was felt mainly in Bavaria, it also helped to prepare for Johannes Zahn's later hymnological research. He worked with similar zeal for the restoration of the original hymn texts and for a revival of the old Lutheran liturgy. His hymn collections include CXVII geistliche Melodien meist aus dem 16. und 17. Jahrhundert in ihren ursprünglichen Rhythmen (Erlangen, 1839, enlarged 2/1844–50, 3/1862), Kern des deutschen Kirchenlieds von Luther bis auf Gellert (Nördlingen, 1844) and CC Chorälen meist aus dem XVI. und XVII. Jahrhundert in ihren ursprünglichen Tönen und Rhythmen (Nördlingen, 1844, enlarged in four vols., 2/1849–53, 3/1854–5). Among his numerous writings in support of his theories are Offener Sendbrief an die protestantische Geistlichkeit Bayerns … in Betreff der Gesangbuchs-Reform (Bayreuth, 1843), which prompted the disagreement with Sittig, and Die Liturgie eines vollstimmigen Hauptgottesdienstes nach lutherischen Typus nebst Ratschlägen zu deren Wiederherstellung (Nördlingen, 1849), as well as several essays and reviews. A number of his hymn melodies may be found in Zahn, while some of his poetry also came into regular congregational use.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BlumeEK; ZahnM

Beleuchtung des offenen Schriftenwechsels zwischen den Herren DD. Sittig und Layriz in Betreff der Gesangbuchs-Reform (Ansbach, 1844)

E.S.F. Sittig: Offene Antwort auf den offenen Sendbrief des Herrn Dr. Fr. Layriz (Nuremberg, 1844)

S. Kümmerle: Encyklopädie der evangelischen Kirchenmusik (Gütersloh, 1888–95/R)

H.J. Moser: Die evangelische Kirchenmusik in Deutschland (Berlin, 1954), 238–9, 242, 298

FRANZ KRAUTWURST

Lays [Lai, Laïs, Lay], François (b Barthe-de-Nesthes, 14 Feb 1758; d Ingrande, Angers, 30 March 1831). French baritone. He learnt music as a theology student in the monastery of Guaraison, but before he was 20 his fame as a singer had spread, and by April 1779 he was in Paris. His name, spelt Laïs, first appears in the role of Petrarch in Candeille's Laure et Pétrarque, 2 July 1780. He is next mentioned in Piccinni's Iphigénie en Tauride, 23 January 1781. (Fétis's statement that the title role of Floquet's Seigneur bienfaisant was written in 1780 for Lays is not corroborated by Lajarte.) Lays sang at the Opéra until October 1823. He also appeared regularly at the concerts of Marie Antoinette and the Concert Spirituel. He was professor of singing at the Conservatoire from 1795 until 1799, and was principal singer in the chapel of Napoleon from 1801 until 1814, when he was dismissed by Louis XVIII. From 1819 to his retirement in 1826 he was professor of singing at the Ecole Royale de Chant et de Déclamation.

Lays's violent partisanship of the Revolution led to quarrels with his colleagues, but with no further result than to cause him to write a pamphlet and, later, to force him to appear in parts distasteful to him and to sing before the Bourbons after the Restoration. He was a poor actor, except in parts specially written for him; Fétis pronounced him not even a good singer, saying that his taste was poor and that he had several bad tricks. Nevertheless he had warmth and animation, and the beauty of his voice, which, though a baritone, extended into the tenor range, so far atoned for everything that for a long time no opera could be successful in which he had not a part.

WRITINGS

Lays, artiste du théatre des arts, à ses concitoyens (Paris, 1793)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; GroveO (E. Forbes)

T. de Lajarte: Bibliothèque musicale du Théâtre de l'Opéra (Paris, 1878/R)

GEORGE GROVE/R

Layton, Billy Jim (b Corsicana, TX, 14 Nov 1924). American composer. His early musical experience was in school bands and dance orchestras, playing the saxophone and the clarinet and writing arrangements. After serving in the Air Force during World War II, he attended the New England Conservatory (BMus 1948), where he studied composition with Francis Judd Cooke and Carl McKinley. He continued his studies at Yale University (MMus 1950) with Quincy Porter, among others, and at Harvard (PhD 1957), where his teachers included Gombosi (musicology) and Piston (composition). He remained at Harvard as assistant professor until 1966, when he was appointed to the music department at SUNY, Stony Brook (chair, 1966–72). His honours include the Prix de Rome (1954).

Layton may be regarded as a progressive conservative in the tradition of Busoni's 'Junge Klassizität'. In a polemical essay of 1965 ('The New Liberalism', PNM, iii/2, 1965–6, pp.137–42), he attacked both the radical purists of constructivism and the apostles of chance music. He favoured instead a centrist 'new liberalism', which he defined as 'a new, rich, meaningful, varied, understandable and vital music which maintains contact with the great cultural tradition of humanism in the West'. This fairly describes his own music. The seven compositions he wrote within a 12-year period are marked by meticulous craftsmanship, timbral sensitivity and structural resourcefulness. Animated by his early experience of jazz and popular music and his later musicological studies, Layton integrated a wide variety of techniques including metrical modulation and multiple ostinatos, free atonality and harmonic serialism, cantus firmus and isorhythm, jazz improvisation and blues chord changes, and passages of indeterminate notation imbedded in a determinate context. His structures range from continuous processes to highly complex arrangements of disjunct images encompassing both absolute stasis and intense activity.

WORKS

5 Studies, op.1, vn, pf, 1952; An American Portrait, sym. ov., op.2, 1953; 3 Dylan Thomas Poems, op.3, chorus, brass sextet, 1954–6; Str Qt, op.4, 1956; 3 Studies, op.5, pf, 1957; Divertimento, op.6, cl, bn, trbn, hpd, perc, vn, vc, 1958–60; Dance Fantasy, op.7, orch, 1964

Principal publisher: G. Schirmer

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Mellers: Music in a New Found Land (New York, 1964), 230–34

R. Browne: 'Billy Jim Layton: Dance Fantasy', PNM, iv/1 (1965–6), 161–70

G. Chase: America's Music (New York, 2/1966), 678ff

AUSTIN CLARKSON

Layton, Robert (b London, 2 May 1930). English musicologist. He studied at Worcester College, Oxford (1949– 53), taking the BA under Rubbra and Wellesz in 1953. He also studied with Moberg at the universities of Uppsala and Stockholm (1953–5). After three years of teaching he joined the BBC (1959) to take charge of music presentation. In 1961 he became responsible for music talks, becoming senior music talks producer (1970) and senior music producer (1982–90). His main preoccupation has been with Scandinavian music; he has written extensively on Berwald and Sibelius. Layton is also concerned with other 19th- and 20th-century music, in particular with the symphonic process. He broadcasts regularly, and is a regular contributor to Gramophone and a co-editor of the Stereo Record Guide. He was general editor of the BBC Music Guides (1974–90).

WRITINGS

Franz Berwald (Swed. trans., Stockholm, 1956; Eng. orig., London, 1959)
'Music in the United States', Twentieth Century Music, ed. R.H. Myers (London, 1960, enlarged 2/1968), 232–40
Sibelius (London, 1965, 4/1993)
'Franz Berwald'; 'Serge Prokofiev', 'Dmitri Shostakovich', 'Martinů and the Czech Tradition', 'Vagn Holmboe and the Later Scandinavians', The Symphony, ed. R. Simpson (Harmondsworth, 1966–7R, 2/1972), i, 175–87; ii, 166–80, 197–217, 218–29, 230–42
Sibelius and his World (London, 1970) with H. Searle: Twentieth-Century Composers, iii: Britain, Scandinavia and the Netherlands (London, 1972) trans.: E. Tawaststjerna: Sibelius (London, 1976–97)
Dvořák Symphonies and Concertos (London, 1978)
ed.: Companion to the Concerto (London, 1988, 2/1996 as Guide to the Concerto) ed.: Companion to the Symphony (London, 1993, 2/1995 as Guide to the Symphony)

DAVID SCOTT/R

Lazăr, Filip (b Craiova, 6/18 May 1894; d Paris, 3 Nov 1936). Romanian composer and pianist. At the Bucharest Conservatory (1907–12), he studied theory with Dumitru Kiriac-Georgescu, harmony and composition with Castaldi and the piano with Emilia Saegiu; his studies were continued at the Leipzig Conservatory (1913–14) under S. Krehl (harmony and composition) and Teichmüller (piano). As a concert pianist he toured Europe and the USA, introducing a great deal of new music in his recitals (he was a member of the ISCM). His dedication to modern music also found expression in his organizing activities as a founder member of the Romanian Composers' Society (1920) and as a founder and chairman of the Triton society in Paris (1928); in addition he worked as a piano teacher in France and Switzerland (1928–36). The variety of styles in Lazăr's music shows his breadth of outlook. In his first period (1919–28) Romanian folk elements were firmly asserted – gypsy-like urban folktunes appear in such works as the Concerto grosso and the instrumental suites and sonatas. Later Lazăr turned his attention to current musical developments, serialism and neo-classicism, but without losing sight of the peasant music of his native land. Despite its stylistic diversity, all of his music is distinguished by conciseness and vigour of form, a refined harmony that allows for freely treated dissonances and polytonal chords, generally polyphonic textures and a brilliant orchestration, with emphasis on the percussion and on percussive writing for the piano.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: La bouteille de Panurge (ballet, after A. Coeuroy), 1918; Les images de Béatrice, op. 18 (op-cant., Coeuroy), 1928
4 pf concs. opp.18, 19, 23, 24, 1930–34
Other orch: Suita română, D, 1921; Suite valaque, 1925; Tziganes, 1925; Concerto grosso, op.17, 1927; Le ring, 1928; Muzică pentru radio, 1931
Vocal: Dor de crîng (F. Lazăr), chorus, 1924; Paparudele [The Rainmakers] (Lazăr), chorus, 1924; 3 pastorales, 1v, pf, 1927
Chbr and solo inst: Pf Sonata no.1, 1913; Sonata, e, vn, pf, 1919; 2 suites, pf, 1924–5; Două dansuri populare româneşti, pf, 1925; Pf Sonata no.2, 1929; Trio, ob, cl, bn, 1934; Str Trio, 1935; Hp Trio, ?1936
Principal publishers: Durand, Oxford University Press, Universal, Muzica

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (G. Breazul)
V. Tomescu: Filip Lazăr (Bucharest, 1963)
J. Bruyr: L'écran des musiciens (Paris, 1933), 74–81
I. Sava: Muzicanţii pe acoperiş: muzicieni evrei de la noi şi din lume [Undercover musicians: Jewish musicians here and throughout the world], i (Bucharest, 1995), 165–6

VIOREL COSMA

Lazare-Lévy. See Lévy, Lazare.

Lazarev, Aleksandr (b Moscow, 5 July 1945). Russian conductor. He studied at the Central Music School in Moscow and subsequently at the Moscow and Leningrad conservatories. In 1971 he won first prize in the Moscow Young Conductors Competition, and the following year was a prizewinner in the Herbert von Karajan Competition in Berlin. He conducted Don Carlos at the Bol'shoy in 1973, and was immediately offered a permanent post there. In 1978 Lazarev founded his own ensemble, the Soloists of the Bol'shoy Theatre, to promote contemporary music, and from 1987 to 1995 he was music director of the Bol'shoy, taking the company on several international tours, including visits to the Edinburgh Festival in 1990 and 1991 and to the Metropolitan Opera in 1991. From 1988 to 1994 he was also Generalmusikdirektor of the Duisburg SO. Meanwhile he began to appear increasingly as a guest conductor with Western orchestras, including the Berlin PO, the Bavarian RSO, the Orchestre National de France, the Royal Liverpool PO (with which he made his UK début in 1987), the LPO and the CBSO. He made his London début in 1991, conducting Henze's Tristan and Seventh Symphony with the BBC SO, and from 1992 to 1995 was the orchestra's principal guest conductor; with the BBC SO he made recordings of works by Tchaikovsky, Medtner, Skryabin and Nikolay Korndorf. Since 1992 Lazarev has also appeared regularly at the Verona Arena and at La Scala. His operatic recordings include Rimsky-Korsakov's May Night, made with Cologne forces.

RICHARD WIGMORE

Lazari, Alberto (b Perugia; fl 1635–7). Italian composer. He became a Carmelite friar and held the post of organist at the collegiate church at Massa Lombarda in 1635. He belonged to two cultural academies in nearby cities, the Accademia degli Spennati at Faenza and the Accademia degli Offuscati at Cesena (the latter in 1637). Lazari's publications were both of church music: Armonia spirituale a 1–6 voci con letanie della Beata Vergine e una messa concertata a 3 voci (Venice, 1635) and Armonie spirituali a 1–4 voci con le lettanie della Beata Vergine a 4 e 8 se piace con il basso continuo, libro secondo, op.2 (Venice, 1637). He was one of many minor figures in northern Italy at the time to adopt the small-scale concertato motet for use in smaller churches. His mass is in the same style, though the litanies of 1637 have an optional ripieno choir. He seems to have been less than competent when writing for larger forces, his part-writing and melodies lacking in invention. On the other hand the duet In sanctitate fulgida (1637) is a good example of the expressive type of small motet common at this time in which ornamentation, though elaborate, helps to shape melodies, and triple-time writing tends towards arioso style. Both his publications include a number of dialogues.

(J. Roche: North Italian Church Music in the Age of Monteverdi, Oxford, 1984)

JEROME ROCHE

Lazari, Ferdinando Antonio. See LAZZARI, FERDINANDO ANTONIO.

Lazarini, Scipione. See LAZZARINI, SCIPIONE.

Lázaro, Hipólito (b Barcelona, 13 Dec 1887; d Barcelona, 14 May 1974). Spanish tenor. Success in amateur zarzuela performances led to his operatic début at Barcelona in La favorita. He then studied with Enrico Colli in Milan. In 1913 he sang in Mascagni's Isabeau at Genoa under the composer, who subsequently engaged him for the première of his Parisina at La Scala. In 1914 he made his first tour of South America where he enjoyed some of his greatest successes. He appeared at the Metropolitan in 1918, making a strong impression there with the high tessitura of I puritani. Back in Italy he received acclaim for his part in the première of Mascagni's Il piccolo Marat at the Costanzi, Rome, in 1921, and he repeated his success, also under Mascagni, in Paris in 1928. He was in the première of La cena delle beffe in 1924, but withdrew from further performances after disagreements with the composer, Giordano. His contentious disposition probably hindered the development of his career in the 1930s, although he continued to sing to the end of his life, giving a farewell concert in New York in 1944 and making his final operatic appearances in Havana in 1950. A bright, penetrating voice with magnificent high notes is heard on recordings that also show him to have been capable of some delightful as well as some deplorable stylistic effects. He also wrote an egotistical autobiography El libro de mi vida (Havana, 1949, 2/1968).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.B. Richards: 'Hipolito Lazaro', Record Collector, xvi (1964–6), 53–94

J.B. STEANE

Lazarof, Henri (b Sofia, Bulgaria, 12 April 1932). American composer of Bulgarian origin. He graduated from the Sofia Academy in 1948, then studied at the New Jerusalem Academy of Music (1949–52), with Petrassi at the Accademia di S Cecilia, Rome (1955–7), and at Brandeis University (1957–9, MFA 1959). In 1959 he joined the faculty of UCLA, initially as a teacher of French language and literature, then in 1962 as professor of composition.

Lazarof's music is highly chromatic and full of intricate detail. It is characterized less by elaborate counterpoint than by textural invention, sometimes achieved with the help of unusual deployments of orchestral instruments, such as the three instrumental groups (two of strings, one of winds) in the Concerto for oboe and chamber orchestra (1997). The intensity of the music's abstract, expressionist idiom is occasionally relieved by diatonicism and by gestural references to earlier styles, such as the section of Tableaux (after Kandinsky) (1990) entitled 'Hommage à Chopin'. The many prominent musicians who have championed Lazarof's music, including James Galway and Gerard Schwartz, attest both to the music's surface appeal and its enduring rewards.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Piccola Serenata, 1959; Va Conc., 1959–60; Conc., pf, 20 insts, 1960–61; Structures sonores, 1966; Mutazione, 1967; Omaggio, chbr conc., 19 insts, 1968; Ricercar, va, pf, orch, 1968; Vc Conc., 1968; Rhapsody, vn, orch, 1969; Textures, pf, 5 ens, 1970; Koncordia, str, 1971; Spectrum, tpt, orch, tape, 1972–3; Fl Conc., 1973; Volo (3 canti di requiem), va, 2 str ens, 1975; Chbr Sym., 1976; Conc. for Orch, 1977; Sym. no.1, 1978; Sinfonietta, 1981; Celebration, 4 brass choirs, 1984; Conc. for Orch no.2 'Icarus', 1986; Vn Conc., 1987; Concertante 1988, 2 hn, 16 str, 1988; Cl Conc., 1990; Tableaux (after Kandinsky), pf, orch, 1990; Vc Conc. no.2, 1991; Sym. no.2, 1991; Divertimento III, vn, str orch/str qt (1993); 3 Pieces, 1995; The Summit Concertante, tpt, brass, perc, 1996; Conc., ob, chbr orch, 1997; Fantasia, hn, orch, 1997; Va Rhapsody, va, orch, 1997

Choral: The First Day, mixed chorus/(mixed chorus, ww qnt) (1964); Canti, mixed chorus, 1971; Choral Sym. no.3 (Lazarof), A, Bar, SATB, orch, 1994; Encounters with Dylan Thomas, S, chbr ens, 1997; In Celebration (Sym. no.4) (G. van Swieten, S.T. Coleridge, Bible: Ecclesiastes, Ps xcviii), mixed chorus, orch (1998)

Chbr: Str Qt no.2, 1961–2; Inventions, va, pf, 1962; Tempi concertati, vn, va, 7 insts, 1964; Concertino da camera, ww qnt (1965); Rhapsody, vn, pf, 1966, orchd 1969; Espaces (Chbr Conc.), 2 fl, cl, b cl, 2 vn, 2 vc, 2 pf, 1966; Cadence III, vn, 2 perc, 1970; Continuum, str trio, 1970; Adieu, cl/b cl, pf, 1974; Chbr Conc. no.3, 12 solo insts, 1974; Suite, perc, 5 insts, 1975; Intonazione, 2 pf (1981); Fanfare, 6 C-tpt (1982); Serenade, str sextet (1986); Octet 'La laurenziana', str (1988); Varianti, 4 hn (1988); Pf Trio, 1989; Divertimento II, cl, hn, vn, va, vc, pf, 1991; Prayers, 10 players, 1991; Duo solitaire, vn, vc, 1992; Lucerniana, cl, b cl, hn, hp, vn, vc, pf/cel, 2 perc, 1992; Divertimento III, vn, str qt/str qts/str orch (1993); Necompe, 8 perc (1993); Impromptus, str qt (1995); Offrande, cl, vn, va, vc, pf, 1996; Preludes and Interludes to a Drama, fl, ob, 2 cl, bn, hn, tpt, perc, vn, va, vc (1996); Str Qt no.4, 1996; Invenzione concertata, brass qnt, 1997; Str Qnt, 1997; Antiphonies, brass, perc (1997); Chronicles, str trio (1997)

Solo inst: Largo, org (1963); Lamenti, org, 1965; Cadence I, vc (1970); Cadence IV, pf (1977); Intonazione e variazione, org, 1980; Vox, org (1981); Chronicles, pf, 1982; Lyric Suite, vn (1984); Momenti, vc (1988); Intrada, hn, 1995; 6 Bagatelles, va, 1997

Works with tape: Quantetti, pf, tape, 1963; Cadence II (Cadence for Milton), va, tape, 1969; Partita, brass qnt, tape, 1971; Cadence V, fl, tape, 1972; Cadence VI, tuba, tape, 1973; Concertazioni, tpt, 6 insts, tape, 1973

Principal publishers: Presser, Associated, Bote & Bock, Israeli Music Publications

SCOTT WHEELER

Lazarus, Henry (b London, 1 Jan 1815; d London, 6 March 1895). English clarinettist and basset-horn player. He held a unique position in the musical life of Victorian England, playing in every important festival and series of concerts during his 54-year career. He was educated at the Royal Military Asylum in Chelsea, where he studied the clarinet with the bandmaster John Blizzard. He then became assistant to Charles Godfrey, bandmaster of the Coldstream Guards. After ten years' service he bought his discharge and joined the Duke of Devonshire's private band.

Lazarus's first solo appearance was in a supporting role at Mme Dulcken's concert of 2 May 1838 at the Hanover Square Rooms. He soon became a prominent figure at all the regular chamber music concerts, and his many appearances as a soloist with the Philharmonic Society date from 1844. It was not until Joseph Williams retired from the society as the orchestra's first clarinet that Lazarus was able to take up this position; from 1841 to 1860 he had had to be content with that of second clarinet. However, he had long associations as principal with the Royal Italian Opera (1838–83) and the Birmingham Festival (1840–85), and he also played for the Sacred Harmonic Society Concerts.

Lazarus was no less successful as a teacher, his most important pupil being Charles Draper. In 1854 he was appointed to the staff of the RAM and in 1858 to Kneller Hall. His New and Modern Method was published in 1881, and when the RCM was opened in 1883 he became its first clarinet professor. He retired from playing in 1891 and from teaching in 1894.

Lazarus used a variety of clarinets, beginning with a simple-system pair by Key, changing to ones by Fieldhouse to which he added ingenious Boehm improvements, and finishing with a pair by Albert. Although he never owned a Boehm clarinet he used a Boehm basset-horn and recommended the system to his pupils. His elegant style and pure tone were ideally suited to the occasional pieces in vogue at the time, but his more important contribution lay in the great number of larger-scale chamber works and obbligatos which he introduced to the public. Composers who dedicated works to him include Arthur Clappé, Hamilton Clarke, Charles Swinnerton Heap, Charles Oberthür, George Osborne, James Waterson and Joseph Williams. Lazarus himself was also a prolific composer of fantasias, cavatinas and variations.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G.B. Shaw: Music in London 1890–94, ii (London, 1932/R), 109–10
J. Brymer: 'Henry Lazarus', The Clarinet, no.2 (1950), 15–17; no.24 (1956), 18–20
P. Weston: Clarinet Virtuosi of the Past (London, 1971)
P. Weston: 'Lazarus' Instrument Collection', National Association of College Wind and Percussion Instructors' Journal, xxiii/2 (1974–5), 3–7
P. Weston: More Clarinet Virtuosi of the Past (London, 1977)

PAMELA WESTON

Lazzari [Lazari], Ferdinando Antonio (b Bologna, March 1678; d Bologna, 19 April 1754). Italian composer and organist. He entered the Franciscan order in Bologna on 29 September 1693. While still a novice he was pressed into service both as a singer and an organist; it seems probable that the absence of his name from the monastery registers for several years after this was due to his having been sent away to study music further, a supposition strengthened by the fact that on his return to the monastery in Bologna in 1702 he was immediately named magistero della cappella of S Francesco (31 May 1702). He retained this position until the end of 1705, when he became maestro di cappella of S Maria Gloriosa dei Frari, Venice. In 1712 Lazzari was invited to return to Bologna to participate in festivities on the canonization of St Catherine of Bologna; his music for the occasion was performed on 12 July. He returned to his post in Venice, but after an illness which severely damaged his eyesight he received permission to return to his native Bologna, where he remained until his death.

WORKS

Crudelissimi regnantis, motet for the Feast of Holy Innocents, 8vv, 2 tpt, 2 vn, violetta, vc, org, *I-Bc; 5 motets, chorus, orch A-Wn
Sonata a 6, I-Bsp
Orats: Mosè gittato nel Nilo, Foligno 1700; S Maria Maddalena de'Pazzi, Bologna, 1704; L'innocenza diffesa da S Antonio da Padova, Cremona, 1705: lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; La MusicaD
L. Busi: Il Padre G.B. Martini (Bologna, 1891/R), 232ff

NONA PYRON

Lazzari, (Joseph) Sylvio [Silvio; Lazzari, Josef Fortunat Sylvester] (b Bozen [Bolzano], 30 Dec 1857; d Suresnes, nr Paris, 10 June 1944). French composer of Austro-Italian parentage. The only son of a wealthy family, he travelled widely during his youth and entered the Paris Conservatoire in 1883, studying with Gounod, Guiraud and later Franck. He became a French national in 1896. Respected as a conductor, he held several posts in French theatres including the Gaîté-Lyrique in Paris. His most important works are his songs and operas. From the outset his music displays a seriousness of purpose and employs Wagnerian and Franckian devices. The songs are never mere salon pieces, and often set poetry of some complexity. The early piano pieces, such as the Suite op.14, are dense in texture and counterpoint and employ some Baroque pastiche, while the songs are perhaps closest to those of Duparc.

Armor was the first of several operas set in Brittany, and its prélude was widely performed as a concert piece. La lépreuse, which several critics considered Lazzari's finest work, is based on a Breton legend concerning a young girl afflicted with leprosy. Breton folk melodies are employed and unaccompanied plainsong from the requiem mass is introduced as well as a carillon scene as the girl and her lover die. Its original title caused some scandal and was later modified to L'ensorcelé. La tour de feu, the first opera to use cinema as an integral part, also has a Breton theme, it was revived in Innsbruck in 1984.

In contrast to these operas on naturalistic themes, Lazzari also produced a series of abstract instrumental works, among which the Violin Sonata, the String Quartet, the Symphony and the wind Octet are constructed from a complex interplay of motives and display a concern for thematic unity. The symphonic poem Effet de nuit is clearly reminiscent of the language of Wagner's Tristan and of Franck's pieces in a similar genre. In the late 1920s Lazzari composed some film music, but even in this he did not abandon his chromatic style.

WORKS

OPERAS

Lulu (pantomime, 1, F. Champsaur), Paris, May 1889
Armor (3, E. Jaubert), 1896, Prague, Landes, 7 Nov 1898, F-Po, vs (Paris, 1897)
La lépreuse [L'ensorcelé] (tragédie légendaire, 3, H. Bataille), 1900–1, OC (Favart), 7 Feb 1912, Pn; (Paris, 1912)
Melaenis (5, G. Spitzmüller, after L. Bouilhet), 1907, Mulhouse, Municipal, 25 March 1927, vs (Paris and Leipzig, 1913)
Le sauteriot (drame lyrique, 3, H.P. Roché and M. Périer, after E. de Keyserling), 1913–15, Chicago, Opera, 19 Jan 1918, Po, vs (Paris, 1920)
La tour de feu (drame lyrique, 3, Lazzari), 1925, Paris, Opéra, 28 Jan 1928, Po, vs (Paris, 1928)

VOCAL

1 voice, piano, unless otherwise stated

Vieux motif (L.B.) (1884); L'amour d'après Ninette (G. Richard) (1887); A l'absente (P. Verlaine, J. Lahor, anon.), 6 songs (1892); L'oiseau; Au printemps; La jeune fille et la rose (Lazzari), 4vv, pf (1893); 3 mélodies (P. Verlaine, L. Bowitsch, L. Benedite), op.19 (1894); L'automne (A. de Lamartine), 3vv, pf ad lib (1894); 3 duos (Lazzari), op.21, S, Bar, pf (1894); 2 poèmes (M. Dumont, P. Verlaine), op.30 (1901), no.1 orchd; Apparition (S. Mallarmé) (1903), also orchd; 3 poésies d'E. Blémont d'après H. Heine (1906); Le cavalier d'Olmedo (after L. de Vega) (1918), also orchd; Le nouveau Christ (H. Bataille) (1918), arr. Bar, orch; La fontaine de pitié (Bataille) (1920), also orchd
Green (Verlaine) (1920); Le cavalier (Saint-Georges de Bouhélier) (1921), also orchd; Chanson sur la fleuve (The Thousand and One Nights) (1921); Elle l'enchaîna dans une grotte (M. Maeterlinck) (1921), also orchd; Sur l'eau (T. Klingsor) (1921); Les yeux (Bataille) (1923), also orchd; Chanson d'amour et de souci;

Chanson du meunier, also orchd; Le chien de Jean de Nivelle (Klingsor) (1923), also orchd; Chanson de Marguerite dans la prison (after J.W. von Goethe) (1923); Les étoiles bleues (M. Rollinat) (1923); Qu'importe (A. Silvestre) (1926); Berceuse triste; L'oubli (Klingsor) (1927); Chanson du mendiant (1928), also orchd; Langueur nocturne (Lahor) (1930)

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Concertstück, op.18, pf, orch, 1887, (1894) F-Pn; Marche pour une fête joyeuse (1903); Effet de nuit, tableau symphonique after Verlaine, orch (1904); Sym., e (1914); Rapsodie, vn, orch (1922); Suite, F, op.23, 1922; Faust (incid music, Goethe) (1925); pieces for salon orch, incl. Perdu en mer (1926), Escualdune (visions basques) (1927), Fête bretonne (1927), La chanson du moulin (1928), Cortège nocturne (1929)

Chbr: Pf Trio, op.13 (1889); Sonata, op.24, vn, pf (1894); Str Qt, op.17a (1904); Barcarolle, vc, pf (1912); Octet, op.20, fl, ob, cl, eng hn, 2 bn, 2 hn (1920); Scherzo, vn, pf (1931)

Pf: Valse brilliante, op.4 (1884); Valses caractéristiques (1886–8); Suite, op.14 (1891); 3 pièces, op.16 (1892); 2 miniatures (1895); Petite esquisse (1903); Rapsodie hongroise, 4 hands (1903); Romanzetta, 1923; Cordace (Danse grecque), pf (1925)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (R. Langham Smith) [incl. further bibliography]
G. Pioch: 'Alfred Bruneau, Sylvio Lazzari, Ernest Moret', Le théâtre lyrique en France (Paris, 1937–9) iii, 37–49 [pubn of Poste National, Radio-Paris]
Information musicale (20 Nov 1942) [incl. several articles on Lazzari]
P. Landormy: La musique française après Debussy (Paris, 1943)
P. Landormy: La musique française de Franck à Debussy (Paris, 1943)
R. Dumesnil: La musique française entre les deux guerres 1919–39 (Geneva, 1946)
P. Bertrand: Le monde de la musique (Geneva, 1947)
G. Samazeuilh: Musiciens de mon temps (Paris, 1947)
W. Asholt: 'La lépreuse von H. Bataille/S. Lazzari (1896/1912)', Oper als Text: romanistische Beiträge zur Libretto-Forschung, ed. A. Gier (Heidelberg, 1986), 299–318

RICHARD LANGHAM SMITH

Lazzari, Virgilio (b Assisi, 20 April 1887; d Castel Gandolfo, 4 Oct 1953). Italian bass, active in the USA. He sang with the Vitale Operetta Company, 1908–11, then studied in Rome with Cotogni. He made his operatic début at the Teatro Costanzi, Rome, in 1914. After singing in South America, in 1917 he made his North American début at Boston, later becoming a naturalized American. He sang in Chicago (1918–33), then made his Metropolitan début as Don Pédro (L'Africaine), remaining with the company until 1951 and singing 20 roles. From 1934 to 1939 he appeared at the Salzburg Festival, where he sang Pistol (Falstaff), Bartolo and Leporello, which he recorded and in which he made his only Covent Garden appearance (1939). His most famous role was that of Archibaldo (Montemezzi's L'amore dei tre re), which he sang first in 1916 in Mexico City and as late as 1953 in Genoa. Lazzari was considered one of the best singing actors in his particular repertory.

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/R

Lazzarini [Lazarini], Scipione (b Ancona, *c*1620; d after 1674). Italian composer and teacher. He was an Augustinian monk and teacher of theology at Ancona, where he also ran a school of music; he was known chiefly as a teacher of composition. His earliest known work is a motet for three voices and continuo, Si linguis hominum (RISM 1646[2]). Nearly 30 years later he published two collections, both called Motetti a due e tre voci (both Ancona, 1674), as his opp.1 and 2; the second of these (1674[1]) includes one work by each of three of his pupils, A.G. Giamaglia, Filippo Giamaglia and M.F. Nascimbeni. In the following year he published Salmi vespertini parte a cinque voci e parte a tre voci e due violini op.3 (Ancona, 1675). The style of the motets is conservative and reflects the polyphonic tradition of the 16th century, which was still current at Ancona. The psalms, however, show some concessions to contemporary practice, particularly in the use of accompanying instruments.

□

Le. The sharpened form of LAH in TONIC SOL-FA.

Leach, James (b Townhead, Lancs., bap. Rochdale, 25 Dec 1761; d Blackley, nr Manchester, 8 Feb 1798). English psalmodist. A handloom weaver by trade, with little education, he devoted his leisure hours to the singing and composition of psalmody for Methodist meetings. Soon after the publication of his first collection in 1789, he became a full-time musician and music teacher. As an alto singer he took part in the Handel Festivals in Westminster Abbey and in other festivals. He moved to Salford about 1795, and died three years later as the result of a stagecoach accident.

Leach was one of the best practitioners of the Methodist style of church music, consisting of florid psalm and hymn tunes and metrical 'anthems' or set pieces frankly based on the livelier secular and operatic music of the time. Some of his pieces have instrumental accompaniment (e.g. for two clarinets and figured bass). They have much word repetition, echo effects and so on, but never contain counterpoint with overlapping words; thus they observe Wesley's rule against obscuring the sense. His music was enormously popular, especially at class meetings, love feasts and revival meetings. The three collections, A New Sett of Hymns and Psalm Tunes (London, 1789), A Second Sett of Hymns and Psalm Tunes (London, 1794) and A Collection of Hymn Tunes and Anthems (published posthumously by his widow), were drawn on in countless 19th-century publications, especially in America. Two of them were reprinted in full as late as 1884, with a sketch of the composer's life and work by Thomas Newbigging.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (J.C. Hadden)
T. Newbigging: Memoir, in J. Leach: Psalmody (London, 1884)

NICHOLAS TEMPERLEY

Lead. The principal line, or player in a band or section of a band. In jazz the term is normally used of the principal line in each of the three wind sections (trumpets, reeds and trombones) of a big band, jazz orchestra or stage band; 'to take the lead' or 'to play lead' or simply 'to lead' means to play the melody or lead line. The lead singer in a rock or pop group typically sings the main melody, and the lead guitarist is responsible for solos and melodic statements.

□

Leadbelly [Ledbetter, Huddie] (b Mooringsport, LA, 21 Jan 1885; d New York, 6 Dec 1949). American songster, blues singer and guitarist. By the age of 15 he was well known in the Caddo Lake region of Louisiana as a musician. He learnt to play the 12-string guitar early in the 1900s and accompanied Blind Lemon Jefferson in the streets and bars of Dallas. In 1918 he was sentenced for murder in Texas; reprieved in 1925, he was again sentenced for intent to murder in 1930 to the Louisiana State Penetentiary, in Angola. There he was discovered in 1933 by the folklorist John A. Lomax, who recorded him for the Library of Congress and secured his parole.

Leadbelly went to New York with Lomax the following year, and from 1935 to 1940 was extensively recorded for the Library of Congress. These recordings, which are remarkable for their variety, included a beautiful version of Jefferson's Match Box Blues, played with a knife on the guitar strings, and the haunting If it wasn't for Dicky (both 1935, Elek.). Among his earliest commercial recordings, made for the American Recording Company, were the powerful Honey I'm all out and down (1935, Mlt.) and the ballad Becky Deem, she was a gamblin' gal (1935, ARC); although dramatically performed, they were anachronistic to black audiences and did not sell well.

In New York Leadbelly found a welcome audience among jazz supporters, who viewed him as the last of the blues singers, and he had a moderate success as a performer in night-clubs and on college campuses. He was courted by the political left, which prompted his recording The Bourgeois Blues. His Good Morning Blues (1940, Bb), with a spoken introduction defining blues, was his most admired song. In his last years he made a very large number of recordings for specialist folk labels, including several with the virtuoso harmonica player Sonny Terry, notably On a Monday (1943, Asch). During his 'Last Session' in 1948 he recorded a free-ranging reminiscence with many traditional and work-songs, among them I ain't goin' down to the well no more (1948, FW).

Leadbelly was the most prolific of all songsters and claimed a repertory of 500 songs. He was a notable custodian of the Texan black song tradition, and his work is distinguished for its wide range and variety, his full-throated singing with rough vibrato, and his accomplished, highly rhythmic playing of the 12-string guitar. These features are abundantly evident on an early version of his best-known song, Goodnight Irene (1943, Asch). Among many other songs, Rock Island Line (1949, Playboy), recorded after his return from Paris and shortly before his death, became virtually an anthem of the skiffle craze in England, resulting in a temporary devaluation of his reputation as a musician. In 1975 his life was made the subject of the commercially unsuccessful film Leadbelly, with the singing provided by HiTide Harris.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Lead Belly Letter (Ithaca, NY, 1990–) [quarterly]
J.A. Lomax and A. Lomax, eds.: Negro Folk Songs as Sung by Leadbelly (New York, 1936)
M. Jones and A. McCarthy: A Tribute to Huddie Ledbetter (London, 1946)
M. Asch and A. Lomax, eds.: The Leadbelly Songbook (New York, 1962)
J. Lester and P. Seeger: The 12-String Guitar as Played by Leadbelly (New York, 1965)
E. Lambert: 'Leadbelly's Last Sessions', JazzM, no.171 [recte 172] (1969), 11–14
P. Oliver: The Story of the Blues (London, 1969/R)
F. Ramsey: Leadbelly: a Great Long Time (New York, 1982)
C. Wolfe and K. Lornell: The Life and Legend of Leadbelly (New York, 1992)

PAUL OLIVER

Leader [concertmaster] (Fr. chef d'attaque; Ger. Konzertmeister; It. violino primo). In modern orchestras, the principal first violinist, who sits immediately to the left of the conductor as viewed by the audience. As principal first violinist, the leader has significant but varying duties, often including the marking of parts, liaison between orchestra and management and responsibility for sectional rehearsals; but the precedence accorded to the principal first violinist over the principals of other sections is largely a product of the leader's historical role. Until the early 19th century instrumental music, regardless of the size of the ensemble, was usually directed by one (or more) of the performers. Some degree of direction from the keyboard was common during the 18th century, but there are many references to violin direction (including C.P.E. Bach's account of his father's preference for that method), and it became more pervasive with the gradual abandonment of the keyboard continuo during the later 18th century. Reichardt in 1776 (Ueber die Pflichten des Ripien-Violinisten) envisaged a violinist-director (Anführer). Dittersdorf and Haydn led their symphonies from the violin, and Clement and Schuppanzigh exercised the same role at concerts in Vienna around 1800. Even in the opera house direction from the first violin was common at the beginning of the 19th century. In some places control was shared between a keyboard player (or time beater), who paid attention to the singers, and a leader who directed the orchestra; this system survived in Italy until the mid-19th century. When Spohr went to Gotha as Konzertmeister in 1805 he found a co-Konzertmeister who directed from the keyboard in vocal music, but played viola in purely instrumental pieces; Spohr directed these from the violin and soon assumed control of vocal performances too. About the same time Gottfried Weber (AMZ, ix, 1806–7, col.805) advocated replacing direction from the violin or the keyboard with direction by the baton, as at the Paris Opéra. Spohr was among those who abandoned the violin for the baton; he employed it in rehearsal with the London Philharmonic Society in 1820 (where joint direction by a leader and a keyboard player was the norm until the 1830s), but, unable to persuade them to accept this method in public, he directed the performance as leader. At the Leipzig Gewandhaus, direction from the violin remained until Mendelssohn took over as conductor in 1835, and, in Mendelssohn's absence, concerts were still occasionally directed by the leader, Ferdinand David. The transition to baton conducting took place at different times in different parts of Europe, but by the middle of the 19th century leaders had mostly assumed their modern subordinate position.

The leader of a jazz band is the musician who 'fronts' or organizes the band.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Carse: The Orchestra in the XVIIIth Century (Cambridge, 1940/R)
A. Carse: The Orchestra from Beethoven to Berlioz (Cambridge, 1948/R)
A. Jacobs: 'Spohr and the Baton', ML, xxxi (1950), 307–17
D.K. Holoman: 'The Emergence of the Orchestral Conductor in Paris in the 1830s', Music in Paris in the Eighteen-Thirties: Northampton, MA, 1982, 374–430
C. Brown: Louis Spohr: a Critical Biography (Cambridge, 1984)
C. Brown: 'The Orchestra in Beethoven's Vienna', EMc, xvi (1988), 4–20
M. Chusid: 'A Letter by the Composer about Giovanna d'Arco and some Remarks on the Division of Musical Direction in Verdi's Day', Performance Practice Review, iii (1990), 7–57; rev. in Studi Verdiani, vii (1991), 12–56
L. Jensen: 'The Emergence of the Modern Conductor in Nineteenth-Century Italian Opera', Performance Practice Review, iv (1991), 34–63
D. Charlton: ' "A maître d'orchestre ... conducts": New and Old Evidence on French Practice', EMc, xxi (1993), 340–53

CLIVE BROWN

Leading note (Fr. [note] sensible; Ger. Leitton; It. [nota] sensibile; Lat. subsemitonium). The seventh DEGREE of the major, harmonic minor, or ascending melodic minor scale, so called because it lies a semitone below the tonic and therefore has a strong tendency to lead up to it. In medieval monophony leading-note resolutions were infrequent, being confined to pieces in the Lydian and Hypolydian modes. With the development of polyphony in the late Middle Ages and Renaissance, however, the note immediately below the final tended to be sharpened in practice (see MUSICA FICTA), and leading-note motion became an identifying feature of the CADENCE. In the major–minor tonal system this resolution could itself imply a harmonic progression V–I; for this reason the leading note may be thought of as the most characteristic melodic scale degree.

Some writers use the term 'upper leading note' for the flattened supertonic, or the natural second degree when it lies a semitone above the tonic or final (e.g. in the Phrygian mode). One also encounters 'leading harmony', a term conceived by analogy with 'leading note' to mean any harmony that behaves like a DOMINANT in its inclination towards resolution on the tonic.

□

League of Composers. An organization founded in 1923 in New York by members of the INTERNATIONAL COMPOSERS' GUILD to promote the composition and performance of contemporary music. Before it merged with the US section of the ISCM in 1954, the league had commissioned 110 works by outstanding American and European composers (including Copland, Bartók and Barber), sponsored American stage premières of Stravinsky's The Rite of Spring, Oedipus rex and The Wedding, and presented some of the first radio broadcasts of contemporary music sponsored by the Pan American Association of Composers. It also gave concerts and receptions honouring Schoenberg, Hindemith, Milhaud and other composers who had recently emigrated to the USA. Its quarterly Modern Music (1924–46/R) contained critical reviews of new works and articles by leading composers. The executive chairmen were Claire R. Reis (1923–48) and Copland (1948–50). The League/ISCM has presented premières and significant performances of music by such composers as Schoenberg, Berg, Webern, Stravinsky, Copland, Schuman, Cowell, Thompson, Moore, Cage, Druckman, Shapey, Davidovsky, Carter, Babbitt, Wuorinen, Perle and Martino. In 1976 it helped organize the World Music Days in Boston. The organization also sponsors an annual National Composers Competition, recordings of contemporary music and an annual concert series in New York.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.R. Reis: Composers, Conductors, and Critics (New York, 1955/R)
M. Meckna: 'Copland, Sessions, and Modern Music: the Rise of the Composer-Critic in America', American Music, iii (1985), 198–204

RITA H. MEAD/R

Leal, Eleutério Franco (b ?Lisbon, *c*1758; d Lisbon, *c*1840). Portuguese composer. He taught in the seminário (choir school) of Lisbon Cathedral and was cathedral mestre de capela from about 1780 until 1819, when he was retired because of chronic illness. His surviving music is in a fluent italianate style resembling that of David Perez. Regras de acompanhar, his treatise on accompanying for use in the seminário, consists mainly of examples and contrapuntal exercises progressing from two to four parts in all keys containing up to four sharps or flats.

WORKS

Mass, 4vv, org; 8 vesper pss and Mag, 4vv, org; all P-EVc
In convertendo, 4vv, bc, La
3 masses, 4vv, org; 3 vesper pss, 4vv, org; all Lf
Cr, 4vv, insts; Responsory for Matins of Our Lady, 4vv, 2 vc, org, 1817: both Ln

Regras de acompanhar, para uso do Real seminario da Santa Igreja Patriarchal, Ln

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBP
M.A. Machado Santos, ed.: Biblioteca da Ajuda: catálogo de música manuscrita, iii (Lisbon, 1960), 23–4
J.A. Alegria: Arquivo das músicas da Sé de Évora: catálogo (Lisbon, 1973), 25, 31

ROBERT STEVENSON

Leap [skip] (Ger. Sprung; Fr. saut; It. taglio). A melodic interval greater than a major 2nd, in contrast to a step. Melodic lines that move by leap are called 'disjunct'.

Lear [née Shulman], Evelyn (b Brooklyn, NY, 8 Jan 1926). American soprano. She studied at the Juilliard School and later in Berlin. Engaged by the Berlin Städtische (later Deutsche) Oper, she made her début in 1959 as the Composer. In 1961 she created the title role in Klebe's Alkmene in Berlin and in 1963 Jeanne in Die Verlobung in San Domingo at the opening celebrations of the rebuilt Nationaltheater, Munich. She made her Metropolitan début as Lavinia in the first performance of Mourning Becomes Electra (1967). With her first performance in Vienna of Berg's Lulu in 1962 she became closely associated with the role, singing it in London with the Hamburg company that year and recording it under Böhm. She made her Covent Garden début in 1965 as Donna Elvira. Her repertory included both Cherubino and Countess Almaviva, Fiordiligi, Pamina, Handel's Cleopatra, Mimì, Desdemona, Tatyana, Marie (Wozzeck), Emilia Marty and Octavian. From 1972 she began to undertake heavier roles, including Tosca and the Marschallin. She created Arkadina in Pasatieri's The Seagull (1974), Magda in Robert Ward's Minutes to Midnight (1982) and Ranyevskaya in Kelterborn's Kirschgarten (1984, Zürich). Her voice, though not large, was of distinctively warm and affecting quality, well produced and projected. In 1985 she made her farewell at the Metropolitan as the Marschallin and sang Countess Geschwitz at Florence, repeating the role in Chicago (1987) and San Francisco (1989). Lear was also a distinguished recitalist, singing in seven languages. She married the baritone Thomas Stewart.

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/R

Leardini, Alessandro (b Urbino; fl 1643–62). Italian composer. He wrote two intermezzos for the opera La finta savia (libretto by Giulio Strozzi; remainder of music by Laurenzi, Merula, G.B. Crivelli, B. Ferrari and V. Tozzi), performed at Venice in 1643. His Argiope (text by P. Micheli and G.B. Fusconi) was given there in 1649, but it may already have been composed for Carnival 1646. In one anthology (RISM 1648[1]) he is described as being in the service of 'Cavaliere Sforza', probably Francesco Maria Sforza (1612–80), a Knight of Malta from 1634 and later Marquis of Caravagio. The motet by him in that collection is representative of the new progressive style of Roman church music. He was maestro di cappella at the Mantuan court from at least 1649 to 1652; in 1649 his opera Psiche (libretto by D. Gabrielli; music in I-Vnm) was performed there on the occasion of the marriage of the Duke of Mantua. The occasional, courtly nature of Psiche accounts for its considerable use of the chorus, its instrumental writing for up to six parts and possibly also its wealth of arias. In 1651 Leardini's Introduzzione al balletto dei dodeci Cesari Augusti (text by A. Tarachia) was performed at Mantua, and in 1652 his Festa della barriera (devised by P.E. degli Obizzi; music lost) was given at the Teatro Grande there. Four solo cantatas, dated 1662 (?recte 1652), also survive (in I-MOe).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ
A. Tarachia: Feste celebrate in Mantova alla venuta de' serenissimi Arciduci Ferdinando Carlo e Sigismondo Francesco d'Austria, et Arciduchessa Anna Medici (Mantua, 1652)
A.M. Monterosso Vacchelli: '"Psiche", tragicommedia di Alessandro Leardini', Scritti in onore di Luigi Ronga (Milan and Naples, 1973), 389–414

JEROME ROCHE

Lebah, I Madé (b Peliatan, ?1912; d Denpasar, 18 Nov 1996). Balinese musician. As a youth he travelled slightly south to the village of Sukawati, where he learnt the legong dance repertory from one of its primary exponents, Dewa Ketut Blacing, and then taught it to the gamelan in his own village, Peliatan, in Bali's south-central regency of Gianyar. He also worked closely with the celebrated composer I WAYAN LOTRING. Lebah was especially renowned as a drummer for legong and for the delicate gamelan accompaniment to performances of arja theatre. In 1931 the Dutch administration in Bali sent the Peliatan gamelan group, of which he was a leading member, to perform at the Exposition Coloniale Internationale in Paris. Throughout the 1930s Lebah was a principal collaborator with COLIN MCPHEE, the composer-musicologist who lived and worked on Bali. The two thoroughly explored the musical life of the island, an experience that provided Lebah with unusually extensive first-hand knowledge. He travelled abroad again in 1952 on a highly successful tour organized by the British entrepreneur John Coast that impressed the intricacy of Balinese music and dance on the world. He continued to teach into the 1980s; among his students were many foreigners who subsequently taught Balinese music in their home countries.

MICHAEL TENZER

Le Bailly, Henry [Bailly, Henry du; Bailly, Henry de] (d Paris, 25 Sept 1637). French composer, lutenist and singer. He worked at the court of Henry IV, where he was valet de chambre du roi et maître joueur de luth (1601), and at the court of Louis XIII. According to Jean Héroard, doctor to the young Louis XIII, the child king liked hearing Le Bailly sing songs to him to help him sleep. He was listed as musicien ordinaire du Roy in 1627, and until he retired in favour of Paul Auget in January 1625 he was, jointly with Antoine Boësset, surintendant of the music of the chambre du roy. He took part in several ballets de cour at least until 1622, including the Ballet de la follie (1614), the Ballet de Madame (1615, also known as the Ballet de Minerve) and the Ballet de Monsieur le Prince (1615). Two songs that he wrote for them were printed in Gabriel Bataille's Airs mis en tablature de luth (Paris, 1614–15), and three others in Jacques Mangeant's Recueil des plus beaux airs (Caen, 1615). Marin Mersenne, in the chapter 'De l'art d'embellir' in his Traité de l'harmonie universelle (Paris, 1627), gives an example of Le Bailly's ornamentations for Boësset's song N'espérez plus mes yeux (example in E.T. Ferand: Improvisation in Nine Centuries of Western Music, Mw, xii, 1956; Eng. trans., 1961). Mersenne and others testify to the admiration felt for Le Bailly by his contemporaries, and 30 years after his death his memory was still fresh. Bénigne de Bacilly, in his Remarques curieuses sur l'art de bien chanter (Paris, 1668/R, 4/1681; Eng. trans., 1968) cited him as someone 'à qui l'on doit la première invention des passages et diminutions'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. McGowan: L'art du ballet de cour en France (1581–1643) (Paris, 1963)
G. Durosoir: L'air de cour en France (1571–1655) (Liège, 1991)

AUSTIN B. CASWELL, GEORGIE DUROSOIR

Lebano, Felice (b Palermo, 1867; d Buenos Aires, 1916). Italian harpist and composer. He completed his musical education at the Naples Conservatory, studying the harp under Alfonso Scotti (1805–89), whom he succeeded at the conservatory. He resigned in 1886 to play in the principal cities of Europe, later extending his concert tours to include Brazil, Uruguay and Chile. He settled in Buenos Aires and accepted a professorship at the conservatory there. His compositions, all for harp, include Serenata andalusa, Serenata, Pensiero poetico, two polonaises and many transcriptions.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Bagatti: Arpa e arpisti (Piacenza, 1932), 65
M.G. Scimeca: L'arpa nella storia (Bari, 1938), 154
A.N. Schirinzi: L'arpa storia di un antico strumento (Milan, 1961), 110

ALICE LAWSON ABER-COUNT

Lebanon. Country in the MIDDLE EAST. It has a population of 3.29 million (2000 estimate) and an area of 10,452 km² and is bordered by Syria to the north and east, the Mediterranean Sea to the west and Israel to the south. Several major cities, including the capital, Beirut, are located on Lebanon's coastal strip west of the Mt Lebanon range. Further to the east is the fertile Biqa valley, and on the border with Syria is another mountain range, known as the Anti-Lebanon. Its population lives in rural villages and in cities, to which many village dwellers have migrated in recent decades. Its economy, which was adversely affected by the Lebanese civil war (1975–1990), is based on agriculture, commerce and tourism; Lebanon enjoys a mild Mediterranean climate. The official language is Arabic, and the country's population includes Christians, Muslims and Druzes, as well as members of other faiths. Lebanon has been noted for its openness to the West over many centuries and its highly cosmopolitan social life.

The cultural history of Lebanon is linked to that of the broader Middle East and reflects the influence of the social and political forces that have dominated the region. At the same time, given its internal cultural variety and its insular geographic terrain, Lebanon maintains a distinct legacy of folk and liturgical practices. Since Lebanon gained independence from the French in 1943, its pedagogical institutions, composers and performers have contributed substantially to its musical life.

I. Historical background. II. Religious traditions. III. Folk traditions. IV. Modern developments.

I. Historical background

An account of the development of music in ancient Lebanon is difficult to construct particularly because primary sources are scarce. However, inferences can be made on the basis of extant artifacts, visual depictions, literary texts and evidence of contacts across the Middle East. For example, the seafaring Phoenicians, a Canaanite, Semitic people who formed coastal city-states on the shores of Lebanon as far back as the 3rd millennium BCE, appear to have employed music and dance extensively in religious rituals, funeral rites and festive processions honouring specific deities (see JEWISH MUSIC, §II, 3). Ancient references and terracotta female figurines from the period post-1000 BCE indicate that the instruments used included the kennārā (lyre), the flute, the frame drum and the cymbals.

Furthermore, significant exchange of artists and musical artifacts existed among neighbouring civilizations, including those of ancient Egypt (see EGYPT, §I), ancient Greece (see GREECE, §I) and the biblical area of Palestine (see JEWISH MUSIC, §II). Contacts also appear to have existed with MESOPOTAMIA, notably during the periods of Assyrian, Babylonian and Persian rule. Ancient Mesopotamia is believed to have developed a thriving musical culture, which influenced the musics of both ancient Egypt and Greece.

Following the conquest of Alexander the Great in 332 BCE, the culture of the eastern Mediterranean region assimilated various Greek influences. Later, under Roman rule, the cults of various Roman gods and goddesses and the musical practices associated with each of these cults became prevalent. At the same time, the development of Greco-Roman culture was influenced by certain eastern Mediterranean rituals, notably those connected with Adonis, deity of Byblos, a coastal town known as Jbail in modern Lebanon. Objects excavated in Lebanon from this era depict festive music-making, using instruments such as the aulos (double pipe), the lyre, the harp, the panpipes and the tambourine.

The ascent and gradual decline of the Byzantine empire was followed by the Arab conquest, which led to the establishment of the Umayyad dynasty (660–750 CE). During this period, Lebanese culture assimilated new music-related practices and institutions, particularly under the influence of Islam. During the succeeding Abbasid era (750–1258), ARAB MUSIC and poetry flourished in the courts of Baghdad; non-Arab, especially Persian, influences were also important (see IRAN, §II). The economic life of Lebanon prospered under the Abbasids, and this period saw the crystallization of many of the country's religious, especially Christian, liturgical practices still in use at the beginning of the 21st century.

During the European Crusades (1096–1291), the Maronite Christian community in Lebanon came into direct contact with the French. Following the period of rule of the Mamluks and the subsequent fall of Constantinople to the Ottoman Turks, who ruled the eastern Mediterranean as part of their larger empire (1516–1914), the region's music came under direct Ottoman influence. Ottoman musical culture is usually associated with mehter (Janissary military bands), the influence of Sufi orders on musical practice, the organization of various manual (including musical) crafts under professional guilds and the development of an influential Ottoman court music (see OTTOMAN MUSIC).

The late Ottoman period in particular witnessed a rise of Western political, religious and musical influence in Lebanon. In 1866 American missionaries established the Protestant Syrian College, later called the American University of Beirut. In 1873 Edwin Lewis, an American missionary and professor at the college, wrote a short theoretical treatise in English explaining Arab music theory to Westerners interested in the music of the Middle East, and the first Protestant hymnal in Arabic was introduced, incorporating an introduction in Arabic outlining the theory of Western music and enabling Arabic speakers to interpret the notation of Western hymn tunes. The Lebanese Christian MIKHĀ'ĪL MUSHĀQA proposed a division of the octave into 24 equal quarter tones, which was frequently contested. During the late Ottoman period, Western band instruments also became widely known in Lebanon; for example, contemporary accounts indicate that during 1908 an Ottoman band performed every Friday at the garden pavilion of Burj (later Martyrs) Square in Beirut. The early 20th century also witnessed the appearance of commercial sound recording and the rise of several locally active record companies, such as Baida Records (later Baidaphon), which was established by members of a Beiruti family around 1910.

II. Religious traditions

1. Christian. 2. Muslim. 3. Druze.

1. CHRISTIAN. The Christian Lebanese are usually considered under four distinct denominational categories.

(a) A group of 'uniate' Christians comprises approximately 37% of Lebanon's population. These Christians are united in terms of their acceptance of the Catholic faith but also maintain their own rites, which may be in different languages. This group includes the Maronites (approximately 30% of the country's population), who identify with the Syrian St Maron (Mārūn, *d c*410); the Greek Catholics, also known as Melkites or locally as 'Catholics', who identify with Rome but retain certain liturgical ties with the Antiochian Orthodox Church (approximately 6% of the country's population); and other smaller groups, including the Syrian Catholics, the Armenian Catholics and the Chaldeans.

(b) Eastern Christians are theologically and ritually separate from the Roman papacy and include Orthodox Christians (also called Greek Orthodox), specifically those affiliated with the Antiochian patriarchate (approximately 10% of Lebanon's population); members of the Armenian Church (also known as the Gregorian Church); Nestorians, or followers of the Eastern or Assyrian Church; and Syrian Jacobites. The last two sects constitute very small minorities and use the Syriac language in their rites.

(c) Roman Catholics, locally known as 'Latins', follow the edicts of the Vatican and use a Roman-based liturgy. They comprise less than 1% of the country's population.

(d) Protestants also comprise less than 1% of the country's population.

The Christian liturgies display significant variety. For example, some of the Eastern-based denominations, in particular the Syrian Orthodox (Jacobite) and Assyrian churches, attribute a separate group of madrāshā (strophic hymns) to St Ephraem (*c*306–73), who was a renowned hymnodist, poet and commentator on religious texts. The Maronite liturgy, which uses the ancient Syriac language and also used Arabic after the Islamic conquest of Syria in 638, has essentially been transmitted orally, although transcriptions were undertaken by the French musicologist and Benedictine Dom Jean Parisot in the 19th century and by others. By the end of the 20th century, there were five somewhat distinct categories of Maronite chant: Syro-Maronite chant, which is many centuries old; Syro-Maronite-Arabic chant, with Syriac-based melodies and Arabic texts; melodic improvisations by a soloist using texts in Syriac or Arabic; original melodies based upon Western, Arab or Syriac models or a combination of these, with texts in classical Arabic; and melodies deriving from other liturgical or ethnic sources, notably Western melodies. In general, the singing is monophonic, and strophic structure and conjunct motion are typical. Although the formal performances are purely vocal, on certain festive occasions a hand-held bell or double bell, cymbals and a marwaḥa (a circular plaque to which rattling rings are attached) may be used.

The liturgical tradition of the Orthodox Church similarly derives from earlier religious practices. The origins of the neo-Byzantine chant in use by the end of the 20th century may be traced to the 13th century; the chant took its later form under the influence of Middle Eastern music, particularly the Ottoman modal tradition. In 1832 its theory and practice were codified by the Greek archbishop and music scholar CHRYSANTHOS OF MADYTOS in the light of contemporary musical practice. Similarly, in Lebanon the deacon, composer and scholar Mitrī al-Murr (1880–1969) provided a systematic compilation of older chants that were translated from Greek to Arabic (which became the official language of the local liturgy), accompanied by his own corrections and compositions. The liturgy incorporates chants, recitations and regular speech and tends to allow a degree of musical improvisation and melismatic elaboration by the soloist, often to the accompaniment of a vocal drone or ison (a Greek term referring both to the tonic of the melody and to the sustained note as such). The Orthodox Church maintains a neumatic system of notation, which was modified at various times during the past several centuries; it was rendered more accessible by the work of Chrysanthos in the early 19th century and elucidated further in Lebanon by the archimandrite and modern Byzantine theorist Anṭūn Hibbī. As Hibbī explained, the liturgical system follows the Chrysanthian practice of dividing the octave into 68 commas or small pitch units that form the various non-tempered intervals. Furthermore, the melodic material is based on a system of eight modes or 'tunes' (oktōēchos), at least some of which are directly equated with individual Arab-Turkish maqāmāt (melodic modes).

2. MUSLIM. The Muslim community in Lebanon is represented by the two main branches of Islam, namely the Sunnites or Sunnis (followers of orthodox Islam) and the Shi'as, who pay special homage to 'Alī, the Prophet's cousin, son-in-law and fourth successor (see ISLAMIC RELIGIOUS MUSIC). In both sects, the fundamental duties of Islam are followed and the Qur'an is revered as God's word revealed through his messenger, the Prophet Muhammad. Islamic devotion places great emphasis upon Qur'anic chanting, a practice that lies beyond traditional definitions of music and is generically known as tajwīd or tilāwa ('recitation'). Performed on a variety of solemn occasions, chanting is improvised by a soloist without any accompaniment or metric pattern and is performed in accordance with the established system of melodic modes. The recitations typically consist of phrase units followed by brief pauses and may vary in the manner of delivery; the murattal style is like a recitative, while the mujawwad style is highly florid and melismatic.

The adhān ('call to prayer') is similarly of great importance. It is traditionally performed from the minarets five times each day by one caller, who uses a specific text and improvises the melody to a certain extent, following a somewhat stylized melodic outline based upon the Arab modal tradition. A prominent figure among the Beiruti Sunnis is Shaykh Ṣalāḥ al-Dīn Kabbāra, who trained at the Islamic al-Azhar University in Cairo and became an adept chanter of both the Qur'an and the adhān.

Semi-liturgical, for example Sufi, or mystical chants can also be heard, especially on religious holidays and during the fasting month of Ramadan. Such chants may be broadcast from minaret loudspeakers or on the radio and generally include the religious qaṣīda (poem), which is soloistic and improvised and uses a spiritual poem as text. The tawshīḥ is also performed; this has a mystical text and is predominantly precomposed. It consists basically of alternations between a munshid (lead religious singer), who performs melismatic and rhythmically flexible solo verses, and a biṭānah (religious chorus), the members of which generally sing in a more syllabic and rhythmically regular style.

Among the Shi'as, most of whom have traditionally lived in southern Lebanon and the Biqa valley, a ceremony is held annually to commemorate the martyrdom of the Prophet's grandson Husayn in the city of Karbala in 680 CE. This ceremony is known as 'āshūrā' or ta'ziya ('consolation') and incorporates a type of passion play depicting the martyrdom and a form of chant narrating the tragic event and expressing the community's profound sense of sorrow.

3. DRUZE. The Druzes comprise about 6% of the population of Lebanon and live mainly in mountain villages. The Druze religious sect originated as an offshoot of Ismā'īlī Islam in the 11th century but is generally considered religiously distinct. Within this community, which is known for its conservatism, tightly-knit social structure and emphasis on chivalry and honour, religious doctrines are accessible only to the 'uqqāl (religious initiates). Devotional practices tend to be private, often taking place at the khalwāt (the initiates' secluded places of worship). Prayers also occur at funerals, being performed at the place of burial by a shaykh (religious person), who begins to chant alone and is subsequently joined by other *shaykh*s.

III. Folk traditions

Traditional secular music in Lebanon may be studied in terms of three closely related traditions.

1. Rural. 2. Bedouin. 3. Zajal.

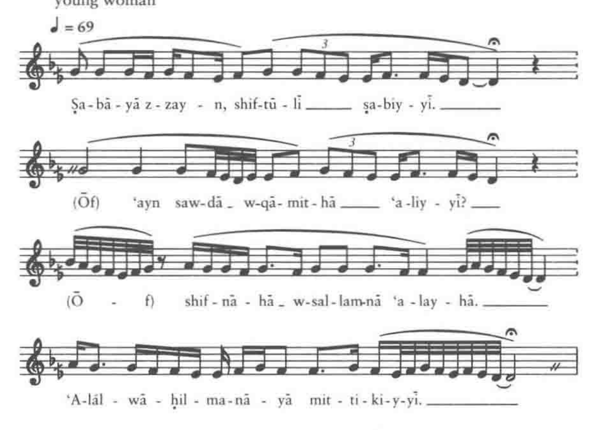
1. RURAL. Lebanese villagers may sing to express love or voice social criticism while reaping their crops or threshing wheat. A mother may sing a tahnīn (lullaby) to her child, and a shepherd may entertain himself by playing the minjayra or the mijwiz. The minjayra is a flute made from either reed or metal, which is held diagonally; the player may place it against his lips or may put the end in his mouth against his upper front teeth. The mijwiz consists of two parallel reed-pipes played using circular breathing.



Laments are performed at funerals, especially in Christian and Druze communities. The word nadb refers generically to the various types of lament performed at the funeral but is also used to designate a particular genre performed exclusively at funerals by either men or women. Men, whose singing tends to be more florid, usually perform in the courtyard of the deceased's house and during the funeral procession to the burial site, whereas women primarily sing indoors, typically around the deceased's body. Nadb proper is strophic and consists of alternations between the naddāb (lead lament-singer; female naddāba), who is usually a village poet, and others who respond with a chorus refrain, usually the first line of the text. This genre has a distinctive melodic structure with a slightly descending contour (ex.1). The text expresses the sorrow of the community and extols the virtues of the deceased. A qaṣīdat rithā' (poem of eulogy) may be sung with considerable melismatic elaboration by a male performer, typically a zajal poet; and songs performed by men or women may be borrowed from other occasions, especially the wedding, and adapted to the funerary context.

Ex.1 Nadb refrain from a female lament-performance

The firāqiyya (from firāq: 'departure') is the speciality of female lament-singers. A woman, either a professional naddāba or one of the deceased's relatives, may sing alone; or several women may take turns in singing separate firāqiyyāt verses. The descending contour of the melodic phrase is shown in ex.2; the last phrase ends on a sustained note, which may terminate in a falsetto effect like a sigh.

Ex.2 Firāqiyyāt verse performed by a female lament-singer for a deceased young woman

Finally, the funeral ceremony may feature a village brass band in which Western band instruments are used; such bands perform particularly during the funeral procession, and their repertory includes adaptations of local traditional tunes, older Arab and Turkish marches as well as 'Arabized' renditions of European funerary compositions.

Numerous songs and dances are performed at village weddings. Highly animated heroic chants collectively known as ḥidā' are performed by a male soloist in alternation with a chorus refrain (ex.3*a* and b), mostly during wedding processions. Occasionally stylized sword duels or sayf wa tirs ('sword and shield') may take place, usually accompanied by a brass band instrument or instruments. Women perform a solo wedding chant called zalāghīṭ or zaghārīd in praise of the bride or groom; each phrase begins with the cheering expression āwīhā and the last phrase ends with ululation (an extended, high-pitched trill).

During the wedding party, food and beverages, usually including 'araq (a distilled aniseed-flavoured liquor), are served, and song genres typically performed include the abū al-zuluf and the 'atābā. The abū al-zuluf is a strophic love song performed by an individual man or woman, usually with a short chorus refrain after each verse (ex.4); the melody displays a degree of improvisatory flexibility. The 'atābā consists of verses sung by a man or woman alone, usually with an added refrain (mījānā) and typically opening with the expression yā mījānā (ex.5). Sometimes these songs are accompanied by a mijwiz or an urban instrument such as the 'ūd.

Women in the group may take turns to perform the raqṣa, a somewhat reserved solo dance, to the accompaniment of singing, rhythmic clapping and the sound of a dirbakka, a conical clay hand-drum with a characteristically deep and resonant sound. The same type of dancing may also be performed by men. Another essential component of the wedding festivity is the dabka ('stomping'), a collective line-dance performed by either men or women. Holding hands with their shoulders touching, the dancers follow the same basic steps as their semicircular formation gradually moves anticlockwise. The dancers are accompanied by a minjayra or mijwiz player who stands in the middle facing the line (fig.1). The overall structure of the dance music is cyclic. Within each of many sequentially repeated short segments, one of the dancers sings a verse of a typical dabka song genre such as the dal'ūnā, which is strophic and has a melody that exists in several well-known variants (ex.6). Following the verse, the other dancers sing a refrain, and the instrument continues to accompany in unison. This leads to a climactic phrase, sometimes called zakhkha or rabṭa, during which the dancers do not sing; their dancing becomes highly animated and the dance leader at the head of the line performs more elaborate steps and leaps. The instrumental accompaniment changes accordingly and consists mostly of repeated, strongly accentuated phrases.

Ex.3 Refrains from different ḥidā' songs

Itinerant Gypsies may take part in the musical lives of the villages and to some extent those of the towns. At weddings or during holidays, Gypsy musicians may play the ṭabl and zamr, an outdoor instrumental combination consisting of a large double-sided drum and a double-reed wind instrument. Gypsy entertainers also perform on the buzuq, a long-necked fretted lute comparable to the Turkish saz; this is sometimes used to accompany a female Gypsy dancer who may play small finger cymbals while dancing.

2. Bedouin. Musical practices that are directly related to those of the Middle Eastern tribal nomads of the desert tend to have a lesser profile. They are found most typically in rural villages of the northern Biqa valley, usually around the town of Baalbek, a geographical area that appears to have been particularly exposed to Bedouin influence. Examples include the use of the Bedouin rabāba, a single-string bowed instrument with a body consisting of a quadrilateral frame covered with skin on both sides. The rabāba player is usually a shā'ir (poet or poet-singer) who traditionally uses the instrument to accompany his own sung poetry, for example to entertain in intimate social gatherings. The instrument generally provides a heterophonic accompaniment to the highly embellished vocal line. Song genres performed include the shurūqī and the 'atābā. The shurūqī or qaṣīd ('poetry') has a flexible strophic structure with individual phrases displaying a 'zigzag' contour; the text generally tells of chivalry or heroism. The theme of the 'atābā is love; within its couplets, homonyms occur at the end of each of the first and second halves (hemistiches) of the first line and at the end of the first half of the second line. Like the shurūqī, the 'atābā is strophic and allows a considerable degree of rhythmic and melodic flexibility; but in the 'atābā each of the four hemistiches tends to ascend quickly then descend gradually, with the fourth ending on the final note.

1. Dabka dancers with a minjayra player at a wedding in south Lebanon, 1960s

Bedouin rituals are emulated to some extent. In social gatherings, particularly at the homes of eminent villagers, serving coffee is observed as a custom and cherished as an emblem of generosity and social esteem. Occasionally, a Bedouin mihbāj (a large wood coffee-grinder consisting of a mortar and a pestle) is used; in proper ceremonial contexts this serves as a household utensil, a symbol of status and a medium of entertainment (fig.2). In the hands of a skilled player it can produce intricate rhythmic patterns.

Ex.4 Opening two lines of an abū al-zuluf performance, the second line is usually repeated as a chorus refrain

Ex.5 An opening mījānā refrain preceeding an 'atābā verse

Ex.6 Dal'ūnā versions, in each case only the first line of a couplet verse

2. Rabāba player with coffee-making paraphernalia, historic Baalbek ruins, 1960s

See also BEDOUIN MUSIC.

3. 'ZAJAL'. Zajal, the composing and singing of poems in Lebanese colloquial Arabic, is a self-contained and deeply-rooted tradition. A zajal poet is typically male and may be known as qawwāl ('one who speaks') or simply as shā'ir (poet). He often represents his village or religious community, performing at funerals or entertaining at festive events. He may also take part in poetry contests with other poets or teams of poets; such contests have frequently been held in theatres and broadcast on television. During the 20th century numerous zajal poets achieved fame, notably Joseph al-Hāshim (b 1925), better known by his professional title Zaghlūl al-Dāmūr.

Zajal poets are expected to improvise their own poetry and to sing it well. They sing verses followed by refrains performed by a small chorus of men; both poet and chorus may accompany themselves on the duff (small tambourine). The poets also use a particular set of poetical-musical genres; each genre has a distinctive melodic design and poetic metre, and some also have a rhyme scheme. Genres that have longer and more complex metric and melodic structures, in particular the ma'anná, tend to appear at the beginning of the performance, followed by those that have shorter and livelier patterns. Poetry contests may take the form of an animated philosophical debate or a humorous exchange of insults; such performances typically end with a compromise followed by ghazal (love poetry).

IV. Modern developments

The modern urban musical culture of Lebanon embraces many indigenous traits but also manifests extensive Western influence. The traditional features, which are mostly shared with neighbouring Arab countries, include melodic complexity and extensive use of embellishment; a certain emphasis on vocal music; a preference for monophonic or heterophonic textures; the use of improvisation as well as pre-composition; microtonal as well as diatonic melodic intervals; melodies based on an established system of melodic modes (maqāmāt); and rhythms following a system of metric modes (īqā'āt). Such features are also apparent in the use of urban instruments such as the 'ūd (short-necked unfretted lute), the qānūn (trapezoid plucked zither with triple courses of mostly nylon strings), the nay (rim-blown reed flute), the Western violin, which is locally known as kamanja or kamān and is tuned differently from its Western counterpart (normally g, d', g', d''), the riqq (small tambourine) and the ṭabla (vase-shaped hand-drum). Other instruments and instrumental combinations (several violins, cellos, a double bass and in some instances electronic instruments) may be incorporated in the modern Arab firqa (larger instrumental ensemble).

1. WESTERN-BASED CLASSICAL REPERTORY AND MUSIC EDUCATION. Lebanon's extensive exposure to European, especially French, culture has led to the development of Western-style musical ensembles and pedagogical institutions. Wadī' Ṣabrā (1876–1952) came from a Protestant Lebanese family and studied at the Paris Conservatoire with Albert Lavignac (1846–1916); he became a highly skilled pianist and a prolific composer of chamber, symphonic and operatic works. In 1910 he opened a school of music in Lebanon, the Dār al-Mūsīqā, of which he was director for the rest of his life; it became known as the National School of Music in 1925 and the National Conservatory in 1929. Anīs Fuleihān (1900–70) was a Lebanese teacher and composer born in Cyprus who formed and conducted symphonic ensembles in Lebanon and Tunisia; he also worked in the United States and became known for his numerous piano works, symphonies and symphonic suites. Tawfīq Sukkar was the director of the National Conservatory between 1964 and 1969 and taught Western solfège and theory there; he also directed the Echo des Cèdres choir and incorporated Arab microtones in his polyphonic works. The Armenian Lebanese Boghos Gelalian (b 1927) taught Western music theory at the National Conservatory and influenced many Lebanese students and composers.

Numerous Lebanese teachers have contributed to the propagation of Arab musical knowledge. Salīm al-Ḥilū (1893–*c*1979) studied in Naples and in Cairo, where he became acquainted with the music scholar and journalist of Lebanese origin Iskandar Shalfūn (1872–1936); al-Ḥilū subsequently established a music school in Haifa. In 1943 he began to teach Arab music theory and the 'ūd at the Lebanese National Conservatory and thereafter prepared a standard text on the theory of Arab music and a notated anthology of muwashshaḥ compositions. George Faraḥ (b 1913) wrote a method for the 'ūd and was appointed director of the Eastern music department of the National Conservatory in 1945.

From 1991 Lebanon's National Conservatory was directed by Walīd Gholmieh (Ghulmiyya) who was known both for his urban folkloric works and for his symphonies and symphonic poems such as al-Qādisiyya (1977) and al-Mutanabbī (1979). After the end of the Lebanese civil war, enrolment in the Conservatory increased considerably, and branches were established in cities throughout the country. At the end of the 20th century, programmes of study available included a course lasting for a minimum of six years leading to the award of a baccalaureate in music and a four-year course leading to the award of a licence in music. The Conservatory also offers other more advanced degrees and publishes a series of books on subjects related to music. In 1999 it established a national chamber ensemble and a national symphony orchestra.

Musical instruction is also provided by the Université Saint-Esprit de Kaslik, which was founded by the Maronite Order in 1949 and is located in the Kaslik suburb of Jounié, north of Beirut. In 1970 the university's Institute of Musicology was established through the efforts of Father Louis Hage (al-Ḥāj, b 1938), who directed the institute until 1986. Hage held a licence in theology from the San Anselmo Academy in Rome and a doctorate in musicology from the Sorbonne. In 1992 the institute was transformed into the faculty of music of the Université Saint-Esprit, of which Hage became dean in 1999. A School of Music and a Centre for Sacred Music are attached to the faculty. The School of Music provides theoretical and practical instruction in French, Arabic and English and offers a series of certificates. The most advanced of these is equivalent to a high school diploma and entitles the student to apply for graduate study in the music faculty, which offers a series of degrees culminating in a doctorate.

Since the early 20th century, numerous other institutions and teachers have contributed to the development of the musical life of Lebanon. Father Būlus Ashqar (1881–1962) studied at the Accademia di S Cecilia in Rome and in France and taught Western music theory and religious music at a church in the town of Antilyas; his students included the Raḥbānī brothers. Instruction was also offered by the music school of the Lebanese Academy of Fine Arts founded by Alexis Buṭrus in 1943. Bertrand Robillard (d 1964) was a particularly influential instructor at the academy who also taught the Raḥbānīs; he encouraged his local students to study counterpoint rather than chordal harmony. The Fine Arts Academy, which was founded by Samī Ṣalībī in Ras Beirut in 1956 and remained open until 1988, offered courses in art and instruction primarily on Western musical instruments.

The American University of Beirut has sponsored local artists and visiting (mainly Western) ensembles since its foundation in the late 19th century. Salvador Arnita ('Arnīṭa), a Palestinian-born organist and composer who trained in Italy, directed the university choir and taught courses in Western theory and harmony. His works included three symphonies, four concertos for piano, organ and flute and an Arabian suite. In 1944 the university introduced non-credit courses in music and in 1965 music became part of the department of fine arts. In 1966 the BA in Western music and music history was introduced. Among the teachers was the Lebanese concert pianist Diana Takieddine. Students of the short-lived programme included the Lebanese music teacher and composer Kifāḥ Fākhūrī and Ali Jihad Racy, who performed regularly in concerts at and on television at that time and broadcast a weekly radio programme on world music.

By the mid-20th century, the Fulayfil brothers, whose careers are associated with the music of police bands in Lebanon, had composed numerous anthems, which were widely admired; some are still taught in Lebanese schools. The Jeunesses Musicales of Lebanon, which was established in 1956, sponsored local performers such as the buzuq player Maṭar Muḥammad and introduced Lebanese artists to audiences abroad. Important researchers included the journalist Ilyās Saḥḥāb, who wrote on Arab music, and his brother Victor Saḥḥāb, the author of numerous histories of leading figures in the Arab music of Egypt and Lebanon.

2. Broadcasts. Radio has played an important role in disseminating local traditional and popular musics in modern Lebanon. The al-Sharq al-Adnā (Near East) station established by the British around 1940 transmitted its programmes from Cyprus but opened a recording studio in Lebanon in the early 1950s, giving many local composers and singers an outlet before the station's closure in 1956. The Lebanese official radio station was established under the French as Radio al-Sharq (Radio of the East) around 1937 and was taken over by the Lebanese government in 1946. Before its decline during and after the civil war, the Lebanese radio station had employed a cadre of administrators, technical staff, lyricists, composers, musicians and ensemble conductors; those employed included the composer Ḥalīm al-Rūmī (d 1983), who was at one time the director of the station's music division, and the composer and conductor Tawfīq al-Bāshā (b 1924), who composed for and directed major folkloric musical productions and whose works combined Arab modal melodies with distinctive polyphonic textures. In addition to its regular Arabic broadcasts, the Lebanese radio station offered programmes in French and English and kept an archive of sound recordings. By the end of the 20th century, Lebanon had about six public and private TV stations and several radio stations, most of which were privately owned.

3. Urban music. In addition to the Western-based classical repertory created by Lebanese composers, Lebanese urban music incorporates five strands that tend to overlap both historically and stylistically.

(i) Baladī. The term baladī (from balad: 'country') refers to various folksong categories that are urbanized in terms of style and context of presentation. Baladī songs follow the urban mainstream model, using the standard Arab intonation and a few basic maqāmāt; the singer is accompanied by an urban ensemble including traditional Arab instruments. The songs are preceded by short orchestral preludes usually of the standard dūlāb type. The genres most typically performed are the shurūqī (sung in maqām huzām) and the 'atābā (sung in maqām bayyātī).

A city-based genre called mawwāl Baghdādī, which allows for considerable improvisatory elaboration, is sometimes considered part of the baladī style; its name and some of its textual idiosyncrasies suggest a historical connection with Iraq. Important baladī artists of the early 20th century included the singers Farajallah Baiḍā, Muḥiyy al-Dīn Ba'yūn (1868–1934), who played the buzuq (also called ṭunbūr) and sang mawwāl Baghdādī, and Yūsuf Tāj, who was known for his use of a distinctive extended ornament resembling vibrato. More recent performers include Ilyās Rubayz, Īliyyā Baiḍā (1909–78), Wadī' al-Ṣāfī and Ṣabāḥ. Baladī songs were issued on 78 r.p.m. discs and later on LPs and cassettes both within Lebanon and among Lebanese emigrant groups, particularly in the United States; they were also broadcast regularly on Lebanese radio, especially before the Lebanese civil war.

(ii) Pedagogical art music. This is sometimes termed turāth ('heritage') or qadīm ('old'). It is used both as learning material for students wishing to master the Arab musical tradition and as an art music performed by skilled musicians in intimate gatherings as well as in theatres. The repertory includes old Arab genres, notably the muwashshaḥ, a precomposed vocal genre that uses a variety of often complex īqā'āt and is generally linked to the literary and musical legacies of Moorish Spain. The use of taqāsīm (instrumental modal improvisations on traditional solo instruments) and comparable vocal improvisations is prominent. This category of urban music also includes Ottoman-based precomposed instrumental genres such as the bashraf, the samā'ī and the longa. During the 1980s turāth pieces including muwashshaḥāt were performed in Western-style concerts by a Lebanese choir directed by the Lebanese conductor Salīm Saḥḥāb (b 1941), who trained in Russia. More recently, the indigenous repertory of art music has been performed by the violin virtuoso Nidaa Abou Mrad (Nidā' Abū Murād, b 1959), who trained as a music therapist in France; he has performed in public and made numerous CD recordings of older compositions, including Egyptian 'classics' of the late 19th century.

(iii) Ṭarab or fann. Music in the Arab mainstream style with Lebanese elements is known as ṭarab ('ecstasy' or 'enchantment') or fann ('art') and has been highly influential, especially between the early 1950s and the mid-1970s. The songs are mainly sung in Lebanese colloquial Arabic and are often based on the theme of love; they may sometimes voice social critique and humour. The music shares its instrumentation and performance style with other Arab, especially Egyptian, mainstream counterparts. The mainstream style was influenced by the influx of Palestinian musicians, especially after 1948, and centres around the ughniyya, a generic term for 'song'.

A Lebanese ughniyya typically features a muṭrib (lead solo vocalist) with a firqa and often a chorus. It usually begins with a short orchestral prelude, displays an overall strophic design and incorporates a short interlude in free rhythm generally termed the mawwāl section, which is improvisatory in nature and most often consists of one 'atābā verse. The mainstream style has also embraced an instrumental dance component, which has been associated with several well-known instrumentalists and instrumental ensembles.

Numerous mainstream singers have achieved fame in Lebanon and some have become known throughout the Arab world. These included Mary Jibrān (b 1911), a Lebanese-born singer who worked mostly in Syria and Egypt, and, in later years, the female singers Nūr al-Hudā (whose repertory included Egyptian songs), Najāḥ Salām and Zakiyya Ḥamdān. More recent celebrities include Ṣabāḥ (Jeannette Faghghālī, b 1927) and Wadī' al-Ṣāfī. Ṣabāḥ is the daughter of the zajal poet Shaḥrūr al-Wādī; she mastered the Lebanese 'atābā and abū al-zuluf genres, acted in Egyptian films, worked closely with several Egyptian composers and sang a large number of popular mainstream songs especially during the 1950s and 60s (fig.3). Wadī' al-Ṣāfī (Wadī' Fransīs, b 1921) ascended to stardom in 1939 and became known as a performer of Lebanese urban songs deriving from or emulating the style of the local mountain village. He became widely admired for his exceptional voice, his skill in improvisation and his ability to evoke ṭarab in his listeners (fig.4).

(iv) Urban-based 'folklore'. This was especially prominent during the 1960s and 70s. Its generic appellation, fūlklūr, was coined in reference to its association with

3. Singer Ṣabāḥ and composer Philemon Wihbah, Bayt al-Din, 1963

Lebanon's local lore, especially that of the mountain villages. However, its domain is essentially urban; it expresses the nostalgic feelings of the urban dwellers about rural traditions and implies an interest in creating an art form which represents Lebanon as both modern and culturally distinct. This new style is directly associated with the pioneering work of the Raḥbānī Brothers 'Āṣī (1923–86) and Manṣūr (b 1925) (see RAḤBĀNĪ), who were among the most influential and prolific composers and lyricists not only in Lebanon but in the entire Arab world. The Raḥbānīs were joined from time to time by their younger brother Elias (Ilyās, b 1938) and worked as a team that included the Lebanese singer FAYRŪZ.

The early songs of Fayrūz and the Raḥbānīs included numerous adaptations of older folk and popular tunes, many of which became unrivalled hits by the late 1950s. After 1956 the International Baalbek Festivals were held annually until the outbreak of the civil war, resuming when the war ended; these were established under the supervision of a government-sponsored committee and became one of the primary venues for performances of the Raḥbānīs' folkloric musical plays. Featuring Fayrūz as well as other singers such as Naṣrī Shams al-Dīn, Ṣabāḥ and Wadī' al-Ṣāfī, the typical Raḥbānī play incorporated dialogues basically in the colloquial Arabic of the villages of central Lebanon, songs and dances. The plots, characters and costumes generally centred around village life but sometimes depicted historical events.

The Raḥbānīs' songs incorporated elements from local folk traditions, the Arab musical mainstream and Western art music. They were essentially precomposed throughout, with little or no opportunity for improvisation, and the music was characterized by attention to compositional detail, a special interest in tone colour and a luminescent quality that was unique to the Raḥbānīs' orchestral textures. Three instruments were central to the Raḥbānī musical idiom, namely the buzuq, the duct flute or recorder, and the accordion. The metal strings of the buzuq produce a bright sound and are well suited for drone effects. The duct flute was played almost exclusively by an exceptionally talented musician, Joseph Ayyūb; it has a pure high-pitched sound quite different from the breathy sound produced by the nay. The accordion, which was constructed to produce the microtones of Arab music, similarly added to the ensemble a certain timbral crispness. These instruments were supported by a riqq, a ṭabla and, often, a double bass; the Raḥbānīs usually added legato strings and a piano, which was used to fill out the orchestral texture with light arpeggiated motifs. The distinctive quality of Fayrūz's voice contributed further to the unique Raḥbānī sound.

4. Singer Wadīʿ al-Ṣāfī with an ensemble led by violinist ʿAbbūd ʿAbd al-ʿĀl (front left), 1960s

Almost all of the dances used in the Raḥbānīs' plays were newly choreographed for performance with specific songs. The 'folkloric' dances were inspired by the village dabka, and the dancers' costumes were based on traditional folk dress (fig.5). Created by professional dance-trainers, some of whom were Lebanese Armenians, the new versions of the dances were reminiscent of Russian and Balkan folkdances in certain respects. The rise of the new dance form is usually traced back to the 1956 visit of the Russian choreographer Igor Moiseyev to Lebanon at the invitation of the wife of Lebanese President Shamʿūn; Moiseyev prescribed specific ways of developing the new dance form.

In terms of their thematic and stylistic content, many of the Raḥbānīs' works were not strictly 'folkloristic'. Some of their songs addressed non-'folkloric', including pan-Arab, topics, and many of Fayrūz's songs featured popular Western dance rhythms, including those of Latin America, as well as Western instruments. Several late Raḥbānī plays had urban themes, albeit with folk allusions and subplots.

Other artists who contributed to the development of the 'folkloric' movement included the composer Philemon (Filimūn) Wihbah (d 1985) and the composer and singer Zakī Nāṣīf (b 1916).

After the civil war, the 'folkloric' legacy was superseded to some extent by other developments, some of which were closely related. After the separation of Fayrūz and ʿĀṣī in the late 1970s and ʿĀṣī's death in 1986, Manṣūr continued to compose musical plays concerning a variety of historical, philosophical and moral issues (see RAḤBĀNĪ, (2)). The pianist and composer Ziyād Raḥbānī (see RAḤBĀNĪ, (4)), the son of ʿĀṣī Raḥbānī and Fayrūz, used certain sonorities and patterns of instrumentation from the earlier Raḥbānī music but also incorporated elements from Western music, especially jazz. Comparable innovations may be found in the works of the composer, singer and ʿūd virtuoso Marcel Khalifé (Khalīfa, b 1950). Early in his career, Khalifé led the al-Mayādīn ensemble and composed and performed songs addressing various socialist and pan-Arab issues. He also created works directly influenced by the European symphonic model. During the 1990s he composed a piece for two *ʿūd*s accompanied by a riqq and a bass instrument.

(v) The new popular style. Since the 1980s a new popular style has gradually developed, which is in some respects a derivative of both the earlier Arab mainstream and the 'folkloric' music. This more recent 'pop' is associated with a new generation of young male and female artists, many of whom rose to fame through the Lebanese television talent show Studio al-Fann.

The new style has a Lebanese character but borrows substantially from Western popular music; it has close counterparts in many Arab countries. Short love songs are the norm. A few common maqāmāt are widely used, although major and minor melodies are also quite prevalent. The style is characterized further by the extensive use of short and highly accentuated Arab dance rhythms played on the ṭabla and riqq and often reinforced by a Western drum kit, producing an accentual drive reminiscent of American rock music. The ensemble accompanying the lead vocalist also includes electronic instruments, the most important being the keyboard and the bass guitar. Many songs feature intricate harmonic textures and influences from other Mediterranean styles such as the Spanish flamenco. The new music has been transmitted throughout the Middle East through satellite communication and has developed a significant visual component; the Arab 'television song' or 'video clip' is often colourful and elaborately produced and is becoming popular throughout the Arab world.

4. RECENT TRENDS. At the beginning of the 21st century, a number of general tendencies may be discerned in the music of Lebanon. These include a further intensification of Western influence, which is already deeply entrenched; rapid musical change leading to the decline of many traditional genres and performance practices; an increase in national and international cultural links through the use of electronic and satellite technology and the further blurring of geographical and artistic boundaries; and a renewed interest in indigenous musical traditions and their potential role in the emerging global context.

5. Scene from the 1964 folkloric play 'Bayyā' al-Khawātim' at the mountain site of the Cedars with the singer Fayrūz (front right)

Numerous Lebanese artists have been active abroad. The pianists Abdel Rahman El Bacha ('Abd al-Raḥmān al-Bāshā, b 1958) and Walīd Akel ('Aql, 1945–97) and the trumpeter Nassim Maalouf (Nasīm Ma'lūf, b 1941) have performed in France; the 'ūd player and composer of fusion works Rabī' Abū Khalīl has appeared in Germany; and those who have worked in the USA include the pianist Diana Takieddine, the pianist and composer Walīd Howrānī and the composer and performer of Arab music Ali Jihad Racy (b 1943), who in 1978 became professor of ethnomusicology at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Many international artists have visited Lebanon, especially performers from the West; before the civil war visiting musicians included Karlheinz Stockhausen, Herbert von Karajan, Ella Fitzgerald, Joan Baez and Miles Davis, and during the last few years of the 20th century performances have been given in Lebanon by Luciano Pavarotti, James Brown, the Whirling Dervishes of Turkey and the Indian tablā player Zakir Hussain.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AND OTHER RESOURCES

C. Poché: 'Vers une musique libanaise de 1850 à 1950', Les cahiers de l'Oronte, no.7 (1969), 77–100
J. Porte, ed.: Encyclopédie des musiques sacrées, ii (Paris, 1969)
S. Jargy: La poésie populaire traditionelle chantée au Proche-Orient arabe, i: Les textes (Paris, 1970)
L. Hage: Le chant de l'église maronite, 12 vols (Kaslik, 1972–2000)
K. Boullata and S. Boulus, eds.: Fayrouz: Legend and Legacy (Washington DC, 1981)
A.J. Racy: 'Lebanese Laments: Grief, Music and Cultural Values', World of Music, xxviii/1 (1986), 27–40
A. Haydar: 'The Development of Lebanese Zajal: Genre, Meter and Verbal Duel', Oral Tradition, iv (1989), 189–212
A.K. Rasmussen: Individuality and Social Change in the Music of Arab Americans (diss., UCLA, 1991)
A.J. Racy: 'Music', The Genius of Arab Civilization: Source of Renaissance, ed. J.R. Hayes (New York, 3/1992), 149–71
A.J. Racy: 'Heroes, Lovers and Poet-Singers: the Bedouin Ethos in the Music of the Arab Near-East', Journal of American Folklore, cix (1996), 404–24

RECORDINGS

A Musical Anthology of the Orient: Lebanon, coll. C. Poché, UNESCO Collection, Musicaphon BM 30 SL 2030 (1972)
Laments of Lebanon, coll. A.J. Racy, Folkways FE 4046 (1985)
For further discography see Boullata and Boulus, eds. (1981).

ALI JIHAD RACY

LeBaron, (Alice) Anne (b Baton Rouge, LA, 30 May 1953). American composer and harpist. She studied composition with Frederic Goossen at the University of Alabama (BA 1974) and with Semegen and Arel at SUNY (MA 1978). After attending the 1980 summer course at Darmstadt she continued her composition studies with Kagel and Ligeti as a Fulbright Scholar (1980–81) and with Chou Wen-chung, Davidovsky and Beeson at Columbia University (DMA 1989). LeBaron has received many commissions and awards, including several from the NEA, a Guggenheim fellowship (1991) and a Cal Arts/Alpert Award (1996). During 1993–6 she served as composer-in-residence in Washington, DC, sponsored by Meet the Composer and in 1997 she joined the music faculty of the University of Pittsburgh.

Although an internationally recognized harpist who has pioneered extended techniques, the 'prepared harp' and electronic modification of harp sounds (all heard in her recording Blue Harp Studies), LeBaron's primary focus is composition. Whether writing for her own augmented harp palette, for the unusually constituted LeBaron Quintet (trumpet, tuba, electric guitar, harp and percussion) or for conventional ensembles, she uses evocative, colourful timbres. Her early works are primarily dissonant (e.g. Metamorphosis: in 3 Stages, 1977); as early as 1974, however, with the Concerto for Active

Frogs, she displayed post-modernist tendencies by combining recorded sounds of frogs with live performers working from a graphic score. In the 1980s she made greater use of microtones, non-Western music, sounds from nature, electronics and new instruments (e.g. Lamentation/Invocation, 1984). In the 1990s she added influences of popular music, for example in Dish (1990) and in American Icons (1996) with its references to jitterbug, cartoon riffs and Latin dance music. She has often combined improvisation with structured elements, as in Telluris theoria sacra for chamber ensemble (1989) and her opera The E. & O. Line (1991), which mixes non-notational traditions of 'bebop' and blues with her own contemporary classical style.

WORKS
(selective list)

many works from early 1970s withdrawn

Stage: The E. & O. Line (blues chbr op, 2, T. Davis) 1993, Washington, DC, U. of the District of Columbia, 29 Oct 1993; Blue Calls Set you Free (chbr op, 1, Davis, after Orpheus and Euridice), 1994, Washington, DC, Mt Vernon College, 16 Sept 1994; Croak (The Last Frog) (musical drama, 2, LeBaron and L.B. Jacobson), 1997, Washington, DC, Marvin Center, 10–13 April 1997

Orch: Strange Attractors, 1987; Southern Ephemera, 1994; Lasting Impressions, 1–3 nar, chbr orch, 1995; Mambo, brass qnt, 2 orch, 1995; American Icons, 1996; Double Conc., 2 hp (one player), chbr orch, 1996

Chbr and solo inst: Jewels, improvisation, hp+ metal rack, pf hp, elev gui, 1979; Metamorphosis: in 3 Stages, fl + pic, ob, cl, hn, trbn, hp, perc, 1977; Rite of the Black Sun, after A. Artaud, 4 perc, opt. 7 dancers, 1980; Dog-Gone Cat Act, improvisation, hp, 1981; Noh Reflections, vn, va, vc, 1985; Telluris theoria sacra, fl + pic, cl + b cl, vn, va, vc, pf, perc, 1989; Bouquet of a Phantom Orchestra, tpt, tuba, elec gui, hp, perc, 1990; Devil in the Belfry, vn, pf, 1993; Southern Ephemera, fl + a fl, vc, 2 Harry Partch insts (surrogate kithara, harmonic canon), 1993; Sukey, str qt, 1994; Going Going Gone, str qt, 1997; Green Card, tpt, tuba, elec gui, hp, perc, 1997; Solar Music, fl + pic + a fl + b fl, hp, 1997

Vocal: Concerto for Active Frogs (theatrical work), B-Bar, small mixed chorus, percussionist, 2nd player (vn/va/vc/ob/sax/cl), 3rd player (bn/trbn/tuba/db), tape, 1975; The Sea and the Honeycomb (A. Machado, trans. R. Bly), S/Mez, fl + pic, cl + b cl, pf, 2 perc, 1979; Lamentation/Invocation (E. Honig, after Orphic legend), Bar, cl, vc, hp, 1984; Dish (J. Hagedorn), S, elec vn, perc, elec db, pf, 1990; Story of my Angel (H. Finster), S, SA, pf, opt. live elecs, 1993; Christmas Lights, Mez, vn/fl, hp, 1994, arr. vn, hp; The Turtle Tango, opt. nar, children's chorus, pf/accdn, 1995

Tape, inst with tape: Planxty Bowerbird, hp, 1982; Eurydice is Dead (dance score), 1983; I am an American . . . my Government will Reward you, hp, 1988; Blue Harp Studies nos.1 and 2, 1991; Rhythms (dance score), 1994; Gimme a Bigfoot, hp, 1995; Sachamama, fl, a fl, 1995

Principal publishers: Golden Croak, Norruth

Principal recording companies: CRI, Ear-Rational, Mode, Music & Arts, Tellus, Trans Museq

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. LeBaron with D. Bouliane: 'Darmstadt 1980', PNM, xix (1980–81), 420–41
J.M. Edwards: 'North America since 1920', Women and Music: a History, ed. K. Pendle (Bloomington, IN, 1991), 225
C. Gagne: Soundpieces 2: Interviews with American Composers (Metuchen, NJ, 1993)
B. Shoemaker: 'Anne LeBaron', Down Beat, lx/11 (1993), 12 only
T. May: 'Listening to the Silence of Frogs', Washington Post (6 April 1997)

J. MICHELE EDWARDS

Le Bé, Guillaume (b Troyes, 1525; d Paris, 1598). French typecutter. He became an apprentice at the age of 15 in the household of Robert Estienne, where he learnt from Claude Garamond the art of cutting punches. After a five-year stay in Italy he returned to Paris at the end of 1550. There he worked for Garamond and then in 1552 set up in business as one of the first independent type founders; his last type was cut in 1592.

Le Bé was well known for his Hebrew types, but his Roman and Greek types were almost as popular. Between 1554 and 1559 he engraved three music types on commission from the firm of Le Roy & Ballard (illustrated on f.26 of his type specimen book, annotated in his own hand, F-Pn nouv.acq.fr.4528). A fourth music type attributed to Le Bé is listed in an 18th-century inventory of the successor firm of Ballard. A plainsong music type was cut by him but evidently not sold to Le Roy à Ballard, since it is listed as still a part of Le Bé's stock in an inventory drawn up at the time of his death. This inventory also lists music punches and matrices of all kinds designed by other makers; many of these are unidentified, but several are attributed to Attaingnant, Danfrie, Granjon, Villiers and Du Chemin.

After Le Bé's death his son Guillaume (*c*1563–1645) and subsequently his grandson, also Guillaume (d 1685), inherited the business. They were also type cutters but probably did not make any new music types; nevertheless they continued to sell from the stock of punches and matrices they inherited. The foundry was sold by the Le Bé heirs in 1730. A document in the hand of the second Guillaume Le Bé, with additions in a later hand, known as the Le Bé Memorandum, traces the history of type making, particularly in France. It contains references (not always accurate) to music types cut by Granjon, Sanlecque, Jean Jannon and Du Chemin.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Omont: 'Spécimens de caractères hebreux, grecs, latins et de musique gravés à Venise et à Paris par Guillaume Le Bé (1546–1574)', Mémoires de la Société de l'histoire de Paris et de l'Ile de France, xv (1888), 273–83
E. Howe: 'The Le Bé Family', Signature, viii (1938), 1–27
F. Lesure and G.Thibault: Bibliographie des éditions d'Adrian le Roy et Robert Ballard (1551–1598) (Paris, 1955), suppl., RdM, xl (1957), 166–72
S. Morison: L'inventaire de la fonderie Le Bé (Paris, 1957)
H. Carter: Sixteenth-Century French Typefounders: the Le Bé Memorandum (Paris, 1967)
D. Heartz: Pierre Attaingnant, Royal Printer of Music (Berkeley, 1969)

SAMUEL F. POGUE

Lebègue [Le Bègue], Nicolas (b Laon, *c*1631; d Paris, 6 July 1702). French composer, organist and harpsichordist. He was of humble origin. Of his early musical education in Laon nothing definite is known, though it may be assumed that his uncle (and namesake), a maître joueur d'instrument, played some part in it. Uncertainty also surrounds the date and circumstances in which he moved to Paris. By 1661, however, he had clearly been there long enough to have established his reputation, for in the chapter records of Troyes Cathedral for that year he is called 'fameux organiste de Paris' (this, the earliest document to refer directly to Lebègue, relates to a payment for his playing at the cathedral when he was passing through Troyes). Although he must surely have held a Paris appointment by this time – Dufourcq (1954) suggested that it could have been at the church of the Mathurins in the rue St Jacques – the only such post he is known to have held was at St Merri from 18 December 1664 until his death. In 1678 he also became organiste du Roi, a duty and privilege that he shared with Nivers, J.-D. Thomelin and J.-B. Buterne, attending the royal chapel during the October quarter.

To judge from the number of reprints and copies of his keyboard works Lebègue enjoyed considerable success as a composer. No less considerable was his reputation as an expert on organ building: in this capacity he advised church authorities as far afield as Bourges, Blois, Chartres, Soissons and Troyes. In addition he must be reckoned one of the most influential teachers of the ensuing generation of French organists, numbering among his pupils Grigny, Dagincourt and Nicolas Geoffroy and probably Gilles Jullien and Gabriel Garnier (the last-named succeeded him at court).

Lebègue's keyboard music dominates his output. There are five keyboard publications – two livres de clavecin and three d'orgue – and a number of unique manuscript pieces, notably in two sources (at US-BEm), one of which contains seven harpsichord pieces attributed by Curtis (1970) to Lebègue, the other 20 unique organ pieces. Numerous manuscript copies of Lebègue's organ pieces have survived, far exceeding those of any other French organist of the period, and underlining the esteem in which he was held by his contemporaries.

Lebègue's harpsichord music owes much to that of Chambonnières and Louis Couperin, but there are notable differences. In his titles Lebègue eschewed picturesque elements and topical allusions and his music is correspondingly less personalized, more formal. The formality is reflected, furthermore, in the organization of his suites: the allemande–courante coupling becoming the standard opening, preceded only in his first book by unmeasured preludes. After the courante there follows a mixture of gavottes, minuets, canaris, gigues, sarabandes, chaconnes, ballets and bourrées, often with their doubles. Despite the censure in Pirro (1924), apropos of the first livre de clavecin, that 'the preludes seem to absorb in advance all the fantasy which might disturb the ordre consacré of these dances', Lebègue's harpsichord music contains his most poised and elegantly turned work for keyboard. Moreover, such pieces as the Chaconne in C (first book) and the Chaconne grave in G (second book) attain a stature fully worthy of Louis Couperin.

Lebègue's contribution to the organ repertory is substantial and correspondingly important. His first livre d'orgue, comprising eight suites, shows him as an innovator, rejecting the more severely contrapuntal style found in the organ music of Louis Couperin and Nivers (not to mention Roberday), evolving the récit en taille (which he considered the most beautiful of all the genres of organ music) and coining the trio à deux dessus, the trio à deux claviers et pédalle and the dialogue entre le dessus et la basse. The independent pedal required in some of these genres marks a new departure in French organ technique. The exceptional nature of this first book, demanding an instrument of considerable resource and an organist no less well endowed, is thrown into relief by the character of Lebègue's second livre d'orgue, containing versets for the Mass and the Magnificat; it is much more modest in design and was intended for the organist of only 'une science médiocre'. His third book, comprising ten offertories, four symphonies, nine noëls, a picturesque piece entitled Les cloches and eight élévations, was published at the peak of his career and is unique in classical French organ literature. Dufourcq designated its contents as 'paraliturgical', which perhaps characterizes the secular spirit that dominates the collection. Although Lebègue's organ music is considerably less interesting than that of Grigny, for instance, it is to him that we owe the evolution of the musical language that his more illustrious pupil was to perfect.

The scale of Lebègue's extant vocal music is small in comparison to the keyboard music; some appears to have been lost, judging from references in 18th-century sources. That which survives comprises a pseudo-plainchant hymn tune and a printed volume of motets for solo voice and basso continuo. The first edition of the latter, published in 1687, ascribes the music to 'Mr Noel', though it includes a preface praising Lebègue's skill; the second edition, published posthumously in 1708, gives Lebègue as the composer. Mr Noel was presumably a pseudonym concealing Lebègue's reticence about his first published vocal music. The motets were, according to the preface, composed for the Benedictine nuns of the convent of Val de Graçe, and are expertly written. They are also novel in respect of the organ's role from time to time as a concertante voice in the texture.

WORKS

Editions: N. Lebègue: Oeuvres de clavecin, ed. N. Dufourcq (Monaco, 1956) [D]
N. Lebègue, Archives des maîtres de l'orgue, ix, ed. A. Guilmant and A. Pirro (Paris, 1909) [G]

INSTRUMENTAL

Les pièces d'orgue (Paris, 1676), G
Les pièces de clavessin (Paris, 1677/R), D
Second livre d'orgue (Paris, ?1678/R), G
Troisième livre d'orgue (Paris, ?1685/R), G
Second livre de clavessin (Paris, ?1687), D
7 pieces, hpd, US-BEm De La Barre 6
Several pieces, org, F-Pn, G appx; authorship questioned by Dufourcq (1972)
20 pieces, org, US-BEm Lebègue MS

VOCAL

Motets pour les principales festes de l'année, 1v, bc, & plusieurs petits ritournelles, org/viols (Paris, 1687/R)
1 hymn, in Hymni sacri et novi (Paris, 1698)
Vespers, 2 choirs; lost, cited in De Fontenay, Dictionnaire des artistes (Paris, 1776)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Pirro: biographical note to Nicolas Lebègue: Oeuvres complètes d'orgue, ed. A. Guilmant and A. Pirro, Archives des maîtres de l'orgue, ix (Paris, 1909/R)
A. Tessier: 'L'oeuvre de clavecin de Nicolas Le Bègue', RdM, iv (1923), 106–12
N. Dufourcq: Nicolas Lebègue … étude biographique (Paris, 1954)
N. Dufourcq: 'A travers l'inédit: Nicolas Lebègue', RMFC, i (1960), 205–6
A. Curtis: 'Musique classique française à Berkeley: pièces inédites de Louis Couperin, Lebègue, La Barre, etc.', RdM, lvi (1970), 123–64
N. Dufourcq: Le livre de l'orgue français, 1589–1789, iv: La musique (Paris, 1972)
M.L. Liberman: The Organ Works of Nicolas Lebègue in the Context of Contemporary Theory and Practice (diss., Northwestern U., 1984)
N. Dufourcq: 'Autour de Nicolas Lebègue: un recueil de motets inédits', RMFC, xxv (1987), 7–26
E. Gallat-Morin: Le livre d'orgue de Montréal (Montreal, 1988)
E. Gallat-Morin: 'Une nouvelle découverte à Montréal dans la bibliothèque musicale de Jean Girard: des oeuvres vocales rares de Lebègue, de Bacilly et du Mont', Revue de musique des universitaires canadiennes, xvii (1997), 17–29

EDWARD HIGGINBOTTOM

Le Bel, Barthélemy (b Anjou, Isère, *c*1483; d Geneva, 16 Oct 1553). French composer. After being ordained a priest in the early years of the 16th century he was appointed 'master of the boys of the vestment' at St Pierre Cathedral, Geneva, where Antoine Brumel had had a similar post some years before. He later held a similar position at the Ste Chapelle, Dijon. Having previously sought the patronage of Charles de Lorraine, Duke of Guise, he announced that the Emperor Charles V would be welcome at Dijon after his victory over François I at Pavia. He was arrested and interrogated on 17 March 1525 by the municipal judge. On 1 March 1552 he requested permission to reside in Geneva and to pursue his musical art. He died there at the age of 70. None of his compositions are known to have been printed during his lifetime, but a Latin motet for four voices was published in Geneva in 1554 (1554[13]) and in the following year a three-voice setting of the Ten Commandments and three four-voice settings of prayers by Clément Marot (1555[16]), which, in spite of their French texts, were described as being 'in the form of motets'. (This no doubt refers to their imitative rather than purely homophonic style.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Pidoux, ed.: Le psautier huguenot du XVIe siècle, ii (Basle, 1962), 175

F. Lesure: 'Some Minor French Composers of the 16th Century', Aspects of Medieval and Renaissance Music: a Birthday Offering to Gustave Reese, ed. J. LaRue and others (New York, 1966/R), 538–44, esp. 542

FRANK DOBBINS

Lebel, Firmin (b Noyon, early 16th century; d Rome, 27–31 Dec 1573). French choir director and composer, active in Italy. The earliest known documents concerning his career indicate that he was a chaplain at S Maria Maggiore and the director of its Cappella Liberiana. As such, he may have had the young Palestrina in his charge. On 25 October 1545 Lebel became maestro di cappella at S Luigi dei Francesi, a position that he retained for 16 years until September 1561, when he was succeeded by Annibale Zoilo. His directorship was an extremely successful one; he managed to enlarge the chapel from a group of two adults and two boys in 1548 to one of seven adults and two or three boys in 1552. On leaving S Luigi on 4 September 1561, he joined the papal chapel; so great was his reputation that Pius IV issued a motu proprio waiving the usual entrance examination and in 1563 Lebel was elected puntatore annuale of the chapel. His service was short-lived, for on 31 August 1565 he and 13 other singers were dismissed in the wake of reforms (drawn up by a commission headed by the Cardinals Borromeo and Vitelli) that aimed to reduce the size of the chapel. Lebel spent his remaining years in Rome where he held several benefices including one at S Maria Maggiore. On 4 March 1574 the papal singers sang a Requiem in his honour at S Luigi dei Francesi. Whether Firmin Lebel was related to Barthélemy Le Bel (*c*1483–1553), a musician active in Geneva, is not known.

Three motets by him survive: Ave verum corpus for five voices (in I-Rvat C.S.38), Puer natus est for six voices (in C.S.38), and Sancta Maria succurre miseris for five voices (in C.S.17). (Both the works in C.S.38 are available in modern editions in Psalterium, ed. R. Casimiri, Rome, 1922.) Regardless of the merit of his compositions – and they show Lebel to be a competent composer – his importance rests on his activities as maestro di cappella of a number of the most important churches of Rome.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Casimiri: 'Firmin Le Bel di Noyon', NA, i (1924), 64–77

A. Cametti: 'Firmino Lebel: maestro in S. Luigi dei Francesi a Roma', RMI, xxxii (1925), 196–205

R. Casimiri: 'Firmin Lebel e la data di sua morte', NA, iii (1926), 46–57

H.-W. Frey: 'Die Kapellmeister an der französischen Nationalkirche San Luigi dei Francesi in Rom im 16. Jahrhundert, I: 1514–1577', AMw, xxii (1965), 272–93

F. Lesure: 'Some Minor French Composers of the 16th Century', Aspects of Medieval and Renaissance Music: a Birthday Offering to Gustave Reese, ed. J. LaRue and others (New York, 1966/R), 538–44

L.L. Perkins: 'Notes bibliographiques au sujet de l'ancien fond musical de l'église de Saint Louis des Français à Rome', FAM, xvi (1969), 57–71

R. Sherr: 'Competence and Incompetence in the Papal Choir of the Age of Palestrina', EMc, xxii (1994), 606–29

ALLAN W. ATLAS

Lebendig (Ger.: 'lively'). See VIVACE.

Lebertoul, Franchois [Le Bertoul, François; Franchois] (fl 1409–?1428). Franco-Flemish composer. An entry in a register of Cambrai Cathedral for the year 1409–10 describes him as frequentanti chorum; evidently he was employed at this time to sing with the choir on the major feast days of the liturgical year. He may also have been the 'Messire Bertoul grand vicaire' mentioned in Cambrai accounts from 1427–8. Five chansons are currently attributed to him, all of which are in GB-Ob Can.misc.213; the style of the rondeaux suggests that they may date from the early 1420s, although some of the ballades may be earlier. His most impressive work is the ballade Au pain faitich which is characterized by complex cross-rhythms, vocal flourishes and striking harmonic shifts. The triple ballade O mortalis homo/O pastores/O vos multi, which comments on the vanity of human endeavour, is somewhat unusual in that it has three separate texts, all in Latin.

WORKS

Edition: Early Fifteenth-century Music, ed. G. Reaney, CMM, xi/2 (1959) [R]

BALLADES

Au pain faitich ne me veul plus tenir, 3vv, R 45
Depuis un peu un joyeux parlement, 3vv, R 43
O mortalis homo/O pastores/O vos multi, 3vv, R 47

RONDEAUX

Las, que me demanderoye, 3vv, R 42
Ma doulce amour et ma mestresse, 3vv, R 41

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PirroHM

E. Dannemann: Die spätgotische Musiktradition in Frankreich und Burgund vor dem Auftreten Dufays (Strasbourg, 1936/R)

H. Besseler: Bourdon und Fauxbourdon (Leipzig, 1950, rev., enlarged 2/1974 by P. Gülke)

D. Fallows: A Catalogue of Polyphonic Songs, 1415–1480 (Oxford, 1999)

CRAIG WRIGHT/R

Lebeuf [Le Beuf], Jean (b Auxerre, 7 March 1687; d Auxerre, 10 Aug 1760). French historian. His early training was in religion and humanistic studies in his native city and in Paris (from 1701). In 1712 he returned to Auxerre as canon, and shortly afterwards as sous-chantre, at the cathedral – a post he held until 1743. His principal interests – church history, archaeology and music in the liturgy – manifested themselves early in his career, and he published over 200 essays on various aspects of these subjects throughout his life. He actively corresponded with leading church figures of the day and travelled widely in pursuit of knowledge. In 1740 he was named a member of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres.

Lebeuf's principal contributions to music relate to the history, theory and practice of plainchant. He was a proponent of reform in liturgical practice, and he played an active role in promoting revisions in the music for the Gallican service. Many of his ideas, first stated in letters and articles in the Mercure de France, reappear in his major work devoted to music, Traité historique et pratique sur le chant ecclésiastique (1741). This work resulted from his preparation (undertaken in 1734) of a revised antiphonary and gradual for the diocese of Paris. It is divided into two parts: 'Traité historique', which deals with the history, organization and forms of plainchant; and 'Traité pratique', intended to serve as a handbook for the teaching and performance of plainchant, the basic contents of which Lebeuf attributed to his former teacher, Claude Chastelain. Of interest in the treatise are his concern with retaining, in the face of church reforms, certain traditional characteristics of Gallican chant, such as ornate passage-work and agréments; his favouring of a revised system of solmization syllables to permit the singing of chromatically altered notes in chant (ut, re, ma, mi, fa, fi, sol, la, sa, si, ut); and his descriptions of the varied use of discant ('déchant') and fauxbourdon in the development of liturgical practice in France.

WRITINGS

BOOKS

Traité historique et pratique sur le chant ecclésiastique (Paris, 1741/R)

ARTICLES

in historical studies

'De l'état des sciences dans l'étendue de la monarchie française, sous Charlemagne' (Paris, 1734); repr. in Leber, xiv, 338ff

'Dissertation sur l'état des sciences dans les Gaules depuis la mort de Charlemagne, jusqu'à celle du Roy Robert', Recueil de divers écrits pour servir d'éclaircissemens à l'histoire de France, et de supplément à la notice des Gaules, ii (Paris, 1738), esp. 95ff

'Dissertation sur l'état des sciences en France depuis la mort du roi Robert, jusqu'à celle de Philippe-le-Bel', Dissertation sur l'histoire ecclésiastique et civile de Paris, suivies de plusieurs éclaircissemens sur l'histoire de France, ii (Paris, 1741); repr. in Leber, xiv–xv, esp. xiv, 551ff in academic journals

'Notice sommaire de deux volumes de poësies françoises et latines [by G. de Machaut], conservés dans la bibliothèque des Carmes-Déchaux de Paris, avec une indication du genre de musique qui s'y trouve', Mémoires de littérature, tirés des registres de l'Académie royale des inscriptions et belles-lettres, depuis l'année MDCCXLIV, jusques & compris l'année MDCCXLVI, xx (Paris, 1753), 377–98

in 'Mercure de France'

'Lettre écrite de . . . en Brie, contenant quelques remarques sur le chant ecclésiastique' (Sept 1725), 1987–98

'Dessein d'un recueil d'hymnes nouvelles avec les plus beaux chants, selon chaque mesure' (Aug 1726), 1729–59

'Lettre sur le système de chant inventé depuis peu par un prêtre de S. Sulpice' (Feb 1728), 217–38; 'Continuation des remarques' (Nov 1728), 2350–60; (Dec 1728), 2571–85

'Observations sur la composition du chant ecclésiastique de plusieurs nouveaux bréviaires' (June 1728), 1162–69, 1300–08

'Réponses aux questions proposées dans le Mercure du mois de Novembre dernier, à l'occasion de quelques contestations musicales, formées à Troyes en Champagne' (May 1729), 844–55

'Lettre . . . à M. H[erluyson] chanoine de l'église cathédrale de [Troyes] sur le choix que les musiciens ont fait de Ste. Cécile pour leur Patronne' (Jan 1732), 21–46; (June 1732), 1081–8

'Lettre sur les orgues' (Aug 1737), 1750–54

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB

P. Papillon: Bibliothèque des auteurs de Bourgogne (Dijon,1745/R), i, 388ff

J.-M. Quérard: La France littéraire, ou Dictionnaire bibliographe (Paris, 1827–64/R), v, 13–14

C. Leber: Collection des meilleurs dissertations, notices et traités particuliers relatifs à l'histoire de France (Paris, 1838), xiv–xv

P. Aubry: La musicologie médiévale: histoire et méthodes (Paris, 1900/R), 31ff

A. Cioranescu: Bibliographie de la littérature française du dix-huitième siècle, (Paris, 1969), ii, 1055ff

D. Launay: La musique religieuse en France du concile de Trente à 1804 (Paris, 1993)

P. Vendrix: Aux origines d'une discipline historique: la musique et son histoire en France aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Geneva, 1993)

ALBERT COHEN/PHILIPPE VENDRIX

Lebhaft (Ger.: 'lively', 'sprightly', 'brisk'). A tempo mark. In the second movement of his Piano Sonata in A op.101 Beethoven translated lebhaft, marschmässig as vivace alla marcia; but in the first movement etwas lebhaft und mit der innigsten Empfindung becomes allegretto ma non troppo. The introduction to Act 3 of Lohengrin is headed sehr lebhaft. The derivative Belebt implies animato.

□

Lebič, Lojze (b Prevalje, Koroška, 23 Aug 1934). Slovene composer and conductor. He studied archaeology at Ljubljana University until 1957, then composition with Kozina and conducting with Švara at the Ljubljana Academy of Music. He conducted the Tone Tomšič chorus (1959–63) and the Radio-Televizije chamber chorus of Ljubljana (1962–71). In 1971 he became musical editor of Radio Ljubljana and from 1972 to 1986 was a professor at the Ljubljana Pedagogical Academy. In 1986 he became a professor of music theory in the department of musicology at the University of Ljubjana. Lebič was secretary of the Yugoslav section of the ISCM from 1981 to 1991. He became a member of the Slovenian Academy of Arts and Science in 1995.

Lebič's music is strongly influenced by the Polish avant garde, but follows a separate line of development, with a strong feeling for melodic lines and a 'symphonic' interaction of the various elements used. This is well illustrated in the chamber works Meditacija and Ekspresije, in which the harmonic implications of the contrapuntal lines are carefully worked out, despite an apparently free coordination. The development of these characteristics in kons (b) (1968) shows a strong dramatic sense, while in kons (a) (1970) phonetic material is integrated into the delicate textures. In the cantata Požgana trava ('Scorched Grass') the full orchestra is used with similar care to balance the recitative-like vocal lines. Lebič's orchestral masterpiece, Korant, reconciles on the one hand the huge orchestral tutti with the subtle sounds of the chamber works, and on the other static harmony with vigorous rhythmic activity and variety.

Lebič's later music focusses on the advanced techniques of the violin, especially in cooperation with the Slovenian violinist Tomaž Lorenz; the exploration of less frequently encountered instruments (recorder and accordion); a considerable use of advanced vocal and choral resources, particularly in Fauvel '86 and Ajdna; and a reassessment of orchestra techniques in the monolithic Queensland Music (1989) and the dramatic Sinfonija z orglami (1993).

WORKS

(selective list)

Orch: Sinfonietta, 1962; Sentence, wind, 2 pf, perc, 4 vc, 2 db, 1967; Korant, 1969; Nicina, 1971; Glasovi [Voices], hp, pf, hpd, gui, mand, perc, str, 1974; Tangram, chbr orch, 1977; Uvertura, 3 inst groups, 1985; Queensland Music, 1989; Simfonija z orglami [Sym. with Org], 1993

Vocal: Požgana trava [Scorched Grass] (cant., D. Zajc), Mez, orch, 1965; Novembrske pesmi, 1v, orch, 1981–2; Štiri Kocbekova pesmi [4 Songs on Kocbek's Poetry], 1v, pf, 1983; Fauvel '86, chorus, pf, perc, ens, tape (1986); Hvalnica sveta [Hymn to the World], 2 choruses, pf, synth, perc, 4 gui, ens, tape, 1988; Hvalnica sveta [Hymn to the World], 2 choruses, pf, synth, perc, 4 gui, ens, tape, 1988; Ajdna (Glasba o času) [Music about Time], chorus, recs, perc, synth, 1994–6

Chbr: Sonata, vn, pf, 1959; Sonata, cl, pf, 1960; Inscriptiones, fl, cl, tpt, trbn, perc, hp, vc, 1965; Meditacija za 2, va, vc, 1965, rev. 1972; Ekspresije, pf trio, 1968, rev. 1972; kons (b), 3 cl, perc, hp, str qt, 1968; kons (a), fl, cl, hn, perc, pf, hp, str trio, 1970; Atelier, vn, pf, 1973; Epicedion, vn, chordal inst, 1978, rev. 1982; Quartet, perc, 1979; Invisibilia, vn, pf, 1981; Str Qt, 1983; Od blizu in daleč [From Near and Far], recs, 1991; ... illud tempus, tpt, org, 1996

Solo inst: Impromptus, pf, 1967–74; Sonet, pf, 1976; Chalumeau, cl, 1977; Okus po cašu, ki bezi [A Taste of Time Fleeting Away], org, 1978; Chalumeau II, ob, 1985; Rubato, va, 1989; In voce cornu, hn, 1990; Rej, accdn, 1995

Principal publishers: Breitkopf & Härtel, Deutsche Verlag für Musik, Društvo slovenskih skladateljev (Ljubljana), Peters

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Rijavec: Slovenska glasbena dela [Slovenian musical works] (Ljubljana, 1979), 141–8

N. O'Loughlin: 'The Music of Lojze Lebič', MZ, xix (1983), 71–81

B. Učakar: 'Lebičev Korant', Delo (7 March 1991)

F. Schneider: 'O komorni glasbi Lojzeta Lebiča / Zur Kammermusik von Lojze Lebič', Slovenska glasba v preteklosti in sedanjosti, ed. P. Kuret (Ljubljana, 1992), 299–306

V. Globokar, L. Lebič and J. Jež: 'Pogovor z Vinkom Globokarjem in Lojzetom Lebičem ib njuni 60-letnici', Naši zbori, xlvi/3–4 (1994), 69–74

NIALL O'LOUGHLIN

Lébl, Vladimír (b Prague, 6 Feb 1928; d Prague, 8 June 1987). Czech musicologist. He began studying medicine, but after three years transferred to music and ethnography at the arts faculty of Prague University, where he was a pupil of Očadlík and Sychra. He took the doctorate with a dissertation on Janáček in 1953. He then became a lecturer at the department of music history at Prague University (1953–7), chief of the music section of the Prague Theatre Institute (1957–63), and research fellow at the musicology institute at the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences in Prague (1963). He obtained the CSc degree in 1966 with a monograph on the life and work of Vítězslav Novák. From the late 1950s he was active as a music critic (contributing to Hudební rozhledy, Divadlo, Literární noviny and other journals) and as an administrator, notably in the Czechoslovak Composers' Union. Later he concentrated on research into the history of music, particularly Czech music in the 20th century, and into acoustics, electronic music and musique concrète, taking his standpoint mainly from the work of the French experimental studio of Pierre Schaeffer. In the 1960s, with the music director and theorist Eduard Herzog, he was instrumental in propagating electronic music among Czech and Slovak composers, presenting before the public electronic works by Vostřák, Kopelent and others. Of particular value were the courses on electronic music that he organized in Prague and Plzeň jointly with Czechoslovak Radio and the Czechoslovak Composers' Union (1965–7). In 1966 he became head of the sound research laboratory at the musicology institute of the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences, a new department which he built up largely by himself. Lack of financial support halted his laboratory work; in later years his broad outlook, experience and organizational talents were used in teams based at the Musicology Institute examining the theory and history of musicology. This resulted in two major publications (1983, 1988).

WRITINGS

Pět kapitol o Leoši Janáčkovi [Five chapters on Janáček] (diss., U. of Prague, 1953)

Cesty moderní opery [Paths of modern opera] (Prague, 1961)

Vítězslav Novák: život a dílo [Life and work] (CSc diss., U. of Prague, 1966; Prague, 1964) with L. Mokrý: 'O současném stavu nových skladebných směrů u nás', [The present state of new directions of composition in Czechoslovakia], Nové cesty hudby (Prague, 1964), 11–35

Elektronická hudba (Prague, 1966)

'Metahudba' [Metamusic], Podoby: literární sborník, ii (1969), 172

'Nástin typologie zvukového materiálu' [An outline of the typology of sound material], HV, vi (1969), 260–80

'Některé komunicační problémy elektronické hudby' [Some communication problems of electronic music], HV, vii (1970), 267–77

'O mezních druzích hudby' [On marginal types of music], Nové cesty hudby, ed. E. Herzog (Prague, 1970), 216–47

'Moderní hudba' [Modern Music], Československá vlastivěda, xi/3, ed. M. Očadlík and R. Smetana (Prague, 1971), 227–85

'Příspěvek k morfologii zvukové struktury' [The morphology of sound structures], HV, viii (1971), 3–18

'Houslový koncert Albana Berga' [Berg's Violin Concerto], HV, ix (1972), 3–41 with others: Dějiny české hudební kultury 1890–1945 [The history of Czech musical culture] (Prague, 1972–81)

'Objektivní a subjektivní problematika zvukové barvy' [Objective and subjective problems of timbre], HV, xi (1974), 211–48

'Gustav Mahler als Kapellmeister des Deutschen Landestheaters in Prag', HV, xii (1975), 351–70

'Pražske mahlerovství let 1898–1918' [The Mahlerism of Prague 1898–1918], HV, xii (1975), 99–135 with others: 'Teorie hudební vědy' [Theory of musicology], HV, xii (1975), 291–322 [discussion]

'Případ Vojcek' [The case of Wozzeck], HV, xiv (1977), 195–227 [with Ger. summary] with J. Ludvová: 'Dobové kořeny a souvislosti Smetanovy Me vlasti' [Historical roots and connections of Smetana's My Homeland], HV, xviii (1981), 100–141

'Pražské ohlasy Debussyho tvorby v letech 1905–1921' [Prague's response to Debussy's music 1905–21], HV, xix (1982), 195–234 with others: Hudba v českých dějinách od středověku do nové doby [Music in Czech history from the Middle Ages to modern times] (Prague, 1983, 2/1987)

'Tvorba Jana Klusáka v letech 1959 až 1962' [The work of Klusák 1959–62], HV, xxiii (1986), 112–42

'Odkaz Josefa Berga' [The heritage of Berg], OM, xiv (1987), 34–9 with others: Hudební věda [Musicology] (Prague, 1988)

'Životopis Miloslava Kabeláče' [Kabeláč's biography], HV, xxv (1988), 8–63

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Bek: 'Muzikologické dílo Vladimíra Lébla' [The musicological works of Lébl], HV, xxv (1988), 3–7

JOSEF BEK

Le Blan, Pierre-Joseph (b Zinnik [now Hennegau], bap. 18 July 1711; d Ghent, bur. 25 May 1765). Flemish carillonneur and composer. Known by 1729 as a carillonneur and clockmaker in his home town, Le Blan appeared from 1743 in Veurne exercising these two occupations. In 1746 he succeeded Pierre Schepers as town carillonneur at Ghent, becoming town clockmaker in 1751. He acted several times as a consultant in carillon building (Ghent, Bruges, Dunkirk). In 1763 he gave a concert on a carillon with small glass bells which he had invented. One work is known, a Livre de clavecin (Ghent, 1752/R) containing six suites.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

VannesD

P. Bergmans: 'Le carilloneur gantois Le Blan et son "Livre de clavecin", 1752', Beiaardkunst I: Mechelen 1922, 88–92

E. Closson and C. van den Borren, eds.: La musique en Belgique (Brussels, 1950)

DAVID FULLER/LUC ROMBOUTS

Leblanc [first name unknown] (b ?*c*1750; d Paris, March 1827). French composer and violinist. By 1767 he had published La chasse, a violin sonata; he wrote light works for the Paris stage, beginning with La noce béarnaise in 1787. He was director of the orchestra of the Théâtre-Française Comique et Lyrique until at least 1791, and was a composer of operas and pantomimes for the Théâtre d'Emulation until 1801. At least the overture and accompaniments for Beffroy de Reigny's extremely popular Nicodème dans la lune (1790) are by him, but it was his misfortune to compose for the short-lived, smaller theatres, and his successes were quickly forgotten. He composed much music, often anonymously, for the pantomimes, ballets and melodramas of the boulevard theatres. A fall in his fortunes obliged him to accept the position of second violin at the Théâtre sans Prétention, and he was later reduced to copying music to support himself.

WORKS

STAGE

first performed in Paris

La noce béarnaise (oc, 3, Lutaine), Beaujolais, 14 Nov 1787, ov., entr'acte arr. hpd/pf, vn (Paris, n.d.), 2 ariettes (Paris, n.d.)
Gabrielle et Paulin, ou Les amours du printemps (vaudeville, 1), Beaujolais, 10 May 1788, 2 airs (Paris, n.d.)
Le lord et son jockey (opéra bouffon, 3 Lutaine), Beaujolais, 8 Oct 1788
La soubrette rusée (opéra bouffon, 1) Beaujolais, 3 Oct 1789
La folle gageure (cmda, 1, F.-P.-A. Léger), Français Comique et Lyrique, 30 June 1790
Rosine et Zély (oc), Français Comique et Lyrique, 4 Sept 1790
Le berceau d'Henri IV (oc, 2), Français Comique et Lyrique, 1 Dec 1790
Le mariage de Nanon, ou La suite de Madame Angot (oc, 1, A.F. Eve), Emulation, 1796
La fausse mère, ou Une faute d'amour (opérette), Emulation, 1798
La bergère de Saluces, ou La vertu à l'épreuve (drame-pantomime, 4, Noël), Jeunes Artistes, 29 Jan 1799
Le sérail, ou La fée du Mogol (féerie, 3, Hapdé and Dabaytua), De la cité, 23 Dec 1799
La forêt enchantée, ou Isaure et Florestan (féerie), Gaîté, 1800
Les deux nuits (oc, 2, Coffin-Rosny and Béraud), Gaîté, 31 May 1802
Ecbert, premier roi d'Angleterre, ou La fin de l'heptarchie (mélodrame, 3, P.-A.-L.-P. Plancher [V. Valcour]), *c*1802
Esther (mélodrame, 3, Plancher), 1802 or 1803
La belle Milanaise, ou La fille-femme, page et soldat, Gaîté, 28 June 1804
Le sabot miraculeux, ou L'isle des Nains, Salle de Jeux Forains, 8 Jan 1811
Saphirine, ou Le réveil magique (mélo-féerie, 2, J.-T. Merle and E.T.M. Ourry), Gaîté, 25 July 1811
Riquet à la houpe (mélo-féerie, 2 Simonnin), Gaîté, 28 Sept 1811
L'armure, ou Le soldat moldave (mélodrame, 3, J.-G.-A. Cuvelier de Trie and Léopold [L. Chandezon]), Gaîté, 20 Oct 1821
Azémire, ou Les réfugiés péruviens (mélodrame), ?unperf.
Elisa, ou Le triomphe des femmes (mélodrame), ?unperf.
Contribs to: L.-A. Beffroy de Reigny: Nicodème dans la lune, 1790

INSTRUMENTAL

La chasse, vn, b (Paris, by 1767)
Sonates, vn, bc

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; GerberNL
P.L. Jacob, ed.: Bibliothèque dramatique de Monsieur de Soleinne (Paris, 1843–5/R); suppl. by C. Brunet: Tables des pièces de Théâtre Paris, 1914)
F. Clément and P. Larousse: Dictionnaire lyrique, ou Histoire des opéras (Paris, 1867–81, 2/1897 ed. A. Pougin as Dictionnaire des opéras, 3/1905/R)
C.D. Brenner: A Bibliographical List of Plays in the French Language 1700–1789 (Berkeley, 1947, 2/1979)

LELAND FOX

Le Blanc, Didier (fl ?Paris, 1578–84). French music editor and composer. His Airs de plusieurs musiciens … réduiz a 4 parties (Paris, 1579; ed. in MMFTR, iii, 1925) contains 42 airs and is dedicated, in a sonnet signed by the composer, to the lutenist and printer Adrian Le Roy. The Second livre d'airs des plus excelants musiciens … réduiz a 4 parties (Paris, 1579; ed. in SCC, iii, 1995) also contains 42 airs and a shorter dedicatory poem by Le Blanc to Pierre Dugué. The title-pages of the collections explain that the contents are four- and five-voice arrangements of melodies by several composers to strophic poems by Desportes and others (Jamin, Baïf, Ronsard, Belleau and Du Bellay are acknowledged in the first book). Some of the tunes are those used in the four-voice settings of the same texts by Caietain and Beaulieu published in 1576 and 1578; others are quite independent. The style of these airs is generally homophonic and metrical, exploiting alternation of duple and triple metres and respecting the poetic prosody without the strictly quantitative approach of musique mesurée; a few airs have unusual concluding cadences with an anticipation of the final chord. Le Blanc also contributed eight contrapuntal duets based on motives from four- and five-voice chansons by Lassus to the second edition of Le Roy & Ballard's first book of bicinia (RISM 1578[17]; ed. in SCC, xv, 1992), and a trio arrangement of Willaert's six-voice A la fontaine to the same publishers' second book of chansons for three voices (1578[15]). His only original composition is a homophonic four-voice Te Deum printed at the end of an anthology of Magnificat settings (1584[1]).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Lesure and G. Thibault: Bibliographie des éditions d'Adrian le Roy et Robert Ballard (1551–1598) (Paris, 1955); suppl., RdM, xl (1957), 166–72
G. Durosoir: L'air de cour en France: 1571–1655 (Liège, 1991)

FRANK DOBBINS

Leblanc, Georgette (b Tancarville, 8 Feb 1875; d Le Cannet, nr Cannes, 27 Oct 1941). French soprano. She studied in Paris, making her début in 1893 at the Opéra-Comique as Françoise in the first performance of Bruneau's L'attaque au Moulin. She also sang Fanny in Massenet's Sapho. Engaged at the Théâtre de la Monnaie (1894–6), she sang Anita (La Navarraise), Thaïs and Carmen. In Brussels, she began a 20-year association with Maurice Maeterlinck, who wanted her to create the heroine of Pelléas et Mélisande; Debussy, however, insisted that Mary Garden should sing the role. Instead, Leblanc sang Ariane at the first performance of Dukas' Ariane et Barbe-bleue at the Opéra-Comique (1907). She first sang Mélisande in 1912 at Boston, where she also acted in the play. In 1930 she published Souvenirs (1895–1918), an account of her liaison with Maeterlinck.

ELIZABETH FORBES

Le Blanc [Leblanc], Hubert (d ?1728). French Doctor of Law, abbé and amateur viol player. After a period as secrétaire d'état de la guerre in Paris, he was obliged to retire to Flanders from 1723 to 1726. His personality, and to some extent his writing, is marked by a certain eccentricity; however, his Défense de la basse de viole contre les entréprises du violon et les prétentions du violoncel (Amsterdam, 1740/R; repr. serially in ReM, ix, 1927–8; Eng. trans. in Jackson) contains useful information about Parisian musical taste and performing practices during the first quarter of the 18th century. It is divided into three parts: a comparison between French pièces and Italian sonatas; an argument in favour of the viol because of its delicacy and ability to play harmony as compared with the violin, which is more suited to large halls and higher pitch; and specific advice about tuning the viol as well as fingering and shifting. His description of Marais' six different bow strokes and 'imperceptible' bow changes is helpful, as are comments about such violinists as Geminiani and Guignon. According to Rutledge, Le Blanc also wrote Le Czar Pierre Premier en France (Amsterdam, 1741).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Bol: La basse de viole du temps de Marin Marais et d'Antoine Forqueray (Bilthoven, 1973)

B.G. Jackson: 'Hubert Le Blanc's Défense de la viole', JVdGSA, x (1973), 11–28, 69–80; xi (1974), 17–58; xii (1975), 14–36 [Eng. trans. and commentary]

J. Rutledge: 'Hubert Le Blanc's Concept of Viol Sound', JVdGSA, xvii (1980), 28–37

J. Boer and G.van Oorschot: A Viola da Gamba Miscellany: Utrecht 1991

G.J. Buelow, ed.: The Late Baroque Era: from the 1680s to 1740 (London, 1993)

MARY CYR

Leblanc du Roullet, Marie François Louis Gand. See ROULLET, MARIE FRANÇOIS LOUIS GAND LEBLANC.

Lebloitte dit Des Prez, Jossequin. See JOSQUIN DES PREZ.

Leborne, Aimé (Ambroise Simon) (b Brussels, 29 Dec 1797; d Paris, 1 or 2 April 1866). French composer and teacher of Flemish birth. He attended the free school in Versailles, winning prizes in 1809 and 1810, and entered the Paris Conservatoire in 1811 where he studied with Cherubini. In 1818 he won the second prize in the Prix de Rome contest, and in 1820 obtained the first prize with the cantata Sophonisbe, enabling him to travel in Italy and Germany for three years. On his return to Paris he taught solfège at the Conservatoire (an appointment which he had held since 1820), and composed several opéras comiques, some of which were collaborations. He was named librarian of the Opéra in 1829 and of the royal chapel five years later. After Reicha's death in 1836 Leborne became professor of counterpoint and fugue at the Conservatoire, and from 1840 he taught composition, retaining this post until his death. He was named a Chevalier of the Légion d'Honneur in 1853.

Leborne was a renowned teacher; several of his pupils won the Prix de Rome. He brought out a new edition of Catel's Traité d'harmonie with numerous practical additions (1848), and wrote his own treatise on harmony which was never published. His operas, which displayed much coloratura writing, were produced between 1827 and 1838 with little success.

WORKS

opéras comiques unless otherwise stated; first performed in Paris

Sophonisbe (cant., Vieillard), 1820

Les deux Figaro (op, 3, V. Tirpenne), Odéon, 22 Aug 1827, collab. M. Carafa

Le camp du drap d'or (3, P. de Kock), OC (Feydeau), 23 Feb 1828, collab. Baton, Rifaut

Finales to Acts 1, 2, Carafa's La violette (3, F.A.E. de Planard, after Comte de Tressan: Gerard de Nevers), OC (Feydeau), 7 Oct 1828 (Paris, ?1829)

Cinq ans d'entracte (2, A. Féréol), OC (Bourse), 15 June 1833

Lequel? (1, P. Duport, J.-A.F.-P. Ancelot), OC (Bourse), 21 March 1838

Songs

WRITINGS

Traité complet d'harmonie, de contrepoint, et de fugue (MS, n.d.)

ed.: C. Catel: Traité d'harmonie (Paris, 1848) [enlargement of original edn (Paris, 1802)]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; VannesD

Obituary, Le ménestrel (8 April 1866)

C. Pierre: Le Conservatoire national de musique et de déclamation: documents historiques et administratifs (Paris, 1900)

MARIE LOUISE PEREYRA/JEFFREY COOPER

Le Boscu d'Arras [Le Bossy], Adan. See ADAM DE LA HALLE.

Le Bouteiller [Boutillier], Jean (fl Bourges, 1530–42). French composer. He was maître des enfants at the Ste Chapelle, Bourges, between November 1530 and October 1535; he then served in the same capacity at Chartres Cathedral until 1542. His only known works are two motets and four chansons, all for four voices, printed at Paris by Attaingnant between 1534 and 1540. The chansons set the texts (one by Marot) in light syllabic counterpoint similar to that of Janequin and Certon.

WORKS

2 motets, 4vv, 1534[3], 1534[4]; ed. A. Smijers and A.T. Merritt, Treize livres de motets parus chez P. Attaingnant en 1534–1535, i–ii (Paris, 1934)

4 chansons, 4vv, 1532[12], 1539[15], 1539[17], 1540[14]; 1 ed. H.M. Brown, Theatrical Chansons of the Fifteenth and Early Sixteenth Centuries (Cambridge, MA, 1963); 1. ed. in RRMR, xxxviii (1981)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Lesure: 'Some Minor French Composers of the 16th Century', Aspects of Medieval and Renaissance Music: a Birthday Offering to Gustave Reese, ed. J. LaRue and others (New York, 1966/R), 538–44, esp. 543

FRANK DOBBINS

Le Bret (*fl c*1740). French composer. He is known only through two harpsichord suites, one of which was published. The only known exemplar of the publication (Paris, private collection) lacks title-page and provides no clues for dating beyond the style of the music. The two suites, omitting a concluding pair of minuets in the first, survive in a copy by the Abbé Pingré (F-Psg). Most of the movements are character pieces, although some bear dance names. The point of departure is clearly Couperin and Rameau; but certain elements (notably a penchant for left-hand accompaniments consisting of repeated chords, rare in French music) point to the likelihood that Le Bret knew some sonatas of Scarlatti. The collection, entitled simply Oeuvre de Mr. Le Bret, is competent and even interesting. (B. Gustafson and D. Fuller: A Catalogue of French Harpsichord Music, 1699–1780, Oxford, 1990)

DAVID FULLER/BRUCE GUSTAFSON

Le Breton. See BERTON.

Lebrun. German family of musicians.

(1) Ludwig August Lebrun [Brün, Le] (b Mannheim, bap. 2 May 1752; d Berlin, 12/15/16 Dec 1790). Oboist and composer. He was the son of Alexander Lebrun, an oboist from Brussels who played in the Mannheim orchestra. He seems to have studied the oboe with his father and played in the Mannheim orchestra as a boy, becoming a court musician at the age of 15. He retained that position for the remainder of his life in spite of almost continual absence on concert tours. In 1778 he married the singer (2) Franziska Danzi. The couple performed in many European cities including London (1778) and Paris (1779), where the Mercure de France noted 'a soft, velvety quality, a sweetness which one can hardly believe possible' in his playing. During a later stay in London, the oboist W.T. Parke complained that 'he occasionally played out of tune'. By the mid-1780s the couple's salaries were at the top of the Mannheim scale (3000 gulden), but they had to return much of this to compensate the other court musicians for their absence. Their international success reached a highpoint in Berlin in 1789. On a return visit in autumn 1790, Ludwig fell ill from inflammation of the liver and exhaustion, and he died in December; Franziska died only five months later.

Lebrun appears to have been above the jealousy and rivalry normal in his profession. Regarding a joint performance with Carlo Besozzi, Forkel's Musikalischer Almanach (1782) announced that the two 'fought like giants. Neither "lost".' Schubart stated that Lebrun 'attained the maximum in perfection on the oboe' (Deutsche chronik, ii, 1775, no.52, p.411. Among Lebrun's compositions the most important are his oboe concertos, which were doubtless intended for his own performance. The extant works fall into two groups, the first consisting of seven published by Sieber (Paris). These are in the mature Mannheim Classical style and were published in both for oboe and flute versions, with orchestra consisting of strings only (plus horns in no.2). They have an infectious charm and elegance of style which captured contemporary admiration. A second group published by André (Offenbach), perhaps as late as 1804, represents a substantial change of style. These were unquestionably conceived for oboe (though they were also published in versions for flute) and call for larger resources. Two are in minor keys, and a more dramatic mood prevails, foreshadowing early Romantic style.

WORKS

Concs. (only solo insts listed): no.1, G, ob, fl, DK-Kk [solo part only] (Paris, by 1776–7), microfilm US-PRV; no.2, C, ob/fl, DK-Kk (Paris, by 1781), microfilm US-PRV; no.3, F, ob/fl (Paris, by 1781), microfilm PRV; no.4, C, ob/fl (Paris, by 1782–4), ed. W. Lebermann (Hamburg, 1964), arr. for cl, A-Wn; no.5, ob/fl (Paris, n.d.), ?lost; no.6, F, ob/fl (Paris, n.d.), no.7, G, ob/fl (Paris, n.d.), microfilm of both US-PRV; 6 ob concs., d, g, C, B♭, C, F (Offenbach, before 1805), no.1 ed. H. Töttcher (Mainz, 1977), no.3 ed. D. Ledet (Monteux, 1988); Conc., F, D-DS, doubtful; Conc., formerly US-NYp, lost

Chbr: 6 Trios, 2 vn, vc, op.1 (Mannheim, by 1774); 6 Trios, vn, fl/ob/vn, b, op.2 (Paris, n.d.); 6 Duos, vn, va, op.4 (Mannheim, by 1774), ed. Y. Morgan (Winterthur, 1996); Sonata, fl, b, DK-Kk; Qt, ob, vn, va, vc, formerly D-DO, lost

Kbd: 6 hpd sonatas, CH-MSbk

Stage: dances in Adele de Ponthieu (ballet), US-NYp, Favorite Airs, arr. kbd (London, 1782); dances in Armida (pasticcio), London, 1782, arr. hpd, vn (London, 1782)

(2) Franziska [Francesca] (Dorothea) Lebrun [née Danzi] (b Mannheim, 24 March 1756; d Berlin, 14 May 1791). Soprano and composer, wife of (1) Ludwig August Lebrun. She was the daughter of Innocenz Danzi and elder sister of Franz Danzi. She made her début in 1772 at the Schwetzingen Schlosstheater in Sacchini's La contadina in corte and sang in the court opera at Mannheim, holding the title virtuosa da camera. In 1777 she triumphed in the role of Anna in Holzbauer's Günther von Schwarzburg, which was composed for her voice. She spent the next year in London and in 1778 married (1) Ludwig August Lebrun. While retaining her court position (from 1778 at Munich), she visited several European countries with her husband, making guest appearances in operas and concerts. On 3 August 1778 she sang the principal role in Salieri's Europa riconosciuta at the opening of La Scala, Milan. Early in 1779 she appeared with her husband at the Concert Spirituel in Paris, where she caused a stir by fitting Italian texts to the solo parts of symphonies concertantes. For the opera seasons of 1779–81 she was again engaged at the King's Theatre in London. Thomas Gainsborough painted her portrait in 1780 (fig.2). While in London she composed and published two sets of six sonatas for violin and keyboard (op.1, 1780/R; op.2, 1780), which were soon also issued in Paris, Amsterdam, Offenbach, Berlin, Mannheim and Worms.

1. Ludwig and Franziska Lebrun: silhouettes, 1780s (Museum für Hamburgische Geschichte, Hamburg)

On 13 March 1785 she performed at an academy organized by Mozart at the Burgtheater in Vienna. She spent the season of 1786–7 in Naples, where she appeared at the Teatro S Carlo. The couple were invited to Berlin for the carnival seasons of 1789–90 and 1790–91. Her husband's sudden death there affected Lebrun severely and led to a rapid decline in her health, and she made only two subsequent public appearances.

(3) Sophie Lebrun [Dülken] (b London, 20 June 1781; d Munich, 23 July 1863). Pianist, daughter of (1) Ludwig August and (2) Franziska Lebrun. Her teachers included Andreas Streicher (piano) and her uncle Franz Danzi (singing). Well known and respected from an early age as a pianist, she undertook concert tours to Switzerland, Italy and Paris. Weber, Spohr and Meyerbeer sought her acquaintance. Her compositions, mainly sonatas and concertos according to Lipowsky, were not published and are lost. She married the Munich court piano maker J.L. Dülken on 27 December 1799. Her daughters Louise (b 1805) and Fanny (b 1807) married the brothers Max and Anton Bohrer (both Munich court musicians), and her daughter Violande (b 1810) became a concert singer.

(4) Rosine Lebrun [Stentzsch] (b Munich, 29 April 1783; d Munich, 5 June 1855). Singer and actress, daughter of (1) Ludwig August and (2) Franziska Lebrun.

2. Franziska Lebrun: portrait by Thomas Gainsborough, 1780 (Art Gallery of South Australia, Adelaide)

Like her sister (3) Sophie, she studied the piano with Streicher and singing with her uncle Franz Danzi. She was successful as an opera singer, and after her marriage to the Munich actor K.A.A. Stentzsch (3 November 1800) she turned to acting, though she was still occasionally an understudy for operatic performances. From the end of 1801 to her retirement on 1 January 1830 she was a member of the Munich theatre company; her daughter Charlotte Stentzsch (d 1877) was a member from 1822 to 1848.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookB; BurneyGN; BurneyH; FétisB; FlorimoN; GerberL; GerberNL; LipowskyBL; MGG1 (R. Münster); SchillingE; WalterG

Musikalische Real-Zeitung (30 Dec 1789; 13, 27 Jan 1790; 28 April 1790)

Musikalische Korrespondenz der Teutschen Filarmonischen Gesellschaft (6 Jan 1791; 16 Feb 1791)

C.F.D. Schubart: Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst (Vienna, 1806/R)

W.T. Parke: Musical Memoirs (London, 1830)

C.F. Pohl: Mozart und Haydn in London (Vienna, 1867/R), ii, 372

F. Grandaur: Chronik des königlichen Hof- und Nationaltheaters in München (Munich, 1878)

R. Fuhrmann: Mannheimer Klavier-Kammermusik (Marburg, 1963)

B. Haynes: Music for Oboe, 1650–1800: a Bibliography (Berkeley, 2/1992)

B. Höft: 'Komponisten, Komponistinnnen und Virtuosen', Die Mannheimer Hofkapelle in Zeitalter Carl Theodors, ed. L. Finscher (Mannheim, 1972), 59–70

T. HERMAN KEAHEY (1), BRIGITTE HÖFT (2), ROBERT MÜNSTER (3), ROLAND WÜRTZ/ROBERT MÜNSTER (4)

Lebrun [Le Brun, Brun, Braun], Jean (b Lyons, 6 April 1759; d Paris, 1809). French horn player. He went to Paris about 1780 to study with Punto and Rudolphe, making his début at the Concert Spirituel in 1781; in nine years he performed there over 30 times. In 1786 he was appointed principal horn at the Opéra, where he remained until 1792. When Palsa died that year in Berlin, Lebrun succeeded him as principal horn in the Prussian court orchestra in Berlin and as first in the famous duo with Türrschmidt, with whom he toured until Türrschmidt's death in 1797. He remained based in Berlin, continuing to tour as a soloist until at least 1808. After the Battle of Jena he returned to Paris. According to Fétis, his personality did not attract many friendships: alone, in depair, he ended his own life in 1809.

Lebrun invented a lacquer for coating the inside of the horn's tubing, eliminating any irregularities of the inner surface, and preventing verdigris. Although he used a silver cor solo by Raoux, he recommended brass as the ideal material, and arrived at an optimum thickness for this metal which contributed to evenness of tone quality between stopped and open notes. He is credited with having invented a cone-shaped mute with a hole in its base that gave a more desirable sound quality.

Gerber's appraisal of Lebrun's playing makes special mention of his voice-like tone quality, singing style and tasteful ornamentation, as well as his incomparable intonation and accuracy. Fétis, who heard him in 1802, was impressed by his strength, range, sound and ability to combine demanding cor basse handstopping with a refined cor alto register. Together with Punto, Lebrun was responsible for elevating the horn's status as a solo instrument. He also supplied Framery with information on the horn for his Encyclopédie méthodique: Musique, i (Paris, 1791/R).

Lebrun wrote a quantity of concertos for himself in nearly every key, but none was published and their whereabouts are unknown.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; GerberNL; MCL; PierreH; SchillingE

AMZ, i (1798–9), 621; ix (1806–7), 372; x (1807–8), 84, 265, 589, 814

C. von Ledebur: Tonkünstler-Lexicon Berlin's (Berlin, 1861/R)

R. Morley-Pegge: The French Horn (London, 1960, 2/1973)

H. Fitzpatrick: The Horn and Horn-Playing and the Austro-Bohemian Tradition from 1680 to 1830 (London, 1970)

HORACE FITZPATRICK/JEFFREY L. SNEDEKER

Lebrun, Louis-Sébastien (b Paris, 10 Dec 1764; d Paris, 27 June 1829). French tenor and composer. At the age of seven he entered the maîtrise of Notre Dame, Paris, where he studied composition and received singing lessons, remaining there until 1783 when he became musical director of the church of St Germain-l'Auxerrois. Encouraged to take up theatrical singing, he made his début at the Paris Opéra in 1787 as Polynices in Sacchini's Oedipe à Colone. In the same period he appeared at the Concert Spirituel in the dual role of singer and composer of several scènes and an oratorio. Despite his limited acting ability he remained on the stage and transferred to the Théâtre Feydeau in 1791, leaving it in 1799. The following year he was involved in the grandiose ceremonies at the Invalides, where works by Le Sueur and Méhul were performed. To obtain stereophonic effects two orchestras and two choirs were placed in different parts of the building; Lebrun led the second choir (Mongrédien, 1986). He then rejoined the Opéra as an understudy, becoming a singing tutor in 1803. In 1807 he was admitted as a tenor into the imperial chapel, where he was promoted to director of singing after three years. His responsibilities may also have lain outside the chapel, for Choron and Fayolle (1810–11) described him as 'leader of the vocal division of the music of His Majesty'.

Among his stage works, most of which are opéras comiques, Marcelin (1800) and Le rossignol (1816) were quite successful. The former was presented in Madrid, Vienna, St Petersburg, Budapest, Prague and Stockholm. Le rossignol was famed for its virtuoso exchanges between the soprano and the solo flute, of which the original interpreters were Mme Albert-Hymm and J.-L. Tulou. It was performed 227 times in Paris up to 1852, though Clément and Larousse ascribed its longevity merely to the general shortage of operas brief enough to precede an evening of ballet. During its performance at the Théâtre Louvois on 13 February 1820, Charles-Ferdinand de Bourbon, the Duke of Berry and heir to the throne, was assassinated. Le rossignol was played in New York (1833) and London (Drury Lane, 1846).

WORKS

STAGE

opéras comiques, unless otherwise indicated; first performed in Paris

L'art d'aimer, ou L'amour au village (1, [?L.-H.] Dancourt), Montansier, 1790; Ils ne savent pas lire (1), Montansier, 1791; Emilie et Melcour (1, L. Hennequin), Louvois, 3 July 1795; Le bon fils (1, Hennequin), Feydeau, 17 Sept 1795; L'astronome (1, Desfaucherets), Feydeau, 1798, F-Po, pubd, according to Fétis; Le menteur maladroit (1), Molière, 1798; Un moment d'erreur (1), Louvois, 1798; La veuve américaine (2), Louvois, 1799, Pc

Le maçon (1, C.A.B. Sewrin), Feydeau, 4 Dec 1799, Pc; Marcelin (1, F. Bernard-Valville), Feydeau, 22 March 1800, Pc, pubd according to Fétis, excerpts pubd separately; Eléonore et Dorval, ou La suite de la cinquantaine (1), Montansier, 1800; Les petits aveugles de Franconville (1, A. Croizette), Montansier, 1802; Le rossignol (opera or comic opera, 1, C.G. Etienne), Opéra, 23 April 1816 (n.d.), excerpts pubd separately; Zéloïde, ou Les fleurs enchantées (opéra-ballet, 2, Etienne), Opéra, 19 Jan 1818, Po; L'an II (genre unknown, 5), unperf., fragments, Pc

OTHER WORKS

Sacred: TeD for the victories of Wagram and Enzersdorf, perf. Paris, Notre Dame, 1809; Messe solennelle de Ste Cécile, perf. Paris, St Eustache, 1815; Messe en trio, with str, perf. Paris, St Maur, 1826

Secular: orat, perf. Paris, Concert Spirituel, 1787; La mort d'Abel, scène, perf. Concert Spirituel, 1787, Pc; other scènes, perf. Concert Spirituel, 1788–9, lost; Recueil d'airs et romances (Paris, n.d.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Choron-FayolleD; FétisB; PierreH

Castil-Blaze: Chapelle-musique des rois de France (Paris, 1832)

F. Clément and P. Larousse: Dictionnaire lyrique, ou Histoire des opéras (Paris, 1867–9, 4 suppls. to 1881) [2/1897, ed. A. Pougin, suppl. 1904, 3/1905/R]

J. Mongrédien: 'La musique du sacre de Napoléon 1er', RdM, liii (1967), 137–74

D.H. Foster: 'The Oratorio in Paris in the 18th Century', AcM, xlvii (1975), 67–133, esp. 113

J. Mongrédien: La musique en France des Lumières au Romantisme (Paris, 1986; Eng. trans., 1996)

DAVID CHARLTON (with SARAH HIBBERD)

Le Brung [Le Brun, Lebrun], Jean (fl early 16th century). French composer. According to Fétis and Thoinan, he was a bass singer in the chapel of King Louis XII of France (reigned 1498–1515), but this information cannot be verified from extant court payment records. If it is correct, his service almost certainly ended before 1510, since he was not one of 28 royal singers named in papal supplications of 1510–14. Although relatively little of his music appears in the central musical sources for the French royal court, the melodic conciseness and harmonic lucidity of his motets and chansons, within predominantly imitative textures, is reminiscent of the works of Jean Mouton and contemporaneous court composers, though rather more piquant in dissonance treatment. A majority of Le Brung's motets for five or six voices employ ostinatos in the tenor. The four-voice motets are marked by greater textural variety and formal clarity. Le Brung made varied use of plainchant melodies in several motets, particularly in his setting of the Tract Domine non secundum and an alternatim setting of Salve regina. The chansons, most of which are through-composed, are marked by smooth imitative counterpoint and unadventurous harmonies.

WORKS

Bona dies per orbem, 6vv, CH-Zz 169; Congratulamini mihi omnes, 4vv, A-Wn 18825 (also attrib. Josquin, Richafort), ed. in SCMot, vi (1989), xiv (1995); Credo in Deum Patrem, 5vv, 1540[6]; Descendi in ortum meum, 4vv, 1519[3], ed. in SCMot, v (1992); Domine, non secundum peccata nostra, 3–6vv, F-CA 18; Magnificat primi toni, 4vv, 1534[7], ed. A. Smijers, Treize livres de motets parus chez Pierre Attaingnant en 1534 et 1535, v (Monaco, 1960); O summe rerum, 3vv, 1542[8], ed. T. Noblitt, Georg Rhau: Musikdrucke aus den Jahren 1538–1545 in praktischer Neuausgabe, ix (Kassel and Concordia, MO, 1989); Recumbentibus undecim discipulis/Illi autem profecti, 5vv, 1519[2], ed. in SCMot, v (1992); [Salve regina …] Vita, dulcedo, 4vv, D-Mbs 34; Saule, Saule, quid me persequeris/Sancte Paule, 5vv, 1534[10], ed. A.T. Merritt, Treize livres de motets parus chez Pierre Attaingnant en 1534 et 1535, viii (Monaco, 1962); Tota pulchra es, ?5vv, D-Bga XX.HA StUB Königsberg 7 (formerly B of Königsberg, Universitätsbibliothek, MS 1740)

Cela sans plus, 5vv, A-Wn 18746; Ma mere veult que je file, 4vv, 1549[25]; N'avés point veu mal assenee, 5vv, 1572[2], ed. in SCC, xviii (1990); Si vous n'avez aultre, 5vv, 1545[15]

MISATTRIBUTED WORKS

Mirabile mysterium, 5vv, 1539[8] (by Jacquet of Mantua; also attrib. Jacquet Berchem); Alligiés moy, 6vv, 1540[7] (by Josquin; also attrib. Barbe, Willaert)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB

E. Thoinan: Les origines de la chapelle-musique des souverains de France (Paris, 1864)

M.E. Kabis: The Works of Jean Richafort, Renaissance Composer (diss., New York U., 1957)

D. Gehrenbeck: Motetti de la corona: a Study of Ottaviano Petrucci's Four Last-Known Motet Prints (Fossombrone, 1514, 1519) (diss., Union Theological Seminary, 1970)

JOHN T. BROBECK

Le Caine, Hugh (b Port Arthur, Ontario, 27 May 1914; d Ottawa, 3 July 1977). Canadian scientist and composer. He undertook graduate studies, specializing in nuclear physics, at Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, and at the University of Birmingham; during World War II he worked on the development of radar. In 1954 he established the ELMUS Laboratory of the National Research Council, Ottawa, and thereafter gave his attention to designing electronic music instruments and to advising major Canadian studios. His design achievements include the Sackbut (1945), the Multitrack Tape Recorder (1953), the Serial Sound Structure Generator (1964) and the Sonde (1967). Among his compositions is Dripsody (1955). This short work, derived entirely from the sound of a falling drop of water, is often used in studio teaching as a model for musique concrète composition.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Cross: A Bibliography of Electronic Music (Toronto, 1967)

G. Young: The Sackbut Blues (Ottawa, 1989)

GUSTAV CIAMAGA

Le Camus, Sébastien (*b c*1610; d Paris, *c*9 March 1677). French instrumentalist and composer. In about 1640 he received a musical post in Louis XIII's household and in 1648 took the position of intendant de la musique to Gaston d'Orléans. When Louis XIV married Marie-Thérèse in 1660 Le Camus was appointed her surintendant de la musique, sharing the post with J.-B. Boësset. His musical ascendancy continued when, on Louis Couperin's death the following year, he shared his post of ordinaire de la musique de la chambre with Nicolas Hotman. When Hotman died, Le Camus shared the position with Gabriel Caignet. These two posts yielded a high salary and the inventory taken at Le Camus's death testifies to his considerable wealth. Among his effects were six theorbos, two treble viols (one 'de la façon de Bruges') and a harpsichord. Le Camus's court appointment went to his son Charles, who sold it to Estienne Le Moyne three years later. In 1688 Charles married the daughter of the viol player Léonard Ithier.

Rousseau relates how Le Camus, when he played the treble viol, imitated 'all that a beautiful and accomplished voice can do . . . to the point that even the memory of the beauty and tenderness of his execution erases all that has been heard up to the present on this instrument'; Mme de Sévigné described Le Camus as 'made of the gods', while La Barre considered him, along with Boësset, D'Ambruys and Lambert, as 'the first to compose airs which express the words'. Le Camus's airs appeared frequently in collections by Ballard from 1656 to 1717. His son re-edited 32 Airs à 2 et 3 parties de feu Monsieur Le Camus (Paris, 1678) to assure publication in a definitive edition with their 'veritable bass', and warmly recommended their performance with a theorbo 'to charm the most delicate ears'. These airs demonstrate Le Camus's polished technique and his penchant for a lively, independent bass line. The majority are in binary form, but some are rondeaux. Grammatically his language is akin to that of Louis Couperin, with a taste for successions of 7ths and ambiguous treatment of the third, sixth and seventh degrees of the scale.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BenoitMC

J. Rousseau: Traité de la viole (Paris, 1687/R)

N. Dufourcq: 'Autour de Sébastien Le Camus', RMFC, ii (1961–2), 41–53

M. Benoit: Versailles et les musiciens du roi (Paris, 1971)

R.A. Green: 'The Treble Viol in 17th-Century France and the Origins of the pardessus de viole', Chelys, xxiii (1986), 64–71

LUCY ROBINSON

Le Cène, Michel-Charles. Dutch music printer. He succeeded to the firm of ESTIENNE ROGER.

Le Cerf de la Viéville, Jean Laurent, Seigneur de Freneuse (b Rouen, 1674; d Rouen, 10 Nov 1707). French writer on music. He was educated by the Jesuits and studied philosophy and law before assuming his father's post as Keeper of the Seals of the Parliament of Normandy in 1696. Spurred on by the appearance of the Paralèle des italiens et des françois (1702) of his Normandy neighbour, François Raguenet, Le Cerf brought out in 1704 the Première Partie of his Comparaison de la musique italienne et de la musique françoise modelled on the writings of Claude and Charles Perrault. In a series of three dialogues conducted by a count, a countess and a chevalier (representing Le Cerf's own voice), he began to limn out the musical aesthetic prevailing in France during the late 17th century. Taking Raguenet's Paralèle (which is, in fact, a rejection of French music and its practice in favour of Italian counterparts) as a point of departure, Le Cerf espoused a simple, rational, 'natural' art over one based primarily on sensual beauty, an art that finds its expression in the ideals represented in the music of Lully. A review appeared in the 1 August 1704 issue of the Journal des Sçavans, the periodical in which the physician and medical journalist, Nicolas de Boisregard Andry, later wrote critically of Le Cerf (7 December 1705 and 12 August 1706).

Raguenet swiftly and systematically replied in scornful and ironic tones to Le Cerf in his Défense du parallèle (Paris, 1705). But at least in musical-aesthetic terms, he proved no match for the fluent though often digressive Le Cerf, who was proceeding with the publication of the compendious Seconde Partie of the Comparaison. In addition to three further dialogues, it includes song texts, historical surveys of music, opera and Lully, and a 'traité du bon goût en musique'. More particularly, he also produced in 1705 a Réponse à la Défense du Parallèle. The Troisième Partie of the Comparaison begins with a fragmentary text for a sacred opera followed by two series of essays, one on church music, the other on the differences between French and Italian music; the final essay, 'Jugement sur les Italiens & sur les François', is written in a spirit closer to that of Raguenet's Paralèle than any other part. Le Cerf, it must be said, admired other Italian music he heard in Rouen and Paris, especially the latest sonatas of Corelli and cantatas of Bononcini.

Le Cerf, piqued by the impertinence of a writer who he referred to alternately as 'Mr. le Journalist' and 'Mr. le Médecin', produced a scathing essay, L'art de décrier ce qu'on n'entend point (1706), in which he devoted 25 pages to a rigorous 'Exposition de la mauvaise foi d'un extrait du Journal de Paris'. According to Philippe Le Cerf, who provided unique details of his brother's life in the April 1726 Mercure galant, Le Cerf intended to produce a fourth part to the Comparaison, which was to have included a critical catalogue of French operas, but died of a cerebral haemorrhage before completing it.

WRITINGS

Comparaison de la musique italienne et de la musique françoise (Brussels, 1704–6/R); repr. in P. Bourdelot and P. Bonnet-Bourdelot: Histoire de la musique et de ses effets, ed. J. Bonnet, ii–iv (Paris, 1715/R, 7/1743); index, ed. C.B. Schmidt (Geneva, 1993); Eng. trans. of extract from 6th dialogue in StrunkSR1

Réponse à la Défense du Parallèle (Paris, 1705)

L'art de décrier ce qu'on n'entend point, ou Le médecin musicien (Brussels, 1706)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (Albert Cohen, Julie Anne Sadie)

J. Ecorcheville: De Lulli à Rameau 1690–1730: l'esthétique musicale (Paris, 1906)

H. Prunières: 'Lecerf de la Viéville et l'esthétique musicale classique au XVII[e] siècle', BSIM, iv (1908), 619–54

P.-M. Masson: 'Musique italienne et musique française: la première querelle', RMI, xix (1912), 519–45

R. Wangermée: 'Lecerf de la Viéville, Bonnet-Bourdelot et l'"Essai sur le bon goust en musique" de Nicolas Grandval', RBM, v (1951), 132–46

M.B. Ellison: The 'Comparaison de la musique italienne et de la musique françoise' of Le Cerf de la Viéville: an Annotated Translation of the First Four Dialogues (diss., U. of Miami, 1973)

G. Cowart: The Origins of Modern Musical Criticism: French and Italian Music 1600–1750 (Ann Arbor, 1981)

C.B. Schmidt, ed.: Jean Laurent Le Cerf de la Viéville: Comparaison de la musique italienne et de la musique françoise: Index (Geneva, 1993)

JULIE ANNE SADIE (with ALBERT COHEN)

Le Chevalier, Amédée (b Savoy, *c*1650; d Amsterdam, bur. 5 Dec 1720). French publisher and music printer. He set himself up in Amsterdam as 'muziekmeester' and on 1 December 1689 obtained a 15-year licence for music publication. On 24 July 1690 he made an agreement with D. Robethon, by which the latter promised to finance the production of 1000 copies of his first publication, Les trios des opéra de Monsieur de Lully (2 vols., 1690, 1691). This was printed in Amsterdam by Blaeu, who worked for Le Chevalier until Le Chevalier himself became established as a printer in 1692. His publications are known from the catalogue at the end of J. de Gouy's Airs à quatre parties sur la Paraphrase des pseaumes de Godeau (1691) and from two advertisements in the Amsterdamsche courant (27 December 1691 and 1 July 1692). The second of these states that Le Chevalier sold not only his own publications but also music printed by A. Pointel. Le Chevalier's catalogue regularly included anthologies (Recueil d'airs nouveaux, RISM 1691[3], Scelta delle più belle ariette, 1691[4] and Premier livre de trio, n.d.), Pièces choisies by C. Rosier (1691), Il giardino armonico by J. Schenck (1691) and the airs of Lully's Bellérophon (1692). He also prepared the first Amsterdam edition of J. Rousseau's Méthode claire, certaine et facile (1691). In 1698 the magistrate in Ghent allowed him to establish himself in the city as a music printer without going through the prescribed period of apprenticeship. According to Vander Straeten, he had returned to Holland by 1702. In 1716 he is mentioned in the Album studiosorum of Leiden University as 'musicus'. There are two manuscripts containing works of his in the Landesbibliothek at Karlsruhe.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GoovaertsH; Vander StraetenMPB

D.F. Scheurleer: 'Eene Amsterdamsche uitgave van Lully en Colasse, 1690', TVNM, ix/4 (1914), 250–59

I.H. van Eeghen: De Amsterdamse boekhandel 1680–1725, iii (Amsterdam, 1965), 202–3

HENRI VANHULST

Lechler, Benedikt [Johannes] (b Füssen, 24 April 1594; d Kremsmünster, 18 Jan 1659). German music copyist, composer and lutenist, active in Austria. From 1607 to 1615 he studied at the Imperial College of the Austrian Nobility, Vienna, and then became director of the school at Admont Abbey, Styria, where he also had charge of the music. In 1617 he went to the Benedictine monastery at Kremsmünster, where he remained for the rest of his life. He was first employed as a lutenist and administrative official. In 1628, after he had become a full member of the Benedictine order and changed his first name from Johannes to Benedikt, he was given charge of the sacred music; the court music was in the hands of Alessandro Tadei, but after Tadei left, on 20 May 1629, Lechler directed that too. His desire to provide the chapel, school and theatre of the monastery with suitable compositions prompted him to undertake extensive travels in Italy in 1632–3, including a visit to Rome, where he became acquainted with Carissimi. He was relieved of most of his musical responsibilities by 1651, presumably because of failing health.

Lechler's greatest significance is as a music copyist, collector and anthologist. Between 1633 and 1650 he assembled four large collections in score, devoted principally to sacred vocal music (A-KR, L 10, 12, 13 and 14), as well as several smaller manuscripts. These scores, preserved at the Benedictine abbey at Kremsmünster, Austria, include music by the foremost Italian composers of the time (Carissimi, Donati, Grandi, Merula and Monteverdi), as well as music by composers active in Vienna and elsewhere in the southern portions of the German-speaking lands (Emperor Ferdinand III, Michael Kraf, Heinrich Pfendner, Johann Stadlmayr, Christoph Straus and Giovanni Valentini (i)). Lechler's manuscripts are important sources of information concerning the use of instruments in large-scale vocal works; several transcriptions contain detailed indications concerning instrumentation not found in the printed sources.

Lechler's sacred compositions (preserved primarily in A-KR L 14) include three masses (two of them parody masses), a requiem, hymns, motets and a Magnificat setting. Most are large-scale compositions for voices and instruments, many featuring echo effects, solo-tutti indications and independent instrumental sonatas. The vocal writing often pits small groups from within the ensemble against one another or against the full tutti. Nonetheless, the music recalls earlier polychoral writing rather than the modern concertato style, since it remains predominantly homophonic and generally pits the upper voices against the lower voices in antiphonal passages. Although Lechler occasionally incorporates passages in solo and duet textures, he does not make extensive use of recitative or aria styles. In addition to his sacred vocal works, two polychoral instrumental canzonas, incidental pieces for theatrical productions, and works for solo lute survive (in A-KR).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Huemer: Pflege der Musik im Stifte Kremsmünster (Wels, 1877), 17ff

A. Kellner: Musikgeschichte des Stiftes Kremsmünster (Kassel, 1956), 193ff

T. Schmitt: Kompositionen des Ordinarium Missae im süddeutschen Konzertierrenden Stil des 17. Jahrhunderts (diss., U. of Saarland, 1981), 56–65

A. LINDSEY KIRWAN/STEVEN SAUNDERS

Lechner, Leonhard [Lechnerus, Leonardus Athesinus] (b valley of the River Adige, South Tyrol, *c*1553; d Stuttgart, 9 Sept 1606). German composer and music editor of Austrian birth. He was the leading German composer of choral music in the later 16th century.

1. Life. 2. Character. 3. Works. 4. Reputation.

1. Life. The cognomen 'Athesinus', which Lechner always used on the title-pages of his printed volumes and manuscripts, shows that he came from the valley of the River Adige (Athesis). He is first heard of in the accounts of the Bavarian court for 1570 as a chorister in the Hofkapelle of the hereditary Prince Wilhelm at Landshut, which was founded in 1568. It had been disbanded by 1570, and one of those dismissed was Lechner, who received a severance payment of ten florins. The first director of the Landshut Kapelle was Ivo de Vento, previously court organist under Lassus at Munich, and he was followed by Antonius Gosswin. Lechner clearly learnt a great deal from both men, but it was always Lassus whom he later referred to, with gratitude and reverence, as his teacher. Up to 1568, and probably from about 1564, he must therefore have belonged to the Munich Hofkapelle, directed by Lassus, and have lived in Lassus's house with the other choristers. It is doubtful whether he was personally taught by Lassus, since he did not mention this in the preface to his first printed volume of music in 1575 (nor indeed in any other source): he simply stated that his passionate love of music was fired by great models and that he had tried not merely to learn how to sing but also to compose music himself. It is not known where he spent the early 1570s, but in the preface to his Latin motet volume of 1581 he wrote that he had once 'roved far and wide, visiting various places'. It is reasonable to assume that it was during these years of apprenticeship that he did so and, moreover, that he spent some time in Italy: Italian influences are discernible from his earliest compositions onwards, and his anthology Harmoniae miscellae (1583), which includes works by 12 Italian composers, some of them virtually unknown in Germany, shows a familiarity with Italian music that he could hardly have acquired without going to Italy.

It is clear from the 1575 preface that at that time Lechner was an assistant teacher at the St Lorenz school, Nuremberg, then the town's largest grammar school. This was a very junior position, which is no doubt why he insisted that he wished to be regarded and judged not as a schoolmaster but as a musician and composer. The town council soon honoured him with the title of 'archimusicus', and his salary, 90 florins a year, was now the same as the Kantor's 'because he is such an outstanding composer and musician'. A number of leading citizens became his patrons and friends during his ten years at Nuremberg; he dedicated to them nearly all the volumes of music that poured from his pen during these years, no doubt for performance in the flourishing musical societies to which they belonged. The works ranged from light three-part Italianate pieces, through German sacred and secular songs for four and five voices to Latin motets and liturgical works; and they included editions and reworkings too. Several of these publications went into more than one edition, while individual pieces appeared in anthologies or circulated in manuscript form. In this way Lechner soon became known as a leading composer far beyond the confines of Nuremberg. He often received commissions to write works for festive occasions, among them the ceremonial opening of Altdorf University in 1575 (the work was published in Motectae sacrae), and the magnificent wedding of the Augsburg patrician Sebald Welser to the daughter of a Nuremberg councillor on 15 January 1582; on the latter occasion there were performances not only of a mass by Lechner – the Missa prima of the 1584 volume – but also of an epithalamium for three choirs totalling 24 voices, to a text by Lechner's friend the poet Paul Melissus Schede.

In spite of such honours and fruitful activity, in spite too of the ties of friendship and feelings of gratitude that bound him to Nuremberg, Lechner became increasingly dissatisfied with his subordinate position as an assistant schoolmaster. Having previously rejected a number of other offers, he accepted an invitation in the autumn of 1583 to present himself before Count Eitelfriedrich IV von Hohenzollern-Hechingen, who received him cordially and appointed him his Kapellmeister. Lechner thanked him by dedicating his 1584 volume to him, and he took up his appointment at Hechingen in the spring of that year. The Hofkapelle, though not large, was of a high standard and well equipped, and it seemed that Lechner could look forward to a period of activity no less satisfying than his years at Nuremberg. His salary was 160 florins a year, with additional income in kind, and his duties embraced music for the chamber and for mealtimes on the one hand and for the chapel and church on the other. Difficulties first began to make themselves felt in the matter of church services, for Count Eitelfriedrich was a fervent supporter of the Counter-Reformation, while Lechner was an equally fervent Lutheran (he was converted from Catholicism in his 18th year). The oration delivered at his funeral stated that he had > constantly and steadfastly supported ... our true Christian religion ... so that when, for the sake of his art, he was obliged to ... eke out a living under the papacy he nevertheless expressly refrained from practising the [Catholic] religion and the exercise of its rites, as may be shown by the orders that were drawn up against him and still exist.

This can only refer to Hechingen, the only Catholic court that Lechner served. Denominational differences in Germany at that time had become increasingly polarized. Following the victory of the Catholic princes in the 'Cologne feud' over Archbishop Gebhard Truchsess von Waldburg, who had turned Lutheran, the Counter-Reformation gained ground, and further support came in the form of an endowment of 2000 florins made by Count Eitelfriedrich in 1584, the annual interest on which was intended to allow two boys from his county to study 'with our lords the Jesuits' and thus contribute towards combating 'the seductive and accursed heresies of the Lutherans and Calvinists and similar superstitious religious sects'. This suggests how passionately the count was prepared to persecute supporters of the Reformation, and it is easy to see why Lechner was unwilling to remain for long at his court and soon began looking for another post. In June 1585 he applied unsuccessfully to the Dresden court despite letters of recommendation from Lassus and Duke Wilhelm V of Bavaria.

Since Count Eitelfriedrich was reluctant to lose his Kapellmeister, Lechner soon took advantage of his absence to leave the court secretly. He fled to nearby Tübingen, which lay on Württemberg soil, and he was warmly welcomed there into the circle of the humanist scholar and poet Nikodemus Frischlin. Count Eitelfriedrich tried to persuade him to return in a letter of 25 July 1585 containing a friendly admonition and a promise to release him from his service 'without delay and with every honour and favour'. The following day Lechner drafted a letter in reply in which he declined to return and threatened that he 'would enlist the help of men of learning' and 'publish details of how things stood at that court'; if the count were to cast aspersions upon him and if he, Lechner, were then forced to answer those charges, he would 'have the very devil to pay'. This letter is so unlike Lechner's other surviving writings – and so exceptional a response of a court servant to his master – that it seems reasonable to assume that the quarrelsome Frischlin, who later, in an academic address, violently attacked the aristocracy and lampooned the rulers of his own country, lent him his moral support in this uncompromising refusal. As a result of it the count became his bitter enemy and sent letters to several princes and to the Nuremberg town council, requesting them to hunt down his runaway Kapellmeister, take him into custody and return him to Hechingen. Lechner, however, sought refuge with Duke Ludwig of Württemberg, convincing him of his innocence and receiving an appointment as a tenor at the Stuttgart Hofkapelle, where he had to make do with a far smaller salary than he had been used to. The duke also supported him in other ways: he used his influence with the Nuremberg council on behalf of Lechner's family there and in January 1586 helped him settle his differences with Count Eitelfriedrich, as a result of which he was able to visit Nuremberg safely and bring his wife and son back with him to Stuttgart. Duke Ludwig authorized grants to cover his increased expenses and rewarded the numerous works he dedicated to him with honoraria of between 6 and 20 florins; there are records of payments to him nearly every year from 1586 to 1600. Some of these works were printed, but most remained in manuscript and are nearly all lost; consequently far less is known of the music of the last 20 years or so of Lechner's life than of that from the previous ten.

In the Stuttgart court records Lechner is described first as 'former Hohenzollern Kapellmeister', then as 'musician', 'tenor', 'member of the Kapelle' and, from 1586 onwards, 'composer'. He was assistant to the Hofkapellmeister, Ludwig Daser, who was succeeded on his death in 1589 by his son-in-law Balduin Hoyoul, by virtue of his seniority. It was only when Hoyoul himself died in November 1594 that Lechner became Hofkapellmeister, and he was officially installed in April 1595. At that time the Kapelle included 24 singers and 24 instrumentalists. The then ruler, Duke Friedrich, issued a service manual entitled Staat und Ordnung eines Kapellmeisters, which came into force on 10 May 1595. It contained precise instructions for the education, upkeep and instruction of the eight choristers, who were given board and lodging in the Kapellmeister's house, and much space was given over to strict orders enjoining the musicians, above all the instrumentalists, 'dutifully to obey the Kapellmeister in all musical matters'. It is clear that the achievements of the Kapelle had suffered from a lack of discipline, generally because the instrumentalists disputed the right of the Kapellmeister, who had risen from the ranks of the singers, to criticize their playing and dictate to them. Lechner was soon to discover that this was still true, for on 1 March 1596 he petitioned the duke to command the instrumentalists to perform their duties as he had ordered; otherwise he could accept no responsibility for the inadequacy of their performances. Duke Friedrich immediately issued a decree threatening severe punishments. Lechner was thus able to ensure that the standards of the Kapelle gradually improved and that court festivities once more gave them an opportunity to distinguish themselves. When an English legation came to Stuttgart in November 1603 with its own retinue of musicians in order to hand over to Duke Friedrich the Order of the Garter that had been conferred on him, the two groups of musicians organized a competition, which the Württembergers won, though narrowly.

The fact that Lechner brought about such an improvement in the Hofkapelle is all the more remarkable considering that he was frequently ill during the last years of his life; mention of this fact occurs in the funeral oration, and from 1586 onwards court accounts frequently contain entries relating to payments to him towards a spa tax, showing that he visited various resorts, including what is now Baden-Baden in 1593 and Bad Boll in 1605, in search of a cure. Yet in spite of his ill-health he continued to direct the Kapelle and write music up to the very end of his life. For the marriage of the Württemberg Princess Sibylle Elisabeth and Duke Johann Georg, later the Elector of Saxony, he wrote a large-scale psalm setting, Laudate Dominum, quoniam bonus est, for 15 voices divided into three choirs, which was performed at Dresden by members of the Stuttgart Hofkapelle on 16 September 1604. Lechner's illness probably prevented his travelling to Dresden, for by this time he was frequently obliged to hand over direction of the Hofkapelle to the alto Tobias Salomo. In 1604 Salomo described himself in a petition as vice-Kapellmeister, even though he had not officially been so designated; Lechner complained to the duke, but in vain. He died two years later and was buried with great ceremony in the upper Spitalkirche, close to the altar, where only members of the ruling house and the highest court officials were laid to rest.

2. Character. The oration at Lechner's funeral emphasized that he was 'not only well informed about all matters of religion and faith but was thoroughly versed in them too', for he was in the habit of reading all manner of histories and other books, particularly the Bible and 'works of pure theology'. Kade (1869) was typical of scholars of an earlier age when he saw him as a 'fickle and passionate character' and as an 'easily roused, hot-tempered artist in whom Germanic coarseness mingled with the fiery nature of his foreign blood'. A careful investigation of all relevant sources that have since come to light reveals an essentially different picture. Lechner's letters – except for the one of 1585 from Tübingen to Count Eitelfriedrich (see §1 above) – and the prefaces to his printed works reveal a well-bred, highly cultivated man of superior intellect and some discrimination, whose essential modesty was tempered by a justifiable self-assurance. Like all who hailed from South Tyrol, he was of pure German extraction; that he was not 'fickle' is shown by his ten years of uninterrupted activity at Nuremberg and his 22 years in the service of the dukes of Württemberg. Though a committed Lutheran, he remained tolerant and associated freely with Catholic musicians, performing their works and sending young musicians to advance their education at Catholic courts in Austria and Italy.

3. WORKS. Possibly the oldest of Lechner's known compositions are two six-voice canons, Allein Christus ist gestorben für mich and Und andre Müntz darzue, which are dedicated to Theodor Lindner, Kantor at the Nuremberg Spitalkirche (and brother of Friedrich Lindner). The two pieces are copied in Lechner's own hand in a manuscript belonging to Lindner (D-BAs HV Msc 576) and are dated 24 June 1575 (see Krautwurst, 1992). Lechner's first published works, a collection of 30 Latin motets for four to six voices, also appeared in 1575, when he cannot have been much more than 20, but they show that he was already a fully mature composer. They show too that he was unmistakably a product of the Lassus school, although there is a certain Italian influence too, particularly in the use of madrigalisms, which he employed more regularly than any of his German and Dutch contemporaries. The volume also includes an eight-part psalm, which is one of the earliest German examples of Venetian double-choir polyphony. In his Latin sacred works Lechner continued to be heavily indebted to the Dutch school, but he was always far more than an imitator of Lassus, though he was long so regarded. The four masses that survive by Lechner are all parody masses. Probably the earliest mass is that based on Lassus's motet Omnia quae fecisti (composed in 1562). The mass is transmitted incompletely in a manuscript from Neresheim dated 1578 (now in D-Rtt). The work probably originates from Lechner's time in Munich. Three of Lechner's masses were printed in the Liber missarum of 1584. The Missa 'Non e lasso martire' was composed in 1575 and is based on a madrigal by Cipriano de Rore. The Missa 'Domine Dominus noster' was performed on 15 January 1582 at the wedding of Sebald Welser and Margarete Imhoff at St Sebaldus in Nuremberg. It takes as its model Lassus's motet of that name. The Missa 'Non fu mai cervo' was first performed in January 1584 and is based on a madrigal by Luca Marenzio.

The individuality of Lechner's style can be more clearly seen in his settings of vernacular texts. He generally based his German villanellas on Italian models which had been introduced to Germany by Ivo de Vento in 1573 and which came into fashion with the work of Jacob Regnart, some of whose three-part pieces he published in five-part versions in 1579. But he began to go his own way in this genre as early as 1576. He refined it by dispensing with obscene texts, while retaining its loosely structured form, and by adopting a solid contrapuntal technique and madrigal-inspired means of expression. By so doing he created a new type of Gesellschaftslied. His four- and five-part secular songs show similar characteristics. In his 1586 volume 'in the style of secular canzoni', he combined elements of the Dutch style with those of the Italian madrigal in order to give more intense expression to the spiritual and intellectual content of the texts. This aim is particularly evident in the settings of sacred German texts that he included in his volumes of 1582 and 1589. Certain poems, for instance Nun schein, du Glanz der Herrlichkeit and O Tod, du bist ein bittre Gallen, exerted a particularly powerful influence on him. In setting them he created a new kind of German song motet and at the same time reached such a pitch of excellence in it that he himself was the only composer to surpass it, in late works such as the cycle Deutsche Sprüche von Leben und Tod. The late works, which survive in a manuscript of 1606, consist in the main of four- and five-part settings of German words which show that he pursued his own independent course and was in advance of his time and unique in the forms he used. He was the first composer to set a complete cycle of German poems. He collaborated with the leading poets of his day; in Nuremberg he worked with Schede and the goldsmith Paul Dulner, who both provided him with texts which in power of language and imagery were far superior to all other contemporary German verse. Some of the other texts in the 1606 manuscript are most probably by Georg Rudolf Weckherlin (1584–1653), the brother-in-law of Lechner's son, Gabriel, and are no less impressive.

With Lechner's four-part Passion of 1593, his most extensive work, the German motet Passion reached its peak. Its full title, given in a print cited in book fair catalogues but either lost or never published, emphasized that he had based it on 'the old Latin church tone'. This Passion tone moves from one voice to another, thus constantly repeating itself, whereas it is not used at all in other German motet Passions. In this respect Lechner revealed his debt to liturgical tradition, while at the same time using a particularly free form and introducing every stylistic means at his disposal so that the Gospel narrative is endowed with devotional fervour and compassion and impresses itself all the more poignantly upon the listener.

4. REPUTATION. The rediscovery during the past 50 years of much of Lechner's work has revealed the extent to which he managed to reconcile a commitment to tradition with the freedom of artistic creativity. The personal style of his late works was known to few of his contemporaries. Christoph Demantius included these lines of verse in his first published volume of secular music in 1595: 'Orlandus valuit permultum cantibus olim, Langius et Lechner non valuere minus'. The comparison with Lassus was obviously intended to flatter Lechner; Gregor Lange seems then to have been overrated. Lechner's earlier works at least were widely known, and some of them were mentioned by theorists as models and examples, but his music soon fell into oblivion, mainly because of fundamental changes in style that coincided with the introduction of the continuo about 1600. The renewed interest in early music in the 19th century brought to light only a few of his minor works. His life was investigated, but prejudice, allied to inadequate knowledge of the sources, led to mistaken judgments and misinterpretations. It was not until his fine later works were rediscovered in 1926 that the way was open for a true evaluation of him. A complete edition was inaugurated in 1954 and has facilitated the appreciation of him at his true worth as a leading German composer of choral music.

WORKS

Edition: Leonhard Lechner: Werke, ed. K. Ameln and others (Kassel, 1954–) [A] published in Nuremberg unless otherwise stated

SACRED VOCAL

Motectae sacrae, 4–6vv ... addita est in fine motecta, 8vv (2 choirs) (1575); A i

Sanctissimae virginis Mariae canticum, quod vulgo Magnificat inscribitur, secundum octo vulgares tonos, 4vv (1578); A iv

Sacrarum cantionum, liber secundus, 5, 6vv (1581); A vi

Liber missarum ... adjunctis aliquot introitibus in praecipua festa, ab Adventu Domini usque ad festum Sanctissimae Trinitatis, 5, 6vv (1584); A viii
Septem psalmi poenitentiales ... additis aliis quibusdam piis cantionibus, 6 and more vv (1587); A x

3 motets, 1583[2] [see 'Editions']
Historia der Passion und Leidens Christi, 4vv, perf. Stuttgart, 1593, D-Kl [announced in Messkatalog of 1594 as pubd Nuremberg, 1594; edn lost or possibly never pubd]; A xii
Allein Christus ist gestorben für mich, 6vv, D-BAs HV Msc 576
Und andre Müntz darzue, 6vv, BAs HV Msc 576

LIEDER

Neu teutsche Lieder, nach art der welschen Villanellen gantz kurtzweilig zu singen, auch auff allerley Seytenspil zu gebrauchen, 3vv (1576, 3/1586 as part of Der erst und ander Theil der teutschen Villanellen); A ii
Der ander Theyl neuer teutscher Lieder, nach art der welschen Villanellen, 3vv (1577, 2/1586 as part of Der erst und ander Theil der teutschen Villanellen); A ii
Neue teutsche Lieder, 4, 5vv (1577) [incl. sacred lieder]; A iii
Neue teutsche Lieder, erstlich durch ... Jacobum Regnart ... componirt mit drey Stimmen, nach art der welschen Villanellen, jetzund aber ... mit fünff Stimmen gesetzet ... con alchuni madrigali in lingua Italiana, 5vv (1579); A v
Neue teutsche Lieder, 4, 5vv (1582) [incl. sacred lieder]; A vii
Neue lustige teutsche Lieder nach art der welschen Canzonen, 4vv (1586); A ix
Neue geistliche und weltliche teutsche Lieder, 4, 5vv (1589); A xi

3 sacred and secular Lieder, 4vv, 1585[37]
Neue geistliche und weltliche deutsche Gesänge samt 2 lateinischen, 4, 5vv, MS dated 1606, D-Kl (inc.); A xiii

SECULAR VOCAL

Madrigal, 5vv, 1585[17]

OCCASIONAL

Illustrissimo heroi ac domino ... Ioachimo Ernesto, antiquissimi stemmatis Anhaldini ... harmoniam hanc panegyricam composuit, 6vv (1582); A xiv
Eadem epitaphia (Martini Crusii), musicis modis, 6vv, in Martini Crusii ... De imp. rom. Friderico ... Barbarossa ... oratio (Tübingen, 1593); A xiv

3 wedding works, 6, 15, 24vv, perf. Nuremberg, 1582–3, Dresden, 1604; motet in honour of August, Elector of Saxony, 6vv, 1585: D-Dla, Ngm, Welser-Archiv, Neunhof, nr Nuremberg [A xiv–xv]
Wedding work, 5vv, Nuremberg, 1582, lost

EDITIONS

Harmoniae miscellae cantionum sacrarum, 5, 6vv (Nuremberg, 1583[2])
O. de Lassus: Selectissimae cantiones, 6 and more vv [2 parts] (Nuremberg, 1579)
Lassus: Liber missarum, 4, 5vv (Nuremberg, 1581)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BlumeEK; BoetticherOL; EitnerQ; MGG1 (K. Ameln; also Hohenzollern', §5, E.F. Schmid; NDB (K. Ameln); WaltherML
E. Grüninger: Christliche Leichpredigt bey der Begraebnuss weylund des ... Leonhardi Lechneri, fuerstlichen wuertembergischen Capellmeisters. Gehalten zu Stuttgarten in der Spitalkirchen den 11. Sept. Anno 1606 (Tübingen, 1607)
O. Kade: 'Leonhard Lechner und sein Streit mit dem Grafen Eitel Friedrich von Hohenzollern im Jahre 1585', MMg, i (1869), 179–97 esp. 179
M. Fürstenau: 'Kurfürst August von Sachsen, Graf Eitel Friedrich von Hohenzollern-Hechingen und der Kapellmeister Leonhard Lechner', Mitteilungen des Königlich Sächsischen Vereins für Erforschung und Erhaltung vaterländischer Geschichts- und Kunstdenkmäler, xx (1870), 55–69
R. Eitner: 'Leonhard Lechner', MMg, x (1878), 137–43
A. Sandberger: Beiträge zur Geschichte der bayerischen Hofkapelle unter Orlando di Lasso, i, iii (Leipzig, 1894–5/R)
G. Bossert: 'Die Hofkantorei unter Herzog Ludwig', Württembergische Vierteljahrshefte für Landesgeschichte, new ser., ix (1900), 253–91
G. Bossert: 'Die Hofkapelle unter Herzog Friedrich', Württembergische Vierteljahrshefte für Landesgeschichte, new ser., xix (1910), 317–74
T.W. Werner: 'Die im herzoglichen Hausarchiv zu Zerbst aufgefundenen Musikalien aus der zweiten Hälfte des 16. Jahrhunderts', ZMw, ii (1919–20), 681–724
H.J. Moser: 'Das deutsche Chorlied zwischen Senfl und Hassler als Beispiel eines Stilwandels', JbMP 1928, 43–58
M. Schreiber: Leonhard Lechner Athesinus 1553–1606: sein Leben und seine Kirchenmusik (Birkeneck, nr Freising, 1932)
A.A. Abert: Die stilistischen Voraussetzungen der 'Cantiones sacrae' von Heinrich Schütz (Wolfenbüttel, 1935/R)
M. Schreiber: Die Kirchenmusik des Kapellmeisters Leonhard Lechner Athesinus (Regensburg, 1935)
H. Osthoff: Die Niederländer und das deutsche Lied, 1400–1640 (Berlin, 1938/R)
L. Hübsch-Pfleger: Das Nürnberger Lied im deutschen Stilwandel um 1600 (diss., U. of Heidelberg, 1942)
B.P. Baader: Der bayerische Renaissancehof Herzog Wilhelms V. (1586–1579) (Leipzig, 1943)
K. Ameln: 'Lechners Lebenswerk und seine Beurteilung im Wandel der Zeit', Hausmusik, xvii (1953), 2–6
K. Ameln: 'Leonhard Lechners Bekenntnis', Musik und Kirche, xxiii (1953), 19–24
U. Martin: 'Der Nürnberger Paul Dulner als Dichter geistlicher und weltlicher Lieder Leonhard Lechners', AMw, xi (1954), 315–22
K. Ameln: 'Leonhard Lechner', Musik und Kirche, xxvi (1956), 223–31
K. Ameln: Leonhard Lechner (um 1553–1606): Leben und Werk eines deutschen Komponisten aus dem Etschtal (Lüdenscheid, 1957)
U. Martin: Historische und stilkritische Studien zu Leonhard Lechners Strophenliedern (diss., U. of Göttingen, 1957)
U. Martin: 'Die Nürnberger Musikgesellschaften', Mitteilungen des Vereins für Geschichte der Stadt Nürnberg, xlix (1959), 185–225
K. Ameln: 'Leonhard Lechner, ein eigenwüchsiger Meister der deutschen Chormusik', Württembergische Blätter für Kirchenmusik, xxvii (1960), 117–22
K. Ameln: 'Leonhard Lechner, Kapellmeister und Komponist, um 1553–1606', Lebensbilder aus Schwaben und Franken, vii (1960), 69–91
H. Weber: Die Beziehungen zwischen Musik und Text in den lateinischen Motetten Leonhard Lechners (diss., U. of Hamburg, 1961)
E.F. Schmid: Musik an den schwäbischen Zollernhöfen der Renaissance (Kassel, 1962)
W. Boetticher: Aus Orlando di Lassos Wirkungskreis (Kassel, 1963)
K. Ameln: 'Leonhard Lechner in his Time', Cantors at the Crossroads: Essays on Church Music in Honor of Walter E. Buszin, ed. J. Riedel (St Louis, 1967), 75–86
K. Ameln: '"Ohn Gott muss ich mich aller Freuden massen": eine Villanellenweise von Leonhard Lechner als Gemeindelied', JbLH, xiv (1969), 188–9
W. Blankenburg: 'Zu den Johannes-Passionen von Ludwig Daser (1578) und Leonhard Lechner (1593)', Musa–mens–musici: im Gedenken an Walther Vetter (Leipzig, 1969), 63–6
C. Gottwald: 'Humanisten-Stammbücher als musikalische Quellen', Helmuth Osthoff zu seinem siebzigsten Geburtstag, ed. W. Stauber, U. Aarburg and P. Cahn (Tutzing, 1969), 89–103
H. Leuchtmann: 'Drei bisher unbekannte Parodiemessen von Morales, Lechner und Lasso: Neufunde in einer Neresheimer Handschrift von 1578', Musik in Bayern, xx (1980), 15–37
I. Capelle: 'Zur Verwendung des Passionstons in den durchkomponierten Passionen des 16. Jahrhunderts, insbesondere in der Johannes-Passion Leonhard Lechners', Festschrift Arno Forchert, ed. G. Allroggen and D. Altenburg (Kassel, 1986), 61–76
F. Körndle: 'Untersuchungen zu Leonhard Lechners Missa secunda, Non fu mai cervo', Augsburger Jb für Musikwissenschaft, iii (1986), 93–159
S.E. Dumont: German Secular Polyphonic Song in Printed Editions, 1570–1630: Italian Influences on the Poetry and Music (New York, 1989), i, 165–87
M. Klein: 'Neuere Studien über Leonhard Lechner', Schütz-Jahrbuch 1992, 62–77
F. Krautwurst: 'Zwei Widmungskanons von Leonhard Lechner im Stammbuch des Nürnberger Spitalkantors Theodor Lindner', Festschrift Hubert Unverricht, ed. K. Schlager (Tutzing, 1992), 137–48

KONRAD AMELN

Leclair. French family of violinists and composers. Of the eight children of Antoine Leclair, master lacemaker and cellist, and Benoîte Ferrier, the musical careers of six can be traced. Four are separately noted below; Jeanne (1699–after 1762) was a player and teacher of the violin in Lyons, and François (1705–after 1762) was a professional musician there.

(1) Jean-Marie Leclair [l'aîné] (b Lyons, 10 May 1697; d Paris, 22 Oct 1764). Composer, violinist and dancer. He is considered the founder of the French violin school.

1. LIFE. Before his 19th year, Leclair mastered violin playing, dancing and lacemaking. He was then listed among the dancers at the Lyons opera, together with Marie-Rose Casthagnié whom he married on 9 November 1716. He may also have been active as a dancer and violinist in Rouen, where according to Gerber his patron was Mme Mezangère (La Laurencie however doubted the Rouen connection).

Leclair was in Turin in 1722, where he may have been drawn by employment at royal wedding festivities; he was evidently active there as a ballet-master, though he did not hold an official position. Possibly he received violin lessons from G.B. Somis.

Going to Paris in 1723, Leclair came under the patronage of one of the richest men in France, Joseph Bonnier, while he prepared his op.1 for publication. These sonatas were recognized for their originality and, according to one contemporary, they 'appeared at first a kind of algebra capable of rebuffing the most courageous musicians'. Another wrote: 'Le Clair est le premier qui sans imiter rien, Créa du beau, du neuf, qu'il peut dire le sien' ('Le Clair is the first person who, without imitating anything, created beautiful and new things, which he could call his own').

In June 1726 J.J. Quantz visited Turin where, he noted in his diary, Leclair was studying with Somis. Leclair provided ballets (now lost) as postludes to two operas at the Teatro Regio Ducale, Turin, in 1727. In Paris the following year he published a second book of violin sonatas and made his début with 12 appearances at the Concert Spirituel, where he was vigorously applauded in performances of his own sonatas and concertos. He also travelled to London, where John Walsh issued a book of his sonatas, and to Kassel, where he performed at court with Pietro Locatelli. This performance may have been an enactment of the battle between the French and Italian styles which so interested writers of the period. J.W. Lustig recounted that Leclair played 'like an angel' and Locatelli 'like a devil'; that Leclair employed extreme rhythmic freedom and moved his listeners by the beauty of his tone, while Locatelli astonished his listeners with a deliberately scratchy tone and left-hand pyrotechnics. Leclair apparently worked with Locatelli at this time, perhaps returning to Amsterdam with him; 18th-century commentators noted Locatelli's influence in the sonatas of op.5. Another of his teachers at this period was the Parisian composer, harpsichordist and conductor André Chéron, to whom he subsequently dedicated his op.7.

Leclair's first wife had died childless, and on 8 September 1730 he married Louise Roussel, who engraved his op.2 and all his subsequent works. Their only child, Louise, also an engraver, married the painter Louis Quenet.

Numerous performances and publications in Paris led to official recognition when late in 1733 Leclair was appointed by Louis XV ordinaire de la musique du roi. He responded by dedicating to the king his third book of violin sonatas, of which the sixth in C minor (later dubbed 'Le tombeau') is his best-known composition. In his new capacity Leclair associated with some of the best French musicians of the day, including his friend the viol player Antoine Forqueray and his rival Pierre Guignon. The court favoured older French music – Lully for the chamber, Lalande for the chapel – but Leclair was allowed at least once to perform one of his concertos for the queen's entourage, when 'his delicate and brilliant playing was greatly applauded'. This employment ended in 1737 when Leclair and Guignon quarrelled over the directorship of the king's orchestra. The two agreed to alternate monthly, with Leclair leading off; but after the first month he resigned and left Paris rather than sit second to Guignon.

Leclair next accepted an invitation to the court of Orange in the Netherlands from Anne, Princess of Orange and daughter of George II of England. Princess Anne had become an accomplished harpsichordist under Handel's tutelage; their mutual esteem may be surmised from his dedication to her of his op.9 and her decorating him with the Croix Néerlandaise du Lion. From 1738 to 1743 Leclair spent three months each year at the court. After July 1740 the remaining nine months were spent at The Hague, where he had become maestro di cappella to a wealthy commoner, François Du Liz, who maintained an establishment of 20 musicians. This arrangement ended with Du Liz's bankruptcy in January 1743; Leclair returned to Paris to publish his fourth and final book of violin sonatas. In 1744 he spent some time in Chambéry playing for the Spanish Prince Don Philippe, to whom he subsequently dedicated op.10. He then returned to Paris, and remained there, apart from an occasional visit to Lyons.

Jean-Marie Leclair: engraving by Jean-Charles François after Alexis Loir (?III), 1741

Leclair spent the next few years in semi-retirement, on a pension from the Bonnier de la Mosson family, teaching the violin and composing. On 4 October 1746, in his 50th year, his only opera, Scylla et Glaucus, had its première at the Académie Royale de Musique. In his letter of dedication he wrote 'Today I enter upon a new career', surely an allusion to Rameau who similarly embarked on an operatic career in his 51st year. Leclair's opera, stylistically in the Rameau tradition, had a mixed reception, received 18 performances in two months and was then dropped from the repertory.

In 1748 Leclair was taken into the service of a former pupil, Antoine-Antonin, Duc de Gramont, for whose private theatre at Puteaux (now a suburb of Paris) he became composer and musical director. Leclair continued to work for the duke after 1751, when the duke's financial extravagances forced the sale of the Puteaux estate and a return to Paris. For the duke he composed a number of vocal and instrumental pieces, now lost except for the vocal part of one ariette (Sadler and Zaslaw, 1980–81). About 1758 Leclair and his wife parted and set up separate households, Leclair buying a small house in a dangerous part of Paris. He was murdered late one evening in 1764 as he entered his house. The Paris police conducted a thorough investigation and found three suspects: the gardener who found the body; Leclair's nephew, Guillaume-François Vial, with whom he had fallen out; and Mme Leclair herself. The murder is often said to be shrouded in mystery, but the evidence (in the French Archives Nationales) is so clearly against the nephew, who was a violinist and the author of L'arbre généalogique de l'harmonie (1767), that the only remaining mystery is that he was never brought to trial.

2. Works. Leclair's achievement as a composer lay in his modification of the Corellian sonata style to accommodate French taste. The result was the goûts réunis prophesied by Couperin, the vermischter Geschmack later recommended by Quantz. He imbued the Italian sonata style with elements drawn from the Lullian dance and from the pièce of the French viol players and harpsichordists. Leclair was often able to combine the two styles and to arrive at a new synthesis. In this he was a child of his time, for comparable syntheses were attempted by many of his contemporaries. Leclair was one of the most successful. In his concertos he stayed close to Vivaldian models in the fast movements, more often introducing the French taste in the slow movements.

In his melody Leclair ranged from the détaché style of the Lullian dances and French viol players to the cantabile melodies of the Italian violinists, with a moderately ornamented line, fully written out. His melodic style shows a preference for an accumulation of shorter phrases as compared with the seamless Fortspinnung of Bach; shorn of their overlay of Rococo ornamentation, his melodic lines show a basic structure and style close to that of such models as Corelli and Lully. His harmony is varied and colourful, and includes occasional bold strokes such as enharmonic modulations and intensely chromatic progressions. One cannot speak of an 'early' or 'late' style in Leclair's music. His remarkably consistent style was as advanced in 1723 as it was outmoded in 1753. Although none of his works can be dated other than by the terminus ad quem provided by their first publication, there is some evidence that Leclair, like Corelli, composed the bulk of his music early in his career and published it little by little; the increase in harmonic complexity found by Preston in the four books of violin sonatas is perhaps due to Leclair's preferring to publish the less problematic works first. He handled the favourite forms of the period with mastery, though without introducing innovations or prefiguring the development of the 'sonata form' of the early Classical style.

Technically, Leclair made considerable demands. For the left hand there were excursions into high positions, multiple stops (for virtually entire movements), double trills, and left-hand tremolo. The bow arm had to master tied-bow staccatos, rapid string crossings and a variety of subtle articulations. In his own day Leclair was renowned for his brilliant and accurate performance of multiple stops. Insofar as he wrote out his ornaments and sometimes required the use of notes inégales, Leclair performed in the French tradition. But in most aspects of violin technique, including his use of the longer, so-called 'Tartini bow', his manner of performance was Italian. An account of 1738 praised his ability to play well in either style.

Leclair's pupils – leaving aside a number of noble dilettantes – included L'abbé le fils, Elisabeth de Haulteterre, Petit, Geoffroy, Guillaume-Pierre Dupont, Jean-Joseph Rudolphe and, perhaps, Gaviniès and Le Chevalier de Saint-Georges (but not, as erroneously claimed, Dauvergne or Mahoni dit Le Breton). Leclair is rightly considered the first great figure of the French violin school, and his influence on French violinists persisted to the end of the 18th century.

WORKS

all published in Paris

op.
[1]	Premier livre de sonates (a, C, B♭, D, A, e, F, G, A, D, B♭, b), vn, bc (1723/R), 2 also for fl; ed. in RRMBE, lxxvii (1995)
[2]	Second livre de sonates (e, F, C, A, G, D, B♭, D, E, c, b, g), vn, bc (*c*1728/R), 5 also for fl; ed. in RRMBE, lvii (1988)
3	Sonates (G, A, C, F, e, D), 2 vn/tr viols (1730/R); ed. M. Pincherle (Paris, 1924); ed. S. Beck (New York, 1946); ed. Rost (Locarno, Wilhelmshaven and Amsterdam, 1963)
4	Sonates en trio (d, B♭, d, F, g, A), 2 vn, bc (*c*1731–3); ed. M. Pincherle (Paris, 1922)
5	Troisième livre de sonates (A, F, e, B♭, b, c, a, D, E, C, g, G), vn, bc (1734/R); ed. in RRMBE, iv–v (1968–9)
6	Première recréation de musique d'une exécution facile (D), 2 vn, bc (1736/R) [suite with ov.]; ed. H. Ruf (Kassel, 1976)
7	6 concertos (d, D, C, F, a, A), vn, str, bc (1737), no.3 for fl/ob, str, bc
8	Deuxième recréation de musique d'une execution facile (g), 2 rec/vn, bc (*c*1737) [suite with ov.]; ed. H. Ruf (Kassel, 1967)
9	Quatrième livre de sonates (A, e, D, A, a, D, G, C, E♭, f, g, G), vn, bc (1743/R), 2 also for fl; 6 pubd as op.1 (London, *c*1755); ed. in RRMBE, x–xi (1969–72)
10	6 concertos (B♭, A, D, F, e, g), vn, str, bc (1745)
11	Scylla et Glaucus (opéra tragédie, prol, 5, d'Albaret), Paris, Académie Royale de Musique, 4 Oct 1746, MS with autograph corrections, F-Po; score pubd (1746); rev. Lyons, Concert de l'Académie des Beaux-Arts, *c*1755, see Vallas
12	Second livre de sonates (b, E, D, A, g, B♭), 2 vn/tr viols (*c*1747–9/R); ed. M. Pincherle (Paris, 1950)
13	[3] Ouvertures et [3] sonates en trio (G, D, D, b, A, g), 2 vn, bc (1753/R); ov. no.3 is arr ov. to 1746 Scylla et Glaucus; sonata no.1 is arr. op.2 no.8; no.2 is arr. op.1 no.12; no.3 is arr. op.2 no.12

[14] Trio (A), 2 vn, bc (1766), posth. [suite with ov.]; ov. is ?arr. ov. to c1755 Scylla et Glaucus; 2nd movt arr. from op.9 no.11; 3rd movt arr. from prol to Scylla et Glaucus; 4th movt arr. from op.5 no.4

[15] Sonate (F), vn, bc (1767), posth.; ed. in RRMBE, xi (1972); see Preston (1967)

2 minuets, vn, bc, in Ir Recueil de menuets nouveaux français et italiens tels qu'ils se dansent aux bals de l'Opéra (Paris, 1740s)

Other pieces by Leclair pubd in 18th-century anthologies are reprs. of movts from pubd works with op. nos.

Lost: ballet music for G.M. Orlandini's Semiramide, Turin, Regio, carn. 1722, lib also lost, ? same music as ballet music for D. Sarro's Didone abbandonata, Turin, Regio, carn. 1727, lib pubd; ballet music for Orlandini's Antigona, Turin, Regio, carn. 1727, lib pubd; Près des bois enchantés (cantata), poem pubd in Mercure de France (Jan 1736), music announced for pubn, Paris, 1767; divertissement for Le danger des épreuves (comedy, 1, J. de La Porte or Senneterre), Paris, de Puteaux, 19 June 1749, lib pubd (Paris, 1749); Apollon et Climène, 2nd entrée of Amusements lyriques, Paris, de Puteaux, Feb 1750, lib pubd (Paris, 1750); arias and dances for several Fr. plays perf. in Paris, de Puteaux, 1751–64, unpubd, see La LaurencieEF, Pincherle; Tablature idéale du violon jugée par feu M. le Clair l'aîné être la seule véritable (Paris, 1766)

(2) Jean-Marie Leclair [le second; le cadet] (b Lyons, 23 Sept 1703; d Lyons, 30 Nov 1777). Violinist and composer, brother of (1) Jean-Marie Leclair. In 1732 the city councillors of Besançon engaged him as director of their Académie de Musique, but the city fathers of Lyons lured him back after less than a year with the offer of an annual pension. In return Leclair agreed to remain at Lyons as music director of the Académie des Beaux-Arts and to teach the violin to anyone requiring lessons. In all this he was so successful that in 1741 the city fathers augmented his pension and passed an appreciative motion which read in part:

> His talent for playing the violin, with a perfection which daily brings him approbation, leaves the public nothing to desire. Such a talent is of considerable importance in sustaining the concerts and the Opéra of this city, since by his efforts the instrumental music in both places is performed in a much more regulated manner. Besides, he daily trains youngsters of good family in the art of violin-playing, so that one can say that persons of all ages profit from Mr Leclair's ability.

The honour and financial rewards accorded Leclair by the people of Lyons were accompanied by a growing reputation elsewhere. In 1738 a report published in Paris listed him among French violinists who 'already have a great reputation', and the following year he published a book of 12 violin sonatas, dedicated to Camille Perrichon, Louis XV's commandant for Lyons. On 25 January 1748 he married Jeanne-Suzanne Crus de la Chesnée; they had a son in 1749 and a daughter in 1751. Around this time Leclair's op.2, six sonatas for two violins or viols, was published. The rest of his life was spent in Lyons. The syndics of the Lyons Concert named him secretary in perpetuity and from time to time performed his works. There is mention of such works as Le Rhône et la Saône, a 'Divertissement champêtre' (1736), and in 1768 a 'symphony', some arias and a motet, but all of these works are lost.

Leclair's published music suggests that he was an excellent violinist as well as an able composer. Many movements have a decided charm, but others are pedestrian. The style of the music is close to that of Jean-Marie l'aîné. According to Marpurg (1754) Jean-Marie le second was as great a virtuoso as Jean-Marie l'aîné; as a composer, however, he was but a pale reflection of his older brother.

WORKS

Premier livre de sonates (e, G, F, A, G, B♭, A, D, g, C, a, E), vn, bc, op.1 (Paris, 1739)

Sonates (A, D, E, G, F, D), 2 vn/tr viols, op.2 (Paris, c1750)

Le Rhône et la Saône (cant., P. Dubruit de Charville), Lyons, 1730s; lost, see Vallas, 187

Divertissement champêtre (anon.), Lyons, 1736; lost, see Vallas

1 motet, 14 Dec 1768; 1 symphonie, 2 March 1768; ariettes avec orchestre, 13 July, 7 Sept, 23 Nov 1768: all lost, see Vallas, 195

(3) Pierre Leclair (b Lyons, 19 Nov 1709; d Lyons, 2 April 1784). Violinist and composer, brother of (1) Jean-Marie Leclair. He spent most of his life as a violinist in Lyons. He married on 30 January 1730. A certain 'Pr. Le Claire, of Lyons' was active as an engraver of music in Ghent around 1750; this may be the same man. In 1764 Pierre, living in Versailles, published his op.1, Six sonates de récréation à deux violons. His op.2, Six sonates de chambre, also violin duets, remained in manuscript (F-LYm). He died poor and was given a pauper's burial.

(4) Jean-Benoît Leclair (b Lyons, 25 Sept 1714; d after 1759). Comédien, violinist and composer, brother of (1) Jean-Marie Leclair. He appeared, with his father and two older brothers, among the musicians performing in the annual Voeu du Roi in Lyons on 8 August 1735. On 1 August 1736 the city of Moulins engaged him as director of its newly formed Académie de Musique and offered a position to his fiancée, Catherine (Pierrette) de la Porte: the couple married a fortnight later in Moulins. Their contract was to run 'until 1 January 1738 at least'; by July 1737, however, they had left Moulins, and by February 1739 were back in Lyons, where they had a daughter and were proprietors of a shop.

Nearly a decade later Leclair was head of a travelling troupe of actors, dancers and musicians. His troupe played at Leuven in 1748, at Brussels and Liège in 1749, at Ghent in 1750, at Liège again in 1750–51, at Utrecht in 1751 and finally at Liège once more in 1758–9. His activity as composer is known only from the libretto of a divertissement performed on 27 April 1749 in Brussels to celebrate the return of Duke Charles of Lorraine from the negotiation of a peace treaty. The work, a ballet héroïque entitled Le retour de la paix dans les Pays-Bas (B. de la Roche), was composed and directed by Leclair, and the dancers included three of his children.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberL; La LaurencieEF; PierreH; SartoriL

L. Vallas: Un siècle de musique et de théâtre à Lyon 1688–1789 (Lyons, 1932/R)

E. Appia: 'The Violin Sonatas of Leclair', The Score no.3 (1950), 3–19

M. Pincherle: Jean-Marie Leclair l'aîné (Paris, 1952/R)

M. Lemoine: 'La technique violonistique de Jean-Marie Leclair', ReM no.226 (1955), 117–43

R.E. Preston: 'The Treatment of Harmony in the Violin Sonatas of Jean-Marie Leclair', RMFC, iii (1963), 131–44

G. Nutting: 'Jean-Marie Leclair, 1697–1764', MQ, l (1964), 504–14

J.-F. Paillard: 'Les concertos de Jean-Marie Leclair', Chigiana, xxi, new ser., i (1964), 47–62

N. Zaslaw: 'Some Notes on Jean-Benoît Leclair', RBM, xix (1965), 97–101

R.E. Preston: 'Leclair's Posthumous Solo Sonata: an Enigma', RMFC, vii (1967), 155–63

N. Zaslaw: 'Handel and Leclair', CMc no.9 (1969), 183–9

M.-T. Bouquet: Storia del teatro regio di Torino, i: Il teatro di corte dalle origini al 1788 (Turin, 1976)

N. Zaslaw: 'Leclair's "Scylla and Glaucus"', MT, cxx (1979), 900–04

G. Sadler and N.Zaslaw: 'Notes on Leclair's Theatre Music', ML, xli (1980), 147–57; xlii (1981), 12l only

P. Schwarze: Styles of Composition and Performance in Leclair's Concertos (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1983)
J. Cizéron: 'La vie musicale lyonnaise au XVIIIe siècle', Académie musicologique du Forez, vi (1986), suppl.
A. Borowitz: 'Finale Marked "Presto": the Killing of Leclair', MQ, lxxii (1986), 228–38
N. Zaslaw: 'Scylla et Glaucus: a Case Study', COJ, iv (1992), 199–228

NEAL ZASLAW

Leclair, Louise Roussel (b Paris, 9 Sept 1700; *d c*1774). French music engraver. Known first under her maiden name of Louise Roussel, she was the daughter of the engraver and print dealer Claude Roussel, whose business was in the rue Saint-Jacques and who himself engraved several musical works. Her first productions date from 1723 (the Second livre de sonates pour violon by Henry Eccles). In 1728 she engraved JEAN-MARIE LECLAIR's second book of sonatas, and soon afterwards, in 1730, she married him and changed her signature to Louise Leclair. Works by many of the great violinist composers of the period, including Jacques Aubert, Jean Barrière, Corelli, Pietro Gianotti, Leclair, Simon Leduc, Carl Stamitz and Tartini, are found under her signature. In smaller quantities, she also engraved chamber music works (by Haydn, Stamitz and F.-J. Gossec), symphonies by J.C. Bach, and some vocal works. Among the publishers who employed her most frequently were Venier, Vernadé, Bayard, La Chevardière and Le Menu. After the death of her husband in 1764, from whom she had been separated in 1750, she published two of his works (opp.14 and 15); she ceased any activity after 1774. She took great pains with the legibility of the works she engraved, and her style is characterized by its clarity and elegance of presentation on the page.

Her daughter Louise Leclair was also a music engraver, and after her marriage to the painter Louis Quenet she took her husband's name. She seems to have produced only a limited number of works between 1765 and 1770.

ANIK DEVRIÈS

Le Clerc, Charles-Nicolas (b Sézanne en Brie, 20 Oct 1697; d Paris, 20 Oct 1774). French music publisher and violinist, younger brother of JEAN-PANTALÉON LE CLERC. The brothers have often been confused owing to the similarity of their activities and the infrequent use of Jean-Pantaléon's first name. Charles-Nicolas Le Clerc's name appears for the first time in the list of violinists of the Académie Royale de Musique in 1729 and in that of the 24 Violons du Roi in 1732. He held the former post until 22 May 1750 and the latter until 1761. His talents as a violinist were frequently mentioned during that period in accounts of concerts published in the Mercure de France.

Le Clerc began publishing music in 1736 and remained in the business until his death; the first privileges registered in his name date from 9 March 1736 and 17 November 1738; his first catalogue (1738) shows an impressive list of works. His shop was in the rue St-Honoré and bore the signs 'A la Ville de Constantinople' (1737–8), 'A l'Image Ste Geneviève' (1759–60) and 'A Ste Cécile' (1760–74). The fact that he specialized in music publishing indicates that he was something of a pioneer, and also distinguishes his career from that of his brother and the Boivin dealers (primarily commission agents). The only works he sold to the public were those he had commissioned and had engraved. After 1760 he became a commission agent. He was the first in France to have the idea of establishing a repertory of engraved works on which he had sole rights, following the principle which Ballard had been applying for generations with printed music. He published largely foreign music by well-known Italian, German and Flemish composers; some French composers (e.g. J.-M. Leclair and Guillemain) were also listed. Up to 1760 he published mainly instrumental music, later including opéras comiques, ariettes and cantatilles. His music stock was sold in lots by his widow a few months after his death. One lot was bought in December 1774 by Mathon de la Cour on behalf of the Bureau du Journal de Musique and another in February 1775 by the composer Taillart the elder.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DEMF; HopkinsonD
M. Brenet: 'Quelques musiciens français du XVIIIème siècle: les Le Clerc', RHCM, vi (1906), 291–7
G. Cucuel: 'Quelques documents sur la librairie musicale au XVIIIe siècle',SIMG, xiii (1911–12), 385–92
G. Cucuel: 'Notes sur quelques musiciens, luthiers, éditeurs et graveurs de musique au XVIIIe siècle', SIMG, xiv (1912–13), 243–52
M. Ruhnke: 'Die Pariser Telemann-Drucke und die Brüder LeClerc',Quellengeschichte der Musik: Wolfgang Schmieder zum 70. Geburtstag, ed. K. Dorfmüller and G. von Dadelsen (Frankfurt, 1972), 149–60
A. Devriès: Edition et commerce de la musique gravée à Paris dans la première moitié du XVIIIe siècle: les Boivin, les Leclerc (Geneva,1976)
A. Devriès and F. Lesure: Dictionnaire des éditeurs de musique français (Geneva, 1979), 95–9

ANIK DEVRIÈS

Leclerc, Félix (Eugène) (b La Tuque, Quebec, 2 Aug 1914; d Ile d'Orléans, nr Quebec City, 8 Aug 1988). Canadian songwriter, singer and writer. He began his career as a radio announcer and scriptwriter in Quebec City in the late 1930s and then joined the CBC in Montreal as a writer and producer in 1941. Although he had little musical training Leclerc began to write songs to his own poems; his first, Notre sentier, was written at the age of 18. He was heard in Montreal by the artistic director of Philips records, Jacques Canetti, who brought him to Paris in 1950 to make a successful début at l'ABC where he remained for five weeks. Subsequently he toured in France and Switzerland. In 1951 his song Moi, mes souliers was awarded a Grand Prix du Disque by the Académie Charles-Cros.

Leclerc became known in Europe as 'le Canadien', and was the first French-Canadian chansonnier to achieve wide recognition in the French-speaking world. He appeared in the films Les brûlés (1958), Félix Leclerc, troubadour (1959) and La vie (1967); he last performed on stage in 1972. In his songs he followed no popular trends and avoided sophistication in both text and music. With a deep, robust baritone voice he sang of Quebec's landscape, people and customs. To one critic, his songs 'smacked of the rich damp earth, of the forests and lakes, of ripe apples and of new-mown hay'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EMC2 (D. Ménard, C. Rioux and B. Roy)
L. Bérimont: Félix Leclerc (Paris, 1964)
J.-C. Le Pennec: L'univers poétique de Félix Leclerc (Montreal and Paris, 1967)
B. L'Herbier: La chanson québécoise (Montreal, 1974)
J. Bertin: Félix Leclerc, le roi heureux (Montreal, 1988)

GILLES POTVIN/R

Le Clerc [Leclercq], Jacques (b Langres, *c*1620; d St Pierre de Melun, 1 Jan 1679). French musical theorist. He took his vows as a Benedictine monk at Limoges in 1641 and became sub-prior of the abbey of the Trinité in Vendôme. Like many of his Benedictine colleagues of the congregation of St. Maur, Le Clerc was a scholar with varied interests. First and foremost a linguist, he was interested in Latin pronunciation, mathematics and music, the latter as both a theorist and a practitioner. He is chiefly known for the misattribution to him in early literature of P.-B. de Jumilhac's La science et la pratique du plain-chant (1673). Nevertheless, among manuscripts left by him (in F-Pn) are original writings related to chant. Two are of interest: Méthode facile et accomplie pour apprendre le chant de l'église sans l'aide d'aucune gamme (dated 1665, f.fr.20001) and Règles du chant et de la prononciation grecque et latine (an extended work, comprising five treatises, which is incomplete and is found in portions of f.fr.19103 and 20002).

Le Clerc's aim was to re-establish plainchant as it had been practised before its 'corruption' by humanism. His argument was fourfold: the strictures of the Council of Trent and of post-Tridentine reform conform to tradition in criticizing both long melismas and an allegedly defective prosody; writing on ways of modifying traditional rhythm, Le Clerc noted a tendency to abandon distinctions between different kinds of chant; the disfigurement of chant resulting from the preceding observation reduces it to the level of any other kind of music; and these observations alone should provide Benedictines with the tools necessary to 're-establish Gregorian chant in its original purity'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R.P. Tassin: Histoire littéraire de la Congrégation de Saint-Maur (Brussels, 1770/R), 99, 274

D. Launay: 'Un esprit critique au temps de Jumilhac: Dom Jacques Leclerc, bénédictin de la Congrégation de Saint-Maur', Études grégoriennes, xix (1980), 197–219

P. Ranum: Méthode de la prononciation latine dite vulgaire ou à la française: petite méthode à l'usage des chanteurs et des récitants d'après le manuscrit de Dom Jacques Le Clerc (Arles, 1991)

J. Duron, ed.: Plain-chant et liturgie en France au XVIIe siècle (Paris, 1997)

PHILIPPE VENDRIX

Le Clerc, Jean-Pantaléon (b ?Sézanne en Brie, before 1697; d after 1759). French publisher and violinist, the elder brother of CHARLES-NICOLAS LE CLERC . He lived at the 'Croix d'Or', rue du Roule, Paris, from 1728 to 1758. Having entered the 24 Violons du Roi on 17 July 1720, he remained a member until 1760. A periodical advertisement dated October 1728 announced the start of his career as a music commission agent. Up to 1753 his name was often associated with that of Boivin, both on the title-pages of works and in music advertisements. There seems to have been a tacit agreement between the two dealers; they shared the Parisian music market and the same works are listed in their respective catalogues. Their trade was supplied by the composers themselves, mainly by those having had their works engraved at their own expense. They also represented French and foreign publishers such as Ballard, Charles-Nicolas Le Clerc and Michel-Charles Le Cène.

Three catalogues dated 1734, 1737 and 1742 provide an inventory of the music on sale at the 'Croix d'Or'; the list is supplemented by a further undated catalogue published in 1751. Some of the works listed were commissioned by Le Clerc himself; they are recorded in the 'Registres des Privilèges' and in an engraved catalogue (the French national archives contain the only surviving copy, attached to a deed dated 13 April 1752 by which his brother Charles-Nicolas acquired the rights to works in the catalogue). Composers listed in this catalogue include Quantz, Telemann, Bourgouin, Croes, Lavaux, Charles Wiseman, Deltour, Noblet and T.L. Bourgeois; chamber music, dances (minuets, quadrilles, airs) and songs represent the works published by Le Clerc.

On 7 June 1751 Le Clerc retired and handed over the commission agency to his daughter Anne-Cécile on her marriage to the organist Claude Vernadé. He authorized her to run the business under the name of Le Clerc and this explains the alternation of the names of Le Clerc, Le Clerc-Vernadé and Vernadé on the title-pages of works sold between 1751 and 1758. In 1758 La Chevardière took over from Mme Vernadé and described himself as the successor of M. Le Clerc.

It is possible that Le Clerc was also a composer. Some dances signed Le Clerc are contained in contemporary anthologies entitled Nouveaux menuets françois et italiens .... mis en ordre par Mr. Le Clerc (Paris, 1730), but this is not sufficient evidence that he was the author. The last known reference to Le Clerc is a deed drawn up by a notary in 1760 which mentions that at that time he kept a haberdashery in Paris.

For bibliography see LE CLERC, CHARLES-NICOLAS.

ANIK DEVRIÈS

Lecocq, (Alexandre) Charles (b Paris, 3 June 1832; d Paris, 24 Oct 1918). French composer. One of five children of a poor family, he was born infirm and from the age of five or six was forced to use crutches. He soon concentrated on music, playing first a flageolet and later the piano. By the age of 16 he was sufficiently accomplished a pianist to give lessons. After a period of instruction in harmony by Crèvecoeur, he entered the Paris Conservatoire in 1849, where he studied harmony with Bazin and composition with Halévy, and made friends with his fellow students Bizet and Saint-Saëns. At the end of his second year he gained second prix in counterpoint and was primus accessit in Benoist's organ class. But the weakness of his legs made organ playing tiring and difficult. He was forced to leave the Conservatoire prematurely, in 1854, to help support his parents by giving piano lessons and by playing at dances and for lessons of the dancing-master Cellarius. He first attracted attention as a composer in 1856 when, out of 78 entrants in a competition organized by Offenbach for the Théâtre des Bouffes-Parisiens, he and Bizet shared first place with their settings of an operetta libretto Le docteur Miracle.

In spite of this success, Lecocq had to wait for recognition. A few of his one-act operettas were performed during the 1860s, but it was not until 1868 that he enjoyed his first real success with Fleur-de-thé, an operetta with a Japanese setting, after the current fashion. He finally achieved prominence after the 1871 revolution. In Brussels, where Lecocq lived for several years from 1870, the popular acclaim accorded his operettas Les cent vierges (1872), La fille de Madame Angot (1872) and Giroflé-Girofla (1874), all of which were later produced with great success in Paris and abroad, established him as a natural successor to Offenbach. Settling once again in Paris, he confirmed his international reputation with La petite mariée (1875) and Le petit duc (1878), both of which have remained in the French operetta repertory. After a lapse of more than a year caused by illness and domestic problems, his career resumed with Janot (1881), Le jour et la nuit (1881) and Le coeur et la main (1882), but these were his last real successes. He accepted that fashion had changed, and his output gradually decreased as he turned to other genres. Plutus (1886), an attempt to write in a more serious vein, was produced by the Opéra-Comique; it failed, and received only eight performances. He also composed a ballet, Le cygne, for the Opéra-Comique (1899). During the 1890s he took up the scores of his earlier works, wrote prefaces on their background and made critical comments on individual numbers. His last important operetta was La belle au bois dormant (1900); thereafter he composed little. He was made a Chevalier of the Légion d'honneur in 1900 and an Officier in 1910.

Much of Lecocq's music is characterized by a light touch, but he could also adopt a more lyrical and elevated style than Offenbach and termed several of his operettas opéras comiques. His greatest popular triumph, La fille de Madame Angot, has remained a classic among operettas, and demonstrates Lecocq's abundant flow of pleasing melodies, his deft exploitation of rhythm for a lively theatrical effect, impressive building up of extended numbers, and typically French shaping of phrases.

WORKS

all printed works published in Paris

STAGE

operettas, first performed in Paris, and published there in vocal score, unless otherwise stated ob – opéra bouffe

optte – opérette

Le Docteur Miracle (oc, 1, L. Battu and L. Halévy), Bouffes-Parisiens, 8 April 1857 (1877)
Huis-clos (1, A. Guénée and A. Marquet), Folies-Nouvelles, 28 or 29 Jan 1859
Le baiser à la porte (optte de salon, 1, J. de la Guette), Folies-Nouvelles, 26 March 1864 (*c*1890)
Liline et Valentin (optte de salon, 1, de la Guette), Champs-Elysées, 25 May 1864 (?*c*1864)
[Les] ondines au champagne (optte, 1, H. Lefèbvre, Pélissié and Merle), Folies Marigny, 3 Sept 1865 or 1866 (1876)
Le myosotis (optte bouffe, 1, Cham and W. Busnach), Palais-Royal, 2 or 3 May 1866 (1866)
Le cabaret de Ramponneau (1, Lesire), Folies Marigny, 11 Oct 1867 (?*c*1867)
L'amour et son carquois (ob, 2, Marquet and Delbès), Athénée, 30 Jan 1868 (1868)
Fleur-de-thé (ob, 3, Chivot and Duru), Athénée, 11 April 1868 (1868)
Les jumeaux de Bergame (oc, 1, Busnach), Athénée, 20 Nov 1868 (1876), orch score (1884)
Le carnaval d'un merle blanc (folie parée et masquée, 3, H. Chivot and A. Duru), Palais-Royal, 10 Dec 1868
Gandolfo (optte, 1, Chivot and Duru), Bouffes-Parisiens, 16 Jan 1869 (1869)
Deux portières pour un cordon (1, Lucian [L. Dubuis and Lefèbvre]), Palais-Royal, 19 March 1869 (?*c*1869)
Le rajah de Mysore (optte bouffe, 1, Chivot and Duru), Bouffes-Parisiens, 21 Sept 1869 (1869)
Le beau Dunois (ob, 1, Chivot and Duru), Variétés, 13 April 1870 (1870)
Sauvons la caisse (1, de la Guette), Tertulia, 22 Sept or Dec 1871 (?*c*1871)
Le testament de M. de Crac (ob, 1, J. Moinaux), Bouffes-Parisiens, 23 Oct 1871 (1872)
Le barbier de Trouville (bluette bouffe, 1, A. Jaime and Noriac), Bouffes-Parisiens, 19 Nov 1871 (1872)
Les cent vierges (ob, 3, Clairville, Chivot and Duru), Brussels, Fantaisies-Parisiennes, 16 or 17 March 1872 (1872)
La fille de Madame Angot (oc, 3, Clairville, V. Koning and P. Siraudin), Brussels, Fantaisies-Parisiennes, 4 Dec 1872 (1873)
Giroflé-Girofla (opéra bouffe, 3, E. Leterrier and A. Vanloo), Brussels, Fantaisies-Parisiennes, 21 March 1874 (1874)
Les prés Saint-Gervais (oc, 3, V. Sardou and P. Gille), Variétés, 14 Nov 1874 (1874)
Le pompon (oc, 3, Chivot and Duru), Folies-Dramatiques, 10 Nov 1875 (1875)
La petite mariée (ob, 3, Leterrier and Vanloo), Renaissance, 21 Dec 1875 (1876)
Kosiki (oc, 3, Busnach and A. Liorat), Renaissance, 18 Oct 1876 (1877)
La marjolaine (ob, 3, Leterrier and Vanloo), Renaissance, 3 Feb 1877 (1877)
Le petit duc (oc, 3, H. Meilhac and Halévy), Renaissance, 25 Jan 1878 (1878)
La Camargo (oc, 3, Leterrier and Vanloo), Renaissance, 20 Nov 1878 (1879)
Le grand Casimir (optte, 3, J. Prével and A. de Saint-Albin), Variétés, 11 Jan 1879 (1879)
La petite mademoiselle (oc, 3, Meilhac and Halévy), Renaissance, 12 April 1879 (1879)
La jolie Persane (oc, 3, Leterrier and Vanloo), Renaissance, 28 Oct 1879 (1879)
Janot (oc, 3, Meilhac and Halévy), Renaissance, 21 Jan 1881 (1881)
La roussotte (vaudeville-opérette, 3, Meilhac, Halévy and A. Millaud), Variétés, 26 or 28 Jan 1881 (1881), collab. Hervé and M. Boulard
Le jour et la nuit (ob, 3, Leterrier and Vanloo), Nouveautés, 5 Nov 1881 (1882)
Le coeur et la main (oc, 3, C. Nuitter and A. Beaumont), Nouveautés, 19 Oct 1882 (1883)
La princesse des Canaries (ob, 3, Chivot and Duru), Folies-Dramatiques, 9 Feb 1883 (1883)
L'oiseau bleu (oc, 3, Chivot and Duru), Nouveautés, 16 Jan 1884 (1884)
La vie mondaine (ob, 3, E. de Najac and P. Ferrier), Nouveautés, 13 Feb 1885 (1885)
Plutus (oc, 3, Millaud and Jollivet), OC (Favart), 31 March or May 1886 (1886)
Les grenadiers de Mont-Cornette (3, Daunis, Delormel and E. Philippe), Bouffes-Parisiens, 4 Jan 1887 (?*c*1887)
Ali-Baba (oc, 4, Vanloo and Busnach), Brussels, Alhambra, 11 Nov 1887 (1887)
La volière (oc, 3, Nuitter and Beaumont), Nouveautés, 11 or 12 Feb 1888 (?1888)
L'égyptienne (oc, 3, Chivot, Nuitter and Beaumont), Folies-Dramatiques, 8 Nov 1890
Nos bons chasseurs (vaudeville, 3, P. Bilhaud and M. Carré), Casino de Paris, 10 April 1894
Ninette (oc, 3, Clairville, Hubert, Lebeau and C. de Trogoff), Bouffes-Parisiens, 28 Feb 1896 (1896)
Ruse d'amour (saynète, 1, S. Bordèse), Boulogne, Casino, 26 June 1898 (1897)
La belle au bois dormant (oc, 3, G. Duval and Vanloo), Bouffes-Parisiens, 19 Feb 1900 (1900, 2/*c*1905)
Yetta (oc, 3, F. Beissier), Brussels, Galeries St-Hubert, 7 or 8 March 1903 (1903)
Rose Mousse (comédie-musicale, 1, A. Alexandre and P. Carin), Capucines, 28 Jan 1904 (1904)
La salutiste (opéra monologue, l, Beissier), Capucines, 14 Jan 1905
Le trahison de Pan (oc, 1, Bordèse), Aix-les-Bains, Casino, 13 Sept 1911 (1912)

Undated: Le chevrier (oc, 2, C. Narrey and M. Carré fils) (*c*1888)
Unperf.: Renza; Ma cousine

OTHER WORKS

2 choruses
Over 100 songs
Les clercs de la Basoche, orch
Deux morceaux religieux: Andante nuptial, Offertoire, vn, org/pf (1883), also arr. orch; Mélange sur La fille de Madame Angot, ob, pf (1884); Allegretto, vc, pf (1885); Sonata, vn, pf
*c*60 dances and salon pieces, pf, 2 pieces arr. orch

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO
L. Schneider: Les maîtres de l'opérette française: Hervé, Charles Lecocq (Paris, 1924), 125–283
G. Lebas, ed.: 'Lettres inédites de Lecocq à Saint-Saëns', ReM, v/3–5 (1923–4), 119–31; v/9–11 (1923–4), 121–44; vi/6–8 (1924–5), 216–24
L. Schneider: Une heure de musique avec Charles Lecocq (Paris, 1930)

P. Landormy: La musique française de Franck à Debussy (Paris, 1943, 2/1948)
R. Traubner: Operetta: a Theatrical History (New York, 1983)

ANDREW LAMB

Le Cocq, François (fl early 18th century). Flemish composer and guitarist. He was a musician in the chapel royal, Brussels, mentioned in 1729 as being retired. He also taught guitar to the wife of the Elector of Bavaria. His music for five-course guitar survives in two manuscripts (B-Bc Littera S, 5615, dated 1730 (facs. (Brussels, 1979)), and Br II.5551D), both with the title Recueil des pieces de guitarre. They were copied by a friend of Le Cocq, Jean Baptiste Ludovico de Castillion, provost of the ecclesiastical college of Ste Pharailde in Ghent. Manuscript S, 5615 (of which the other is an abridged version) has a lengthy preface by Castillion describing the tuning, stringing and fretting of the guitar, and explaining note values, time signatures and ornaments. He recommends the use of bourdons on both fourth and fifth courses and mentions the use of overwound strings for this prupose. The music, notated in French tablature, is in two sections, the first comprising 117 pieces grouped by key and attributed to Le Cocq, the second containing music by earlier composers (Corbetta, Colista, Pérez de Závala, Granata, Sanz, Visée and Derosiers). At the end there is a glossary of musical forms and terms. Several of Le Cocq's pieces are incorporated into the suites in Santiago de Murcia's Passacalles y obras (GB-Lbl Add.31640).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Hall: The Guitar Anthologies of Santiago de Murcia (diss., Open U., Milton Keynes, 1983), i, 39–45
C. Russell: 'Santiago de Murcia: the French Connection in Baroque Spain', JLSA, xv (1982), 40–51
M. Hall: 'Santiago de Murcia and François Le Cocq', JLSA, xvi (1983), 3–6
C. Russell: 'François Le Cocq's Influence on Santiago de Murcia: Problems with Dates, Sources and Recomposition', JLSA, xvi (1983), 7–11 [see also 'Communications', JLSA, xvii–xviii (1984–5), 139–40]
C. Russell: François Le Cocq, Belgian Master of the Baroque Guitar', Soundboard, xxiii (1988–9), 283–93

MONICA HALL

Lecocq, Jean [Jehan] (fl 1540–60). Composer. He may be identifiable with JOANNES GALLUS.

Le Coincte, Louis. See LE QUOINTE, LOUIS.

Leçon de ténèbres (Fr.). A name applied in France, especially during the 17th and 18th centuries, to a musical setting of a portion of the Lamentations of Jeremiah for use in one of the three services of TENEBRAE in Holy Week; the form Leçons de ténèbres usually denotes a set of three lessons for one such service. See LAMENTATIONS.

Le Conte [Comes, Cont, Conti, del Conte, El Conte, Il Conte], Bartholomeus [Bartolomeo] (fl 1547–65). French singer and composer, active in Italy. His home diocese was Limoges or Noyon. He first appears in the historical record with El Conte: Bartholomei Comitis gallici … motetta … suavissime sonantia for five voices (Venice, 1547). From November 1550 to January 1554 he was a tenor in the choir of Siena Cathedral. He proceeded to Rome, where he briefly sang in the Capella Giulia (21 March – 31 May 1554). He entered the choir of the papal chapel on 9 September 1555, and was among the papal singers deputed to the Council of Trent in February 1561. He received permission to go abroad on 24 September 1564, and wrote the following spring to say he had accepted employment from 'a lord of his own country'; his resignation was accepted on 13 April 1565. In documents connected with a shake-up of the papal chapel later that year, Le Conte's voice was disparaged and he was described as 'a terrible heretic' (hereticus pessimus); he was expelled from the chapel on 1 October.

Besides Le Conte's 20 five-voice motets of 1547, we have a four-voice madrigal, Di ciò, cor mio, ascribed to 'Il Conte' in Il vero terzo libro di madrigali … a note negre (1549[31]; ed. in CMM, lxxiii/4, 1980), and a four-voice motet, Agnus Christus in cruce, printed without ascription in Susato's second book of motets (1553[9]). This was reprinted, along with five of the 1547 motets, under the name of 'Comes' in Berg & Neuber's Evangelia (1555[11-12], 1556[8]). There is also a five-voice madrigal, Mordi, mordi, ben mio, ascribed to 'Bartolomeo Il Conte' in the first book of madrigals of Francesco Usper (1604[20]). Le Conte was a capable if conventional composer. He chose particularly weighty texts and was the first to set each of his madrigal poems. His vocal lines express the verbal rhythms fluently and the scoring is varied, though his harmonic range is limited and the pacing of the motets is rather uniform.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

VanderStraetenMPB, vi
A. Ducrot: 'Histoire de la Cappella Giulia au XVIe siècle depuis sa Fondation par Jules II (1513) jusqu'à sa restauration par Grégoire XIII (1578)', Mélanges d'archéologie et d'histoire, lxxv (1963), 179–240, 467–559, esp. 217
R. Sherr: 'Competence and Incompetence in the Papal Choir in the Age of Palestrina', EMc, xxii (1994), 607–29
F.A. D'Accone: The Civic Muse: Music and Musicians in Siena during the Middle Ages and the Renaissance (Chicago, 1997), 318–29

JEFFREY DEAN

Le Conte, Pierre-Michel (b Rouen, 6 March 1921). French conductor. At the Paris Conservatoire he studied the bassoon with Gustave Dhérin and conducting with Eugène Bigot and Louis Fourestier. Throughout his career he worked chiefly in French radio. He was conductor for radio in Nice from 1946 to 1949 and in Toulouse from 1950 to 1952, and from 1960 to 1973 he was resident conductor of the ORTF Opera Orchestra in Paris. He also conducted other orchestras, both in France and elsewhere; he conducted the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra at the Aix-en-Provence Festival in 1947, and in 1972 he toured the USSR with a programme of French music. He also taught conducting classes at the Paris Conservatoire for many years.

Le Conte favoured 19th-century symphonic works, but as a radio conductor he was also concerned with performing contemporary works, chiefly operatic. He conducted many first performances, including those of Les amants captifs (1960) and Fille de l'homme (1964) by Pierre Capdevielle, Françaix's La princesse de Clèves (1965) and Le dialogue des Carmélites (1969), and Germaine Tailleferre's La petite sirène (1958). He also had a particular talent for conducting lighter music.

CHRISTIANE SPIETH-WEISSENBACHER/R

Lectionary (from Lat. lectionarium). A liturgical book of the Christian Church, either Western (Latin and derived rites) or Eastern, containing scriptural or other readings for the Eucharist or Divine Office; see LITURGY AND LITURGICAL BOOKS, §II, 2(ii) and 3(ii), and §IV, 3(v), see also EKPHONETIC NOTATION.

Lectionary notation. See EKPHONETIC NOTATION.

Lecuna, Juan Vicente (b Valencia, 20 Nov 1899; d Rome, 15 April 1954). Venezuelan composer and pianist. He studied the piano with Salvador Llamozas at the Caracas National School of Music, where he graduated in 1917. Between 1918 and 1926 he lived in New York City as a freelance pianist, while studying with E. Kuypers and A. Savine. By 1926 he returned to Venezuela, where he initiated a financial career while still composing. By 1936 he had earned a diplomatic post at the Venezuelan Embassy in Washington. This began a long period of foreign residencies which put him in contact with several important composers and performers in the Americas and Europe, including Nicanor Zabaleta and Claudio Arrau, to whom he dedicated his Sonata for harp and his Suburbio for piano respectively. In 1941 he worked with Straube at the Peabody Conservatory. He was commissioned by the Venezuelan Ministry of Education in 1942 to look into the state of public school music education in Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay and Chile. During these visits he lectured extensively on Venezuelan music. He eventually established a close collaboration with the Chilean composer Domingo Santa Cruz, and was made an honorary member of the fine arts faculty at the University of Chile in 1944. He also received the artistic guidance of composer Jaime Pahissa in Buenos Aires, and of Manuel de Falla (exiled in the province of Córdoba, Argentina), with whom he cultivated a warm friendship. After a short return to Venezuela in 1946, he spent his last years as a member of the Venezuelan legation to the Vatican.

Lecuna is distinguished by the refinement and balance of his style, best represented in his piano music. His works reflect post-Impressionist or neo-classical tendencies but always include nationalistic elements. Lecuna's neo-classicism evokes Renaissance and Baroque Spain. His best known composition, the set of Sonatas de Altagracia for piano, recalls the structure and texture of the sonatas of Scarlatti, and incorporates rhythmic motives characteristic of Venezuelan traditional dances.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Rumbera, 1926–35; Danza, 1954; Movimiento, 1951–4

Pf: Merengue, ?1926–35; Morocota, ?1926–35; Pasillo, ?1926–35, Rumbera, ?1926–35; La criolla vestida, ?1930–35; Rapsodia venezolana, 1935; Canción de cuna, 1936; La bandola, 1937; Calinerie, 1937; 5 sonatas de Altagracia, 1937–47; 4 pièces, pf (Paris, 1938): Vals caraqueño, 1937, Criolla (La criolla desnuda), 1930–33, Joropo, 1935, Danza (Suburbio), 1934; El preludio, 1938; Rapsodia venezolana, 2 pf, 1949–50; Música para niños, 1952; Chant sans paroles; Preludio

Other insts: Sonata, hp, 1942; Str Qt, 1943–4

1v, pf: Spleen (P. Verlaine), 1917; Green (Verlaine), 1918; Rêverie (A. de Musset), 1918

Principal publishers: Alphonse Leduc, Fundación Vicente Emilio Sojo (Caracas), Universidad Central de Venezuela, Ministerio de Educación de Venezuela

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.A. Calcaño: La ciudad y su música: crónica musical de Caracas (Caracas, 1958), 447–9

M. Otero: 'Juan Vicente Lecuna en perspectiva', Homenaje a Juan Vicente Lecuna Caracas, 1993 [programme notes; catalogue]

N. Tortolero: Sonido que es imagen . . . imagen que es historia: Iconografía de compositores venezolanos (Caracas, 1996)

JUAN ORREGO-SALAS/CARMEN HELENA TÉLLEZ

Lecuona (Casado), Ernesto (b Guanabacoa, 7 Aug 1896; d S Cruz de Tenerife, 29 Nov 1963). Cuban composer. Born into a musical family, he played the piano from an early age and wrote his first song when he was 11. He studied the piano with Carlo Alfredo Peyrellade, Saavedra and Hubert de Blanck. He graduated from the National Conservatory in Havana in 1913, receiving first prize and a gold medal, and soon made his first appearance as a composer–pianist. Then, after further studies with Joaquín Nin, he made several tours of Latin America, Europe and the USA as the leader of a dance band, Lecuona's Cuban Boys, which became quite well known. For some years he lived in New York, where he wrote for musicals, films and the radio. In his concerts he usually performed his songs and dances for piano, as well as light pieces by other late 19th- and early 20th-century Cuban composers. His salon piano pieces, using 'white' peasant and Afro-Cuban rhythms, found wide favour, and many of his songs, too, achieved great popularity. Indications have surfaced that in later years he wrote in a more formal style, with greater use of development and classical forms, and a more elaborate structure. A piano trio performed only once in Havana and fragments of a string quartet point to a more modern, almost Stravinskian harmony.

WORKS
(selective list)

Op: El maizal (G. Sánchez de Galarraga), 1929, La Habana, Payret, 7 March 1930

Zars (all first performed in La Habana): Lola Cruz (Sánchez de Galarraga), 1923, Auditorium, 15 Sept 1935; La niña Rita (Riancho y Castells), 1927, Regina, 29 Sept 1928; El batey (Sánchez de Galarraga), 1928–9, Regina, 9 April 1929; El cafetal (Sánchez de Galarraga), 1929, Regina, 1 March 1929; María la O (Sánchez de Galarraga), 1930, Payret, 1 March 1930; Rosa la china (Sánchez de Galarraga), 1932, Martí, 27 May 1932; La plaza de la Catedral (F. Meluzá Otero), 1942, Nacional, 19 March 1944

Orch: Rapsodia negra, pf, orch, 1943; Suite, 1945

Songs (texts by Lecuona unless otherwise stated): Desengaño (Sánchez de Galarraga) (1926); Noche azul (1927); Andalucía (1928); Aquella tarde (1928); Malagueña (1928); Canto carabalí (Sánchez de Galarraga) (1929); Canto negro (Sánchez de Galarraga) (1929); Siboney (1929); Como arrullo de palmas (1931), Damisela encantadora (1936); Mujer (1937); Dame de tus rosas (1939); La canción del regreso (Meluzá Otero) (1939); Mi mariposa (1941); El crisantemo (1943); Siempre en mi corazón (J.L. Seña), 1943

Chbr: Pf Trio; Str Qt, inc.

Pf: Danza negra (1934)

Principal publisher: Editoria Musical de Cuba, Marks (New York)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Piñeiro: Cronología de E. Lecuona (La Habana, 1985)

O. Martínez: Ernesto Lecuona (La Habana, 1989)

C. De León: Ernesto Lecuona (La Habana, 1995)

AURELIO DE LA VEGA

Lecuona Casado, Ernestina (b Matanzas, 16 Jan 1882; d Havana, 3 Sept 1951). Cuban composer and pianist. Member of a remarkable musical family (including Ernesto Lecuona, her brother, and Leo Brouwer, her grandson), she studied at the Academia del Centro Asturiano in Havana and continued at the Municipal Conservatory (now the Amadeo Roldán School of Music) and then with Madame Calderón of the Paris Conservatoire. In 1932 she met the singer Esther Borja, her most faithful interpreter, with whom she toured Latin America, performing in theatres, on radio and on film. She also performed as a solo pianist in Cuba and abroad and gave concerts for two pianos with her brother, to whom she dedicated three pieces, Danza negra and the boleros Mi vida es soñar and Anhelo besarte. In 1937 she was a founder member of the Orquesta Feminina de Concierto. Her compositions are mostly small-scale, including can-ciones, hymns, waltzes and other Latin-American dances, and she often wrote replies to the works of other composers: her ¿Me odias?, a criolla, was a reply to Te odio by Felix B. Caignet; further works of this kind are the bolero No lo dudes (1932) and the bolero-canción Ahora que eres mía (1936). Some of her compositions have been recorded.

WORKS
(selective list)

Cancions: Luisa, habanera, 1897: ¿Por qué no me quieres?, criolla-bolero, 1929; Ahora que eres mía, bolero-canción, 1936; Cierra cierra los ajos (E. Costales), 1938; Cuando duermes, 1938; Ya que te vas, 1948

Boleros: Amarte es mi destino, 1932; No lo dudes, 1932; Mi sueño eres tú, 1936; Tú seras en mis noches (Costales), 1939

Waltzes: Jardin azul (G.S. Galarraga), 1929; Soñé con tu amor (C.P. Belinchón), 1939; Déjame amarte aunque sea un día más; No lo supiste comprender

Other works, incl. Himno a Maria Inmaculada y a Santa Teresa de Jesús; Pancho y Ramona, danzon; El diabilito, son; Oye mi son, son; ¿Me odias?, criolla

ALICIA VALDÉS CANTERO

Leczinska [Leszczynska], Marie, Queen of France (b Breslau, 23 June 1703; d Versailles, 24 June 1768). French ruler, musician and patron of music. The daughter of King Stanislaus I of Poland and Catherine Opalinska, in 1725 she married Louis XV. At Versailles, she cultivated musical and artistic talents and encouraged her daughters towards similar pursuits. She played several instruments, including the harpsichord and vielle, and also sang. According to the Duke of Luynes, she participated in evening chamber music with Farinelli and other famous musicians. In 1735, she established twice weekly Concerts de la Reine at Marly and Versailles, where operas recently performed in Paris were heard, along with works from the Concert Spirituel. After 1745, with the presence of Madame de Pompadour at court, the queen's interest in formal musical entertainment declined; however, she occasionally entertained child prodigies, including the young Mozart (New Year's Day, 1764).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Daval: La musique en France au XVIIIe siècle (Paris, 1961)

N. Dufourcq: La musique à la cour de Louis XIV et de Louis XV d'après les Mémoires de Sourches et Luynes, 1681–1758 (Paris, 1970)

P.F. Rice: The Performing Arts at Fontainebleau from Louis XIV to Louis XVI (Ann Arbor, 1989)

MARY CYR

Ledang, Ola Kai (b Namsos, 25 July 1940). Norwegian ethnomusicologist. He studied the organ at the Trondheim Music School (diploma 1962), civil engineering at the Norwegian Institute of Technology, Trondheim (1963), and musicology at the University of Oslo (MA 1966). After holding a scholarship at the Norwegian Folk Music Institute in Oslo (1964–70) he became a lecturer and subsequently professor (1987) at the University of Trondheim; he has also been a music critic for the Oslo newspapers Dagbladet, Verdens gang and Morgenbladet. His research has been particularly concerned with Norwegian folk instruments, African music and the social aspects of music. He has also edited a collection of traditional ballads (Trøndervisan, ed. G. Hordvik, F.M. Åstedt and O.K. Ledang, Trondheim, 1986).

WRITINGS

'Instrumentell analyse av einstemmig musikk', Forskningsnytt fra Norges almenvitenskapelige forskningsråd, no.3 (Oslo, 1966), 13–18

Song, syngemåte og stemmekarakter: samanliknande gransking av 28 lydbandopptak av ein norsk religiøs folketone [Song, singing style and voice character: comparative examination of 28 audio tape recordings of a Norwegian religious popular melody] (Oslo, 1967)

'Some Musicological Applications of the Sonagraph', SMN, i (1968), 21–38

'On the Acoustics and the Systematic Classification of the Jaw's Harp', YIFMC, iv (1972), 95–103

'Instrument-Player-Music: on the Norwegian Langleik', Festschrift to Ernst Emsheimer, ed. G. Hilleström (Stockholm, 1974), 107–18, 273–4

'Frå religiøse folketonar til rytmesalmar' [From religious popular melodies to rhythmic hymns], Årbok for Trøndelag, xiv (1980), 125–34

'Open Form in African Tribal Music', SMN, ix (1983), 9–26

'Frå afrikansk stammemusikk til europeisk barokk: om samanhangen mellom afro-amerikansk musikk og europeisk barokkmusikk', Arena, ix (1986), 26–39

'Revival and Innovation: the Case of the Norwegian Seljefløyte', YTM, xviii (1986), 145–56

'Europeisk barokkmusikk i koloniperspektiv', SMN, xiii (1987), 45–81

ed.: Musikklidenskapelig: 13 essays om Musikkvitenskapelig institutt 1962–1987 [Passionate about music: 13 essays on the Institute of Musicology] (Oslo, 1987)

'Magic, Means, and Meaning: an Insider's View of Bark Flutes in Norway', Selected Reports in Ethnomusicology, viii (1990), 105–23

'The Soundscape: Progenitor of Music and Instruments', Studia instrumentorum musicae popularis XI: Smolenice 1992, 151–6

KARI MICHELSEN

Ledbetter, Huddie. See LEADBELLY.

Ledenyov, Roman (Semyonovich) (b Moscow, 4 Dec 1930). Russian composer. He studied under Rakov and Anatoly Aleksandrov at the Moscow Conservatory, after which he completed a postgraduate course and joined the staff there. He served as secretary to the board of the Composers' Union of the RSFSR (1970–73) and in 1972 received the award Honoured Artist of the RSFSR. He began by writing in a style that owed much to Prokofiev but that also incorporated a great deal of dissonant harmony and a small amount of 12-tone technique (as in the impressive Violin Concerto) before, in the early 1960s and largely under the influence of Andrey Volkonsky, lurching towards the then avant garde and producing a number of often miniature works for small ensembles which curiously combine the brevity of Webern with something of the Russian nationalist spirit of Lyadov. It is probably through shorter works such as these that he made his most remarkable contribution. To this period belong the very attractive Kontsert-poèma ('Poem Concerto') for viola and orchestra and the Kontsert-noktyurn ('Nocturne Concerto') for flute and orchestra (both of 1964). After a period of ill-health, he changed path radically towards the neo-nationalism of Sviridov, in which spirit he produced many songs and concertos in which a mixture of Tchaikovsky, Musorgsky and Glazunov is filtered through a strangely modern nostalgia, resulting in much kitsch but, deliberately, little irony. The best piece of this last period is the massive Symphony Rus' Green and white-snowed, composed over several decades, in which the spirit of the music of Glazunov, early Rachmanionff, Lyadov and other masters of the Russian silver age is treated to a loving reappraisal.

WORKS

Ballet: Tale of Green Balloons (1, Ye. Bïkova, Yu. Skott, after V. Logovskoy), 1967

Vocal: Ode to Joy (cant., P. Neruda), 4vv, orch, 1958; Russkiye pesni [Russ. Songs] (trad. Russ.), 1v, pf, 1958; Songs of Freedom (orat, African and Asian poets), 1v, chorus, orch, 1961; Native Country

(cant., N. Nekrasov), female v, chorus, orch, 1977; Lay of Igor''s Host, orat, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1977; 3 stikhotvoreniya [3 Poems] (N. Rubtsov), 1988; 3 vokaliza, chorus, 1988; Vremeni goda [The Seasons], chorus, inst ens, 1988

Orch: Detskaya syuita [Children's Suite], small orch, 1957; Ode to the Party, 1961; Kontsert-noktyurn [Nocturne Conc.], fl, orch, 1964; Kontsert-poėma [Poem Conc.], va, orch, 1964; Vn Conc., 1964; Noktyurnï, 3 pieces, chbr orch, 1968; Kontsert-ėlegiya, vc, orch, 1980; kontsert-romans, pf, orch, 1981

Chbr and solo inst: Sonata, cl, pf, 1952; Sonata pamyati S. Prokof'yeva [in Memory of Prokofiev], 1956; Str Qt, 1958; Detskiy al'bom [Children's Album], 98 pieces, 1961; 6 p'yes [6 Pieces], str qt, hp, 1966; 10 ėskizov [10 Sketches], ens, 1967; 7 nastroyeniy [7 Moods], ens, 1967; Mini suite, org, 1968; Brief Tunes, 5 pieces, str qt, 1969; I Play the Clarinet, suite, cl, pf, 1972; 4 risunka [4 Drawings], ens, 1972; Pieces for children, 1977 [90 in all]; Elegicheskiy sekstet [Elegaic Sextet], str, 1983; 2 Ensembles, ww, 1987

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Gerlach: Fünfzig sowjetische Komponisten der Gegenwart (Leipzig and Dresden, 1984)

V. Kelle: 'Smïsla zhivaya osnova' [The living core of meaning], SovM (1984), no.9, pp.13–18 [on the Elegiac Sextet]

V. Likht: 'Pomogat' obnovleniyu iskusstva' [To help the renewal of art], SovM (1989), no.9, pp.4–11 [interview with Ledenyov]

G. McBurney: 'The Music of Roman Ledenev', Tempo, clxxvii (June, 1991), 24–31

R.L. Nikolayevich: O dokhovnom renessanse v russkoy muzïke 1960–80kh godov [About the Spiritual Renaissance of Russian music from the 1960s to the 1980s (St Petersburg, 1998), 198–207

GERARD McBURNEY

Lederer, Joseph [Anton] (b Ziemetshausen, Swabia, 15 Jan 1733; d Ulm, 22 Sept 1796). German composer. After an elementary education in Ulm, he entered the Augustinian seminary 'Zu den Wengen' and then the monastery, where he was a prebendary, teacher of theology and musician. According to Weyermann, 'he was talented, very industrious and studied harder than most of his fellow friars, but he was the most intolerant monk, and insulted the town's Protestants at every opportunity', for which he was reproached by his superiors. Lederer's works include numerous theological writings and a chronicle of the monastery (Augsburg, 1783). His compositions are mostly musical comedies and operettas written for the monastery's Gymnasium. He usually wrote his own texts, some of which are extant (D-Us), and he was given the honorary title 'kaiserlich und königlich gekrönten Dichter' for his activities as a poet. His stage works were occasionally performed outside Ulm, and Schikaneder presented his comedy Der Chargenverkauf several times in Salzburg in 1780–81. Most of Lederer's published output is sacred music. He described his six masses (1776) as 'short, light, and melodic', intended primarily 'for the use of country choirs and in nunneries'. In 1775, through his brother Ambrosius Lederer, he dedicated the masses and a poem to Prince Ernst of Oettingen-Wallerstein, indicating in the poem that his models as a composer were Gluck and Haydn. Lederer himself engraved his harpsichord concerto on copper. His only extant instrumental work, the Apparatus musicus, containing pieces for beginners, was a product of his teaching activities in the monastery, as was his treatise Neue und erbauliche Art zu solmisiren (Ulm, 1756, rev. 2/1796 as Neue und erleichterte Art zu solmisiren).

WORKS

Stage (most perf. Ulm, music lost, some libs in D-Us): 22 Singspiele, 1765–88; 4 Trauerspiele, 1761–75

Vocal: Stabat mater (Augsburg, 1752); Laus Dei (Augsburg, 1761); 6 masses, 2 solo vv, chorus, insts (Augsburg, 1776); 5 vespers, 5 psalms, Mag, Stabat mater, 4vv, insts (Ulm, 1780, 2/1789); cant., S, insts, in Apparatus musicus oder Musikalischer Vorrath (Augsburg, 1781); Off, 4vv, insts, D-Tl; 6 masses, op.4 (Augsburg, 1785), mentioned in Weyermann

Inst: Hpd Conc. (Ulm, n.d.), lost; Apparatus musicus, incl. 18 versettes, 17 preambles, minuet, trio, 3 sonatas, rondo with 5 variations (Augsburg, 1781), 1 preamble ed. U. Siegel, Musik des oberschwäbischen Barock (Berlin and Darmstadt, 1952, 2/1954)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Weyermann: Neue historisch-biographisch-artistische Nachrichten von Gelehrten und Künstlern . . . aus der vormaligen Reichsstadt Ulm (Ulm, 1829), ii, 267ff [incl. list of writings and works]

ADOLF LAYER

Lederman (Daniel), Minna (b New York, 3 March 1896; d New York, 29 Oct 1995). American editor and writer on music and dance. She had professional training in music, dance and drama before graduating in 1917 from Barnard College. In 1923 she was a founding member of the League of Composers, and the following year she helped launch its Review (renamed Modern Music in 1925), the first American journal to manifest an interest in contemporary composers. As the sole editor (1924–46), she developed the journal's distinctive literary style and was responsible for bringing into its pages the writings of such rising young composers as Blitzstein, Bowles, Cage, Carter, Copland, Sessions and Virgil Thomson, thereby nurturing an entire generation of composer-critics. Equally important were the articles by scholars, critics and European composers including Bartók, Berg and Schoenberg. For over two decades Modern Music was a lively force in the international music world, chronicling developments in concert music, jazz, musical theatre, film, radio and dance in the USA, Europe and Latin America. In 1974 Lederman established the archives of Modern Music in the Library of Congress, and she wrote about the journal and her experience as editor in The Life and Death of a Small Magazine (Modern Music, 1924–1946) (Brooklyn, NY, 1983). She wrote on criticism and dance for Modern Music, edited the music anthology Stravinsky in the Theatre (New York, 1949/R), and contributed to American Mercury, Saturday Review of Literature, The Nation and other periodicals.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Obituary, New York Times (1 Nov 1995)

C.J. Oja: 'The Mother of Them All: Remembering Minna Lederman', Institute for Studies in American Music Newsletter, xxv/2 (1995–6), 1–2, 14 only

M. Swed: 'Remembering Modern Music', MQ, lxxx (1996), 58–60

R. ALLEN LOTT

Ledesma (Hernández), Dámaso (b Ciudad Rodrigo, 3 Feb 1868; d Salamanca, 13 June 1928). Spanish folklorist, organist and composer. His talent as a musician was nurtured during his early childhood. After serving as an organist at a local church, Ledesma became organist at the cathedral in Ciudad Rodrigo (1889–98) and at Salamanca Cathedral (1898), a post he held until his death. He was ordained a priest in Salamanca. He was a famous improviser and a prolific composer of organ and liturgical music, but he is best remembered for his Folklore ó Cancionero salmantino (Madrid, 1907/R), which contains 404 melodies collected from the rich oral tradition of his native province. This was awarded a prize in an open competition by the Real Academia de Bellas Artes de S Fernando (Madrid), and was later published by the Diputación Provincial de Salamanca; the collection remains one of the most outstanding in Spanish folklore. An unpublished second volume containing 903 items was left to his disciple Bernardo García-Bernalt Huertos in 1929.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Villalba Muñoz: 'El estudio de la canción popular castellana y el cancionero salmantino de Dámaso Ledesma', La Ciudad de Dios, lxxvii (1908), 311–19

I.J. Katz: 'The Traditional Folk Music of Spain: Explorations and Perspectives', YIFMC, vi (1974), 64–85

E. Casares Rodicio, ed.: Música en la Generación del 27 (Madrid, 1986) [incl. autobiographical letter, 153]

B. García-Bernalt Huertos: Folklore musical salmantino para coro, piano y orquesta (Salamanca, 1995) [incl. works by Ledesma]

ISRAEL J. KATZ

Ledesma, Mariano Rodríguez de. See RODRÍGUEZ DE LEDESMA, MARIANO.

Ledesma, Nicolás (b Grisel, Zaragoza, 9 July 1791; d Bilbao, 4 Jan 1883). Spanish composer. He was a choirboy at Tarazona Cathedral, where he was taught music by Francisco Javier Gibert and José Angel Martinchique. He later moved to Zaragoza, where he studied the organ with Ramón Ferreñac. From an early age he was organist and choirmaster in various collegiate churches: Borja (1807), Tafalla (1809), Calatayud (where he is known to have been about 1824) and finally Bilbao (1830), where he remained until his death. Ledesma was a prolific composer of masses, Lamentations, motets and villancicos. Although his music reflects the bombastic and theatrical tendencies of his age, he had a sound technique and a certain nobility of invention. He was also active with Eslava in efforts to renew and purify religious music.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.M. Esperanza y Solá: 'D. Nicolás Ledesma', Treinta años de crítica musical (Madrid, 1906), ii, 41–58

J. López-Calo: Catálogo musical del archivo de la Santa Iglesia Catedral de Santiago (Cuenca, 1972, rev. 2/1992–3 as La música en la Catedral de Santiago), 273ff [with addl bibliography]

JOSÉ LÓPEZ-CALO

Ledger, Philip (Stevens) (b Bexhill-on-Sea, Sussex, 12 Dec 1937). English organist, harpsichordist and choral conductor. He made his mark as an organist while still in his teens and was awarded the Limpus and Read prizes when he took his Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists. At Cambridge, where he was a music scholar at King's, he gained first-class honours in both parts of the music tripos and a distinction in the MusB examination. His first appointment as master of the music at Chelmsford Cathedral in 1961 made him the youngest cathedral organist in the country. He soon showed, however, that his potential ranged beyond the organ loft, and in 1965 he became director of music at the newly founded University of East Anglia at Norwich. For three years he was dean of the School of Fine Arts and Music, and he laid the foundations of a new Music Centre at the university, opened in 1973. Ledger's all-round musicianship attracted the attention of Benjamin Britten and in 1968 he became closely associated with him as an artistic director of the Aldeburgh Festival. He conducted at the opening concert in the rebuilt Maltings at Snape and participated in recordings of a number of Britten's works. He also conducted at the Promenade Concerts in London, appeared as harpsichord soloist and continuo player, gave organ recitals at the Royal Festival Hall, and played as a pianist with the Melos Ensemble.

In 1974 he was appointed director of music at King's College, Cambridge, a postition he held until 1982, consolidating the achievements of David Willcocks and making many admired recordings. In 1982 he became principal of the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama in Glasgow, and in 1993 was appointed an honorary professor at the University of Glasgow. Ledger has edited music by Byrd, volumes 2 and 3 of Anthems for Choirs, and The Oxford Book of English Madrigals (London, 1978), while his interest in the music of Purcell is reflected in a performing edition of King Arthur (with Colin Graham), in which he conducted the English Opera Group in performances in Britain and abroad. He was created a CBE in 1985 and holds many other honours.

STANLEY WEBB/R

Ledger line. See LEGER LINE.

Lediard, Thomas (b London, 20 Oct 1684; d London, June 1743). English stage designer and writer. In spite of his training as an architect, Lediard was occupied very early on with diplomatic matters. For several years he served the Duke of Marlborough and around 1720 established himself as secretary to the British embassy in Hamburg. Sir Cyril Wich, then British envoy to the Hanseatic towns, acted as tenant of the Gänsemarkt opera house and soon engaged Lediard to design the scenery for festive prologues, serenades and operas which were sponsored by the resident diplomats and which were performed in honour of their respective royal families. Lediard developed a unique style which relied on conventional 17th-century Italian and German models but which was highlighted by the (sometimes superabundant) use of allegorical devices and emblems as well as ingenious lighting and the employment of transparent scenery. Back in London he presented an allegorical opera, Britannia (1732), with music by J.F. Lampe. When it proved a failure, he turned to writing and later was appointed Surveyor of Westminster Bridge.

WRITINGS

on music and theatre only

Eine Collection Verschiedener Vorstellungen (Hamburg, 1729, enlarged 2/1730 as Eine Collection Curieuser Vorstellungen) [incl. engravings of his stage designs]

The German Spy, in Familiar Letters (London, 1738; Ger. trans., 1764 as Der deutsche Kundschafter)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (J.K. Laughton)

H.C. Wolff: 'Laterna-magica-Projektionen auf dem Barocktheater', Maske und Kothurn, xv (1969), 97–104

D.R. Martin: 'Eine Collection Curieuser Vorstellungen (1730) and Thomas Lediard, an Early Eighteenth-Century Operatic Scenographer', CMc, xxvi (1978), 83–98

D. Schröder: Zeitgeschichte auf der Opernbühne: Barockes Musiktheater in Hamburg im Dienst von Politik und Diplomatie, 1690–1745 (diss., U. of Hamburg, 1996)

DOROTHEA SCHRÖDER

Ledoux, Claude (b Auvelais, 23 Feb 1960). Belgian composer and pianist. He trained at the Liège Conservatoire (1977–89), where he studied composition with Rzewski, Boesmans and Jean-Louis Robert, and electroacoustics with Patrick Lenfant. He also came into contact there with Pousseur. He spent several periods studying abroad, notably with Ligeti (1985 and 1990) and in Paris (1987–9), where he attended the IRCAM seminars on computer music. Between 1992 and 1996 he paid four long visits to the East, which made a profound impression on him. From 1990 he taught music theory at the Maastricht Conservatory, and from 1992 composition at the Mons Conservatoire. Ledoux's style reflects the European avant garde's return to the idea of consonance. Following psychoacoustic principles he bases his musical language primarily on the analysis of the full range of harmonic spectra (see SPECTRAL MUSIC). The modelling of these acoustic phenomena is translated into instrumental gestures and gives rise to melodic principles by which microtonal inflections act as a means of varying the timbre.

WORKS
(selective list)

Et le rêve s'en fut . . . , vn, cl, perc, pf, 1982; Chant, 3 perc, hp, pf, synth, 1983; Evanescence, orch, 1985; Liaisons, ob/eng hn, 3 inst trios, 1985; Ricciolina (chbr op, P. Baton), 1985, Liège, Opéra Royal de Wallonie, 1985; Musique concertante pour l'embarquement de Cythère, cl, tuba, pf, orch, 1986; Un ciel fait d'herbes II (M. Imberechts), Mez, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1990; 4 visages de femmes, orch, 1992; Miroirs de la transparence, vn, trbn, pf, 1993; Les ruptures d'Icare L, str qt, 1993; Torrent, vc, inst ens, 1995; Le cercle de RANGDA, pf, orch, 1998

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Ledoux: 'La fin de l'artisanat?', Ars musica 1990, 29–31
M.-I. Collart: 'De la multiplicité des imaginaires culturels: conversation avec Claude Ledoux', Courant d'airs [Liège], no.92 (1998), 14–21

PASCAL DECROUPET

Leduc [Le Duc]. French family of musicians, composers and music publishers. The origins of the family are unclear, but musicians of this name lived in Paris at the beginning of the 17th century and probably earlier, in the neighbourhood where the Leduc publishing house has remained. A Pierre Le Duc, maker of musical instruments, lived in the rue St-Honoré from 1602 and died childless in about 1635. His relationship to other Leducs is unknown. (*See also*ALPHONSE LEDUC.)

(1) Simon Leduc [l'aîné] (b Paris, 15 Jan 1742; d Paris, Jan 1777). Violinist, composer and publisher. A pupil of Gaviniès, he was a second violinist in the Concert Spirituel orchestra in 1759 and made his début as soloist in 1763. In 1763 he was one of the first violins in the Concert Spirituel orchestra, and he continued to appear as an orchestral player and soloist until his death. He earned consistently favourable reviews in the Parisian press and received an understated compliment in Leopold Mozart's travel diary of 1763–4: 'He plays well'.

Despite his success, however, Leduc decided to devote the greater part of his efforts to pursuits other than virtuoso performance. He took great care in teaching his brother Pierre, whom he apparently considered a greater violinist than himself. He composed exceptionally fine orchestral and chamber music, publishing some of it under a privilege granted on 17 March 1768, retroactive from 16 December 1767. (Simon never published any works but his own, the general privilege of 1 September 1767 notwithstanding; it was Pierre who undertook to develop a fully-fledged publishing business.)

In 1773 Leduc assumed the directorship of the Concert Spirituel with Gaviniès and Gossec, and soon earned the applause of the press for a noticeable improvement in the quality of these concerts. He was clearly a well-loved director; shortly after his death, the orchestra, trying to prepare one of his symphonies for a forthcoming performance, was collectively so overcome with grief that the rehearsal had to be suspended. His friends paid tribute to his memory in a religious service on 22 March 1777, at which Gossec's Messe des morts was performed.

Leduc's compositions, exclusively instrumental, compare favourably with those of any other young composer of his time. The writing is skilful and idiomatic, particularly for the violin; the harmonies are inventive, expressive, and often unusually chromatic. Painstakingly notated nuances, frequent dynamic contrasts and expressive harmonic progressions contribute to a style which has been called a 'French Storm and Stress'.

WORKS
printed works published in Paris

Orch: 2 concertos, vn solo, op.7 (1771), announced in 1771; earliest extant edns pubd separately (1775, 1776); Suite de noëls ... mêlés de solo et d'echo concertants, perf. 1773, unpubd, lost; Simphonie concertante, 2 solo vn (1775), 1st edn 'à 16 parties', lost; 2nd edn 'à 10 parties' (1779); Sym. no.1 in 3 simphonies à 8 parties ... by Leduc, C. Stamitz, Gossec (1776); Syms. nos.2–3 in 3 symphonies à 4 ou à 8 parties ... by J.C. Bach and Leduc (1777); 3me concerto, vn solo (?1778–81); Symphonie concertante, 2nd vn part only, F-AI, Fonds Aiguillon (1st movt identical to Sym. no.2); 6 trios, op.2 (1768), 3 for 2 vn, b, 3 for orch

Chbr: 6 sonates, vn, acc. ?va, b/hpd, op.1 (1767); 6 trios, op.2 (1768), 3 for 2 vn, b, 3 for orch, 1st vn part lost; 6 duos, 2 vn, op.3 (1771) [incl. catalogue of all Leduc's works with op. nos.]; 2me livre de sonates, vn, bc, op.4 (1771); 6 trios, 2 vn, b, op.5 (1771); 6 petits duos, 2 vn, op.6 (1771); Sonate, vn, b acc. (1782); 1 op. of [?6] qts, lost [cited in P. Leduc's posth. catalogue of S. Leduc's works]; 5 divertimenti à 4, D-Bsb according to EitnerQ [? = preceding work]

Sonate, vn solo, 1760, F-Pc

(2) Pierre Leduc [le jeune] (b Paris, 17 Oct 1755; d Bordeaux, 18 Oct 1826). Violinist, publisher and seller of musical instruments, brother of (1) Simon Leduc. He made his début as a violin soloist at the Concert Spirituel in the spring of 1770 and appeared frequently thereafter, receiving consistently favourable reviews. He studied with his brother Simon, whose works made up the bulk of Pierre's concert repertory. The brothers sometimes appeared together, on which occasions Simon yielded the first violin part to Pierre.

In March 1775 Leduc first advertised as a publisher, not as his brother's partner but as an independent businessman. (Although Simon had published works under the Leduc name, these were exclusively his own.) Pierre published works by contemporary composers and thus founded the Leduc publishing house as an enduring enterprise. In 1782 Pierre enlarged his firm by acquiring the stock of Preudhomme and in 1784 took over La Chevardière. Many sources say that he also absorbed Venier in 1781 or 1782, but this is not correct; Venier was active until late 1782 at least, and his stock was acquired by Charles-Georges Boyer in 1784. Leduc published a great variety of music, particularly orchestral and serious chamber music at first, then a quantity of less weighty material for amateurs during the 1790s. He did not completely stop playing the violin; his name continued to appear in the lists of violinists in the Concert Spirituel, although he seems to have devoted most of his attention to publishing from about 1776. By January 1804, after a brief but disastrous experiment in making pianos, he had turned the business over to his son (3) August Leduc. From 1808 until at least 1811, however, he was again active in Paris as a music seller and a publisher, especially of music periodicals, in partnership with his youngest son Pierre-Jean-Jacques Leduc (1792–1855). By 1819 he had moved to Bordeaux where he may have taught music but was no longer active as a publisher, and where he died in poverty in 1826.

Pierre Leduc composed nothing of consequence, although he may have contributed an occasional arrangement to his publication Journal de harpe. His wife, born Marie-Madeleine-Claude Henry, wrote a few harp accompaniments published under the name Mme Leduc in that periodical. An Essai sur la mélioration de la guitare ou lyre-guitare à clavier by Pierre Leduc survives (in F-Pc).

(3) (Antoine-Pierre) Auguste Leduc (b Paris, 1779; d Paris, 25 May 1823). Music publisher, son of (2) Pierre Leduc. He probably assumed the directorship of his father's publishing house at some time between April 1803 and January 1804. He established his business in Paris at 267 rue de la Loi, but in 1805–6 the house was renumbered 78, and in 1807 the street reverted to its pre-Revolutionary name of rue de Richelieu. After his death the firm was run by his second wife, Augustine-Julie Bernier, as Mme Veuve Leduc. In August 1830 one Pierrot advertised as her successor, and in 1831 she was bankrupted; but from 1835 to 1837 she was again in business, at 47 rue Neuve-Vivienne, before selling out to Janet Frères. Finally, in 1846, she was listed at 19 rue Vivienne.

Whereas Pierre Leduc had been active both in soliciting interesting new works and in reprinting from the plates acquired from other publishers, Auguste was comparatively unenterprising and not very prolific. He, and later his widow, published full scores of a handful of operas, including three by Carafa in the 1820s; each week he continued to issue (at least until 1821) the Journal hebdomadaire, a periodical collection of vocal music which had been started by La Chevardière in 1764. But the contents of the Journal, like most of Leduc's output, tended to be second-rate. Among his more significant publications were Choron's Principes de composition des écoles d'Italie (1808) and a reprint of the full scores, edited by Choron, of the 26 Haydn symphonies that his father had published in 1802–3. He must also be credited with a rare flash of enlightenment for putting out the song Le dépit de la bergère (*c*1820), probably Berlioz's first appearance in print. Almost all Leduc's publications were printed from engraved plates, but in about 1807 he flirted briefly with lithography – one of the earliest French publishers to do so.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookSF; DEMF; HopkinsonD; JohanssonFMP; La LaurencieEF; MGG1 (R. Cotte); PierreH

B.S. Brook: 'Simon Le Duc l'aîné, a French Symphonist at the Time of Mozart', MQ, xlviii (1962), 498–513

A. Devriès: 'Deux dynasties d'éditeurs et de musiciens: les Leduc', RBM, xxviii–xxx (1974–6), 195–213

B.S. Brook: 'An Eighteenth Century Paradox', Simon Le Duc (1742–1777): Five Symphonic Works, ed. B.S. Brook and D. Bain, The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. D, iv (New York, 1983), xi–xxx

JEAN HARDEN (1, 2), RICHARD MACNUTT (3)

Leduc, Alphonse. French firm of music publishers. It was founded in Paris in 1842 by Alphonse Leduc (b Nantes, 11 March 1804; d Paris, 17 June 1868), who was not a blood relation of Pierre and Auguste Leduc. He studied harmony at the Paris Conservatoire under Reicha and became an excellent player of the bassoon, flute and guitar as well as a prolific composer. Pougin estimated his output to be at least 1300 works, including an elementary piano method (op.130, frequently reprinted), 960 piano solos (632 of them in dance forms), 94 songs and 103 works for bassoon, flute or guitar. On his death he was succeeded by his son, Alphonse-Charles (b Paris, 29 May 1844; d Paris, 4 June 1892), whose widow, Emma, daughter of the pianist Henri Ravina, directed the firm from his death until 1902, when their son, Alphonse-Henri, called Emile (b Paris, 17 Nov 1878; d Paris, 24 May 1951), and Paul Bertrand took over. Emile's two sons, Claude-Alphonse and Gilbert-Alphonse, became his partners in 1938 and succeeded to the business in 1951. Since 1985 their nephew, Basile Crichton and Claude's son, François, have directed the firm. Trade has been carried on under the name Alphonse Leduc except for a brief period (1902–*c*1915) when the firm was styled 'Emile Leduc, Paul Bertrand & Cie'; about 1915 Bertrand (d 1953) left to join Heugel.

The firm's first premises were at 14 rue Chabanais; by November 1842 they had moved to 8 rue Vivienne and by August 1844 to 78 passage Choiseul. In 1846 or 1847 the business of Auguste Leduc was acquired, and by May 1847 the firm had moved to 18 rue Vivienne. In 1852 it moved to 2 rue de la Bourse, in 1862 to 4 rue Ménars, in 1866 to 35 rue Le Peletier, and in November 1874 to 3 rue de Grammont; in February 1929 it moved to 175 rue St-Honoré.

Although the firm's output has probably amounted to some 30,000 publications over a period of nearly 170 years, few significant works by major composers were acquired until 1934, when Leduc started publishing Messiaen's compositions – at first intermittently, but almost exclusively from 1961. The chief importance of the firm lies rather in its contribution to music teaching in France by the publication of numerous elementary and advanced instrumental and vocal methods and studies as well as a vast quantity of instrumental music. In December 1883 Leduc took over the weekly journal Art musical from Girod (who had acquired it from its founder Léon Escudier); its final appearance was in September 1894, after which it was absorbed by Maurice Kufferath's Guide musical. Important developments in recent years have been the acquisition of Heugel (1980) and Hamelle (1993), both of which are now subsidiaries of Alphonse Leduc.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DEMF [incl. a list of plate nos.]; HopkinsonD

N. Simeone: Olivier Messiaen: a Bibliographical Catalogue of Messiaen's Works: First Editions and First Performances (Tutzing, 1998), 227–9

RICHARD MACNUTT

Leduc, Jacques (Pierre Edouard) (b Jette, nr Brussels, 1 March 1932). Belgian composer. He studied at the Brussels Conservatory and later took composition lessons with Absil; in 1961 he won the Belgian second Prix de Rome with the cantata L'aventure op.8. He taught harmony, counterpoint and fugue at the Brussels Conservatory (1957–97). Since 1976 he has been rector of the Chapelle Musicale Reine Elisabeth, Waterloo. A member of the Belgian Royal Academy (1983), Leduc has also been president of Société Belge des Auteurs, Compositeurs et Editeurs since 1992. Leduc's music is distinguished by its rhythmic vitality, contrapuntal textures and by a respect for classical forms. CeBeDeM directory

WORKS

(selective list)

Stage: Nous attendons Sémiramis (comédie lyrique, G. Sion), op.38, 1972, Belgian TV, 6 Feb 1973

Orch: Antigone, sym. poem, op.5, 1960; Ob Concertino, op.10, 1962; Divertissement, fl, str, op.12, 1962; Le printemps, sym.

sketch, op.25, 1967; Ouverture d'été, op.28, 1968; Sym., op.29, 1969; Pf Conc., op.31, 1970; 5 croquis, op.34, 1971; Instantanés, op.37, 1972; Dialogue, cl, chbr orch, op.39, 1972; Suites de danses, op.57, 1976; 3 esquisses concertantes, op.62, 1978
Choral works, songs, many chbr and inst pieces

MSS in B-Bcdm

Principal publishers: CeBeDeM, Leduc, Maurer, Schott

HENRI VANHULST

Le Duc, Philippe. See DUC, FILIPPO.

Led Zeppelin. English rock group. It was formed in 1968 by Jimmy Page (James Patrick Page; b Heston, Middx, 9 Jan 1944; guitar and production) with Robert (Anthony) Plant (b West Bromwich, 20 Aug 1948; vocals and harmonica), John Paul Jones (John Baldwin; b Sidcup, 3 June 1946; bass guitar and keyboards) and John (Henry) Bonham (b West Bromwich, 31 May 1948; d Windsor, 25 Sept 1980; drums). Page, like Jones, had been a session musician in London in the mid-1960s, and played the guitar for such artists as the Who, Jackie DeShannon, Them, the Stones, the Kinks and Joe Cocker, before joining the Yardbirds in 1966. When they disbanded, Page formed the New Yardbirds, which became Led Zeppelin, to fulfil concert obligations and develop ideas he had worked on with the Yardbirds. They released nine studio albums, one live album and a documentary film, The Song Remains the Same (1976). When Bonham died in 1980, the group disbanded. The band's manager, Peter Grant, negotiated unprecedented fees for the group in their contract with Atlantic Records and for their concert appearances and insured that the band retained creative and financial control to an unprecedented degree.

There are a number of characteristics for which the band was particularly known. Bonham's drumming (notably in his use of a single bass drum), in combination with Jones's bass guitar, produced a large, bottom-heavy sound. The bass line was frequently mirrored by the electric guitar, sometimes distorted, playing an octave higher, creating a monolithic and powerful effect. Many songs were based around distinctive angular riffs composed mainly by Page, though also by Jones: these include metrical complexities such as those found on Black Dog, The Ocean, Kashmir, The Crunge and Four Sticks. Page's melodic style was firmly footed in the blues; his main concern was with timbre: he fulfilled the function of both rhythm and lead guitar, and played electric and acoustic instruments as well as pedal steel guitar and mandolin. In one section of Dazed and Confused he used a violin bow to play the instrument and in live performances also used a theremin, both of which became his trademarks. In the studio Page was fond of overdubbing multiple guitar parts to enrich the sound; Achilles Last Stand is probably the best example of this. Many of the songs benefited from Jones's exceptional skills as an arranger (e.g. Thank you and Ramble on). Plant's powerful voice was also a hallmark of the band's sound: he had remarkable flexibility as a rock singer, capable of conveying a wide range of emotion with his control of volume, timbre and dissonance. His powerful, exaggerated blues-shouter style has been particularly influential. The band's sound can be attributed partly to Page's innovatory production, notably his positioning of microphones, particularly when recording the drums.

These characteristics, found in such songs as Communication Breakdown, Whole Lotta Love, Immigrant Song and Black Dog, have defined Led Zeppelin for many critics who have, as a result, labelled them as the progenitors of heavy metal. They have also exerted enormous influence on the course of hard rock and heavy metal, imitated by such bands as AC/DC, Deep Purple, Iron Maiden, Rainbow, Aerosmith and Nirvana. Assessment of the band is frequently limited to the first four albums. The last of these, which includes the epic Stairway to Heaven, is often viewed as the group's defining moment. Its album cover was pivotal in shaping their mythical status with the press and public, as it included no title or identifying information: instead each member was represented by a symbol. Later albums, however, continue to demonstrate the group's stylistic diversity: Physical Graffiti (Swan Song, 1975) contains some of the band's hardest rock in such songs as Custard Pie and The Wanton Song, as well as Kashmir; Coda (Swan Song, 1982) includes the punk-inspired Wearing and Tearing.

In addition to the group's explosive electric sound, acoustic music was always important, beginning with the opening of Babe I'm gonna leave you from the first album, Led Zeppelin (Atl., 1969). This piece is an example of Page's fondness for juxtaposing acoustic and electric music, also found in such songs as Stairway to Heaven. The influence of those involved in the British folk revival of the 1960s can be heard in such songs as Black Mountain Side, White Summer and the Celtic-folk beginning of Over the Hills and Far Away. All their studio albums, except Presence (Swan Song, 1976), include acoustic music, especially Led Zeppelin III (Atl., 1970). Following the release of the latter, an acoustic set became part of most live performances. This was later replicated by other heavy bands and MTV's 'Unplugged' concert series.

While blues was always an important influence for the group, they drew inspiration from many other musical sources. Apart from I can't quit you babe and You shook me (both from Led Zeppelin), they rarely covered blues material verbatim. Instead they composed their own blues-derived songs, such as Since I've been Loving you and Tea for One, or radically altered existing blues songs, as in The Lemon Song. This draws lyrics and melody from Howlin' Wolf's Killin' Floor and further lyrics from Robert Johnson's Travelling Riverside Blues, combining these with a new opening riff that alternates with that of Killin' Floor. In addition to blues and folk music, traditional Arabic and Indian music were important influences, found in such works as Friends, In the Light, Four Sticks and especially Kashmir, which pushed musical boundaries and lyrically captured something of the band's wanderlust. The Eastern influence in these pieces consists of structural devices such as the use of modes, vocal ornamentation, the heterophonic doubling of melody lines and the shape of melodic gestures. The extraordinary Kashmir was based on one of Page's open tunings and featured a hemiola between the riff (in 3/4) and the drums (in 4/4) and the use of real and synthesized orchestras. For lyrics, Plant sometimes drew on Tolkien and Celtic or other history and mythology in such works as Stairway to Heaven, Immigrant Song, Ramble On and Misty Mountain Hop.

After Led Zeppelin, Plant released a number of solo albums. Shaken 'n Stirred (Es Paranza, 1985) was the most experimental, while The Honeydrippers (Es Paranza, 1984) set new standards with songs such as Sea of Love. Now and Zen (Es Paranza, 1988) included samples from the Led Zeppelin repertory. Page's first post-Zeppelin project was a soundtrack for the film Deathwish II. In the mid-1980s he released two albums with Paul Rodgers, formerly of Free and Bad Company, as The Firm. In addition he recorded one solo album, Outrider (Geffen, 1988), and collaborated with the singer David Coverdale (formerly of Whitesnake) for Coverdale/Page. Page and Plant reunited in 1994 for a live album and tour entitled No Quarter, playing mostly reworked Led Zeppelin songs with a band that included Egyptian and Moroccan musicians and the Indian singer Najma Akhtar. They released an album of original material called Walking into Clarksdale in 1998 (AH.). Jones produced Music from the Film Scream for Help in 1985, but has worked most successfully as a producer with artists such as the Mission, the Butthole Surfers and Diamanda Galas with whom he toured in 1995. He has also released the album Zooma (Discipline Global Mobile, 1999).

In 1991 Led Zeppelin, two volumes containing transcriptions of 52 of the band's songs, was published by Chappell Music.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Welch: 'Jimmy Page: Paganini of the Seventies', Melody Maker (14–28 Feb 1970) [three-part interview]
W. Burroughs: 'Rock Magic: Jimmy Page, Led Zeppelin and a Search for the Elusive Stairway to Heaven',Crawdaddy, no.49 (1975), 34–40
C. Crowe: 'The Durable Led Zeppelin: a Conversation with Jimmy Page and Robert Plant', Rolling Stone (13 March 1975)
R. Yorke: The Led Zeppelin Biography (Novato, CA, 1976, 2/1993)
N. Preston: Led Zeppelin Portraits (London, 1983)
S. Davis: The Led Zeppelin Saga: Hammer of the Gods (New York, 1985, 2/1995)
Guitar World (July 1986) [Jimmy Page edition]
J.D. Considine: 'Led Zeppelin: the Seventies', Rolling Stone, no.587 (1990), 56–60
R. Godwin: The Illustrated Collector's Guide to Led Zeppelin (Burlington, 1984, 4/1994)
C.R. Cross and E.Flannigan: Led Zeppelin: Heaven and Hell (New York, 1991)
D. Lewis: Led Zeppelin: a Celebration (London, 1991)
D. Headlam: 'Does the Song Remain the Same? Questions of Authorship and Identification in the Music of Led Zeppelin', Concert Music, Rock and Jazz since 1945, ed. E.W. Marvin (Rochester, NY, 1995), 313–63
S. Fast: Listening to Led Zeppelin: Ritual, Otherness and Body in the Music [forthcoming]

SUSAN FAST

Lee, Dai-Keong (b Honolulu, HI, 2 Sept 1915). American composer. He was a pupil of Frederick Jacobi at the Juilliard Graduate School (1938–41) and also studied with Sessions, Copland, and at Columbia University (MA 1951) with Otto Luening. Among his awards are two Guggenheim fellowships (1945, 1951) and many commissions. His works have been performed by major orchestras and conductors throughout the USA, and several of them have been recorded, including the Prelude and Hula, the Polynesian Suite and the Symphony no.1.

Lee writes in a variety of styles. His Polynesian background is reflected in the use of percussion instruments such as the Tahitian wood block, the use of the Polynesian tetratonic scale in Prelude and Hula and Hawaiian Festival Overture, the quotation of Hawaiian chants in Mele olili and the borrowing of native dance styles (Tahitian dance, hula) in the Polynesian Suite, written to celebrate Hawaii's statehood in 1959. Other less exotically tinged works, such as the neo-classical Symphony no.1, are modal but freely dissonant. Throughout his career Lee has been interested in music for the stage; in 1951 he wrote Open the Gates, an opera based on the life of Mary Magdalene, and he has since produced a number of short operas in the tradition of Weill, such as Ballad of Kitty the Barkeep. Among his best-known stage works is the incidental music for Teahouse of the August Moon.

WORKS

Stage: Open the Gates (op, R. Payne), 1951; Waltzing Matilda (ballet), 1951; Phineas and the Nightingale (op, R. Healy), 1952, withdrawn; Teahouse of the August Moon (incid music, J. Patrick), 1953, arr. orch suite, 1954; Speakeasy (Healy), 1957, withdrawn; 2 Knickerbocker Tales (op, 1, Healy, Lee), 1957; Noa Noa (musical play), 1972; Ballad of Kitty the Barkeep (op, Healy, Lee), 1979 [based on Speakeasy]; Jenny Lind (musical play, after P.T. Barnum: Recollections), 1981 [based on Phineas and the Nightingale]; other early works, withdrawn
Orch: Prelude and Hula, 1939; Hawaiian Festival Ov., 1940; Golden Gate Ov., 1941; Introduction and Scherzo, str orch, 1941; Sym. no.1, 1941–2, rev. 1946; Pacific Prayer, 1943, rev. as Canticle of the Pacific (Lotus sutra), chorus, orch, 1968; Vn Conc., 1947, rev. 1955; Sym. no.2, 1948–9; Polynesian Suite, 1958; Mele olili (Joyful Songs) (ancient Hawaiian chants), solo vv, chorus, orch, 1960; Conc. grosso, str orch, 1985; other works, withdrawn
Other works: chbr pieces, incl. Pf Sonatina, ?1943, Introduction and Allegro, vc, pf, 1947, Incantation and Dance, vn, pf, 1948; film scores; songs

Principal publisher: Belwin-Mills

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EwenD
N. Butterworth: A Dictionary of American Composers (New York, 1984)

ALLAN B. HO

Lee, George Alexander (b London, 1802; d London, 8 Oct 1851). English composer. He began his career as a tenor singer at Dublin in 1822 and became composer and director of music at the Theatre Royal. For performances there of Tom Cooke's Malvina he added the song 'Awake, awake, brave Scots to glory' to the tune of La marseillaise. In 1826 he returned to London, where his first engagement was at the Little Theatre in the Haymarket. The following year he began to write incidental music for plays at Covent Garden; his opera The Sublime and the Beautiful was produced there in 1828, and another, The Nymph of the Grotto, or A Daughter's Vow, written in collaboration with Giovanni Liverati, in 1829. Lee became involved in managerial ventures, at the Tottenham Theatre (1829–30), Drury Lane (1830–31) and the Strand Theatre (1832). He was also involved in a publishing concern, probably with a relative, that brought out some of his own works. He adapted two of Auber's operas for the English stage: Fra Diavolo as The Devil's Brother (Drury Lane, 1831) and Le lac des fées as The Fairy Lake (Drury Lane, 1839). In 1831 he directed the Lenten oratorios at Drury Lane. In 1834 his comic opera The Dragon, a one-act work, was performed at the English Opera House (Lyceum). Later he was composer and musical director at the Olympic Theatre (1845) and Vauxhall (1849). During his career he composed many songs and ballads; several, such as The Macgregors' Gathering, were published a number of times.

About 1830 Lee established a liaison with the popular ballad singer Mrs Waylett, to whom he was devoted and whom he married about 1840, after Waylett died.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (R.F. Sharpe)
The Harmonicon, vii (1829), 48; ix (1831), 76–8, 158
G. Biddlecombe: English Opera from 1834 to 1864 with Particular Reference to the Works of Michael Balfe(New York, 1994)

T. Fenner: Opera in London: Views of the Press 1785–1830 (Carbondale, IL, 1994)

ALFRED LOEWENBERG/GEORGE BIDDLECOMBE

Lee, Louis. German cellist and pianist, brother of SEBASTIAN LEE.

Lee, Maurice. German pianist and composer, brother of SEBASTIAN LEE.

Lee, Noël (b Nanjing, 25 Dec 1924). American pianist and composer. He studied piano and harmony from an early age and in 1948 received an artist's diploma from the New England Conservatory in Boston as well as a degree from Harvard University, where he studied with Irving Fine, Tillman Merritt and Walter Piston. He then settled in Paris, studying composition with Nadia Boulanger. His numerous awards include the Prix de Composition Lili Boulanger (1953), the Louisville Orchestra Young Composer's Award (1954), the National Academy of Arts and Letters Award (1959) and commissions from the French Cultural Ministry and the French National Radio. He has composed more than 150 works in many genres; his style combines neo-classical, dodecaphonic and freely atonal idioms, and is characterized by ingenious use of rhythm and colour.

As a pianist Lee has performed throughout Europe, Australia, South America and the USA. He has made some 200 recordings, several of which have been awarded the Grand Prix du Disque; they include the complete piano works of Debussy and Ravel, the first complete recording of all the piano sonatas of Schubert, much two-piano and piano duet music (with Christian Ivaldi) and major works for violin and piano (with Gérard Poulet). Lee has also prepared a critical edition of Debussy's music for two pianos and edited selected piano works of Hummel.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Caprices on the name Schoenberg, pf, orch, 1975; Triptyque, vn, pf, orch, 1986

Chbr: Dialogues, vn, pf, 1958; Convergences, fl, hpd, 1972; Variations antiques, fl, pf, 1981; Three Fantasy Pieces, fl, gui, 1992

Pf: Sonatine, 1959; Four Etudes, set I, 1961; Four Etudes, set II, 1967; Chroniques, 1977; Diversions, 4 hands, 1979; Five Preludes Prolonged, 1992; Distances, 1996

Many songs with orch, insts, or pf

Principal publisher: Schott

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CC1 (P. Gillis)
H. Pollack: Harvard Composers (Metuchen, NJ, 1992), 245–52

CHARLES TIMBRELL

Lee, Peggy [Egstrom, Norma Dolores] (b Jamestown, North Dakota, 26 May 1920). American popular singer, songwriter and actress. She began singing in a church choir, then on the radio, and from 1936 toured with dance bands. Her first hit was Why don't you do right? (1942) with Benny Goodman's band. In 1943 she married the guitarist Dave Barbour, with whom she wrote the song Mañana (1947), and in 1944 she left the swing bands and began a career on her own. Through the 1950s she had several hit songs, notably with Fever (1958), and recorded many successful albums for Capitol. She had a successful film début in a remake of The Jazz Singer (1953) and portrayed an alcoholic blues singer in Pete Kelly's Blues (1955). She continued to make recordings and perform in concert until the late 1980s but was increasingly troubled by ill-health.

Lee's voice was small, with a compass of little more than an octave and a half; her distinction lay in her characterization of songs, achieved through vocal colour and inflection with careful attention to the subtleties of language, to musical arrangements and to stage manner and presentation. Though she was first a singer in the swing style, unlike many of her colleagues she did little improvisation. She wrote or collaborated on over 500 songs, including the song score for Disney's animated feature Lady and the Tramp (1955). She published the autobiography Miss Peggy Lee (New York, 1990).

HENRY PLEASANTS/R

Lee, Samuel (b ?Dublin; d Dublin, 21 Feb 1776). Irish publisher, music seller and violinist. He was one of the most prominent and active musicians in Dublin during the 1750s and 60s. In 1745 he was admitted to the City Music, of which he was appointed bandmaster in 1752 at a salary of £40, increased to £60 in 1753. During this period he was appearing regularly as principal violinist at the summer open-air concerts at Marlborough Green between 1750 and 1756 and as conductor of the annual performance of Handel's Messiah at the Great Musick Hall in Fishamble Street. In July 1751 he became violinist and musical director in the syndicate which leased Crow Street Musick Hall for the six years before it was taken over, rebuilt and opened as a theatre.

Samuel Lee was founder of the music shop and publishing firm which carried out business at Little Green, off Bolton Street (1752–63), the Harp and Hautboy, Fownes Street (1764–8), and 2 Dame Street (1769–1821). From Samuel's death in 1776 his widow Anne had charge of the firm, with their son Edmond as assistant; Edmond himself carried on the business thereafter until John Aldridge took it over in 1821. The business operated under the name Walker & Lee in 1781 and John Lee in 1789. John, another son of Samuel, traded as a publisher, music seller and instrument maker at 64 Dame Street (1775–8) and 70 Dame Street (1778–1803).

BRIAN BOYDELL

Lee, Sebastian (b Hamburg, 24 Dec 1805; d Hamburg, 4 Jan 1887). German cellist. He studied with J.N. Prell and made his début in Hamburg in 1831. He gave acclaimed performances in Leipzig, Kassel and Frankfurt en route to Paris, appearing with great success at the Théâtre des Italiens in April 1832. He continued to tour for the next five years, performing in London in 1836. In 1837 he returned to Paris to join the Opéra, where he was solo cellist from 1841 to 1843. After that, he devoted himself to teaching and composition, returning to his native city of Hamburg on his retirement in 1868. He published a cello method op.30 and four sets of solo and duo studies. His many concert works are largely forgotten, but he produced useful editions of Classical works for the cello and an edition of the Méthode of Baillot, Levasseur, Catel and Baudiot.

Lee had two younger brothers who became musicians. Louis Lee (b Hamburg, 19 Oct 1819; d Lübeck, 26 Aug 1896), a cellist and pianist, made his first tour at the age of 12, playing in northern Germany and Copenhagen, then settled in Hamburg, where he became a cellist in the theatre orchestra, organized chamber music recitals with Hafner (later with Boïe), taught at the conservatory from 1873 to 1884 and was principal cellist of the Philharmonic Society; he composed chamber music and symphonies and wrote incidental music to Schiller's Die Jungfrau von Orleans and Wilhelm Tell. Maurice Lee (b Hamburg, Feb 1821; d London, 23 June 1895), a pianist, spent the latter part of his life teaching in London, where he won a reputation as a composer of popular salon music.

LYNDA MACGREGOR

Lee, Vanessa [Moule, Ruby] (b London, 18 June 1920; d London, 15 March 1992). English soprano. She secured the role of understudy to Jessica James, who was playing Maria Ziegler in Ivor Novello's The Dancing Years at the London Casino in 1947. When James injured her throat, Lee sang the role from the wings, her voice convincing Novello to write his next show for her (King's Rhapsody, 1949). Her crystal-clear soprano voice, shown to best effect in 'Someday my heart will awake' from that show, combined with her film-star looks gave her instant public success. Her stage name was coined by Novello who, having invented the stage name of Vivien Leigh, decided to stay with the same initials. Novello also paid for cosmetic surgery to reduce the size of her nose, and there was mixed opinion as to whether this had adversely affected her singing voice. Had Novello not died during the run of King's Rhapsody, he would have consolidated her reputation with another lead role. After a well-received performance as Lady Windermere in Coward's unhappy musicalization of Wilde's play (After the Ball, 1954) and tours in the title role of Die lustige Witwe and as Maria in The Sound of Music, she retired from the stage having married another of Novello's regular performers, Peter, later Lord, Graves.

PAUL WEBB

Lee Chan-Hae (b Seoul, 8 Oct 1945). Korean composer. She studied composition at Yonsei University (BA) and the Catholic University of America in Washington, DC (MM); she was later appointed professor of composition at Yonsei University. Her works are typically contrapuntal and favour progressive structural developments over strict forms. In music that is simple and direct, Lee chooses subject matters that reflect her Christianity and her interest in music education. Glorification (1991), for three percussionists, is her fifth piece based on John Bunyan's The Pilgrim's Progress. It presents the pitch sequence D–E–B♭–G, gradually opening with central snare drums and moving outwards to low timpani and high tom-toms; halfway through, gongs, cymbals and bells take over as metal triumphs over wood and skin. Though the subject is Christian, the reference is to the East Asian philosophical system of music classification according to instrument materials.

Lee's teaching at Yonsei has restricted the time she can devote to composition. Her output includes Hyesang [Bestowing] (1980) and Ch'ŏsaeng [Newborn] (1981), both for two solo voices with chamber ensemble, two works for solo wind, Kalp'iri [Leaf Oboe] (clarinet, 1986) and Three Fragments (flute, 1989), The Cross, for mixed chorus (1988), and Martyr, for string orchestra (1990). Her music has been performed in Europe, the USA and Australasia. She has been a visiting scholar at Wayne State University and Oakland University; in 1989 she presented a seminar course on the Kodály method in Hungary.

KEITH HOWARD

Leeds. City in England. It is one of the most active centres of music in Britain, and has become widely known for the Leeds International Pianoforte Competition, held there every three years since 1963, the Leeds Musical Festival with its strong choral tradition, and (since 1978) the productions of Opera North. In the 19th century the parish church became a focal point for reform and enterprise in sacred music. Citizens of Leeds have been involved in cultural activities at every level, and the city's wealth of musical opportunity testifies to a long tradition of community responsibility.

1. Concert life, choirs and church music. 2. Orchestral music. 3. Opera. 4. Music publishers and instrument makers. 5. Education.

1. CONCERT LIFE, CHOIRS AND CHURCH MUSIC. The first publicly supported musician in Leeds, John Carr, was appointed organist of the parish church of St Peter on the installation of an organ (built by Robert Price of Bristol) in 1714. During Carr's term, which ended in 1756, occasional concerts were given by visiting virtuosos, mainly in the Assembly Room (seating 400). From 1757 regular subscription concerts were arranged by Carr's successor, John Crompton. At the peak of these were performances of Handel's Messiah and Judas Maccabaeus in the parish church in 1770, of which the proceeds went to Crompton's benefit. For three years from 1762 William Herschel, the Hanoverian bandmaster, oboist and violinist previously active in Halifax and later famous as an astronomer, conducted annual subscription concerts. The improved standard of choral music by 1768 was marked in the chapel at Holbeck by the patriotic offering of 'Purcell's grand Te deum and [Handel's] grand Coronation Chorus' for the anniversary of the accession of George III. The popularity of Handel's music in Yorkshire at that time was enhanced by the publication of the oratorio texts by T. Lesson of Doncaster. After 1771, when the infirmary was opened, the fact that oratorio was thought to have a beneficial influence on the sick very much contributed to its popularity as a form. In 1769 a two-day Handel festival took place in Trinity Church. As elsewhere in England there was a Handel festival in 1784; benefits went to the hospital. Handel festivals in 1793 and 1795 were less successful. As the Assembly Room was too small and the interior of the parish church too awkward for the large-scale performances considered necessary, oratorio musicians of Leeds took part in the festivals in York which were organized primarily for the benefit of the hospitals of the county.

The organist of the parish church from 1791 to 1807 was David Lawton, who in 1795 performed the first (unspecified) piano concerto heard at a subscription concert. The Music Hall (built 1794) in Albion Street was replaced in 1825 by a more ambitious New Music Room, designed in Grecian style by John Clark of Edinburgh. In 1827 an Amateur Society was formed for the purpose of 'cultivating a more extensive taste for music and ensuring the frequency and success of public concerts' (The Harmonicon, v, 1827, p.161).

Rapid increase in population, greater prosperity and growing religious tolerance led to the building of many churches and chapels. New organs were installed: in St Paul's (1820) and Zion Chapel (1826) by Greenwood of Leeds; in St John the Evangelist (1828) by Robinson of Leeds; and in Brunswick Chapel by J. Booth of Wakefield. The specification for the latter was ambitious in tonal design; the congregation approved its installation only after a ballot. Samuel Wesley played three inaugural recitals. After the removal of legislation restricting Catholic worship an organ was installed in the new St Patrick's Chapel.

In 1837 W.F. Hook (1798–1875) became vicar of Leeds and immediately began a campaign of reform and reconstruction. Between 1839 and 1841 the parish church was rebuilt in Perpendicular style by a local architect, R.D. Chantrell, in accordance with the liturgical requirements of the high church party to which Hook belonged. Though unmusical, Hook was concerned for the proper performance of church music; he invited John Jebb to give a series of lectures in the Church Institute, and on Jebb's advice appointed James Hill, a lay clerk from St George's Chapel, Windsor, to train the choir. In the following year Hook instituted a system of payment for choristers and appointed Wesley organist. The standards sustained at Leeds parish church influenced the musical life of the whole community. After publishing his brilliant and revolutionary pamphlet, A Few Words on Cathedral Music and the Musical System of the Church, with a Plan of Reform in 1849, Wesley left for Winchester. His work in Leeds was carried on by his former articled pupil William Spark, who had followed him from Exeter and had become organist of St George's Church, and by Robert Burton, Wesley's successor at the parish church. In the middle of the century business and professional citizens began to exert a beneficial influence on the arts. In 1848 'Soirées musicales' encouraged a small and distinguished membership to read through unfamiliar music: at the first meeting, for example, a 'selection from Purcell's King Arthur and Tempest pieces but little known in the country'. The next year, on Spark's proposal, a Madrigal and Motet Society (from 1867 the Choral Society) was founded.

A new chapter in the musical history of Leeds began with the opening in 1858 of the town hall, designed in classical style by Cuthbert Broderick, with an organ – built to Spark's specification and at which he presided for more than 40 years – by Gray & Davison. In the same year the first of what was intended to be a series of triennial festivals took place. Complex rivalries between choirs meant that the second festival, conducted by Michael Costa, was not held until 1874. Arthur Sullivan was appointed conductor of the next festival in 1880, after which it was held every third year (from 1970 every second year). Sullivan conducted on seven occasions, and resigned the appointment only when his health demanded it. During his era the Leeds Festival assumed international status with new works commissioned from such composers as Raff, Dvořák, Massenet, Humperdinck, Parry, Stanford, Elgar and Sullivan himself. Sullivan included unfamiliar works by the madrigalists and by Palestrina, Bach, Handel and Mozart, and ensured they were interpreted according to the latest ideas of performing practice. At the 1880 festival the progress of science was marked by the electric lighting of the town hall and – even more – by the transmission of some of the performance to neighbouring towns over land-line by the National Telephone Company.

From the turn of the century choral performance suffered as a result of complacency; an irascible Stanford, after conducting the festival of 1901, wrote a powerful criticism of chorus and chorus master to the Lord Mayor. Stanford conducted two more festivals. Thereafter came a succession of virtuoso conductors, none, however, with full organizational responsibility. Elgar's Caractacus (1898) and Walton's Belshazzar's Feast (1931) both had their premières in Leeds, the latter conducted by Malcolm Sargent. The centenary festival in 1958 was directed by the Earl of Harewood. The festival chorus, which draws members from all over West Yorkshire and on which much of the success of the festival has traditionally depended, has had many fine chorus masters, among them Herbert Bardgett, who achieved a wide reputation.

In the late 19th century musical institutions became more numerous. The Leeds Philharmonic Society, founded by T. Dobbs in 1870, was first conducted by James Broughton and then by his brother Alfred (both were chorus masters for the festival at different times). In 1896 Adolph Beyschlag, previously engaged in Mainz, Frankfurt, Belfast and Manchester, was appointed conductor of what the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung at the time described as 'the famous Yorkshire choir'. He was succeeded by Stanford, who conducted the society from 1897 to 1909, during which time performances were given in London and Paris; later conductors included Fricker, Bairstow and Sargent. In 1895 there was a choral contest, adjudicated by C.H. Lloyd, under the aegis of the Leeds Prize Musical Union. Alfred Benton, organist of the parish church, assisted by H.C. Embleton, a wealthy amateur and friend of Elgar, formed in 1886 the Leeds Choral Union, which travelled widely in England and visited France and Germany before being disbanded in 1939; Henry Coward, the most notable choral director of his day, was among its conductors. In 1950 Melville Cooke, organist of the parish church, established the Leeds Guild of Singers, comprising 26 members, so that the Bach bicentenary performances could bear some relation to authentic standards.

In the 19th century chamber music soirées and musical evenings were organized by George Haddock, owner of a famous collection of historic violins, and his brother Thomas. Recitals and concerts are regularly given in the art gallery and in the town hall under the aegis of the city council, and also in the summer in the Long Gallery of Temple Newsam House. In 1963 the International Pianoforte Competition was established through the enterprise of a local teacher, Fanny Waterman, and Marion Thorpe (then Countess of Harewood). Winners have included Michael Roll, Radu Lupu and Murray Perahia.

2. Orchestral music. From its inception the Leeds Festival depended on London for its orchestra, a fact reflecting the somewhat chequered history of orchestral music in what was for so long a choral stronghold. An amateur West Riding Orchestral Union was active in the 1840s but after the town hall had been opened it was considered that the magnificent organ, built at a cost of £5000, should do all that an orchestra could for normal occasions, and less expensively. The organists of Leeds, however, had their own ideas: Spark instituted Saturday evening orchestral concerts in the town hall, and Robert Burton 'Saturday Pops' at the Coliseum. The social necessity of musical recreation had been pointed out in 1853 by the 'Rational Recreation Society'. This body had sought to arrange cheap concerts for the workers of the area, but found that support came from the more prosperous middle class, and later provided Herbert Fricker, the city organist, with audiences for his Saturday

Orchestral Concerts, begun in 1903. By that time competition for the talents of more modest music-makers came from the brass bands of the neighbourhood, prominent among which was the Leeds Forge Band, founded by Samson Fox of Harrogate, benefactor of the Royal College of Music. Fricker's organization merged into the Leeds SO, and in 1928 this became the Northern PO (conducted 1933–7 by John Barbirolli). In 1945 the city council and certain neighbouring authorities began to consider maintaining a full-time professional orchestra at an estimated cost of £50,000 a year. Two years later the Yorkshire SO (conductor Maurice Miles) was founded; despite high aims and promising beginnings, the enterprise came to an end in 1955, largely through local rivalries and loyalties to other organizations such as the Hallé Orchestra, which had a long involvement in Yorkshire musical life. Throughout that period the Leeds Symphony Society (founded in 1890), successor to the Amateur Orchestral Society, maintained a high standard of amateur competence; since 1970 its conductor has been Martin Blake. In 1977 David Lloyd-Jones, artistic director of the newly-formed Opera North (see §3 below), established the English Northern Philharmonia as its resident orchestra.

3. OPERA. The Grand Theatre, at the time one of the largest in the country, with seating for 2600, opened in 1878 to accommodate such touring companies as the Carl Rosa and D'Oyly Carte. The first Ring cycle given in the English provinces was staged in Leeds by the Denhof Opera Company in 1911. The British National (1923) and Covent Garden (1955) opera companies included the city on their tours. West Riding Opera, an ambitious amateur company, was founded in 1954, giving an annual production in the Civic Theatre conducted from 1978 by Martin Blake, conductor of the Leeds SO. In 1977, with the support of the city (which had taken over the Grand Theatre in 1971) and the Arts Council, Opera North (initially English National Opera North) was founded and given the Grand Theatre as its base. The first artistic director and conductor was David Lloyd-Jones; he was succeeded as music director by Paul Daniel. The company's success has helped to encourage other cultural institutions to move from London. By 1995 Opera North had staged more than 100 operas. Many modern works have been introduced by, among others, Berg, Britten, Delius, Krenek, Stravinsky, Tippett and Walton. In 1994 the company had a spectacular success with Benedict Mason's Playing Away, an opera set in the world of contemporary soccer.

4. MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND INSTRUMENT MAKERS. From the early 18th century music publishers abounded in Leeds, at first publishing mostly sacred music. John Penrose published The Psalm-tunes in 4 Parts (4th edn., rev. A. Barker) in 1700, John Swale A Collection of Psalm Tunes in 1718 and Thomas Wright A Book of Psalmody by John Chetham (11/1787). The works of the Leeds composer Henry Hamilton were engraved by Christopher Livesley, who was active from about 1790 to 1810. Other publishers include Joseph Ogle (*c*1736), Griffith Wright, father of Thomas, and in the 19th century Joshua Mutt, W. Clifford, John Swallow and William Jackson; in the 20th century much educational music and music literature has been published by E.J. Arnold & Son. There were several string instrument makers active in Leeds during the 19th century, and the firm of J. & J. Hopkinson, piano makers, had its main branch there from about 1835. The organ in the town hall was renovated by Abbott & Smith in the 19th century, and rebuilt to the design of Donald Hunt, then organist of the parish church, by Wood & Wordsworth in 1971.

5. EDUCATION. Vocal music in schools grew out of religious instruction and from about 1850 led to marathon performances of 'sacred choruses'. After 1886 there were Leeds School Board Concerts in which the choir of 1000 voices was conducted by W. Goodson. The demands of more specialized musical education were met for a time by the Leeds College of Music, active from 1874 to 1904. A new dimension was brought into the musical life of the city by the establishment of a music department in the university before World War I; this prospered under Professor James Denny and during the vice-chancellorship of Lord Boyle. Through the initiative of Alexander Goehr, professor of music from 1971 to 1976, works outside the conventional limits have been included in university programmes. Ian Kemp was professor of music from 1976 to 1981, succeeded by Julian Rushton. In 1961 the education committee set up the Leeds Music Centre, which in 1965 came under the control of a full-time director and resumed the title of Leeds College of Music. A division of the college specializes in experimental compositional procedures and music technology. The Brotherton Library of the university has the Cowden Clarke Collection; the music and local history sections of the city library hold manuscripts and early editions formerly owned by the Irwin family of Temple Newsam, and the city museum has a collection of instruments.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (M. Dreyer)

Order of Service for the Day of Public Thanksgiving by the Wesleyan Reformers (Leeds, 1850)

Leeds Musical Festival Programmes (Leeds, 1880–)

F.R. Spark and J.Bennett: A Full History of the Leeds Musical Festivals, 1858–89 (Leeds and London, 1892)

Leeds College of Music Quarterly News (Leeds, 1897–1902)

E. Hargrave: Musical Leeds in the Eighteenth Century, Thoresby Society Publications, xxviii (Leeds, 1928), 320–21

D. Webster: Parish Past and Present: 275 Years of Leeds Parish Church Music (Leeds, 1988)

S. Lindley: 'Leeds Town Hall: Retrospect and Prospect', MT, cxxx (1989), 639–40

W. Thompson and others: Piano Competition: the Story of the Leeds (London, 1990)

PERCY M. YOUNG

Leedy, Douglas (b Portland, OR, 3 March 1938). American composer, conductor and musicologist. He studied at Pomona College and the University of California, Berkeley (MA 1962); in 1958 he was a Crofts Fellow at the Berkshire Music Center. After playing the horn in the Oakland SO and San Francisco Opera and Ballet orchestras (1960–65), he travelled to Poland (1965–6) on a joint US-Polish government grant to investigate contemporary Polish music. He subsequently designed the electronic music studio at UCLA, where he taught and directed two ensembles (1967–70); later teaching appointments included positions at the Centro Simón Bolívar, Caracas, and Reed College. In 1980, after turning to private teaching, he became involved in early music performance, serving as the first music director of the Portland Baroque Orchestra (1984–5) and the coordinator of the Portland Handel Festival (from 1985). He has written extensively on intonation and alternative tunings, as well as on the performance of ancient Greek and Latin verse.

Leedy's music of the 1960s is lyrical and often highly theatrical. During the early 1970s, following Harry Partch and Lou Harrison, and influenced by La Monte Young, Terry Riley and the Carnatic singer K.V. Narayanaswamy (1974, 1979–80), he abandoned 12-note equal-tempered tuning. Using mean-tone temperament as the basis of a modal, rhythmic style, he imagined a different evolution for Western music. Towards the end of the 1980s, however, he found himself increasingly at odds with what he saw as the West's cultural and economic imperialism; little remains in his later music, therefore, of traditional Western methods and values.

WORKS
(selective list)

Dramatic: Decay (dir. R. Moran), tape collage, actors, pf(s), insts, tape, 1965, collab. I. Underwood; Music for Perc, 2 actors, large battery, 1965; Teddy Bears Picnic, actors, elecs, 1969; Sebastian (chbr op, Leedy, after J.S. Bach documents), 1971–4; Is This a Great Country, or What?, multimedia, 1995

Inst: Early works, 1953–9; Pieces, pf 4 hands, 1960; Trio, fl, hn, pf, 1960; Perspectives, hn, 1964; Qnt 1964, cl, bn, tpt, db, org, 1964; Antifonia, 2 tpt, 2 trbn, 1695; Exhibition Music, 4 or more insts/vv, 1965; Octet 'Quaderno rossiniano', fl, cl, bn, hn, vn, vc, pf, perc, 1965; Str Qt, 1965–75; Usable Music for Very Small Insts with Holes, 1966; Usable Music II, B♭, chbr ens, 1966; The Entropical Paradise: 6 Sonic Environments, synths, 1969; 88 is Great, pf 18 hands, 1969; Music for Meantone Hpd, 1974–86; Canti, fl, va, gui, mar, vib, db, 1975; Sur la couche de miettes, chbr ens, 1981; Toccata, Utremifasolla and Chorale, hpd, 1982; Goldberg Canons, str, cont, 1984 [after J.S. Bach: Verschiedene Canones, BWV1097]; Music for Meantone Org, 1984; Fantasia 'Wondrous Love', org, opt. chorus, 1990; Triste encuentro, pf/insts, 1992; 3 Syms., orch, 1993; Pf Sonata, 1994; Str Qt no.2 'White Buffalo', 1995; Sym. no.4 'The Dreaming Attention' (Leedy), vv, orch, 1996; Sym. no.5 'Apām napāt' (Rig Veda), vv, shawms, natural hns, perc, 1997; Sym. no.6 'Helios' (Homeric hymns), vv, hps, zithers, mbiras, rebab, perc, 1997; Sym. no.7 'Selene' (Homeric hymns), vv, hps, zithers, mbiras, rebab, perc, 1997

Vocal: Early works, 1953–9; Dulces exuviae (Dido's Lament) (Vergil), SSAATTBB, 1969; Electric Zodiac, vv, synth, 1969; Gloria, S, SATB, orch, 1970; Ps xxiv, 6 S, SATB, orch, 1971; Chorale Fantasy 'Wie schön leuchtet der Morgenstern', 1v/vv, org, 1972; Symphoniae sacrae (Bible, J. Frank), Mez, viol, hpd, 1976; 4 Hymns (Rig Veda), chorus, gamelan, 1982–3; Pastorale (Horace), SATB, pf 4 hands, 1988; Celilo (random text), vv, hp, perc, 1996; No More Beethoven!, 1v/vv, opt. elec gui, 1997; realizations of Rigvedic hymns, Upanishads and Greek/Latin lyric and epic verse, 1v, drone/hp, lyre; see also Inst

Principal publishers: E.C. Schirmer, Fallen Leaf, Material Press

Principal recording companies: Seraphim, Capitol

WRITINGS

'A Personal View of Meantone Temperament', The Courant, i/3 (1983), 3–19

'Tuning Systems', GroveA

'A Question of Intonation', Journal of the Conductors' Guild, viii/4 (1987), 107–20

'A Venerable Temperament Rediscovered', PNM, xxix/2 (1991), 202–11

'Giving Number a Voice', Xenharmonikon, no.15 (1993), 56–9

'Some Experiments in Singing Ancient Greek and Latin Verse', Music in Performance and Society: Essays in Honor of Roland Jackson, ed. M. Cole and J. Koegel (Warren, MI, 1997), 3–35

CHARLES SHERE

Leedy Manufacturing Co. American firm of drum makers. It was established in Indianapolis in 1900 by Ulysses G. Leedy and Samuel L. Cooley as Leedy & Cooley, and made 'everything for the band and orchestra drummer'. Leedy (b Fostoria, OH, 1867; d Indianapolis, IN, 7 Jan 1931), a professional musician and amateur drum maker, became sole owner in 1903 and expanded the firm's production to include over 900 items, among them orchestral bells, vibraphones and numerous sound-effect instruments to accompany silent movies. Most important were the timpani designed by the factory superintendent Cecil Strupe and patented in 1923. These used a foot pedal with a ratchet-and-pawl system clutch, linked to cables connected to the tensioning screws; the copper bowls were formed in a specially designed hydraulic press rather than hammered over wooden moulds. This design served as the model for the first English pedal timpani manufactured by the PREMIER Drum Co. Leedy drums were exported to England during the 1920s, but later only the parts were shipped and the drums themselves assembled by the Hawkes firm. Used mainly by smaller symphonic as well as school orchestras, they were never as popular as the Ludwig model, owing to the rather awkward necessity of lifting the knee in order to reach the high horizontal pedal and resealing the clutch before raising or lowering the pitch. Leedy was purchased by C.G. Conn in 1927 and its production combined with that of Ludwig & Ludwig, which was acquired by Conn in 1930 (see LUDWIG). The Leedy-Ludwig division continued to operate until its sale to the Slingerland Drum Co. in 1955; production of Leedy instruments ceased in 1958.

EDMUND A. BOWLES

Leef, Yinam (b Jerusalem, 21 Dec 1953). Israeli composer. He studied at the Rubin Academy of Music, Jerusalem with Kopytman, and at the University of Pennsylvania, where his teachers included Wernick, Crumb and Rochberg. A senior lecturer at the Rubin Academy of Music, he is one of Israel's prominent young composers. Early pieces such as Gilgulim (1976–8) and Scherzos and Serenades (1989) reflect a modern, internationally-oriented posture characterized by post-serial materials and techniques, and a strong sense of colour. Later works, such as the Symphony no.2 'Visions of Stonecity' (1995) and the Viola Concerto (1998), blend serial techniques with modal, Jewish and Middle Eastern elements and textural echoes of Bartók and Messiaen. This style can be traced back to earlier vocal pieces such as The Invisible Carmel (1982). His works have been performed in Israel, East Asia, and throughout Europe and the USA; the First Symphony and the Violin Concerto have been recorded.

WORKS
(selective list)

Gilgulim, ob, cl, bn, 1978, arr. vn, va, vc, 1980; Str Qt, 1978; Laments, orch, 1979; Canaanite Fantasy, pf, 1981; Sym. no.1, 1981–92; The Invisible Carmel (Zelda), S, ob + eng hn, cl + b cl, vn, db, perc, 1982; Vn Conc., 1983; Octet, 8 miniatures, 1984 [after W. Kandinsky]; A Place of Fire (Zelda), Mez, 11 insts, 1985; Fanfares and Whispers, tpt, orch, 1986; Sound, Shadows ..., chorus 8vv, 1987; How Far East, How Further West? (Canaanite Fantasy no.2), pf, 1988; Scherzos and Serenades, orch, 1989; Elegy, str qt, 1991; Sym. no. 2 'Vision of Stonecity', orch, 1995; Yizkor (In memoriam), fl, 1995; Tryptique [Hommage to Partos], cl, 3 str insts, pf, 1997; Va Conc., 1998

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Smoira-Cohn: Music Here and Now (Jerusalem, 1988)

R. Fleisher: Twenty Israeli Composers (Detroit, 1997)

ODED ASSAF

Leemans, Hébert [Aybert] Philippe Adrien (b Bruges; d Paris, 10 June, 1771). Flemish cellist and composer, resident in Paris. According to Vannes he was 'fils probable d'Adrien Pierre', presumably referring to the Adrien Leemans who was organist at St Donatien in Bruges from about 1738 to 12 October 1750. Leemans probably arrived in Paris in the 1750s. In the dedication of his op.3 quartets (1769) to the Marchioness of Lestang, he stated that he had long been in the service of a Parisian patron; but his name appears in contemporary periodical literature only between 1765 and 1771, and all of his known compositions date from this brief period. In the Mémoire signifié du Sieur Peters (1767), he is listed as 'professeur de chant et de violoncelle', and a publication announcement in the Mercure de France of March 1769 referred to him as a virtuoso, but did not specify his instrument. The dedication to his ariette Que l'attente me tourmente (1768) indicates that he was music teacher to the Countess of Polignac; further dedications show that he frequented other fashionable salons, particularly that of the Marquis and Marchioness of Seignelai. He had no official position with any of the Parisian orchestras, nor is he ever mentioned as a soloist. In 1767 Leemans began to publish his works using movable type, a process which was rare in Paris, then the centre of engraving in Europe; it resembled the system invented in Leipzig by J.G.I. Breitkopf and was equally unsuccessful.

Leemans devoted his talents to teaching titled students and composing works appropriate to their taste. His symphonies are well constructed, employing the prevailing italo-Mannheim style infused with French lyricism; all but two contain four movements including a minuet. The smaller chamber pieces are charming works which, to expand their sales, allow for the substitution of instruments: this flexibility, which obviously inhibited idiomatic instrumental writing, reveals much about the nature of his clientèle. Leemans's modest gifts are heard to excellent advantage in his ariettes, attractive little songs with simple and deft orchestral accompaniments.

WORKS

all printed works published in Paris; detailed list with partial thematic catalogue in BrookSF

Inst: 6 sinfonie, op.1 (*c*1765); 3 simphonies [op.2] (1766); 1ère [–2e] symphonie à grand orchestre (1767); Trio, 2 vn, bc/vc (1767); 6 qts, op.3 (1769), 3 for fl, bn, vn, vc, 3 for ob, vn, bn, vc or 2 vn, 2 vc or 2 vn, va, vc; 3 simphonies à grand orchestre, op.4 (1771); 1er recueil de 6 quatuors d'airs choisis [Grétry, Philidor], str qt, op.5 (1771)

Vocal: Recueil de duos, 2vv (1765), lost: 1er[–2e] recueil d'airs (1771), lost; La constance, cantatille (1767), lost; La vaine promesse, romance (*c*1768); 14 ariettes with insts, pubd singly (1766–71); 5 airs, 2vv, F-Pn; Air, 1v, hp, Pn

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookSF; EitnerQ; FétisBS; Vander StraetenMPB, iv; VannesD

E.G.J. Gregoir: Littérature musicale: documents historiques relatifs à l'art musical et aux artistes-musiciens (Antwerp, 1872–6)

M. Brenet: 'Les débuts de l'abonnement musical', BSIM, ii/2 (1906), 256–73

B.S. Brook: 'Leemans of Bruges and Paris', RBM, xv (1961), 47–54

M. Benoit, N. Dufourcq and M. Rambaud: 'Documents du minutier central: musiciens français du XVIIIe siècle', RMFC, vii (1967), 217–33, esp. 222

BARRY S. BROOK, RICHARD VIANO

Leero [leerow] viol. See LYRA VIOL.

Lees, Benjamin (b Harbin, China, 8 Jan 1924). American composer of Russian parentage. When very young, Lees moved with his parents to the USA and took American citizenship through their naturalization. He was educated in California. After military service (1942–5) he studied at the University of Southern California (1945–8) under Halsey Stevens (composition), Kanitz and Dahl. Impressed by his compositions, Antheil undertook to teach him, and after some four years' study recognition came with a Fromm Foundation Award in 1953. In 1954 Lees received a Guggenheim Fellowship allowing him to work in Europe. His aim was to remain uninfluenced by the turbulent American scene and to create his own style. He worked away from the academic centres where many American composers had studied, living at Longpont-sur-Orge, France (1954–5 and 1957–61), Vienna (1955–6) and Helsinki (1956–7). He returned to the USA in 1961 with many mature and impressive works, thereafter dividing his time between composition and teaching, at the Peabody Conservatory (1962–4, 1966–8) and in New York at Queens College (1964–6), the Manhattan School (1972–4) and the Juilliard School (1976–7). He has fulfilled many commissions, notably the String Quartet no.3 (for the Tokyo String Quartet), the Concerto for Brass Choir and Orchestra (for the Dallas SO), the String Quartet no.4 (for the Aurora String Quartet) and a Horn Concerto for the Pittsburgh SO. He has had many works played by major American symphony orchestras. In 1981 he received an award from the NEA.

Lees's music is basically traditional in approach; his musical development, comparatively free from the influence of avant-garde fashions and schools, has been steady and consistent. From an early interest in the bittersweet melodic style of Prokofiev and the bizarre and surrealist aspects of Bartók's music, he progressed naturally under the unconventional guidance of Antheil. He extended the tonal system with semitonal inflections, both harmonic and melodic, around not only the 3rd, but also the root, 5th and octave of the major and minor chords. Rhythmically his music is active, with frequent changes of time signature and shifts of accent present even in his early works, particularly the award-winning String Quartet no.1 and Sonata for two pianos, and his masterly Second Quartet. Having refined his style, he embarked on a series of large-scale works in which his secure command of orchestral technique and form is everywhere apparent. The Second Symphony with its recurring motifs and slow-movement finale (also a feature of the Third Symphony) is particularly notable. Of comparable stature are the Concerto for Orchestra (influenced by Bartók's), the virtuoso Violin Concerto and the cantata–oratorio Visions of Poets. The ironic musical juxtapositions found occasionally in these earlier works dominate the Third Symphony and the bizarre Medea of Corinth. In the 1970s Lees concentrated on orchestral and chamber music, returning to writing songs at the end of the decade. His interest in orchestral and chamber music continued thereafter with a group of symphonies, concertos (some with multiple soloists) and other orchestral pieces and the moving Fourth Quartet.

WORKS

(selective list)

STAGE AND VOCAL

Ops: The Oracle (1, Lees), 1956; The Gilded Cage (3, A. Reid), 1970–72, withdrawn; Scarlatti Portfolio (ballet), 1978

Other works: Songs of the Night (J.R. Nickson), S, pf, 1952; 3 Songs (Nickson, W. Blake), A, pf, 1959; Cyprian Songs (Nickson), Bar, pf, 1960; Visions of Poets (W. Whitman), S, T, chorus, orch, 1961; 3 Songs (Nickson), A, pf, 1969; Medea of Corinth (R. Jeffers), S, Mez, Bar, B, wind qnt, timp, 1970; The Trumpet of the Swan (E.B. White), nar, orch, 1972; Staves (Nickson), S, pf, 1979; Omen (Nickson), S, pf, 1980; Paumanok (Whitman), Mez, pf, 1980

INSTRUMENTAL

5 syms.: 1953; 1958; 1968; 'Memorial Candles', Mez, vn, orch, 1985; 'Kalmar Nyckel', 1986

Other orch: Profile, 1952; Declamations, pf, str, 1953; Pf Conc. no.1, 1955 ; Divertimento-burlesca, 1957; Interlude, str, 1957; Vn Conc., 1958; Conc. for Orch, 1959; Concertante breve, 1959; Prologue, Capriccio and Epilogue, 1959; Ob Conc., 1963; Conc. for Str Qt and Orch, 1964; Spectrum, 1964; Conc., chbr orch, 1966; Fanfare for a Centennial, brass, perc, 1966; Pf Conc. no.2, 1966; Silhouettes, 1967; Etudes, pf, orch, 1974; Labyrinths, wind band, 1975; Passacaglia, 1975; Conc. for Ww Qnt and Orch, 1976; Variations, pf, orch, 1976; Mobiles, 1980; Double Conc., vc, pf, orch, 1982; Conc. for Brass Choir and Orch, 1983; Portrait of Rodin, 1984; Hn Conc., 1992; Borealis, 1993; Echoes of Normandy, 1994

Chbr: Sonata, hn, pf, 1951; Str Qt, no.1 1952; Evocation, fl, 1953; Sonata no.1, vn, pf, 1953; Movement da camera, fl, cl, pf, vc, 1954; Str Qt no.2, 1955; 3 Variables, ob, cl, bn, hn, pf, 1955; Invenzione, vn, 1965; Duo, fl, cl, 1967; Study no.1, vc, 1969; Collage, wind qnt, perc, str qt, 1973; Sonata no.2, vn, pf, 1973; Soliloquy Music for King Lear, fl, 1975; Dialogue, vc, pf, 1977; Str Qt no.3, 1980–81; Sonata, vc, pf, 1981; Pf Trio, 1983; Str Qt no.4, 1989; Sonata no.3, vn, pf, 1991

Pf: 4 sonatas, 1949, 1950, 1956 (Sonata breve), 1963; Sonata, 2 pf, 1951; Toccata, 1953; Fantasia, 1954; 10 Pieces, 1954; 6 Ornamental Etudes, 1957; Kaleidoscopes, 1959; Epigrams, 1960, withdrawn; 3 Preludes, 1962; Odyssey, 1970; Fantasy Variations, 1984

Principal publisher: Boosey & Hawkes

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EwenD
D. Cooke: 'The Music of Benjamin Lees', Tempo, no.51 (1959), 20–29
D. Cooke: 'The Recent Music of Benjamin Lees', Tempo, no.64 (1963), 11–21
D. Cooke: 'Benjamin Lees's Visions of Poets', Tempo, no.68 (1964), 25–31
N. O'Loughlin: 'Benjamin Lees's String Quartet Concerto', Tempo, no.82 (1967), 21–5
N. O'Loughlin: 'Two Works by Benjamin Lees', Tempo, no.93 (1970), 19–24
N. Slonimsky: 'Benjamin Lees in Excelsis', Tempo, no.113 (1975), 14–21
B. Johnson: 'Benjamin Lees, Quo vadis?', Tempo, no.175 (1990), 11–17

NIALL O'LOUGHLIN

Leeuw, Cornelis (Janszoon) de (b Edam, *c*1613; d Amsterdam, *c*1660). Dutch publisher, composer and editor. He gave up his musical career for that of publisher, joining the Amsterdam booksellers' guild in about 1648. He edited and published both musical and non-musical books, often for the Remonstrant Church where he was precentor, until 1658 when he went bankrupt. He had little success with his polyphonic settings of Joost van den Vondel's psalms and Diederik Camphuysen's Stichtelycke rymen or with his own songbook Christelycke plichtrymen, but his editions of the Dutch version of the Genevan Psalter, with all melodies for the first time in the same (alto) clef, enjoyed great popularity. In fact, his method of editing the psalms soon became the standard and remained so for several centuries.

WORKS

printed works published in Amsterdam unless otherwise stated

Een kindeken is ons gebooren, 3vv (1644[3])
[12] Stichtelycke rymen (D. Camphuysen), 3–8vv, bc (1646)
Davids tranen, of boetepsalmen (J. van den Vondel), 4vv, bc (1646)
Traen ooghen traen, 4vv, in D. Camphuysen: Stichtelycke rymen (1647); authorship doubtful
Wie kan die op aerde woonen, song, 3vv; 19 canons: in Christelycke plichtrymen (1648–9); song ed. in Enschedé (1903)
Psalm xli.7, 4vv, *c*1651; Psalms xxiii, cxxviii, 4vv; 12 canons, 1658–; 2 canons, 1661: in De CL Psalmen Davids (Datheen) (several edns, *c*1650–*c*1661)
Psalms i, viii, 4vv, in Uytbreydingh over de psalmen Davids (Camphuysen) (1652, 1662–97)
9 lofzangen, 4vv, in C. le Jeune: De CL Psalmen Davids (Schiedam, 1665)

LOST

[6] Wegh-wijser (Camphuysen), 4vv (1638)
Hollandtsche vreughd' (C. Wittenoom and others), 4vv, bc (1642–*c*1644) [2 vols.]
Vierdagen (H. Grotins and others), 3vv, bc (1640–42): Lofsangen op de geboorte Christi; 't Leven Christi; Christelycke betrachtinge op het lijden Christi op Goede Vrijdagh; Sondagh, ofte geestelijcke nut des verrijsenis Christi; Olijf-bergh, ofte vertooningh des hemelvaerts Christi; Pinxter, ofte zendingh des Heyligen Geestes op d'apostelen Christi

EDITIONS
published in Amsterdam

G.G. Gastoldi: Balletten met drie stemmen (1648) [with 4th voice part added by Leeuw]
Christelycke plichtrymen (1648–9)
De CL Psalmen Davids (Datheen) (several edns, 1650–*c*1661)
Uytbreydingh over de Psalmen Davids (Camphuysen) (1652)
Davids Psalmen (H. Bruno) (1656)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

JoãoIL
J.W. Enschedé: 'Cornelis de Leeuw', TVNM, vii/2 (1902), 89–148; vii/3 (1903), 157–232
D.F. Scheurleer: Nederlandsche liedboeken (The Hague, 1912–23)
R.A. Rasch: 'The Balletti of Giovanni Giacomo Gastoldi and the Musical History of the Netherlands', TVNM, xxiv/2 (1974), 112–45
R.A. Rasch: 'Cornelis de Leeuw (ca.1613–ca.1661)', TVNM, xxvii/1 (1977), 1–27

RANDALL H. TOLLEFSEN/RUDOLF A. RASCH

Leeuw, Reinbert de (b Amsterdam, 8 Sept 1938). Dutch composer, conductor and pianist. After studying Dutch for two years at the University of Amsterdam, he studied piano (with Jaap Spaanderman) and music theory at the Muzieklyceum in Amsterdam starting in 1958. In 1962 he passed the final examination in music theory with distinction, and in 1964 gained the diploma in solo piano. From 1963 he was employed as a lecturer in music theory at the Conservatory in The Hague, where he unofficially studied composition with van Baaren.

In his various capacities as a pianist, composer, conductor and also as programme planner and organizer, de Leeuw has given decisive impetus to innovations in musical practice in the postwar Netherlands. In 1966 he was involved in the campaign to persuade the artistic directors of the Concertgebouw Orchestra to put more contemporary music into its programme, and in 1969 he formed part of the Aktiegroep De Notenkrakers (Nutcrackers Action Group) which argued in favour of making Dutch musical life more democratic. The 'Rondom-Concerten' (round-about concerts), which de Leeuw himself organized starting in the 1970s, encouraged well thought-through and thematic programming, particularly for 20th-century music.

De Leeuw became internationally known as an interpreter of the piano works of Satie and late Liszt. De Leeuw has been the conductor of the Schönberg Ensemble since it was founded in 1974. As a pianist and composer he produced exemplary interpretations of the work of the composers of the Second Viennese School, and also those of Antheil, Messiaen, Kagel, Kurtág, Reich, Ligeti, Vivier, Ustvol'skaya, Gubaydulina and the Dutch composers Louis Andriessen and Jan van Vlijmen. His fascination with Satie, Liszt, Ives and Messiaen had previously been apparent from his publications. From 1965 to 1968 de Leeuw worked on the cultural journal De gids. A number of essays written for this periodical were published in one volume under the title Muzikale anarchie (1973). He had previously written the first Dutch biography of Charles Ives in collaboration with J. Bernlef (1969).

From 1968 to 1971 de Leeuw was a member of the Arts Council, the Advisory Board of the Ministry of Cultural Affairs and a member and chairman of the Amsterdam Arts Council (1967–75). He was chairman of GeNeCo, the Netherlands Composers' Association (1979–83) and the Fonds voor de Scheppende Toonkunst (1986–92). He was guest artistic director of the Aldeburgh Festival (1992) and since 1994 has been artistic director of the Tanglewood Contemporary Music Festival.

De Leeuw is the composer of a small but much discussed output, which developed from serialism (String Quartet, 1963) gradually towards a more neo-romantic idiom (Abschied, 1973). Together with Louis Andriessen, Schat, van Vlijmen and Misha Mengelberg he composed Reconstructie, an anti-imperialist opera with a libretto by Mulisch and Claus. With van Vlijmen he composed Axel (1977), based on a text by Mulisch after Count Villiers de l'Isle-Adam.

De Leeuw received the Sikken Prize in 1991 and in 1992 was awarded the 3M Muzieklaureaat, the most prestigious Dutch music prize. In 1994 the University of Utrecht presented him with an honorary doctorate for his work as a pianist and as a conductor of the Schönberg Ensemble.

WORKS
(selective list)

Op: Reconstructie (Mulisch and Claus), Amsterdam, 29 June 1969, collab. L. Andriessen, Schat, van Vlijmen and M. Mengelberg; Axel (Mulisch, after Count Villiers de l'Isle-Adam), Amsterdam, 1977, collab. van Vlijmen

Other: Solo I, vc, 1961; Str Qt, 1963, Music for Pf I, 1964; Interplay, orch, 1965; Music for Pf II, 1966; Hymns and Chorals, wind, elecs, 1970; Abschied, sym. poem, orch, 1973; Etude, str qt, 1985

WRITINGS

with J. Bernlef: Charles Ives (Amsterdam, 1969)
Muzicale anarchie (Amsterdam, 1973)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Schönberger: 'Reinbert de Leeuw', Key Notes, i (1975), 3–18
R. Koopmans: 'On Music and Politics: Activism of Five Dutch Composers', Key Notes, iv (1976), 19–36
T. Szántó: 'Round-About Music with Reinbert de Leeuw', Key Notes, vii (1978), 15–16
P. Peters: 'Reinbert de Leeuw: uiteindelijk klinkt de ideale uitvoering alleen in je hoofd' [Ultimately the ideal version can be heard only in your head], Mens en melodie, xlv (1990), 6–11

EMILE WENNEKES

Leeuw, Ton [Antonius Wilhemus Adrianus] de (b Rotterdam, 16 Nov 1926; d Paris, 31 May 1996). Dutch composer, teacher and writer on music.

1. Training and career. 2. Works. 3. Ideology and style.

1. TRAINING AND CAREER. His youth spent in Breda was culturally rather isolated, the radio being his main access to music. Nevertheless his interests ranged wide including medieval, Renaissance, contemporary and non-Western styles. In his teenage years a leaning towards philosophy and religion was fostered through personal contact with the Dutch writer Pieter van der Meer de Walcheren, who was himself connected to the French Roman Catholic revival which centred around Jacques Maritain. After private music lessons with Louis Toebosch (1946), he studied composition privately with Badings (1947–9). He was in Paris from 1949 to 1950, where he took analysis with Messiaen at the Conservatoire and orchestration privately with Thomas de Hartmann; five years of ethnomusicology with Jaap Kunst followed. In 1954 he started work as a music producer for the Nederlandse Radio Unie, where he stayed until 1959 playing an important role in bringing contemporary and non-Western traditions to the Dutch public. He was next appointed head of composition at the Amsterdam Conservatory (1959–86), of which he became general director (1971–3) and artistic director (1973–86). He was also senior lecturer of contemporary music in the musicology department of the University of Amsterdam (1963–83), and in 1981 he was composer-in-residence at UCLA, Berkeley.

Throughout most of his professional life de Leeuw gave guest lectures and guided workshops internationally, speaking in particular about interaction between different cultures. Of particular significance to his own music were visits made to Iran and India in 1961, at the invitation of the Dutch ministry of education, to assess the possibilities of cultural exchange. He was the chief organizer and chairman of the Musicultura meetings (1974–84) in the Netherlands, devoted to bringing into contact composers, musicians and musicologists from across the world.

They continued under his guidance as international composers' workshops (1984–96), organized by the Gaudeamus Foundation. His book Muziek van de twintigste eeuw has contributed significantly to music education in the Netherlands and abroad and many of his composition students have played, and continue to play, a prominent role in musical life, among them Jos Kunst, Straesser, Keuris, Janssen and Hoenderdos. After 1986 de Leeuw devoted himself entirely to composition, living in Paris and Vétheuil. His various prizes include the Prix Italia (1956, radio oratorio Job), the Prix des Jeunesses Musicales (1958, String Quartet no.1), Prize of the City of Amsterdam (1970, Lamento pacis), and twice the Matthijs Vermeulen Prize (1982, Car nos vignes sont en fleur, and 1997, posthumously, complete output).

2. WORKS. As a student of Badings and for a while after, de Leeuw was influenced by Bartók, Hindemith and Pijper, for example in the Sonata for two pianos (1950), which exhibits Pijper's germ cell technique. However, after hearing Webern at the Darmstadt summer courses in 1953, he rapidly turned to an exploration of total chromaticism and serialism, one of the first Dutch composers so to do. Mouvements rétrogrades (1957) typifies de Leeuw's careful approach, each of its ten movements twice presenting a rhythmic mirror form. Based on a pan-chromatic harmonic grid of four augmented triads, the music is related by the composer to the image of a revolving crystal that remains the same in itself, but continually reflects light in different ways. In the same year as the Mouvements, de Leeuw wrote the serial Electronic Study, and, as with serialism, his electronic work played an important introductory role to the medium for many in the Netherlands. The String Quartet no.1 (1958) still employs a strict serial technique, applied to durations (including rests) and dynamics. However, allied to Webern and Japanese traditional music – especially through the surrounding of note patterns by silence – it is consciously distant from, as de Leeuw saw it, the latent Expressionism in serialism. A meeting with Cage at the 1958 World Exhibition in Brussels helped to distance de Leeuw further from serial thought, though he was not entirely sympathetic to Cage's concepts of chance and indeterminacy.

De Leeuw's visit to India in 1961 led to his hearing the dhrupad singers Ustad Moinuddin and Ustad Aminuddin Dagar in Delhi; they made a lasting impression and provoked a deep interest in melodic, rhythmic and timbral sophistication. The opening of Symphonies of Winds (1963) reflects this Indian experience: it is a cumulative presentation of a fixed field of melodic formulas, modelled upon the classical Indian ālāp, which was to inspire the opening of many later compositions too, e.g. Mountains (1977) and Résonances (1984–5). However, Symphonies of Winds also presents a quotation from Symphonies of Wind Instruments by Stravinsky, to whom the piece is dedicated, the work thus marking the start of a period in which de Leeuw turned to past Western music, as well as to non-Western traditions.

The 1960s were years of intense experimentation in many areas, including the use of chance, automatic writing, open forms, multiple layering, guided improvisation, and new explorations of the performance space and physical and social aspects of music-making. In many of these cases Japanese traditional arts served as a reference. The fact that haiku-texts permit many possible readings was taken by the composer as a starting point for several different musical interpretations of the sounds of a particular text within one piece, as in Men Go their Ways (1964), the one-act opera De droom (1963), and Haiku II (1968). In the last of these, the lines of a haiku are fragmented into single words and sounds out of which new combinations of words and sounds are made as fresh 'interpretations' of the original haiku. In this piece space also plays a structural role: the soprano sings at six different positions, connected by promenades. Other compositions displaying an important spatial element are Spatial music I-IV (1966–8) and Lamento pacis (1969), to texts from Erasmus's Querela pacis. This piece exemplifies de Leeuw's preoccupation in the late 1960s with mental disorientation and socio-political disintegration; in the third part spatial dispersion serves to transform the vocal-instrumental ensemble into unrelated individual musicians. The dedications of Lamento's three movements also reflect other interests of de Leeuw at the time: Gesualdo, Zeami (the co-founder of nō theatre) and Ockeghem. One of the concepts derived from nō is the simultaneity of autonomous musical layers, employed in part 2; there are also concrete sound references to nō and gagaku. Controlled improvisation modelled on non-Western practices such as in Arabic and Indian classical music, is found in, for example, Spatial music IV; a fund of patterns is specified which the players are invited to individualize by means of free decoration.

In the 1970s de Leeuw moved towards the use of elementary melodic and rhythmic units, with the wish to 'rebuild' music after serialism. While diatonic patterns are present within the pan-chromaticism since the early 1960s (e.g. in Symphonies), language becomes substantially diatonic and modal from the 1970s on. As well as reference to modality in the titles of Mo-Do (1974) and Modal music (1978–9) modal practice is manifest in the use of 'selective' scales, specific melodic patterning and guided performer ornamentation in these works, as well as in Music for Oboe (1969), Sweelinck Variations (1973), and Gending for Javanese gamelan (1985). Inspired by Javanese music, the first part of Gending is cyclic in nature. The beginning and ending of the cycles are marked by specific acoustic means which de Leeuw called 'colotomic marking', after a term used by his teacher Kunst to denote the punctuation of phrase structure in Javanese gamelan music using the larger gongs. This colotomic practice remained characteristic until the end of de Leeuw's life. In his last 15 years, he composed prolifically, fully developing a concept of extended modality in works such as Invocations (1983), Résonances (1985), Les chants de Kabir (1985) and his last composition, 3 Shakespeare Songs (1994–5). The opera Antigone (1991) is a fine example of both extended modality and de Leeuw's metaphysics; human existence is seen as part of a divine play, in which the individual functions as an actor, not as a director. The fundamental musical structure is essentially undramatic, all parts derived from the same pitch-duration cycle.

3. Ideology and style. During much of de Leeuw's career, the idea of interaction between cultures – most specifically as a West–East relationship – was a powerful creative incentive. However, such compass points are not confined to geographical or cultural entities, but stand for ideas about complexes of attitudes and musical structures: the West, a goal-oriented music of 'becoming' rooted in dynamism, tension and development particularly since the 19th century; the East, a music of 'being', oriented towards balance, with an endlessly varied potential for activity. Leeuw himself at first identified strongly with those composers whom he viewed as standing apart from 19th-century Western mentality such as Debussy, Stravinsky ('the first true anti-romantic') and Webern, as well as with pre-tonal European and non-Western styles. One important characteristic for him was the use of silence, implying an absence of intention, with Cage and Japanese traditional arts serving as points of reference during the 1960s.

However, from the 1970s on, there began a long process of reconciliation between occident and orient with modality at its core. Structurally, modal practices were attractive as possible means by which to transcend the tonal-atonal debate, as an antidote to the expansionist tendency of postwar serialism, and, more generally, as a stimulus to set aside equal temperament. At the same time he saw modality as the common historic source of Western and Eastern traditions: de Leeuw's writings frequently compare medieval Western mode to the Indian concept of rāga, Arabic maqām, and Javanese paṭēt. His work participated in the 'universalist' discussions by musicologists and composers during the 1970s, and he saw confirmation of his own concentration on modality in the re-emergence of certain modal characteristics in the early 20th century (Debussy, Stravinsky) and later (Messiaen). However, such technical aspects were always viewed as one side of a coin, the other side of which was spiritual. In his later writings de Leeuw refers to 'trans-subjectivity', a concept influenced by Hindu and Buddhist texts, which involves liberation from cultural and ego-oriented conditioning, as the basis for creativity. He stresses the importance of an 'ecology of sound', inviting the rediscovery of an 'ethics' of music-making and listening.

With the development of 'extended modality' in the 1980s 'becoming' and 'being' became aspects of an integrated compositional approach. A fundamental aspect of de Leeuw's thought is the use of fixed series of pitches, usually diatonic and with characteristic focal notes, termed by the composer a 'model'. The model is constantly looped – a musical reflection of natural cycles – though usually not sounded in its entirety. Rather it is subjected to various means of selection, through the application of pitch or duration structures which act as filters, the overall duration nevertheless remaining intact. In ex.1 from Résonances, (a) is the model; (b) is a selection according to pitch, the A flat serving as a trigger, alternately sustained or 'releasing' interim pitches; (c) selects through duration, changing note every six beats. Such a dialectic between pitch and duration results essentially in a monodic music. However, where a denser weave is required, heterophony results through simultaneous multiple selection, while harmony is achieved through parallellism and resonance (by sustaining pitches); drones are omnipresent.

The essential paring down of de Leeuw's final period was the outcome of a style which always had a tendency towards textural transparency and severity, together with a refined sense of timbre. The involvement of the repeating model also reveals a long-term connection with his early employment of serialism. However, it is treated as a pool of possibility, not, as with a series, stated whole. As such it is analagous to the idea of 'being', while the selection process suggests 'becoming'. It is the heart of de Leeuw's philosophy: nothing need be sought, everything is already present.

WORKS

DRAMATIC

Alceste (TV op, 3, de Leeuw, after Euripedes), 1962, TV, 13 March 1963

De droom [The Dream] (op with ballet, 3 scenes, de Leeuw, after East Asian legend, incl. Jap. haiku, trans. H.G. Henderson), 1963, Amsterdam, Stadsschouwburg, 16 June 1965

De bijen [The Bees] (ballet), 1964

Krishna en Radha (ballet), 1964

Litany of Our Time (TV incid music), 1970

Antigone (music drama, 2 pts, de Leeuw, after Sophocles), 1989–91, Amsterdam, Westergasfabriek, 25 June 1993

ORCHESTRAL AND LARGE ENSEMBLE

Conc. grosso, str, 1946; Treurmuziek in memoriam Willem Pijper, 1946; Sym., str, perc, 1950; Sym., str, 1951; Plutos Suite, 1952; Vn Conc. no.1, 1953; Suite, youth orch, 1954; Mouvements rétrogrades, 1957; Nritta, 1961; Ombres, 1961; Vn Conc. no.2, 1961; Symphonies of Winds, 1963; Spatial Music I, 1966; Syntaxis II, 1966; Spatial Music IV, 12 insts, 1968; Music for Str, 1970; Music for Org and 12 players, 1970–71; Spatial Music V, 1971; Canzone, 10 brass, 1973–4; Gending, gamelan, 1975; Alba, chbr conc., small orch, 1982, rev. 1986; Résonances, 1985; Conc., 2 gui, str, 1988; Danses sacrées, pf, chbr orch, 1989–90

CHORAL

Missa brevis, SATB, 1952; 4 koorliederen (anon., medieval Dutch), SATB, 1953; Prière (Qur'an), SATB, 1953; Psalm 118, 3-pt mixed chorus, 2 trbn, org ad lib, 1966; Lamento pacis I-II-II (Erasmus), mixed chorus, insts, 1969; The Magic of Music I (Indian music theory text), 2-pt chorus, 1970; Cloudy Forms (Shitao), male vv, 1970; The Birth of Music (American-Indian myth), mixed vv/male vv, 1975; Car nos vignes sont en fleur (Bible: Song of Songs), 12-pt mixed chorus; Invocations (Lat., Pss), Mez, 4-pt mixed chorus, ens, 1983; Chimères (G. de Nerval), 2Ct, T, 2Bar, B, 1984; Les chants de Kabir, 2Ct, T, 2Bar, B, 1985; Transparence (Fr., Arab mystics), 18-pt mixed chorus, (3 tpt, 3 trbn)/(tpt, 2 hn, 2, trbn, tuba), 1986; 5 hymnes (Kabir), mixed chorus, 2 pf, 2 perc, 1987–8; A cette heure du jour (Old Sumerian, Fr. trans. by P. Selk), 4-pt mixed chorus, 1991–2; Elégie pour les villes détruites (Bible), 4-pt mixed chous, 1994

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

Str Trio, 1948; Introduzione e passacaglia, org, 1949; Sonata, fl, pf, 1949; Sonata, vn, pf, 1951; Trio, fl, cl, pf, 1952; 5 Sketches, ob, cl, bn, va, vc, 1952; Sonatine, vn, pf, 1955; Str Qt no.1, 1958; The Four Seasons, hp, 1964; Schelp [Shell], fl, va, gui, 1964; Str Qt no.2, 1964; Nightmusic, fl, 1966; Music for Vn, 1967; Music for Ob, 1969; Reversed Night, fl, 1971; Spatial Music II, perc ens, 1971; Midare, mar, 1972; Sweelinck-variaties, org, 1972–3; Music for trbn, 1973–4; Mo-du, amp clvd/hpd, 1974; Rime, fl, hp, 1974; Modal music, accdn, 1978–9; Interlude, gui, 1984; Apparences I, vc, 1987; Apparences II, cl qt, 1987; Hommage à Henri, cl, pf, 1989; Trio, fl, b cl, pf, 1990; Music for Db, 1989–91; Fauxbordon, fl, cl + b cl, pf, synth, mar, mand, vn, va, 1991–2; rev. 1993; Music for Mar, Vib and Jap. Temple Bells, 2 players, 1993; Sax Qt, 1993; Str Qt no.3, 1994

Pf: Scherzo, 1948; Sonatine, 1949; Sonata, 2 pf, 1950; Variations sur une chanson populaire française, pf/hpd, 1950; 4 Preludes, 1950; 5 études, 1951; 4 ritmische etudes, 1952; 3 Afrikaanse etudes, 1954; 6 dansen, 1955; Men Go their Ways, 1964; Linkerhand en rechterhand, 1976; Les adieux, 1988

SOLO VOCAL

With pf: Berceuse presque nègre (P. van Ostaijen), medium v, pf, 1948; Diablerie (J. Engelman), S, pf, 1948; Goden en zangers [Gods and Singers] (A. Roland Holst), S, pf, 1948; Die Weise von Liebe und Tod (R.M. Rilke), high v, pf, 1948; De ueren van de bittere passie Jesu Christi (anon., medieval Dutch), medium v, pf, 1949; 5 liederen (F. García Lorca), high v, pf, 1952; 2 liederen (G. Mistral), S, pf, 1953; 8 europese liederen, medium v, pf, 1954; Haiku (Eng. trans. by H.G. Henderson), S, pf, 1963

Other: De toverfluit [The Magic Flute], S, fl, vc, pf, 1954; Brabant (H. Laurey), medium v, orch, 1959; Haiku II (Eng. trans. by H.G. Henderson), S, orch, 1968; Vocalise, solo v, 1968; 4 liederen, medium v, 3 rec, 1955; And they shall reign for ever (Bible: Revelations), Mez, cl, hn, pf, perc, 1981; Natasja (vocalise), B, 1990; 3 Shakespeare Songs, Mez, large ens, 1994–5

ELECTRO-ACOUSTIC

Job (radio orat, Bible: Job), solo vv, mixed chorus, orch, elecs, 1956; Electronic Study, 1957; Antiphony, ww qnt, 4-track tape, 1960; Syntaxis I, tape, 1966; Spatial Music III, 4 inst groups, tape, 1967; Mountains, cl, tape, 1977; The Magic of Music II (Indian music theory text), v, tape, 1977; Chronos, tape, 1980; Clair obscur, tape, 1982

Principal publisher: Donemus

WRITINGS

'New Trends in Modern Dutch Music', Sonorum speculum, no.4 (1960), 124–33; no.5 (1960), 174–81

'Mouvements rétrogrades', Sonorum speculum, no.8 (1961), 14–15

'Elektronische Probleme in den Niederlanden', Melos, xxx/5 (1963), 161–3

Muziek van de twintigste eeuw (Utrecht, 1964, 3/1991; Swed. trans., 1967; Ger. trans., 1995, as Sprache der Musik im 20. Jahrhundert)

'Music in Orient and Occident: a Social Problem', World of Music, xi/4 (1969), 6–17

'L'interaction des cultures dans la musique contemporaine/Interaction of Cultures in Contemporary Music', Cultures, i/3 (1973–4), 13–32

'Introduction'; 'The East-West Theme'; 'Analysis of Gending'; 'Five Reflections', Key Notes, no.3 (1976), 66–74

'Questions, Ideas and Expectations: Premises and Aims of an East-West Encounter', World of Music, xx/2 (1978), 19–33

'The Adaptation of Asian Music Forms in Contemporary Music', Final Report of the Asian Composers' Conference: Hong Kong 1981 (Hong Kong, 1983), 40–47

'Van de jaren zestig tot heden: het moderne muziekleven aan de hand van vijf karakteristieken' [From the 1960s to the present: modern musical life in five characteristics], Muziek in de 20e eeuw, ed. J. Nuchelmans (Baarn, 1995), 52–66

'Back to the Source', Ton de Leeuw, ed. J. Sligter (Luxembourg, 1995), 73–93

'We Live Atop a Volcano', Key Notes, no.30 (1996), 4–7

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K.H. Wörner: 'Holländische Musiker der Gegenwart', SMz, cii (1962), 5–8

J. Wouters: 'Ton de Leeuw: "Ombres"', Sonorum speculum, no.14 (1963), 11–13 [in Eng., Ger.]

J. Wouters: 'Composers' Gallery: Ton de Leeuw', Sonorum speculum, no.19 (1964), 1–28 [in Eng., Ger.]

V. McDermott: 'Current Chronicle: the Netherlands', MQ, lii (1966), 511–14

E. Vermeulen: '"Lamento pacis" by Ton de Leeuw', Sonorum speculum, no.39 (1969), 23–32 [in Eng., Ger.]

D. Manneke: 'Ton de Leeuw "Music for Strings"', Sonorum speculum, no.48 (1971), 17–26 [in Eng., Ger.]

J. Wouters: Negen portretten van Nederlandse componisten, i (Amsterdam, 1971), 17–49

D. Manneke: 'Ton de Leeuw: "Music for Organ and 12 Players"', Sonorum speculum, no.49 (1971–2), 7–12

S. Moore: 'Reflections on Musicultura 1974–1976', Sonorum speculum, no.57 (1974), 30–40 [in Eng., Ger.]

E. Helm: 'Holland Musicultura: Begegnung mit der Musik des nahen Ostens', Melos/NZM, iii (1977), 46–7

E. Helm: 'The Music of Ton de Leeuw', Key Notes, no.9 (1979), 3–12

B. Baas: 'Dutch 20th-Century Piano Music, Part II: Catching Up with International Trends', Key Notes, no.14 (1981), 30–43

L. Dominick: 'Mode and Movement in Recent Works of Ton de Leeuw', Key notes, no.17 (1983), 15–23

R. de Groot: 'Aspects of Ton de Leeuw's Musical Universe', Key Notes, no.23 (1986), 17–31

W. Markus: 'Music and Time: Observations on Arnold Schoenberg and Ton de Leeuw', Key Notes, no.23 (1986), 14–16

R. de Groot: Compositie en intentie van Ton de Leeuws muziek: van een evolutionair naar een cyclisch paradigma [The composition and intention of Ton de Leeuw's music: from an evolutionary to a cyclic paradigm] (diss., U. of Utrecht, 1991)

R. de Groot: 'Componist tussen Oost en West: cel en kristal, ontwikkelingen in de muziek van Ton de Leeuw' [Composer between east and west: cell and crystal, developments in the music of Ton de Leeuw], Holland Festival Almanack 1993(Amsterdam, 1993), 44–51

J. Kolsteeg: 'Antigone According to de Leeuw & de Leeuw', Key Notes, no.28 (1994), 4–7

B. Robindoré: 'Where there is no Vision, the People Perish', Key Notes, no.28 (1994), 20–24 [interview]

R. de Groot: 'The Concept of Extended Modality in Recent Works by Ton de Leeuw', Ethnomusicology in the Netherlands: Present situation and Traces of the Past, ed. W. van Zanten and M.J. van Roon (Leiden, 1995), 93–112

J. Sligter, ed.: Ton de Leeuw (Luxembourg, 1995)

ROKUS DE GROOT

Lee Young-ja (b Wŏnju, Kangwŏn province, 4 June 1931). Korean composer. She studied with La Un-Yong at Ewha Women's University in Seoul (BA 1954, MA 1956), with Aubin and Noël Gallon at the Paris Conservatoire (1958-61), with Marcel Quinet at the Conservatoire Royal de Musique in Brussells (1969–72), at the Manhattan School of Music (1969) and at Sorbonne University (diploma 1989). She was professor and director of the composition department at Ewha Women's University (1961–83), occasional lecturer at Seoul National University and other universities in Korea and guest lecturer at the Sorbonne (1989). She was awarded the 8th Korean National Composer's Prize (1986) and, for her Cantata, the National Grand Prize (1995). The most senior of Korean women composers, her works have been performed in the Americas, Asia, Australasia and Europe as well as in Korea.

Lee's works retain a French influence. Her Sonatine for piano (1972) starts with a fluid andantino that quickly develops oscillating bass ostinatos and blocks of descending chord clusters. The three-movement Piano Sonata (1985) begins with dissonant clusters coupled to rhythmic patterns imitating traditional percussion bands. The second movement describes han, Korean repression, using high block chords without vertical harmonic support. The finale emphasizes a regular oscillating bass reminiscent of a country blacksmith. Stylistically similar is Auto-Portrait for harp and piano (1990), first performed in Seoul by its dedicatees, her two daughters. Two six-note scales are distributed on the two instruments, each unfolding like a monologue or in rapid glissandos and melodic flurries like a waterfall. Other representative works include the Piano Concerto (1973) and Mouvements concertante for violin and orchestra (1973).

WORKS

Orch: Suite, 1971; Movements symphoniques, 1972; Mouvements concertante, vn, orch, 1973; Pf Conc., 1973; Festival Ov., 1975; Gaech'ŏnjŏl Sym., 1991

Chbr and solo inst: 2 Preludes and Bagatelle, pf, 1952; Qnt, cl, vn, vc, db, pf, 1953; Trio, cl, bn, pf, 1955; Sonata, vc, pf, 1956; Sonata, vn, pf, 1956; 2 Poems, pf, 1958; Theme and Variations, pf, 1961; Trio, ob, bn, pf, 1967; Suite, vc, pf, 1967; Suite Romantic, pf, 1967; Ballade, cl, pf, 1970; Sonatine, pf, 1972; Sonata 'Requiem', fl, 1983; Sonata 'Yeol' [Rank], pf, 1985; Sonata 'Jong' [Bell], pf, 1985; Reflections, cl, fl, 1986; Reminiscence, pf, 1988; Music for Ob and Pf, 1989; Auto-Portrait, hp, pf, 1990; Qnt 'Chant d'amour d'un papillon', fl, hp, vn, va, vc, 1992; Aquarelles, hp, 1995; 6 Variations, cl, vn, pf, 1996; 8 Variations on a Korean Childrens' Song 'Om-ma-ya, Nu-na-ya', pf, 1996

Vocal (1v, pf, unless otherwise stated): 5 Art Songs, 1955; 2 Art Songs, 1967; 3 Love Songs, S, hp, 1991; 3 Melodies (Chŏn Sangbyŏng), SATB, 1995; Cant. 'Taehan min'guk ch'an'ga kwangbok 50-nyŏn' [50-Year Independence of the Republic of Korea], S, T, SATB, orch, 1995; 2 Melodies: Ch'orok norae [Green Song], Naehone purŭl noha [Set Fire to my Soul], 1995; 4 Melodies (Yi Haein), S, pf, 1996; 5 Melodies (Chŏn Sangbyŏng), S, pf, 1996; Ps cl, SATB, pf, 1998

WRITINGS

Strict Counterpoint (Seoul, 1974)
Orchestral Works of Olivier Messiaen (diss., Sorbonne U., 1989)
Strict Counterpoint, Inverted Counterpoint, and Canon (Seoul, 1992)

KEITH HOWARD

LeFanu, Nicola (Frances) (b Wickham Bishops, Essex, 28 April 1947). English composer of Irish descent, daughter of ELIZABETH MACONCHY. She studied music at Oxford University (BA 1968), at the RCM (1968–9) and with Earl Kim in the USA as a Harkness Fellow and Mendelssohn Scholar (1973–4); she also studied with Jeremy Dale Roberts. While establishing herself as a composer, she taught at Francis Holland School (1969–72), Morley College (1972) and St Paul's School for Girls (1975–7); she also taught composition at King's College, London (1977–94), sharing a post with her husband David Lumsdaine. She became professor of Music at York University in 1994. One of the founding members of Women in Music, which she helped to launch with a lecture investigating the neglect of women composers in contemporary Britain (Contact, 1987), she has been a long-standing member of many professional bodies, including the SPNM and the Arts Council. Her honours include a DMus from London University (1988), an honorary fellowship from St Hilda's College, Oxford (1993), certification as an FRCM (1995) and an honorary DMus from Durham University (1995).

LeFanu's highly organized music is characterized by a keen attention to musical line and space, a fascination with instrumental timbre and a desire to communicate. Opera and music theatre have played a pivotal role in her output. Her first critical successes, Soliloquy for solo oboe (1966) and Variations for oboe quartet (1968, winner of a Cobbett Prize and a BBC competition) came while she was still a student. Her first theatrical piece, Anti-World (1972), which sets samizdat Soviet texts, explores issues of freedom and control, themes echoed in some of her later works.

Landscape, whether that of England, Ireland or the Australian outback, has proved to be an important creative stimulus for LeFanu. Her first large-scale orchestral work, The Hidden Landscape (1973), commissioned by the BBC for the Proms, was followed in 1975 by Columbia Falls, inspired by the hills and moors of the state of Maine. Both works demonstrate her effective use of instrumental colour, and her use of gestures to provide foreground detail against a seemingly distant horizon of harmonic structures. Later works that emphasize this sense of space include Deva (1979), the solo cello part of which LeFanu has described as stream becoming river becoming sea as it moves from the top to the bottom of its register against the landscape of the instrumental accompaniment. Moon Over Western Ridge, Mootwingee (1985) for saxophone quartet, written after a month in the outback of Western New South Wales, uses quarter-tones to create a vividly atmospheric sense of distance, clearly evoking a distinctive landscape. A number of later instrumental compositions explore microtonality, notably the Saxophone Concerto (1989) and Lament 1988 (1988), a work that marked both Nelson Mandela's 70th birthday and the 200th anniversary of Australia's invasion by European settlers.

LeFanu's vocal works set a wide range of texts, including traditional poetry from Europe, the USA and Asia. Her song cycle The Same Day Dawns (1974), on a collection of short Eastern texts, shares a central monodic line between a soprano voice and accompanying instruments. Both intimate and dramatic, the work directly conveys its themes of love, loneliness and death. Communicating social and humanist issues through storytelling is an important aspect of LeFanu's operatic works. Mary O'Neill (1986), a radio opera for 17 unaccompanied voices (commissioned by the BBC), tells the story of an Irish émigré and her descendants in Argentina, exploring issues of tolerance, dispossession and Empire. The three full-scale operas of the 1990s, The Green Children (1990), Blood Wedding (1992) and The Wildman (1995), continue, in very different musical ways, to explore themes of community and difference. The Green Children, involving children both during the compositional process and in performance, uses a relatively simple modal language. A number opera, it tells of two green children who are gradually accepted into an initially suspicious community. Blood Wedding, after the play by Lorca, is the story of unsanctioned love set against the rigid, matriarchal society of southern Spain. Here LeFanu employs a highly chromatic musical language with planes of microtonality and modality centred around a strong melodic line to convey the dusty intensity and passion of Lorca's world. The Wildman is based on the East Anglian myth of the merman, a tale that allows for an exploration of basic questions of tolerance and the human condition. The ambiguous central character, who re-learns human speech over the course of a commanding series of soliloquies, gradually re-discovers the human world through his interaction with other characters.

The Old Woman of Beare (1981), a powerful monodrama for soprano and 13 instruments, successfully unites many of the central concerns of LeFanu's work, in particular her exploration of character and her evocation of place. The text, after a 10th-century Irish poem, uses the distinctly female imagery of the ocean's tides to convey an aging courtesan's reflection on the passing of her life and sexuality. The complex vocal line, ranging from speech to song and often accompanied by a talking drum, together with finely crafted instrumental lines, clearly depicts the dramatic coast of Western Ireland, the old woman's tempestuous life and her regret at its passing.

WORKS

STAGE

first performed in London in year of composition unless otherwise stated Anti-World (music-theatre piece, 1, N. Gorbanevskaya, A. Voznesensky), 1972; The Last Laugh (ballet), 1972, London, 1973; Dawnpath (chbr op, 1, LeFanu, after Amerindian texts), 1977; The Old Woman of Beare (monodrama, LeFanu, after 10th-century Irish), S, ens, 1981; The Story of Mary O'Neill (radio op, LeFanu and S. McInerney), 1986, BBC broadcast, 1989; The Green Children (children's op, 2, K. Crossley-Holland), 1990; Blood Wedding (op, 2, D. Levy, after F.García Lorca), 1992; The Wildman (op, 2, Crossley-Holland), 1995, Aldeburgh, 1995

VOCAL

Choral: Christ Calls Man Home (Eng. medieval), 2S, 3 SATB, 1971; The Valleys Shall Sing (Pss), SATB, 2 bn, 2 tpt, 3 trbn, 1973; The Little Valleys, SSSS, 1975; For We are the Stars (Amerindian texts), 4S, 4A, 4T, 4B, 1978; Verses from Ps xc, S, 2 SATB, 1978; Like a Wave of the Sea (trad. Hindi, L. Carroll, Bible), SATB, early insts, 1981; Rory's Rounds (trad.), children's vv, 1983; Stranded on my Heart (nursery rhymes, R. Tagore, J. Fuller and others), T,

SATB, str, 1984 [rev. as The Silver Strand, SATB, 1989]; The Spirit Moves (Pss, Upanishads), SATB, 1992; On the Wind: a Lament (LeFanu, A. le M. Hartigan), lament, SATB, 1997

Other vocal: Il cantico dei cantici II (Bible), S, 1968; But Stars Remaining (C. Day Lewis), S, 1970; Rondeaux (Fr. medieval), T, hn, 1972; Paysage (G. Apollinaire), Bar, 1973; The Same Day Dawns (various), S, fl + a fl, cl + b cl, vn, va, perc, 1974; A Penny for a Song (Jap. and Irish texts, W. de la Mare), S, pf, 1981; Trio II: Song for Peter (E. Dickinson, T. Hughes, A. Chekhov), S, cl, vc, 1983; I am Bread (B. Kennelly), S, pf, 1987; Wind Among the Pines: 5 Images of Norfolk (S. Takahashi), S, orch, 1987; Sundari and the Secret Message, nar, fl + pic, vc, sitar, tabla, elec kbd, 1993; La cancion de la luna (Lorca), Ct, str qt, 1994; A Travelling Spirit, S, rec, 1997

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Preludio I, 1967 [rev. as Preludio II, 1976]; The Hidden Landscape, 1973; Columbia Falls, 1975; Farne, 1980; Variations, pf, orch, 1982; Conc., a sax, str, 1989; Concertino, cl, str, 1997; Duo concertante, vn, va, orch, 1999

Chbr and solo inst: Soliloquy, ob, 1966; Variations, ob, vn, va, vc, 1968; Chiaroscuro, pf, 1969; Abstracts and a Frame, vn, pf, 1971; Songs and Sketches, 6 or more vc, 1971; Omega, org, 1972, rev. 1984; Collana, solo perc, fl + a fl, cl + b cl, vn, vc, db, 1976; Deva, solo vc, a fl, cl, bn, hn, vn, va, db, 1979; Trio I, fl + pic, vc, perc, 1980; SPNM Birthday Fanfare, 2 tpt, 1983; Moon over Western Ridge, Mootwingee, sax qt, 1985; Invisible Places, cl qnt, 1986; Lament 1988, ob + eng hn, cl + b cl, va, vc, 1988; Lullaby, A-cl, pf, 1988; Nocturne, vc, pf, 1988; Str Qt no.1, 1988; Ervallagh, a sax, 1993; Dawn's Dove, rec, 1995; Sextet: A Wild Garden – Fásach, fl + a fl + pic, cl + b cl, vn, vc, pf, perc, 1997; Str Qt no.2, 1997; Gathering paths, installation, perc, tape, 1998, collab. B. Freeman and D. Lumsdaine

Principal publisher: Novello

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FullerPG
R. Cooke: 'Nicola LeFanu', MT, cxvi (1975), 961–3
J.W. LePage: 'Nicola LeFanu, Composer', Women Composers, Conductors and Musicians of the Twentieth Century: Selected Bibliographies, iii (Metuchen, NJ, 1988), 115–128
N. LeFanu: 'Master Musician: an Impregnable Taboo?', Contact, xxi (1987), 4–8
N. LeFanu: [Interview], CMR, xi (1994), 183–5

SOPHIE FULLER

Lefébure. See LEFÈVRE.

Lefebure, Louis Antoine [André]. See LEFEBVRE, LOUIS ANTOINE.

Lefébure, Yvonne (b Ermont, 29 June 1898; d Paris, 23 Jan 1986). French pianist and teacher. She received a premier prix in Cortot's class at the Paris Conservatoire in 1912, followed by premiers prix in harmony, accompaniment, counterpoint and fugue. Her early performances included concertos with the Lamoureux and Colonne orchestras and recitals throughout Europe. In 1950 Casals invited her to perform at the first Prades Festival. Throughout her career she championed French music, especially the works of Dukas, Fauré, Ravel and Maurice Emmanuel. A renowned pedagogue, she taught at the Ecole Normale de Musique (1924–39), the Paris Conservatoire (1952–67) and at the Conservatoire Européen (1971–85). She also founded a summer festival at Saint-Germain-en-Laye, where her masterclasses drew pianists from around the world. Her students included Catherine Collard, Imogen Cooper and Samson François. An international competition was established in her name in 1990. Her recordings include searching accounts of Fauré's Thème et variations, Dukas's Variations, interlude et finale sur un thème de Rameau and Mozart's Concerto in D minor, with Furtwängler conducting the Berlin Philharmonic.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Timbrell: French Pianism (White Plains, NY, and London, 1992, 2/forthcoming)
Y. Carbou: La leçon de musique d'Yvonne Lefébure (Paris, 1995) [incl. discography]

CHARLES TIMBRELL

Lefébure-Wély, Louis (James Alfred) (b Paris, 13 Nov 1817; d Paris, 31 Dec 1869). French organist and composer. At the age of 15 he succeeded his father as organist at St Roch. In 1835 he won a premier prix for organ at the Paris Conservatoire, where he studied with Benoist. His exceptional pedal technique led Franck to dedicate his Final to him, and Alkan his 12 études pour les pieds seulement. He then studied composition at the Conservatoire with Berton and Halévy. From 1847 to 1858 he was organist at the Madeleine, and then at St Sulpice from 1863 to his death. He also gave harmonium recitals in France and abroad, and often played at organ inaugurations, including a notable occasion with Franck on the new Cavaillé-Coll organ at Ste Clotilde. Lefébure-Wély's popular appeal may well have helped raise public awareness of the French Romantic organ, exemplified by the work of Cavaillé-Coll.

Lefébure-Wély's 200 compositions include works for piano, chamber ensemble, orchestra (including three symphonies) and the theatre (an opéra comique Les recruteurs, 1861). His organ pieces, many of which have recently become available in modern editions, include pastorales, versets, élevations and communions, which were sentimental, lyrical works, and offertories, marches and sorties, which were louder and more akin to the operetta choruses then in vogue. He was awarded the Légion d'Honneur in 1850.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (J. Bonfils) [with work-list]
C. Noisette de Crauzat: 'De la virtuosité dans l'orgue français au XIXe siècle: Lefébure-Wély', Romantisme, xvii/57 (1987), 45–51
H. de Rohan-Csermak: 'Lefébure-Wély symphoniste: aspects instrumentaux et techniques de son oeuvre d'orgue', Orgues méridionales, xxxii (1988), 14–31

DAVID SANGER

Lefebvre. See LEFÈVRE.

Lefebvre, Charles Edouard (b Paris, 19 June 1843; d Aix-les-Bains, 8 Sept 1917). French composer. A son of the celebrated painter Jules Lefebvre (1805–82), he studied law before enrolling at the Paris Conservatoire, where he was taught by Ambroise Thomas and Gounod. In 1870 he shared the Prix de Rome with Henri Maréchal for his cantata Le jugement de Dieu. After his stay in Italy he toured Greece and the orient, returning to Paris in 1873. Twice awarded the Prix Chartier, in 1884 and 1891, he replaced Benjamin Godard in 1895 as professor of the ensemble class at the Conservatoire. He spent most of his life in Paris, where he devoted himself to composition as well as teaching. His article 'Les formes de la musique instrumentale' is published in EMDC, II/v (Paris, 1930), 3121–3129.

As a composer Lefebvre was highly regarded by French critics during the late 19th century. They recognized, however, that his contribution, comprising virtually all the important musical genres, was not up to the level of the leading French composers of the time. The style and texture of his instrumental pieces might be compared to those of Mendelssohn, whom he admired greatly. In Judith he anticipated the 20th-century French predilection for opera-oratorio typical of Les Six, particularly Milhaud and Honegger.

WORKS
(selective list)

all printed works published in Paris

STAGE
operas unless otherwise stated

Lucrèce (3, E. Blau), 1877–8
Le trésor (oc, 1, F. Coppée), op.53, Angers, 1883 (?1884)
Zaïre (4, P. Collin, after Voltaire), op.66, Lille, 1887 (1887)
Djelma (3, C. Lormon), Paris, Opéra, 25 May 1894 (1894)

OTHER VOCAL

Solo vv, chorus, orch: Le jugement de Dieu (H. Dutheil), 1870, cant. [Prix de Rome]; Psaume xxiii [Domini est terra], op.25, 1871 (1876); Judith, biblical drama (Collin), op.31 (1877); Melka, légende fantastique (Collin), op.53 (1880); Eloâ, lyric poem (Collin, after A. de Vigny), op.70 (1888); Sainte-Cécile, lyric poem (E. Guinand), op.99 (1896); La fille de Jephté, lyric poem (de Vigny), op.120 (1908)
Unacc. chorus: Au bord du Nil (V. Hugo), op.49, 1879 (?*c*1879); Divine Hébé (C.-M.-R. Leconte de Lisle), op.69, 1886 (?*c*1886); Choeur d'Esther (R. Racine), op.74, 1888 (n.d.); Sombre nuit (Racine), op.127 (1912); Les anges gardiens (Collin) (n.d.); Isis (n.d.)
35 songs

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Sym., d, op.50, 1879 (?*c*1879); Ouverture de Fiesque, 1866; Le jugement de Dieu, ov., 1873; Ouverture dramatique, g, 1875; Ouverture Toggenburg (1905); Dalila, op.40 (1875); [2] Suites, opp.57, 59 (n.d.); Une sérénade, op.65 (1884); Cortège villageois, op.75, 1890 (n.d.); Suite, op.116 (n.d.); Andante et choral, hp, op.117 (1906); Prélude dramatique (1912); Cortège nuptial (1924); Esquisses pastorales, suite (n.d.)
Other works: Pieces for org, solo pf, pf 4 hands

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Imbert: Profils d'artistes contemporains (Paris, 1897) [with catalogue of works]
Orbus: 'La vie intime d'un grand musicien: Charles Lefebvre', Revue des deux mondes, c/lviii (1930), 346–76

ELAINE BRODY/CORMAC NEWARK

Lefebvre, Claude (b nr Le lac d'Ardres, Pas-de-Calais, 11 Nov 1931). French composer. He studied composition at the Paris Conservatoire with Milhaud (1958–9), then at the Basle Musikakademie with Pierre Boulez (1960–61). He was professor of analysis and composition at the Metz conservatory for 30 years (1966–96); in Metz, he founded the Centre Européen pour la Recherche Musicale in 1978, and the Rencontres Internationales de Musique Contemporaine, of which he was artistic director 1972–93. He taught courses in contemporary music at Metz University, 1978–96. In 1996 he became artistic director of the Rendez-vous Musique Nouvelle at Forbach. In 1980 he received the SACEM Grand prix for chamber music. As well as being a composer with a particular interest in harmonic experimentation, Lefebvre is also a prolific poet who has set a number of his own texts.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Cheminements, 16 str, 1969; Etwas weiter, 24 insts, 1972; Tourbillonnements, youth orch (21 insts, 2 perc), 1979; L'insoumise, 2 tpt, pf, str orch, 1991
Vocal: Océan de terre (G. Apollinaire), S, fl, cl, tpt, vc, tape, 1981; Oregon (G. Lefebvre), S, brass qnt, 1984; Virage . . . (Lefebvre), mixed vv, 1987; Sur le lac . . . la main (Lefebvre), children's chorus, 1989; Sur le seuil . . . l'enfant (Lefebvre), Bar, pf, 1990; X . . . (Lefebvre), Bar, 12 insts, 1990; Vertigo (Lefebvre), S, str sextet, 1993; Mort"!" (P. Verlaine), Bar, pf, 3 brass insts, 1996
Chbr and solo inst: D'un arbre de nuit, fl, vc, pf, 1971; Naissances, ob, str trio, 1971; Verzweigungen-Ramifications, org, 1976; Mémoires souterraines, fl, cl, amplified vc, 1980; D'un arbre-océan, pf, 1991; L'homme et la mer, org, 1997; Musique pour René Char, hn, vc, 1998

JEAN-NOËL VON DER WEID

Lefebvre, Denis (fl 2nd half of the 17th century). French composer. The only fact known about him is that he was maître de musique at Roye, Picardy, before going about 1660 to Paris, where he was perhaps associated with the Jesuits. He may have been related to the Denis Lefebvre, a native of Péronne, who was a singer and chaplain at the Ste Chapelle early in the century. His three sets of Cantiques spirituels et hymnes de l'église for two voices (Paris, 1660, 1666, 1674; 2/1710) have texts translated from the Latin (perhaps by Jean Rotrou), and some of their melodies are paraphrased from Gregorian chant. Gastoué regarded these pieces as the real source of popular religious song in France. Lefebvre also published a book of 19 four-part Airs à boire and the Premier livre d'airs à quatre parties (both Paris, 1660).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Gastoué: 'Sur quelques vieux cantiques', Variations sur la musique d'église (Paris, 1912), 19–24
A. Gastoué: Le cantique populaire en France (Lyons, 1924)

DAVID TUNLEY

Lefebvre [Le Fevre], Jacques (fl early 17th century). French composer. He was a composer to the king until 1619. The 36 vocal pieces constituting his Meslanges de musique are in the polyphonic tradition of the previous century. The one extant copy is incomplete, but, to judge by the few works that can be restored from the four partbooks remaining, he was a fine exponent of the light and witty Renaissance chanson. His few airs, two of which are printed in La Borde, include one or two in the more progressive medium of voice with basso continuo.

WORKS

Meslanges de musique, 2–6, 8vv (Paris, 1613)
2 airs in 1615[11], 1 in 1626[11]; 1 in Airs de cour pour voix et luth (1603–1643), ed. A. Verchaly (Paris, 1961)
Airs de cours et airs à boire, lv, bc, F-Pn
Various edns of individual songs in 18th- and 19th-century anthologies; 2 chansons, 3vv, ed. in Tunley

BIBLIOGRAPHY

La BordeE
D. Tunley: 'Jacques le Fevre and his "Meslanges de Musique"', MT, cxv (1974), 381–2

DAVID TUNLEY

Lefebvre [Lefebure, Lefevre], Louis Antoine [André] (b Peronne, *c*1700; d La Ferté-sous-Jouarre, 20 July 1763). French composer. He was organist at the royal church of St Louis-en-l'Isle (Paris) and from about 1756 at Blancs-Manteaux. He composed almost exclusively vocal music, mainly motets, airs and cantatilles, through which he seems to have made a considerable name in Paris, for when reporting the publication of his third cantatille, L'absence, the Mercure de France (June 1747, p.137) commented on his growing reputation. Lefebvre wrote 23 such works and a cantata Atalante et Hippomène (1759) in which, as in some of the cantatilles written towards the end of his life, the Rococo characteristics of the form give way to those of the nascent Classical style, not only in the phrase structure of the melodic lines but also in the instrumental writing of the accompaniments. His later cantatilles thus mark a new trend in French vocal chamber music; indeed the publisher Le Clerc contracted him to provide new accompaniments to some 60 cantatilles by Louis Lemaire, but he died before carrying this out. He also composed some sacred music, his motets being performed fairly regularly at the Concert Spirituel for a period from 1749 onwards.

WORKS

all printed works published in Paris

23 cantatilles, most for 1v, insts (*c*1745–59)
Atalante et Hippomène (cant.) 2vv, insts (1759)
Divertissements: L'amour justifié, 2vv, insts (?1761); Le réveil de Flore, 3vv, insts (n.d.)
12 motets, 4 pubd (n.d.), 8 in MS collections; airs, duos etc.; TeD, lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Tunley: The Eighteenth-Century French Cantata (London, 1974, 2/1997)
M. Benoit, ed.: Dictionnaire de la musique en France aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Paris, 1992)

DAVID TUNLEY

Lefèbvre, Louise-Rosalie. See DUGAZON, LOUISE-ROSALIE.

Lefebvre, Marie-Thérèse (b Montreal, 16 May 1942). French-Canadian musicologist. She studied musicology at the University of Montreal, Quebec (BMus 1975), where she also pursued her graduate studies (MA 1977, PhD 1981) and in 1981 was appointed professor of musicology. She teaches romantic, modern and Canadian music history as well as analysis and methodology and her teaching and research specialities are Canadian music, 20th-century Quebec music, and women and music in Quebec. An active contributor to the musical life of Quebec, she was, from 1983 to 1986, president of the Association pour l'Avancement de la Recherche en Musique du Québec (ARMuQ), the only Canadian association whose goal is the advancement of research into Quebec music. From 1986 to 1988 she was adviser to the State Minister for Culture in the Gabon Republic where she taught at the University of Omar Bongo. Author of numerous articles on Canadian music, she received in 1988 a prize from the Quebec Music Council for her book Jean Vallerand et la vie musicale au Québec. In 1997 she became dean of the music faculty at the University of Montreal.

WRITINGS

'Histoire du Conservatoire national de musique 1922–1950', Cahiers de l'ARMuQ, iii (1984), 37–51
'Le rôle de l'Eglise dans l'histoire de la vie musicale du Québec', Thèmes canadiens, vii (1985)
Serge Garant et la révolution musicale au Québec (Montreal, 1986)
La création musicale des femmes au Québec (Montreal, 1991)
ed., with D. Olivier: 'Gilles Tremblay: Réflexions', Circuit, v/1 (1994), 5–99
'La musique de Wagner au Québec au tournant du vingtième siècle', Canadian University Music Review/ Revue de musique des universités canadiennes, xiv (1994), 60–76
ed.: 'Gilles Tremblay: Analyses', Circuit, vi/1 (1995), 9–55
Jean Vallerand et la vie musicale au Québec (Montreal, 1996)
'Pour débusquer l'inconnu: chronologie de Serge Garant', Circuit, vii/2 (1996), 57–73
'Formation musicale de Serge Garant à Sherbrooke, 1941–1951', Cahiers de la société québécoise de recherche en musique, i/1–2 (1997), 19–24

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EMC2 (S. Galaise)

SOPHIE GALAISE

Lefebvre, Philippe (b Roubaix, 2 Jan 1949). French organist. After studying with Jeanne Joulin at Lille, then with Pierre Cochereau, he was organist at Arras Cathedral at the age of 19, entered the Paris Conservatoire and gained premiers prix in organ and improvisation (1971), counterpoint (1972) and fugue (1973). He was appointed cathedral organist at Chartres in 1976, director of the Conservatoire National de Région at Lille in 1980, and organist at Notre Dame, Paris, in 1985. A great improviser, he has moved from a neo-Romantic language close to that of Cochereau to a much more dissonant contemporary style. Lefebvre commands a solid technique and exceptional virtuosity, qualities shown to advantage in his performances of the organ repertory from Franck to Dupré, with special emphasis on the works of Vierne and Liszt.

FRANÇOIS SABATIER

Lefebvre, Xavier. See LEFÈVRE, XAVIER.

Lefèvre [Lefebvre, Fêvre, Lefeure, Lefébure]. French 16th- to 19th-century organ builders. The name belonged to at least 23 builders from several families, each possibly related. The first important member of the family that was based mainly in south-west France was Antoine Lefèvre (i) (*fl c*1524–60), who was first apprenticed to an organ builder in Arras, and from about 1510 worked with his brother-in-law, the Parisian organ builder Pierre Dugué. Antoine settled in Paris and married Jeanne Cointerel d'Aubervilliers. In 1524 he built an organ for St Mathurin, Paris. From 1528 he worked in the provinces: he is known to have been in Sens, where he made a will, and Auxerre, where he built the cathedral organ. While in Auxerre his wife died, and he subsequently returned to Paris where his two daughters married; he continued to build smaller instruments (e.g. St Sulpice), before retiring to work in the timber trade in 1559.

His son, Jean Lefèvre (i) (b ?Paris, *c*1550; d Toulouse, after 1598), was working for Gabriel D'Argillières in 1580, and is recorded as being in Burgundy sometime before 1590, when he was in Avallon. In 1593 he was in Lyons with his son, Antoine (ii). Jean's masterpiece, built in 1596, was the organ at Toulouse Cathedral, the specification of which shows the influence of D'Argillières.

Antoine Lefèvre (ii) (b Paris, *c*1571; d Toulouse, April 1651) studied with his father and later with Jean de Segré. He worked for his father in Lyons and Toulouse, and was organist at St André, Bordeaux, 1619–24. There is evidence that he was at Lourdes in 1644. He seems to have introduced the style of organ building associated with Titelouze to south-west France. Another Antoine Lefèvre (iii) (b ?*c*1660; d Toulouse, 1709) worked in Bagnères de Bigorre in 1695, later settling in Bordeaux where he maintained the cathedral organ until his death. The nature of his relationship to the family has not been established.

Another family by the name of Lefèvre was based in Normandy. Hector Lefèvre (*b c*1575; d Rouen, before 1629) was the second son of a metal-founder from Rouen who had moved to the Monnaie in Paris. Hector was trained by his uncle on his mother's side, the Parisian organ builder Dabenet, later working for Nicolas Pescheur and then for Carlier. His work on the organ at St Esprit-en-Grève led to a trial and his imprisonment. Freed on bail paid by Pierre Pescheur, he obtained a post in Rouen and lived there quietly with his son, Nicolas (ii) (d Rouen, 1635/40). Hector's brother, Nicolas (i) (b Petit-Andely, *c*1580; d Mantes, after 1630), was an organist as well as an organ builder, working at Angoulême (1606–8), Rouen (1609), Mantes and then Chevreuse (St Martin, 1610). Clément (b Rouen, 1630; d Rouen, 29 Sept 1709), son of Nicolas (ii), was organist of Notre-Dame-la-Ronde in 1663. He rebuilt the organ of St Nicaise, Rouen, in 1684. From 1681 he worked with his son Germain (b Rouen, bap. 6 Oct 1656; d Rouen, 1694), until the latter's death; together they built a four-manual and pedal organ at St Herbland, Rouen (1685–8), and an almost identical organ at St Denis, Rouen (1688–97). The St Herbland organ is now at Bolbec. On the completion of this organ Germain became organist at St Herbland, remaining there until his death. Another son of Clément, Claude (b Rouen, bap. 29 Dec 1667), crossed the Atlantic in 1707 after a financial scandal. His letters from Cartagenas, where he built three organs, and Caracas, where he built one or two others, are printed in Dufourcq (1934–5, p.394). Charles (i) (b Rouen, bap. 22 May 1670; d 8 Sept 1737), a third son of Clément, worked as an organ builder with his father after his brother Germain's death. He restored the organ of St Maclou (1696–1707) and built that at St Vivien (1710–12, enlarged 1719). His last organ was for St Nicolas, Rouen (1730–31). He was organist of St Vivien from 1698 to 1735.

Jean-Baptiste Nicolas (b Rouen, bap. 6 Feb 1705; d Rouen, 26 March 1784), son of Charles (i), was the most famous of the Lefèvres, of comparable importance to F.-H. Clicquot and Riepp. Characteristics of his style were an extension of the manual compass up to e‴ but a curtailment of the upper range of the pedal from the old e′ to c′ only; an extension of some of the Cornets from c′ down to f; an increase in the number of ranks of the Fournitures and Cymbales, often up to five each; the addition of 8′ flutes to both Grand orgue and Positif of narrow-scale leaded metal from c; the addition of extra Trumpets (frequently in large numbers), his normal arrangement being two on the Grand orgue and one each on the Positif and Récit, besides those on the Pédale and Bombarde (on organs having one); the use of a Bombarde 16′; up to five Cornets, one on each manual; and the addition on the Pédale of a Nazard and a 16′ Trompette.

A list of the principal organs of Jean-Baptiste Nicolas Lefèvre is given in Dufourcq (1934–5, p.305f). Chief among these were the instruments at Caudebec-en-Caux (1738–40; including a new Flûte allemande dessus); St Etienne, Caen (1743–7); Abbaye de Montivilliers (1746); St Maclou, Rouen (1761); St Martin, Tours (1761; the largest French classical organ, with St Sulpice, Paris, showing it has the following specification: Grand orgue: 32, 32, 16, 16, 8, 8, two 8′ flutes, 4, 2, VI, V, IV, Gros nazard, Grosse tierce, Nazard, Quarte de nazard, Tierce, Larigot, Cornet, two Trompettes, two Clairons; Positif: 8, 16, 8, two 8′ flutes, 4, 2, V, IV, Nazard, Quarte, Tierce, Larigot, Cornet, Trompette, Cromhorne, Voix humaine, Clairon; Bombarde: 8, 4, Cornet, Bombarde, two Trompettes, Clarion; Récit: Cornet, Trompette; Echo: Cornet; Pédale, 36 notes: 16, 8, 8, 4, 4, Gros nazard, Grosse tierce, Nazard, Quarte, Tierce, Bombarde (24′), two Trompettes, two Clairons); Evreux Cathedral (1774); St Pierre, Caen (1753, 1778; including a new Bombarde on the Grand orgue, a new Flûte of three octaves, Quarte and Hautbois on the Positif and a new Bombarde on the Pédale); Verneuil (1779). Jean-Baptiste Nicolas was also organist of St Nicaise, Rouen, in 1737, at which time he appears to have succeeded his father at St Vivien, Rouen, where he was organist until 1782.

Another son of Charles (i), Louis (bap. 23 May 1708; bur. Rouen, 23 Dec 1754), worked alone or with his brother Jean-Baptiste Nicolas. In 1739 he restored the organ of St Vivien, Rouen, and together with his brother he restored and reconstructed the organ of Notre Dame, Caudebec-en-Caux, Normandy (1738–40; four manuals and pedal, the keyboards with bone naturals and ebony accidentals). The inventory of his possessions made on 17 January 1755 is printed in Dufourcq (1934–5, pp.390–92).

Other organ builders bearing the name Lefèvre were apparently not related to the main Lefèvre family. Jacques Liévin (b Hesdin, 1621; d ?Rouen, after 1665), son of a half-brother of the De Héman nephews, was their pupil in Paris and later their colleague. He married a sister of Pierre Desenclos, with whom he worked at Mitry and at St Médard, Paris. He later went to Rennes, where he built the organ of the abbey of St Georges in 1654 (now in St Sauveur), and to Dôle (1657), and built the organ at Voeu Abbey, Cherbourg (1661). Jean (fl 1650–66) was an organist and Carmelite priest; as an organ builder he restored the instrument at St Vivien, Rouen. Pierre (b Troyes, *c*1678; d Paris, 1737) was an employee of Alexandre Thierry from 1689, and set up on his own account from 1693, working between Paris and Troyes. It was probably he who worked at Joinville and Verdun about 1697. He also made mechanical organs. Charles (ii) (fl Abbeville, mid-19th century) built the organ at St Sépulchre, Abbeville.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Dufourcq: Documents inédits relatifs à l'orgue français (Paris, 1934–5)

N. Dufourcq: Esquisse d'une histoire de l'orgue en France du XIIIe au XVIIIe siècle (Paris, 1935)

M. Vanmackelberg: Les orgues d'Abbeville (Abbeville, 1966); suppl., L'orgue, nos. 160–61 (1976), 54–63

F. Douglass: The Language of the Classical French Organ (New Haven, CT, 1969)

GUY OLDHAM/PIERRE HARDOUIN, KURT LUEDERS

Lefevre, André. See LEFEBVRE, LOUIS ANTOINE.

Le Fèvre, François (fl Paris, 1558–60). French composer. He seems to have specialized in occasional pieces for the court of Henri II. His chanson Que dira l'on du noble advenement de ce vainqueur, celebrating the return of Duke François de Guise after the capture of Calais from the English, was printed in 1558 along with panegyric verses by François Habert. Its musical style is reminiscent of Janequin's Bataille. Two years later Du Chemin's 14th book of chansons included a piece by Le Fèvre entitled Le roy boit, based on the popular refrain J'ay veu le cerf du bois saillir; it is also possible that the same composer was responsible for an unascribed piece celebrating the siege and capture of Calais, Hardis Français et furieulx Normans from the same book. Eitner identified Le Fèvre with 'Lefe' to whom Attaingnant attributed two four-voice chansons – Puisque ton dard m'a mis soubz ta puissance and Troys mois y a que j'attens ung bonjour (1548[8-9]).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerS

D. Heartz: Pierre Attaingnant, Royal Printer of Music (Berkeley, 1969)

FRANK DOBBINS

Le Fevre, Jacques. See LEFEBVRE, JACQUES.

Lefevre, Louis Antoine. See LEFEBVRE, LOUIS ANTOINE.

Lefèvre [Lefèbvre, Lefévre, Le Févre, Lefévre], (Jean) Xavier (b Lausanne, 6 March 1763; d Paris, 9 Nov 1829). French clarinettist and composer of Swiss birth. He studied the clarinet with Michel Yost in Paris, joined the Gardes Françaises in 1778 and was a member of the Garde National from 1789 to 1795. Between 1783 and 1791 he performed at the Concert Spirituel; he also played in the Opéra orchestra from 1791 to 1817 and was principal clarinettist in the Imperial Chapel (later the Royal Chapel) from 1807 until 1829. In 1814 he was made Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur.

Lefèvre taught at the Paris Conservatoire from its foundation (1795) until 1824. Many of his pupils became well-known performers and composers including César Jannsen, Claude-Gabriel Péchignier, Claude François Buteux and Bernhard Crusell. His thorough clarinet method (1802) was used there for many years, and translated into German and Italian. He was the first to use the now standard range from e to c'''' and trill fingerings from e to e''', and played with the reed against the upper lip. His compositions include concertos, symphonies concertantes and chamber music, all of which use the clarinet prominently. Lefèvre noted in his method that he had the Parisian maker Jean-Jacques Baumann add a c♯'/g♯'' key to the standard five-keyed clarinet; this happened in about 1790, although the fingering chart in the method was intended for a five-key instrument. It was added to clarinets during the early 19th century by the use of a pillar attached to a metal base by Baumann, Simiot and other French makers.

It is not known whether Lefèvre was related to the woodwind maker François Lefèvre (d 1856) or to Lefèvre of Nantes, a manufacturer of clarinet mouthpieces during the first half of the 19th century.

WORKS

most published in Paris

Vocal: Vive le roi, 3vv; Canon; Les frères La Rochejaquelin, 1v, pf; La ronde anglaise

Orch: 7 cl concs., nos.4, 6 ed. S. Dudley (Paris, 1975); 2 symphonies concertantes, solo cl, bn (after 1801), lost; Symphonie concertante, solo ob, cl, bn (after 1801), lost

Wind band: many minor works, incl. marches, Pas de manoeuvre, Hymne à la victoire

Chbr: 3 airs variés, cl; at least 6 qts, cl, vn, va, b, no.4 ed. D. Harman (Monteux, 1986); at least 6 trios, 2 cl, bn, 1 pubd (Zürich, 1974); at least 54 duos in 9 sets, 2 cl, 6 pubd (Molenaar, 1966); 6 duo concertants, ed. G. Dobrée, op.9, nos.1–2 (London, 1988); 6 duos, ed. J. Lancelot (Paris, 1976); 12 petits duos très faciles, 2 cl, in 2 sets, as 6 petits duos (Paris, *c*1970), 6 petits duos faciles (Paris, 1995); 80 airs en duo in 2 bks, 2 cl; 6 duos in 2 sets, cl, bn; 3 sonates, cl, bc, op.12, 3 ed. G. Dobrée (Oxford, 1987); 12 sonates from the Méthode de clarinette, no.3 ed. E. Borrel (Geneva, 1951), no.5 ed. R. Viollier (Geneva, 1949), no.6 ed. P. Harris (London, 1988), no.7 ed. F. Robert (Paris, 1973), no.9 ed. P. Harris (London, 1988), 5 Sonatas ed. P. Harris (Oxford, 1988), 2 Sonatas ed. H. Ruf (Mainz, 1987); Sonata, vn, b (Paris, 1923)

Pedagogical: Méthode de clarinette (Paris, 1802/R), incl. 12 sonatas, cl, bc

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; PierreH; Waterhouse-LangwillI

F.J. Fétis: 'Nécrologie, Notice sur J.X. Lefèvre', Revue musicale, vi/17 (1829), 397–9

F.G. Rendall: The Clarinet (London, 1954, rev. 3/1971 by P. Bate)

L.V. Youngs: Jean Xavier Lefèvre: his Contributions to the Clarinet and Clarinet Playing (diss., Catholic U., Washington DC, 1970)

J.J. Estock: A Biographical Dictionary of Clarinetists born before 1800 (diss., U. of Iowa, 1972)

D. Harman: Six Quartets for Clarinet, Violin, Viola and Cello, by Jean Xavier Lefèvre (1763–1829) (diss., U. of Rochester, 1974)

A.R. Rice: 'Clarinet Fingering Charts, 1732–1816', GSJ, xxxvii (1984), 16–41

J. Jeltsch: '"Baumann à Paris" ... présentation d'un jeu de clarinettes et éléments biographiques', Larigot, xvi (1995), 18–27

ALBERT R. RICE/FRÉDÉRIC ROBERT

Lefèvre d'Etaples, Jacques. See FABER STAPULENSIS, JACOBUS.

Leffloth, Johann Matthias [Löffeloth, J. Matthäus] (b Nuremberg, bap. 6 Feb 1705; d Nuremberg, bur. 2 Nov 1731). German organist and composer. Leffloth was the son of Johann Matthias Leffloth, organist at St Margaretha in Nuremberg, from whom he received his first musical training; he probably also received some instruction from W.H. Pachelbel. Some time after 1722 he became organist at St Leonhard. Schubart presents the only noteworthy biographical sketch, an extravagant account which lauds Leffloth as a genius of marked musical individuality, particularly in the Adagio, who might have changed the course of music but for his early death.

Leffloth's tonal and thematic materials are firmly rooted in Baroque tradition, but his keyboard style frequently calls for hand crossing and a degree of dexterity unusual for this period. Although he is often mentioned as a composer of keyboard concertos, only two of his works designated concerto remain, both written for solo violin and obbligato keyboard. They are more properly considered as early duo sonatas rather than as keyboard concertos in the usual sense. A sonata for viola da gamba and obbligato keyboard published in Handel's collected works, vol.xlviii, has often been attributed to Leffloth (also ed. in HM, cxii, 1953). The title-page of the manuscript (in D-Bsb) indicates Leffloth as composer; Handel's name has been added in pencil and then crossed out by a different hand. Einstein described another manuscript in Darmstadt to which Leffloth's name has been added below Handel's, but he stated that this is a copy by Christoph Graupner of an original Handel sonata. Leffloth's keyboard style is generally much more progressive than that revealed here, and the sonata should not be counted among his works.

WORKS

Raths wahl in Wehrd, cant., D-Nst (text only)

Divertimento musicale, consistente in una partita, hpd (Nuremberg, *c*1726)

Conc., F, vn/fl, hpd, *c*1730, Mbs; ed. in Karpel

Conc., D, vn/fl, hpd, *c*1734, Bsb; ed. in NM, clxxxiv (1955)

Lost: Sonata e fuga, kbd (Nuremberg, *c*1726); 6 sonatas, vn/fl, bc (Nuremberg, *c*1729); Conc., G, hpd, ob, str, cited in Breitkopf catalogue (1763); 2 sonatas, G, A, vn, hpd, cited in Breitkopf catalogue (1763)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.F.D. Schubart: Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst (Vienna, 1806/R)

M. Seiffert: Geschichte der Klaviermusik (Leipzig, 1899/R)

A. Einstein: 'Zum 48. Bande der Handel-Ausgabe', SIMG, iv (1902–3), 170–72

H. Daffner: Die Entwicklung des Klavierkonzerts bis Mozart (Leipzig, 1906/R)

A.M. Karpel: A Comprehensive Project in Piano Performance and an Essay on the Works of Johann Matthias Leffloth (diss., U. of Iowa, 1974)

DOUGLAS A. LEE

Lefkowitz, Murray (b Mineola, NY, 20 April 1924). American musicologist. He studied the violin at the University of South California and received the BMus in 1950; the following year he took the MMus in musicology, and in 1963 the PhD under Raymond Kendall and Pauline Alderman with a dissertation on Lawes. Between 1951 and 1953 he studied with Jack Westrup and Egon Wellesz at St Antony's College, Oxford, He taught in the school systems of Los Angeles and Hollywood from 1954 to 1964 and was on the staff of San Fernando Valley State College from 1964 to 1967. He was professor of music, chairman of the departments of music history and musicology, and director of music at the graduate school of Boston University from 1967 to 1986. He retired in 1989.

Lefkowitz has performed and taught as a violinist and viola da gamba player. His scholarly interests are English music of the 16th and 17th-centuries; and the music of the English masque and theatre; he is particularly noted for his publications on William Lawes, including a biography and editions of his masques and consort music.

WRITINGS

'New Facts Concerning William Lawes and the Caroline Masque', ML, xl (1959), 324–33
William Lawes (London, 1960)
William Lawes: his Life and Works (diss., U. of Southern California, 1963)
'The Longleat Papers of Bulstrode Whitelocke: New Light on Shirley's Triumph of Peace', JAMS, xviii (1965), 42–60
'Matthew Locke at Exeter', The Consort, no.22 (1965), 5–16
'Shadwell and Locke's Psyche: the French Connection', PRMA, cvi (1979–80), 42–55

EDITIONS

William Lawes: Select Consort Music, MB, xxi (London, 1963, 2/1971)
Trois masques à la cour de Charles I d'Angleterre (Paris, 1970)

PAULA MORGAN

Le Flem, Paul (b Radon, Orne, 18 March 1881; d Tréguier, Côtes d'Armor, 31 July 1984). French composer. Of Breton origin, his earliest musical experiences were hymns and story-tellers heard in his grandmother's house. His first teacher was Joseph Farigoul, chief bandmaster to the French fleet at Brest. After an undistinguished sojourn at the Paris Conservatoire under Lavignac (1899–1902), he obtained the licence de lettres at the Sorbonne and left for Russia as a private tutor (1902–3). On his return he enrolled at the Schola Cantorum, where he took courses in composition (d'Indy), counterpoint (Roussel) and plainsong (Gastoué), remaining until 1909. His first important works date from this period: the Violin Sonata (1905), the Symphony in A (1906–7), Aucassin et Nicolette (1908) and the piano works Par landes, Par grèves, Avril and Vieux Calvaire (1907–10). After World War I his composing career marked time while he turned to other activities, as critic (Comoedia, 1921–37), choral director (Chanteurs de St Gervais, 1925–39), and teacher (counterpoint at the Schola Cantorum, 1921–39). His chance to resume composition came with the Paris World Fair of 1937 (La fête du printemps). For the next few years his work lay mainly in the theatre, with Le rossignol de St Malo (1938), La clairière des fées (1943) and La magicienne de la mer (1946), but from 1958 onwards he returned to symphonic forms, including Symphonies nos.2 (1956–8), 3 (1967) and 4 (1971–4) and the Concertstück for violin and orchestra (1965). The onset of blindness prevented him from completing more than three of his Preludes for orchestra (1975).

Over a period of nearly 80 years, Le Flem's work evolved from an aesthetic blending d'Indy's formal rigour with a harmonic language steeped in a modality inherited from Fauré and Debussy, towards a more freely tonal language, the formal aspect of which favoured a series of sections which gradually excluded thematic repetition and development. In the second half of his career (1938–75) he increasingly used harmonies of superimposed 4ths, the language constantly oscillating between a modal diatonicism based essentially on pentatonic scales and a pronounced chromaticism. The scenery, scents, stories and legends of Brittany were deeply stamped on his entire output, yet Le Flem rarely used authentic folk material, preferring to recreate his own images of a reinvented folk culture.

WORKS

STAGE

Endymion et Séléné (légende lyrique, 1, Le Flem), 1903; Aucassin et Nicolette (chantefable, Le Flem), 1908; Kercado (ballet), 1933; Macbeth (mimodrame after W. Shakespeare, incid music), 1935; Le rossignol de St Malo (fantaisie lyrique, 1, Gandrey-Réty), 1938; La clairière des fées (fantaisie lyrique, 1, F. Divoire), 1943; La magicienne de mer (légende lyrique, 1, J. Bruyr), 1946; Dionysos (incid music), 1948; La maudite (op, 2, Le Flem), 1967–70

ORCHESTRAL

En mer, 1901; Sym., A, 1906–7; Les voix du large, 1911; Fantaisie, pf, orch, 1913; Danses, 1912, orch 1919; Pour les morts, 1912, orch 1919; 7 pièces enfantines, n.d.; Le village, 1943; Hommage aux frères Lumière (1955), Impromptu (1956), Sym. no.2, 1956–8; Jeux de mouettes, 1957; Concertstück, vn, orch, 1965; Sym no.3, 1967; Sym no.4, 1971–4; 7 préludes (unfinished, 1975)

VOCAL

6 chants populaires grecs, 1902; Caïn (cant., Le Flem), 1902; Mandoline, Soleils couchants (P. Verlaine), 1v, pf, 1904; Ariettes Oubliée (P. Verlaine), 1v, pf, 1905; Chanson triste d'un conte (G. Kerjean), 1v, pf, 1905; Crépuscule d'Armor (Le Flem), female chorus, orch, 1908; Tu es petrus, chorus, org, 1909; Le grillon du foyer (D. Thaly), 1v, pf, 1911; Clair de lune (L. Even), 1v, pf, 1911; La neige (Even), chorus, 1912; La procession (Even), chorus, 1912; Vray Dieu qui m'y confortera (anon.), chorus, 1912; Invocation (Even), 1v, orch, 1912; Lamento, chorus, 1920; Paysage, chorus, 1923; 5 chansons de Croisade, 1v, pf, 1923; La fête du printemps, female chorus, orch, 1937; In paradisum, chorus, 1942; Je chante par couverture (C. de Pisan), 1v, pf/hp, 1946; Sui-je, sui-je, sui-je belle? (E. Deschamps), 1v, pf/hp, 1946; Le doigt dans l'eau: courir sur un miroir (B. Péret), 1v, pf, 1955; Morven le Gaëlique (M. Jacob), 5v, fl, ob, cl, bn, va, pf, 1963; Hommage à Rameau, chorus, 1964; various Breton folksongs for chorus

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

Rêverie grise, vn/vc, pf, 1901; Pièce, str qt, 1903; Sonata, vn, pf, 1905; Par landes, 1907; Par grèves, pf 1907; Claire de lune sous bois, 1909; Danse désuète, hp, 1909; Pièce lente, org, 1909; Pf Qnt, 1910; Vieux Calvaire, pf, 1910; Le chant des genêts, pf, 1910; Avril, pf, 1910; 7 pièces enfantines, pf, 1912; Pièce, fl, vc, 1925; Pièce, hn, pf, 1952; Pour la main droite, pf, 1961

FILM AND RADIO SCORES

Les paralytiques volent (légende radiophonique, H. Pollès), 1936; Le grand jardinier de France: Lenôtre (film, J. Tedesco), 1942; Tess d'Urberville (radio), 1948; La folie de Lady Macbeth (radio, M. Maeterlinck), 1949; Côte de granit rose (film, J. Fajolles), 1954

Principal publisher: Lemoine

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Coeuroy: La musique française moderne (Paris, 1924)
P. Landormy: La musique française après Debussy (Paris, 1943)
G. Bernard-Krauss: Hundert Jahre französischer Musikgeschichte in Leben und Werk Paul Le Flems (Frankfurt, 1993)
P. Gonin: Esthétique de l'oeuvre de Paul Le Flem de 1905 à 1920 (Lyon, 1994)

PHILIPPE GONIN

Le Franc, Martin. See MARTIN LE FRANC.

Le Froid de Méreaux. See MÉREAUX family.

Le Gallienne, Dorian (Léon Marlois) (b Melbourne, 19 April 1915; d Melbourne, 27 July 1963). Australian composer and critic. His father was French, and his mother Australian. He studied composition at Melbourne University Conservatorium and at the RCM (1938–9). In 1951, as a British Council Commonwealth Jubilee Music Scholar, he returned to England to study with Gordon Jacob. In 1950 he became music critic for Melbourne's Argus and in 1957 for The Age. His career was marred by poor health, from 1951 seriously affecting his heart, but he continued to compose. He was subject to diverse influences: the English lyrical style popular in Australian instrumental music of the 1930s, light French wit and buoyancy, and the bitonality of early Stravinsky and later Bartók. This eclecticism is evident in the engaging Sinfonietta and the Symphony, a work of impressive drive and rigorous intellectual argument which Covell believed to be 'the most accomplished and purposive symphony written by an Australian'. From 1961 to his death Le Gallienne was working on a second symphony; only the first movement, known as the Symphonic Study, was completed. Its material, with its sparse ascetic lines, tonal friction, sharp colour and thin texture, shows the new direction in which he was moving.

Le Gallienne also wrote a number of significant film and TV scores. His film music is an important part of the resurgence of the Australian film industry. His first film score, for Tim Burstall's The Prize (1959), won a bronze medal at the Venice Film Festival of 1960. The Dance of the Angels (1962), The Crucifixion (1962) and the children's TV series Sebastian and the Sausages demonstrate a confident, eclectic style perfectly matched to the filmed images.

WORKS
(selective list)

Nocturne, pf, 1937; Sonata, fl, 1943; Sonata, vn, 1945; Contes héraldiques (ballet), 1947; Concert Ov., E♭, 1952; Sym., 1953; Voyageur (ballet), 1954; Duo, vn, va, 1956; Sinfonietta, 1956; Trio, ob, vn, va, 1957; 4 Divine poems (J. Donne), 1v, pf, 1961
Film scores, incid music

MSS in La Trobe Library, AUS-Msl
Principal publisher: Allans

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Covell: Australia's Music: Themes of a New Society (Melbourne, 1967), 160ff
J. Murdoch: Australia's Contemporary Composers (Melbourne, 1972)
N. Nickson: 'Dorienne Le Gallienne', Australian Composition in the Twentieth Century: a Symposium, ed. F. Callaway and D. Tunley (Melbourne, 1976), 67–80
J. Brownrigg: 'Seeking The Prize: Some Background to the Film Music of Dorian Le Gallienne', One Hand on the Manuscript, ed. N. Brown and others (Canberra, 1995), 95–106

NOEL NICKSON/JEFF BROWNRIGG

Legány, Dezső (b Szombathely, 19 Jan 1916). Hungarian musicologist. After completing his studies at the University of Pécs (LLD 1937) he studied with Kodály, Viski, Bartha and Szabolcsi at the Liszt Academy of Music, where he began teaching and was professor (1951–8). He was later professor at the Béla Bartók Conservatory of Music (1958–73). He was also a lecturer at the Free University courses (1954–8) and a teacher at the Bartók High School (from 1958) before being appointed to the Institute of Musicology of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1972), where he was head of the department of Hungarian music history (1973–83). His main areas of research are Hungarian music history and European Romanticism; he has written extensively and has translated much of the west European and Russian literature. In 1973 he took the kandidátus degree with a dissertation on Erkel's works in their historical context and in 1981 he gained the DMusSc. He joined the musicological committee of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1973) and became a board member of the Liszt Society (1974). In 1982 he was elected an honorary member of the American Liszt Society.

Legány's wife Erzsébet Hegyi (b Nagykanizsa, 4 Nov 1927) studied with Kodály, Bárdos, Forrai and Gárdonyi at the Liszt Academy of Music, where she has taught harmony and solfège from 1951; she is also visiting professor in harmony and form analysis at the Zoltán Kodály Education Institute for foreign music teachers in Kecskemét (opened in 1975), and in 1971 began giving regular summer courses at the Kodály Institute in Wellesley, Massachusetts. Her writings include a two-volume collection of examples from Bach's cantatas (Budapest, 1971–4), two books on solfège according to the concept of Kodály (Kecskemét, 1975 and Budapest, 1979) and Énektanárképzés Kodály pedagógiai művei alapján ('The training of music teachers, based on Kodály's works', Budapest, 1977).

WRITINGS

'Népi és egyéni műalkotás a zenetörténetben' [Popular and individual creation in the history of music], MTA nyelv- és irodalomtudományi osztályának közleményei, iv (1953), 294–9
'Tématípusok Bartók utolsó műveiben' [Thematic patterns in Bartók's last works], Zenetudományi tanulmányok, iii (1955), 505–17 [with Eng. and Ger. summaries]
Henry Purcell (Budapest, 1959, enlarged 2/1981)
A magyar zene krónikája: zenei művelődésünk ezer éve dokumentumokban [Chronicle of Hungarian music: 1000 years of documentation on musical culture] (Budapest, 1962)
'A Zeneakadémia születése' [The founding of the Music Academy in Budapest], Írások Erkel Ferencről és a Magyar zene Korábbi Századairól, ed. F. Bónis (Budapest, 1968), 75–104
'Erkel és Liszt Zeneakadémiája' [Erkel's and Liszt's Academy of Music], Szabolcsi Bence 70. születésnapjára, ed. F. Bónis (Budapest, 1969), 247–66; (1973), 103–13 [with Eng. and Ger. summaries]
'Erkel Hunyadi lászlója', Magyar zene, xi (1970), 97–108
Erkel Ferenc művei és korabeli történetük[Erkel's works and their contemporary history] (diss., Hungarian Academy of Sciences, 1973; Budapest, 1975)
'Kodály, Zoltán', Sohlmans musiklexikon, ed. H. Åstrand (Stockholm, 2/1975–9)
Liszt Ferenc Magyarországon, 1869–1873 [Liszt in Hungary, 1869–73] (Budapest, 1976; Eng. trans., 1983 as Ferenc Liszt and his Country, 1869–1873)
Kodály Zoltán levelei [Letters of Zoltán Kodály] (Budapest, 1982)
'Die jüngere musikalische Vergangenheit von Budapest', Život i delo Petra Konjovića: Belgrade 1983, 29–36 [with Eng. summary]
ed.: Franz Liszt: unbekannte Presse und Briefe aus Wien, 1822–1866 (Vienna, 1984)
Liszt Ferenc Magyarországon, 1874–1886 [Franz Liszt in Hungary, 1874–86] (Budapest, 1986; Eng. trans., 1992 as Ferenc Liszt and his Country, 1874–1886)
'Travaux préliminaires en vue d'une histoire musicale de la Hongrie', Etudes Finno-Ougriennes, xxi (1989), 119–32

VERA LAMPERT

Legar [Legare, Legard], Mr. See LAGUERRE, JOHN.

Légat de Furcy [Furci, Fursy; Legal Defurcy], Antoine (b Maubeuge, *c*1740; d after 1789). French composer, harpsichordist and organist. Directed towards an ecclesiastical career, he studied philosophy in Paris, where he also took lessons in harmony and keyboard playing from Charles Noblet, befriended Rameau and took part in the concerts of the Prince of Conti. Between 1759 and 1769 he served as organist at St-Germain-le-Vieil. He was organist at the Carmelite monastery in the Place Maubert from 1770 at least until 1787, by which time he had also become organist at Sainte-Croix-de-la-Bretonnerie. He was primarily active as a singing and harpsichord teacher and as a composer of charming keyboard pieces and of many light cantatilles and ariettes. Gerber, who wrote of him in 1790 as still living, praised the taste of his earlier works, which he attributed to the influence of the Prince of Conti, but which he found lacking in his more recent efforts. Légat de Furcy also attempted a career as a theatrical composer, but none of his several operas was performed or published. According to Choron and Fayolle, he collaborated with La Borde in his Essai sur la musique (1780), and the rather long notice of him in that work may be autobiographical.

WORKS

all printed works published in Paris

VOCAL

Les soirées de Choisy le roy, chansons, 3 vols. (1762, 1764, n.d.)
Mes loisirs, ariettes, etc (1774)
At least 13 cantatilles; ariettes with insts; numerous airs pubd singly, in Mercure de France (1757–78) and in contemporary anthologies
Solfèges (n.d.); Seconds solfèges (1784); Nouvelles solfèges (1787)
Ops, all unperf., lost: Le philtre (pastorale, 3, Poisinet de Sivry); Le saut de Leucade ou Les désespérés (oc, Mentelle); Palmire ou Le prix de la beauté (oc, after Voltaire); Les rendez-vous (oc); Le jardinier de Sidon (comédie, 2, Pleinchesne); Apollon et Daphné (tragédie, 3, Saint Marc), inc.

INSTRUMENTAL

Les leçons de Minerve, ariettes, hpd, 2 vols. (1779, 1785)
Ovs. to Prati's L'école de la jeunesse, Grétry's Andromaque and Evénements imprévus, arr. pf/hpd, vn ad lib
Airs, arr. kbd/other insts, in contemporary anthologies
6 sonates en duo, 2 fl, lost; pf pieces, MS, cited by FétisB

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Choron-FayolleD; FétisB; GerberL; GerberNL; La BordeE
Tablettes de renommée des musiciens(Paris, 1785/R)
G. Servières: Documents inédits sur les organistes français (Paris, 1924), 34–5
B. Gérard: 'La musique dans les églises de la Cité aux XVIIo et XVIIIo siècles', RMFC, xvi (1976), 153–86, esp. 168, 170

ROGER J.V. COTTE

Legato [ligato] (It.: 'bound'; Fr. lié; Ger. gebunden). Of successive notes in performance, connected without any intervening silence of articulation. In practice, the connection or separation of notes is relative, and achieved through the presence or absence of emphasis, ACCENT and attack, as much as silences of articulation; degrees of connection and separation vary from legatissimo (representing the closest degree of connection), tenuto, portamento, legato, portato, non legato, mezzo-staccato, STACCATO (the natural antonym of legato), to staccatissimo, and some of these terms have connotations going beyond simple degrees of connection or separation.

In 20th-century notation, legato is generally indicated by means of the SLUR across a succession of notes; the beginnings and ends of slurs are now generally marked by articulations (of bowing or tonguing in string and wind instruments, and of phrasing in keyboard instruments). The slur often, however, had a vaguer general meaning of 'legato' in the 18th and early 19th centuries. Successions of notes in modern notation are seldom left without any indication of articulation, but if they are, the performer will normally presume that a legato style of playing is called for.

This notion, that legato playing represents an 'ordinary' style of performance rather than a special effect, perhaps originated in the cavatina style of early 19th-century Italian opera and its imitation in Romantic instrumental music, or before that in the cantabile slow-movement styles of the 18th century. In earlier centuries, both legato and staccato styles of playing were normally available as special effects, the normal style of playing and singing often being something between the two: in medieval and Renaissance music, the ligature seems sometimes to have been a prescription of a special legato effect. The degree of legato to be used also depended on repertory and instrument: for example, Diruta (Il transilvano, Venice, 1593, 1609) distinguished between a legato organ style and a detached harpsichord style for dance music. For Baroque and early Classical fast movements, a non-legato style was regarded as usual, whereas the legato was normally reserved for long notes and slow movements (C.P.E. Bach, Versuch, 1753; Quantz, Versuch, 1752, etc.; this style of performance is still called for by Türk, Clavierschule, 1804). In some 18th-century music, slurs over arpeggiated chords imply a kind of legatissimo, where all notes are to be held down until the chord changes.

For translations from relevant early authorities, see Donington; for useful general advice on legato and staccato in early music, see Badura-Skoda, Ferguson and Keller.

See also ARTICULATION AND PHRASING; ARTICULATION MARKS and BOW, §II, 3.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Keller: Phrasierung und Artikulation (Kassel, 1955; Eng. trans., 1965, 2/1973)
E. and P. Badura-Skoda: Mozart-Interpretation (Vienna and Stuttgart, 1957; Eng. trans., 1962/R as Interpreting Mozart on the Keyboard)
R. Donington: The Interpretation of Early Music (London, 1963, 5/1992)
H. Ferguson: Keyboard Interpretation (London, 1975)
C. Brown: Classical and Romantic Performing Practice (Oxford, 1998)

GEOFFREY CHEW

Legatura (It.). See LIGATURE (i).

Legendary [passionary] (from Lat. legendarius; passionarius, passionale, liber passionalis). A liturgical book of the Western Church containing the Lives of the Saints to be read on their feast days at the night Office (Matins). Not always intended for liturgical use, portions of the lives could be omitted; the texts are often divided into 3, 6, or 9 lessons. The legendary is not to be confused with the martyrology, an expanded calendar with only brief notices of the saint's names and places of death or martyrdom. See also LITURGY AND LITURGICAL BOOKS, §II, 3(v).

Légende (Fr.). A piece intended to illustrate a legend, or to have a 'legendary' (i.e. narrative) character. In the 19th century the term was one of the many titles used for the character-piece. The most famous examples are Liszt's two légendes entitled St François d'Assise: la prédication aux oiseaux and St François de Paule marchant sur les flots (1862–3), composed for piano but arranged for orchestra soon afterwards; each of these has a preface recounting the legend illustrated by the music, and in their orchestral guises the pieces are effectively short symphonic poems. In most légendes, however, such as the two in Paderewski's pieces op.16, no specific legend is indicated. Schumann used the expression 'im legenden Ton' for the central section of the first movement of his C major Phantasie for piano; here the varied repetitions of a chant-like theme in anapaestic rhythm are probably designed to suggest the intoning of an ancient fable.

KENNETH L. HAMILTON

Le Gendre, Jean (fl 1533–57). French singer, composer and theorist. He was a member of the royal chapel of François I and Henri II of France. Glarean called him 'Antuacensis', which may refer to his place of origin.

With the exception of Laudate Dominum, a motet appearing in Glarean's Dodecachordon (modern edition in MSD, vi/2, p.356), other compositions by Le Gendre are found only in Parisian editions. Between 1533 and 1547 Attaingnant printed five of his chansons in various collections and Du Chemin brought out eight more between 1549 and 1557. His many French settings of psalms and canticles, more syllabic than the chansons, were printed by Fezandat in 1552–3. A treatise, Brieve introduction en la musique tant au plain chant que chose faites, published by Attaingnant in 1545, is apparently lost. Le Gendre must have been well known in French circles by the middle of the 16th century, for Rabelais in the Quart livre listed him among the notable musicians, and in the Discours (1558) Gentillet praised the sweet sound of his motets.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Lesure and G. Thibault: 'Bibliographie des éditions musicales publiées par Nicolas du Chemin (1549–1576)', AnnM, i (1953), 269–373; iv (1956), 251–4; vi (1958–63), 403

D. Heartz: Pierre Attaingnant, Royal Printer of Music (Berkeley, 1969)

CLEMENT A. MILLER

Léger (Fr.: 'light'). As a tempo designation, particularly in its adverbial form légèrement (or légérement), a term widely used in the early 18th century by French composers. J.G. Walther (1732) defined it as a mark of expression to indicate a light performing style, but there can be little doubt that François Couperin, who used it along with très légérement, d'une légéreté modérée, d'une légéreté gracieuse and d'une légéreté tendre, regarded it as a fairly precise indication of tempo as well as of mood. So did Rousseau (1768), who placed it between gai and vite as the equivalent of the Italian vivace.

For bibliography see TEMPO AND EXPRESSION MARKS.

DAVID FALLOWS

Leger [ledger] line (Fr. ligne postiche, ligne supplémentaire; Ger. Hilfslinie, Nebenlinie; It. linea d'aiuto). In Western notation a short line drawn above or below the staff for notes that are too high or too low to be printed on the staff itself. Leger lines are occasionally found in manuscripts containing plainchant or early polyphony, but as clefs were placed on any line of the staff in the Middle Ages, scribes were usually careful to see that leger lines were unnecessary. M.A. Cavazzoni's Recerchari, motetti, canzoni for organ (1523) is an early example of their extensive use (see illustration).

Leger lines in M.A. Cavazzoni's 'Recerchari, motetti, canzoni' (1523)

Legge, Walter (b London, 1 June 1906; d St Jean, Cap Ferrat, 22 March 1979). English music administrator and writer. He received no formal musical training but from 1925 spent all his time attending rehearsals and musical performances and acquiring a fine ear, understanding of style and unusual linguistic prowess (Frank Walker's Hugo Wolf draws on Legge's research in Austria) as well as a capacious knowledge of the repertory. In 1927 the HMV record company engaged him to write literary material in connection with its classical records. Legge persuaded HMV to let him form subscription societies for producing limited recorded editions: sets of Haydn's string quartets, Sibelius's music, Wolf's songs and Beethoven's piano sonatas played by Schnabel were among his successes. In 1932 he formed the London Lieder Club to build audiences for masterpieces of German song; from then until 1937 he was a deputy music critic of the Manchester Guardian. In 1938–9 he was Beecham's assistant artistic director at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden. During World War II he was in charge of ENSA concerts for troops and war workers.

Throughout these years Legge had worked for the Gramophone Company as manager for artists and repertory. In 1945 he toured Europe securing outstanding talent and in the following 19 years produced recorded performances of opera, song, orchestral and chamber music that have become classic examples of the medium: Columbia's 1951 Bayreuth recordings, the Tosca conducted by de Sabata, Verdi's Falstaff and Strauss's Der Rosenkavalier conducted by Karajan, Callas's many records, piano music played by Dinu Lipatti, the violin legacy of Ginette Neveu, the operetta series involving Elisabeth Schwarzkopf (Legge's second wife – he had formerly been married to the English mezzo-soprano Nancy Evans), and many records conducted by Klemperer, are particularly connected with Legge as producer.

Legge always worked to raise standards of musical execution and interpretative artistry. In 1945 he formed and coached unremittingly the Philharmonia String Quartet, then the eponymous string orchestra, and finally the Philharmonia Orchestra, an elite whose virtuosity transformed British concert life, at first under Beecham, later under Karajan, Cantelli, Toscanini, Klemperer and Giulini. He formed the Philharmonia Chorus in 1957, trained by Wilhelm Pitz, initially for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony under Klemperer; this too was immediately recognized as a choir without peer. Legge was from 1946 an associate director of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde in Vienna; from 1958 to 1963 he was a director of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden. In 1964 he tried to dissolve the Philharmonia Orchestra and Chorus for commercial reasons, but it immediately re-formed on a self-governing basis as the New Philharmonia (the 'New' was dropped in 1977). He left his record company, by then EMI Ltd, to live on the Continent, whence he continued to promote concerts and recitals and to produce records for other companies, as well as to write occasional articles about music. A man who set high standards and held forceful, uncompromising views, he did much to benefit standards of performance and especially recording in the post-war decades.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Dean: The Theatre at War (London, 1956)
V. Newman: Ernest Newman: a Memoir by his Wife (London, 1963)
W. Mann: 'Walter Legge (1906–79)', Gramophone, lvi (1978–9), 1875–6
E. Schwarzkopf: On and Off the Record: a Memoir of Walter Legge (London and New York, 1982)
A. Sanders: Walter Legge: a Discography (Westport, CT, 1984)
A. Sanders, ed.: Walter Legge: Words and Music (London, 1998) [collection of correspondence, reviews and other writings]

WILLIAM S. MANN/R

Leggero [leggiero] (It.: 'light'). A performance direction which belongs characteristically to the 19th century and is also found in the adverbial forms leggermente and leggiermente, occasionally misspelt by Beethoven leggeramente (op.120) and leggieramente (opp.47, 74 and 95). Normally it called for a light, detached style of playing in rapid passages. But it can be interpreted more loosely: legato passages are marked leggeramente in the 25th of Beethoven's Diabelli Variations; the forte opening of the scherzo in Beethoven's E♭ Quartet op.74 is marked leggieramente; and Mendelssohn has leggero simultaneously with forte and legato in the finale of his G minor Piano Concerto. Verdi used the superlative form leggerissimo, e.g. for Alfredo in the 'Brindisi' from La traviata and for Preziosilla in Act 2 of La forza del destino; Elgar used the form leggierissimo in the second movement of his Cello Concerto.

See also TEMPO AND EXPRESSION MARKS.

DAVID FALLOWS

Leggiadro (It.: 'pretty', 'graceful'). A performance instruction found as early as the 18th century. J.G. Walther (Musicalisches Lexicon, 1732) gave for leggiodro (presumably a misprint) and leggiadramente (the adverbial form) the entry: 'sehr schön, über die Massen annehmlich, mit einer artigen Manier' ('very beautiful, exceptionally charming, with a pleasing manner').

Leghorn (Eng.). See LIVORNO.

Legiensis, Johannes. See GALLICUS, JOHANNES.

Leginska [Liggins], Ethel (b Hull, 13 April 1886; d Los Angeles, 26 Feb 1970). American pianist, composer and conductor of English birth. She studied at the Hoch Conservatory in Frankfurt, with Leschetizky in Vienna for three years, and in Berlin. She adopted the name Leginska early in her professional career, and became widely known as the 'Paderewski of woman pianists'. She made her official début in London at the age of 16 and then gave concert tours in Europe before moving to the USA in 1913, where she achieved her greatest success in the 1916–17 season. A great favourite with the public, she was noted for her demanding programmes and her innovations, such as playing an entire Chopin programme without an interval. In 1914 she began to compose, studying with Bloch in 1918. Her relatively small output includes songs, piano and chamber music, symphonic poems, a fantasy for piano and orchestra and two operas. It is to her credit that Leginska was able to secure performances of her larger works at a time when women's compositions were rarely heard in public.

In 1926 Leginska retired as a pianist to concentrate on composition and conducting. After studying conducting with Goossens and Robert Heger in 1923 she established herself as one of the first female conductors, directing major orchestras in Munich, Paris, London and Berlin in 1924, and New York and the Hollywood Bowl in 1925. She also conducted the Boston PO, the Boston Woman's SO and the Woman's SO of Chicago. In 1930–31 she conducted at leading European opera houses, and in 1935 directed the première of her one-act opera Gale by the Chicago City Opera.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Neuls-Bates: 'Leginska, Ethel', Notable American Women, ed. E.T. James, J.W. James and P.S. Boyer (Cambridge, MA, 1971, suppl. 1980)

CAROL NEULS-BATES

Legley, Vic(tor) (b Hazebrouck, 18 June 1915; d Ostende, 28 Nov 1994). Belgian composer. His early musical studies were in Ypres; in 1934 he went to the Brussels Conservatory, where he won prizes in counterpoint, fugue, chamber music and viola (1937). After his demobilization in 1941 he became a composition pupil of Absil and took the Belgian second Prix de Rome in 1943. He played the viola in a string quartet and in the Belgian radio orchestra (1936–48), activities which left their mark on his composition. On leaving the orchestra he became music producer for the Flemish department of Belgian radio; from 1962–76 he was head of serious music for the third programme, and this position enabled him to propagate new music from Belgium and elsewhere. He was also active as a teacher: he was appointed professor of harmony at the Brussels Conservatory in 1949, and of composition in 1959; he became professor of composition and analysis at the Chapelle Musicale Reine Elisabeth in 1950, retiring in 1980. Legley was made a member in 1965 and president in 1972 of the Belgian Royal Academy.

From 1980–90 he was president of SABAM (the Société Belge des Auteurs, Compositeurs et Editeurs). Although clearly influenced by Absil in his early music, Legley steadily developed an individual style in which highly charged emotion is kept in check by firm technique and refined taste. Most of his pieces are instrumental: his string quartets contain some of his best work, and the eight symphonies constitute landmarks in his career. The fourth and fifth were commissioned by the Festival of Flanders. Some of his works (e.g. La cathédrale d'acier) have been frequently performed outside Belgium; the Violin Concerto no.2 was the set work used in the finals of the 1968 Queen Elisabeth Competition. After 1952 he made particular efforts to reach the public, but without sacrificing his dignity and his individuality. Typical of this approach are Middagmuziek, the Serenade for strings, the Kleine carnavalouverture and La cathédrale d'acier. Legley often spoke and wrote in defence of Belgian music, sat on several competition juries and also represented his country at conferences and festivals. In 1987 he was awarded an honorary doctorate by the Brussels Vrije Universiteit.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Sym. Variations on an Old Flemish Song, 1941; 6 syms.: 1942, 1947, 1953, 1964, 1965, 1976; Sym. no.7, sym. band, 1988; Sym. no.8, 1993; Suite op.18, 1944; Symphonie en miniature, 1945; Vn Conc. no.1, 1947; Pf Conc., 1952; Kleine carnavalouverture,

1954; Timp Conc., 1955; Serenade, str, 1957; La cathédrale d'acier, 1958; Ouverture pour une comedie de Goldoni, 1958; Hp Conc., 1966; Vn Conc. no.2, 1966; Paradise Regained, 1967; Espaces, str, 1970; Va Conc., 1971; Conc. d'automne, op.85, a sax, orch, 1974; Conc. grosso, op.87, vn, a sax, str, 1976; Before Endeavours Fade, 1977; Feest-ouverture, 1978

Chbr: 5 str qts: 1941, 1947, 1956, 1963, 1970; Sextet, pf, wind qnt, 1945; Middagmuziek, fl, cl, bn, hn, str qt, db, 1948; Conc., 13 insts, 1948; Serenade, 2 vn, pf, 1954, rev. fl, vn, pf, 1957; 5 Miniatures, sax qt, 1958; 2 hp suites, 1968, 1972; Pf Qt no.1, 1973; several sonatas, other chbr and solo inst works

Vocal: The Veil, 1v, str qt, *c*1945; De boer die sterft [The Dying Peasant] (radio drama, H. Teirlinck), 1950; De gevallen vriend [The Fallen Friend] (J. de Haes), double chorus, 1951; La farce des deux nues (op, 4 scenes, H. Closson), 1939–63; Mythologie, op.82, S, pf, 1973; La terra e la morte, op.83 (C. Pavese), female chorus, 1974; Mijn gegeven woord, op.90 (H.C. Pernath), T, pf, 1976

Transcrs. for brass band

Principal publishers: Metropolis, CeBeDeM

MSS in B-Brtb

WRITINGS

'Muziek en radio', Mededelingen van de Koninklijke Vlaamse academie voor wetenschappen, letteren en schone kunsten van België, xxix/1 (1967)

'Actuele aspecten voor een compositieleer', Mededelingen van de Koninklijke Vlaamse academie voor wetenschappen, letteren en schone kunsten van België, xxxii/2 (1970)

'Muziek en traditie', Mededelingen van de Koninklijke Vlaamse academie voor wetenschappen, letteren en schone kunsten van België, xxxvi (1974)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CeBeDeM directory
R. Wangermée: Vic Legley (Brussels, 1953)
K. de Schrijver: Levende componisten uit Vlaanderen, ii (Antwerp, 1955)
Music in Belgium (Brussels, 1964)
C. Mertens: Hedendaagse muziek in België (Brussels, 1967)
C. Tessely: In hulde aan Victor Legley (Buren, 1980)

CORNEEL MERTENS/DIANA VON VOLBORTH-DANYS

Legnani, (Rinaldo) Luigi (b Ferrara, 7 Nov 1790; d Ravenna, 5 Aug 1877). Italian guitarist, instrument maker and composer. Although trained from his earliest years as an orchestral string player, Legnani devoted himself to singing and especially to the guitar. He made his début as a tenor in Ravenna in 1807, and appeared there again from 1820 to 1826 in operas by Rossini, Pacini and Donizetti. He launched his career as a concert guitarist in Milan in 1819. In 1822 he appeared in Vienna with such sensational success that he was considered the worthy successor to Mauro Giuliani (who had left Vienna in 1819 to return to Italy). This city received Legnani with much praise again in 1833 and 1839.

In the intervening years, besides touring Italy, Germany and Switzerland as a guitarist, Legnani struck up a friendship with Paganini, who considered him 'the leading player of the guitar'. They planned to play together as a duo in a series of accademie to be held in Turin (stipulating three contracts, for 7, 16 and 23 August 1836); but, probably owing to Paganini's poor state of health, these were cancelled by mutual agreement on 30 October that year (the rescissory deed is in US-Wc). Contrary to what some biographers have reported, there is as yet no evidence to affirm that Legnani and Paganini appeared together in public. In about 1850 Legnani retired to spend his remaining years in Ravenna constructing fine guitars and violins. His famous 'Legnani model' guitar, with a screw-adjusted neck, was widely copied by guitar makers in central Europe between about 1830 and 1880 (notably by J.G. Staufer of Vienna).

Legnani composed over 250 works, which were published principally by Ricordi (Milan), Cipriani (Florence), Artaria, Cappi & Diabelli, Leidesdorf, Weinberger (Vienna), André (Offenbach am Main), B. Schotts Söhne (Mainz), Meissonnier, Pacini and Richault (Paris). They include works for solo guitar (a method, fantasias, potpourris, capriccios, variations on well-known operatic themes, cavatinas etc.), duets for flute and guitar and a concerto for guitar and orchestra (of which only the parts for guitar, first violin, viola and bass have survived). Of particular interest are the Variations concertantes sur un thême original de Rossini op.28 for guitar and piano, composed in collaboration with Marcus Leidesdorf (1787–1840) and also published in a version for guitar and piano with string quartet accompaniment.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SchillingE
J. Zuth: 'Die Leipziger AMZ (1798–1848) als gitarristische Quelle', Die Gitarre, i (1919–20), 84–5, 102–4
R. Ferrari: 'Luigi Legnani', Der Gitarrefreund, xxvii (1926), 101–4, 117–20, 135–8; xxviii (1927), 7–10
R. Ferrari: Luigi Legnani (Modena, 1932)
D. Rossato: 'Luigi Rinaldo Legnani', Il Fronimo, vii/27 (1979), 5–15
D. Prefumo: 'L'attività concertistica di Luigi Legnani nei resoconti dei giornali dell'epoca', Il Fronimo, x/41 (1982), 8–23
G. Gazzelloni: Introduction to L. Legnani: Gran Studio op.60 (Heidelberg, 1990)
D.G. James: Luigi Rinaldo Legnani: his Life and Position in European Music of the Early Nineteenth Century (diss., U. of Arizona, 1994) [incl. edn of selections from 36 capricci op.20]

GIUSEPPE GAZZELLONI

Legni (It.). See WOODWIND INSTRUMENTS.

Legnica (Ger. Liegnitz). Town, now in Poland, ruled for part of the 17th century by GEORG RUDOLPH.

Legno (It.: 'wood'). Strumenti di legno, or simply legni, are woodwind instruments. In string-instrument playing COL LEGNO means setting the strings in motion with the bowstick. In some orchestral scores 'legno' denotes a woodblock.

Legouix, (Isidore) Edouard (b Paris, 1 April 1834; d Boulogne, Seine-et-Oise, 15 Sept 1916). French composer. His father was the founder of a Parisian publishing house whose management later passed to Edouard's brother Gustave (1843–1916) and Gustave's son Robert. Edouard studied at the Paris Conservatoire with Henri Reber (harmony) and Ambroise Thomas (composition), winning the premier prix for harmony in 1855 and an honourable mention in the Prix de Rome in 1860. He soon devoted himself to a career in light opera and operetta; his one-act Un Othello (1863) was the first of several successes. The craftsmanship of his works is notable and, according to Feschotte, some survived long after the composer's death in the French broadcast repertory. The operas tended to be fashionable and escapist; Clément and Larousse particularly noted the extravagance of the plot and incoherence of ideas in Les dernières grisettes.

WORKS

stage works first performed in Paris and printed works published in Paris, unless otherwise stated

Un Othello (?opérette, 1, C. Nuitter and A. Beaumont [A. Beaume]), Champs-Elysées, 1863, vs (?1863); Le lion de St-Marc (opéra-bouffe, 1, Nuitter and Beaumont), St-Germain, 24 Nov 1864 (1866); Ma fille (opérette, 1, A. Bouvier), Délassements-Comiques, 20 March 1866; Malbrough s'en va-t-en guerre [Act 2] (opéra-bouffon, 4, W. Busnach and P. Siraudin), Athénée, 13 Dec 1867, collab. Bizet, E. Jonas and Delibes

Le vengeur (opéra-bouffe, 1, Nuitter and Beaumont), Athénée, 20 Nov 1868, vs (1869); Deux portières pour un cordon (pochade, 1, Lucian [L. Dubuis and Lefèbvre]), Palais-Royal, 19 March 1869, vs (?c1869), collab. Hervé, Lecocq and G. Maurice; L'ours et l'amateur des jardins (bouffonerie musicale, 1, Busnach and Marquet), Bouffes-Parisiens, 1 Sept 1869, vs (1869); La tartane (opérette, 1), ? London, c1872, vs pubd as The Crimson Scarf (London, 1872)

Les dernières grisettes (opéra-bouffe, 3, Nuitter and Beaumont), Brussels, Fantaisies-Parisiennes, 12 Dec 1874; Le mariage d'une étoile (opérette, 1, V. Bernard and E. Grangé), Bouffes-Parisiens, 1 April 1876, vs (1876); Madame Clara, somnambule (folie, 1), Palais-Royal, March, 1877; Une nouvelle Cendrillon (opérette bouffe, 1, E. Adenis), 1885, vs (1885)

Unperf. [pubd in vs in Magasin des demoiselles]: Quinolette, c1870 (opérette, 1, P. Nac); La clef d'argent, c1870 (opérette, 1, Beaumont); La fée aux genêts (opérette)

Doubtful: Après la noce (1, P. Boisselot) [listed in StiegerO]

Other works: songs; pf works, many pubd

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; MGG1 (J. Feschotte)

F. Clément and P. Larousse: Dictionnaire lyrique, ou Histoire des opéras (Paris, 1867–81, 2/1897; ed. A. Pougin as Dictionnaire des opéras, 3/1905/R)

A. Wirsta: 'Un autographe inédit de Gabriel Fauré', Les sources en musicologie, ed. M. Huglo (Paris, 1981), 165–7

DAVID CHARLTON

Le Grand. A number of French 18th-century musicians bore this name (or 'Legrand'), and the habit of omitting first names makes it difficult to distinguish one from another. The best-known is Jean-Pierre Le Grand (b Tarbes, 8 Feb 1734; d Marseilles, 31 July 1809), organist and composer. A son of Pierre LeGrand, organist of Lescar Cathedral (Béarn), he left Bordeaux for Paris, where he was appointed organist of St Germain-des-Prés (1 April 1758). The eccentricities that seem to have characterized his work there may also have caused his wife, whom he married in 1765, to leave him and sue for separate maintenance (1776–7). In 1770 he left Paris to return to his 'own country'. Certain documents connect him with Montpellier Cathedral in 1779; in 1780 he went to Marseilles, where he remained until his death, serving as maître de musique at the opera and the Concert. His career was crowned by his election to the Academy of Marseilles (1801).

A premier livre of six sonatas for harpsichord by 'J.-P. Le Grand, m^e de clavecin & organiste de l'Abbaye de S. Germain-des-Prés', advertised in 1763, is almost certainly the work to which Leopold Mozart referred in a letter of 1 February 1764: 'M. Le Grand, a French harpsichordist, has completely abandoned his goût, and his sonatas are completely in our style'. No copy of the work has been found, nor has any of the other music attributed to Jean-Pierre Le Grand been located: orchestral music, motets, masses, the cantata L'hymne des Lys (1783) and choruses for Racine's Athalie (1792).

Leopold Mozart's reference to a 'Le Grand' has drawn more attention to the name than it might otherwise have received. Louis-Alexandre Le Grand (b ?Châlons-sur-Marne; d Paris, 30 Nov 1773) was a pupil of Daquin and his successor as organist of the convent of the Cordeliers (July 1772). He was also organist at St Côme (from before 1759), St Nicolas-des-Champs (c1761–5, again from 1771) and the Premonstratensians in rue de Sèvres. Either he or a Louis Le Grand, an organist living in the rue de Grenelle on 28 November 1741 (Laborde), was probably the Le Grand recommended as among the best harpsichord teachers in Paris by Pascal Taskin in a letter of 6 October 1765. Another Le Grand, an organist at Bordeaux, was one of the experts invited to examine the new organ in Angoulême Cathedral in 1786. According to Fleury, 'The canons, charmed by the personal relations which they had with M. Le Grand ... proposed that he should become their organist ... which he accepted'. Mathieu and Etienne LeGrand were active as king's musicians in 1765. A LeGrand performed organ concertos of his own on at least three occasions at the Concert Spirituel between February 1763 and April 1764; petits and grands motets by a LeGrand were given there between 1771 and 1773.

The only substantial work bearing the name of LeGrand is a set of six Pièces de clavecin en sonates avec accompagnement de violon (Paris, c1755–8), whose author is identified as organist of the abbey church of Sainte-Croix and the parochial church of St Rémy in Bordeaux. The music, certainly inspired by Mondonville's like-named collection of 1734, is of high quality with imaginative themes and an independent and active violin part which everywhere engages in imitative and canonic dialogue with the harpsichord. The LeGrand who composed L'amour à la mode, cantatille à voix seule avec symphonie (Paris, after 1754) was a harpsichord teacher living in the rue Geoffroy L'Angevin. Nothing in the style of the music prevents it from being by the composer of the Pièces de clavecin en sonates (RISM attributes both publications to Louis-Alexandre LeGrand); but a long, busy, one-movement sonata by 'Le Grand' in 20 sonate per cembalo (Paris, 1758) would need its incessant Alberti basses explained away by the hypothesis of its having been an experimental work in a new style. Somewhat better are two manuscript sets of variations by a 'Le Grand' (F-Pn D.14218). Les trois roses, ou Les graces, a three-act comédie mêlée d'ariettes with words by Rozoi and music by Le Grand, performed at Versailles on 10 December 1779 (Paris, 1780), is known only through an advertisement in the Mercure de France (17 January 1780, p.48).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

LabordeMP; MGG1('Legrand'; J. Bonfils, H.A. Durand [incl. detailed bibliography])

M.P. de Fleury: 'Les anciens orgues de la cathedrale d'Angoulême', Bulletin de la Société archéologique et historique de la Charente, 5th ser., xi (1889), 215–67

G. Servières: Documents inédits sur les organistes français (Paris, 1922)

B. Guatafson and D. Fuller: A Catalogue of French Harpsichord Music, 1699–1780 (Oxford, 1990)

DAVID FULLER

Legrand, Michel (b Paris, 24 Feb 1932). French composer and arranger. A musical prodigy, Legrand enrolled at the Paris Conservatoire at the age of 11. He attended from 1943 to 1950, studied conducting with Nadia Boulanger and harmony with Henri Chaland, and graduated as a first-prize winner in composition. In the 1950s, he became a popular band leader, singer and songwriter, also writing and conducting ballets for Roland Petit. A brilliant orchestrator, he won a prize in 1953 from the Académie Charles Cros for his arrangements for a recital recording by Catherine Sauvage. In 1954, he became the band leader and conductor for Maurice Chevalier, and travelled with him to New York. That same year he issued the first LP, I Love Paris. In the late 1950s his arrangements for the album Legrand Jazz (Col., 1958) featured the playing of Miles Davis, Ben Webster and John Coltrane, and he also began writing film music, thereafter dedicating himself almost exclusively to the medium. His first important collaborations were with some of the masters of French cinema, including Godard, Carné and Jacques Demy, with whom he worked on eight films. He achieved his greatest success with Demy's Les parapluies de Cherbourg (1964), which brought worldwide recognition to both the director and the composer. In the late 1960s, Legrand moved to the United States and for the next three decades divided his efforts equally between France and Hollywood, not always with the same measure of success.

Legrand's career has alternated between contemporary subjects and period pieces, and he has used many different styles in his scores. From an early age Legrand's style leaned towards light popular music and jazz, and he often emphasizes thematic unity, though many scores are often overshadowed by a central popular theme. Les parapluies de Cherbourg, with lyrics by Demy met with considerable critical acclaim. The director's vision was to make a musical film in a completely different vein from the Hollywood musical tradition, a 'mixture of poetry, colour and music'. The film is entirely sung, in free verse, the direction was regulated by the music, and all aspects of the productions were subordinate to the musical rhythm. The score contains a wide range of styles, from haunting ballads such as I Will Wait For You, to jazz, tangos, mambos and several light popular melodies. Thereafter, Legrand had a number of successes including The Thomas Crown Affair (1968), Summer of '42 (1971), and his jazz score for Lady Sings the Blues (1972), the biographical film of Billie Holiday.

In recent years, Legrand has struggled to adapt his craft to contemporary musical styles. His popular idiom, well-received in the 1960s and 70s, subsequently lost some of its appeal, and has often been modified to reflect evolving aesthetics, though not always successfully. His recent achievements include the Streisand film Yentl (1983), the jazz score for Dingo (1992), co-written with Miles Davis, and the sweeping, dark music of Les misérables (1996). He has been nominated for Academy Awards for his contributions to Les parapluies de Cherbourg, Les demoiselles de Rochefort, The Happy Ending, Pieces of Dreams, Best Friends, The Thomas Crown Affair, Summer of '42 and Yentl, winning Oscars for the last three. He is the son of musician and film composer Raymond Legrand (b 1908) and brother of singer Christiane Legrand (b 1930).

WORKS
(selective list)

Over 170 film scores, incl. Chien de pique (1960); Terrain vague (1960); Lola (1961); Une femme est une femme (1961); Eva (1962); Les sept péchés capitaux (1962); Cléo de 5 à 7 (1962); La baie des anges (1963); Les parapluies de Cherbourg (1964); Bande à part (1964); Les demoiselles de Rochefort (1967); The Thomas Crown Affair (1968); Ice Station Zebra (1968); The Happy Ending (1969); Peau d'âne (1970); Pieces of Dreams (1970); Les mariés de l'an deux (1970); Le Mans (1971); Brian's Song (1971); Summer of '42 (1971); Lady Sings the Blues (1972); Portnoy's Complaint (Lehman, 1972)

Impossible Object (Frankenheimer, 1973); A Doll's House (Losey, 1973); F for Fake (Welles, 1975); Ode to Billy Joe (Baer, 1976); The Other Side of Midnight (Jarrott, 1977); The Hunter (Kulik, 1980); Atlantic City (Malle, 1981); Best Friends (Jewison, 1982); Never Say Never Again (Kershner, 1983); Yentl (Streisand, 1983); Micki and Maude (Edwards, 1985); Dingo (de Heer, 1992); The Pickle (Mazursky, 1993); Prêt-à-Porter (Altman, 1995); Les misérables (Lelouch, 1996)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T.M.F. Steen: 'The Sound Track', Films in Review, xiii/2 (1962), 115–6
F. Porcile: 'Collaborateurs de création du jeune cinéma français', Cinéma 64, no.89 (1964), 50–66
P. Cook: 'The Sound Track', Films in Review, xvi (1965), 170–72; see also xx (1969), 308–10; xxii (1971), 225–8; xxii (1971), 425–8
J. Collet: 'An Audacious Experiment: the Soundtrack of "Vivre sa vie"', Focus on Godard, ed. R.S. Brown (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1972), 160–62
L. Tomkins: 'Michel Legrand', Crescendo International, xiii (1975), no.7, p.6; no.8, p.20
P. Cook: 'The Sound Track', Films in Review, xxvii (1976), 308–10
L. Lyons: 'Profile: Michel Legrand', Down Beat, xliii/3 (1976), 34
R.S. Brown: 'Music and "Vivre sa Vie"', US Quarterly Review of Film Studies, v/3 (1980), 319–33
D. Rabourdin: 'Entretien avec Michel Legrand', Cinéma 81, nos.271–2 (1981), 68–71
A. Duroy: 'Pour "Le Cadeau", Clio Goldsmith et Pierre Mondy ont enregistré une chanson en duo, signé Michel Legrand!', Ciné Revue, no.62 (1982), 5
P. Cook: 'The Sound Track', Films in Review, xxxv (1984), 48–50

MARK BRILL

Le Grand, Nicolas Ferdinand (b ?France, *c*1650–*c*1660; bur. Amsterdam, 27 July 1710). Dutch composer presumably of French extraction. He must have come to Amsterdam during the early 1680s. He served as a musician at the Stadsschouwburg, where he also sang in Dutch Singspiels. In 1697 he participated in a collegium musicum together with Carl Rosier, François Desrosier, Hendrik Anders and others. His compositions are exclusively vocal, with a fair number of surviving continuo songs on Dutch texts by contemporary Amsterdam poets such as Abraham Alewijn, Kornelis Sweerts and Frans Rijk. Like some of his Dutch contemporaries (e.g. Konink and Anders), he employed the expressive Italian style in alternation with the more subdued and balanced French style.

WORKS
published in Amsterdam unless otherwise stated

Tweede deel der mengelzangen (25 Dutch songs) (K. Sweerts), 1v, bc (1695)
1 song (Sweerts), 1v, vc, in Mengelzangen en zinnebeelden (1697)
Cantate e ariette, libro primo, 1v, inst, bc (1698), lost
Harderszangen (A. Alewijn), 1v, bc, op.2 (?1699), lost; 2nd edn (Haarlem, 1716)
Cantate e ariette, libro secondo, 1v, inst, bc (1702), lost
Triomf der Batavieren (Alewijn, F. Rijk and others), 1v, bc (1709)

RUDOLF A. RASCH

Le Grant, Denis [Dionysius Magni] (d March 1352). French composer. He was master of the French royal chapel in 1349 and Bishop of Senlis from 23 December 1350. His only identifiable composition is the chace Se ie chans, preserved in I-IV 115, f.52*v*; the piece is mentioned in Gace de la Buigne's Roman des Deduis (vv.6309–18). The beginning of Se ie chans – itself a textual quotation from the Ars Antiqua motet Coument/Se ie chante/Qui prendroit in F-MO H196, ff.310*v*–311*v*, and/or of a ballade text in GB-Ob Douce 308, f.225*r*) – reappears as the refrain of Guillaume de Machaut's ballade Pour ce que tous mes chans fais, suggesting both intimate links with Parisian musical milieus of the early 14th century and a homage of Machaut to a senior colleague. Under the latinized form of his name, Denis le Grant is mentioned after Johannes de Muris, Philippe de Vitry and Henricus Helene as one of the 12 masters listed in the triplum of the 'musician motet' Apollinis/Zodiacum. His identity with the Dionisius Normannus of the 'musician motet' Musicalis/Scientia, suggested by Hoppin and Clercx, remains to be verified.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Hoppin and S.Clercx: 'Notes biographiques sur quelques musiciens français du XIVe siècle', L'Ars Nova: Wégimont II 1955, 64–92, esp. 71–2

K. Kügle: The Manuscript Ivrea, Biblioteca capitolare 115: Studies in the Transmission and Composition of Ars Nova Polyphony (Ottawa, 1997), 158–62

KARL KÜGLE

Legrant [Lemacherier], Guillaume (fl 1405–49). French composer. His true name was Guillaume Lemacherier. He is listed among the clerks in the Ste Chapelle, Bourges in 1405, and in 1407 was made a chaplain; he remained in Bourges until 1410. In October 1418 he entered the chapel of Pope Martin V and remained as a papal singer there until at least the summer of 1421. He possessed several church benefices in the diocese of Rouen, including one which he held as late as 1449. It is most unlikely that the 'Guillaume le Grain' listed as a singer in the chapel of Duke Charles of Orléans in 1455–6 was identical with this composer. One of his Credos was composed by 1426.

Guillaume Legrant's surviving compositions include sacred and secular works. His Gloria and two Credos are each alternately for two and three parts and are among the earliest compositions to distinguish between solo and choral polyphony. The four extant chansons by Legrant are all virelais and survive in only one source.

WORKS

Edition: Early Fifteenth-century Music, ed. G. Reaney, CMM, xi/2 (1959) [R]

3 single mass movements: Gloria, 3vv, R 5; Credo, 3vv, R 6 (dated 1426 in GB-Ob can.misc.213); Credo, 3vv, R 7

4 virelais: La doulce flour, 3vv (acrostic: LE GRANT GUILLAUME), ed. in CMM, xi/4 (1969), pp.62–3; Ma chiere mestresse, 3vv, R 2; Or avant gentilz fillettes, 3vv, R 3; Pour l'amour de mon bel amy, 3vv, R 1

Lost composition, title unknown, keyboard arrangement in Paumann's 'Fundamentum organisandi', and in the Buxheim Keyboard Manuscript, R 4

Ct to Pierre Fontaine's rondeau, A son plaisir volentiers serviroye (ed. in J. Marix: Les musiciens de la cour de Bourgogne au XVe siècle (Paris, 1937/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Schuler: 'Zur Geschichte der Kapelle Papst Martins V', AMw, xxv (1968), 30–45

P.M. Higgins: Autoine Busnois and Musical Culture in Late Fifteenth-Century France and Burgundy (diss., Princeton U., 1987), 267

P. Higgins: 'Music and Musicians at the Sainte-Chapelle of the Bourges Palace, 1405–1515', IMSCR XIV: Bologna 1987, iii, 689–701

D. Fallows: A Catalogue of Polyphonic Songs 1415–1480 (Oxford, 1999)

CRAIG WRIGHT/R

Legrant, Johannes (*fl c*1420–40). French composer. Biographical information on Legrant is scarce. He may be the 'Johannes le Grant', bas vicaire, mentioned in a pay record of 1423–4 from the collegiate church of St Vincent, Soignies. A 'Heer Jan le Grant' is recorded as a singer at Antwerp Cathedral between 1441 and 1443. The style of his extant compositions and their sources suggest that he was active during the first half of the 15th century. His rondeau Les mesdisans ont fait raport exhibits points of imitation in all three voices and is notable for its clearly directed melodies and extended sequences. Imitative entries are also abundant in the two-voice Gloria: in the concluding Amen a point of imitation is extended as a two-part canon. The rondeau Se liesse est de ma partie displays the type of melodic elegance and rhythmic interplay among voices associated with the early songs of Du Fay and Binchois. Legrant's authorship of the ballade Entre vous has been questioned on stylistic grounds (Reaney, 1959). Although attributed to 'Johannes legrant' in its unique source (GB-Ob 213), the song possesses features more characteristic of the music of another composer, Guillaume Legrant, five of whose six surviving works also appear in the Oxford manuscript.

WORKS

Editions: Dufay and his Contemporaries, ed. J.F.R. Stainer and others (London, 1898/*R*1963) [S]

Sechs Trienter Codices, ed. G. Adler and O. Koller, DTÖ, xxii, Jg. xi/1 (1904/R) [A]

Early Fifteenth-century Music, ed. G. Reaney, CMM, xi/2 (1959) [R]

A 15th-century Repertory from the Codex Reina, ed. N. Wilkins, CMM, xxxvii (1966) [W]

M.K. Hanen: The Chansonnier El Escorial IV. a.24 (Henryville, PA, 1983) [H]

SACRED

Gloria, 2vv, R

Gloria, 3vv, R (I-Bc Q15 has an 'alius Ct')

Credo, 3vv, R

Unicus dei filius [= Las, je ne puis oïr nouvelle], 3vv, I-TRmp 90

BALLADE

Entre vous, nouviaux mariées, 3vv, R, S

RONDEAUX

Las, je ne puis oïr nouvelle [= Unicus dei filius], 3vv, A, R, H

Layssies moy coy, 3vv, R, S

Les mesdisans ont fait raport, 3vv, A, R, W

Se liesse est de ma partie, 3vv, R, S

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (G. Reaney)

H. Besseler: Bourdon und Fauxbourdon (Leipzig, 1950, rev., enlarged 2/1974 by Gülke)

G. Montagna: 'Johannes Pullois in the Context of his Era', RBM, xlii (1988), 83–117, esp. 101

M. Gozzi: Il manuscritto Trento, Museo provinciale d'arte, cod. 1377 (Tr 90): con un'analisi del repertorio non derivato da Tr 93, i (Cremona, 1992)

D. Fallows: Introduction to Oxford, Bodleian Library MS Canon. Misc. 213, i (Chicago, 1995), 32, 33, 44

CRAIG WRIGHT/SEAN GALLAGHER

Legrense, Johannes. Mistaken (but widely used) reading of 'Legiensis', one of the alternative surnames of JOHANNES GALLICUS.

Legrenzi, Giovanni (b Clusone, nr Bergamo, bap. 12 Aug 1626; d Venice, 27 May 1690). Italian composer and organist. He was one of the most gifted and influential composers of the latter half of the 17th century. Active in most fields of composition, he was an important force in the development of the late Baroque style in northern Italy.

1. LIFE. Legrenzi was a son of Giovanni Maria Legrenzi, violinist at the parish church in Clusone and a minor composer. Caffi's statement that he studied in Venice with Giovanni Rovetta and Carlo Pallavicino is neither supported by documentary evidence nor suggested by what is known about his early years. On 30 July 1645, newly arrived from Clusone, he became organist at S Maria Maggiore, Bergamo, and was elected a resident chaplain there on 2 May 1651, having been ordained earlier that year. On 6 September 1653 he sought and was granted the title of first organist. On 30 December 1654 he failed for some unstated reason to be reconfirmed as organist. After several inconclusive votes by the governing body he was reinstated on 23 February 1655 but left at his own request on 31 December of that year. He was, however, still serving there in some capacity in April 1656. His published output from this period consists primarily of church music.

Legrenzi's years at S Maria Maggiore, Bergamo, coincided with the final period of its musical glory. The three maestri di cappella with whom he served, G.B. Crivelli, Filippo Vitali and above all Maurizio Cazzati, were handsomely supported in their endeavours, as is indicated by the huge sums spent annually on music for the most important feast, the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary. But by far the largest expenditure was in 1665 and 1666, when Legrenzi returned as visiting maestro. Musicians were assembled from such distant points as Venice, Ferrara, Mantua and Lucca, the total forces in 1665 comprising 43 musicians, only 11 of whom were attached to the basilica. Legrenzi's other activities in Bergamo included membership of the Accademia degli Eccitati.

Later in 1656, probably with the assistance of Cazzati, he became maestro di cappella of the Accademia dello Spirito Santo at Ferrara, an institution devoted, like the Scuola Grande in Venice, to the performance of sacred music and oratorios. Ferrara was a more vital musical centre than Bergamo and provided him with both the incentive and the opportunity to write operas and oratorios. His first opera, Nino il giusto, dates from 1662. Ferrara also provided him with indispensable aristocratic connections, which he cultivated assiduously. The most important of these was with Ippolito Bentivoglio, who was active in the affairs of the academy, a supporter of opera, librettist for at least two of Legrenzi's dramatic works and a lifelong patron and friend, who appears to have assisted him in obtaining first performances in Venice in 1664 and Vienna in 1665. Except for three operas, one oratorio and several sonate da camera and dances, Legrenzi's output during these years continued to be devoted to church music. He appears to have left Ferrara in June 1665 after the completion of his third opera, Zenobia e Radamisto. But strong ties with Ferrara continued, as is seen from his numerous letters to Bentivoglio up to 1685 and in the performance of five oratorios there between 1677 and 1678.

With his departure begins a period of almost five years in which there is no certain information on his positions, except for those he sought unsuccessfully or refused. These include many of the most important posts in northern Italy and several beyond. During these years he published only church music. From a letter of 14 April 1665 it is clear that he had been offered a post in Modena, probably as successor to Marco Uccellini as maestro di cappella of the cathedral. He refused it, as well as an offer he claimed in the same letter to have received from S Maria Maggiore, Bergamo, to return as maestro di cappella in succession to G.B. Pederzuoli. A letter of 17 July 1665 shows that Legrenzi had enlisted the help of Carlo II Gonzaga, Duke of Mantua, in a bold scheme to obtain the post of Kapellmeister at the Habsburg court in Vienna. His attempt was unavailing; the post was occupied by Antonio Bertali until 1669. According to his own account he was subsequently appointed a director of music at the court of Louis XIV but was unable to assume the position because of a grave illness that incapacitated him for a year. The post to which he had been named was probably that of sous-maître of the royal chapel, which since 1663 had been divided among four men, Henri du Mont, Pierre Robert, Thomas Gobert and Gabriel Expilly. The appointment probably dated from 1668, the year in which Gobert retired. Legrenzi is next found in 1669 competing for the post of maestro di cappella of Milan Cathedral as successor to Michelangelo Grancini, but G.A. Grossi was elected. In August 1670 he enlisted the aid of Cardinal Girolamo Buonvisi, a patron from his Ferrarese days, in obtaining a similar post with Ranuccio II Farnese, Duke of Parma; but there was no vacancy, the incumbent, Marco Uccellini, continuing in the post. These years also saw the staging in Venice of two of his operas: L'Achille in Sciro in 1664, and Zenobia e Radamista (with revised libretto and entitled Totila) in 1665.

By 1670 at the latest Legrenzi was living in Venice, where he began to hold posts in numerous religious institutions, always, it seems, with an eye on attaining a position in one of the major churches in northern Italy. In 1670 he was appointed maestro di musica of the Ospedale dei Dereletti. In September 1671 he was a candidate for the post of maestro di cappella of S Petronio, Bologna, in succession to Cazzati. During the protracted deliberations, which included four votes on the candidates, his prospects rose and fell, and at one point they were better than those of the ultimate winner in 1674, G.P. Colonna. Sometime in 1671 Legrenzi had also been appointed maestro di coro to the Congregazione dei Filippini at S Maria della Fava, a post he appears to have relinquished in 1680. In 1676 he abandoned his position at the Ospedale dei Derelitti in favour of one as maestro di coro of the Ospedale dei Mendicanti, to which he was elected on 7 June. In a letter seeking his release from the Derelitti that presumably dates from 1676, Legrenzi enumerated the works he had composed while serving that institution: four Masses, more than 70 psalms and 80 motets, five services of Compline, hymns, string sonatas and keyboard sonatas. It is not known whether any of these works survive, although it is conceivable that some of the motets were published in his opp.10 (1670) and 15 (1689), while some sonatas appeared in his second op.10 (1673).

1. Giovanni Legrenzi: anonymous 18th century portrait in the Civico Museo Bibliografico Musicale, Bologna

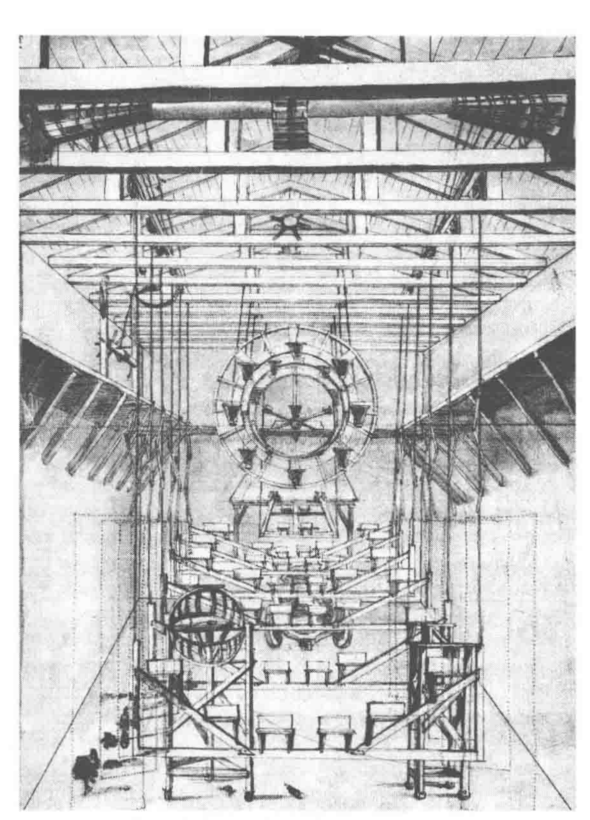
On 30 April 1676 Legrenzi made his first attempt at becoming maestro di cappella of S Marco, as successor to Cavalli. He lost by one vote to Natale Monferrato, for long the vicemaestro and Legrenzi's superior at the Mendicanti. Given the closeness of the vote it is odd that he did not compete two weeks later for the vacant post of vicemaestro, since it was this post that he sought and obtained on 5 January 1681, succeeding Antonio Sartorio; he was sole candidate and was elected unanimously.

During his early years as vicemaestro, Legrenzi retained his post at the Mendicanti, succeeding Monferrato as maestro there on 26 January 1683, and relinquishing the position on 16 August 1683. Upon his appointment at S Marco there was a marked increase in the number of singers and instrumentalists hired. The increase continued until his election as maestro on 16 April 1685, following Monferrato's death, at which time it appears the alarmed procurators of S Marco acted to limit further expansion. In fact during Legrenzi's years at S Marco both the cappella and the concerto attained their largest recorded size. On 23 April 1686 the procurators authorized a choir of 36 voices, nine to a part, but this balance was never achieved in Legrenzi's time: in 1687 the choir consisted of six sopranos, seven altos, thirteen tenors and ten basses. On 21 May 1685 they had moved to reduce the number of instrumentalists to 34: eight violins, eleven violettas (violas), two viole da braccio (?cellos), three violones, four theorbos, two cornetts, one bassoon and three trombones. But the procurators were eminently pleased with his service, as they unanimously granted him the highest recorded salary as both vicemaestro and maestro: his salary as maestro from 1687 amounted to 470 ducats, 'to the person and not to the office'.

Legrenzi's years as vicemaestro were his last and most prolific in the field of opera, two appearing in Venice each year between 1681 and 1684. As maestro he turned again to the composition of sacred music, writing responsories for Holy Week, a collection of motets (op.15) and a mass dedicated to the Madonna of Loreto, but none of the music he composed for the S Marco cappella seems to have survived. He was also involved in the special services held in 1687 in celebration of the last victories of the Venetians in their costly wars with the Turks.

In his last years his house opposite S Lio, where he lived with his sister Giovanna, was a centre of musical life. At one concert held there early in 1688 three French sisters sang duets and trios by Lully, and some of his own instrumental works were performed. From 1687 he was also the moving force behind the foundation of the sovvegno (a mutual-aid society) of musicians in Venice. After 1687 his activities at S Marco were curtailed by an illness that was to prove fatal. He was buried in S Maria della Fava. Of all the students he is reputed to have taught there is certain information on only one, his nephew Giovanni Varischino, to whom he bequeathed his unpublished works: Varischino subsequently published at least two collections (opp.16–17) and may have published a third (op.18), of which no copies are extant.



Legrenzi's rise to fame, honour and wealth was remarkable. As a young man from the provinces his resources were so meagre that he required a title of patrimony, granted in 1649, in order to be ordained. But by 1653 he was able to underwrite the costs of educating three boys (one of them his brother Marco) at the Accademia Mariana at Bergamo. At his death he owned property in Clusone.

2. Works. Legrenzi's music represents the final stage in the formation of the late Baroque style. It is characterized by clarity of design achieved through the co-ordination of well-defined tonal drives and incisive themes employed in various repetitive schemes; a contrapuntal style in which line is subordinated to harmony and rhythm is metrically conceived; integration of the bass into the thematic process; and skilful employment of the new violin idiom without its more virtuoso special effects. Most of the means for creating the large-scale tonal forms of the late Baroque are present: the pervasive use of antecedent–consequent structures defined by half- and full closes; the co-ordination of thematic materials and textures to reinforce these structures; the resourceful use of sequences, deceptive cadences and internal repetitions to enhance tonal drive through the deferment of the full close; and adept modulations. Perhaps his most important contribution is found in his fugal writing (especially in the instrumental works), which displays a broad variety of approaches, ranging from that of the ricercare on several subjects, as developed by Frescobaldi and Giovanni Gabrieli, to the use of contrasting episodic materials (later so characteristic of Bach). Yet though most ingredients of the late Baroque style are present in his music, it lacks the breadth and expansiveness associated with this style; it is essentially shortwinded. His style, which remains virtually the same regardless of genre, displays little sign of development or change throughout his career, only of refinement.

In his sacred music, which shows the influence of Merula and Cazzati, he wrote in four of the stylistic categories cultivated by his predecessors: the concertato for few voices, which he used for motets and psalm settings for one to three voices, which often resemble his cantatas in their sectional form and use of recitative; the concertato for larger numbers of voices, which he employed in mass, vesper and compline settings, which call for solo voices, chorus and strings; massive Venetian polychoral works, used in his mass and psalm settings and a Dies irae; and several examples of the stile antico, including his five-part mass of 1689, which is, however, thoroughly infected with the new tonal procedures. One motet, Intret in conspectu tuo, exists only in a copy made by Handel, who drew on it for the section 'To thy dark servant' in the chorus 'O first created beam' in Samson.

Legrenzi's sonatas are his most forward-looking works. They show the strong influence of the ensemble canzonas of Merula, Neri and Cazzati in their themes and designs, yet there is in them a surer feeling for the development of dynamic form through the interplay of theme and key. They in turn exerted a strong influence, particularly in the handling of structure, on the sonatas and concertos of Torelli, Vivaldi and Bach. Most are either for two violins and continuo or violin, cello and continuo or are trio sonatas for two violins, cello and continuo. In op.8 there are two late examples of the Venetian polychoral sonata, reduced now to six parts, and in op.10 two for either viols or members of the violin family. Those for four and five parts in op.8 and op.10 appear to have been written with the possibility of orchestral performance in mind. Bach wrote a fugue (BWV574) said to be on a subject by Legrenzi, but the source is yet to be identified.

2. Moving cloud scene (with stage machinery, right) from Legrenzi's opera 'Germanico sul Reno', first performed at the Teatro S Salvatore, Venice in 1676: pen and ink drawing, with wash in the Bibliothèque de l'Opéra, Paris

As an opera composer, Legrenzi was not as productive as his contemporaries Antonio Sartorio and Carlo Pallavicino. The operas that do survive show a close connection with his sonatas and dances, from which eight movements appear as opening sinfonias. This connection is hardly surprising, since before his first operas, composed for Venetian audiences, appeared in 1675, he was known primarily as a composer of liturgical music and violin sonatas. The operas are of the heroic-comic type, with complicated plots, large casts and marvellous machines, and this is particularly the case in La divisione del mondo, Germanico sul Reno, Totila, Ottaviano Cesare Augusto and Giustino. Other operas incorporate one or two special effects, such as fires or storms, and most require many supernumeraries. The ease with which he accommodated himself to the operatic style of the day surprised some: Legrenzi's first Venetian librettist, Fattorini, praised him for the way he 'exceeded the expectation of many in cultivating charm and delight, violating his own genius, which was accustomed to hard and studious matters'.

Legrenzi's operatic style, like that of his contemporaries, comprised many short arias, with occasional short recitatives. Some of his operas dating from the 1670s contain more than 90 arias; this had been reduced to almost 60 by the works of the 1680s. Unlike his Venetian contemporaries, Legrenzi supplied an active continuo part, closely related to the material of the vocal line. His arias fall into two basic types: those in fast common time with diatonic melodies and much use of dactylic rhythms; and those in slow triple time, which occasionally employ chromatic and diminished intervals for expressive effect. Both types range from simple syllabic settings to settings with extensive roulades, which, because of their unpredictable angularity, often lack the grace found in arias by his successors. Legrenzi employed a wide range of unifying procedures, often combining two or more in the same aria: a motto, ostinato, da capo form, strophic form and the ABB form associated with Cesti. His use of melodic instruments in arias was normally restricted to homorhythmic ritornellos at the very end. On occasion these ritornellos precede rather than follow the aria. When upper melodic instruments are used in the course of an aria, it is almost always in alternation with the voice. Many of the characteristics of Legrenzi's aria style as found in his operas, oratorios, cantatas and motets are seen in ex.1. He also lavished care on his orchestral parts, both in ritornellos and in accompaniments to arias.

Ex.1 Legrenzi: Giustino, 1683, Act 1 scene xii

Legrenzi's dramatic works were well received in his own day and at least two, Giustino and La morte del cor penitente, were being performed in the decade following his death. But changes in taste in the 1690s caused operas by Legrenzi and his contemporaries to be superseded by the work of younger composers such as C.F. Pollarolo and G.A. Perti.

WORKS

OPERAS

drammi per musica in 3 acts, first performed in Venice, unless otherwise stated

Nino il giusto (prol., 3, ? I. Bentivoglio), Ferrara, S Stefano, 1662
L'Achille in Sciro (prol., 3, Bentivoglio, Ferrara, S Stefano, carn. 1663, arias GB-Och, I-Nc
Zenobia e Radamista (Bentivoglio), Ferrara, S Stefano, 1665; as Tiridate (rev. N. Minato), Venice, S Salvatore, carn. 1668, Nc
La divisione del mondo (G.C. Corradi), S Salvatore, carn. 1675, F-Pn
Eteocle e Polinice (T. Fattorini), S Salvatore, carn. 1675, Pn (facs. in DMV, vi, 1983), I-MOe, Nc
Adone in Cipro (after G.M. Giannini: Adone), S Salvatore, carn. 1676, arias MOe, Nc, Rc, Rvat, Vqs
Germanico sul Reno (introduzione, 3, Corradi), S Salvatore, carn. 1676, MOe
Totila (M. Noris), SS Giovanni e Paolo, carn. 1677, Vnm (facs. in IOB, ix, 1978)
Antioco il grande (G. Frisari), S Giovanni Grisostomo, carn. 1681, arias GB-Lbl, I-Bca, MOe, Nc, Rvat, Vlevi, Vqs
Creso (Corradi), S Giovanni Grisostomo, carn. 1681, arias GB-Lbl, Ob, I-Bca, Rvat, Vqs
Pausania (Frisari), S Salvatore, aut. 1681, arias B-Bc, D-Bsb, I-MOe, Rvat, Tn, Vqs
Lisimaco riamato da Alessandro (G. Sinibaldi, rev. A. Aureli), S Salvatore, carn. 1682, arias Tn, Vqs
Ottaviano Cesare Augusto (N. Beregan), Mantua, Ducale, May 1682
I due cesari (Corradi), S Salvatore, carn. 1683, arias B-Bc, I-Vqs
Giustino (Beregan), S Salvatore, 12 Feb 1683, Nc, Rc (ed. in Collezione settecentesca Bettarini, xii, Milan, 1980), Vnm
L'anarchia dell'imperio (T. Stanzani), S Salvatore, aut. 1683, arias GB-Lbl, I-MOe
Publio Elio Pertinace (P. d'Averara), S Salvatore, 22 Jan 1684, arias GB-Lbl, I-MOe
Ifianassa e Melampo (G.A. Moniglia), Pratolino, aut. 1685

ORATORIOS

Oratorio del giuditio (Bentivoglio), Vienna, Capella dell'Imperatrice, 1665, lost
Gli sponsali d'Ester, Modena, Palazzo Ducale, 1676; Ferrara, Accademia della Morte, 1667, lost
Il Sedecia, Ferrara, Accademia della Morte, 1676, score I-Rvat
La vendita del core humano, Ferrara, Accademia della Morte, 1676; as Il prezzo del cuore humano, Vienna, Cappella dell'Imperatore, 1692, score Rvat, MOe
Il Sisara, Ferrara, Chiesa di S Filippo Neri, 1678, lost
Decollatione di S Giovanni, Ferrara, S Filippo Neri, 1678, lost
La morte del cor penitente, Vienna, Cappella dell'Imperatore, 1705, score A-Wn

SACRED

op.
1	Concerti musicali per uso di chiesa (Venice, 1654)
3	Harmonia d'affetti devoti, 2–4vv, libro primo (Venice, 1655)
5	[13] Salmi a 5 (Venice, 1657)
6	Sentimenti devoti, 2–3vv, libro secondo (Venice, 1660)
7	Compiete con le lettanie & antifone della BV a 5 (Venice, 1662)
9	Sacri e festivi concenti, messa e psalmi a due chori (Venice, 1667)
10	Acclamationi divote, 1v (Bologna, 1670)
11	[2nd edn of op.10] (Venice, 1680), lost, see Sartori (1966); MS copy, I-Vnm
15	Sacri musicali concerti, 2–3vv, libro terzo (Venice, 1689)
17	Motetti sacri, 1v, ed. G. Varischino (Venice, 1692)

Missa, 5vv, 1689, LT; Missa, 4vv, insts, D-Bsb; Ky, Gl, Cr, 1v, orch, GB-Ob

Compline, 5vv, D-Bsb; Mag, 4vv, insts, Bsb; Mag, 3vv, Bsb; Laudate pueri, 5vv, insts, Bsb; Intret in conspectu tuo, 6vv, bc, GB-Lbl[in Handel's hand]; In nativitate Domini invitatorium, 8vv, insts, I-Vnm; Nolite timere, Md; Credidi propter, A, insts, D-Bsb; Dies irae, prosa per mortuis, F-Pn; 30 other pss and motets, D-Bsb; 15 motets, F-Pn [copied by Brossard]; 4 motets, GB-Ob (formerly T); Spirate aurae serenae, S, 2 vn, org, in 1695[1]

SECULAR VOCAL

12	Cantate e canzonette, 1v (Bologna, 1676); ed. in RRMBE, xiv–xv (1972)
13	Idee armoniche, 2–3vv (Venice, 1678)
14	Echi di riverenza di cantate e canzoni, libro secondo (Bologna, 1678)

Son tutto furore, S, bc, in 1670[3]; Amor ti punge il seno, I-Rvat; Vuoi farmi piangere, Rvat; Cintia dolente, Nc; No, no, non ti dolor, in Arie e ariette, 1–2vv, bc, Nc; Disperarsi, 2vv, bc, F-Pn; Non può viver, aria, 1v, bc, Pn; Volo vivere, A, bc, D-Bsb
Notte, madre d'orrori, serenade, S, bc, Bsb; 12 cants., 1v, bc, Bsb; 3 chamber cants., 1v, bc, Mbs; Voti di musicale plauso, cant., 1662, MS in private collection of P. Camerini, Montruglio, nr Vicenza

INSTRUMENTAL

2	[18] Sonate a 2–3, libro primo (Venice, 1655), incl. 1 sonata by G.M. Legrenzi, ed. S. Bonta (Cambridge, MA, 1984); 1 sonata ed. in HM, xxxi (1949)
4	[30] Sonate da chiesa e da camera … a 3, libro secondo (Venice, 1656); 6 ed. in Le pupitre, iv (Paris, 1968)
8	[16] Sonate a 2, 3, 5, & 6, libro terzo (Venice, 1663); 4 ed. in Le pupitre, iv (Paris, 1968)
10	[16] La cetra, sonate a 2–4, libro quarto (Venice, 1673) [recte op.11], ed. S. Bonta (Cambridge, MA, 1992), no.13 and 4 ed. in HM, lxxxiii and lxxxiv (1951)
16	Balletti e correnti a 5, libro quinto, ed. G. Varischino (Venice, 1691)
18	Sonate, 2–7 insts con trombe e senza, overo flauti, ? ed. G. Varischino (Venice, ?1695), lost, see Sartori (1966)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CaffiS; NewmanSBE; SmitherHO
Mercure galant (August 1677), 75–86 [on Totila]; (March 1683), 232–50; (April 1683), 20–89
H. Nüssle: Giovanni Legrenzi als Instrumentalkomponist (diss., U. of Munich, 1917)
G. Tebaldini: 'Giovanni Legrenzi', Musica d'oggi, xix (1937), 125–31
P. Fogaccia: Giovanni Legrenzi (Bergamo, 1954)
S.T. Worsthorne: Venetian Opera in the Seventeenth Century (Oxford, 1954/R), 37, 43, 48, 105
R. Monterosso: 'Medaglioni di musicisti lombardi, ii: Giovanni Legrenzi', Musicisti lombardi ed emiliani, Chigiana, xv (1958), 55–60
S. Bonta: The Church Sonatas of Giovanni Legrenzi (diss., Harvard U., 1964)
J.A. MacDonald: The Sacred Vocal Music of Giovanni Legrenzi (diss., U. of Michigan, 1964)
C. Sartori: 'Un catalogo di Giuseppe Sala del 1715', FAM, xiii (1966), 112–16, esp.114
A. Meli: 'L'esordio di Giovanni Legrenzi da Clusone in Santa Maria Maggiore dal 1645 al 1655', Eco di Bergamo (23 Aug 1970)
S. Bonta: 'A Formal Convention in 17th-Century Italian Instrumental Music', IMSCR XI: Copenhagen 1972, 288–95
C. Sartori: 'Due Legrenzi ricuperati', AcM, xlvi (1974), 217–21
E. Selfridge-Field: Venetian Instrumental Music from Gabrieli to Vivaldi (Oxford, 1975, 3/1994)
C. Vitali: 'Una lettera vivaldiana perduta e ritrovata, un inedito monteveriano del 1630 e altri carteggi di musicisti celebri ovvero splendori e nefandezze del collezionismo di autografi', NRMI, xiv (1980), 404–12
R. Emans: Die einstimmigen Kantaten, Canzonetten und Serenaden Giovanni Legrenzis (Bonn,1984)

U. Scarpetta: 'L'ultimo monumento dello stile a cappella: la Missa Lauretana di Legrenzi',La musica nel Veneto dal XVI al XVIII secolo, ed. I. Cavallini and F. Passadore (Adria, 1984), 175–89
B. Glixon: Recitative in Seventeenth-Century Venetian Opera: its Dramatic Function and Musical Language (diss., Rutgers U., 1985)
R. Bossard: Giovanni Legrenzi, Il Giustino: Eine Monograph, Studie (Baden-Baden, 1988)
L.G. Cockerham: The Chamber Sonatas and Dances of Giovanni Legrenzi (diss., U. of Kansas, 1988)
J.D. Swale: 'Legrenzi's Operas: Dramatic Structures for an Autocratic Age', MMA, xv (1988), 89–99
M. Baroni and R. Dalmonte: 'Relationships between Music and Poetry in the Arias of Giovanni Legrenzi', CMR, iv (1989), 23–44
E. Rosand: Opera in Seventeenth-Century Venice: the Creation of a Genre (Berkeley, 1991)
T. Brugnoni: '"Curiose mutanze, novità, stravagange": un esempio di scenografia veneziana del tardo seicento nei bozzetti per le scene di Germanico sul Reno', RIM, xxvii (1992), 125–44
F. Passadore and F. Rossi, eds.: Giovanni Legrenzi e la cappella ducale di San Marco (Florence, 1994)
J.D. Swale: Echoes of Reverence: the Life and Music of Giovanni Legrenzi (forthcoming)

STEPHEN BONTA

Legros [Le Gros], Joseph (b Monampteuil, Laon, 7 or 8 Sept 1739; d La Rochelle, 20 Dec 1793). French tenor and composer. Having been a choirboy at Laon Cathedral, Legros developed a powerful, sweet-toned haute-contre suited to the high tessitura of French opera. Recruited by Rebel and Francoeur, he made his début at the Paris Opéra in 1764, shortly before the retirement of Jélyotte, in Mondonville's Titon et l'Aurore. Although a stiff actor he became the Opéra's leading haute-contre until his retirement (accelerated by obesity) in 1783.

Legros played the title roles in Rameau's principal tragédies lyriques, and created over 30 other roles. He adapted without apparent difficulty to the new italianate style, singing Sandomir in Philidor's Ernelinde in 1767 and at subsequent revivals. He was the first Achilles in Gluck's Iphigénie en Aulide (1774) and on its revival the following year led a patriotic demonstration with the aria 'Chantez, célébrez votre reine'. His popularity influenced the adaptation of the castrato role of Orpheus in the French version of Gluck's opera to suit his range (exceptionally, the compass is extended to e♭″). Legros subsequently created the principal tenor roles in Gluck's Alceste, Armide, Iphigénie en Tauride and Cynire (rather than Narcissus) in Echo et Narcisse. For Piccinni he created Médor (Roland), the title role in Atys and Pylades (Iphigénie en Tauride); his last role was the eponymous hero in Sacchini's Renaud.

Legros was director of the Concert Spirituel from 1777, and promoted music by Haydn and Mozart; but too often he allowed commercial considerations to outweigh his artistic judgment. With L.-B. Desormery he rewrote the second entrée of Grenet's opéra-ballet, Le triomphe de l'harmonie (performed at the Opéra as Hylas et Eglé in 1775). He composed another opera, Anacréon, which was not performed, and some songs. (BrookSF; ES (F. Serpa); FétisB; PierreH)

JULIAN RUSHTON

Leguar [Leguerre], Mr. See LAGUERRE, JOHN.

Leguay, Jean-Pierre (b Dijon, 4 July 1939). French organist and composer. He was a pupil of Marchal, Litaize and Rolande Falcinelli, in whose class he gained a premier prix for organ and improvisation at the Paris Conservatoire (1966). He also studied at the Conservatoire with Simone Plé-Caussade and Messiaen. He subsequently won improvisation competitions at Lyons (1967) and Haarlem (1969), and was awarded a special prize in the international competition for composition at Erding in Germany in 1985. The following year the Académie des Beaux-Arts in Paris awarded him the P.-L. Weiller composition prize. Leguay was organist of Notre Dame des Champs, Paris, from 1961 to 1984, and became organist of the Cathedral of Notre Dame in 1985. He was also appointed professor of organ and the history of music at the Limoges Conservatoire in 1968, moving to the Dijon Conservatoire in 1989. Leguay, who is blind, belongs to the Marchal tradition of organ playing, and his dissonant, highly coloured musical language has won him an established reputation as an improviser. His own organ works are designed to illustrate the specific characteristics of different types of organ. He has recorded his Sonate I and several of his Préludes, and made a disc of improvisations. Leguay's discography also includes works by Brahms, Liszt, Vierne, Gigout, Beethoven, Mozart and Haydn.

FRANÇOIS SABATIER

Lehár, Franz (Christian) (b Komáron, Hungary, 30 April 1870; d Bad Ischl, 24 Oct 1948). Austro-Hungarian composer and conductor. He was the leading operetta composer of the 20th century, being primarily responsible for giving the genre renewed vitality. His most successful operetta, Die lustige Witwe, has established a lasting place in the opera as well as the operetta repertory and, along with Offenbach and Johann Strauss II, Lehár has remained one of the most popular composers of light music.

1. LIFE. The family came originally from the eastern Sudetenland. Lehár's father, also Franz (1838–98), received his music education in Sternberg (now Šternberg), played the horn in the orchestra of the Theater an der Wien, and was for nearly 40 years a military bandmaster and composer of dances and marches. In 1869 he married the Hungarian Christine Neubrandt, and in the following years they moved between various Hungarian garrison towns. The mother-tongue of their offspring was Hungarian and the family name acquired the accent to indicate a long vowel (the stress being on the first syllable). In 1880 the father's regiment moved to Budapest, but to improve his German the young Lehár was sent to Sternberg where his uncle was the town's music director. During the summer Lehár played the violin in his uncle's spa orchestra at Bad Ullersdorf in Moravia, and at the age of 12 he entered the Prague Conservatory, studying the violin with Antonín Bennewitz and theory with Anton Foerster. He also took some private lessons in composition from Zdeněk Fibich and received some advice from Dvořák.

In autumn 1888 Lehár took up a position as theatre violinist at Barmen-Elberfeld in the Rhineland. Then, called up for military service, he joined the band of the 50th Austrian infantry regiment, playing under his father and alongside his future operetta colleague, Leo Fall. In 1890 he was made bandmaster of the 25th infantry regiment in Losoncz and in 1894 of the naval corps in Pola. He gave up the position when his opera Kukuška was about to be performed, but its failure in Leipzig in November 1896 forced him to return to military service as bandmaster of the 87th infantry regiment in Trieste. On his father's retirement he took over his position with the 3rd Bosnian-Hercegovinan infantry regiment in Budapest, and finally in 1899 was appointed bandmaster of the 26th infantry regiment, a post which brought him to Vienna. He had been composing dances and marches and in Vienna achieved success with the waltzes Asklepios (1901) and Gold und Silber (1902). In 1902 he finally left military service and in that year he conducted at the summer theatre in the Prater and then at the Theater an der Wien. There and at the rival Carltheater his operettas Wiener Frauen and Der Rastelbinder were performed within the year, the latter being a particular success. Their successors, Der Göttergatte and Die Juxheirat (both 1904), were failures, but in 1905 Lehár was called in to set Die lustige Witwe, a libretto originally intended for Richard Heuberger. Its success in Vienna and abroad was the greatest in operetta history, heralding a new international era for Viennese operetta through the works of Lehár, Straus, Fall and later Kálmán.

A relative failure followed, in Der Mann mit den drei Frauen (1908), but in 1909–10 three works were produced within the space of three months, of which Der Graf von Luxemburg and Zigeunerliebe both achieved wide international popularity. Lehár was by now building on his reputation and producing works which were more ambitious in both subject matter and musical style, but they failed to attract the same wide public. After the war (during which he conducted many concerts for the armed forces), the arrival of new styles of popular music from the USA increasingly made it appear that Lehár's period of greatest popularity was over. However, a new period of success arrived with an association with Richard Tauber, which began when the latter sang in Zigeunerliebe at Salzburg in 1921 (though the tenor lead at the Viennese première was sung by Carl Clewing) and continued with Der Zarewitsch (1927) and Friederike (1928; more a play with music than an operetta, in which Tauber portrayed Goethe) before there came the most widely popular, Das Land des Lächelns (1929). This work, which was first produced in Berlin where Lehár's premières were now staged, was a revision of an earlier work, Die gelbe Jacke (1923), with the most famous of all Lehár's Tauber songs, 'Dein ist mein ganzes Herz', among the additions to the score.

At this time Lehár was occupied with revisions and film versions of his operettas, and he also composed some original film scores. His only entirely new stage work after 1928 was Giuditta, a still more ambitious work written for the Vienna Staatsoper where it was produced in 1934 with Tauber and Jarmila Novotná in the leading roles and with 120 radio stations relaying the performance. Lehár never again found the subject or the frame of mind for a new work. In 1935 he founded his own publishing house, Glocken Verlag, to take over the rights to many of his works from the bankrupt Karczag publishing house. From other publishers he also acquired the rights to most of his other works, with the notable exception of Die lustige Witwe, the lucrative rights to which were retained by Doblinger. He concentrated mainly on these publishing activities, his most substantial piece of composition being the revision of Zigeunerliebe as the opera Garabonciás diák ('The Wandering Scholar') for Budapest (1943). During World War II he remained in Vienna and Bad Ischl, suffering the equivocal situation that, whereas his wife was Jewish and several of his friends and collaborators died in concentration camps, Die lustige Witwe was one of Hitler's favourite works. Always wrapped up in his music and unwilling to become involved in politics, his failure to protest against Nazi atrocities at first made him an object of suspicion outside Germany. Suffering ill-health, in 1946 he moved to Zürich where his wife died in September 1947; in summer 1948 he returned to Bad Ischl where he himself died soon afterwards. His villa in Bad Ischl is now a Lehár museum, and memorials were erected in front of the Kursaal, Bad Ischl, in 1958 and in the Stadtpark, Vienna, in 1980.

2. WORKS. The extent of the development of Lehár's musical style was unusually great, if not unique, for an operetta composer, and his works divide naturally into the early successes before World War I and the subsequent phase culminating in the Tauber successes. His earlier works, both independent pieces such as Gold und Silber and the early stage successes, show above all a natural and profuse flow of melody. Like the younger Johann Strauss he had the ability to make melodies take an unexpected but natural-sounding turn and to maintain interest through the contrasted shape and rhythm of succeeding melodies. Although he introduced the full range of social dance rhythms into his works, the centrepiece was of course the waltz, though a more tender, swaying type of waltz than that which typified the previous generations of waltz composers. His technical grasp, gained through a thorough theoretical and practical education, and his study of musical development in both serious and popular music, enabled him to give his fluent melodic output a substance that is not often found in music of its type. His vocal writing was particularly sympathetic, with phrasing and melodic shaping disguising the underlying rhythm, and he was especially adept at using counterpoint for melodic, rhythmic and also dramatic purposes. Lehár was also unusual for operetta composers of his time in orchestrating his own scores, which he did with notable skill and imagination, having learnt from the innovations of Dvořák, Puccini and Richard Strauss. He took a particular delight in portraying local colour (Slav in Der Rastelbinder, Balkan in Die lustige Witwe, Polish in Die blaue Mazur, Spanish in Frasquita, Russian in Der Zarewitsch and Chinese in Das Land des Lächelns). He was himself an excellent violinist and eagerly seized the opportunity for violin solos (in Zigeunerliebe, Die blaue Mazur and Paganini for instance), and the solo violin was always a particular feature in heightening the sensuousness of his love-scene waltzes.

Nowhere is the freshness of his invention better displayed than in Die lustige Witwe, the work with which his name is most closely associated and one which shows remarkably little trace of the rather stereotyped patterns into which operetta was inclined to sink. Probably no leading pair of roles had so individual and effective a pair of entrance songs as Hanna Glawari and Danilo Danilowitsch, and this originality is maintained throughout the score. Lehár was perhaps lucky that the Viennese operetta was at the time suffering something of an eclipse following the deaths of the leading practitioners of the previous generation such as Suppé, Johann Strauss II, Millöcker and Zeller, so that opportunities were there for new composers. He was lucky too that the Theater an der Wien company was composed of relative newcomers who were not in a position to demand show numbers to suit their own taste, and in particular he was able to avoid writing numbers for performers who were comics rather than singers. In fact the chief comic role, Njegus, has no solo singing. Lehár was thus more than usually free to follow his own inclination without extraneous influences. Above all, however, he was fortunate in having the good text on which an operetta, far more than an opera, is dependent. The waltzes, which were de rigueur in Viennese operetta, were able to occur as an integral part of the action, and the book strikes an ideal balance between reality and fantasy, with a fine combination of romance and wit and a succession of interesting situations.

1. Mizzi Günther and Louis Treumann, who created the roles of Hanna and Count Danilo in the original production of 'Die lustige Witwe' at the Theater an der Wien, Vienna, 30 December 1905

These factors were in varying degrees and combinations missing from his other works, obscuring the worth of individual numbers with no less melodic appeal. Even in the early works Lehár's aim to raise the standard of his work was evident, not least in the frequent revisions which he made at all stages of his career. In the years just before World War I his attempts to extend the scope of his operettas led to the use of more serious subjects. Zigeunerliebe contained elements of melancholy and fantasy, Eva featured a factory girl and dealt with social relationships, while the whole of Act 2 of Endlich allein (1914) has the leading couple alone on a mountain top. Lehár gradually extended his harmonic language, showing an awareness of the developments of Debussy, Richard Strauss and Puccini. Indeed he was taking Viennese operetta towards a Puccinian plane at a time when Puccini himself was flirting with Viennese operetta à la Lehár in La rondine. (The two composers were close friends and mutual admirers, and Lehár was even suggested as a candidate for completing Turandot.) However, these attempts at raising the quality of operetta brought with them suggestions of pretentiousness and sentimentality, heightened by the introduction of historical characters such as Paganini and Goethe. The incompatibility of his more serious aspirations and the traditional lightness of operetta was heightened further as Lehár began employing the new popular music styles of the time, such as the blues, foxtrot, onestep, tango and shimmy.

It was this lack of a focal point that was solved first by the advent of Tauber, who had the personality to draw audiences to Lehár's works and to do justice to the more ambitious vocal music which Lehár was able to compose for him from Paganini onwards. If Lehár's melodic flow was now less consistent, his shaping of vocal line was still exemplary. The typical Tauber song, with its virile initial upward thrust, became very popular but was apt to seem stereotyped when repeated in successive works ('O Mädchen, mein Mädchen' in Friederike, 'Dein ist mein ganzes Herz' in Das Land des Lächelns and 'Freunde, das Leben ist Lebenswert' in Giuditta) and when seized upon by hosts of tenor imitators. The final resolution of the conflict between Lehár's ambitions and the essential features of operetta came with Giuditta. Writing for an opera house and for opera singers, Lehár at last had the scope he needed, and the work perhaps does justice to the mature Lehár as Die lustige Witwe does to the younger man. It was a work for which Lehár had a particular affection and one which he arranged to have engraved in full score, though the fact that it falls uneasily between opera house and operetta theatre has restricted its subsequent acceptance.

In his last works Lehár produced his own unique style of operetta, more integrated than the revue manner then in fashion. After Giuditta the traditional relationship between opera and operetta finally disappeared, and Lehár, in pursuing his own course, has even been described as the destroyer of operetta. Yet it is fairer to suggest that, with the advent of new styles of popular music from the USA, operetta had already run its course as a truly international form of entertainment, and that in his final works Lehár gave the genre a final fling just as he had earlier given it new life with Die lustige Witwe.

2. Franz Lehár, 1904

WORKS

for complete list see Czech (1957), and Peteani

STAGE

Operettas unless otherwise stated

WW – Vienna, Theater an der Wien

Der Kürassier, 1891–2 (Op, G. Ruther), inc.
Rodrigo, 1893 (Op, 1, R. Mlčoch), unperf.
Kukuška (Op, 3, F. Falzari), Leipzig, Stadt, 27 Nov 1896; rev. as Tatjana (Falzari and M. Kalbeck), Brünn, Stadt, 21 Feb 1905
Arabella, die Kubanerin, 1901 (G. Schmidt), inc.
Das Club-Baby, 1901 (V. Léon), inc.
Wiener Frauen [Der Klavierstimmer] (3, O. Tann-Bergler and E. Norini), WW, 21 Nov 1902, vs (Vienna, 1902); rev. as Der Schlüssel zum Paradies (3, Norini and J. Horst), Leipzig, Stadt, Oct 1906
Der Rastelbinder (prelude, 2, Léon), Vienna, Carl, 20 Dec 1902, vs (Vienna, 1902)
Der Göttergatte (prelude, 2, Léon and L. Stein), Vienna, Carl, 20 Jan 1904, vs (Vienna, 1904); rev. as Die ideale Gattin (3, J. Brammer and A. Grünwald, after L. Fulda: Die Zwillingsschwester), WW, 11 Oct 1913, vs (Vienna, 1913); rev. as Die Tangokönigin (Brammer and Grünwald), Vienna, Apollo, 9 Sept 1921, vs (Vienna, 1921)
Die Juxheirat (3, J. Bauer), WW, 22 Dec 1904, vs (Vienna, 1904)
Die lustige Witwe (3, Léon and Stein, after H. Meilhac: L'attaché d'ambassade), WW, 30 Dec 1905, vs (Vienna, 1906)
Peter und Paul reisen ins Schlaraffenland (Zaubermärchen, 1, F. Grünbaum and R. Bodanzky), WW, 1 Dec 1906, 7 nos. (Vienna, 1906)
Mitislaw der Moderne (1, Grünbaum and Bodanzky), Vienna, Die Hölle, 5 Jan 1907, 3 nos. (Vienna, ?1907)
Der Mann mit den drei Frauen (3, Bauer), WW, 21 Jan 1908, vs (Vienna, 1908)
Das Fürstenkind (prelude, 3, Léon, after E. About), Vienna, Johann Strauss, 7 Oct 1909, vs (Vienna, 1909); rev. as Der Fürst der Berge, Berlin, Nollendorfplatz, 23 Sept 1932
Der Graf von Luxemburg (3, A.M. Willner and Bodanzky), WW, 12 Nov 1909, vs (Vienna, 1909); rev. version, Berlin, Volkes, 4 March 1937, vs (Vienna, 1937)
Zigeunerliebe (romantische Operette, 3, Willner and Bodanzky), Vienna, Carl, 8 Jan 1910 (Vienna, 1910); rev. as Garabonciás diák [The Wandering Scholar] (E. Innocent Vincze), Budapest, Király, 20 Feb 1943
Eva [Das Fabriksmädel] (3, Willner and Bodanzky), WW, 24 Nov 1911, vs (Vienna, 1911)
Rosenstock und Edelweiss (Spl, 1, Bauer), Vienna, Die Hölle, 1 Dec 1912
Endlich allein (3, Willner and Bodanzky), WW, 30 Jan 1914, vs (Vienna, 1914); rev. as Schön ist die Welt! (3, L. Herzer and F. Löhner), Berlin, Metropol, 3 Dec 1930, vs (Vienna, 1930)
Der Sterngucker (3, Löhner), Vienna, Josefstadt, 14 Jan 1916; rev. version (3, Löhner and Willner), WW, 27 Sept 1916, vs (Vienna, 1916); rev. as La danza delle libellule (3, C. Lombardo), Milan, Lirico, 3 May 1922; as Libellentanz (Lombardo and Willner), Vienna, 31 March 1923, vs (Vienna, 1923); rev. as Gigolette (Lombardo and G. Forzano), Milan, Lirico, 30 Oct 1926
A pacsirta [The Lark] (3, F. Martos), Budapest, Király, 1 Jan 1918; as Wo die Lerche singt (Willner and H. Reichert, after Martos), WW, 27 March 1918, vs (Vienna, 1918)
Die blaue Mazur (2, Stein and B. Jenbach), WW, 28 May 1920, vs (Vienna, 1920)
Frühling (Spl, 1, R. Eger), Vienna, Die Hölle, 20 Jan 1922, vs (Berlin, 1922); rev. as Frühlingsmädel (3, Eger), Berlin, Zoo, 29 May 1928
Frasquita (3, Willner and Reichert), WW, 12 May 1922, vs (Vienna, 1922); rev. version, Paris, OC (Favart), 5 May 1933
Die gelbe Jacke (3, Léon), WW, 9 Feb 1923, vs (Vienna, 1923); rev. as Das Land des Lächelns (romantische Operette, 3, Herzer and Löhner, after Léon), Berlin, Metropol, 10 Oct 1929, vs (Berlin, 1929)
Cloclo (3, Jenbach), Vienna, Bürger, 8 March 1924; rev. version, Vienna, Johann Strauss, 4 Sept 1924, vs (Berlin, 1924)
Paganini (3, P. Knepler and Jenbach), Vienna, Johann Strauss, 30 Oct 1925, vs (Berlin, 1925)
Der Zarewitsch (3, Jenbach and Reichert, after G. Zapolska), Berlin, Deutsches Künstler, 16 Feb 1927, vs (Berlin, 1927)
Friederike (Spl, 3, Herzer and Löhner), Berlin, Metropol, 10 Oct 1928, vs (Berlin, 1928)
Giuditta (musikalische Komödie, 5 scenes, Knepler and Löhner), Vienna, Staatsoper, 20 Jan 1934 (Vienna, 1933)

OTHER WORKS

Film scores: Die grosse Attraktion, 1931; Es war einmal ein Walzer, 1932; Grossfürstin Alexandra, 1934; Die ganze Welt dreht sich um Liebe, 1936; Une nuit à Vienne, 1937
Concert orch pieces: Eine Vision: meine Jugend, sym. fantasy; 2 other sym. poems; 2 vn concs., unpubd; other music
Dances: *c*65 waltzes incl. Stadtpark-Schönheiten, Asklepios-Walzer (Pikanterien-Walzer), Gold und Silber, Ballsirenen-Walzer [after Die lustige Witwe], Wilde Rosen (Chrysanthemum-Walzer); other dances
Over 50 marches incl. Jetzt geht's los!, Jupiter-Marsch [after Der Göttergatte], Piave-Marsch
*c*90 songs, pf sonatas, other pf pieces

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Decsey: Franz Lehár (Munich, 1924, 2/1930)
G. Knosp: Franz Lehár: une vie d'artiste (Brussels, 1936)
S. Czech: Franz Lehár: sein Weg und sein Werk (Berlin, 1940, 2/1948)
M. von Peteani: Franz Lehár: seine Musik, sein Leben (Vienna, 1950, 2/1985)
I. Kwasnik-Teuber: Franz Lehár: sein Leben und Werk (Kevelaer, 1953)
W. Macqueen-Pope and D.L. Murray: Fortune's Favourite (London, 1953)
S. Czech: Schön ist die Welt: Franz Lehárs Leben und Werk (Berlin, 1957)
B. Grun: Gold and Silver: the Life and Times of Franz Lehár (London, 1970)
M. Schönherr: Franz Lehár: Bibliographie zu Leben und Werk (Vienna, 1970) [summary in 'Beiträge zu einer Franz-Lehár-Bibliographie', ÖMz, xxv (1970), 330–31]
M. Bartolotto: 'Sul teatro d'operetta', NRMI, v/3 (1971), 420–42
M. Schönherr: Die Instrumentation bei Lehár (Baden, 1978); abridged and with Eng. summary in Lamb, 1992
A. Lamb: 'Opera on the Gramophone: Die lustige Witwe', Opera, xxxii (1981), 128–37, 243–7
L'avant-scène opéra, no.45 (1982) [Die lustige Witwe issue]
A. Lamb: 'Lehár's "Count of Luxembourg"', MT, cxxiv (1983), 23–5
G.V.R. van Ham: Franz Lehár (Madrid, 1984)
O. Schneidereit: Franz Lehár: eine Biographie in Zitaten (Berlin and Innsbruck, 1984)
Franz Lehár: Thematic Index (London, 1985)
M. Lichtfuss: Operette im Ausverkauf: Studien zum Libretto des musikalischen Unterhalthungstheaters im Österreich der Zwischenkriegszeit (Vienna, 1989)
V. Klotz: Operette: Porträt und Handbuch einer unerhörten Kunst (Munich, 1991)
A. Lamb, ed.: Light Music from Austria: Reminiscences and Writings of Max Schönherr (New York, 1992)

ANDREW LAMB

Lehel, György (b Budapest, 10 Feb 1926; d Budapest, 26 Sept 1989). Hungarian conductor. He studied privately with Pál Kadosa (composition) and László Somogyi (conducting), and made his début in 1946. After working for Hungarian radio he was appointed principal conductor and music director of the radio orchestra (the Budapest SO) in 1962. With this orchestra he made his British début at the 1968 Cheltenham Festival, where he conducted the first performances of Crosse's Chamber Concerto op.8, and Maconchy's Three Cloudscapes. He also toured with the orchestra, and was a guest conductor with others, in the USSR, USA, Japan and Europe; in 1974 he was appointed permanent guest conductor of the Basle RSO. His many recordings include much of Liszt, and Bartók (for the complete recorded edition), and new Hungarian music which he consistently championed; many contemporary Hungarian composers dedicated works to him. He received the Liszt Prize (1955, 1962) and the Kossuth Prize (1973) and was named Artist of Merit in 1967.

PÉTER P. VÁRNAI

Le Héman. See DE HÉMAN family.

Le Heurteur [Hurteur], Guillaume (fl 1530–45). French composer and choirmaster. The only known biographical information comes from the title-page of his book of motets published by Attaingnant in 1545. It states that Le Heurteur was a priest, serving as canon and preceptor of the choirboys at St Martin, Tours. Virtually all his music appeared in Parisian or Lyonnaise prints between 1530 and 1545.

Le Heurteur's surviving works include four masses, two Magnificat settings, some 22 motets and 26 chansons. A lost Attaingnant book of settings of texts from the Song of Songs mentioned Le Heurteur on the title-page and would no doubt substantially increase the corpus of motets attributed to him. All the masses call upon pre-existing material: the Missa 'Impetum', for example, is based on the anonymous motet Impetum inimicorum ne timueritis printed by Attaingnant in 1528 and the Missa 'Ung jour Robin' on Sermisy's chanson. The Missa 'Osculetur me' may well be based on one of Le Heurteur's lost motets on texts from the Song of Songs. His sacred music shows much variety in its contrapuntal style as well as reflecting the French predilection for a more harmonic orientation. In the masses and motets block-like chordal textures are interspersed with a host of contrapuntal procedures. Only rarely do these consist of relatively strict imitation; more often Le Heurteur's counterpoint brings voices together in homorhythmic groupings or combines a fast-moving melody with a slower-moving 'harmonic' support. A comparison of the two Magnificat settings shows the extent of the contrapuntal variety in his music. Both pieces include sections for two, three, four and six voices. The two-part sections resemble texturally the 16th-century bicinium in their combination of initial imitation with a mixture of homorhythmic passages and florid writing in semiminims. The six-part section of the Magnificat primi toni is essentially chordal whereas the analogous passage in the Magnificat quarti toni exemplifies in its canonic writing Le Heurteur's most conservative counterpoint.

The chansons for four voices are freely composed and reflect in their short phrases, concise formal structures, frequent cadences, transparent textures and melodic stereotypes, the style of the Parisian chanson. Their fabric, however, incorporates a somewhat greater measure of linear independence than is characteristic of a typical chanson by, for example, Sermisy. Le Heurteur's chansons for two or three voices are based on four-voice models by Sermisy, Derrick Gerarde, Jacotin or Rocquelay. They are not mere arrangements of pre-existing chansons, for Le Heurteur transformed his borrowed material thoroughly, changing chordal four-voice chansons into linear duos or trios, while still retaining a recognizable image of the original.

WORKS

Edition: Treize livres de motets parus chez Pierre Attaingnant en 1534 et 1535, ed. A. Smijers and A.T. Merritt (Paris and Monaco, 1934–64) [S]

MASSES AND MAGNIFICAT SETTINGS

Missa 'Fors seulement', 4vv, 1534[1]
Missa 'Impetum', 4vv, 1532[7]
Missa 'Osculetur me', 4vv, 1532[4]; ed. E. Stein, Twelve Franco-Flemish Masses of the Early Sixteenth Century (Rochester, NY, 1941)
Missa 'Ung jour Robin', 4vv, 1534[1]
Magnificat primi toni, 4vv, 1534[7]; S v
Magnificat quarti toni, 4vv, 1534[8]; S vi

MOTETS

Cantica canticorum Salomonis Guill. le Heurteur (Paris, 1541), lost
Operum musicalium liber primus (Paris, 1545) [17 motets]; 1 ed. in S iii
5 other motets, 2, 4, 5vv, 1534[6], 1534[9], 1538[2], 1543[19], 1549[16]; 1 ed. in S iv, 1 in S vii, 1 ed. A. Bornstein, Antonio Gardano: Il primo libro a due voci de diversi autori (Bologna, 1994)
Nisi Dominus aedificaverit domum, attrib. Le Heurteur in 1535[1], 1555[15], is by Jean Lhéritier

CHANSONS

26 chansons, 2–4vv: D-Mbs 1508; 1530[3]; Chansons musicales a quatre parties (Paris, 1533); 1533[1]; 1534[12]; 1534[14], Trente et une chansons musicales (Paris, 1535) (attrib. Janequin 1541[13] and 1543[23]); 1535[6] (attrib. Cadéac 1540[17]); 1538[14]; 1539[19], 1 also in S-Uu 87 (ed. in Hambraeus); 1540[11] (attrib. Bon Voisin 1538[13]); 1541[5-6]; 1544[14] (attrib. Gardano 1545[6]); 1553[22] (1 also attrib. Moulu, and attrib. Sermisy 1578[14]); 1 ed. in FCVR, i (1928/R), 1 ed. in FCVR, viii (1929/R), 5 ed. B. Thomas and A. Robson, Pierre Attaingnant: Fourteen Chansons (1533) (London, 1972), 2 ed. A. Seay, Antonio Gardane: Il primo libro de canzoni francese a due voci (Colorado Springs, 1979), 1 ed. A Seay, Pierre Attaingnant: Second livre (1536) (Colorado Springs, 1980), 6 ed. in RRMR, xxxvi–xxxvii (1982), 2 ed. in SCC, xxv (1993), 1 ed. in SCC, xxvi (1993)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Lesure: 'Les chansons à trois voix de Clément Janequin', RdM, xliv (1959), 193–8
B. Hambraeus: Codex carminum gallicorum: une étude sur le volume 'Musique vocale de manuscrit 87' de la Bibliothèque de l'Université d'Upsala (Uppsala, 1961)
F. Lesure: 'Latin Church Music on the Continent: France in the Sixteenth Century (1520–1610)', NOHM, iv (1968), 237–53
D. Heartz: Pierre Attaingnant, Royal Printer of Music (Berkeley, 1969)
D. Heartz: 'Au pres de vous: Claudin's Chanson and the Commerce of Publishers' Arrangements', JAMS, xxiv (1971), 193–225
L.E. Miller: The Chansons of French Provincial Composers, 1530–1550: a Study of Stylistic Trends (diss., Stanford U., 1977)
L.F. Bernstein: 'The "Parisian Chanson": Problems of Style and Terminology', JAMS, xxxi (1978), 193–240
L.F. Bernstein: 'French Duos in the First Half of the Sixteenth Century', Studies in Musicology in Honor of Otto E. Albrecht, ed. J.W. Hill (Kassel, 1980), 43–87

LAWRENCE F. BERNSTEIN

Lehmann, Hans Ulrich (b Biel, canton of Berne, 4 May 1937). Swiss composer. He studied the cello with Rolf Looser at the Biel Conservatory (until 1960), theory with Paul Müller-Zürich at the Zürich Conservatory (until 1962), composition with Boulez and Stockhausen at the Basle Musikakademie (1960–63) and musicology with Kurt von Fischer at Zürich University (1960–66). He has taught at the Basle Musikakademie (1961–72), Zürich University (1969–90), the University of Berne (1990) and the Zürich Conservatory (1972–98). He has also served as director of the Zürich Conservatory and Musikhochschule (1976–98), as president of the Swiss musicians' union, STV (1983–6) and as president (from 1991) of the Swiss musical copyright association, SUISA. His honours include the music prize of the Conrad Ferdinand Meyer-Stiftung, Zürich (1973), the composers prize of STV (1988) and the music prize of the city of Zürich (1993).

Lehmann's works are characterized by nuanced shaping of quiet moments. Many of his compositions are inspired by lyric and 'concrete' poetry, and strive to motivate a mode of hearing open to confrontation with unfamiliar sounds and processes. His works from the early 1960s show the influence of Boulez' musical language and serial structures. After Rondo (1967) Lehmann increasingly integrated retrospective ('rückenwickelt') elements into his works. A gradual change in style led to the 'Schrilles' section of Tractus (1971) and continued from 1973 towards an intuitive and emotional understanding of form (Tantris, 1976–7). Many of his works were written for specific performers; this allowed him, especially in chamber works, to develop a flexible rhythmic notation requiring the creative participation of the musicians. In the 1990s he rendered the subtle complexity of these compositions in large-scale works using conventional rhythmic-metric notation (ut signaculum, 1991–2; battements, 1994–5).

WORKS

Orch: zu blasen, 23 wind, 1975–6; Chbr Music II, small orch, 1979; Prélude à une étendue, chbr orch, 1993–4; battements, perc, chbr orch, 1994–5

Vocal: Rondo (H. Heissenbüttel), S, orch, 1967; à la recherche (lit), vv, 2 org, 1973; Tantris (J. Joyce), S, fl, vc, 1976–7; Duette (F. Mon), S, fl, vc, 1980; theolalie (K. Marti), S, fl, vc, 1980–81; Canticum II (e.e. cummings), S, inst ad lib, 1981; Alleluja, S, cl, Jap. temple bells, org, 1985; ut signaculum (Song of Songs/Solomon, cummings), S, Bar, chbr orch, 1991–2; Sprich (R. Ausländer), A, t rec, 1993; Book of Songs (cummings), Bar, fl, vc, perc, 1998–9; twi-Light (cummings), S, chbr orch, 1999

Chbr and solo inst: Structures transparentes, cl, vc, pf, 1961; Quanti, fl, chbr ens, 1962; Régions, fl, 1963; Mosaik, cl, 1964; Spiele, ob, hp, 1965; Conc., fl, cl, str, 1969; Monodie, 1 wind, 1970; Régions, S III, cl, trbn, vc, 1970; dis-cantus I, ob, 11 str, 1971; Sonata 'da chiesa', vn, org, 1971; Tractus, fl, ob, cl, 1971; stro(i)king, 1 perc, 1982; Mirlitonnades, fl, 1983; Triplum, 3 bassett-hn/b cl, 1984; Charakterstücke, pf, 1985; sich fragend nach frühester erinnerung, 4 rec, 1985; Str Qt, 1987–8; de profundis, cb cl, vc, perc, 1988–9; Esercizi, vc, 1989; el mar, cb/b cl, 1993–4

Principal pubishers: Ars Viva, Breitkopf & Härtel, Gravis, Hug & Co.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KdG (C. Steiner)

I. Stoïanova: 'Hans Ulrich Lehmann: un essai de portrait verbal', SMz cxvi (1976), 80–87

H. Lachenmann: 'Laudatio für Hans Ulrich Lehmann', Dissonanz, no.13 (1987), 4–7; repr. in H. Lachenmann: Musik als existenzielle Erfahrung: Schriften 1966–1995 (Wiesbaden, 1996), 287–92

H.U. Lehmann: '"Nuancen und Details". Aus der Werkstatt eines Komponisten', Neue Zürcher Zeitung (6–7 Feb 1993)

CHRISTOPH STEINER

Lehmann, Lilli (b Würzburg, 24 Nov 1848; d Berlin, 17 May 1929). German soprano. She studied with her mother, the singer Marie Loewe, in Prague, and made her début there in 1865 as the First Boy in Die Zauberflöte, later taking over the part of Pamina. In 1868 she was engaged at Danzig, and in 1869 she sang for the first time at the Berlin Hofoper, as Marguerite de Valois in Les Huguenots. The following year, after appearances in Leipzig, she was engaged permanently in Berlin. She took part in the first complete Ring cycle at Bayreuth (1876), delighting Wagner with her singing as Woglinde, Helmwige and the Woodbird. She made her London début at Her Majesty's Theatre in June 1880 as Violetta in La traviata, and also sang Philine in Thomas' Mignon. In 1882 she was heard in Vienna for the first time, and in 1884 she returned to London, appearing at Covent Garden as Isolde and as Elisabeth in Tannhäuser.

In 1885 Lehmann broke her contract with the Berlin Hofoper and went to New York, where she made her début at the Metropolitan as Carmen. During her first season she also sang Brünnhilde in Die Walküre, Sulamith in the first American performance of Goldmark's Die Königin von Saba, Berthe in Le prophète, Marguerite in Faust, Irene in Rienzi and Venus in Tannhäuser. She took part in the first New York performances of Tristan und Isolde (1886), Goldmark's Merlin (1887), Siegfried (1887) and Götterdämmerung (1888), as well as the first complete Ring cycle given in the USA (March 1889). In 1891 she returned to Berlin and in 1896 she sang Brünnhilde at Bayreuth. During her final season at the Metropolitan (1898–9) she sang Fricka in Das Rheingold, and at Covent Garden, where she returned in 1899, her last appearances were as Isolde, Sieglinde, Ortrud, Leonore, Donna Anna and Norma. Between 1901 and 1910 she sang at the Salzburg Festival (Donna Anna and the First Lady in Die Zauberflöte) and also became the festival's artistic director. She continued to appear on the concert platform until 1920. She had started to teach in Berlin as early as 1891, and among her many famous pupils were Olive Fremstadt and Geraldine Farrar.

Lehmann's enormous repertory ranged from the light, coloratura parts of her youth to the dramatic roles which she sang with superb authority and technical skill during the middle and later years of her career. As it grew more powerful, her voice retained all its flexibility, and she could turn from Wagner or Verdi to Mozart or Bellini with astonishing ease; Henderson wrote that dramatically 'she was possessed of that rare combination of traits and equipment which made it possible for her to delineate the divinity in womanhood and womanhood in divinity, the mingling of the unapproachable goddess and the melting pitying human being'. However, not all of Lehmann's critics were unstinting in their praise. Hugo Wolf, writing in the Wiener Salonblatt of 25 January 1885, objected to her making a virago of Isolde, and he felt that her interpretation of the part was neither rounded nor fully worked out, though it contained many beautiful, even gripping details.

Lilli's younger sister, the soprano Marie Lehmann (b Hamburg, 15 May 1851; d Berlin, 9 Dec 1931), was also taught by their mother. She made her début in 1871 at Leipzig as Aennchen in Der Freischütz and then sang at Breslau, Cologne, Hamburg and Prague. In 1872 she sang in the performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the laying of the foundation stone of the Bayreuth Festspielhaus, and in 1876 took part in the first complete Ring cycle at Bayreuth, singing Wellgunde and Ortlinde. From 1882 to 1896 she was engaged at the Vienna Hofoper. Her repertory included Marguerite de Valois (Les Huguenots), Donna Elvira (Don Giovanni), Adalgisa (Norma) and Antonina in Donizetti's Belisario. She returned to Bayreuth in 1896 to sing the Second Norn in Götterdämmerung.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Ehrlich [A. Payne], ed.: Berühmte Sängerinnen der Vergangenheit und Gegenwart (Leipzig, 1895)

L. Lehmann: Meine Gesangskunst (Berlin, 1902, 3/1922; Eng. trans., 1902, as How to Sing, enlarged 3/1924/R)

L. Lehmann: Mein Weg (Leipzig, 1914, 2/1920; Eng. trans., 1914/R)

E. Newman: The Life of Richard Wagner (London, 1933–47/R)

J. Kapp: Geschichte der Staatsoper Berlin (Berlin, 1937)
W.J. Henderson: The Art of Singing (New York, 1938)
W.H. Seltsam: Metropolitan Opera Annals (New York, 1947)
I. Kolodin: The Story of the Metropolitan Opera (New York, 1953)
H. Fetting: Die Geschichte der Deutschen Staatsoper (Berlin, 1955)
H. Rosenthal: Two Centuries of Opera at Covent Garden (London,1958)
G. Skelton: Wagner at Bayreuth (London, 1965, enlarged 2/1976)

ELIZABETH FORBES

Lehmann, Liza [Elizabeth] (Nina Mary Frederica) (b London, 11 July 1862; d Pinner, 19 Sept 1918). English soprano and composer. She was the daughter of Amelia Chambers (widely known under the initials A.L. as a teacher, composer and arranger of songs) and Rudolf Lehmann, a German painter. She studied singing with Alberto Randegger and Jenny Lind in London, and composition with Niels Raunkilde in Rome, Wilhelm Freudenberg in Wiesbaden and Hamish MacCunn in London. She made her début at a Monday Popular Concert on 23 November 1885, and during the next nine years undertook many important recital engagements in England, receiving encouragement from Joseph Joachim and Clara Schumann. After a farewell concert at St James's Hall on 14 July 1894, she retired, marrying Herbert Bedford, a painter and composer, and concentrating thenceforth on composition. She had already published some songs, and in 1896 In a Persian Garden appeared, a cycle of selected quatrains from Edward FitzGerald's version of the Rubāiyāt of Omar Khayyām, for four soloists and piano; its exotic text and lyrical style appealed to contemporary taste, and it became popular. More song cycles and a number of musical comedies followed. In 1910 Lehmann undertook the first of two successful tours of the USA, accompanying her own songs in recitals. From 1911 to 1912 she was the first president of the Society of Women Musicians. She later became a professor of singing at the GSM and wrote Practical Hints for Students of Singing. Her memoirs make fascinating reading, giving a witty and humorous insight into musical society of the period in London and the USA. Her elder son died during World War I; her younger son became the father of Steuart and David Bedford.

Lehmann and Maude Valérie White were England's foremost female composers of songs. Although both made solo settings of Tennyson's In memoriam (Lehmann's is on an extensive scale), they excelled in lighter material. Some of Lehmann's procedures, such as her penchant for four-voice cycles and for piano links between songs, seem fossilized as period taste while others remain fresh and have been undervalued. She wrote many children's songs, ranging from the pert triviality of 'There are fairies at the bottom of our garden' to the melodic and harmonic passion of 'Stars' from The Daisy-Chain. 'Ah, moon of my delight' from In a Persian Garden betokens a gift which would surely have flourished in the musical theatre had she been in a position to devote her career to it; as it was, her two comedy scores were received favourably, while in Everyman, a somewhat austere essay produced in a double bill with Debussy's L'enfant prodigue, she furthered the English morality genre.

WORKS

(selective list)

printed works published in vocal score in London

STAGE

The Twin Sister (incid. music, L. Fulda), London, 1 Jan 1902, 2 songs (1902); Sergeant Brue (musical farce, 3, O. Hall [pseud. of J. Davis] and J.H. Wood), London, 14 June 1904 (1904); The Vicar of Wakefield (romantic light op, 3, L. Housman, after O. Goldsmith), Manchester, 14 Nov 1906, London, 12 Dec 1906 (1907); Everyman (opera, 1), London, 28 Dec 1915 (1916)

OTHER WORKS

Vocal with orch: Young Lochinvar (W. Scott), Bar, chorus, orch (1898); Endymion (scena, H.W. Longfellow), S (1899); Once upon a Time, cant. (1903); The Golden Threshold (S. Naidu), S, A, T, Bar, chorus, orch (1906); Leaves from Ossian, cant. (1909)

Song sets and cycles (complete list): 8 German Songs (1888); 12 German Songs (1889); 9 English Songs (1895); In a Persian Garden (E. FitzGerald, after O. Khayyām), S, A, T, B, pf (1896); In memoriam (Tennyson) (1899); The Daisy-Chain (L. Alma-Tadema, R.L. Stevenson and others), S, A, T, B, pf (1900); Cameos: 5 Greek Love-Songs (1901); 5 French Songs (G. Boutelleau, F. Plessis) (1901); More Daisies, S, A, T, B, pf (1902); Songs of Love and Spring (E. Geibel), A, Bar, pf (1903); The Life of a Rose (L. Lehmann) (1905); Bird Songs (A.S.) (1907); Mr. Coggs and Other Songs for Children (E.V. Lucas) (1908); Nonsense Songs (from L. Carroll: Alice in Wonderland), S, A, T, B, pf (1908); Breton Folk-Songs (F.M. Gostling), S, A, T, B, pf (1909); Four Cautionary Tales and a Moral (H. Belloc), 2vv, pf (1909); Liza Lehmann Album (1909); 5 Little Love Songs (C. Fabbri) (1910); Prairie Pictures (Lehmann), S, A, T, B, pf (1911); Songs of a 'Flapper' (Lehmann) (1911); Cowboy Ballads (J.A. Lomax) (1912); The Well of Sorrow (H. Vacaresco: The Bard of the Dimbovitza) (1912); 5 Tenor Songs (1913); Hips and Haws (M. Radclyffe Hall) (1913); Songs of Good Luck (Superstitions) (H. Taylor) (1913); Parody Pie, S, A, T, B, pf (1914); 3 Snow Songs (Lehmann), 1v, pf, org, female vv (1914); 3 Songs for Low Voice (Meredith, Browning) (1922)

Many single songs, incl. Mirage (H. Malesh) (1894); To a Little Red Spider (L.A. Cunnington) (1903); Magdalen at Michael's Gate (H. Kingsley) (1913); The Poet and the Nightingale (J.T. White) (1914); The Lily of a Day (Jonson), 1917; There are Fairies at the Bottom of Our Garden (R. Fyleman), 1917; When I am Dead, My Dearest (C. Rossetti), 1918

Other vocal works, incl. The Secrets of the Heart (H. Austin Dobson), S, A, pf (1895); Good-Night, Babette! (Austin Dobson), S, Bar, vn, vc, pf (1898); The Eternal Feminine (monologue, L. Eldée) (1902); The Happy Prince (recitation, O. Wilde) (1908); 4 Shakespearean Part-Songs (1911); The Selfish Giant (recitation, Wilde), 1911; The High Tide (recitation, J. Ingelow) (1912); Behind the Nightlight (J. Maude, N. Price) (1913)

Chbr and inst works, incl. Romantic Suite, vn, pf (1903); Cobweb Castle, pf (1908)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GänzlBMT; SchmidlD
L. Lehmann: The Life of Liza Lehmann, by Herself (New York, 1918)
G. Bush: 'Songs', Music in Britain: the Romantic Age, 1800–1914, ed. N. Temperley (London, 1981), 280–82
D. Hyde: New-Found Voices: Women in Nineteenth-Century English Music (Liskeard, 1984), 69–71
L. Foreman: 'British Opera Comes of Age: 1916–61', British Opera in Retrospect (n.p., 1986) [pubn of the British Music Society], 106–7
S. Bedford: English Song Series, iv: Lehmann, Collins Classics 15082 (1997) [disc notes]
S. Fuller: Women Composers During the British Musical Renaissance, 1880–1918 (diss., U. of London, 1998)

STEPHEN BANFIELD

Lehmann, Lotte (b Perleberg, 27 Feb 1888; d Santa Barbara, CA, 26 Aug 1976). German soprano, active in England and the USA. She studied in Berlin, and began her career in 1910 with the Hamburg Opera. In 1916 she moved to Vienna, scoring an instant success as the Composer in the newly revised version of Strauss's Ariadne auf Naxos; she was later to be his first Dyer's Wife in Die Frau ohne Schatten (1919, Vienna) and Christine in Intermezzo (1924, Dresden). She remained in Vienna until 1938, when political events drove her from Austria. During her long Viennese career she sang a wide range of French and Italian roles (Puccini specially esteemed her Suor Angelica), as well as the German repertory with which she became most closely associated. From 1924 she was a great favourite at Covent Garden, returning almost every year until 1938, by which time she had also established herself in the USA, where she became a naturalized citizen.

Lotte Lehmann as the Marschallin in Richard Strauss's 'Der Rosenkavalier'

Internationally, Lehmann's most famous roles were Beethoven's Leonore, and Wagner's Elisabeth, Elsa, Eva and above all Sieglinde. But the part with which she became increasingly identified was that of Strauss's Marschallin – a portrayal of which Richard Capell wrote: 'The lyric stage of the time knew no performance more admirably accomplished; it seemed to embody a civilization, the pride and elegance of old Vienna, its voluptuousness, chastened by good manners, its doomed beauty'. Over her long and fruitful career Lehmann developed and refined her lieder style, and her recitals, which continued until 1951, won her a following no less devoted than her operatic public. Her many recordings, most of which have been transferred successfully to CD, convey a vivid impression of her warm, generous voice and urgent, impulsive style. She wrote a volume of autobiography, Anfang und Aufstieg, published in Vienna in 1937 (as Wings of Song, London, 1938), and several studies in interpretation. After retirement she taught at the Music Academy of the West, Santa Barbara, and gave masterclasses.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Glass: Lotte Lehmann: a Life in Opera and Song (Santa Barbara, CA, 1988) [with discography by G. Hickling]

A. Jefferson: Lotte Lehmann 1888–1976 (London, 1988) [with discography by F. Juynboll]

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR/R

Lehms, Georg Christian (b Liegnitz, 1684; d Darmstadt, 15 May 1717). German poet and librettist. He was educated at the Gymnasium in Görlitz and at the University of Leipzig, where he became acquainted with Christoph Graupner. In 1710 he was appointed poet and librarian to the court of Darmstadt; by 1713 he had risen to the position of princely counsel. His works include a dictionary of German poetesses (1715); romances and occasional poems published under the name 'Palidor'; several dramatic librettos, few of which survive; and five cycles of sacred cantata texts (1711, 1712, 1714, 1715, 1716) intended for use by the two Darmstadt Kapellmeister, Graupner and Gottfried Grünewald. The cantatas of the first cycle, Gottgefälliges Kirchen-Opffer, received attention outside Darmstadt as well: J.S. Bach set two of the librettos while still in Weimar (BWV54 and 199) and eight more in Leipzig during the years 1725 and 1726 (BWV110, 57, 151, 16, 32, 13, 170, 35).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Noack: Christoph Graupners Kirchenmusiken (Leipzig, 1916)

F. Noack: Christoph Graupner als Kirchenkomponist (Leipzig, 1926/R)

E. Noack: 'Georg Christian Lehms, ein Textdichter Johann Sebastian Bachs', BJb 1970, 7–18

H. Streck: Die Verskunst in den poetischen Texten zu den Kantaten J.S. Bachs (Hamburg, 1971)

A. Dürr: Die Kantaten von Johann Sebastian Bach (Kassel, 1971, 6/1995)

W. Newmann, ed.: Sämtliche von Johann Sebastian Bach vertonte Texte (Leipzig, 1974)

JOSHUA RIFKIN/KONRAD KÜSTER

Lehotka, Gábor (b Vác, 20 July 1938). Hungarian organist. He began his studies at the age of nine. At the Liszt Academy of Music his teachers were Sebestyén Pécsi and Ferenc Gergely for organ, and Rezső Sugár and Endre Szervánszky for composition; he graduated in 1963. He made his début that year, and has since toured France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Sweden, Italy, Germany, Russia and Poland. In 1975 he was appointed a professor at the Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. One of Hungary's leading organists, he has an excellent technique, and his rhythmic playing and strong sense of style is particularly suited to the music of Bach, in which he specializes. He is a fervent advocate of mechanical-action organs, and has chosen to record on historical Hungarian instruments. Among the first performances he has given is that of Ligeti's Volumina, and of several Hungarian works. He was a founder member of the Liszt Society in 1973 and was awarded the Liszt Prize in 1974.

PÉTER P. VÁRNAI/R

Lehr, André (b Utrecht, 9 Nov 1929). Dutch campanologist. He entered the service of the Eijsbouts bellfoundry at Asten in 1949 and was director of the firm from 1976 to 1991. He also lectured at the Dutch Carillon School in Amersfoort and the Royal Carillon School 'Jef Denyn' in Mechelen. Since 1991 he has devoted himself entirely to research. He was one of the founders of the National Carillon Museum in Asten, of which he has been curator and director since 1961, and the Athanasius Kircher Foundation for research on bells and automatic musical instruments.

As well as the production of many bells and carillons at Eijsbouts, Lehr directed the restoration of many historical instruments and designed several astronomical clocks. In addition, he conducted research on the history of bellfounding and individual bellfounders (including François and Pieter Hemony), the acoustic properties and tuning of bells, the history of the carillon and carillon playing, and the shaping of bells and carillons. The emphasis in his research is on the bells and carillons of the Low Countries.

WRITINGS

'The History of the Hemony-Carillon Tuning', Acustica, i (1951), 101–4

De klokkengieters François en Pieter Hemony [The bellfounders François and Pieter Hemony] (Asten, 1959)

Historische en muzikale aspekten van Hemony-beiaarden [Historical and musical aspects of Hemony carillons] (Amsterdam, 1960)

'Middeleeuwse klokkengietkunst' [The medieval art of bell founding], Klokken en klokkengieters: bijdragen tot de campanologie (Culemborg, 1963), 13–158 [with Eng. summary]

'On Vibration Patterns before Chladni', Janus: revue internationale de l'histoire des sciences, de la médecine, de la pharmacie et de la technique, lii/2 (1965), 113–20 with R. de Jong and R. de Waard: De zingende torens van Nederland [The singing towers of the Netherlands] (Zutphen, 1966–76)

'Alexius Jul(l)ien, Lotharings klokkengieter te Weert en Lier' [Alexius Jul(l)ien, bellfounder from Lorraine, in Weert and Lier], 't Land van Rijen, xviii (1968), 54–87

Van paardebel tot speelklok: de geschiedenis van de klokgietkunst in de Lage Landen [From horse-bell to playing bell: the history of bellfounding in the Low Countries] (Zaltbommel, 1971, 2/1981)

Leerboek der campanologie [Textbook on campanology] (Asten, 1976)

Een klankanalyse van de 16de eeuwse Van Wou-klokken in de Domtoren van Utrecht [An analysis of the sound of the 16th-century Van Wou bells in the Domkerk tower in Utrecht] (Asten, 1980) with others: Voorlopige inventaris van de werkstukken van de Enkhuizer klokkegieters [Preliminary inventory of the products of the bellfounders of Enkhuizen] (Asten, 1981)

'Met losgemaakte ringkraag en in hevig zweet: een oriënterende verkenning in oude beiaardtracturen' [With loosened collar and intense sweating: an introductory guide to early carillon actions], Jaarboek van het Vlaams Centrum voor Oude Muziek, i (1985), 109–222

Klokken en klokkenspelen in het oude China tijdens de Shang- en Chou-dynastie: een muziek-historische studie [Bells and chimes in old China during the Shang and Chou dynasties: a study in musical history] (Asten, 1985)

'A Carillon of Major Third Bells', Music Perception, iv (1987), 245–80

The Designing of Swinging Bells and Carillon Bells in the Past and Present (Asten, 1987)

'A Statistical Investigation of Historical Swinging Bells in West Europe', Acustica, lxxiv (1991), 97–108 with L. Boogert and J. Maassen: 45 Years of Dutch Carillons 1945–1990 (Asten, 1992)

Campanologie: een leerboek over klank en toon van klokken en beiaarden [Campanology: a textbook on the sound and tone of bells and carillons] (Mechelen, 1996)

'Designing Chimes and Carillons in History', Acustica, lxxxiv (1997), 320–36

JOOST VAN GEMERT

Lehrstück (Ger.: 'teaching piece'). A 20th-century neologism closely associated with the work of BERTOLT BRECHT, who probably invented the term; he used it to describe a theatrical genre for amateur performance whose principal function was to teach the participants (through performance and discussion) rather than to engage the attention of an audience. Written at a time when the Nazis were gaining power in Germany, Brecht's Lehrstücke attempt in particular to teach political attitudes, often explicitly Marxist.

Brecht wrote his texts when he was experimenting with novel yet highly simplified forms of presentation derived from agit-prop drama, GEBRAUCHSMUSIK and his own theories of 'epic theatre'. Music plays an important part in all of them, and a dominant one in the Lehrstücke composed by Weill, Hindemith and Eisler. Their settings stretched the boundaries of music theatre by integrating a variety of techniques from conventional opera and theatre with elements from oratorio, revue, dance and film. The composers also underlined the didactic purpose of a Lehrstück, treating it as a means by which amateurs could be taught specific musical accomplishments and a new interpretative dimension added to the dialectic.

Brecht's attitude to his seven Lehrstücke was pragmatic, and he frequently revised them. The first three were revised extensively, with the result that their definitive texts do not correspond with those set to music.

Der Lindberghflug, for example, was first published in 1929 as a play for radio. It was set jointly by Hindemith and Weill and presented at the Baden-Baden Festival in the same year, in a manner indicating that some parts of it were ideally to be supplied by the radio loudspeaker and some by the listener at home. Later in 1929 Weill alone composed a second setting, the published Der Lindberghflug, as a cantata for the concert hall that revealed little of its origins in radio. In 1930 Brecht published an expanded version of his text under the title Flug der Lindberghs, describing it as a 'Radio Lehrstück for boys and girls' (in 1950 he altered the title to Der Ozeanflug, added a prologue and suppressed the name of Lindbergh, who had been a Nazi sympathizer; the title of Weill's cantata was also changed). This work contained no explicitly didactic content until Brecht made his 1930 version, and although suitable for amateurs Weill's cantata is thus not a true Lehrstück.

A work actually called Lehrstück, with music by Hindemith, was written for the same Baden-Baden Festival of 1929, and the vocal score was published in that year. Brecht later published a revised and expanded version of the text as Das Badener Lehrstück vom Einverständnis. Der Jasager, with music by Weill, was written and first performed in 1930. After criticism from the children who performed it, Brecht wrote a second version and a complementary Lehrstück, Der Neinsager. Weill set neither of these texts. Brecht's most important Lehrstück, Die Massnahme, was first performed with music by Eisler in 1930. Paul Dessau composed the music for Die Ausnahme und die Regel (1930), and Kurt Schwaen for Die Horatier und die Kuriatier (1934).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 (K.-D. Krabiel)

S. Günther: 'Lehrstück und Schuloper', Melos, x (1931), 410–13

M. Esslin: Brecht: a Choice of Evils (London, 1959)

J. Willett: The Theatre of Bertolt Brecht (London, 1959, 3/1967)

H. Braun: Untersuchungen zur Typologie der zeitgenössischen Schul- und Jugendoper (Regensburg, 1963)

B. Brecht: 'Zu den Lehrstücken', Gesammelte Werke, ed. E. Hauptmann, xvii (Frankfurt, 1967), 1022–35

R. Steinweg: Das Lehrstück (Stuttgart, 1972, 2/1976)

K.-D. Krabiel: 'Das Lehrstück von Brecht und Hindemith: von der Geburt eines Genres aus dem Geist der Gebrauchsmusik', Hindemith-Jb, xxiv (1995), 146–79

IAN KEMP

Le Huray, Peter (Geoffrey) (b Norwood, London, 18 June 1930; d Cambridge, 7 Oct 1992). English musicologist. He was organ scholar of St Catharine's College, Cambridge, 1949–52, and went on to undertake research under Thurston Dart; after National Service he was a research fellow and was appointed assistant lecturer at Cambridge (1958) and then full lecturer and Fellow of St Catharine's College (1961). He was Barclay Acheson Professor of International Studies at Macalester College, Minnesota, 1969–70.

Le Huray was editor of the Proceedings of the Royal Musical Association, 1962–7, and a member of the editorial committee of Early English Church Music, 1969–91. His research was principally concerned with church music in England from the Reformation to the Restoration and the conditions under which it developed. He supervised, with David Willcocks, the revision of Fellowes's Tudor Church Music editions. In later years he became increasingly interested in the history of music aesthetics and in performing practice. With James Day he produced an important anthology of 18th- and early 19th-century writings on music (1981) from the works of 40 philosophers and critics. His Authenticity in Performance (1990) contributed to the debate on historically informed performance; he had a particular interest in historical keyboard fingering. With John Stevens he was responsible for establishing the Cambridge Studies in Music series. As an organist he broadcast frequently and appeared as soloist at the Proms. He was president of the Incorporated Society of Organists, 1970–72, and from 1991 the chairman of the British Institute of Organ Studies; he wrote on aspects of organ performing practice and technique for The Diapason and Organists Review.

WRITINGS

The English Anthem, 1603–60 (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1959)
'The English Anthem, 1580–1640', PRMA, lxxxvi (1959–60), 1–13
'Towards a Definitive Study of Pre-Restoration Anglican Service Music', MD, xiv (1960), 167–95
Music and the Reformation in England, 1549–1660(London, 1967, 2/1978) with R.T. Daniel: the Sources of English Church Music, 1549–1660, EECM, suppl.i (1972)
'The Role of Music in Eighteenth- and Early-Nineteenth Century Aesthetics', PRMA, cv (1978–9), 90–99
'English Keyboard Fingering in the 16th and Early 17th Centuries', Source Materials and the Interpretation of Music: a Memorial Volume to Thurston Dart, ed. I. Dent (London, 1981), 227–57 with J. Day: Music and Aesthetics in the Eighteenth and Early-Nineteenth Centuries (Cambridge, 1981, abridged 2/1988) with J. Butt: 'In Search of Bach the Organist', Handel and Scarlatti: Tercentenary Essays, ed. P. Williams (Cambridge, 1985), 185–206
Authenticity in Performance: Eighteenth-Century Case Studies (Cambridge, 1990)
'Dom Bédos, Engramelle, and Performance Practice', Aspects of Keyboard Music: Essays in Honour of Susi Jeans, ed. R. Judd (Oxford, 1992), 13–33
'Music and the Arts in Pre-Renaissance and Renaissance Worship: a Question of Expression', Companion to Contemporary Musical Thought, i (London, 1992), 156–207
'Organ Pitch and Organ Accompaniments in Elizabethan and Jacobean Church Music', JBIOS, xvi (1992), 8–13
'Some Thoughts about Cantus Firmus Composition, and a Plea for Byrd's Christus resurgens', Byrd Studies, ed. A. Brown and R. Turbet (Cambridge, 1992), 1–23

EDITIONS

The Treasury of English Church Music, ii [1545–1650] (London, 1965) with D. Brown and W.Collins: T. Weelkes: Collected Anthems, MB, xxiii (1966)
M. Locke: Anthems and Motets, MB, xxxviii (1976)

DAVID SCOTT/ROSEMARY WILLIAMSON

Leiber and Stoller. American songwriting and production team. Jerry Leiber (b Baltimore, 25 April 1933) and Mike Stoller (b Belle Harbor, Long Island, NY, 13 March 1933) met in Los Angeles in 1950 while the former was at high school and the latter was studying music at Los Angeles City College. An aspiring lyricist, Leiber began collaborating on rhythm and blues songs with pianist Stoller. By 1952 they had convinced the rhythm and blues performer Little Willie Littlefield to record their composition Kansas City. It subsequently became a standard, performed by many artists including The Beatles. Despite successfully having their songs recorded, Leiber and Stoller were frustrated with the results, which only vaguely resembled their ideas as to how their compositions should be arranged, played and sung. Consequently, beginning with Big Mama Thornton's recording of Hound Dog in 1953, Leiber and Stoller began to attend sessions at which their songs were being recorded. Although not called as such at that time, they effectively became the producers of their own records.

In 1954 they started their own label, Spark Records, concentrating on The Robins, a Californian vocal group. A year later they moved to Atlantic Records in New York, with the first independent producer's contract in the history of the record industry. Half of The Robins remained in Los Angeles, Leiber and Stoller adding two new members on the East Coast, and renaming the group The Coasters. Between 1956 and 1964 they wrote and produced 18 chart hits with the group. They also wrote Jailhouse Rock, among others for Elvis Presley, and Save the last dance for me, On Broadway and There goes my baby for The Drifters. The last of these songs they also produced, incorporating string accompaniment for the first time into a rhythm and blues record.

In 1964 Leiber and Stoller began their own record companies, Red Bird and Blue Cat, employing other songwriters such as Ellie Greenwich and Jeff Barry, and achieving hits with The Dixie Cups (Chapel of Love) and The Shangri-Las (Remember (walkin' in the sand) and Leader of the Pack), all in 1964, and The Ad Libs (Boy from New York City) in 1965. They continued to act as writers and producers for many artists, including Ruth Brown, King Curtis, Ben E. King, Joe Turner, the Isley Brothers and, in the 1970s, Stealers Wheel, T-Bone Walker and Procol Harum.

Leiber and Stoller were innovatory in several respects. They pioneered a variety of studio techniques, including altering the speed of a performance after it had been recorded and the splicing together of different takes. A superior lyricist, Leiber often wrote what he termed 'playlets', where every member of the group sang the role of an actual character. In every respect each one of their compositions was tailor-made for the abilities and limitations of the particular artists scheduled to record it. Recognizing the seminal import of the recorded performance in post-war popular music, Leiber and Stoller claimed that they wrote records, not songs: more than anyone else they pioneered the modern concept of the producer of a recorded performance. In 1987 Leiber and Stoller were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

SONGS
(selective list)

lyrics by Leiber and music by Stoller; all dates those of the release of the first recording

Kansas City (K.C. Lovin'), 1952; Hound Dog, 1953; Framed, 1954; I Smell a Rat, 1954; Jack-O-Diamonds, 1954; Love Me, 1954; Riot in Cell Block #9, 1954; Black Denim Trousers, 1955; Chicken and the Hawk, 1955; Down in Mexico, 1955; Smokey Joe's Cafe, 1955; Turtle Dovin', 1955; Ruby Baby, 1956; Fools fall in love, 1957; Idol with the Golden Head, 1957; Jailhouse Rock, 1957; Loving You, 1957; Santa Claus is back in town, 1957; Searchin',

1957; Treat me nice, 1957; Young Blood, 1957; (You're so square) Baby, I don't care, 1957

Alligator Wine, 1958; Don't, 1958; King Creole, 1958; The shadow knows, 1958; Trouble, 1958; Yakety Yak, 1958; Along came Jones, 1959; Charlie Brown, 1959; I'm a hog for you, baby, 1959; Love Potion No.9, 1959; Poison Ivy, 1959; Run, Red, Run, 1959; That is rock and roll, 1959; There goes my baby, 1959; Three Cool Cats, 1959; What about us?, 1959; Bad Blood, 1961; Little Egypt, 1961; Saved, 1961; Stand by me, 1961 [under pseud. of Elmo Glick, addl material by B.E. King]

Girls, Girls, Girls, 1962; I'm a woman, 1962; Some Other Guy, 1962, collab. R. Barrett; Bossa Nova Baby, 1963; On Broadway, 1963; Only in America, 1963, collab. C. Weil and B. Mann; D.W Washburn, 1964; Is that all there is?, 1968

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Miller: The Drifters (London, 1971)

B. Miller: The Coasters (London, 1974)

R. Palmer: Baby, that was Rock & Roll: the Legendary Leiber and Stoller (New York, 1978)

ROB BOWMAN

Leibfried, Christoph (b Würzburg, 1566; d Basle, 1635). German organist and composer, nephew of the organist JOHANN WOLTZ. Leibfried matriculated at Tübingen University in 1587. In May 1599 he is recorded as 'Wirceburgensis Francus' in the matriculation lists of the law faculty at Basle University and on 5 July 1599 he was promoted to Doctor of Law.

Although Woltz, whose famous Nova musices organicae tabulatura (RISM 1617[24]/R) is one of the most comprehensive collections of German organ tablature of the late Renaissance, undoubtedly influenced his nephew's musical tastes, it appears that it was Leibfried who actually collected, copied, edited and formatted most of the tablature. Nearly a quarter of the pieces transmitted in the first part are also found in four organ tablature manuscripts prepared and copied by Leibfried between about 1585 and 1600 (CH-Bu F IX 42, 43, 44 and 51); collectively they contain nearly 500 intabulations by such composers as Handl, Ferretti and Lassus. That it was Leibfried rather than Woltz who was responsible for the compilation of the Nova ... tabulatura is suggested by the close readings shared by Leibfried's manuscripts and the Woltz print, by the numerous extant printed collections of vocal music that Leibfried owned and clearly used to create his own intabulations and, most importantly, by the contents of CH-Bu F IX 51. This recently discovered manuscript of organ tablature, copied on a paper type also found in the Woltz print, shows Leibfried at work on the title-page and index of his uncle's volume, as well as on the layout and design for several of the initial pieces. Several engravings by Leibfried are contained in Johannes Kepler's Mysterium Cosmographicum (1596). Leibfried met the German astronomer and mathematician while a student at Tübingen.

WORKS

all MSS in CH-Bu

Carmen gratulatorium, 4vv; Clausula fugata vice, 4vv; Dulcis amor pietas, 5vv; Fuga, 5vv; Nunc quoniam Themidis, 5vv

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Hug: Johann Woltz und seine Orgeltabulatur (diss., U. of Tübingen, 1960)

J. Kmetz: Die Handschriften der Universitätsbibliothek Basel: Katalog der Musikhandschriften des 16. Jahrhunderts: quellenkritische und historische Untersuchung (Basle, 1988)

JOHN KMETZ

Leibniz, Gottfried Wilhelm (b Leipzig, 3 July 1646; d Hanover, 14 Nov 1716). German philosopher. As he lived in Hanover from 1678, he may well have met Handel when he was there in 1710–11 and 1716. Nothing, however, is known about this or whether his known contact there with Steffani concerned musical matters. The writings of this great philosopher and all-round scholar reveal a profound knowledge of the theoretical basis of music. In his dissertation De arte combinatoria (1666) he described the principle of a universal language, and in 1678 produced a fully developed artificial language which he believed could be translated into music. Between 1705 and 1711 his studies in the theory of music were stimulated by his correspondence with Conrad Henfling, a mathematician from Ansbach. In a letter dated 30 August 1706 which deals with many music-theoretical issues, Henfling set out detailed calculations for a method of temperament. After making some revisions of his own, Leibniz had Henfling's work published as 'Epistola de novo suo systemate musico' (in Miscellanea berolinensia, 1710; Ger. trans. in Musiktheorie, ii (1987), 169–81; iii (1988), 171–81). Leibniz also analysed temperament in the second of two letters to Christoph Goldbach (1712), which contains a detailed discussion of a system developed by Christiaan Huygens. In his first letter to Goldbach, Leibniz cited, among other things, the well-known definition 'musica est exercitium arithmeticae occultum nescientis se numerare animi' ('music is the hidden arithmetical exercise of a mind unconscious that it is calculating'), which expresses the idea that the unconscious realization of mathematical proportions is the ultimate cause of the sensuous effect of music; he associated this with a tradition going back to antiquity which has since been taken up scientifically in the theories of consonance formulated by Heinrich Husmann. In the theory of harmony, dissonances were as natural to him as shadows in the theory of light.

The above-mentioned definition of music places Leibniz's knowledge of music theory in a wider framework, within the tradition of Pythagorean harmony. The ancient idea of a harmony of the universe, a harmony of the spheres, was revived as a result of humanist thought but was more or less refuted by many thinkers, among them Robert Fludd, Athanasius Kircher and Marin Mersenne. Kepler alone pursued the idea scientifically and produced as evidence in his Harmonices mundi libri V (1619) intervallic proportions deriving from the orbit of the planets. Leibniz knew this tradition, revered Kepler above all such thinkers and often expressed markedly similar ideas. Harmony is a central concern of his philosophy, especially his system of 'prestabilized harmony', to which his concepts of analogy, representation, rhyme etc. are related. His philosophical harmony is, however, more abstract and metaphysical than that of Pythagoras; above all, it lacks intervallic proportions as connected laws. Yet he was aware of these too, as many references make clear, and there are indications from his last years that he was planning a philosophical synthesis with harmonic content. He had a preference for church music and valued simple hymns above all, yet he also wrote an authoritative assessment of opera for Marci of the Hamburg Opera.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Haase: Leibniz und die Musik (Hommerich, 1963)

R. Haase: 'Leibniz und die harmonikale Tradition', Leibniz-Kongress II: Hannover 1972, i (Wiesbaden, 1973), 123–34

D. Heikamp: 'Ontologische Prämissen in der Musikphilosophie Adornos: der Rückgriff auf Leibniz', GfMKB: Berlin 1974, 470–72

B. Baas: '"L'animal musicien": philosophie et musique chez Leibniz', Musique en jeu, xxv (1976), 49–72
H.-D. Klein: 'Leibniz und die Krise der seriellen Musik', Musicologica austriaca, ii (1979), 26–36
R. Haase, ed.: Der Briefwechsel zwischen Leibniz und Conrad Henfling (Frankfurt, 1982)
W. Schulze: 'Ein harmonikales Analogon: Leibniz' Strammbaum-Modell in der Dissertatio de arte combinatoria', Studia Leibnitiana, xix/1 (1987), 98–116
W. Schulze: 'Henflings Brief über sein neues Musik-System', Musiktheorie, ii (1987), 183–6
P. Bailhache: 'Le système musical de Conrad Henfling', RdM, lxxiv (1988), 5–25
G. Deleuze: Le pli: Leibniz et le Baroque (Paris, 1988; Eng. trans., 1993)
A. Luppi: Lo specchio dell'armonia universale: estetica e musica in Leibniz (Milan, 1989)
K. Oversand: 'Barokkens fold: Deleuze, Leibniz og Bach', SMN, xvi (1990), 53–78
P. Bailhache: Leibniz et la théorie de la musique (Paris, 1992)
U. Leisinger: Leibniz-Reflexe in der deutschen Musiktheorie des 18. Jahrhunderts (Würzburg, 1994)
A. Luppi: 'La musica sacra e il valore teologico della musica in G.W. Leibniz', Revista internazionale di musica sacra, xv (1994), 25–52

RUDOLF HAASE

Leibowitz, René (b Warsaw, 17 Feb 1913; d Paris, 29 Aug 1972). French music theorist, teacher, conductor and composer of Polish-Latvian origin. He spent his early years in Warsaw and, following a stay in Berlin, came to Paris in 1929 or 1930. It was there that he met musicians associated with Schoenberg, including Dessau, Kolisch and Erich Itor Kahn. Leibowitz's claims of having met Schoenberg and studied with Webern in the early 1930s remain unsubstantiated: it appears that his knowledge of the their music was acquired primarily through intensive study of their scores, an activity he continued throughout the war years, which he spent fleeing the German occupying forces in Vichy France. He made personal contact with Schoenberg in 1945, and with Adorno in 1946.

Leibowitz played a crucial role in the dissemination of the music of the Second Viennese School after its wartime suppression in Nazi-occupied countries. In 1947 he organized a chamber music festival, 'Hommage à Schoenberg', in which he conducted the first Paris performances of several Second Viennese School compositions. Of greater international significance, however, were his books: Schoenberg et son école (Paris, 1947), the first monograph on Schoenberg, Berg and Webern outside the German language, was followed by Qu'est-ce que la musique de douze sons? (Liège, 1948) an analysis of Webern's Concerto, op.24, and Introduction à la musique de douze sons (Paris, 1949), a more thoroughgoing formulation of the 12-note technique. His private classes in Paris, which attracted Boulez, Globokar, Henze, Nigg and Diego Masson among others, gave many students their first access to the scores of Schoenberg and Webern, most of which were otherwise unobtainable in the decade after the war. He also taught at the Darmstadt summer courses (1948–9, 1954–5).

Leibowitz's position within the intellectual milieu of French surrealism and existentialism – through his acquaintance with intellectuals such as Daniel-Henry Kahnweiler, Claude Lévi-Strauss, Jean-Paul Sartre and Maurice Merleau-Ponty – was decisive in his successful integration of Schoenberg's Germanic musical thought into a context that was originally alien to it. However during the 1950s his writings came under attack: accusations of dogmatic orthodoxy and academicism came from Boulez and others of his generation, who favoured a more radical, generalized approach to serial composition, while for Babbitt in America, his codification of 12-note technique lacked rigour. Though none of his later books, such as those on opera and musical interpretation, proved as influential as the pioneering texts of the 1940s, Leibowitz remained productive, as composer and conductor as well as scholar. His compositions, while indebted to the French tradition in their approach to instrumental colour, maintain an allegiance to the Schoenberg school, both in their use of classical 12-note technique, and in their textural transparency and expressive gestures. As a conductor, he advocated an analytically based approach to interpretation and scrupulous fidelity to the score. Among his recordings is a complete cycle of the Beethoven symphonies with the RPO, recorded for RCA in 1962 and reissued in 1992 on the Chesky label.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

La nuit close (drame musical, 3 scenes, G. Limbour), op.17, 1947–50
Circulaire de minuit (op, 3, Limbour), op.30, 1952–3
Les espagnols à Venise (ob, 1, Limbour), op.60, 1963, Grenoble, 27 Jan 1970
Labyrinthe (op, 1, Leibowitz, after C. Baudelaire), op.85, 1969
Todos carán (op, 3, Leibowitz, after a Goya painting), op.91, 1972

ORCHESTRAL

Sym., op.4, 1939–41; Conc., op.5, vn, pf, 17 insts, 1941–2; Chbr Sym., op.16, 12 insts, 1946–8; Perpetuum mobile 'The City' (dramatic sym., W.C. Williams), op.24, spkr, orch, 1951; Pf Conc., op.32, 1954; Concertino, op.35, va, small orch, 1954; Vn Conc., op.50, 1959; 3 bagatelles, op.51, str, 1959; Art for Art's Sake, fantasy for jazz orch, op.52, 1959; Concertino, op.53, trbn, orch, 1960; Vc Conc., op.58, 1962; Rhapsodie symphonique, op.63, 1964–5; Capriccio, op.79, fl, str, 1967

VOCAL

Choral: 4 Stücke (F. Hölderlin), op.13, 1944–6; The Grip of the Given (cant., L. Abel), op.21, chorus, fl + pic, cl + b cl, tpt, hp, vn/va, vc, 1949–50; Träume vom Tod und vom Leben (sym. funèbre, H. Arp), op.33, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1954–5; The Renegade (cant., Abel), op.40, chorus, ob, cl, b cl, hn, 2 vn, va, vc, 1956; A Prayer (sym. cant., J. Joyce), op.68, A, male chorus, orch, 1965; 2 Settings (W. Blake), op.71, chorus, 1966; Laboratoire central (M. Jacob), op.88, spkr, female chorus, small orch, 1970; 3 Poems (P. Reverdy), op.92, 4 solo vv/chorus, pf, 1971

1v, orch/ens: Tourist Death (A. MacLeish), concert aria, op.7, S, chbr orch, 1943; Sérénade (Hölderlin and C. Brentano), op.38, Bar, fl, ob, cl + b cl, hn, hp, vn, va, vc, 1955; Capriccio (Hölderlin), op.41, S, fl, b cl, hp, va, vc, cel, vib, xyl, perc, 1956; Chanson dada (T. Tzara), op.76b, child's v, cl, hn, vc, pf, 1968; Sonett (e.e. cummings), op.77, S, fl, cl, hn, vn, vc, 1967; Legend (H. Crane), op.82, S, pf, orch, 1968; Scene and Aria (G. Heym), op.89, S, orch, 1970

1v, pf: 6 mélodies (E. Dowson, G. Apollinaire, W.C. Williams, P. Eluard, C. Einstein, M. Leiris), op.6, Bar, pf, 1937–42; 3 mélodies (P. Picasso), op.9, S, pf, 1943; 4 mélodies (Leiris), op.18, S, pf, 1949; 5 chansons (Abel, Williams, Joyce, Crane, E. Pound), op.25, S, pf, 1950–51; Damocles (Leiris), op.49, S, pf, 1958; 2 mélodies (A. Césaire), op.67, S, pf, 1965; 3 poèmes (G. Bataille), op.73, B, pf, 1966; 2 poèmes (Leiris), op.76a, 1966; 4 lieder (Einstein), op.80, female v, pf, 1967

CHAMBER AND INSTRUMENTAL

Str Qts: no.1, op.3, 1939–40; no.2, op.22, 1948–50; no.3, op.26, 1951–2; no.4, op.45, 1957–8; no.5, op.59, 1962–3; no.6, op.65, 1965; no.7, op.72, with B solo to text by A. Césaire, 1966; no.8, op.83, 1968

Other chbr: 10 Canons, op.2, ob, cl, bn, 1939; Chbr Conc., op.10, wind qnt, str trio, db, 1943–4; Wind Qnt, op.11, 1944; Sonata, op.12a/b, vn/fl, pf, 1944–8; Explanation of Metaphors (R. Queneau), op.15, spkr, 2 pf, hp, perc, 1947; Pf Trio, op.20, 1950; 5 Pieces, op.29, cl, pf, 1952; Str Trio, op.42, 1956–7; Humoresque, op.44, 6 perc, 1957; Marijuana, variations non sérieuses, op.54, vn, trbn, vib, pf, 1960; 4 Bagatelles, op.61, trbn, pf, 1964; Motifs (G. Limbour), op.74, spkr, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1966–7; Suite, op.81, wind qnt, str trio, db, 1967; Variationen, op.84, sax qt, 1969; Petite suite, op.90, 6 cl, 1970

Pf: Sonata, op.1, 1939; 4 Stücke, op.8, 1942–3; 3 pièces, op.19, 1949–50; Fantasie, op.27, 1952; 6 petits morceaux (en forme de suite), op.28, 1952; Sonata [no.2] quasi una fantasia, op.43, 1957; Concertino, op.47, pf 4 hands, 1958; Toccata, op.62, 1964; 3 études miniatures, op.64, 1965; Petite suite, op.75, 1966; Rondo capriccioso, op.78, 1967; 3 intermezzi, op.87, 1970

Other solo inst: Fantasie, op.56, vn, 1961; 3 Caprices, op.70, vib, 1965

MSS in CH-Bps

Principal publishers: Bomart, Universal

WRITINGS

Schönberg et son école (Paris, 1947; Eng. trans., 1949/R)
Qu'est-ce que la musique de douze sons? (Liège, 1948)
Introduction à la musique de douze sons (Paris, 1949/R, 3/1981)
L'artiste et sa conscience (Paris, 1950)
L'évolution de la musique, de Bach à Schoenberg (Paris, 1952)
Histoire de l'opéra (Paris, 1957) with J. Maguire: Thinking for Orchestra: Practical Exercises in Orchestration (New York, 1960)
Schoenberg (Paris, 1969)
Le compositeur et son double: essais sur l'interpretation musicale (Paris, 1971)
Les fantômes de l'opéra (Paris, 1973)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Ogdon: 'Concerning an Unpublished Treatise of René Leibowitz', Journal of the Arnold Schoenberg Institute, ii/1 (1977), 34–41
J. Maguire: 'René Leibowitz (1913–1972)', Tempo, no.131 (1979), 6–10; no.132 (1980), 2–10
J. Maguire: 'René Leibowitz', PNM, xxi/1 (1982), 241–56
R. Kapp: 'Die Schatten des Urbilds des Doubles – Vorsichtige Annäherung an eine Figur: René Leibowitz', Musiktheorie, ii (1987), 15–31; Eng. trans., Tempo, no.165 (1988), 2–16
R. Kapp: 'Bibliographie: Materialien zu einem Verzeichnis der Schriften von René Leibowitz', Musiktheorie, ii (1987), 275–83
R. Kapp: 'René Leibowitz in Darmstadt', Von Kranichstein zur Gegenwart: 50 Jahre Darmstädter Ferienkurse, ed. R. Stephan and others (Stuttgart, 1996), 77–87
S. Meine: 'Der Komponist als Interpret – Der Interpret als Komponist: René Leibowitz im Briefwechsel mit Theodor W. Adorno', Musiktheorie, xi (1996), 53–65
S. Meine: Ein Zwölftöner in Paris: Studien zur Biographie und zur Wirkung von René Leibowitz (1913–1972) (diss., Hochschule für Musik und Theater, Hanover, 1998)

SABINE MEINE

Leich. Middle High German for 'lai'. See LAI, §1(ii).

Leichnamschneider [Leichamschneider, Leichnambschneider, Leicham Schneider]. Austrian family of brass instrument makers of Swabian origin. Working in Vienna, they evolved the first specifically orchestral model of horn with crooks about 1700. (Johann) Michael Leichnamschneider (b Osterberg, nr Memmingen, *c*1670/? bap. 26 Aug 1676; d Vienna, 2 Dec 1751) took his oath as a citizen of Vienna in 1700 and married in 1701. In 1703 he furnished horns with crooks and tuning-bits – the earliest of their kind – to the abbey of Kremsmünster. In 1713/14 he supplied instruments to Göttweig Abbey; his signed receipt is preserved there. A Johannes Leichnamschneider (d Vienna, after 1741), was possibly a brother of Michael (in which case, b Osterberg, bap. 26 June 1679); the two men, however, maintained separate workshops throughout their working lives. Johannes supplied the monastery of Zwettl with a pair of Jägerhörner in 1708 and a pair of trumpets in 1718. A pair of 'French hunting horns' (1711) by him were owned by the Duke of Chandos. The pair of silver parforce horns with gold mounts made by Johannes in 1725 for Lord Tredegar lend support to the theory that he worked with Count Sporck, the first patron of artistic horn playing: Michael Rentz, a copper engraver to the courts of Vienna and Prague and a protégé of Sporck, engraved the hunting scenes of the gold garlands of these horns.

The name of Franz Leichnamschneider (*b c*1716; d Vienna, 6 Nov 1767), presumably the son of Michael, appears on a gold-mounted silver trumpet that Maria Theresa presented to the Viennese court orchestra in 1746. The instrument is associated with, but not part of, a set of five silver trumpets by Michael Leichnamschneider dated 1741; all six are in the Kunsthistorisches Museum, Vienna. Johann Leichnamschneider, a copper engraver, appears in the parish records of St Stephansdom in 1747. Although the name was not uncommon, he may perhaps have been related, and perhaps worked as an associate, engraving garlands and collars.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Waterhouse-LangwillI
H.A. Fitzpatrick: The Horn and Horn-Playing, and the Austro-Bohemian Tradition from 1680 to 1830 (London, 1970)
J. Berkovec: 'František Antonín Sporck a jeho kapela', HV, xxvi (1989), 32–40
R. Maunder: 'Viennese Wind-Instrument Makers, 1700–1800', GSJ, li (1998), 170–91

HORACE FITZPATRICK/JANET K. PAGE

Leichner, Eckhardt. German musician who made several sacred contrafacta of secular works by JOHANN HERMANN SCHEIN.

Leichtentritt, Hugo (b Pleschen [now Pleszew], 1 Jan 1874; d Cambridge, MA, 13 Nov 1951). German musicologist, music critic and composer. At the age of 15 he was sent to the USA where he studied liberal arts at Harvard University (BA 1894) and music with John Knowles Paine; he continued his musical studies in Paris (1894–5) and at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin (1895–8). Subsequently he studied music history and aesthetics at Berlin University under Fleischer and Friedlaender (1898–1901), taking the doctorate there in 1901 with a dissertation on Keiser's operas. While lecturing in composition, music history and aesthetics at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory, Berlin (1901–24), he taught composition privately in Berlin and wrote music criticism for several journals, including the Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung, Die Musik, Signale für die musikalische Welt and the Vossische Zeitung, and was German correspondent of the Musical Courier and the Musical Times. His compositions, which include a comic opera Die Sizilianer (1920), concertos, song cycles, piano and chamber music, and a symphony, enjoyed a measure of success in Germany and he was a close friend of Busoni and Reger. In 1933 he left Germany to settle in the USA at the invitation of Harvard University, where he was a lecturer in music until his retirement in 1940; thereafter he lectured at Radcliffe College and New York University (1940–44). Concurrently he was a contributing editor of Oscar Thompson's The International Cyclopedia of Music and Musicians (New York, 1939), contributed articles to the Musical Quarterly and had four books published by the Harvard University Press.

Leichtentritt hoped to re-establish himself in the USA as a respected writer on music and (especially) composer, and the failure of his music to gain acceptance greatly disappointed him. As a critic his hopes were only partially realized, and as a musicologist his strong opinions and characteristic directness of expression damaged his reputation. After his death his personal library was purchased by the University of Utah, and his manuscripts and papers were deposited in the Library of Congress.

Leichtentritt was an extremely thorough and painstaking scholar. For his monumental Geschichte der Motette (1908) he analysed over 600 motets in manuscript. His book on Handel (1924), in addition to treating the known facts of Handel's life, gives a comprehensive survey of his works, discussing in some detail his operas and oratorios, most of which were unperformed at that time. The short volume Geschichte der Musik (1909) was intended as an outline history of music to guide the student and lay person interested in the evolution of Western music. Two works represent the culmination of Leichtentritt's writings and the synthesis of his thought: Music, History, and Ideas (1938), which he developed from his Harvard lectures, examines music as a part of general culture, expounding its relationship to the other arts, political and social conditions, philosophy and religion; and Music of the Western Nations (1956), in which music is viewed as an expression of the cultural status of the various nations.

WRITINGS

Reinhard Keiser in seinen Opern: ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der frühen deutschen Oper (diss., U. of Berlin, 1901; Berlin, 1901)
'Ein Urahne des Berliozschen Requiem', AMz, xxx (1903), 677–81
'Über Pflege alter Vokalmusik', ZIMG, vi (1904–5), 192–202
Frédéric Chopin (Berlin, 1905)
ed.: L. Bussler: Der strenge Satz in der musikalischen Kompositionslehre (Berlin, rev. 2/1905)
'Aufführungen älterer Musik in Berlin', ZIMG, vii (1905–6), 368–72
'Was lehren uns die Bildwerke des 14.–17. Jahrhunderts über die Instrumentalmusik ihrer Zeit?', SIMG, vii (1905–6), 315–64
Geschichte der Motette (Leipzig, 1908/R) ed.: A.W. Ambros: Geschichte der Musik, iv (Leipzig, 3/1909/R; Eng. trans., 1938 as Everybody's Little History of Music)
Musikalische Formenlehre (Leipzig, 1911, 4/1948; Eng. trans., 1951 as Musical Form, 2/1961)
ed.: L. Bussler: Kontrapunkt und Fuge im freien (modernen) Tonsatz (Berlin, 2/1912)
ed.: J.C. Lobe: Katechismus der Musik (Leipzig, 1913, 3/1926)
'The Renaissance Attitude toward Music', MQ, i (1915), 604–22
Ferruccio Busoni (Leipzig, 1916)
'Die Quellen des Neuen in der Musik', Melos, i (1920), 28–33
Analyse der Chopin'schen Klavierwerke (Berlin, 1921–2)
'Nationalism and Internationalism in Music', Sackbut, ii/12 (1921–2), 13–16
'Philipp Jarnach', Musikblätter des Anbruch, v (1923), 258–62
'Das Händelsche Opernwerk', Die Musik, xvi (1923–4), 551–7
'German Music of the Last Decade', MQ, x (1924), 193–218
Händel (Stuttgart, 1924)
Ignatz Waghalter (New York, 1924)
'Harmonic Daring in the 16th Century', MM, v/1 (1927–8), 12–21
'Schönberg and Tonality', MM, v/4 (1927–8), 3–10
'Schubert's Early Operas', MQ, xiv (1928), 620–38
'Arnold Schönbergs Op.19', Die Musik, xxv (1932–3), 405–12
'Bartok and the Hungarian Folk-Song', MM, x (1932–3), 130–39
'Handel's Harmonic Art', MQ, xxi (1935), 208–23
'On Editing Netherlands Music', Musical Mercury, ii (1935), 5–11
'On the Prologue in Early Opera', PAMS 1936, 88–95
Music, History, and Ideas (Cambridge, MA, 1938, 2/1947/R)
'The Reform of Trent and its Effect on Music', MQ, xxx (1944), 319–28
Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New American Music (Cambridge, MA, 1946)
ed. N. Slonimsky: Music of the Western Nations (Cambridge, MA, 1956)

EDITIONS

Hieronymus Praetorius: Ausgewählte Werke, DDT, xxiii (1905/R)
Deutsche Hausmusik aus vier Jahrhunderten, i (Berlin, 1907, 2/1921)
J. Schenk: Scherzi musicali, UVNM, xxviii (1907)
Andreas Hammerschmidt: Ausgewählte Werke, DDT, xl (1910/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.E. Selby, ed.: A Catalogue of Books and Music Acquired from the Library of Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt by the University of Utah Library (Salt Lake City, 1954)
N. Slonimsky: 'Hugo Leichtentritt (1874–1951)', Music of the Western Nations (Cambridge, MA, 1956), v–viii
J.E. Seiach: Leichtentritt's 'History of the Motet': a Study and Translation (Chapters 7–15) (diss., U. of Utah, 1958)
C.E. Steinzor: 'Hugo Leichtentritt', American Musicologists, c.1890–1945: a Bio-Bibliographical Sourcebook to the Formative Period (New York, 1989)

RODNEY H. MILL/MICHAEL VON DER LINN

Leiden. City in the Netherlands. In about 1400 the city employed a number of pipers and trumpeters to take part in processions. There were three main churches, the Pieterskerk (12th century with 14th-century additions), the Pancraskerk (14th century, now Hooglandse Kerk) and the Onze Lieve Vrouwekerk (14th century) which has not survived. In the 15th century the municipality repeatedly tried to improve the singing, including the discant, in these churches. A choirbook from the Lopsterklooster near Leiden contains some examples of Christmas songs for two voices. Improvement in church singing was particularly fostered by the colleges of the Getijdenmeesters throughout the country. The St Pieter Getijdencollege acquired an excellent reputation in the 16th century. Its extant choirbooks, dating from 1549 and subsequent years, include masses, motets and Magnificat settings by Clemens non Papa, Josquin des Prez, Willaert, Crecquillon and others.

In 1572 Leiden accepted the Reformation and consequently secular forms of music-making became more prominent than ecclesiastical. In 1593 Cornelis Schuyt, the most important figure in the city's musical history, was appointed city organist alongside his father. The terms of his appointment are characteristic of the task of a Protestant organist at that time: to play the organ before and after services and on weekdays. In 1636 it was decided that the organ should be used to accompany psalm-singing during services. From 1639 to 1643 the main organ of the Pieterskerk was enlarged by the organ builders Van Hagerbeer. In 1994 a restoration was begun to bring the instrument back to its 17th-century state, although leaving some later additions intact. The small choir organ of the Pieterskerk, originally built by Jan van Covelens (*c*1470–*c*1532), was transferred to the Marekerk in 1733 and enlarged there by Rudolph Garrels. The Hooglandse Kerk has an organ built by Peter Janszoon de Swart around 1565 and later thoroughly changed by the Van Hagerbeers (1637–8).

The first music printed in the northern Netherlands, the Missale Trajectense, was produced in Leiden in 1514 by Jan Seversz. Music printing became important towards the end of the 16th century when the Flemish printer Christoffel Plantin from Antwerp established a branch firm in Leiden, which was managed by his son-in-law Francis Raphelengius. There the vocal and instrumental works of Cornelis Schuyt were printed, as were the Rimes françoises et italiennes (1612) of Sweelinck.

There is evidence of an early kind of collegium musicum, called the Broederschap en Gemeene Vergadering in de Muzyk, active in 1578. In 1611 Cornelis Schuyt dedicated his six-part consort music to five Leiden 'amatori e fautori della musica', suggesting the existence of an ensemble in which the composer took part himself. In the second half of the 17th century there was a collegium which assembled weekly. A century later the city had two public concert rooms, one at the Brede Straat, the other at the Papegracht. Incidental opera was performed given in the Schouwburg.

During the 17th century many foreign musicians settled in Leiden, mainly lute and viol teachers, including Joachim van den Hove from Antwerp and Dudley Rosseter, son of Philip Rosseter. Instrument making flourished for some time, the most famous exponent being the violin maker Hendrick Asseling, son of the lute maker Andries Asseling. Leiden University, founded in 1575 as the first university in the northern Netherlands, attracted many foreign musicians. The office of musicus academiae existed from 1686; the first to act as such was J.H. Weyssenbergh (Albicastro) from Vienna.

The Album studiosorum of the university mentions such musicians and composers as Albertus Groneman (1732), Anton Wilhelm Solnitz (1743), Johann Christian Schickhardt (1745) and Pieter Hellendaal (1749). C.F. Ruppe, who became kapelmeester in 1790 and a lecturer in music in 1816, was the last official university musician. He composed cantatas and in 1800 founded the first choral society in Leiden.

Musical life flourished in the 19th century through the activities of various music societies. Music Sacrum, the city's oldest orchestra (founded 1828), gave eight concerts a year. The Maatschappij voor Toonkunst (founded 1834) established a music school which for well over a century has greatly stimulated musical activities and which, in 1961, became the Streekmuziekschool Leiden en Omstreken. Between 1864 and 1879 several music festivals were organized by local choirs.

Leiden has no professional orchestra but several amateur ones, two of which are student societies. The main concert hall is the Stadsgehoorzaal, dating from the late 19th century and modernized in the 1960s and again in 1996. Concerts are given by local amateur groups, professional chamber music ensembles and occasionally by The Hague Residentie Orchestra and the Rotterdam PO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G.W. Groen: Ons eeuwfeest (1834–1934): Maatschappij voor toonkunst te Leiden (Leiden, 1934)
D.J. Balfoort: Het muziekleven in Nederland in de 17de en 18de eeuw (Amsterdam, 1938, enlarged 2/1981)
C.C. Vlam and T. Dart: 'Rosseters in Holland', GSJ, xi (1958), 63–9
E. Pelinck and C.C. Vlam: 'De ordinaris muzikanten van de Leidse Universiteit', Leids Jaarboekje (1963), 50–60
Leids Jaarboekje (1968) [devoted entirely to music]
A. Annegarn: Floris en Cornelis Schuyt: muziek in Leiden van de vijftiende tot het begin van de zeventiende eeuw (Utrecht, 1973)
R. Rasch and T. Wind: 'The Music Library of Cornelis Schuyt', From Ciconia to Sweelinck: donum natalicum Willem Elders, ed. A. Clement and E. Jas (Amsterdam, 1994), 327–353
J. van Biezen: Het Nederlandse orgel in de renaissance en de barok, in het bijzonder de school van Jan van Covelens (Utrecht, 1995)

JAN VAN DER VEEN/THIEMO WIND

Leider, Frida (b Berlin, 18 April 1888; d Berlin, 4 June 1975). German soprano. She made her début at Halle in 1915, and filled other engagements at Rostock, Königsberg and Hamburg until her move in 1923 to the Berlin Staatsoper, where she was principal dramatic soprano for some 15 years. She appeared there in numerous Mozart, Verdi and Strauss operas as well as in Fidelio and in the big Wagner roles that brought her international fame. In 1924 she made her Covent Garden début as Isolde and Brünnhilde, at once becoming the favourite Wagnerian soprano of the house, to which she returned every year until 1938; her other roles there included Donna Anna,

Frida Leider as Isolde in Wagner's 'Tristan und Isolde'

Leonora (Il trovatore) and Gluck's Armide. Between 1928 and 1938 she was a regular Brünnhilde, Isolde and Kundry at Bayreuth. Her American career was centred on Chicago, where she was heard in Fidelio, Der Rosenkavalier, La Juive and Un ballo in maschera, in addition to her Wagnerian parts.

Leider was a splendid artist with a dark-coloured, ample and well-trained voice of lovely quality, and a fine-spun legato and purity of phrase that enabled her to excel in Mozart and Italian opera as well as in Wagner. During her best years she made many valuable recordings, often in company with Melchior, Schorr and her other regular Wagnerian associates. These have all appeared in CD transfers, worthy mementos of her treasurable art.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Leider: Das war mein Teil (Berlin, 1959; Eng. trans., 1966/R, as Playing my Part) [with discography by H. Burros]
D. Shawe-Taylor: 'Frida Leider (1888–1975)', Opera, xxxix (1988), 905–8

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR/R

Leidesdorf, Marcus (Maximilian Josef). Austrian music publisher. He was a partner in the firm of Ignaz SAUER.

Leiding, Georg Dietrich. See LEYDING, GEORG DIETRICH.

Leidzén, Erik W(illiam) G(ustav) (b Stockholm, 25 March 1894; d New York, 20 Dec 1962). American composer, arranger and conductor of Swedish birth. He studied at the Swedish Royal Academy of Music, Stockholm, emigrated to the USA in 1915, and by 1923 assumed leadership of the Salvation Army New England Staff Band. In 1926 he moved to New York, where he became music director of the Salvation Army's Centennial Memorial Temple. He consequently composed hundreds of vocal and instrumental pieces for the Army, and wrote orchestral transcriptions and original works for the Goldman Band, many of which were published by Carl Fischer and Charles Colin. It has been suggested that he also made substantial contributions to many marches by E.F. Goldman and band works by Ernest Williams, including the Symphony in C minor. He was head of the theory department at the Ernest Williams School for eight years, director of the Swedish Glee Club of Brooklyn and the Arma Company band and a teacher at the National Music Camp, Interlochen, Michigan. Between 1951 and 1962 he taught at the Salvation Army's Star Lake Musicamp. In 1954 he conducted the US Air Force Orchestra in the première of his Irish Symphony. His published writings include An Invitation to Band Arranging (Bryn Mawr, PA, 1950).

WORKS

Orch: 11 ovs., incl. Holiday Ov., 1939; 9 suites, incl. Suite in C, str, 1939; 2 syms., incl. Irish Sym., 1939; 7 chorale preludes, incl. Doxology, 1946; 8 rhapsodies, incl. 2 Swedish Rhapsodies, 1950–52; Concertino, trbn, band, 1952; Sinfonietta, brass band, 1955; None Other Name, 1958; 33 works, solo inst, band; 63 sacred works, brass; 65 marches; *c*85 transcrs. of works by J.S. Bach, Bartók, Berlioz, Dvořák, Glier, Musorgsky, Rimsky-Korsakov, Wagner, others

Chbr and solo inst: Wind Septet, 1914; 2 suites, pf, 1915; 9 programmatic pieces, pf, 1916–40; Str Qt, 1920; Petite suite suédoise, vn, pf, 1922; Variations on a Theme of Chopin, 2 pf, 1932

Vocal: 114 works, chorus; 64 solo songs; 21 hymns, carols

Principal publishers: Associated, Belwin-Mills, Colin, Carl Fischer, Salvation Army, G. Schirmer

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Fossey: This Man Leidzén (London, 1966)

R.W. Holz: A History of the Hymn Tune Meditation and Related Forms in Salvation Army Instrumental Music in Great Britain and North America 1880–1980 (diss., U. of Connecticut, 1981)

R.W. Holz: 'Erik William Gustav Leidzén: his Contributions to Concert Band Literature', Journal of Band Research, xxv/1 (1989–90), 78–92 [incl. complete list of works]

R.W. Holz: Erik Leidzén: Band Arranger and Composer (Lewiston, NY, 1990)

RAOUL F. CAMUS (text, bibliography), RONALD W. HOLZ (work-list)

Leier (i) (Ger.). See LYRE.

Leier (ii) (Ger.). A HURDY-GURDY, as in Drehleier, Radleier and Bettlerleier. A Leierkasten, on the other hand, is a BARREL ORGAN.

Leiferkus, Sergey (Petrovich) (b Leningrad [now St Petersburg], 4 April 1946). Russian baritone. He studied in Leningrad, where he was engaged at the Maliy Operniy Teatr from 1972 to 1978. He first sang at the Kirov (now the Mariinsky) Theatre in 1977 as Prince Andrey (War and Peace) and went on to sing Rossini's Figaro, Robert (Iolanta), Don Giovanni and other roles. In 1982 he sang the Marquis in Massenet's Grisélidis at Wexford, returning for Hans Heiling, Boniface (Le jongleur de Notre-Dame) and the Fiddler (Königskinder). He has sung Don Giovanni and Yevgeny Onegin for Scottish Opera, Zurga (Les pêcheurs de perles) and Escamillo for the ENO and Scarpia and Zurga for Opera North. In 1987 Leiferkus toured Britain with the Kirov Opera as Yevgeny Onegin and Tomsky (The Queen of Spades). He made his Royal Opera début as Luna in 1989, returning as Prince Igor, Ruprecht (The Fiery Angel), Iago, Onegin, Scarpia and Telramund. In 1992 he sang Tomsky at Glyndebourne and made his Metropolitan début as Onegin, returning as Iago in 1994. Among his other roles are Nabucco, Amonasro, Telramund and Rangoni (Boris Godunov). Leiferkus's operatic recordings, all displaying his rich, intense timbre and incisive diction, include Don Pizarro, Iago and Telramund as well as four of his finest Russian roles: Tomsky, Mazeppa, Rangoni and Ruprecht. He is also a fine recitalist, and has made outstanding recordings of Russian songs that reveal his brilliant gifts of characterization and, as in Musorgsky's The Peepshow and Song of the Flea, an ebullient sense of humour.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Forbes: 'Sergey Leiferkus', Opera, xli (1990), 175–80

ELIZABETH FORBES

Leifs [Thorleifsson], Jón (b Sólheimar, 1 May 1899; d Reykjavík, 30 July 1968). Icelandic composer and conductor. In Reykjavík he studied the piano with Herdís Matthíasdóttir and Martha Stephensen, and took violin lessons with Oscar Johansen. At the Leipzig Conservatory, from 1916, he studied the piano with Robert Teichmüller, theory and counterpoint with Stephan Krehl and Emil Paul, conducting with Otto Lohse and composition with Aládar Szendrei and Paul Graener. Shortly after graduating in 1921 he married the Jewish-born pianist Annie Riethof; during their honeymoon his fascination with Icelandic folk music began, and although he had at first decided to pursue a conducting career, he now resolved to create a national style of composition based on folk material. In a series of articles published in 1922–4 he argued that the severe, acrimonious character of Icelandic folk music was a direct expression of the national character, forged by the country's harsh landscapes and frequent natural disasters. His earliest work based on folk music (op.2, 1922) uses the elements of tvísöngur (a type of two-voice polyphony featuring motion in parallel 5ths) and rímur (a monophonic genre characterized by frequent changes of metre) that were to become fundamental to his musical style.

Many of Leifs's compositions from the 1920s are in small forms, and often betray a conflict between traditional and avant-garde expression of nationalism in music. Towards the end of the decade, as his style became more uniform in its emphasis on parallel 5ths and triadic block chords, he began to tackle larger forms. In 1930 he completed two of his largest works thus far, the Organ Concerto op.7 and the op.13 Thjóðhvöt ('Iceland Cantata'). The concerto is in many ways his most radical score, its introduction and finale filled with cluster-like harmonies made up of superimposed diminished 7th chords, while the main body juxtaposes a traditional Icelandic funeral chorale and a highly chromatic passacaglia theme in 30 variations. The music of the seven-movement cantata (among the more significant early works) is saturated with allusions to the principal folk music genres; however, it avoids direct quotation of folk material, his first large-scale composition to do so.

In the 1920s Leifs devoted much time to collecting Icelandic folksongs. An expedition in 1925 was followed by two others (1926, 1928) in co-operation with E.M. von Hornbostel and the Berlin phonograph archives; the musical results were occasionally used in his own compositional work, for example in Íslensk rímnadanslög ('Icelandic Dances') op.11. His conducting activities included a tour of Norway, Iceland and the Faroe Islands with the Hamburg PO in 1926, giving inhabitants of both island communities their first opportunity to hear a symphony orchestra in concert.

Except for a period (1935–7) during which he served as head of the Icelandic State Radio's music division, Leifs continued to live in Germany after the Nazis came to power, and his music enjoyed considerable success there in the early 1930s. Although not a Nazi sympathizer, he believed that the promotion of folk-derived art might usher in a Nordic cultural renaissance, a notion not altogether foreign to National Socialist ideology. During this time he began work on his magnum opus, the Edda trilogy of oratorios; the works draw on Old Icelandic mythology in an attempt, as Leifs put it, to 'reclaim the Nordic cultural heritage from the clutches of Wagner'. In the late 1930s, Leifs's career in Germany gradually came to a halt. He would later claim that he had been blacklisted by the Nazis, and although there is no evidence of an official ban, it seems clear that his wife's racial origins were partly responsible for the dwindling interest in his work, along with decreasing sympathy for modernism in the Nazi state. His frustration at the poor reception accorded to his Organ Concerto in 1941 (effectively ending his participation on the German musical scene) inspired him to compose his largest purely instrumental score, the Saga-Symphony op.26. Each of its five movements is based on a character from the Icelandic sagas, and the acerbic qualities of the Icelandic heroes are perfectly complemented by the harsh austerity of Leifs's style. This period also saw the planning of Baldr, a choreographic 'music-drama without words' that would occupy Leifs for five years. The work's thirteen movements are a compendium of Leifs's favourite techniques; the finale includes a volcanic eruption (inspired by an eruption of Mount Hekla in 1947) that points forward to the works of his last decade. Like other of his large scores, Baldr remained unperformed during the composer's lifetime.

His Icelandic citizenship offered protection during the war years, and in 1944 the family was permitted to leave Germany for Sweden. Following a divorce from his wife Leifs returned to Iceland in 1945, and devoted much energy to securing the professional interests of Icelandic composers. He was a founding member of the Society of Icelandic Composers in 1945 and in 1948 of STEF, the Icelandic performing rights society. In 1947 the death of his younger daughter was a devastating blow which led him to compose in her memory four of his most affecting works, including the Requiem, the stark simplicity of which has made it one of his more admired compositions. The 1950s, which brought a second marriage, saw his self-confidence shattered following a series of ill-received Scandinavian performances (including the Saga-Symphony in 1950 and movements from Edda I in 1952). His creativity was rekindled following his third marriage in 1956, and his last 12 years were among his most prolific, including his four tone poems depicting natural phenomena in Iceland (Geysir, Hekla, Dettifoss, Hafís), as well as the completion of Edda II.

Leifs's music is often primitive, with slow-moving chordal progressions punctuated by harsh, percussive accents. Harmonic movement by 3rds and augmented 4ths is pervasive, as are parallel 5ths and metric shifts derived from folk music. While many of his earlier works, such as Minni Íslands ('Iceland Overture'), make use of actual folk melodies, his mature style is marked by an internalization of indigenous musical elements. In his orchestral music, his use of unusual instruments such as the ancient Nordic lur (Baldr) and extended percussion sections, including chains, anvils and sirens (Hekla), creates an unusually powerful blend of archaic and modern styles. In his vocal works, he frequently restricts himself to more limited tonal resources to great effect, with large sections often built around an alternation of major and minor 3rds over a static open 5th (Requiem).

Leifs's music was performed rarely in the decade following his death, though his works gradually became better known both locally and internationally in the wake of Ragnarsson's thesis in 1980. The première performance of the ballet score Baldr by the Iceland Youth SO and Paul Zukofsky in 1991 was a significant milestone, as was the first staging of the work in 2000. A 1995 film, Tár úr steini ('Tears of Stone'), dealing with his life and career in Nazi Germany, was a critical and commercial success. The centenary of his birth in 1999 provided the occasion for a number of first performances; including Hafís ('Ice Drift'), Helga kviða Hundingsbana ('The Lay of Helgi the Hunding-Slayer' and Grógaldr ('The Spell of Gróa'). Leifs's compositional style has only rarely been imitated by later composers. Nevertheless, his music continues to define Icelandic nationalism in its most extreme manifestation, and commentators often resort to visual imagery when describing his music, relating it to the austere, yet overpowering, Icelandic landscape.

WORKS

Stage: Galdra-Loftr (incid music, J. Sigurjónsson), op.6, 1915–25; Baldr (choreog. drama), op.34, T, SATB, orch, 1943–7

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Trilogia piccola, op.1, 1919–24; Org Conc., op.7, 1917–30; Variazioni pastorale (Variationen über ein Thema von Beethoven), op.8, 1920–30, arr. str qt, 1937; Galdra-Loftr Ov., op.10, 1927; Sinfónía I 'Söguhetjur' [Saga Heroes] (Saga-Sym.), op.26, 1941–2; Réminiscence du nord, op.40, 1952; 3 peintures abstraites, op.44, 1955–60; Geysir, op.51, 1961; Hinsta kveðja [Elegy], op.53, 1961; Víkingasvar [A Viking's Answer], op.54, wind ens, perc, va, db, 1962; Fine I, op.55, 1963; Fine II, op.56, 1963; Hughreysting [Consolation], op.66, 1968

Chbr: Quartetto I 'Mors et vita', op.21, str qt, 1939; Quartetto II 'Vita et mors', op.36, str qt, 1948–51; Quintetto, op.50, fl, cl, bn, va, vc, 1960; Scherzo concreto, op.58, pic, fl, ob, eng hn, cl, bn, trbn, tuba, va, vc, 1964; Quartetto III 'El Greco', op.64, str qt, 1965

Solo inst: Vökudraumur [Reverie], pf, 1913; Torrek, op.1 no.2, pf, 1919; 4 Pieces, op.2, pf, 1922; Praeludium e fuga, op.3, vn, 1924; Org Prelude, op.5 no.1, 1924; 25 íslensk thjóðlög [Icelandic Folksongs], pf, 1925; Íslensk rímnadanslög [Icelandic Dances], op.11, pf, 1929; Ný rímnadanslög [New Icelandic Dances], op.14b, pf, 1931, arr. male vv, 1955; 3 Org Preludes, op.16, 1931; Nocturne, op.19a, hp, *c*1934; Türmglockenspiel über Themen aus Beethovens Neunter Symphonie, carillon, 1958; Das Leben muss trotz Allem stets weiter gehen, carillon, 1958; Strákalag [Boy's Song], op.49, pf, 1960

CHORAL

Orats: Edda I 'Sköpun heimsins' [The Creation of the World], op.20, T, Bar, SATB, orch, 1935–9; Edda II 'Líf guðanna' [The Lives of the Gods], op.42, Mez, T, B, SATB, orch, 1951–66; Edda III 'Ragnarök' [The Twilight of the Gods], op.65, Mez, Bar, female chorus, male chorus, SATB, orch, 1966–8, inc.

With orch (SATB unless otherwise stated): Minni Íslands [Icelandic Ov.] (J. Hallgrímsson, E. Benediktsson), op.9, 1926; Thjóðhvöt [Iceland Cant.] (D. Stefánsson), op.13, 1929–30; Landsýn

[Landfall] (Hallgrímsson, Benediktsson), op.41, TB, orch, 1955; Vorvísa [Spring Verse] (Hallgrímsson), op.46, 1958; Jónasar minni Hallgrímssonar [Jónas Hallgrímsson in memoriam], op.48, 1961; Hekla (Hallgrímsson), op.52, 1961; Dettifoss (Benediktsson), op.57, Bar, SATB, orch, 1964; Darraðarljóð [Song of Dorrud] (Njál's Saga), op.60, 1964; Hafís [Drift Ice] (Benediktsson), op.63, 1965

Mixed vv (unacc. unless otherwise stated): Kyrie, op.5 no.2, 1924; Íslenskir söngdansar [Icelandic Dance-Songs] (H. Hafstein, Benediktsson), op.17a, vv, insts ad lib, *c*1931; 3 íslensk sálmalög [3 Icelandic Hymns] (E. Jónsson, H. Pétursson), op.17b, SATB, org, *c*1932–40; 3 söngvar eftir Jónas Hallgrímsson [3 Verses by Jónas Hallgrímsson], op.28, 1943; Íslendingaljóð [Poems of Icelanders] (Icelandic folk tales, Hafstein, Th. Erlingsson, E. Ólafsson and others), op.30, 1943; 3 althýðusöngvar [3 Folksongs] (Icelandic folk tale, G. Kamban, Pétursson), op.32, 1945; Requiem (folk verses, Hallgrímsson), op.33b, 1947

Male vv (unacc. unless otherwise stated): Íslendingaljóð [Poems of Icelanders] (Bólu-Hjálmar, Hallgrímsson, B. Thorarensen), op.15a, 1931; Sjávarvísur [Ocean Verses] (Benediktsson, Th. Gíslason), op.15b, *c*1931; 3 aettjarðarsöngvar [3 Patriotic Songs] (Thorarensen, Benediktsson), op.27, 1927–43; Íslendingaljóð [Poems of Icelanders] (folk verses, Hafstein, Hallgrímsson, P. Ólafsson, M. Jochumsson and others), op.29, 1943; Erfiljóð [Elegies] (Hallgrímsson, Bólu-Hjálmar, E. Skallagrímsson and others), op.35, Mez, TB, vn, 1947; Fjallasöngvar [Mountain Verses] (folk verses, J. Dalaskáld and others), op.37, Mez, Bar, TB, timp, perc, db, 1948; Thorgerðarlög [Songs of Thorgerdur] (folk tales, S. Friðjónsson and others), op.38, TB, fl, va, vc, 1948; 2 söngvar [2 Songs] (L. Thorarensen), op.39, 1948–61; Veðurvísur [Weather Verses] (Hallgrímsson), op.47b, 1961

OTHER VOCAL

Solo vocal with orch: Guðrúnarkviða [The Lay of Gudrun] (Poetic Edda), op.22, Mez, T, B, orch, 1940; Nótt [Night] (Th. Erlingsson), T, B, orch, 1964; Helga kviða Hundingsbana [The Lay of Helgi the Hunding-Slayer] (Poetic Edda), op.61, A, B, orch, 1964; Grógaldr [The Spell of Gróa] (Poetic Edda), op.62, A, T, orch, 1965

1v, pf (unless otherwise stated): 3 erindi úr Hávamálum [3 Verses from Hávamál], op.4, 1924, arr. 1v, orch, 1935; 3 íslensk sálmalög [3 Icelandic Hymns] (H. Pétursson], op.12a, 1929; Faðir vor [The Lord's Prayer], op.12b, 1v, org, 1929; 2 sönglög [2 Songs] (J. Jónsson), op.14a, 1929–30, arr. 1v, orch, 1936; 2 sönglög (Benediktsson), op.18a, 1932–3; Ástarvísur úr Eddu [Love Verses from the Edda], op.18b, 1931–2; 2 íslensk thjóðlög [2 Icelandic Folksongs] (J. Sigurjónsson, folk verse), op.19b, *c*1932; 3 sönglög (S. Grímsson, H. Laxness), op.23, 1941; 3 söngvar úr Íslendingasögum [3 Songs from Icelandic Sagas], op.24, 1941; Söngvar söguhljómkviðunnar [Songs of the Saga Sym.], op.25, 1941–2; Fornislenskar skáldavísur [Old Scaldic Verses from Iceland], op.31, 1944–5; Torrek (E. Skallagrímsson), op.33a, 1947; Skírnarsálmur [Baptismal Psalm], op.43, 1v, org, 1957; Minningarsöngvar um aevilok Jónasar Hallgrímssonar [Memorial Songs on the Death of Jónas Hallgrímsson], op.45, 1958; Stattu steinhús [Stand, House of Stone] (Hallgrímsson), op.47a, 1958

Arrs.: Wiegenlied (J. Jónsson), op.14 no.2, SATB, *c*1935, arr. male vv, *c*1940; Reimweise (Benediktsson), op.18a no.2, 1v, orch, 1936; Es ist ein Ros entsprungen, SATB, 1958; Heilsuheimt [Health Regained] (Th. Valdimarsson), SATB, 1965 [arr. of L. van Beethoven op.132/2]

WRITINGS

'Íslenzkt tónlistareðli', Skírnir, xcvi (1922), 130–43

Tónlistarhaettir (Leipzig, 1922)

'Isländische Volkslieder: zwei Forschungsberichte', ZMw, xi (1928–9), 365–73

'Isländische Volkslieder: dritter Bericht', Mitteilungen der Islandfreunde, xix (1931–2), 2–12, 32–41

Islands künstlerische Anregung: Bekenntnisse eines nordischen Musikers (Reykjavík, 1951)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KdG (M. Hillenstedt)

H.H. Ragnarsson: Jón Leifs, Icelandic Composer: Historical Background, Biography, Analysis of Selected Works (thesis, Cornell U., 1980)

C.-G. Åhlèn: 'Jón Leifs: ett tonsättarporträtt', Tonfallet (1989), no.5, pp.5–28

H.H. Ragnarsson: 'Jón Leifs', Andvari, cxv (1990), 5–38

G. Bergendal: New Music in Iceland (Reykjavík, 1991)

H.H. Ragnarsson: 'A New 20th-Century Voice', Gramophone Explorations, no.1 (1996), 64–5

M. Kohler: 'Jós Leifs: der reine isländische Klang', Nordeuropa-Forum, vii/2 (1997), 46–8

Á. Guðmundsson: 'Isländische Mitläufer und Opfer der Nationalsozialisten', Island, iv/1 (1998), 6–14

C.-G. Åhlèn: Jón Leifs: Tónskáld í mótbyr [Leifs: a composer in adversity] (Reykjavík, 1999)

J.-L. Caron: 'Jón Leifs (1899–1968)', Bulletin de l'Association française Carl Nielsen, no.20 (1999) [Leifs issue]

Á.H. Ingólfsson: 'Beethoven í Tjarnargötunni: Um Jón Leifs og áhrif meistarans', [Beethoven by the pond: Leifs and the master's influence], Ritmennt, iv (1999), 84–101

Á.H. Ingólfsson: 'Composing Iceland: Jón Leifs', Nordic Sounds (1999), no.2, pp.3–8

J. Pickard: 'Jón Leifs (1899–1968)', Tempo, no.208 (1999), 9–16

H. Schwab: 'Jón Leifs und die "gigantischen Vorgänge eines isländischen Vulkanausbruchs": zum Thema "Musik und Landschaft" in den skandinavischen Ländern', Island, v/1 (1999), 3–16

ÁRNI HEIMIR INGÓLFSSON

Leigh, Mitch [Mitchnik, Irwin] (b Brooklyn, NY, 30 Jan 1928). American composer. After studying with Hindemith at Yale, he began his career as a jazz musician. In 1954 he started composing for television and radio commercials and in 1957 founded Music Makers to produce them. After writing incidental music for a revival of Shaw's Too True to be Good (1963) and the Broadway play Never Live Over a Pretzel Factory (1964), he composed the musical play Man of La Mancha (D. Wasserman and J. Darion, after Cervantes; New York, Washington Square Theatre, 22 November 1965). This show, with its hit song 'The Impossible Dream', achieved wide international acclaim, but its successors, Chu Chem (1966), Cry for us All (1970), Home Sweet Homer (1976), Saravá (1979) and Ain't Broadway Grand (1988), were less successful. Leigh was also the composer, conductor and co-producer of the film Once in Paris (1978). At home in a wide range of styles, he has put his versatility to effective use in his treatment of varied subjects.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GänzlEMT

S. Green: The World of Musical Comedy (New York, 1960, 4/1980)

G. Bordman: American Musical Theatre (New York, 1978, 2/1986)

ANDREW LAMB

Leigh, Walter (b Wimbledon, 22 June 1905; d nr Tobruk, Libya, 12 June 1942). English composer. His early musical education came from his mother, a Prussian-born concert pianist, then from Harold Darke. He attended University College School, Hampstead, and Christ's College, Cambridge, graduating in 1926. Subsequently, he studied composition with Hindemith in Berlin (1927–9). In 1931–2 he was musical director of the Festival Theatre in Cambridge, after which he lived in London working as a freelance composer. In World War II he joined a tank regiment and was killed in action.

Leigh's work for amateurs and for the stage reflects Hindemith's concern for practical music-making. The style is straightforward but musicianly, and his dramatic pieces helped to raise the standard of light music in England with their combination of fine craftsmanship and melodic flair. His most successful stage work was the comic opera Jolly Roger (1933), which ran for over three months at the Savoy Theatre before transferring to the Lyceum.

Owing to the diversity of his output, Leigh's style is not easy to define. Works worthy of note include the Sonatina for viola and piano (performed at the 1932 ISCM Festival in Vienna), the avant-garde percussion score for the documentary film Song of Ceylon and the virtuoso showpiece Music for Three Pianos (1932). His best-known work is probably the charming neo-classical Concertino for harpsichord and string orchestra (1936).

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE
all first performed in London

Das blaue von Himmel (incid music, H. Chlumberg), Arts, 16 Feb 1930
Alladin, or Love Will Find the Way Out (pantomime, prol, 3, V.C. Clinton-Baddeley), Lyric Hammersmith, 22 Dec 1931
The Pride of the Regiment, or Cashiered for His Country (comic op, 2, Clinton-Baddeley and S. Mackenzie), St Martin's, 6 July 1932
Jolly Roger, or the Admiral's Daughter (musical burlesque, 3, Clinton-Baddeley and Mackenzie), Savoy, 1 March 1933
Genesis 2 (incid music, A. Menton), Fortune, 10 June 1934
Public Saviour No.1 (incid music, J. Frushard), Piccadilly, 8 July 1935
The Frogs (incid music, Aristophanes), 1936
Parnell (incid music, E.T. Schauffler), New, 4 Nov 1936
Victoria Regina (incid music, L. Housman), Lyric, 21 June 1937
Nine Sharp (revue, 2, H. Farjeon), Little, 26 Jan 1938 [music arr. J. Pritchett]
The Little Revue (2, Farjeon), Little, 21 April 1939 [music arr. J. Pritchett]
In Town Again (triple revue, Farjeon), Criterion, 6 Sept 1940
Diversion (revue, 2, Farjeon), Wyndham's, 28 Oct 1940
Diversion no.2 (revue, 2, Farjeon), Wyndham's, 1 Jan 1941

OTHER WORKS

Orch: 3 pieces for amateur orch, 1929; Music for Str Orch, 1931; Interlude, 1932; Jubilee Overture 'Agincourt', 1935; Concertino, hpd/pf, str orch, 1936; A Midsummer Night's Dream Suite, 1936
Chbr: Str Qt, 1929; Sonatina, va, pf, 1930; 3 movts, str qt, 1930; Trio, fl, ob, pf, 1935; Sonatina, tr rec/fl, 1939
Pf: Music for 3 Pianos, 1932; 3 waltzes, *c*1936; Eclogue, 1940
Songs (1v, pf): Echo's Lament for Narcissus (B. Jonson), 1926; Come Away Death (W. Shakespeare), 1928; Bells (J. Bunyan), 1929; How Sweet I Roamed (W. Blake); O Men from the Fields (P. Collum); The Mocking Fairy (W. de la Mare)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Grove6; MGG1
W.J. Turner: Facing the Music: Reflections of a Music Critic (London, 1933)
R. Wimbush: 'Walter Leigh', MRR, lxviii (1938), 138–41
H.J. Foss: Obituary, MT, lxxxiii (1942), 255 only

JACK WESTRUP/KENRICK DANCE

Leighton, Kenneth (b Wakefield, 2 Oct 1929; d Edinburgh, 24 Aug 1988). English composer and teacher. A chorister at Wakefield Cathedral, he studied classics (1947–50) and composition with Bernard Rose (1950–51) at Queen's College, Oxford. In 1951 he won the Mendelssohn Scholarship, which enabled him to study in Rome with Petrassi. Other awards included the Royal Philharmonic Society Prize (1950 and 1951), the Busoni Prize (1956) for the Fantasia contrappuntistica, the Trieste Prize (1965) for his Sinfonia sacra, the Bernhard Sprengel Prize (1965) and the Cobbett Medal (1968). After positions at the universities of Leeds (1953–5) and Edinburgh (1955–68), Leighton returned to Oxford in 1968 as lecturer in music and Fellow of Worcester College. He took the doctorate from Oxford in 1970, and in the same year was appointed Reid Professor of Music at Edinburgh University. He was made an honorary doctor of the University of St Andrews in 1977 and a FRCM in 1982.

Leighton's music has a compelling balance of intellectual rigour and romanticism, manifest in his highly lyrical melodic idiom, dynamic rhythms, colourful orchestration and virtuoso solo writing. These qualities are exemplified in the highly acclaimed concertos and the solo works for piano and organ. His early serialism, as evinced in the Variations (1955) for piano, owes more to Berg and Dallapiccola than to Schoenberg, showing a concern with thematic transformation within a tonally orientated chromaticism; his later works display a mellower diatonicism, especially the choral works. Also distinctive are his exploitation of 4ths and 2nds, his predilection for fizzing toccata-like textures and resonant sonorities, and his intricate, often fugal use of counterpoint. Alongside a large number of sacred works his concern with religious symbolism is shown by his frequent use of plainsong, chorales and chants as thematic resources (e.g. Fantasy on an American Hymn Tune, the Piano Sonata op.64 and the Alleluia pascha nostrum). In the late works, for example the Third Symphony, a magisterial setting of poems in praise of music for tenor and orchestra, and the equally ravishing solo cantata Earth, Sweet Earth, there is an added visionary energy and opulence, with sonorities reminiscent of Messaien.

WORKS
(selective list)

VOCAL

Stage: Columba (op, 3, E. Morgan), op.77, 1978
Choral: Veris gratia, cant., op.6, 1950; A Christmas Carol (R. Herrick), op.21, Bar, chorus, org/(pf, str), 1953; The Birds (Aristophanes and others), op.28, S/T, chorus, str, pf, 1954; The Light Invisible (Sinfonia Sacra) (T.S. Eliot, Bible: Lamentations), op.16, T, chorus, orch, 1958; Crucifixus pro nobis, op.38, S/T, SATB, org, 1961; Missa Sancti Thomae, op.40, SATB, org, 1962; Mass, op.44, S, A, T, B, double chorus, org, 1964; Missa brevis, op.50, SATB, 1967; An Easter Sequence, op.55, boys'/female vv, org, tpt ad lib, 1968; Laudes animantium, op.61, solo vv, boys' vv, double chorus, 1971; 6 Elizabethan Lyrics (T. Nash, B. Jonson, J. Fletcher, W. Shakespeare, T. Middleton, T. Heywood), op.65, SSAA, 1972
Sarum Mass, op.66, solo vv, chorus, org, 1972; Laudate pueri, op.68, 3 choruses, 1973; Sym. no.2 'Sinfonia mistica in memoriam F.L.', op.69, S, chorus, orch, 1974; Laudes montium, op.71, Bar, chorus, semi-chorus, orch, 1975; Hymn to Matter, op.74, Bar, chorus, str, perc, 1976; Sequence for All Saints (Eng. Hymnal), op.75, B, SATB, congregation, org, 1977; Columba mea, op.78, A, T, chorus, cel/pf, hpd, str, 1978; Missa Cornelia, op.81, SSA, org, 1979; Missa Sancti Petri, S, T, B, SATB, org, 1979; Fanfare on Newtoun (W. Cowper), SATB, 2 brass qts, org, 1983; The World's Desire (A Sequence for Epiphany), op.91, S, A, T, B, SATB, congregation ad lib, org, 1984; Missa Christi, S, T, B, SATB, org, 1988; motets, anthems, canticles, etc.
Solo vocal-inst: Animal Heaven (Diptych) (W. Whitman, J. Dickey), op.83, S, rec, vc, hpd, 1980; These Are Thy Wonders (G. Herbert), op.84, S/T, org, 1981; Sym. no.3 'Laudes musicae' (T. Browne, E.B. Browning, P.B. Shelley), op.90, T, orch, 1984; Earth, Sweet Earth (Laudes terrae), op.94, T, pf, 1986

ORCHESTRAL

Sym., op.3, str, 1949; Veris gratia, op.9, ob, vc, str, 1950; Pf Conc. no.1, d, op.11, 1951; Passacaglia, Chorale and Fugue, op.18, 1957; Pf Conc. no.2, op.37, 1960; Festive Ov., 1962; Sym. no.1, op.42, 1964; Dance Suites nos.1–3, D, opp.53, 59, 89, 1968, 1970, 1983; Pf Conc. no.3 'Conc. festivo', op.57, 1969; Conc., op.58, org, timp, str, 1970; Dance Ov., op.60, 1971; Conc., op.88, fl/rec, hpd, str, 1982; other concs. for vn, va, ob, 2 pf, str; see VOCAL [sym. nos.2–3]

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

Sonata no.1, op.4, vn, pf, 1949; Str Qt no.2, op.33, 1957; Pf Qnt, op.34, 1959; 7 Variations, op.43, str qt, 1964; Pf Trio, op.46, 1965; Metamorphoses, op.48, vn, pf, 1966; Sonata, op.52, vc, 1967; Contrasts and Variants (Qt in 1 Movt), op.63, pf qt, 1972; Fantasy on an American Hymn Tune, op.70, cl, vc, pf, 1974; Es ist genug, op.80, vn, org, 1979; Alleluia pascha nostrum (Meditations on Plainsong Melodies from the 12th Century), op.85, vc, pf,

1981; Fantasy Octet 'Homage to Percy Grainger', op.87, 4 vn, 2 va, 2 vc, 1982

Kbd: Sonata no.2, op.17, pf, 1953; Variations, op.30, pf, 1955; Fantasia contrappuntistica 'Homage to Bach', op.24, pf, 1956; Prelude, Scherzo and Passacaglia, op.41, org, 1963; Conflicts, fantasy, op.51, pf, 1967; Festive Fanfare, org, 1968; Improvisation, org, 1969; Sonata, op.64, pf, 1972; 6 Fantasies on Hymn Tunes, op.72, org, 1975; Martyrs (Dialogues on a Scottish Psalm-Tune), op.73, 2 org, 1976; Improvisations (De profundis), op.76, hpd, 1977; Ode, org, 1977; Missa de Gloria (Dublin Festival Mass), op.82, org, 1980; Household Pets, suite, op.86, pf, 1981; Sonata, op.92, pf duet, 1985; Veni redemptor, op.93, org, 1985; 4 Romantic Pieces, op.95, pf, 1986; Prelude, Hymn and Toccata, op.96, 2 pf, 1987; Veni creator spiritus, prelude, org, 1987; other kbd works

MSS in GB-Er

Principal publishers: Lengnick, Novello, OUP, Ricordi, Roberton, Royal School of Church Music

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.V. Cockshoot: 'The Music of Kenneth Leighton', MT, xcviii (1957), 193–6

R. Fulton: 'Robin Fulton Talks to Kenneth Leighton', New Edinburgh Review (1970), no.5, pp.25–7

G. Cox: The Musical Language of Kenneth Leighton (diss., Queensland U., 1972)

H. Truscott: 'Two Traditionalists: Kenneth Leighton and John McCabe', British Music Now, ed. L. Foreman (London, 1975), 145–54

J. Thomas: 'Contemporary Music and the Avant-Garde', Organists' Review, lxix (1985), 21–6, esp.23

Obituary, MT, cxxix (1988), 620 only

D. Webster: 'Kenneth Leighton (1929–1988)', MO, cxi (1988), 328 only

A. Thomson: 'Kenneth Leighton (1929–1988): a Personal Memoir', Organists' Review, lxxv (1989), 165 only

RICHARD COOKE/MALCOLM MILLER

Leighton, Sir William (b ?Plash, Shropshire, *c*1565; bur. London, 31 July 1622). English amateur poet, editor and composer. He was probably born at Plash Hall near Cardington, Shropshire, about 1565. He attended Shrewsbury School from 1578 and married Winifred (or Willingford), daughter of Sir Simon Harcourt probably about 1590. They had one son, Harcourt, who fought at Naseby, and two daughters.

During the 1590s Leighton became involved in the familiar activities of the landed gentry, attaching himself to the court and public life of London and dealing in leases and mortgages. Richard Topcliffe in a letter to Sir Robert Cecil (11 October 1600) stated that Leighton was 'sometime a follower of the Earl of Essex', to whom he was distantly related. In 1601 he was Member of Parliament for Much Wenlock, and on 11 December 1602 was sworn in as a member of the Honourable Band of Gentlemen Pensioners. Leighton was knighted at the coronation of James I, in honour of whom he wrote in 1603 a set of 221 stanzas entitled Vertue Triumphant, or a Lively Description of the Foure Vertues Cardinall.

The first record of his activities is that of an action he brought in Chancery, 27 June 1594, against Ralphe Marston for recovery of a debt incurred in 1589. He was in Chancery again in November 1596 seeking recovery of the deeds of properties in Walton, Sandon and High Offley in Staffordshire from three defendants. There are various Public Records concerning actions, indentures, deeds, fines and so on, involving properties in Shropshire, Staffordshire and Derbyshire, including a long and bitter Star Chamber case involving Leighton, Topcliffe, Edward Bellingham, the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, Thomas Fitzherbert and others over the Fitzherbert lands in Derbyshire.

From about 1604 Leighton's financial position deteriorated. An increasing number of actions were brought against him for debt, and seemingly endless recognizances were recorded. In 1608 he was outlawed by letters patent, and sometime between 1606 and 1609 he appears to have left the Gentlemen Pensioners, due no doubt to the outlawry or even imprisonment. In 1609 the King's Bench repeatedly ordered him to surrender to the Marshalsea Prison; for some time he failed to comply, but he was in prison by 1612.

In 1612 Leighton wrote a collection of semi-religious poems to show 'the least part of my unfained and true repentance' under the title The Teares or Lamentations of a Sorrowfull Soule. It was entered at Stationers' Hall on 25 January 1612/13 and printed by Ralph Blower. The following year, as he promised, Leighton published through William Stansby a collection of 55 settings of many of these poems by 21 English composers. Leighton wrote the first eight of the 18 consort songs, which are all for four voices and broken consort. There follow 12 unaccompanied four-part and 25 unaccompanied five-part settings. The quality varies from the merely competent (Leighton) to the highly creditable (Byrd). In each case the first stanza is underlaid and the singers are recommended to sing the other stanzas from the book of poems. The volume is in double folio and the parts are laid out in table-book format, like the contemporary lute-songs of Dowland and others. The instrumentation of numbers 1–18 is the same as that used by Morley and Rosseter in their consort lessons: lute, bandora, cittern, bass viol, flute and treble viol. In the manner in which it uses a broken consort to set devotional verse, Leighton's collection has an affinity with Richard Allison's Psalmes of David in Meter (1599), for which he supplied a commendatory poem, and Robert Tailour's Sacred Hymns (1615). Of the unaccompanied four-part pieces, Weelkes's Most mighty and all-knowing God shows the influence of the consort song, with the principal part in the altus.

Leighton had left prison by 1615. On 11 January 1615/16 his wife was buried at St Dunstan-in-the-West, where the family had lived since 1613 or possibly earlier (their only other known place of residence was in Molestrand Oars Rents, Southwark, between 1605 and 1607). Nothing is known of him after that time, beyond the settlement of a recognizance to Randolph Groome in a Chancery report of 1623. This settlement might explain the lack of a will and the entry in the burial register of St Bride's, Fleet Street, for 31 July 1622 which reads 'William Layton: A pentioner'.

WORKS

The Teares or Lamentacions of a Sorrowfull Soule, ed. W. Leighton (London, 1614); ed. C. Hill, EECM, xi (London, 1970); consort songs for 4vv, unaccompanied songs, 4, 5vv

WRITINGS

Vertue Triumphant, or a Lively Description of the Foure Vertues Cardinall (London, 1603)

The Teares or Lamentations of a Sorrowfull Soule (London, 1613)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Le HurayMR

V.L. Moore: 'Psalmes, Teares and Broken Music', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xlvi (1964), 411–28

CECIL HILL/DAVID GREER

Leimma. See LIMMA.

Leinati, Giovanni Ambrogio. See LONATI, CARLO AMBROGIO.

Leinbach, Edward William (b 1823; d 1901). American composer. See MORAVIANS, MUSIC OF THE, §3.

Leinsdorf [Landauer], Erich (b Vienna, 4 Feb 1912; d Zürich, 11 Sept 1993). American conductor of Austrian birth. He began serious piano studies at the age of eight; from the age of 11 he studied the piano with Paul Emerich, and later had cello lessons with Emerich's sister. He also studied theory and composition with Paul Pisk. In the summer of 1930 he attended a conducting masterclass at the Salzburg Mozarteum; he then studied briefly at Vienna University and for two years (1931–3) at the Music Academy there. On his graduation he made his conducting début in the Musikvereinsaal. His early experience included a stint as a singing coach (1931–4) and he was rehearsal pianist for Webern's Singverein der Sozialdemokratischen Kunststelle. He became Bruno Walter's assistant at Salzburg in 1934 and in 1937 he went to the Metropolitan Opera as assistant conductor. He made his début with Die Walküre in 1938, impressing with his energy and technical assurance. He conducted more Wagner and Strauss's Elektra and, despite opposition from Melchior (who disliked his insistence on rehearsals) and Flagstad (who wanted to establish Edwin McArthur in the house), he was put in charge of the German wing after Bodanzky's death in 1939. He became an American citizen in 1942.

In 1943 Leinsdorf succeeded Rodzinski as music director of the Cleveland Orchestra, but during his army service (1944) Cleveland made other plans. He again worked at the Metropolitan, took guest engagements (among them with the Cleveland Orchestra) and was conductor of the Rochester PO (1947–56). In 1956 he became music director of the New York City Opera, but in spite of his energetic attempts to enliven its repertory and style of performance the appointment was not well received. In 1957 he returned to the Metropolitan as conductor and music consultant. In 1962 he succeeded Münch as music director of the Boston SO. He expanded the repertory and restored some of the technical finesse that had been lost in previous years. After some genuine excitement at the beginning (as Münch's personal and musical polar opposite, he had advantages as well as problems) it became evident that the arrangement was not a success. In 1969 he left Boston and began once more to travel as guest conductor with many major orchestras, touring with the Cleveland Orchestra in 1973 and working at Tanglewood and Bayreuth. From 1977 to 1980 he was principal conductor of the Berlin RSO. His honours included a fellowship in the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and honorary degrees from several colleges and universities in the USA.

Leinsdorf was curious and informed about many matters in and out of music, and articulate to the point of virtuosity in his adopted as well as his mother tongue. He wrote an autobiography Cadenza: a Musical Career (Boston, 1976) and the book The Composer's Advocate: a Radical Orthodoxy for Musicians (Cambridge, MA, 1981). A collection of his writings, Erich Leinsdorf on Music, was published in Portland in 1991. Of quick intelligence, he had a remarkable capacity for recovering from difficult professional reverses. Because of the restraint he learned to apply to his nervous, restless temperament he was at times an inhibited performer; allowing the music insufficient breathing space. Words, particularly German, inspired him, and some of his most memorable achievements were with Schumann's Szenen aus Goethe's 'Faust', the earlier version of Strauss's Ariadne auf Naxos (unfamiliar ur-versions being a special interest of his) and Brahms's German Requiem. Among Leinsdorf's many recordings are direct, energetic readings of Un ballo in maschera, Tristan und Isolde, Die Walküre and Turandot.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Stoddard: 'Erich Leinsdorf', Symphony Conductors of the U.S.A. (New York, 1957), 258

A. Blyth: 'Erich Leinsdorf Talks', Gramophone, xlvii (1969–70), 740 only

J. Badal: 'An Interview with Erich Leinsdorf', Fanfare, viii/1 (1984–5), 123–7

MICHAEL STEINBERG/JOSÉ BOWEN, CHARLES BARBER

Erich Leinsdorf, 1970

Leinster School of Music. See DUBLIN, §10.

Leiper, Joseph. See RIEPEL, JOSEPH.

Leipzig. City in central Germany. Located in the province of Saxony, at the confluence of the Pleisse, Parthe and Weisse Elster rivers, it has long flourished as an international commercial centre, with three annual trade fairs. Never the seat of a bishop or royalty, it has been governed instead by a prosperous citizenry. Known as the home of J.S. Bach, the Gewandhaus Orchestra and music publishers such as Breitkopf & Härtel and C.F. Peters, Leipzig suffered in modern times from the bombings of World War II and the isolationist policies of communist rule. Since the German reunification of 1989, however, the city has gone far towards regaining its former glory.

I. To 1763. II. After 1763.

I. To 1763

Traces of a settlement on the site of Leipzig go as far back as the 7th century, with first mention of a fortified village, 'Urbs Libzi', in 1015. The town gained municipal status in 1160. Located at the juncture of east–west and north–south trade routes, Leipzig flourished as a crossroads city. The spring Easter Fair and autumn St Michael's Fair can be traced to the 12th century; the New Year's Fair was added in 1458. All three benefited from monopolistic privileges granted by Maximilian I and other rulers who, in turn, received tax revenues. Leipzig rose to prominence during the Renaissance; by the Baroque period it rivalled Frankfurt and Hamburg as a trade city. In an age of absolutism, it stood apart as a city of wealthy burghers, with large, extravagant merchant houses.

The University, founded in 1409, gradually became one of Germany's celebrated intellectual institutions; it has played an active role in the town's cultural life. During the Reformation Leipzig hosted Luther's dispute with Johann Eck in the Pleissenburg on the southern edge of town. Luther later returned to preach in the Thomaskirche in 1539, the year Leipzig embraced the Protestant religion. Leipzig suffered greatly during the Thirty Years War (1618–48), when it was besieged five times by the Swedish army and its population dropped from 17,500 (1623) to 14,000 (1648). After the devastating plague of 1680, the town entered a sustained period of prosperity and growth that lasted until the Seven Years War (1756–63). During this period Leipzig's population reached its 18th-century peak, 32,384 (1753), and the town benefited from influxes of skilled foreign refugees (Huguenots from France in 1685; Protestants from Salzburg in 1732). The Thomasschule, with its distinguished Kantors, made Leipzig the centre of Lutheran church music in Germany; at the same time, the economic triumph of the trade fairs laid the foundation for the middle-class music institutions that were to emerge in the 19th century.

1. Church music. 2. Opera. 3. Public concerts.

1. CHURCH MUSIC. Six churches were central to sacred music in Leipzig before 1763. The earliest is the Nikolaikirche, the town church named after the patron saint of merchants. Its cornerstone was laid in 1160, and the church completed by 1200. It was rebuilt in the late Gothic style in 1513–25, and a Baroque tower was added after 1730. The interior was fully recast in classical style, with palm leaves crowning the pillars, in 1785–6. It survives in this form. First mention of an organ appears in 1457. A new instrument was installed in 1598 by Johann Lange (stop-list in Praetorius, Organographia, 179), followed by another instrument, by Zacharias Thayssner, in 1694. The Latin school long associated with the Nikolaikirche dates from 1512 and counts among its students Leibniz and Wagner. Its building, renovated many times, is now used as an antiquities museum by the university.

The Thomaskirche originated as part of a priory established by Augustinian canons in 1212; the church itself was completed later in the century. Between 1482 and 1496 it was reconstructed as a hall church with a massive roof said to be the steepest (63°) in central Europe (fig.1). The Thomaskirche embraced the Protestant religion on Whit Sunday 1539, with Luther in the pulpit. The cloisters were torn down four years later. In 1570 north and south balconies were added to the interior, which was remodelled in 1639, and again in 1885–9. The church survived World War II with limited damage and still stands in good condition. The first documentated Thomaskirche organ is that of Joachim Schund, built in 1356. It was replaced by an instrument of 1590 by Johann Lange (Praetorius, 180), which was repaired in 1721–2 by Johann Scheibe. A second organ, present on the west balcony in 1489, was shifted in 1639 to its own small gallery on the east wall, where it remained until it was removed in 1741.

The Paulinerkirche and its accompanying cloisters were built by Dominican monks in 1229. The church was refashioned as a hall church in 1512–21, and in 1543 the complex was taken over by the university. The church was renovated in 1710–13, furnished with a new west portal, and opened for Lutheran services. Henceforth it was also known as the Universitätskirche. It survived World War II fully intact but was razed by the communist government in 1968 to make way for new buildings. An organ of 1528 (Praetorius, 116) was replaced by a new instrument of 1626–7 by Heinrich and Esajas Compenius, which in turn was supplanted by a larger instrument built by Johann Scheibe in 1710–16 and tested by Bach in 1717.

The Barfüsserkirche, or Franziskanerkirche, was erected by Franciscan friars in 1235 and rebuilt as a modest-sized Gothic church in 1488. In 1543 the house was dissolved and the buildings sold by the town council. The church was renovated for Lutheran use and renamed the Neukirche in 1699. In the 19th century the Neukirche was rededicated as the Matthäikirche. The church was badly damaged during World War II and the ruins were pulled down in 1950. The Neukirche contained an organ constructed by Christoph Donath in 1704 and rebuilt by Scheibe in 1721. The Peterskirche was founded as an Augustinian chapel in 1213 in the former village of St Petri. It was reconstructed as a hall church in 1507, but in 1539 it was taken over by the town and used for secular purposes. In 1712 it was renovated and opened for Lutheran services. It was replaced by a new Peterskirche (at Schletterplatz) in 1886 and subsequently torn down. The Johanniskirche was founded in 1278. Located outside the city wall, it served mainly as a memorial church for the cemetery that surrounded it. It was destroyed in World War II except for its Baroque tower of 1748–9, which was pulled down in 1963. A small organ, completed in 1695 by Tobias Gottfried Trost, was replaced with a larger instrument in 1744 by Johann Scheibe, who worked under Bach's supervision.

1. Thomaskirche and Thomasschule (left, before the renovation of 1732), Leipzig: engraving by C.C. Böhme after W. Radegast, 1723

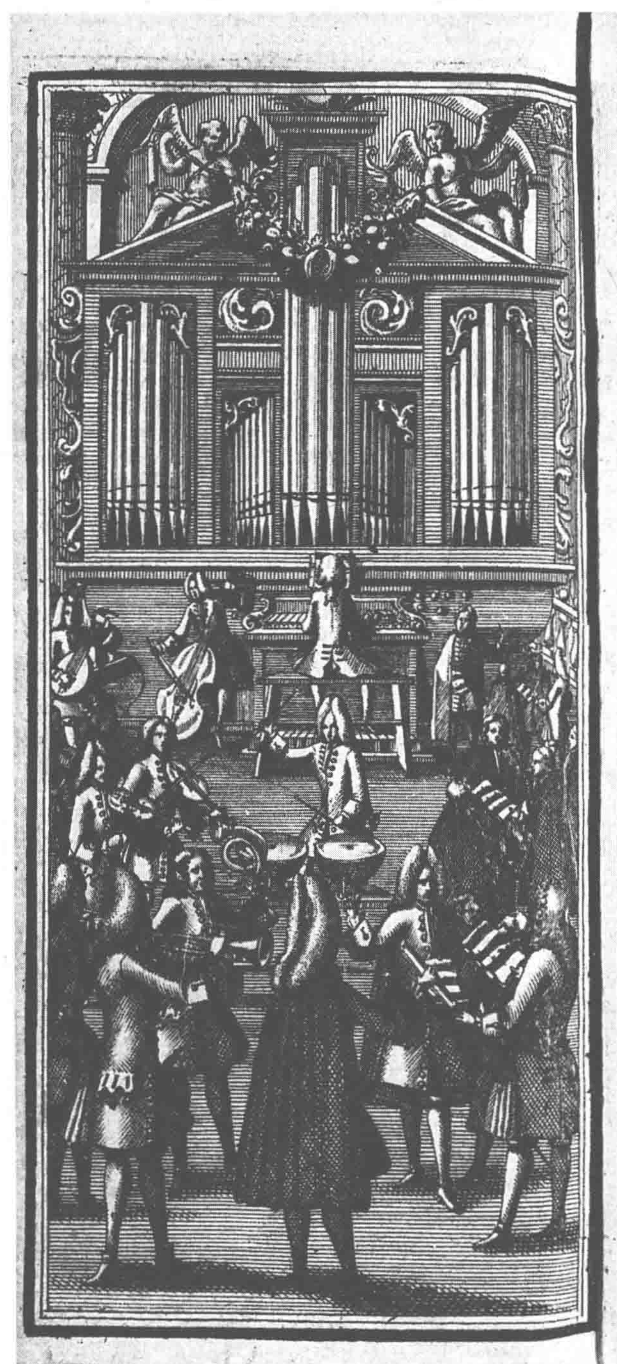
Gregorian chant was performed in all the churches. The well-known St Thomas Gradual (D-LEu St Thomas 391) from the 13th century suggests the existence of a lively chant tradition with local variants. With the advent of polyphony, the Thomasschule emerged as the most important centre of music-making. The deed of 1254 already mentions the presence of an Augustinian singing school. The choral music was directed by monks, of whom Johannes Steffani (served 1435–49) is the first known leader. The first important Thomaskantor (the position was formalized in the 15th century) was Georg Rhau (1518–20), who embellished Luther's Pleissenburg debate with music performed by the Thomasschule choristers (known then and now as 'Thomaner') and the Stadtpfeifer (town pipers). Rhau soon left Leipzig because of his Lutheran sympathies, and it was in Wittenberg that he achieved fame as a printer of masses, motets and hymns for the new church. When Leipzig embraced the Reformation in 1539 the Thomaskantor became a city officer. With the sale of monastic properties four years later, the Thomasschule became a city grammar school (fig.1), and the Kantor served as the third-ranking official (after the Rector and Conrector) in the administrative staff, charged with teaching music, Latin and other subjects. The Thomaskantor supervised choral music in the Thomaskirche and the Nikolaikirche. Both churches had separate organists. Early Thomaskirche organists include E.N. Ammerbach (1561–95), whose Orgel oder Instrument Tablatur (1571) represents the first printed organ music, and Andreas Düben (1595–1625), forebear of the Dübens active in Sweden.



Beginning with Sethus Calvisius (1594–1615), a gifted mathematician and astronomer as well as composer, the Thomaskantor post was occupied by a series of distinguished musicians who brought Leipzig church music to a golden epoch. Calvisius was followed by J.H. Schein (1616–30), who introduced progressive Italian madrigal and concerto styles. Schein's ground-breaking collections of liturgical music – Opella nova (1618, 1626), Fontana d'Israel (1623) and Cantional (1627) – were all issued from Leipzig. By the 17th century the town council had become such a patron of the arts that Demantius, Praetorius, Scheidt, Schütz and others active elsewhere dedicated works to it. The next Kantor was Tobias Michael (1631–57), whose devotion to Italian style is evident in Musicalische Seelenlust (1634–7). Michael also issued a second edition of Schein's Cantional (1645) and managed to maintain high standards at the Thomasschule despite difficulties imposed by the Thirty Years War.

During the tenure of Sebastian Knüpfer (1657–76) the Thomaskantor was also granted formal charge of civic music, as town director musices. Knüpfer's compositions were much admired by his contemporaries, and later by Bach as well, who performed his polychoral motet Erforsche mich, Gott in the 1740s. Knüpfer was followed by Johann Schelle (1677–1701), who replaced the Latin anthems that traditionally followed the Gospel in the service with settings of German texts that reflected the Gospel reading. The new 'cantatas' often included hymn verses and other rhymed poetry.

Schelle also introduced the chorale cantata – music to a German text that, together with the sermon, focussed on the hymn of the day. Schelle's changes were challenged by the Mayor, Christian Ludwig von Adlershelm, who in December 1683 ordered that the Latin anthems be restored. Von Adlershelm's objections were overruled by the town council. During Schelle's tenure the responsibilities of the Thomaskantor were expanded to include the music in the Paulinerkirche.

Schelle was succeeded by Johann Kuhnau (1701–22), who had studied at the university and, from 1684, served as Thomaskirche organist. Kuhnau continued the practice of using cantatas with German texts and ably directed Leipzig's sacred and civic music (fig.2). However, he had to contend with new demands on the Thomasschule choristers, who were now required to form choirs not only for the Thomaskirche and Nikolaikirche, as before, but for the Neukirche (from 1699) and Peterskirche (from 1712) as well. Kuhnau complained that the pool of usable singers was too small. Moreover, in 1704 Telemann initiated a highly successful programme of concerted music in the Neukirche, using student singers and instrumentalists from the collegium musicum he had

Unfehlbare
Engel-Freude
oder
Geistliches
Gesang-Buch
darinnen
D. Martini Lutheri
und anderer Evangelischen
Männer
Geist- und Trostreiche
Lieder und Psalmen
nebenst denen gewöhnlichen Lateinischen Fest-Gesängen zubefinden.
Samt einer Zugabe
Christlicher
Morgen- und Abend-
Segen.
Leipzig
zu finden in Groschuffs Buchladen.
1710.

2. Frontispiece and title-page of 'Unfehlbare Engel-Freude' (Leipzig, 1710), possibly showing a performance under Johann Kuhnau, Kantor of the Thomaskirche founded two years before. This robbed Kuhnau of potential players.

When J.S. Bach followed Kuhnau in 1723, he inherited these problems but was better able to work in harmony with the organist-music director of the Neukirche. Bach was the town council's third choice for Thomaskantor, named to the position only after Telemann and Christoph Graupner declined. Nevertheless, during his first six years he seems to have compiled five annual cycles of cantatas – approximately 300 works – as well as the Magnificat (1723), the St John Passion (1724), the St Matthew Passion (1727) and other special works. From 1729 Bach stepped back from church composition, either because of disillusionment with inadequate performance conditions or because of the desire to pursue other creative endeavours. After directing the collegium from 1729 to 1736, he turned increasingly to the study and performance of Latin church music, an interest that culminated in the compilation of the B minor Mass (1748–9), which was not intended for use in the Leipzig worship service. By 1739 the town council minutes show Bach responding to a threat to cancel a Good Friday Passion performance by saying that 'he did not care, for he got nothing out of it anyway, and it was only a burden'.

The next Kantor, Gottlob Harrer (1750–55), maintained Bach's practice of performing Latin church music on occasion. Harrer's own works display a mixture of old and new Italian styles. He was followed by Bach's student J.F. Doles (1756–89).

2. OPERA. The formal beginning of opera in Leipzig can be traced to the licence granted by Elector Johann Georg III to Nicolaus Adam Strungk of Dresden in 1692 to operate a public opera house and present 15 performances during each of the three trade fairs. Strungk acquired a plot on the Brühl, just inside the city wall on the north-east corner of town, and commissioned Italian architect Girolamo Sartorio, builder of opera houses in Hanover, Amsterdam and Hamburg, to construct the town's first opera house. The house opened on 8 May 1693 during the Easter Fair with a performance of Strungk's Alceste, which featured a German libretto fashioned from Aurelio Aureli's well-known Italian text by Paul Thymich, a language instructor at the Thomasschule, and a cast of local singers that included Thymich's wife, Anna Catharina, in the role of Alcestis. Local composers, local performers and mostly German texts were to become mainstays of the Leipzig opera with its audience of wealthy citizens, university students and fair visitors.

Other composers to write for the Leipzig house included Telemann, Christian Ludwig Boxberg, Gottfried Grünewald, Johann David Heinichen, Melchior Hoffmann and Johann Gottfried Vogler. Although the music to most of this repertory is lost, the surviving librettos show a marked taste for both mythological and historical themes – Strungk's Nero (1693) or Agrippina (1699), Telemann's Ferdinand und Isabella (1703) or Die Satyren in Arcadien (1719) and Heinichen's Hercules (1714), for instance – and comic subjects – Grünewald's Der ungetreue Schäffer Cardillo (1703) and Heinichen's Der angenehme Betrug oder Der Karneval in Venedig (1709), for example. The Leipzig librettos show a strong inclination towards informality, with opera seria gods speaking to the audience about everyday situations in everyday language, much like the figures in the madrigal texts of Bach's cantatas. Like opera elsewhere, Leipzig productions often dwelt on the spectacular. Strungk's Phocas (1696) called for a burning tower, a wild bear and a storm. For singers the Leipzig opera relied principally on students for the male roles and wives and daughters of men associated with the company for the female roles. Grünewald, Telemann, Graupner, Fasch, Heinichen and others took time from their academic studies at the university to sing in the opera. The instrumentalists, too, were drawn chiefly from the student ranks, much to the annoyance of Kuhnau, who complained that the opera was draining the resources for church music-making.

After Strungk's death in 1700 the Leipzig opera was directed by Telemann, who ran the operation with great vigour from 1702 to 1704 by recruiting the students from his collegium musicum. Following Telemann's departure for Sorau (he continued to contribute works afterwards), Hoffmann served as principal director until his death in 1715. After Hoffmann's tenure Leipzig opera declined. A gradual accumulation of debts led to the closing of Sartorio's opera house in 1720, and the building was razed in 1729. For the next 30 years opera was provided by itinerant Italian troupes that performed on temporary stages (indoor and out) during the fair times. The most famous visitors were the Mingotti brothers, Angelo and Pietro, whose virtuoso ensembles sometimes included castratos. Riemer reports seeing the opera Adelaide, Königin aus Italien and the intermezzo Amor fa l'uomo cieco with excellent Italian soloists (including castratos and prima donnas) during the 1744 Easter Fair. Also significant was the appearance of the Singspiel in the form of Der Teufel ist los (an adaptation of Charles Coffey's The Devil to Pay) presented first by a visiting troupe under Johann Friedrich Schönemann in 1750 and then by Heinrich Gottfried Koch's local company in 1752. Visiting or temporary troupes remained the chief source of opera in Leipzig until the construction of the Comödienhaus after the Seven Years War (1756–63).

3. PUBLIC CONCERTS. In the period preceding the Seven Years War, the most important contributors to public concert life were the professional town musicians and the various student-collegium ensembles. The Stadtpfeifer can be traced back as far as 1479, when Hans Nayll and his two sons were hired by the town council to provide municipal music. Despite their name, the Stadtpfeifer played a wide variety of instruments, including strings and woodwinds as well as brass. They performed in church, at weddings, banquets and other special events, and for visits by the Elector and other dignitaries. From 1599 they also played twice a day on the market square from the tower balcony of the town hall (erected in 1555–6, renovated in Baroque style in 1672). Three Kunstgeiger, or art fiddlers, were added to the payroll in the early 17th century, and in 1631 the two groups were placed under the supervision of the Thomaskantor. In Bach's time, both the Stadtpfeifer and the Kunstgeiger were four in number.

The Hora decima musicorum Lipsiensium, oder Musicalische Arbeit zum Ab-blasen (1670), 40 five-part sonatas dedicated to the Leipzig Town Council, and the Fünffstimmigte blasende Music (1685), both by Stadtpfeifer Johann Christoph Pezel (1639–94), and the Vier und zwantzig neue Quatricinia (1696) by Stadtpfeifer Gottfried Reiche (1667–1734) reflect the proud tradition of Leipzig balcony music. Harmonized chorales also formed a regular part of the repertory.

The collegium musicum groups that convened with increasing regularity from the mid-17th century onward played an equally important role in public music-making. The university, founded in 1409, had long fostered student music-making in the form of serenades, evening music and Tafelmusik. Contemporary documents mention university students performing in Auerbachs Keller as early as 1625, a tradition that seems to be reflected in Schein's Studenten-Schmauss (1626), a collection of five-part songs written to serve as 'praiseworthy companionship for wine or beer'. Formal collegia musica – student ensembles meeting on a weekly basis to read through vocal and instrumental music – began to appear after 1650. Nikolaikirche organist Adam Krieger led a collegium in about 1657, and additional groups headed by Pezel and others are mentioned later in the century.

Credit for making the collegium musicum a force in Leipzig cultural life must go to Telemann, who formed a group around 1702 while studying law at the university. Under his energetic direction, the 'Telemann collegium' grew to 40 players and gave well-organized weekly performances in coffee houses (which appeared in great numbers after being introduced to Leipzig in 1694). Telemann's group also provided sacred music in the Neukirche, where Telemann was awarded the post of organist in 1704 on the promise that he would bring his student players with him. After Telemann's departure in 1705, his collegium was directed by Melchior Hoffmann (1704–15), Johann Gottfried Vogler (1715–20), Georg Balthasar Schott (1720–29), J.S. Bach (1729–36 and 1739–41) and Carl Gotthelf Gerlach (1736–9 and 1741–*c*1745). Apart from Bach, all served as organist of the Neukirche. During Bach's tenure, the ensemble met on Friday evenings in Zimmermann's Coffee House during the winter and Wednesday afternoons in Zimmermann's Coffee Garden during the summer. A second collegium, such as that directed by Johann Friedrich Fasch from 1708–11 or that by Johann Gottlieb Görner from 1723–56, often ran parallel to Telemann's. During the trade fairs both collegia added a special weekly concert and arranged the schedule so that fair visitors could hear music four evenings per week.

The concerts featured a mixed fare of appealing, progressive vocal and instrumental music. Gottfried Heinrich Stölzel, who played in Telemann's collegium from 1707 to 1710, described the programme as beginning with an overture, continuing with vocal and solo concertos and closing with a Sinfonie. This parallels the music that Bach performed during his collegium tenure: overtures (including pieces by Johann Bernhard Bach), violin and harpsichord concertos, secular cantatas (including the famous 'Coffee Cantata'), instrumental sonatas and possibly book 2 of Das wohltemperirte Clavier. The collegia also took part in performances of allegiance music written for the Saxon royal family, which often involved large-scale polychoral pieces performed on the market square, such as Bach's Preise dein Glücke, gesegnetes Sachsen, BWV215.

A third collegium appeared in 1743. Organized by Leipzig merchants and termed the 'Grosse Concert-Gesellschaft', the ensemble performed in the hotel 'zu den drei Schwanen' to a subscription audience that grew to over 200 people by 1750. It was this group, directed at first by Johann Friedrich Doles and then by Gerlach and Johann Schneider, that outlasted the others. By 1763 it had grown to include a string section of 8–8–3–2–2 and a full complement of woodwind and brass.

II. After 1763

From the devastation of the Seven Years War, with its ten million-taler retribution payment to Prussia, Leipzig moved to another period of economic prosperity that continued unabated until World War II. Already in the late 18th century Goethe noted the exceedingly vital nature of the town, with its 'unbelievably splendid buildings, which turn their faces to two streets and encircle enclosed courts with sky-high walls, and contain an entire bourgeois world'. By 1824, the population had reached 40,000; by 1849, 62,400, thanks to the arrival of railways in the 1830s and the rapid growth of light industry. The 18th-century gardens surrounding Leipzig (the Apel and Bose Gardens were the most famous) were gradually filled in with new dwellings and factories. By 1885 Leipzig could claim 170,340 inhabitants, and in 1892, with the incorporation of the surrounding industrial suburbs, 400,000. Middle-class music institutions and music-making flourished. The piano firm of J.F. Blüthner, for instance, whose grand pianos with aliquot scaling are still admired, began the production of highly successful upright pianos in 1864.

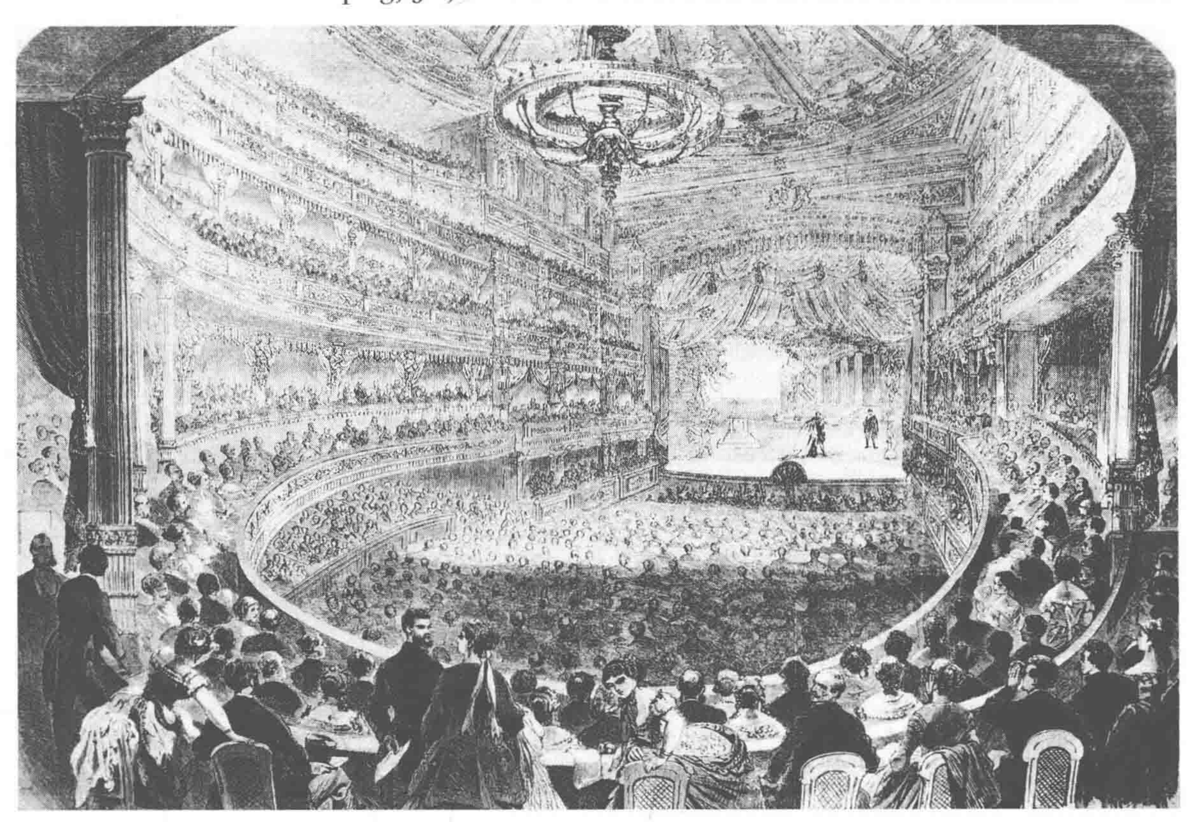
Leipzig was bombed by the Allies in 1943–4 and, with the collapse of the Nazi regime in 1945, was taken over by the Soviets. In October 1989 it was the site of the largest single demonstration against the East German government, a demonstration that was critical in bringing about the downfall of communist rule. It is deeply symbolic that in the Leipzig rally the most important spokesman for the cause of peaceful negotiation was Kurt Masur, conductor of the Gewandhaus Orchestra. Reunification with West Germany took place soon thereafter. Leipzig is currently undergoing a programme of refurbishment, and its population at the end of the 20th century approached 500,000.

1. CHURCH MUSIC. After 1763 church music gradually declined in importance as the Gewandhaus Orchestra (as it came to be known) and the opera moved to the centre of the city's musical life. Thomaskantors Doles and J.A. Hiller (served 1789–1804) simplified the style of the weekly cantatas and incorporated historical works (by Handel, Hasse, Jommelli and others) into the Sunday service music. A.E. Müller (1804–9) resurrected Bach's vocal compositions and performed several cantatas that had not been heard since the composer's death. Under Kantors Moritz Hauptmann (1842–68) and Gustav Schreck (1893–1917), in particular, the Thomanerchor emerged as a single vocal ensemble whose activities ranged beyond the Sunday service. Through their direction it became a singing group of national standing and later a symbol of Leipzig, performing with the Gewandhaus and other orchestras and giving noted tours. Under the direction of Karl Straube (1918–39), who as Thomaskirche organist (1902–18) won considerable renown as a Reger interpreter, the Thomanerchor began to travel outside Germany and, in a series of radio broadcasts from 1931 to 1937, presented Bach's complete cantatas (often in abridged arrangements, however).

After Straube the Thomanerchor was led by Günther Ramin (1940–56), Kurt Thomas (1957–60), Erhard Mauersberger (1961–72), and Hans-Joachim Rotzsch (1972–92). Under G.C. Biller, who took over the Thomanerchor in 1992, the group functions as an 80-voice choir, carrying on traditions established over the previous century: weekly performances of Bach's cantatas and motets at the Saturday Vespers service, annual performances of Bach's Christmas Oratorio and Passions, recordings and radio and television broadcasts, and international concert tours. In recent times other church choirs have also been active, chiefly on a local level (see §4, below).

During the 19th century the Thomaskirche and Nikolaikirche acquired large, distinguished German Romantic organs that survive today: the instrument in the Thomaskirche was completed in 1889 by Wilhelm Sauer and enlarged in 1908 (under Straube's direction); the instrument in the Nikolaikirche was completed in 1862 by Friedrich Ladegast and enlarged in 1902 by Sauer. A neo-Baroque tracker instrument, by Alexander Schuke, was added to the north gallery of the Thomaskirche in 1967.

2. OPERA. Opera, in the form of Italian opera buffa and German Singspiel, sprang to life once again soon after the Seven Years War. Johann Adam Hiller's highly successful revival of Der Teufel ist los in 1766 marked the beginning of the revival, as did the construction, the same year, of the Comödienhaus, a 1186-seat theatre 'auf der Ranischen Bastei' (now Richard-Wagner-Platz). Used for opera and theatre, it quickly became the home of ambitious music productions, with new works appearing each year.



Easter Fair 1773 was marked by the memorable visit of Giuseppe Bustelli's opera troupe from Dresden, and four years later Bustelli's successor, Pasquale Bondini, obtained the right to present the Churfürstlich Sächsische Hofcomödianten in Leipzig as well as Dresden. Upon Bondini's death in 1789 the licence went to the Seconda brothers: Franz, who presented Italian operas, and Joseph, who presented Singspiele and comic operas in German (including 15 performances of Die Zauberflöte in 1793). Although the Comödienhaus was purchased by the town of Leipzig in 1796, its music productions continued to be given by visiting or temporary troupes. Hiller, F.C. Gestewitz, F.A. Pitterlin, J.P.C. Schulz, F.I. Danzi, C.I. Engel and others served as conductors during this time. Repertory included works by Hiller, C.G. Neefe, Georg and F.L. Benda, Dittersdorf, Grétry and others. Die Entführung aus dem Serail was performed in 1783, followed by Don Giovanni and Le nozze di Figaro in 1788, all under Bondini's direction. The Italian troupe of Domenico Guardasoni also presented large-scale operas during the years 1782-94, including Così fan tutte.

In 1817 the Comödienhaus was rebuilt by J.J.F. Weinbrenner, working under the supervision of K.T. Küstner, who had taken over the opera licence from Franz Seconda. A resident Leipzig company was finally established and the newly refurbished house soon became a centre for Romantic opera. Conductors included J.F. Schneider, H.A. Präger, Albert Lortzing, Julius Rietz and A.F. Riccius, with important guest appearances by H.A. Marschner for the first performances of Der Vampyr (1828), Der Templer und die Jüdin (1829) and Des Falkners Braut (1832), and Robert Schumann for the première of Genoveva (1850). The repertory also encompassed works by Spohr, Mozart, Weber, Lortzing and Wagner, whose operas were often featured soon after their premières (Tannhäuser in 1853, Lohengrin in 1854). The Gewandhaus Orchestra, which since its formation in 1781 had commonly taken part in the Comödienhaus productions, was formally contracted by the city in 1840 to serve as the house's resident instrumental ensemble.

In 1868 a new house, with a capacity of 1900, was opened at the northern end of the Augustusplatz. Designed by C.F. Langhans, the Neues Theater (fig.3) represented the first large-scale 19th-century music hall in Leipzig. It was bordered on the north by a swan lake. The Comödienhaus (which was henceforth also known as the Altes Theater) remained in use for dramas and operettas. Conductors in the Neues Theater included Gustav Schmidt (1868–76), Joseph Sucher (1876–8), Anton Seidl (1878–80), Arthur Nikisch (1880–88), Gustav Mahler (1886–8) and Alfred Szendrei (1918–24). In the 1870s and 80s the opera director Angelo Neumann and theatre director August Förster joined forces to mount the first complete production of Wagner's Ring outside Bayreuth (1878) and noted cycles of the operas of Mozart (1880) and Gluck (1882). Between 1923 and 1933 opera director Gustav Brecher and director Walther Brügmann presented ambitious productions of unconventional contemporary works, including the first performances of Krenek's Jonny spielt auf (1927) and Weill's Der Zar lässt sich photographieren (1928), Aufstieg und Fall der Stadt Mahagonny (1930) and Der Silbersee (1933). During the Mahagonny première a riot broke out, and the house had to be cleared by police. After Brecher's departure in 1933, due to the Nazi takeover, Paul Schmitz served as Generalmusikdirektor, sponsoring a Mozart cycle in 1941 and the première of Orff's Catulli carmina in 1943.

Both the Neues Theater and the Comödienhaus were destroyed during World War II, and from 1945 to 1960 opera productions moved to temporary quarters in the Haus Dreilinden in Lindenau. The present Opernhaus, located on Augustusplatz at the site of the Neues Theater, was completed in 1960. Designed by Kunz Nierade, it combines a classical exterior (as a tribute to that of the Neues Theater) with a modern interior along socialist lines. With a large theatre (cap. 1636) and three smaller stages, it is one of the best-equipped opera halls in Europe. Under the leadership of Joachim Herz (1957–76) Leipzig opera regained its pre-war strength, presenting traditional and contemporary productions including the first performances in Germany of Prokofiev's War and Peace and Shostakovich's Katerina Izmaylova. Following the reunification, opera, musical comedy and ballet were placed under one central administration, and in 1990 Udo Zimmermann was appointed opera director. A champion of the avant garde, Zimmermann has sponsored premières of works by Stockhausen, Jörg Herchet and other contemporary composers as well as unorthodox productions of operas from the traditional repertory. The Opernhaus is also the site of ballet evenings (Uwe Scholz, director), song recitals, exhibitions and forums.

3. GEWANDHAUS AND OTHER ORCHESTRAS. After the Seven Years War, the concerts of the Grosse Concert-Gesellschaft resumed under the direction of Johann Adam Hiller, and in 1765 a short-lived ensemble, the Gelehrten-Konzert, was established at the university. Ten years later Hiller formed the Musikübende Gesellschaft, and it was this group that swiftly rose to prominence. With a chorus and orchestra composed chiefly of students and other non-professionals, the ensemble appeared in extremely successful subscription concerts and Lenten concerts spirituels.

3. Interior of the Neues Theater, Leipzig, opened 1868: engraving from the 'Illustrirte Zeitung' [Leipzig] (1869)

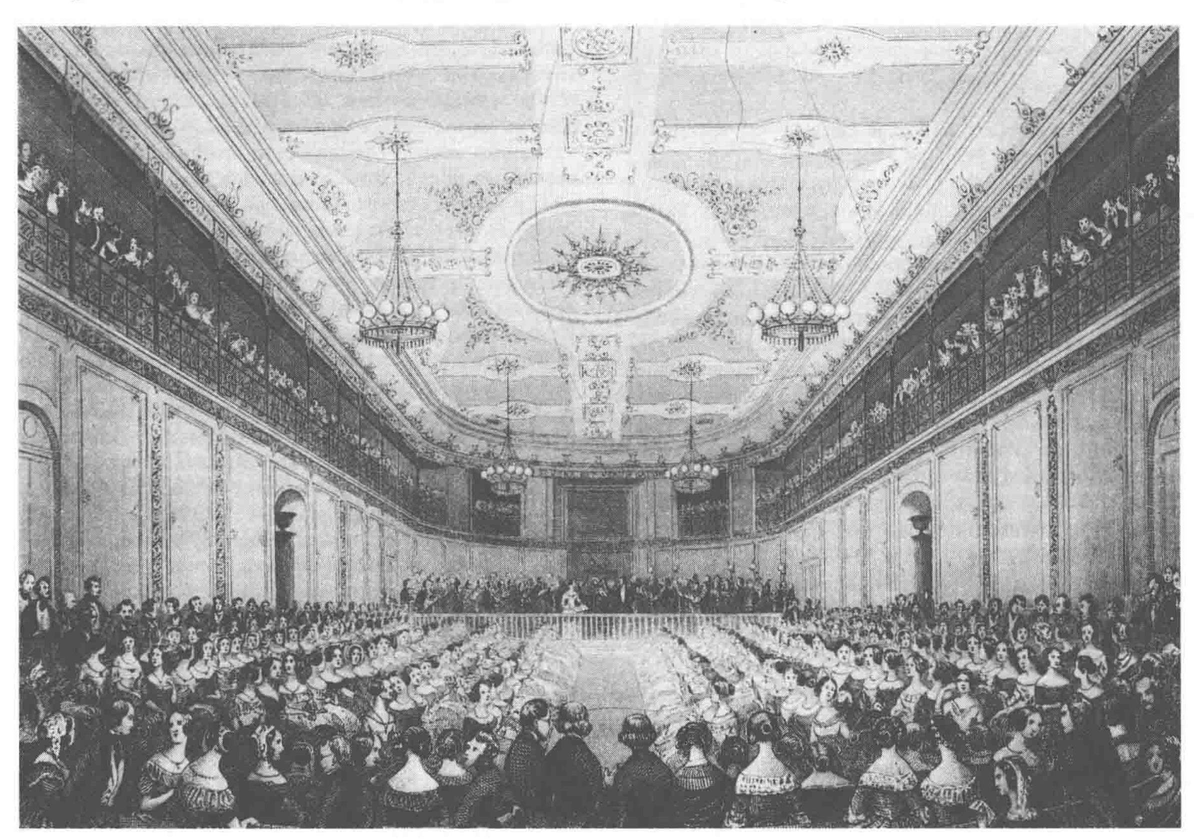
In 1781 a concert hall was constructed within the Gewandhaus, or Clothiers' Exchange, a former fair building located in the Universitätsstrasse (at that time called Alter Neumarkt). Built at the command of Burgomaster C.W. Müller to a design by J.F.C. Dauthe, it was the first adequate concert space in Leipzig, with a capacity of approximately 500. On 25 November 1781 the first 'Gewandhaus Concert' took place with Hiller leading a Musikübende Gesellschaft ensemble of 27 players, 12 singers and two soprano soloists. Since the Gewandhaus was a city building, the activities of the orchestra were supervised by the mayor and a 12-member 'Konzert-Direktion'. Programmes were given on Thursday evenings, in a season that ran from Michaelmas to Easter. Hiller served as director of the Gewandhaus ensemble until 1785. He was followed by J.G. Schicht (1785–1810), J.P.C. Schulz (1810–27) and C.A. Polenz (1827–35).

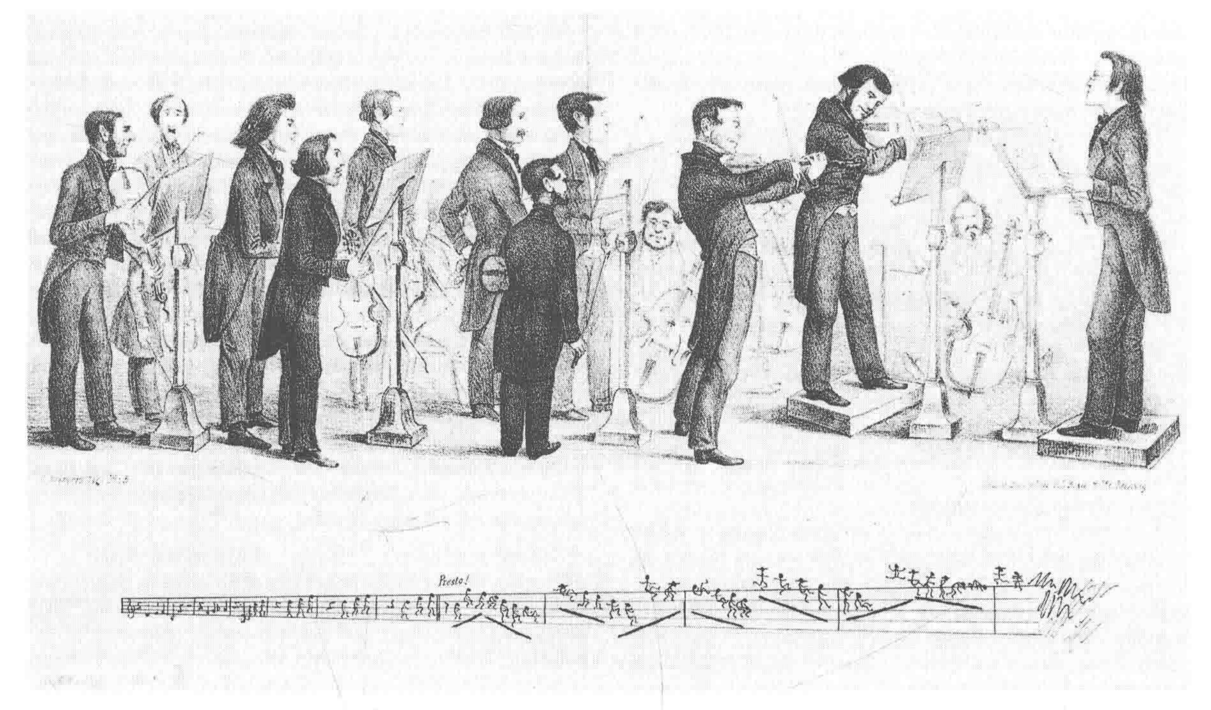
The Gewandhaus Orchestra was an important ensemble of the Classical era. Mozart appeared with the orchestra in May 1789 in a programme of his own music featuring two symphonies and two piano concertos. Beethoven's first, third and fifth symphonies were performed in the Gewandhaus soon after their Viennese premières, and Haydn's The Creation was presented in 1800, followed by The Seasons in 1801. The choir of the Thomasschule often provided choral support at the Gewandhaus concerts. Members of the orchestra, in turn, accompanied the Thomanerchor in church performances and also played for operas in the Comödienhaus. These ties have continued to the present day.

The transition from notable ensemble to cultural institution took place under the leadership of Mendelssohn, who served as director from 1835 to 1847. He built the Gewandhaus into a first-rate orchestra through unflagging zeal: he broadened the repertory, conducted all works (before his tenure instrumental music was led by the Konzertmeister), introduced the use of the baton for greater precision and raised funds through benefit concerts. He was assisted by the masterful playing of Konzertmeister Ferdinand David (who gave the première of Mendelssohn's E minor Violin Concerto in 1845) and the supportive journalism of Schumann in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik (which continued the tradition of music criticism begun in 1798 by Friedrich Rochlitz in the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung). Mendelssohn sponsored important first performances: Schumann's first, second and fourth symphonies, Schubert's 'Great' C major Symphony and his own Third Symphony and Ruy Blas overture. In 1843 Berlioz conducted a performance of his Symphonie fantastique (with 49 players). Mendelssohn also championed earlier music, especially that of Bach, in a series of 'Historical Concerts'. In 1840 he performed one of Bach's three-clavier concertos, with Liszt, Ferdinand Hiller and himself as soloists. The next year he presented the St Matthew Passion. In addition to his work with the Gewandhaus Orchestra, Mendelssohn also founded the Leipzig Conservatory in 1843 (see §5 below). In 1842 the Gewandhaus hall was remodelled and side galleries were added (fig.4), to a design by Albert Geutebrück.



After Mendelssohn's death the Gewandhaus Orchestra was conducted from 1847 to 1854 by Julius Rietz (fig.5), N.W. Gade and David, and from 1854 to 1860 by Rietz alone. Although Rietz admired Mendelssohn's stewardship, he disliked the music of the New German School and generally avoided the works of Wagner and Liszt (whose symphonic poems he termed 'sins against art'). Rietz's successor, Carl Reinecke, had similar tastes, and during his tenure of 1860–95 the Gewandhaus's association with traditional repertory became firmly established. Although Wagner made a guest appearance in 1862 (to conduct the Tannhäuser and Meistersinger overtures), it was Brahms who developed a close relationship with the orchestra; he played his First Piano Concerto in 1859 and conducted the première of the Violin Concerto (in 1879, with Joseph Joachim as soloist) and the first Leipzig performances of all his symphonies. Under Reinecke Brahms's music became a staple of the Gewandhaus programmes, with all four symphonies commonly appearing in a single season.

In the early 1880s the need for a larger space led to the construction of a new hall, to a design by Martin Gropius and Heino Schmieden, in the Grassistrasse to the southwest of the town ring. Called the Neues Gewandhaus, after the orchestra's first home, the building contained a large auditorium seating approximately 1600 and a smaller hall, for chamber music, seating 700. An opening concert on 11 December 1884 of Bach, Mendelssohn and Beethoven was followed later that month by the first performance of Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, with the composer present. By 1888 Tchaikovsky could remark during a visit: 'The famous Gewandhaus concerts, which have made this relatively modest-sized town of Leipzig into one of Germany's musical centres, are remarkable for a first-class orchestra and a conservative programme'. In 1892 a Mendelssohn monument, by Werner Stein, was erected in front of the hall.



Arthur Nikisch, who followed Reinecke in 1895, maintained the conservative tradition, presenting, for instance, a complete cycle of Bruckner's symphonies in 1919–20. But he also restored Berlioz, Liszt and Wagner to the repertory, and introduced the works of Richard Strauss, Reger, Schoenberg and Delius. He also presented evenings of early music, in the spirit of Mendelssohn's 'Historical Concerts'. In 1916 Nikisch took the Gewandhaus Orchestra to Switzerland on its first foreign tour, and in 1918 he began the custom of performing Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on New Year's Eve.

Nikisch was followed in 1922 by Wilhelm Furtwängler. Although Furtwängler was a superb interpreter of Romantic music, the Gewandhaus failed to prosper during his tenure, possibly because he divided his time between Leipzig and Berlin (where he served as conductor of the Berlin PO). Bruno Walter revitalized the orchestra upon succeeding Furtwängler in 1929 but was forced to step down in 1933, victim of the Nazi government's anti-Semitic policies. Walter was followed by Hermann Abendroth, who led the orchestra during the difficult period of Nazi rule. The music of Mendelssohn was banned in Germany in 1936, and in November of that year his statue was removed from the front of the Gewandhaus and destroyed.

In December 1943 the Gewandhaus was destroyed by Allied bombing raids. After the war the orchestra

4. Original Gewandhaus hall, after the addition of side galleries: steel engraving, after 1842

5. Rehearsal of the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra under Julius Rietz, 1850: lithograph after a drawing by the cellist Carl Reimers performed in the auditorium of the Kongresshalle am Zoo (reconstructed in 1946), first under Herbert Albert (conductor 1946–9), then Franz Konwitschny (1949–62) and Václav Neumann (1964–8). In 1970 Kurt Masur was named Gewandhauskapellmeister. Masur, a strong advocate of traditional repertory, fully restored the orchestra to its former stature and convinced the city of the need for a new Gewandhaus building. In October 1981 a second Neues Gewandhaus – the third home of the orchestra – was dedicated in a festive programme that included Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Located at the southern end of Augustusplatz, the structure was designed by a team of architects headed by Rudolf Skoda. The main hall seats 1920 and contains a large and magnificent pipe organ by Alexander Schuke; a smaller hall, used for chamber music, seats 500. In 1993 a new Mendelssohn monument, designed by Jo Jastram, was erected in front of the building.

During his tenure as Gewandhaus conductor, Masur emerged as a leading spokesperson for the citizens of Leipzig. In addition to championing the Neues Gewandhaus, he played a leading role in the peace negotiations of October 1989 (see above) and pushed for the restoration of Mendelssohn's house (see §7 below). In 1995 he also initiated Gewandhaus Day, an event that takes place each summer and features an open-air concert by the orchestra. In 1991 Masur was also named music director of the New York PO; he stepped down from the Gewandhaus in 1996 in order to devote his full attention to New York. Herbert Blomstedt was appointed Masur's successor in Leipzig. In 1997 the Gewandhaus Orchestra consisted of a pool of 187 players, who perform for instrumental concerts, opera, and church performances with the Thomanerchor.

The most important orchestral ensembles after the Gewandhaus have been those associated with radio broadcasting. The Leipzig SO, founded in 1923 by Hermann Scherchen, was linked one year later with the Mitteldeutsche Rundfunk and began transmitting programmes regularly as the Rundfunk-Sinfonieorchester from the Albert-Halle (destroyed in World War II). After 1930 it also gave public concerts, often in conjunction with the Arbeiter-Sänger-Bund. Its conductors have included, in addition to Scherchen, Alfred Szendrei, Carl Schuricht, Hans Weisbach, Fritz Schröder, Hermann Abendroth, Herbert Kegel, Wolf-Dieter Hauschild and Max Pommer. The orchestra presently includes 165 musicians, who perform as the Sinfonieorchester and Kammerphilharmonie of the Mitteldeutsche Rundfunk.

4. CHOIRS AND CHORAL SOCIETIES. The growing interest of the middle class in choral singing led to the formation of a rich array of choirs and choral societies after 1800. Many groups achieved distinction. The Singakademie, Leipzig's first amateur mixed choir, was formed by Johann Gottfried Schicht and Jacob Bernhard Limberger in 1802. Patterned after Fasch's successful Berlin Sing-Akademie (founded 1791), the group often collaborated with the Gewandhaus Orchestra. Its early directors included J.P.C. Schulz (1810–27), C.A. Pohlenz (1827–43), E.F. Richter (1843–7) and Julius Rietz (1848–51). The Riedel-Whistling Verein, a mixed chorus of approximately 250 voices founded by Karl Riedel in 1854, and renamed Riedel'scher Verein the following year, presented the first complete performance of Bach's B minor Mass in 1859 (in German, with Liszt in attendance) and participated in the cornerstone-laying ceremony for the Festspielhaus in Bayreuth in 1872 (Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with Wagner conducting). Its early directors included Riedel (1854–88), Hermann Kretzschmar (1888–97) and Georg Göhler (1897–1913). The Bach-Verein was set up in 1875 at the urging of Bach biographer Philipp Spitta to perform Bach's cantatas in complete and unarranged form. It lasted until 1920. The Bach-Verein's most important conductors were Heinrich von Herzogenberg (1876–85), Hans Sitt (1886–1903) and Karl Straube (1903–20). Under Straube, the choir played a prominent role in the Leipzig German Bach Festivals.

There were many additional choirs, often with distinct political or vocational focal points: the Liedertafel (1815); the Pauliner-Verein (1822), a university men's chorus; the Zöllner-Verein (1833), Männergesang-Verein (1843) and Zöllnerbund (1857), three men's choruses founded by Carl Friedrich Zöllner; the Leipziger Kunst- und Gewerbeverein (1854); the Lehrergesangverein (1876); the Psalterion (1866), founded by Salomon Jadassohn; the Leipziger Männerchor (1891), established by Gustav Wohlgemuth and built into a member of the politically orientated Deutscher Sängerbund; and the Arion (1903), a university men's chorus. By 1900 many choruses in Leipzig could claim between 300 and 600 members. In 1925 it was estimated that approximately 14,000 citizens participated in choral groups.

A formal Gewandhaus Choir was established in 1920 by Straube, who was succeeded as director by Ramin in 1935. Since 1992 it has been led by Eckehard Schreiber (who heads the Gewandhaus Youth and Children's Choirs as well). Also important in the 20th century have been the radio choir, first formed in 1947 and reconstituted in 1992 as the MDR Chor, and church choirs such as those of the Friedenskirche, Taborkirche and Bethanienkirche.

5. Education. Before the 19th century, music instruction in Leipzig was offered mainly by the town's professional musicians: the Thomaskantor provided singing and instrumental lessons for Thomasschule students; the Stadtpfeifer and Kunstgeiger trained apprentices; and the Thomaskantor and other composers and players offered private instruction in performance. In 1771 Hiller founded a vocal institute with the purpose of training children at first, and then adults as well, in the art of singing. It developed into a type of music school, with pupils participating in the Musikübende Gesellschaft. After Hiller's departure for Mitau in 1785, however, it languished.

With the rapid expansion of public concert life after 1800, it became clear that a more broadly based system of music education was needed. This was provided by the Leipzig Konservatorium, founded by Mendelssohn in 1843 with a staff of six teachers and 22 students. With the chartered purpose of giving 'higher education in music' through instruction extending 'to all branches of music, seen as a science as well as an art', the conservatory prospered, and by the 20th century it had become an institution of international standing. From the beginning the school maintained close ties with the Gewandhaus Orchestra: the conductors and members of the orchestra served as instructors at the school, and the orchestra, in turn, recruited young players primarily from the conservatory. This symbiotic relationship resulted in 'the Gewandhaus tradition', in which playing techniques and interpretative nuances were passed down from one generation of orchestra members to the next. Originally located in a small building in the courtyard of the original Gewandhaus, in 1887 the conservatory moved into an imposing classical building (designed by Hugo Licht) opposite the Neues Gewandhaus in the Grassistrasse. This building was badly damaged in World War II and rebuilt in a simplified style.

In accordance with Mendelssohn's charter, the conservatory has offered distinguished instruction not only in performance but in theory and musicology as well. Many concepts of analysis and interpretation (such as hermeneutics) were developed there. Instructors have included Mendelssohn, Schumann, Reger and Karg-Elert. First called the Konservatorium der Musik, then the Königliches Konservatorium der Musik, and then Staatliche Hochschule für Musik (during the socialist era), the conservatory is now known as the Hochschule für Musik und Theater Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy, informally the Mendelssohn Akademie.

In 1919 Thomaskantor Karl Straube established an institute of church music for the purpose of providing instruction in the art of liturgical music. Straube was succeeded by Günther Ramin, upon whose death in 1956 the institute was dissolved by the socialist regime. In 1992 it was reopened, under the leadership of Christoph Krummacher, as a subsidiary of the Mendelssohn Hochschule für Musik und Theater.

6. Music publishing. Book publishing appeared early in Leipzig (by 1485, at least) and flourished in the town's favourable commercial climate. By 1700 Leipzig had surpassed Frankfurt as the centre of German book printing, with such ambitious projects as Zedler's Universallexikon (1732–54, 64 volumes) winning considerable renown.

Before 1763, Leipzig's role in music publishing was modest, however. As a centre of Lutheran orthodoxy, it excelled chiefly in the production of Gesangbücher, or hymnbooks, in which the music was printed by woodcutting, engraving or unrefined movable type. Michael Blum (first evangelical hymnal, 1530), Valentin Schumann (hymnal of 1542, with almost 120 chorales), and Valentin Bapst (hymnal of 1545, with foreword by Luther and woodcutting of great artistry) were among the most important Reformation printers; Gottfried Vopelius's outstanding Neu Leipziger Gesangbuch (Leipzig, 1682) carried the tradition into Bach's time. Early publishers of polyphonic music included Nicolaus Faber, Wolfgang Günther, Michael Lantzenberger, Jacob Apel and Lorenz Cober. Using movable type, Abraham Lamberg printed sacred vocal works by Calvisius, Demantius and Schein, as well as Bodenschatz's important Florilegium Portense anthologies (1603, and reprints into the 18th century). By 1700 music printing in Leipzig was carried out mostly by engraving, which was time-consuming, expensive and useful only for small runs (200 copies or so, for J.S. Bach's editions).

It was after the Seven Years War that Leipzig rose to prominence, due in large part to the appearance of the Breitkopf firm, founded as a book-publishing operation in 1719 by Bernhard Christoph Breitkopf. While Breitkopf's involvement with music was limited to text sheets and selected volumes of songs (the Schemellische Gesangbuch, 1736, and Singende Muse an der Pleisse, 1742, both produced with a double impression), his son Johann Gottlob Immanuel unveiled a movable mosaic type in 1754–5 (first used for Electress Maria Antoni Walpurgis's Il trionfo della fedeltà) that could be employed for 1500 copies or more. Using the new process, Immanuel produced over 50 editions, including music by Graun, Telemann, Quantz, Johann Stamitz, J.A. Hiller, C.P.E. Bach and J.S. Bach (the four-part chorales, 1784–7). At the same time, he also carried out an extensive trade in hand-produced manuscript copies, advertised in non-thematic catalogues (from 1761) as well as thematic catalogues (1762–87). Gottfried Christoph Härtel purchased the firm in 1796, and in 1806 introduced Senefelder's lithographic process, which revolutionized music printing. During the next 50 years, Breitkopf & Härtel, as the company was renamed, became the leading music publisher in the world, issuing first editions of Beethoven (25 works), Chopin, Berlioz, Liszt and others. By 1875 its music catalogue contained more than 15,000 items. The complete works of J.S. Bach (61 volumes, 1851–99), published in association with the Bach-Gesellschaft, established the standard for modern editions; it was soon followed by the Beethoven edition (1862–5; 13,400 plates) and the complete works of Mendelssohn, Mozart, Schumann, Schubert and many others. Breitkopf also published encompassing anthologies such as Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst (DDT, 1892–1931) and Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern (DTB, 1900–31).

Other celebrated Leipzig music-publishing firms include C.F. Peters, founded by Franz Anton Hoffmeister and Ambrosius Kühnel in 1800 and taken over by Carl Friedrich Peters in 1814; Hofmeister, founded by Friedrich Hofmeister in 1807; Merseburger, founded by Carl Merseburger in 1849; and Eulenburg, founded by Ernst Eulenburg in 1874. By the end of the 19th century Leipzig could claim more than 60 music-publishing firms. All profited from the introduction of the rotary press, which greatly facilitated the mass production of inexpensive music editions.

Music publishing in Leipzig prospered until World War II, when the situation changed drastically. C.F. Peters was seized by the Nazis, and its owner, Henri Hinrichsen, was sent to the Auschwitz concentration camp, where he died in 1942. Hinrichsen's son Walter left Leipzig in 1936 and founded C.F. Peters in New York; a second son, Max, left in 1937 and formed Hinrichsen Edition in London. After the war, a third branch, C.F. Peters Corporation was set up in Frankfurt in 1950; meanwhile Leipzig operations were taken over by the state and continued as Edition Peters. Breitkopf & Härtel was destroyed by the bombings of 1943, and much valuable manuscript and archival material was lost. After 1945 the firm split into a Leipzig division, which was taken over by the state, and a Western division, which was established in Wiesbaden, where it remains today. Hofmeister, too, was transformed into a state operation. Merseburger, Eulenburg and other firms fled to the West.

In 1958 the Leipzig operations of Breitkopf & Härtel, Hofmeister and the Deutscher Verlag für Musik (formed in 1954) were amalgamated under the rubric VEB (Volkseigener Betrieb). With state support, the VEB constituents issued numerous inexpensive facsimiles, reprints and musicological publications. After the reunification of 1989, VEB was dissolved. Edition Peters ceased operations, Breitkopf & Härtel became a branch of the Wiesbaden firm (which also absorbed the Deutscher Verlag) and Hofmeister returned to private ownership, issuing notable new publications such as Denkmäler Mitteldeutscher Barockmusik.

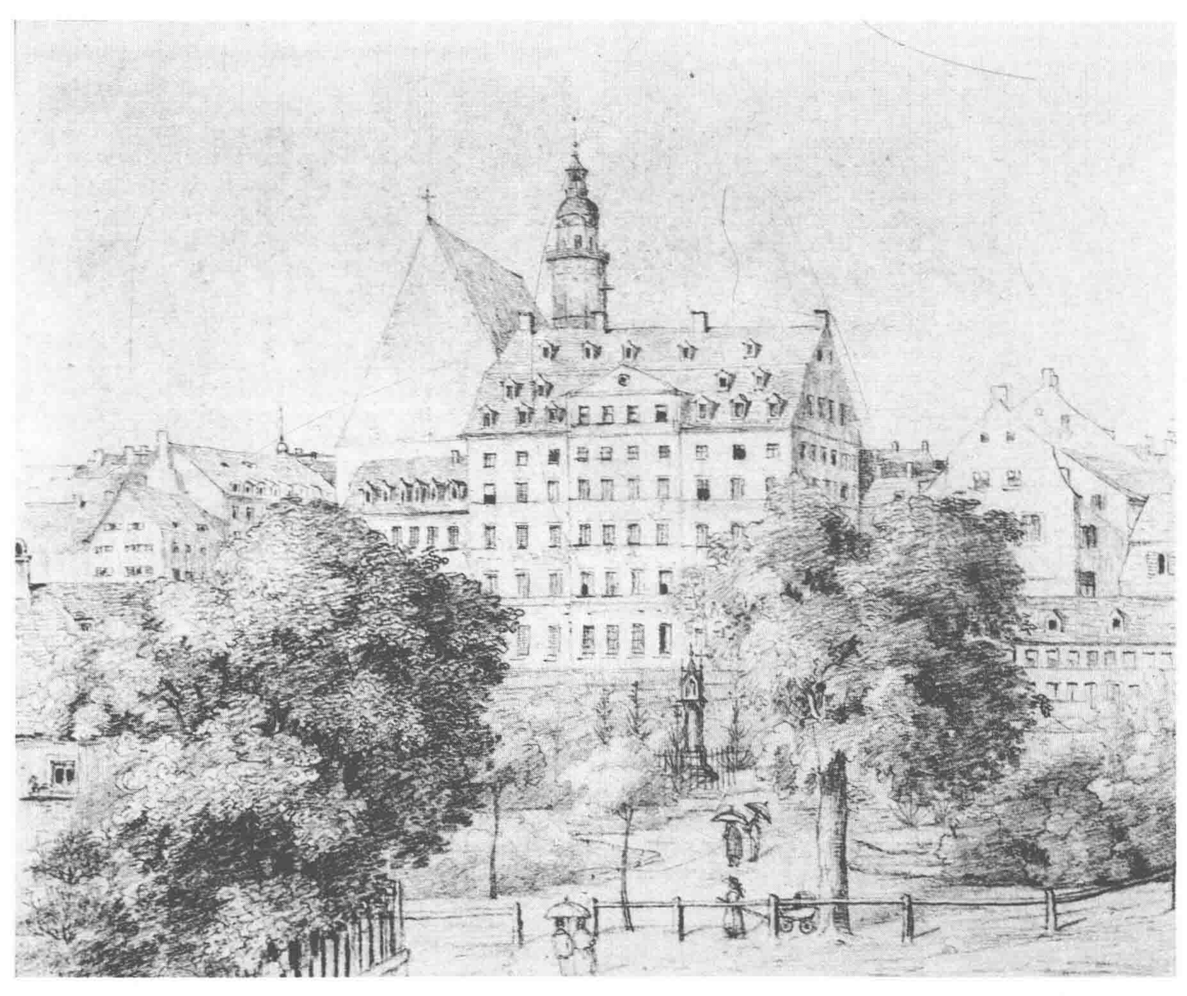
Leipzig has also been a centre for music magazines and periodicals, including Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung (1798, initiated by Breitkopf & Härtel), Neue Zeitschrift für Musik (1834, established by Schumann), Die Sängerhalle (1861), Musikalisches Wochenblatt (1870), Zeitschrift für Instrumentenbau (1880), Zeitschrift der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft (1899) and Deutsche Musikdirektoren-Zeitung (1899).

7. LIBRARIES AND MUSEUMS. The central music library of Leipzig is the Musikbibliothek, which in 1991 was incorporated into the Leipziger Städtische Bibliotheken complex in the Altes Grassimuseum (Wilhelm-Leuschner-Platz). The Musikbibliothek is an amalgamation of several public and private collections, including those of K.H.L. Pölitz (prints and manuscripts of chamber and vocal music from 1750–1820), Carl Ferdinand Becker (17th- and 18th-century material), Kurt Taut (autographs of lesser 19th-century composers), Rudolph Hagedorn (Wagner collection, containing some 2000 items) and the Leipzig Singakademie. The superb collection of the Musikbibliothek Peters, founded by Max Abraham in 1894 as part of C.F. Peters and seized during World War II by the Nazis, was incorporated into the library in 1953.

Also noteworthy is the Deutsche Bücherei (Deutscher Platz). Established in 1913 as a repository for all books published in the German language, it now contains over 7·5 million items. It is housed in a main building (built by Oskar Pusch from 1914 to 1916) and a storage tower complex (1983). In 1991 the Bücherei was placed under the administrative aegis of the Deutsche Bibliothek, Frankfurt. The Stadtarchiv (Altes Rathaus) houses the town archives, which encompass early documents pertaining to music activities.

The music instrument collection of Leipzig University in the Grassimuseum contains as its core the Cologne collection of Wilhelm Heyer, purchased for the university in 1926 through funds provided by Henri Hinrichsen. Although the collection suffered grave losses in the war, it remains unusually rich in early keyboard instruments, including a 1533 harpsichord and a 1543 clavichord by Domenicus Pisaurensis and a 1726 pianoforte by Bartolomeo Christofori. The collection has been the home of the Capella Fidinia, which since 1957 has given performances on period instruments or reconstructions under the direction of Hans Grüss. It has also served as a training ground for early-instrument restorers. Recent directors have been Hubert Henkel and Winfried Schrammek.

The Stadtgeschichtliches Museum (Altes Rathaus) contains the Mendelssohn Room (established in 1970) and other historic spaces, as well as the famous 1746 portrait of Bach painted by local artist Elias Gottlob Haussmann. The Mendelssohn House has been set aside as a memorial to Felix Mendelssohn, who lived there with his wife and five children during his last three years (1844–7). Also of special interest to music scholars are the Deutsches Buch- und Schriftmuseum and the German Paper Museum (with an extensive collection of watermarks), both housed in the Deutsche Bücherei. (For the Bach-Archiv and Bach-Museum, see §8 below.)



8. THE BACH HERITAGE. It is not surprising that Leipzig, as the city in which Bach held his final and most important post, would play a central role in the posthumous resurrection, preservation and study of his music, in what is termed, in German, Bach-Pflege. This began in 1802 with Forkel's ground-breaking biography Über Johann Sebastian Bachs Leben, Kunst und Kunstwerke, published by Hoffmeister & Kühnel, which also issued (with Forkel's editorial assistance) the Oeuvres complettes de Jean Sebastien Bach (1801–4), the first attempt at a complete edition of Bach's organ and harpsichord music. Around the same time Thomaskantor A.E. Müller began to perform Bach's church cantatas, still largely unknown at the time, within the context of services in Leipzig.

In the 1840s Mendelssohn's inspired performances of Bach's music in the Gewandhaus, the Thomaskirche and other venues culminated in the erection of the first Bach monument (now known either as the Old Bach Monument or the Mendelssohn Bach Monument), designed by Eduard Bendemann and set up in the linden-lined promenade just to the west of the Thomasschule in 1843 (fig.6). Between 1844 and 1852 C.F. Peters issued the complete Bach organ works in eight volumes, and in 1850 Carl Ferdinand Becker, Moritz Hauptmann, Otto Jahn and Robert Schumann founded the Bach-Gesellschaft for the purpose of publishing a complete edition of Bach's music. The volumes of the resulting complete works of Bach, issued by Breitkopf & Härtel between 1851 and 1899, set a new scholarly standard for urtext editions. The Bach-Gesellschaft was dissolved in 1900 upon the completion of the complete works, and the Neue Bach-Gesellschaft was set up the same year. The first issue of the Bach-Jahrbuch (BJb), sponsored by the newly formed society, appeared in 1904. While the old and new Bach societies were concerned with editing Bach's music and documenting his life, the Bach-Verein, founded in 1875, focussed on performing Bach's sacred vocal works 'in original form' (see §4 above).

The growing idolization of Bach during the 19th century led to the rediscovery of the composer's bones in the burial plot of the Johanniskirche in 1894 and their ceremonial reburial inside the church. The 20th century began inauspiciously with the razing of the Thomasschule for a new rectory building in 1902, but this was followed six years later by the erection of a second Bach monument (now known as the New Bach Monument), commissioned by the Bach-Verein and designed by Carl Seffner, who claimed to have recreated Bach's facial features from studies of the composer's skull made by the Leipzig anatomist Wilhelm His. The imposing statue, located in the middle of the Thomaskirchhof, has become a mecca for Bach worshippers.

The period following World War II ushered in new Bach institutions and events, despite the difficulties caused by the socialist regime and a divided Germany. Bach's bones were moved from the ruins of the Johanniskirche in 1950 to the choir of the Thomaskirche, where they remain. The Bach-Archiv, a research institute set up by Werner Neumann, was set up chiefly to co-edit the Neue Bachausgabe with the Johann-Sebastian-Bach-Institut in Göttingen (located in what was then West Germany). The Bach-Archiv's other projects include the publication or editing of the Bach-Dokumente, the Bach-Jahrbuch, the Bach Compendium and the Leipziger Beiträge zur Bach-Forschung. Directed since 1986 by Hans-Joachim Schulze, it is located today opposite the Thomaskirche, in the restored Bosehaus of 1711, which also houses the Bach Museum (permanent display plus special temporary exhibits) and the Neue Bach-Gesellschaft. For a time, the Bach-Archiv was a subsidiary of the Nationale Forschungs- und Gedenkstätten Johann Sebastian Bach der DDR, established in 1979 but dissolved in 1989.

6. Thomaskirche and Thomasschule, view from the west, with (centre) the Bach monument by Eduard Bendemann: drawing by Felix Mendelssohn, pencil, 1843 (D-Bsb Mendelssohn-Archive)

The year 1964 witnessed the beginning of the International Bach Competition, initially held every three years, and biennial from 1998, in areas of performance such as organ, harpsichord, violin and voice. The longstanding practice of performing a Bach cantata each Saturday in the Thomaskirche at the afternoon Vespers service continues, and during the summer months outdoor concerts are given at the New Bach Monument in front of the Thomaskirche.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A General. B Church music. C Opera. D Concert life. E Education. F Music publishers and journals. G Additional studies.

A: GENERAL

Grove6 (P.M. Young); MGG2 (P. Krause and others)
J. Beer: Musicalische Discurse durch die Principia der Philosophie deducirt (Nuremberg, 1719)
A. Weizius: Verbessertes Leipzig 1698 bis hieher (Leipzig, 1728)
J.S. Riemer: Andere Fortsetzung des Leipzigischen Jahr-Buchs (MS, 1771, Leipzig, Stadtarchiv)
Beschreibung der Stadt Leipzig (Leipzig, 1784)
F.G. Leonhardi: Geschichte und Beschreibung der Kreis- und Handelsstadt Leipzig (Leipzig, 1799)
J.C. Dolz: Versuch einer Geschichte Leipzig's (Leipzig, 1818)
K. Grosse: Geschichte der Stadt Leipzig (Leipzig, 1839/R, 2/1897–8)
A. Schmidt: Musikalische Reise-Momente auf einer Wanderung durch Norddeutschland (Hamburg and Leipzig, 1846)
J.E. Kneschke: Zur Geschichte des Theaters und der Musik in Leipzig (Leipzig, 1864)
G. Wustmann: Aus Leipzigs Vergangenheit (Leipzig, 1885–1909)
G. Wustmann, ed.: Quellen zur Geschichte Leipzigs (Leipzig, 1889–95)
E. d'Harcourt: 'Leipsick', La musique actuelle en Allemagne et Autriche-Hongrie, ii (Paris, 1908), 276–338
R. Wustmann: Musikgeschichte Leipzigs, i: Bis zur Mitte des 17. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig and Berlin, 1909/R)
A. Richter: Aus Leipzigs musikalischer Glanzzeit (MS, 1910, Leipzig, Stadtgeschichtliches Museum)
E. Kroker: Handelsgeschichte der Stadt Leipzig (Leipzig, 1925)
A. Schering: Musikgeschichte Leipzigs, ii: Von 1650 bis 1723 (Leipzig, 1926/R)
A. Schering: Musikgeschichte Leipzigs, iii: Johann Sebastian Bach und das Musikleben Leipzigs im 18. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1941)
F. Schulze: Aus Leipzigs Kulturgeschichte (Leipzig, 1956)
H. Füssler: Leipzig (Leipzig, 1964)
F.K. Prieberg: Musik im anderen Deutschland (Cologne, 1968)
Jb zur Geschichte der Stadt Leipzig (1975–80)
K. Czok: Das alte Leipzig (Leipzig, 1978, 2/1985)
G. and I. Hempel: Musikstadt Leipzig (Leipzig, 1979, 2/1984)
K. Sohl: Leipzig: aus Vergangenheit und Gegenwart (Leipzig, 1981)
L. Heydick: Leipzig: historischer Führer zu Stadt und Land (Leipzig, 1990)
W. Hocquél: Leipzig: Baumeister und Bauten von der Romantik bis zur Gegenwart (Berlin,1990)
W. Schneider: Leipzig: Dokumente und Bilder zur Kulturgeschichte (Leipzig and Weimar, 1990)
K. Sohl: Neues Leipzigisches Geschichts-Buch (Leipzig, 1990)
S. Döhring: 'Dresden and Leipzig: Two Bourgeois Centres', Music and Society, vi: The Early Romantic Era, ed. A. Ringer (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1991), 141–59
F. Hennenberg: 'Musikgeschichte der Stadt Leipzig im 19. und 20. Jahrhundert: Studien zur Methodologie und Konzeption', BMw, xxxiii (1992), 225–49, 259–89
G.B. Stauffer: 'Leipzig: a Cosmopolitan Trade Centre', Music and Society, iv: The Late Baroque Era, ed. G.J. Buelow (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1994), 254–95

B: CHURCH MUSIC

K.C.E. Gretschel: Kirchliche Zustände Leipzigs vor und während der Reformation im Jahre 1539 (Leipzig, 1839)
G. Stallbaum: Die Thomasschule zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1839)
E. Dohmke: Die Nikolaischule zu Leipzig im 17. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1874)
F. Lampadius: Die Kantoren der Thomasschule zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1902)
A. Prümers: Berühmte Thomaskantoren und ihre Schüler (Langensalza, 1908)
O. Kaemmel: Geschichte des Leipziger Schulwesens . . . (1214–1846) (Leipzig and Berlin,1909)
A. Schering: 'Über die Kirchenkantaten vorbachischer Thomaskantoren', BJb 1912, 86–123
R. Sachse: Die ältere Geschichte der Thomasschule zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1912)
A. Schering: 'Die alte Chorbibliothek der Thomasschule in Leipzig', AMw, i (1918–19), 275–88
H. Hofmann: 'Gottesdienst und Kirchenmusik in der Universitäts-Kirche zu St. Pauli-Leipzig seit der Reformation (1543–1918)', Beiträge zur sächsischen Kirchengeschichte, xxxii (1919), 118–19
R. Kötzschke: Geschichte der Universitäts-Sängerschaft zu St. Pauli in Leipzig, 1822–1922 (Leipzig, 1922)
F. Kemmerling: Die Thomasschule zu Leipzig: eine Kurzgeschichte von ihrer Gründung 1212 bis zum Jahre 1927 (Leipzig, 1927)
A. Schering: Johann Sebastian Bachs Leipziger Kirchenmusik: Studien und Wege zu ihrer Erkenntnis (Leipzig, 1936, 2/1954)
G. Hempel: 'Der Leipziger Thomanerchor im Vormärz', Musik und Gesellschaft, xii (1962), 356–9
R. Petzoldt: Der Leipziger Thomanerchor (Leipzig, 1962; Eng. trans., 1962)
B. Knick: St. Thomas zu Leipzig, Schule und Chor: Bilder und Dokumente zur Geschichte der Thomasschule und des Thomanerchores (Wiesbaden, 1963)
F. Ostarhild: St. Nikolai zu Leipzig: Geschichte des Gotteshauses und der Gemeinde 1160–1960 (Leipzig, 1964)
G. Stiller: Johann Sebastian Bach und das Leipziger gottesdienstliche Leben seiner Zeit (Berlin, 1970; Eng. trans., 1984, as Johann Sebastian Bach and Liturgical Life in Leipzig)
H. Stiehl, ed.: 750 Jahre St. Thomas zu Leipzig (Berlin, 1962, 2/1971 as St. Thomas zu Leipzig, 4/1984)
E.-H. Lemper, H. Magirius and W. Schrammek: Die Thomaskirche zu Leipzig (Berlin, 1974, 3/1984)
W. Hanke: Die Thomaner (Berlin, 1979, 2/1985)
H. Magirius: Die Nikolaikirche zu Leipzig (Berlin, 1979, 2/1991)
A. Glöckner: 'Leipziger Neukirchenmusik 1729–1761', BMw, xxv (1983), 105–12
H. Stiehl: 'Das Innere der Thomaskirche zur Amtszeit Johann Sebastian Bachs',Beiträge zur Bachforschung, iii (1984), 1–96
A. Glöckner: 'Johann Kuhnau, Johann Sebastian Bach und die Musikdirektoren der Leipziger Neukirche', Beiträge zur Bachforschung, iv (1985), 23–32
A. Glöckner: Die Musikpflege an der Leipziger Neukirche von 1699 bis 1761 (diss., U. of Halle, 1988)
Universitätskirche Leipzig: ein Streitfall? (Leipzig, 1992)
K. Löffler: Die Zerstörung: Dokumente und Erinnerungen zum Fall der Universitätskirche Leipzig (Leipzig, 1993)

C: OPERA

H. Blümer: Geschichte des Theaters in Leipzig (Leipzig, 1818)
J.O. Opel: 'Die ersten Jahrzehnte der Oper zu Leipzig', Neues Archiv für Sächsische Geschichte und Altertumskunde, v (1884), 116–17
F. Berend: Nicolaus Adam Strungk, 1640–1700: sein Leben und seine Werke, mit Beiträgen zur Geschichte der Musik und des Theaters in Celle, Hannover und Leipzig (Freiburg, 1915)
F. Schulze: Hundert Jahre Leipziger Stadttheater (Leipzig, 1917)
G.F. Schmidt: 'Die älteste deutsche Oper in Leipzig am Ende des 17. und Anfang des 18. Jahrhunderts', Festschrift zum 50. Geburtstag Adolf Sandberger (Munich, 1918), 209–57
F. Reuter: Die Geschichte der deutschen Oper in Leipzig (1693–1720) (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1922)
F. Reuter: 'Die Entwicklung der Leipziger, insbesondere italienischen Oper bis zum siebenjährigen Kriege', ZMw, v (1922–3), 1–16

Festschrift zur Eröffnung des neuen Leipziger Opernhauses (Leipzig, 1960)
H. Hopp: 'Das neue Opernhaus in Leipzig', Deutsche Architektur, x (1961), 69–77
G. Braun: Die Leipziger Allgemeine Theater-Chronik in ihrer Bedeutung für die Theaterkritik und Theatergeschichte des 19. Jahrhunderts (diss., U. of Berlin, 1963)
G. Rudolff-Hille: Das Theater auf der Ranstädter Bastei (Leipzig, 1969)
R. Brauer: 'Zur Geschichte des Leipziger Neuen Theaters von 1868 bis 1932', Oper heute, x (1987), 20–40
W. Hobohm: 'Georg Philipp Telemann und die bürgerliche Oper in Leipzig', HJb 1990, 49–61
J. Schebera: Gustav Brecher und die Leipziger Oper, 1923–1933 (Leipzig, 1990)
S. and H. Neef: Deutsche Oper im 20. Jahrhundert: DDR, 1949–1989 (Berlin, 1992)
F. Hennenberg: 300 Jahre Leipziger Oper: Geschichte und Gegenwart (Munich, 1993)

D: CONCERT LIFE

C.G. Thomas: Unpartheiische Kritik der vorzüglichsten . . . zu Leipzig aufgeführten Concerte und Opern (Leipzig, 1798–?1800; continued as Musikalische kritische Zeitschrift, ?1800–06)
C.A. Grenser: Geschichte der Musik, hauptsächlich aber des grossen Konzert- und Theaterorchesters in Leipzig (MS, 1840, Leipzig, Stadtgeschichtliches Museum)
W. Seyfferth: Die Gewandhauskonzerte in Leipzig (Leipzig, 1865)
K.W. Whistling: Der Musikverein Euterpe zu Leipzig 1824–1874 (Leipzig, 1874)
A. Dörffel: Geschichte der Gewandhausconcerte zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1884/R)
G.H. Müller: Das Stadt-Theater zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1887–91)
R. Kade: 'Die Leipziger Stadtpfeifer', MMg, xxi (1889), 194–5
E. Kneschke: Die Hundertundfünfzigjährige Geschichte der Leipziger Gewandhaus-Concerte, 1743–1893 (Leipzig, 1893)
P. Langer: Chronik der Leipziger Singakademie zu Leipzig, 1802–1902 (Leipzig, 1902)
C. Reinecke: Erinnerungen an den alten Gewandhaussaal in Leipzig (Bielefeld, 1902)
A. Göhler: Der Riedel-Verein zu Leipzig: eine Denkschrift zur Feier seines fünfzigjährigen Bestehens (Leipzig, 1904)
F. Schmidt: Das Musikleben der bürgerlichen Gesellschaft Leipzigs im Vormärz (1815–48) (Langensalza, 1912)
A. Schering: 'Die Leipziger Ratsmusik von 1650 bis 1775', AMw, iii (1921), 17–53
J. Hohlfeld: Geschichte der Sängerschaft Arion (Sängerschaft in der D.F.) 1909–1924 (Leipzig, 1924)
R. Falk: Geschichte der Sängerschaft Arion zu Leipzig 1849–1929 (Leipzig, n.d.)
E. Creuzberg: Die Gewandhaus-Konzerte zu Leipzig, 1781–1931 (Leipzig, 1931)
E. Preussner: Die bürgerliche Musikkultur (Kassel, 1935, 2/1950)
A. Werner: Freie Musikgemeinschaften alter Zeit im mitteldeutschen Raum (Wolfenbüttel,1940)
M. Teichmann: Die Geschichte des Leipziger Männerchors (Leipzig, 1941)
H.-J. Nösselt: Das Gewandhausorchester (Leipzig, 1943)
H. Heyer, ed.: Festschrift zum 175jährigen Bestehen der Gewandhauskonzerte 1781–1956 (Leipzig, 1956)
G. Hempel: 'Das Ende der Leipziger Ratsmusik im 19. Jahrhundert', AMw, xv (1958), 187–97
W. Neumann: 'Das Bachische Collegium Musicum', BJb 1960, 5–27
F. Hennenberg: Das Leipziger Gewandhausorchester (Leipzig, 1962, 5/1984; new edn, Frankfurt, 1992; Eng. trans., 1962)
G. Hempel: 'Die bürgerliche Musikkultur Leipzigs im Vormärz', BMw, vi (1964), 2–14
W. Pretzsch: Das Rundfunk-Sinfonie-Orchester Leipzig: eine chronologische Betrachtung zum 40jährigen Bestehen des Orchesters (Leipzig, 1964)
H.-J. Rothe: 225 Jahre Gewandhausorchester (Leipzig, 1967)
Rundfunk Sinfonieorchester Leipzig (Leipzig,1974) [with introduction by F. Hennenberg]
J. Forner, ed.: Die Gewandhaus-Konzerte zu Leipzig 1781–1981 (Leipzig, 1981, 2/1982)
H.-J. Schulze: 'Besitzstand und Vermögensverhältnisse von Leipziger Ratsmusikern zur Zeit Johann Sebastian Bachs', Beiträge zur Bachforschung, iv (1985), 33–46
R. Skoda: Neues Gewandhaus Leipzig: Baugeschichte und Gegenwart eines Konzertgebäudes (Berlin, 1985)
D. Döring: 'Das Musikleben im Leipziger Collegium Gellianum in den vierziger und fünfziger Jahren des 17. Jahrhundert', Beiträge zur musikalischen Quellenforschung: Bad Köstritz 1988, 1989 and 1990
R. Richter: Gewandhaus zu Leipzig: Miszellen zum Jubiläum 1981 bis 1991 (Leipzig, 1991)
C. Böhm and S.-W.Staps, eds.: Das Leipziger Stadt- und Gewandhausorchester: Dokumente einer 250jährigen Geschichte (Leipzig, 1993)

E: EDUCATION

J.E. Kneschke: Das Conservatorium der Musik in Leipzig (Leipzig, 1868)
K.W. Whistling: Statistik des Königlichen Conservatoriums der Musik zu Leipzig 1843–1883 (Leipzig, 1883)
P. Röntsch, ed.: Bericht über die ersten 75 Jahre des Königlichen Konservatoriums zu Leipzig, erstattet zum 2. April 1918 (Leipzig, 1918)
B.F. Richter: 'J.S. Bach und die Universität zu Leipzig', BJb 1925, 1–10
M. Wehnert, J.Fornerand H. Schiller: Hochschule für Musik Leipzig (Leipzig, 1968)
H.C. Wolff: 'Die Geschichte der Musikwissenschaft an den Universitäten Leipzig und Berlin', SPFFBU, H4 (1969), 17–27
G. Pietzsch: Zur Pflege der Musik an den deutschen Universitäten bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts (Hildesheim, 1971) [repr. of articles pubd in AMf (1936–43)]

F: MUSIC PUBLISHERS AND JOURNALS

A. Göhler: Verzeichnis der in den Frankfurter und Leipziger Messkatalogen der Jahre 1564 bis 1759 angezeigten Musikalien (Leipzig, 1902/R)
H. von Hase: 'Breitkopfsche Textdrucke zu Leipziger Musikaufführungen zu Bachs Zeit', BJb 1913, 69–88
M. Bruckner-Bigelwald: Die Anfänge der Leipziger Allgemeinen musikalischen Zeitung (Hilversum, 1965)
H.-M. Plesske: Leipzigs Musikverlage einst und jetzt (Leipzig, 1966)
H. Lindlar: C.F. Peters Musikverlag: Zeittafeln zur Verlagsgeschichte 1800–1867–1967 (Frankfurt, 1967)
Pasticcio auf das 250-jährige Bestehen des Verlages Breitkopf & Härtel: Beiträge zur Geschichte des Hauses (Leipzig, 1968)
R. Elvers, ed.: Breitkopf und Härtel 1719–1968: ein historischer Überblick zum Jubiläum (Wiesbaden, 1968)
R. Schmitt-Thomas: Die Entwicklung der deutschen Konzertkritik im Spiegel der Leipziger Allgemeinen musikalischen Zeitung (1798–1848) (Frankfurt, 1969)
G.B. Stauffer, ed.: Bach Perspectives, ii: J.S. Bach, the Breitkopfs, and Eighteenth-Century Music Trade (Lincoln, NE, 1996)

G: ADDITIONAL STUDIES

R. Beer: Der Bach-Verein zu Leipzig in den Jahren 1875–1899 (Leipzig, 1900)
B.F. Richter: 'Stadtpfeifer und Alumnen der Thomasschule in Leipzig zu Bachs Zeit', BJb 1907, 32–78
A. Heuss: Bach-Fest anlässlich der Enthüllung des Bach-Denkmals in Leipzig, 16. bis 18. Mai 1908 (Leipzig, 1908)
H. Heyde: 'Der Instrumentenbau in Leipzig zur Zeit Johann Sebastian Bachs', 300 Jahre J.S. Bach: sein Werk in Handschriften und Dokumenten, Musikinstrumente seiner Zeit, seine Zeitgenossen, ed. U. Prinz, Internationale Bachakademie in den Staatsgalerie Stuttgart, 14 Sept – 27 Oct 1985 (Tutzing, 1985), 73–88 [exhibition catalogue]
S. Lieberwirth: Die Gewandhaus-Orgeln (Leipzig, 1986)
J. Forner: Johannes Brahms in Leipzig: Geschichte einer Beziehungen (Leipzig, 1987)
H. Heyde: 'Der Holzblasinstrumente in Leipzig in der 2. Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts',Tibia, xii (1987), 481–6
U. Böhme: Die Sauer-Orgel in der Thomaskiche zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1991)
H. Henkel: 'Musikinstrumente im Nachlass Leipziger Bürger', Johann Sebastian Bachs historischer Ort, ed. R. Szeskus (Wiesbaden, 1991), 56–67
M. Hübner: 'Der Bach-Verein zu Leipzig, 1875–1920', BJb 1997, 97–115

GEORGE B. STAUFFER

Leise (Middle High Ger. Leis). A devotional, Germanic song stanza in the nature of a refrain, found particularly in the later Middle Ages. Supposedly deriving its name from the words 'Kyrie eleison' as they appear repeatedly in the litany, the Leise is normally considered a part of the general category RUF and is distinguished within that category by being characteristically in a four-line form without musical repeats. The earliest known example is thought to be the 9th-century Freising song to St Peter, Unsar trothîn hât farsalt (D-Mbs Clm 6260, f.158*v*). In the early stages of specifically German polyphony (beginning with the lost early 15th-century Strasbourg manuscript F-Sm 222) Leisen were often set; other examples include Christ ist erstanden (based on the opening of the sequence Victimae paschali laudes and traced to the mid-12th century) and Nun bitten wir den heiligen Geist (based on the sequence Veni Sancte Spiritus and traced to the mid-13th century).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 ('Leisen und Rufe'; V. Mertens) [incl. further bibliography]
H. Teuscher: Christ ist erstanden: stilkritische Studie über die mehrstimmigen Bearbeitungen der Weise von den Anfängen bis 1600 (Kassel, 1930)
J. Riedel: Leisen Formulae: their Polyphonic Settings in the Renaissance and Reformation (diss., U. of Southern California, 1953)
H. Hucke: 'Die Neumierung des althochdeutschen Petrusliedes', Organicae voces: Festschrift Joseph Smits van Waesberghe (Amsterdam, 1963), 71–8

DAVID FALLOWS

Leisentrit, Johannes [Johann] (b Olomouc, May 1527; d Bautzen, 24 Nov 1586). German theologian, hymnologist and composer of Moravian birth. He studied theology at Kraków and was ordained in 1549. After a short period spent teaching in Vienna and Prague, he was sent to the diocese of Meissen by the Archbishop of Prague. The last Catholic Bishop of Meissen appointed him canon of Bautzen Cathedral in 1551. In 1559 he became dean, and in 1560 official-general for the diocese of Lusatia. When the bishopric of Meissen became Protestant in 1561, the papal nuncio in Prague appointed him 'administrator and commissioner-general of the see of Meissen for Upper and Lower Lusatia'. The fact that Lusatia remained predominantly Catholic must be attributed to his pastoral endeavours, which were reflected in many catechetic and other writings, and to his astute and moderating ecclesiastical policy. He was one of the great reformers of the early years of the Counter-Reformation. The crowning achievement of his ministry was his great hymnbook Geistliche Lieder und Psalmen (Bautzen, 1567/R), which was only the second Catholic hymnbook to appear in the 16th century (the first was Michael Vehe's of 1537). It has 480 folios containing 250 hymns and 180 melodies and is magnificently adorned with woodcuts and marginal decorations. It is the largest and finest hymnal of the Counter-Reformation. Leisentrit fully explained his intentions in an extensive preface. Two further editions with different prefaces appeared during his lifetime, in 1573 and 1584; in the last of these, published as Catholisch Gesangbuch voller Geistlicher Lieder und Psalmen, the repertory of texts and melodies is considerably expanded. The hymnal was circulated not only in Leisentrit's own diocese of Lusatia but throughout Germany. At the instigation of the Bishop of Bamberg an abridged version was published at Dillingen in 1576; this was the first German Catholic diocesan hymnbook. Leisentrit used a number of Protestant hymnbooks, including Nicolaus Herman's Sonntags Evangelia (1561) and Valentin Triller's Schlesisch Singebüchlein (1555), as his sources; he also appears to have drawn on the repertory of the Bohemian Brethren. In addition to Vehe's hymnal his Catholic sources included hymns by his friend Christoph Schweher of Budweis (now České Budějovice) that were first printed in the hymnal Christliche Gebet und Gesäng (Prague, 1581) but whose texts appeared in Leisentrit's hymnal in 1567; for the third edition he also used texts from R. Edlingius's Teutsche evangelische Messen, Lobgesange (Cologne, 1572) and the Tegernsee hymnal (1577). He took over many of the melodies of Hecyrus, Herman and Triller and, as he stated in a letter to Hecyrus appended to the first edition, composed some of the others himself. Some 70 melodies appeared in his hymnbook for the first time.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB (F. Schnorr von Carolsfeld)
G. Rupertus: Oratio funebris in obitum Johannes Leisentritii a Julisberg (Bautzen, 1586)
J. Kehrein: Katholische Kirchenlieder, Hymnen, Psalmen aus den ältesten deutschen gedruckten Gesangbüchern und Gebetbüchern zusammengestellt (Würzburg, 1859–65/R)
P. Wackernagel: Das deutsche Kirchenlied von der ältesten Zeit bis zum Anfang des 17. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1864–77/R), ii–iii
W. Bäumker: Das katholische deutsche Kirchenlied in seinen Singweisen, i–ii (Freiburg, 1886/R, 1883/R) [incl. several melodies]
W. Crecelius: 'Über die Quellen von Leisentrits Gesangbuche', Archiv für die Geschichte deutscher Sprache und Dichtung, i (1873), 337–54
W. Gerblich: 'Johann Leisentrit', Neues Lausitzer Magazin, cvii (1931), 1–78
W. Lipphardt: Johann Leisentrits Gesangbuch von 1567 (Leipzig, 1963)
J. Gülden, ed.: Johann Leisentrits Bautzener Messritus und Messgesänge (Münster, 1964)
W. Lipphardt: Afterword to facs. repr. of J. Leisentrit: Geistlicher Lieder und Psalmen (1567) (Kassel and Leipzig, 1966); see also review by K. Ameln, Jb für Liturgik und Hymnologie, xi (1967), 191–2
D. Hofmann: 'P. Johannes Werlin aus Seeon: Satztechnische Untersuchungen an vierzeiligen Liedern', Musik in bayerischen Klöstern (Regensburg, 1986), 9–60

WALTHER LIPPHARDT/CLYTUS GOTTWALD

Leisner, David (b Los Angeles, 22 Dec 1953). American guitarist and composer. He studied at Wesleyan University; his teachers included John Duarte, David Starobin and Angelo Gilandino (guitar), John Kirapatrick and Karen Tuttle (interpretation), and Richard Winslow (composition). In 1975 he won second prize at the Toronto International Guitar Competition and in 1981 a silver medal at the International Guitar Competition of Geneva. He made his New York début in 1979 at Merkin Hall. He taught guitar at Amherst College, 1976–8, and in 1980 was appointed to the New England Conservatory. Leisner is a champion of contemporary American guitar works, and has given the first performances of works by Virgil Thomson and Glass, among others. He also played an important role in the rediscovery of the works of Johann Kaspar Mertz, especially with his recording The Viennese Guitar (1980). In 1984 he contracted the condition of focal dystonia, affecting his right hand; he compensated for this by using solely the thumb and index finger, and eventually regained full use of his hand. His compositions include the Four Pieces for guitar (1979–86), the Simple Songs (1982) and Five Songs of Devotion (1989) for voice and guitar, as well as chamber and orchestral works.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Kozinn: 'Expanding the Classical Guitar Repertoire', Guitar Player, xviii/10 (1984), 61–7

J. Holenko: Interview, Soundboard, xviii/4 (1992), 14–21

C. Lehman: Interview, Guitar Review, no.98 (1994), 15–20

THOMAS F. HECK

Leisring [Leissringk, Leisringius], Volckmar (b Gebstedt, Thuringia, 1588; d Buchfarth, nr Weimar, 1637). German composer and theorist. From 1605 to 1611 he studied theology at Jena. In 1611 he became Rektor, Kantor and town clerk of Schkölen, near Naumburg. In 1618 he became pastor at Nohra, near Erfurt. In the preface to the second edition of his Cymbalum Davidcum (1619) he states that because of the divine call to the ministry, he had resolved to give up composing. Hence, most of his music dates from before 1618. The few publications after 1618 were either composed previously at Jena (Taedae nuptiales) or were later editions of earlier works. From 1626 until his death he was pastor at Buchfarth and nearby Vollhardsroda. Leisring was a conservative composer. Most of his works feature homophonic double-choir writing. Of the 35 motets in Cymbalum David, 14 are for eight-voice double choir and even those in five or six parts frequently show a division between high and low voices. His Corona musices is an encomium on the origin, nature and effects of music. Breviarium artis musices, which is similar in layout to Heinrich Faber's Compendiolum musicae (1548; many subsequent editions), contains, like many other didactic books of the time, chapters on modes, clefs, voices, intervals, modulation, tactus and so on.

WORKS

Brautlied aus dem XXVI. Capitel Syrachs (Jena, 1609), lost

Cantio magnificus et prudentissimi, 6vv (Jena, 1609)

Canticum gratulatorium in Faustum (Jena, 1610)

Cymbalum Davidicum, 5–6, 8vv (Jena, 1611)

Strenophonia oder ein new Jahr Geschenck, 4–6, 8vv (Jena, 1615)

Taedae nuptiales in 16 anmutigen Hochzeitgesängen, 4–8vv (Erfurt, 1624)

2 sacred songs in Cantionale sacrum, i (Gotha, 1646); 1 in Cantionale sacrum, ii (Gotha, 1655)

Trotz sei dem Teufel, 8vv, D-Mbs

O filii et felice rex, 8vv, D-Dmb

2 motets, 5vv, D-LEm

Several other MS compositions listed in EitnerQ

WRITINGS

Corona musices quam ex lectissimus et suavissimis, a ex musarum charitumque viridario decerptis flosculis (Jena, 1611)

Breviarium artis musices, oder ein kurtzes unnd einfeltiges Musikbüchlein für die junge Knaben (Jena, 1615)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; FétisB; GerberNL; WaltherML

E. Ulrici: Chronologie von Schkölen (Osterfeld, 1903)

A. Werner: Städtliche und fürstliche Musikpflege in Weissenfels (Leipzig, 1911)

A. Werner: 'Die alte Musikbibliotheck und die Instrumentensammlung an St Wenzel im Naumburg', AMw, viii (1926), 390–415

HORACE FISHBACK/PETER JANSON

Leister, Karl (b Wilhelmshaven, 15 June 1937). German clarinettist. He was an outstanding principal in the Berlin PO from 1959 to 1993, mainly under Herbert von Karajan, who had a profound influence on him. Leister learnt first from his father, a founder member of the RIAS SO, Berlin. From 1953 to 1957 he studied at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik under Heinrich Geuser; he played in the orchestra of the Berlin Komische Oper from 1957 to 1959, when he joined the Berlin PO. In 1994 Leister took up a teaching post at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin. He has made over 100 recordings, including much chamber music and the concertos of Mozart, Spohr and Weber, and in 1984 gave the première of the Clarinet Quintet by Helmut Eder. In 1983 he began an association with the Ensemble Wien-Berlin and in 1986 founded the Berliner Solisten. His tone is pure and rounded, with minimal vibrato.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Weston: Clarinet Virtuosi of Today (London, 1989), 177–82

R. Taylor: 'Playing in the Sunshine: an Interview with Karl Leister', The Clarinet, xxii (1994–5), no.1, pp.34–9; no.2, pp.42–5

PAMELA WESTON

Leitão de Avilez, Manuel. See AVILEZ, MANUEL LEITÃO DE.

Leite, António (Joaquim) da Silva (b Oporto, 23 May 1759; d Oporto, 10 Jan 1833). Portuguese composer. After studying for the priesthood he decided on a career in music instead. He probably studied with Girolamo Sertori, an Italian living in Oporto in the 1780s. He became well known as a teacher and in 1787 published at Oporto his own text, Rezumo de todas as regras, e preceitos da cantoria, for his students. By 1788 he was a teacher at the Real Colégio dos Meninos Orfãos and organist at the convents of S Clara and S Bento da Avé-Maria, becoming mestre de capela of the latter by 1792. Most of his sacred compositions were written for the virtuoso singers attached to that convent. He was also a fine guitarist and published 6 sonatas de guitarra (Oporto, 1792) and an Estudo de guitarra (Oporto, 1796), illustrated with numerous minuets, marches, contredanses and other pieces. A manual on accompanying techniques, O organista instruido, written about the same time, was not published. In 1806 he published in Oporto a Novo directorio funebre, which contained a translation of the reformed funeral liturgy as well as funeral hymns for use in the service. In 1807 his two operas, Puntigli per equivoco and L'astuzie delle donne, were produced at the Teatro de S João and the next year his 'famous' Restoration Symphony was performed at Vila Nova de Gaia on 11 December. By 1808 he was mestre de capela of Oporto Cathedral.

As a composer of sacred music he vied with Jommelli. Notable among his sacred compositions are a Tantum ergo (London, 1815), for four voices and string orchestra with elaborate flute obbligato, and Hora de Noa (in P-Ln), for four sopranos, violin and organ, in which the highly ornamented voice lines are set in close, interweaving polyphony. In his modinhas and sonatas Leite showed singular gifts for captivating melody, piquant rhythm and colouristic instrumental effects.

WORKS

Ops, perf. Oporto, 1807: Puntigli per equivoco; L'astuzie delle donne

Sacred: 6 masses, 23 motets, 33 other Lat. pieces, dated 1784–1829, P-Ln; Tantum ergo, 4vv, str, fl obbl (London, 1815)

Other: 6 sonatas, gui, vn and 2 hn ad lib (Oporto, 1792); Os génios premiados (cant.), Real Academia, Oporto, 1807; Restoration Sym., perf. 1808; Hymno patriotico, orch, for coronation of João VI (Paris, 1820); 6 pieces in Jornal de modinhas (1792–5)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBP

M. de Sampayo Ribeiro: A música em Portugal nos séculos XVIII e XIX (Lisbon, 1936), 39, 127

B.D. Rocha da Silva Guimarães: Primeira esboço duma bibliografia musical portuguesa (Oporto, 1957), 86–7

ROBERT STEVENSON

Leite (Dias Batista), Clarisse (b São Paulo, 11 Jan 1917). Brazilian composer, pianist and teacher. At the São Paulo Drama and Music Conservatory she studied piano with Zilda Leite Rizzo, composition with José Wancolle and Teodoro Noguiera, and orchestration with Orestes Farinello. In 1930 the conservatory granted her a fellowship to study in France. Two years later she won the Gomes Cardin gold medal for piano. She then taught at various institutes in São Paulo state, including the Escola Superior de Música S Marcelina in São Paulo, the Pius XII Music College in Bauru, the Lavignac Conservatory in Santos, the Beethoven Institute in São Vicente and the Conservatory in Tatuí.

In 1983 Leite became a member of the International Academy of Music. She has also been state supervisor of music in Bauru, and given masterclasses in Criciúma, São Paulo, Bauru and Ribeirão Preto. Her compositions are exclusively for piano and invoke Brazilian folk genres as, for example, in her Quilombo dos palmares and her Suite nordestina. She has also written two piano concertos (1972 and 1975), the first of which was performed in Tokyo in 1977.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Marcondes, ed: Enciclopédia da música brasileira, erudita, folclórica, popular (São Paulo, 1977)

M. Ficher, M.F. Schleifer and J.M. Furman: Latin American Classical Composers: a Biographical Dictionary (Lanham, MD, and London, 1996)

GERARD BÉHAGUE

Leitgeb, Joseph [Ignaz]. See LEUTGEB, JOSEPH.

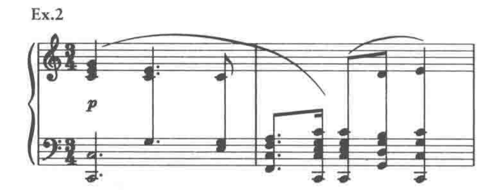
Leith Hill Musical Festival. Festival established in England in 1905 by Ralph Vaughan Williams. See FESTIVAL, §6.

Leitmotif (from Ger. Leitmotiv: 'leading motif'). In its primary sense, a theme, or other coherent musical idea, clearly defined so as to retain its identity if modified on subsequent appearances, whose purpose is to represent or symbolize a person, object, place, idea, state of mind, supernatural force or any other ingredient in a dramatic work. A leitmotif may be musically unaltered on its return, or altered in rhythm, intervallic structure, harmony, orchestration or accompaniment, and may also be combined with other leitmotifs in order to suggest a new dramatic situation. A leitmotif is to be distinguished from a reminiscence motif (Erinnerungsmotiv), which, in earlier operas and in Wagner's works up to and including Lohengrin, tends to punctuate the musical design rather than provide the principal, 'leading' thematic premisses for that design.

The term was adopted by early commentators on Wagner's music dramas to highlight what they believed to be the most important feature contributing to comprehensibility and expressive intensity in those works. It is often used more loosely to refer to recurrent thematic elements in other musical forms and even in examples of non-musical genres, such as the novels of Thomas Mann, who acknowledged Wagner's influence.

The earliest known use of the term 'leitmotif' (see Grey, 1988) is by the music historian A.W. Ambros, who wrote, in or before 1865, that both Wagner in his operas and Liszt in his symphonic poems 'seek to establish a higher unity across the whole by means of consistent leitmotifs' (durchgehende Leitmotive). From Ambros the term gravitated, via F.W. Jähns's study of Weber (1871), to Hans von Wolzogen's thematic guide to the Ring, published in 1876 – the year of the cycle's first complete performance. Wagner used it in print in his essay Über die Anwendung der Musik auf das Drama (1879), in the course of a complaint that 'one of my younger friends [presumably Wolzogen] ... has devoted some attention to the characteristics of "leitmotifs", as he calls them, but has treated them more from the point of view of their dramatic import and effect than as elements of the musical structure'.

The use of the term 'motif' in writing about music goes back at least as far as the Encyclopédie (1765), and before 1879 Wagner had employed a variety of expressions when discussing thematic elements in his works: 'melodisches Moment', 'thematisches Motiv', 'Ahnungsmotiv', 'Grundthema', 'Hauptmotiv'. As Wagner's comments in 1879 indicate, he sensed that Wolzogen, whose 'guide' was little more than a pamphlet, was in danger of oversimplifying and trivializing his achievements in his desire to make the music dramas more accessible; Wolzogen's remarks reinforce the fact that 'leitmotif', and its subsequent usage, tells us as much (if not more) about the reception of his works as about his working methods or creative intentions.



Wagner, with his wide experience as a conductor, was undoubtedly aware of the extensive use of reminiscence motifs in earlier opera from Méhul and Cherubini to Marschner and Spohr, and his close friend, Theodor Uhlig, in writings on Tannhäuser and Lohengrin, had drawn attention to the role of recurrent thematic elements in Wagner's own work as early as 1850. Indeed, although Wagner was particularly concerned in Oper und Drama (written in 1851, before he had begun any extensive compositional work on the Ring cycle) to underline the importance of formal units (periods) constructed to ensure that all aspects of the music responded as vividly as possible to the promptings of the text, in practice he still recognized the necessity for a small number of easily identifiable and malleable motifs, along the lines of Beethoven's most pithy and memorable thematic cells. These would, however, originate in a melody quite different from the foursquare and often florid vocal phrases of traditional opera, and embody such a power and directness of expression that the emotion concerned would be recalled when the motif itself returned, even if action or text no longer alluded directly to its original associations.

A major problem for motif-labellers has been that this original association is almost always multivalent – the music depicting the grandeur of Valhalla also portrays the nobility of Wotan, for example – and might well be ambiguous. It is now generally accepted that Wolzogen mislabelled the principal love motif of the Ring as 'Flight', taking over this designation from an earlier commentary by Gottlieb Federlein (1872). And the motif which, after Wolzogen, is invariably designated 'Redemption through Love' was seen by Wagner himself – at least in a letter of 1875 – as representing the 'glorification of Brünnhilde'. Such factors indicate why most commentators on Wagner express reservations about motif-labelling while finding it difficult to discard the activity altogether. After all, despite his own reservations about Wolzogen's efforts, Wagner's presentation and manipulation of his thematic material lay at the heart of his musico-dramatic technique, as he made clear in Über die Anwendung der Musik auf das Drama.

Discussing the 'simple nature-motif' (ex.1) and the 'equally simple motif' heard 'at the first appearance of the gods' castle Valhalla in the morning sunlight' in Das Rheingold (ex.2: Wagner transposed the motif from D♭

Ex.1

Ex.2

to C for ease of comparison), Wagner observed that 'having developed both these motifs in close correspondence with the mounting passions of the action, I was now able [in Die Walküre, Act 2] to link them – with the aid of a strangely distant harmonization – to paint a far clearer picture of Wotan's sombre and desperate suffering than his own words ever could' (ex.3). Later in the essay, seeking to emphasize the structural rather than the semantic role of his motivic techniques, Wagner described how the 'remarkably simple' motif of the Rhinemaidens' innocent jubilation (ex.4) recurs in varied guises throughout the drama until, in Hagen's 'Watch' (Götterdämmerung, Act 1), 'it is heard in a form which, to my mind at least, would be unthinkable in a symphonic movement' (ex.5). Wagner's point is that the malevolent, distorted versions of the gold motif that pervade the music at this point would sound like 'empty sensationalism' in a symphony, but the dramatic context justifies the nature of the musical transformation and the structural emphasis which requires its protracted employment in this 'distorted' form.

Ex.3

Ex.4

Ex.5

Wagner himself understandably sought to underline such larger-scale structural concerns. But the concentration of Wolzogen and others on the identification of local motivic associations is no less understandable, since their principal purpose was not to provide the most far-reaching analysis but to defend the composer against charges of illogicality and incomprehensibility. Just as commentaries on symphonies and sonatas can be valuable on all levels, from simple, non-technical programme notes to elaborate analyses (provided the simple and the elaborate are not confused), so there is room, and need, for such variety in commentaries on opera. There is no evidence that the activities of Wolzogen and his followers seriously inhibited attempts at more sophisticated analytical studies of Wagner's harmonic and formal procedures, though these were slower to emerge. And while the more sophisticated anti-Wagnerians were able to use such naive motif-spotting as Wolzogen's to support arguments about the essential crudity of Wagner's compositional principles (Hanslick, for example, wrote in praise of Verdi's Falstaff that 'nowhere is the memory spoonfed by leitmotifs'), many Wagner scholars have built on the foundations laid by Wolzogen, and Wagner himself, to refine and elaborate the study of musical meaning in the music dramas, and the role that leitmotifs play in establishing that meaning. It is motivic evolution and development, in the context of large-scale tonal structuring and formal organization, that has become the focus of attention in the attempt to understand the ways in which Wagner's musical language, and his attitude to drama, changed over the years between Das Rheingold and Parsifal.

From the very beginning of scene 1 of Das Rheingold, motifs 'lead' in the sense that they do not merely pervade the musical fabric but establish its expressive atmosphere and formal processes. They do not invariably originate in the vocal line as Oper und Drama had prescribed, and Wagner soon begins to move beyond their exact or varied repetition at textually appropriate moments into the kind of transformation that creates deeper dramatic resonances and larger-scale musical continuities, suggesting that musical thinking itself is beginning to promote dramatic associations. At the end of scene 1 of Das Rheingold, the motif associated with the ring, and with the world's wealth (Wagner's own interpretation of the idea, according to his sketches), is transformed orchestrally into the Valhalla motif at the start of scene 2, a process leading the listener to connect Alberich's precious acquisition with Wotan's no less highly valued possession, and the power they both embody. As the cycle proceeds, a clear contrast emerges between, on the one hand, the immediate connection of word – or visual image – and tone that first fixes important motivic elements and, on the other hand, the consequent power of music to reinforce a connection that text and action may leave implicit: for example, the use of Alberich's curse when Fafner kills Fasolt (Das Rheingold, scene 4), and the references to the Siegfried motif when Brünnhilde and Wotan proclaim the need for a fearless hero (Die Walküre, Act 3).

The interruption of work on the Ring in 1857 brought a significant change of direction. Up to that point, Wagner's aesthetic had centred on the belief that the most profound art work was a theatrical event to which words and music made significant contributions. But it now began to evolve, under the impact of Schopenhauer, and the sheer force of his own musical inspiration, to the point where music became the central feature – however important the initial conception of theatrical event and text remained in relation to the music he eventually composed. The result, in simple terms, is that leitmotifs become even less specific in meaning and even more subject to musical elaboration; in all the later dramas there is a sense in which the motifs 'lead' the music beyond literal and immediate signification while still, inevitably, remaining linked to, and helping to determine, the progress of the drama. Scholars have wrestled with the inherent complexity of this interaction between the 'symphonic' and the 'dramatic'. In particular, Ernst Kurth (1920) proposed a distinction between leitmotifs, which reflect the dramatic situation directly, and 'developmental motifs' (Entwicklungsmotive), which achieve independence not only of such representational functions but also of the kind of clearcut shaping that makes a leitmotif easily identifiable. 'Developmental motifs' are figures that promote the ongoing evolution of the music – a process quite distinct from the actual development (by sequential transposition or any other variation procedure) of the leitmotifs themselves.

Kurth recognized that leitmotivic analysis on its own cannot possibly do justice to the significatory power of Wagner's music. More recently, Carolyn Abbate (1989) declared that his music 'actually projects poetry and stage action in ways far beyond motivic signs'; she also asserted that 'Wagner's motifs have no referential meaning; they may, and of course do, absorb meaning at exceptional and solemn moments, by being used with elaborate calculation as signs, but unless purposely maintained in this artificial state, they shed their specific poetic meaning and revert to their natural state as musical thoughts'. No doubt an analysis of Tristan that doggedly attempted to confine the meaning of every occurrence of the opening cello phrase to 'Tristan's suffering', or any other of the various tags that have been attached to it, would be absurdly naive and literal. But variation and diversity of meaning are not to be confused with meaninglessness; it seems undeniable that the listener 'comprehends' the intense, elaborate developments and derivations in Tristan subliminally, sensing meaning through the sheer force and insistence of its evolving musical logic.

One result of the increasing flexibility of motivic signification in the later Wagner is that the motifs themselves seem to invite reduction to a few unifying archetypes. Robert Donington, Deryck Cooke, Carl Dahlhaus and many others have shown how a few 'primal motifs' in the Ring – Donington (1963) has four, featuring Broken Chords, Conjunct Motion, Chromatic Intervals and Changing Notes – may be regarded as generating a great number of offshoots. Robin Holloway (1986) argued that in Parsifal, even more pervasively than in the Ring or Tristan, the leitmotifs grow from 'a sonorous image-cluster ... the nucleus that gives life to the work's expressive substance'. Holloway's interpretation illustrates the tendency of leitmotivic analysis to seek out ever more intricate and all-embracing unifying factors. The role of leitmotif in Wagner's compositional design also remains a central topic in discussion of the extent to which his structures are 'tightly' or 'loosely' knit (see Abbate, 1989, 1991). No less valuable has been the concern of scholars working in the field of German studies to re-examine the significance of Wagner's motivic theory and practice in the light of evolving concepts of drama (see Brown, 1991).

One example of Wagner's importance in the history of music is the difficulty of avoiding the concept of leitmotif in studies of so many of his contemporaries and successors. Roger Parker has found it useful to discuss Verdi's Aida in the light of the observation that 'particularly in its treatment of "motive" and "recurring theme", it is the most nearly Wagnerian of Verdi's operas' (1989). Direct influence or attempted imitation are not implied in this case, but with slightly later composers the probability of literal influence is much stronger, whether the composer is relatively close in style to Wagner, as Richard Strauss was in Salome and Elektra, or strikingly distant, as with Debussy in Pelléas et Mélisande. There are in fact very few composers of significance on whom Wagner's stylistic influence was direct and extensive: Humperdinck is one such.

These composers' operas show that, whatever the musical style, through-composition renders some degree of leitmotivic working a useful means of achieving continuity and directedness. Yet discussion of the topic is bedevilled by the problems facing motivic analysis in general: that is, of recognizing the point at which 'connection' and 'derivation' cease to be more convincing than 'contrast' and 'difference'. John Tyrrell (1982) commented on K.H. Wörner's attempt to demonstrate all-embracing thematic connections in Janáček's Káťa Kabanová that 'too wide an interpretation of permissible manipulations allows almost anything to creep in'. By contrast, Peter Evans (1979) has shown how the presence of pervasive motivic working can be plausibly demonstrated in Britten's operas, despite a style that owes more to Verdi than to Wagner.

George Perle (1980) has attempted to argue that Alban Berg, in Wozzeck, used the leitmotif principle more effectively – that is, less predictably and mechanically – than Wagner himself had done. In his discussions of Wozzeck and Lulu Perle also distinguished between leitmotif and 'Leitsektion': 'a total musical complex' that serves a referential function. The notion of referential musical function may be further elaborated if not only exact or near-exact recurrences but also the equivalences that are revealed by reduction to the unordered collections known as pitch-class sets are admitted: Allen Forte's work on Wozzeck (1985) and Tristan (1988) represents the most extensive demonstration of that procedure. Such manipulations might appear to have little to do with the leitmotif principle as it relates to Wagner, moving away as they do from the particular profile of the theme on the musical surface. So, too, Schoenberg's Erwartung, in its atonal athematicism, might be felt to be more a reaction against Wagner's influence than a celebration of it. Yet Carl Dahlhaus contended that the brief structural segments of Erwartung, 'not unlike Wagnerian periods, are not infrequently defined by means of a characteristic musical idea, which constitutes the predominant motif, albeit not the only one' (1978; Eng. trans., 1987). If motivic elaboration of any kind is seen in terms of the leitmotif principle, then it becomes possible to extend the range of Wagner's 'influence' still further. The most ambitious operatic enterprise of the late 20th century, Stockhausen's Licht, could scarcely be less Wagnerian in style, yet the material of the entire seven-opera cycle derives from a 'super-formula', in which melodies representing the three central characters, Michael, Eva and Luzifer, are superimposed. The virtually constant presence, in the background, of these melodies may represent an approach to motivic composition very different from that of Wagner (see Kohl, 1990). We might nevertheless sense a genuine bond with those 'plastic nature motifs, which, by becoming increasingly individualized, were to serve as the bearers of the emotional subcurrents within the broad-based plot and the moods expressed therein', to which Wagner referred in 1871, in the Epilogischer Bericht on the Ring, when he attempted to describe what he believed his first task had been when embarking on the work almost 20 years before.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A.W. Ambros: Culturhistorische Bilder aus dem Musikleben der Gegenwart (Leipzig, 1860, 2/1865)

G. Federlein: '"Das Rheingold" von Richard Wagner: Versuch einer musikalischen Interpretation', Musikalisches Wochenblatt, ii (1871), 210–389

F.W. Jähns: Carl Maria von Weber in seinen Werken (Berlin, 1871)

R. Wagner: Gesammelte Schriften und Dichtungen (Leipzig, 1871–83, 4/1907), iv, vi, x [incl. Oper und Drama (1851), Epilogischer Bericht (1871), Über die Anwendung der Musik auf das Drama (1879)]

G. Federlein: '"Die Walküre" von Richard Wagner: Versuch einer musikalischen Interpretation', Musikalisches Wochenblatt, iii (1872), 211–503

H. von Wolzogen: Thematischer Leitfaden durch die Musik von R. Wagners Festspiel 'Der Ring des Nibelungen' (Leipzig, 1876; Eng. trans., 1882)

H. von Wolzogen: 'Die Motive in Wagners "Götterdämmerung"', Musikalisches Wochenblatt, viii (1877), 109–446; ix (1878), 430–542; x (1879), 249–531

K. Mayrberger: Die Harmonik Richard Wagner's an den Leitmotiven aus 'Tristan und Isolde' (Bayreuth, 1881); Eng. trans. in Music Analysis in the Nineteenth Century, ed. I. Bent (Cambridge, 1994), i, 221–52

H. von Wolzogen: 'Parsifal': ein thematischer Leitfaden durch Dichtung und Musik (Leipzig, 1882); Eng. trans. in Music Analysis in the Nineteenth Century, ed. I. Bent (Cambridge, 1994), ii, 88–105

J. von Santen-Kolff: 'Geschichtliches und Aesthetisches über das Erinnerungsmotiv', Bayreuther Blätter, viii (1885), 312–20

T. Uhlig: Musikalische Schriften (Regensburg, 1913)

M. Seiling: 'Das indirekte Leitmotiv', Bayreuther Blätter, xl (1917), 29–37

R. Meister: 'Die Bedeutung der Leitmotive im Drama', Bayreuther Blätter, xli (1918), 220–37

E. Kurth: Romantische Harmonik und ihre Krise in Wagners 'Tristan' (Berne, 1920)

G. Abraham: 'The Leit-motif since Wagner', ML, vi (1925), 175–90

R. Engländer: 'Zur Geschichte des Leitmotivs', ZMw, xiv (1931–2), 356–7

K.H. Wörner: 'Beiträge zur Geschichte des Leitmotivs in der Oper', ZMw, xiv (1931–2), 151–72

L. Sabanayev: 'Remarks on the Leit-motif', ML, xiii (1932), 200–06

H. Pleasants, ed.: Eduard Hanslick: Vienna's Golden Years of Music 1850–1900 (New York, 1950, 2/1963 as*Music Criticisms 1846–99*) [selected writings]

R. Donington: Wagner's 'Ring' and its Symbols (London, 1963, 3/1974)

C. Dahlhaus: 'Zur Geschichte der Leitmotivtechnik bei Wagner', Das Drama Richard Wagners als musikalische Kunstwerk (Regensburg, 1970), 17–40

C. Dahlhaus: Die Musikdramen Richard Wagners (Velber, 1971; Eng. trans., 1979)

C. Dahlhaus: Zwischen Romantik und Moderne: Vier Studien zur Musikgeschichte des späteren 19. Jahrhunderts (Munich, 1974; Eng. trans., 1980)

F. Noske: The Signifier and the Signified: Studies in the Operas of Mozart and Verdi (The Hague, 1977)

C. Dahlhaus: 'Ausdrucksprinzip und Orchesterpolyphonie in Schönbergs "Erwartung"', Schönberg und andere: gesammelte Aufsätze zur neuen Musik (Mainz, 1978), 189–94; Eng. trans. in Schoenberg and the New Music (Cambridge, 1987), 149–55

D. Cooke: I Saw the World End: a Study of Wagner's 'Ring' (London, 1979)

D. Cooke: 'Wagner's Musical Language', The Wagner Companion, ed. P. Burbridge and R. Sutton (London, 1979), 225–68

P. Evans: The Music of Benjamin Britten (London, 1979, 2/1989)

C. Dahlhaus: Die Musik des 19. Jahrhunderts (Wiesbaden, 1980; Eng. trans., 1989)

G. Perle: The Operas of Alban Berg, i: 'Wozzeck' (Berkeley, 1980)

J. Deathridge: Review of Wagner publications, 19CM, v (1981–2), 81–9

D. Borchmeyer: Das Theater Richard Wagners: Idee – Dichtung – Wirkung (Stuttgart, 1982; Eng. trans., 1991)

J. Tyrrell: Leoš Janáček: Kát'a Kabanová (Cambridge, 1982)

R. Parker and M.Brown: 'Motivic and Tonal Interaction in Verdi's "Un ballo in maschera"', JAMS, xxxvi (1983), 243–65

J. Deathridge and C. Dahlhaus: The New Grove Wagner (London, 1984)

B. Millington: Wagner (London, 1984)

P. Britton: 'Stockhausen's Path to Opera', MT, cxxvi (1985), 515–21

A. Forte: 'Tonality, Symbol, and Structural Levels in Berg's "Wozzeck"', MQ, lxxi (1985), 474–99

R. Holloway: 'Experiencing Music and Imagery in "Parsifal"', Parsifal, ed. N. John (London, 1986), 23–41

A. Forte: 'New Approaches to the Linear Analysis of Music', JAMS, xli (1988), 315–48 [pp.324–38 concern the Tristan prelude]

T.S. Grey: Richard Wagner and the Aesthetics of Form in the Mid-19th Century (1840–60) (diss., U. of California, Berkeley, 1988)

A. Groos and R.Parker, eds.: Reading Opera (Princeton, NJ, 1988)

C. Abbate: 'Wagner, "On Modulation" and "Tristan"', COJ, i (1989), 33–58

R. Langham Smith: 'Motives and Symbols', Claude Debussy: Pelléas et Mélisande, ed. R. Nichols and R. Langham Smith (Cambridge, 1989), 78–106

R. Parker: 'Motives and Recurring Themes in Aida', Analyzing Opera, ed. C. Abbate and R. Parker (Berkeley, 1989), 222–38

D. Puffett: '"Salome" as Music Drama', Richard Strauss: Salome (Cambridge, 1989), 58–87

S. Corse: Wagner and the New Consciousness: Language and Love in the 'Ring' (London and Toronto, 1990)

A. Forte: 'Musorgsky as Modernist: the Phantasmic Episode in "Boris Godunov"', MAn, ix (1990), 3–45

J. Kohl: 'Into the Middleground: Formula Syntax in Stockhausen's Licht', PNM, xxviii/2 (1990), 262–91

P. McCreless: 'Motive and Magic: a Referential Dyad in Parsifal', MAn, ix (1990), 227–65

J. Riedlbauer: 'Erinnerungsmotive in Wagners "Der Ring des Nibelungen"', MQ, lxxiv (1990), 18–30

C. Abbate: Unsung Voices: Opera and Musical Narrative in the 19th Century (Princeton, NJ, 1991)

H.M. Brown: Leitmotiv and Drama: Wagner, Brecht and the Limits of 'Epic' Theatre (Oxford, 1991)

M.C. Tusa: Euryanthe and Carl Maria von Weber's Dramaturgy of German Opera (Oxford, 1991)

J. Daverio: Nineteenth-Century Music and the German Romantic Ideology (New York, 1993)

T.S. Grey: '. . . wie ein rother Faden: on the Origins of "leitmotif" as Critical Construct and Musical Practice', Music Theory in the Age of Romanticism, ed. I. Bent (Cambridge, 1996), 187–210

ARNOLD WHITTALL

Leitner, Ferdinand (b Berlin, 4 March 1912; d Forch, nr Zürich, 3 June 1996). German conductor. At the Berlin Hochschule für Musik he studied composition with Schreker and conducting with Julius Prüwer (a pupil of Brahms and Richter). He worked first as a piano accompanist to singers and instrumentalists (such as the violinist Georg Kulenkampff and the cellist Ludwig Hoelscher). In 1935 he was assistant to Fritz Busch at Glyndebourne. Leitner began his career as a conductor in 1943 at the Theater am Nollendorfplatz in Berlin. After engagements as a conductor at the Staatsopern in Hamburg (1945–6) and Munich (1946–7), he made a name for himself at the Stuttgart Opera, arriving in 1947 as director of opera and taking over as musical director from 1950 to 1969. In these two decades he helped to make Stuttgart a leading European centre for opera. As well as many of Günther Rennert's productions, Leitner conducted 13 productions by Wieland Wagner in Stuttgart (the last being Lulu in 1966) and gave the world premières of Orff's Oedipus der Tyrann (1959) and Prometheus (1968). From 1969 to 1984 Leitner was principal conductor of the Zürich Opera. In addition he made frequent appearances as a guest conductor at the Munich and Hamburg Staatsopern and at Chicago (including the Peter Sellars production of Tannhäuser in 1988). For more than a decade he made annual visits as conductor of the German season at the Teatro Colón, Buenos Aires. He also made guest appearances as a concert conductor throughout the world. He regularly conducted the Concertgebouw Orchestra, the Rotterdam PO and the Residentie Orkest in the Hague, of which he was chief conductor from 1976 to 1980. From 1988 to 1990 he was principal guest conductor of the RAI Orchestra of Turin. He made some 300 recordings, including complete performances of Busoni's Doktor Faust and Orff's Antigonae and Prometheus.

Leitner's extensive, wide-ranging repertory centred on the operas of Mozart, Wagner and Richard Strauss, and extended to Berg's operas and works by younger contemporaries such as Bernd Alois Zimmermann and Aribert Reimann. He had a special affinity with the symphonies of Bruckner and of Karl Amadeus Hartmann. Leitner avoided emotional excess in his performances and had a particular mastery of the art of accompanying singers without sacrificing the score's symphonic character.

WOLFRAM SCHWINGER/MARTIN ELSTE

Leitton (Ger.). See LEADING NOTE.

Leittonwechselklang (Ger.). See under KLANG (ii).

Leiviskä, Helvi (Lemmikki) (b Helsinki, 25 May 1902; d Helsinki, 12 Aug 1982). Finnish composer. She studied composition at the Helsinki Music Institute (now the Sibelius Academy) with Melartin (1919–27) and continued her studies in Vienna with Arthur Willner (1928–9). She worked as a librarian at the Sibelius Academy and as a music critic. Leiviskä's début took place in 1935 with a concert of her own compositions, most notably her Piano Concerto (1935). Her early works are Romantic, but after World War II she developed a highly contrapuntal style that in the last works moved towards free tonality; at the same time her music became more serious, sometimes even austere. Leiviskä's main compositions include three symphonies (1947, 1954 and 1971) and – perhaps her best-known work – the Sinfonia brevis (1962), a single-movement piece with a concluding triple fugue.

WORKS

(selective list)

Orch: Kansantanssisarja [Folk Dance Suite], 1929, rev. 1971; Muunnelmia ja finaali [Variations and Finale], 1929; Suite no.1, 1934; Pf Conc., d, 1935; Triple Fugue, 1935; Suite no.2, 1938; 2 Intermezzos, 1945; Sym. no.1, B♭, 1947; Impromptu energico, 1948; Sym. no.2, d, 1954; Sinfonia brevis, 1962, rev. 1972; Sym. no.3, 1971

Vocal: Metsäruusu (O. Manninen), 1v, orch, 1932, rev. 1946; Vangittu kotka (L. Pohjanpää), 1v, orch, 1932, rev. 1946; Tähtien laulu (Pohjanpää), 1v, orch, 1932, rev. 1946; Lapsifantasioita (U. Kailas), 1937, rev. 1972; Litania, mixed chorus, org, 1937; Pimeän peikko (E. Leino), mixed chorus, orch, 1942; Mennyt manner (Leino), solo vv, mixed chorus, orch, 1957

Chbr: Pf Qt, A, 1926, rev. 1935; Sonata, g, vn, pf, 1945

Pf: Suite antique, 1929; Sonatina, F, 1939

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Leiviskä: 'Helvi Leiviskä', Suomen säveltäjiä, ed. E. Marvia (Porvoo, 1966)

E. Tarasti: 'Kuka oli Helvi Leiviskä?', Rondo (1995), no.5, pp.32–5

E. Salmenhaara: Uuden musiikin kynnyksellä 1907–1958, Suomen musiikin historia [The history of Finnish music], iii (Porvoo, 1996)

KIMMO KORHONEN

Le Jeune, Claude [Claudin] (b Valenciennes, 1528–30; d Paris, bur. 26 Sept 1600). French composer. He was one of the most prolific and significant composers of the second half of the 16th century and one of the chief exponents of musique mesurée à l'antique; his application of this and other theories of musical and textual relationships had a lasting influence on French sacred and secular music.

1. LIFE. Le Jeune probably received his early music education at or near Valenciennes, then part of the Imperial Low Countries. His name first appears in 1552 as the composer of four chansons in anthologies published at Leuven which also contain works by his older compatriots Clemens non Papa, Crecquillon and Waelrant. He was a Protestant and from about 1560 enjoyed the protection of a group of Huguenot nobles that included William of Orange, Agrippa d'Aubigné, Henri de Turenne, Duke of Bouillon and Henri of Navarre (later Henri IV). By 1564 he may have settled at Paris; his Dix pseaumes were published there, dedicated to two more Huguenot patrons, François de la Noue and Charles de Téligny. He participated in the Académie de Poésie et de Musique established by Baïf and Courville in 1570. In autumn 1581 he collaborated with Baïf, d'Aubigné and Ronsard in providing entertainments for the marriage of the Duke of Joyeuse to Marie de Lorraine, the queen's half-sister. Like Nicolas de La Grotte he received from the king a commission, perhaps to devise a 'Guerre' to accompany a symbolic tournament; he also contributed an 'Epithalame' which was published, with the 'Guerre', in his posthumous Airs of 1608. By January 1582 he had succeeded the lutenist Vaumesnil as 'maistre des enfants de musique' at the court of François, Duke of Anjou, brother of Henri III. After the death of François in 1584 he made use of a royal privilege, granted by Henri III in January 1582, to publish his Livre de meslanges with Plantin at Antwerp; another edition appeared at Paris in 1586.

According to Mersenne Le Jeune wrote a 'confession de foi' hostile to the Catholic League and tried to flee Paris during the siege of 1590. His Dodecacorde and other manuscripts were saved from burning at the hands of the guards at the St Denis gate only by the intercession of his Catholic friend JACQUES MAUDUIT. He probably took refuge at La Rochelle, a Protestant stronghold, where the Dodecacorde was published in April 1598 (fig.1). According to a privilege granted by Henri IV in September 1596 he held the position of maistre compositeur ordinaire de la musique de nostre chambre. He was buried in the Protestant cemetery of La Trinité, Paris. Except for the printed collections mentioned above and a number of pieces in anthologies, his works remained in manuscript at the time of his death; eight collections were published posthumously between 1601 and 1612 by Pierre Ballard (fig.2). The dedications are mostly by his sister Cécile or his niece Judith Mardo and are mostly addressed to his former Protestant friends, pupils and patrons.

2. WORKS. Le Jeune's surviving output includes 348 psalms, 133 airs (several were reprinted in revised versions), 65 secular chansons, 42 sacred chansons, 43 Italian canzonettas, 11 motets, one mass (or possibly two), a Magnificat and three instrumental fantasias. His work shows the influences of both the school of Flemish composers following Josquin and the Parisian school which cultivated the harmonic air de cour with its lightly accompanied prosodic recitation embellished with melismas. Willaert's influence is particularly evident in the formal aspects of Le Jeune's Magnificat and motets. His three instrumental fantasias also demonstrate his contrapuntal skill and are similar in style to the sonatas, sinfonias and ricercares of his Venetian contemporaries; two are in four parts, and a third in five parts is based on Josquin's motet Benedicta es coelorum regina. Although the influence of Willaert and Zarlino is marked, there is no proof that Le Jeune visited Italy; the chromatic madrigalisms that occur in some of his chansons and airs are of the type found in the works of his French contemporaries Bertrand, Boni, Costeley, La Grotte, Du Caurroy and others. However, his 43 Italian pieces for four and five voices are masterly elaborations of three-voice villanellas by Nola, Moro, Celano, Mazzone and various anonymous composers of the 1550s and 60s, which may indicate contact with models emanating from Venice rather than from Naples.

The four chansons attributed to Le Jeune in Phalèse's anthologies of 1552 (RISM 1552^{12}, 1552^{13}) are settings of archaic texts in the outmoded polyphonic style of Crecquillon's generation. They may be student works or may have been misattributed to Le Jeune by the publishers; for example, Bonjour m'amye cannot be his since it had appeared anonymously as early as 1531 (RISM 1531^{1}). By the 1560s Le Jeune had gained repute and the name 'Claudin' (maybe de Sermisy) appears with those of Clemens non Papa and Lassus among the 'musici praecipii et excellentissimi' listed in the manuscript of Lassus's Penitential Psalms (in D-Mbs). The ten four-voice psalms (1564) are free settings of Bèze's translations in the polyphonic motet style of Goudimel. A seven-voice dialogue Mais qui es tu? at the end of this collection shows Le Jeune's mastery of the larger ensemble, as does his later seven-voice canonic setting, using Lupi Second's melody, of Guéroult's Susanne ung jour (RISM 1572^{2}). The seven-voice dialogue Amour quand fus tu né? (published posthumously in 1603) is only a slightly ornamented and structurally adapted version of Willaert's 1559 setting of Sasso's sonnet Quando nascest' amor translated into French verse by Desportes.

1. Claude Le Jeune: engraving from his 'Dodecacorde' (La Rochelle, 1598)

In comparison with the northern chanson, in which a craftsmanlike exploitation of polyphonic techniques was more highly prized than subtleties of verbal expression, the Parisian chanson of the 1560s was lighter and freer, aiming at an intimate unity of text and music by characterizing the spirit of the poem. This approach to word-setting undoubtedly contributed to Baïf's experiments, though it was subordinated to his new syllabic prosody, the rapid pace of which often disguised a lack of tunefulness. From the time that he joined Baïf's movement Le Jeune wholeheartedly embraced its ideals, to the extent that a certain esotericism cultivated by the group affected his work. Some delay in the publication of his 'measured' pieces may have been due to the restrictions on copying and circulating any works performed in the Académie. The Académie's principal aim was the revival of the humanist ideal, based on Greek music, of a setting subjected to its text, expressing its sense and avoiding any textural complexity (e.g. canon and imitation) that might obscure the words or the metre. The introduction into poetry of a metrical scheme based on values doubled or halved was neither altogether new nor confined to the French language, since it had preoccupied first the troubadours and trouvères and later the humanist or didactic composers who had set Latin poems of Horace and Virgil in the early 16th century, as well as the more recent composers of Protestant psalms, hymns and chansons spirituelles. Le Jeune's largely homophonic settings of VERS MESURÉS strictly reflect the quantitative metres prescribed by the Académie by equating the long syllables with minims and the short with crotchets, although both values are often varied by melismatic subdivision. The predetermined, extra-musical metres (elegiacs, sapphics and so on) revolutionized the traditional rhythms of polyphony, often producing lilting patterns of great freedom and charm, while the simple vertical textures resulting from the strict alternation of two basic note values focussed attention on the harmonic structure and encouraged experiment. Though originally unrhymed, the texts of Le Jeune's Airs of 1608 and Pseaumes en vers mesurez (1606) have rhymes added, perhaps posthumously.

In 1583 the hitherto elitist art of musique mesurée a l'antique developed by the Académie was made public by the printing of airs by Le Jeune to 'measured' poems by Baïf (RISM 1583^{9}). The novel rhythmic vitality and variety of these pieces are matched in the 43 Italian pieces, published in the two books of Meslanges (1585 and 1612); these are formally canzonette alla napolitana, mostly based on structural and melodic models by Italian masters of the villanella. Another facet of the Académie's work was the attempted revival of the Greek genera; Le

2. Title-page of Le Jeune's 'Premier livre, contenant 50 pseaumes de David mis en musique' (Paris: Ballard, 1602)

Jeune experimented in particular with the chromatic tetrachord approximately reproduced by two semitones and a minor 3rd. The tetrachord formula, found in Quelle eau (1585), gave rise to Le Jeune's most remarkable chromaticisms, notably in his settings of Durand's elegy Qu'est devenu ce bel oeil? (from the second book of Airs, 1608) and the chanson spirituelle by Guéroult Hellas, mon Dieu (from Second livre des meslanges, 1612). According to his friend Artus Thomas and the organist Jehan Titelouze, Le Jeune excelled his predecessors in his understanding of the modes, as illustrated by the alternate rousing and calming effects on a gentleman of two airs performed during the wedding festivities of the Duke of Joyeuse in 1581.

The 12 psalms of the Dodecacorde, like the Octonaires of 1606, were conceived as a cycle according to the order of the 12 modes prescribed by Zarlino. These two collections were even used as illustrations of the system in didactic contexts in the 17th and 18th centuries (respectively F-Pn n.a.fr.4679 and S. de Brossard: Catalogue des livres de musique … escrit en l'année 1724, F-Pn Rés.Vm[8] 21). Other collections, such as the Printemps (1603) and the Airs of 1608 are also organized by mode, but were probably thus arranged at the time of publication. The French psalm texts of the Dodecacorde are by Marot and Bèze and the orthodox Genevan melodies are always present as a cantus firmus in long note values. The number of voices varies between two and seven for the different stanzas, each of which is set to different music, thus creating exceptionally extended cycles with alternating polyphony and homophony; for example, Psalms xxxv and cii incorporate 13 and 16 sections respectively. The second psalm in the collection follows a procedure typical of Le Jeune's larger works (e.g. Le printemps, no.13); the voices accumulate in successive stanzas so that the work ends with a grand sonorous climax.

Le Jeune also twice set the Huguenot psalter, once in simple four- and five-voice harmony with the Genevan melody in the tenor or dessus (1601), and once in three-voice counterpoint with the melody either quoted in one voice or freely paraphrased (1602, 1608, 1610). The many editions of the four- and five-voice psalms printed at Paris, Geneva, Amsterdam, Leiden and London until the last quarter of the 18th century are proof of their great popularity. The Pseaumes en vers mesurez (1606) are settings of 21 French translations and three Latin paraphrases of the psalms by Baïf and d'Aubigné for two to eight voices; the collection also includes two graces set for four voices and a French translation of the Te Deum set for six voices. According to d'Aubigné, Eustache Du Caurroy was converted to musique mesurée on hearing two of Le Jeune's psalms performed by over 100 singers at Paris, perhaps in 1605. The Octonaires de la vanité et inconstance du monde (1606) consist of the 36 eight-line strophes by the Calvinists Antoine de la Roche Chandieu, Simon Goulart and Joseph du Chesne, arranged in 12 groups of three settings in each mode (two for four voices and one for three); according to the preface by his sister,

Le Jeune died before completing a further group of settings for five and six voices.

The 'Préface sur la musique mesurée' to Le Jeune's settings of Baïf's Le printemps (1603) extols the composer as the first to revise the affective and subtle rhythmic skill of the ancients and to combine it with the harmonic perfection achieved during the previous two centuries; the accompanying ode by Artus Thomas praises his sweet harmony and counterpoint, his science and mathematical secrets, his melodic artifices and his fine sense of movement. Mersenne claimed that Le Jeune used a keyboard instrument when composing, and ascribed his popularity to the variety and vivacity of his rhythms, his talent for melody and his skill in handling large ensembles of voices and viols. Occasional lapses in contrapuntal technique (dissonances resolved by leap, crossing of parts, leaps of a major 6th etc.) may have been the cause of censure by the severe contemporary masters from Flanders and Italy (reported by Mersenne). However, his music is distinguished by an instinctive choice of memorable motifs, rhythmic verve and élan and elegant forms and textures. His sonorous ensembles inspired French sacred music of the next generation and his musique mesurée provided models for the air de cour and ballet de cour.

Le Jeune's music influenced some of 20th-century composers, notably Messiaen, whose Cinq rechants (1948) were conceived 'in homage to the Printemps', which he presented in analysis at the Paris Conservatoire.

WORKS

Editions: C. Le Jeune: Airs of 1608, ed. D.P. Walker, AIM Miscellanea, i–iv (1951–9) [W] published in Paris unless otherwise stated

PSALMS

Dix pseaumes de David, 4vv, en forme de motets avec un dialogue, 7vv (T. de Bèze) (1564); dialogue ed. in MMFTR, viii (1928), psalms ed. in Labelle, iii; all ed. J.E. Hamersma (Tours, 2000)

Dodecacorde (12 psalms) (C. Marot, De Bèze), 2–7vv (La Rochelle, 1598); ed. in RRMR, lxxiv–lxxvi (1989)

Les 150 pseaumes, 4, 5vv (1601; La Rochelle, 2/1608; Paris, 3/1613; Amsterdam, 4/1629; Leiden, 5/1635; Paris, 6/1650; Schiedam, 7/1664; edn entitled The First 12 Psalms … adapted to the English Version, London, ?1775); ed. in RRMR, xcviii (1995)

Premier livre, contenant 50 pseaumes de David mis en musique, 3vv (1602); ed. D. Lamothe, Claude Le Jeune: Psaumes à trois voix (1602–1610) (Tours, 2000)

Pseaumes en vers mesurez (26 pss, TeD) (J.A. de Baïf, A. d'Aubigné), 2–8vv (1606); ed. in MMRF, xx–xxii (1905–6/R)

Second livre contenant 50 pseaumes de David, 3vv (1608); ed. D. Lamothe, Claude Le Jeune: Psaumes à trois voix (1602–1610) (Tours, 2000)

Troisième livre des pseaumes de David, 3vv (1610); ed. D. Lamothe, Claude Le Jeune: Psaumes à trois voix (1602–1610) (Tours, 2000)

2 psalms 5, 6vv, in Second livre des meslanges (1612) [also incl. other sacred and secular works, see below]; ed. in MMFTR, viii (1928)

OTHER SACRED VOCAL

Octonaires de la vanité et inconstance du monde (36 works) (A. de la Roche Chandieu, S. Goulart, J. du Chesne), 3, 4vv (1606); ed. in MMFTR, i (1924), viii (1928); ed. and trans. A. Seay, as Reflections on the Vanity and Inconstancy of the World (New York, 1967–9)

Missa ad placitum, 4–7vv (1607); ed. M. Sanvoisin, Le pupitre, ii (Paris, 1967)

Second livre des meslanges (Mag, 3 motets, sacred chanson), 3–7, 10vv (1612) [also incl. pss and secular works]; sacred chanson ed. in MMFTR, viii (1928)

5 motets S, bvv, in Livre de meslanges (1585) [see below]; 1, 3vv, 1565[2]

Chanson spirituelle, 7vv, 1572[2]; 2, 4–5vv, Livre de meslanges (1585)

Mass, 5vv, I-Td Succio A 2 (*c*1570–95), doubtful

SECULAR VOCAL

Livre de meslanges (26 chansons, 36 canzonettas, Lat. echo composition) (Ronsard, Desportes, Marot, La Boétie, La Péruse), 4–8, 10vv (Antwerp, 1585) [incl. 5 from 1572[2], 1583[7], 1583[9]]; all ed. in His; 13 chansons ed. in MMRF, xvi (1903/R); 12 ed. in SCC, xvi–xvii (1989–90); ed. I. His (Tours, 2000)

[33] Airs mis en musique, 4, 5vv (1594) [incl. 20 from 1585[13], 1585[14]]

Le printemps (33 airs mesurés, 6 chansons) (Baïf, Desportes), 2–8vv (1603) [incl. 6 airs from 1594 edn]; ed. in MMRF, xii–xiv (1900–01/R)

[68] Airs, 3–6vv (1608) [incl. works from 1594 and 1603 vols.]; [W], i–ii

Second livre des [59] airs, 3–6vv (1608) [incl. works from 1594 and 1603 vols.]; [W], iii–iv

Second livre des meslanges (31 chansons, 3 airs, 2 airs mesurés, 7 canzonettas), 4–8vv (1612) [also incl. pss, other sacred and instrumental works, and 12 chansons from 1572[2], 1575[4], 1577[6], 1583[8], 1584[3]]; 15 ed. in SCC, xvi–xvii (1989–90); ed. I. His (Tours, 2000)

60 chansons, airs, canzonettas, motets, 4, 5vv, 1552[12], 1552[13], 1572[2], 1575[4], 1577[6], 1583[7], 1583[8], 1583[9], 1585[13], 1585[14], 1597[10], 1597[15], 1605[9]; 18 ed. in SCC, xvi–xvii (1989–90)

INSTRUMENTAL

3 fantasias in Second livre des meslanges (1612)

Psalm, chanson spirituelle, lute, N. Vallet: Secretum musarum (Amsterdam, 1615/R in Complete Works of Nicolaes Vallet, iii, Utrecht, 1992)

Canzonetta, chanson spirituelle, lute, 1592[22] (Geneva, 1977)

7 other works, lute, 1601[18]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MersenneHU

O. Douen: Clément Marot et le psautier huguenot (Paris, 1878–9/R)

D.P. Walker: 'The Aims of Baïf's Académie de poésie et de musique', JRBM, i (1946–7), 91–100

F.A. Yates: The French Academies of the Sixteenth Century (London, 1947/R)

D.P. Walker: 'The Influence of musique mesurée à l'antique, particularly on the airs de cour of the Early Seventeenth Century', MD, ii (1948), 141–63

F. Lesure and D.P.Walker: 'Claude Le Jeune and musique mesurée', MD, iii (1949), 151–70

D.P. Walker: 'Some Aspects and Problems of musique mesurée à l'antique: the Rhythm and Notation of musique mesurée', MD, iv (1950), 163–86

F.A. Yates: 'Poésie et musique dans les "Magnificences" au mariage du duc de Joyeuse, Paris, 1581', Musique et poésie au XVIe siècle: Paris 1953, 241–64

K. Levy: The Chansons of Claude Le Jeune (diss., Princeton U., 1955)

D.R. Lamothe: Claude Le Jeune, le psautier huguenot et la musique religieuse à la cour pendant les règnes de Charles IX, Henri III et Henri IV (diss., U. of Strasbourg, 1980)

N. Labelle: Les différents styles de la musique religieuse en France (Henryville, PA, 1981)

P. Bonniffet: Un ballet démasqué: l'union de la musique au verbe dans 'Le printans' de Jean-Antoine de Baïf et Claude Le Jeune (Paris and Geneva, 1988)

I. His: Les Mélanges de Claude Le Jeune (diss., U. of Tours, 1990)

Claude Le Jeune et son temps: Chambéry 1991

I. His: 'Les modèles italiens de Claude Le Jeune', RdM, lxxvii (1991), 25–58

I. His: 'Claude Le Jeune et le rythme prosodique: la mutation des années 1570', RdM, lxxix (1993), 201–26

R. Freedman: 'Claude Le Jeune, Adrian Willaert, and the Art of Musical Translation', EMH, xiii (1994), 123–48

I. His: 'Italianism and Claude Le Jeune', EMH, xiii (1994), 149–170

O. Messiaen: Traité de rhythme, de couleur et d'ornithologie, i (Paris, 1994), 181–232

I. His: 'Sous lesquels ont esté mises des paroles morales: un cas de contrafactum de psaumes entre 1598 et 1618', RdM, lxxxv (1999), 189–225

FRANK DOBBINS, ISABELLE HIS

Lejeune, Jacques (b Talence, 12 July 1940). French composer. After studying at the Schola Cantorum, he entered Pierre Schaeffer's electro-acoustic music class at the Paris Conservatoire and became a member of the Groupe de Recherches Musicales in 1969. In 1978 he was appointed director of the Ateliers de Musique Electroacoustique in Paris. In 1994 he received the Prix Musica Nova, and founded the Paysaginaire association to promote contemporary music.

In his music the diversity of the material he employs, his analogies between realistic images and morphological figures, the use of various kinds of texts and the interaction of external sources (projections, reciter, instrumentalist-cum-actor, singer) all give rise to a multi-directional theatricality of sound. The human or animal presence, a basic element of sound, orientates his work towards a certain kind of realism with a 'character motif' superimposed on it. Other features of his compositions include vocal elements or brief gestures conveyed in sound (steps, breathing, objects), stylized organic material, and the use of sudden breaks.

WORKS
(all for tape unless otherwise stated)

D'une multitude en fête, 1969; Petite suite, 1970; Géodes, 1970; Teralogos, 1970; Cri, 1971; Oedipe-Underground (Y. Rivais), spkr, tape, 1972; 7 paroles en croix (G. Durand), spkr, tape, 1973; Parages, 1973–4; Blancheneige, 1975; Paysaginaire, fl ens, tape, 1976; Entre terre et ciel, 1979; Symphonie au bord d'un paysage, 3 synth, tape, 1981; L'oiseau et l'enfant, 1982; Symphonie romantique, 1982; Intermède pour la nuit des oiseaux, 1983; L'invitation au départ, 1983; Cantus tenebrarum, 1984; Impromptu-Nuage, 1985; Les palpitations de la forêt, 1985; Le cantique de la résonance, 1985; Une danse macabre, 1986; Clair d'oiseaux, cl, children's chorus, tape, 1986; Messe aux oiseaux, 1986–7; Ave Maria, 1987; Étude paraphrase sur le motif du personnage, 1987; Marseillaise avec choeurs et personnages, 1988; 3 études pour l'espace de diffusion, 1988; Le Cantique des Cantiques, 1989; La Prière des anges, org, tape, 1990; Pour entrer et sortir d'un conte, 1990; L'ange blessé, S, hp, 1991; Opéra d'eau, 1991; Messe miniature, S, fl, 1992; L'oiseau-danse-la-pluie, pf, tape, 1992; La petite suite Laforgue (J. Laforgue), 1v, 1992; Messe des anges, 6 female vv, 1992–3, arr. SATB; Messe pour les enfants, children's chorus, org, 1993; Clin d'oeil à Jean de la Fontaine, 6 female vv; Le petit chapon rouge, S, tape, 1993; Clamor meus veniat, 1994; Oraison funèbre de Renart, S, str qt, 1994; Fragments gourmands, 1v, tape, 1995; Chansons zoomorphes, S, gui, tape, 1996; L'église oubliée, 1996; Seconde leçon de ténèbres pour le Mercredi Saint, S, tape, 1996

Principal recording companies: INA-GRM, Agon

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Lejeune: 'La forme dans le paysage', Lien (Ohain, 1990)

BRUNO GINER

Lekeu, Guillaume (Jean Joseph Nicolas) (b Heusy, nr Verviers, 20 Jan 1870; d Angers, 21 Jan 1894). Belgian composer. He settled in Poitiers in 1879, studying violin, piano and cello and composing prolifically from the age of 15. His early works show great thematic and rhythmic inventiveness. He moved to Paris in June 1888, and made a pilgrimage to Bayreuth the following year. He studied counterpoint and fugue with Franck from September 1889, and after Franck's death, fugue and orchestration with d'Indy, who advised him to compete for the Belgian Prix de Rome in 1891: he won a deuxième second prix with his cantata Andromède. Ysaÿe, on hearing parts of the work in Brussels, was so impressed that he commissioned what turned out to be Lekeu's most celebrated work, the Violin Sonata (1892).

Lekeu spent most of 1890 and 1892 in Verviers, where several of his works were performed. The premières of the Violin Sonata and the Trois poèmes for voice and piano took place in March 1893 at the Cercle des XX in Brussels, and in June of the same year Ysaÿe conducted the first performance of the Fantaisie sur deux airs populaires angevins. Lekeu spent 1893 working on his Piano Quartet, which he never completed. He died of typhoid fever. D'Indy completed the unfinished Cello Sonata and Piano Quartet (the former a student work dating from 1888).

Lekeu was greatly affected by the perfervid emotional temperature of the Franck circle, and the two great influences on his work, as on others of the circle, were late Beethoven and Wagner (of Franck's own music Lekeu tended to re-create the spirit rather than the letter). His credo is best summed up in his own words: 'Je me tue à mettre dans ma musique toute mon âme'. The Piano Sonata, the Piano Quartet and the Violin Sonata are among those works suffused with a kind of feverish, almost preternatural intensity, and his weaknesses are the outcome of the then currently fashionable necessity to think, as well as to feel, in the grand manner. However, signs of an individual intelligence in the making are detectable on almost every page; for instance, in the 'Nocturne' (no.3 of the Trois poèmes for voice and piano to Lekeu's own words) the late Romantic afflatus gives place to early glimmerings of impressionism, and in the orchestral Fantaisie sur deux airs populaires angevins folksong proved to be (as with d'Indy) a revitalizing and purifying influence.

WORKS
printed works published in Paris unless otherwise stated

STAGE

Les burgraves (essai scénique, V. Hugo), 1887, introduction symphonique, première partie, scène du serment, only

Barberine (essai scénique, A. de Musset), 1889, Act 1, scenes i and ii, prelude to Act 2, only

VOCAL

Noël, 2 S, str qt, pf, 1888, lost

Andromède (poème lyrique et symphonique, J. Sauvenière), S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, 1891, vs (Liège, 1892)

Chant lyrique (A. de Lamartine), SATB, orch, 1891, vs, 1891 (Verviers, 1994)

Prière à la nuit (J. Rameau), inc., SATB, orch, 1891

Prolog im Himmel (J.W. von Goethe), 2 T, Bar, org, orch, inc.

Ronde extraite du 1er Faust (Goethe, trans. G. de Nerval), Bar, orch, inc.

Songs (for 1v, pf): Les deux bonnes soeurs (C. Baudelaire), 1887, lost; Lied de matelot, 1887, inc.; La fenêtre de la maison paternelle (Lamartine), 1887; Les pavots (Lamartine), 1887 (1909); L'ombre plus dense (G. Lekeu), 1889 (Liège, 1903); Quelque antique et lente danse (G. Lekeu), 1889 (Brussels, 1895); L'âme des calices défunts (A. Silvestre), 1891, lost; Chanson de mai (J. Lekeu), 1891 (Liège, 1892); Trois poèmes (G. Lekeu), 1892 (1894): 1 Sur une tombe, 2 Ronde, 3 Nocturne, also arr. Mez, str qt (str orch), pf, 1892 (1909); Chant d'amour (Lamartine), inc.; De ce passé qui semblait éphémère, inc.

ORCHESTRAL

Adagio méditatif, b cl, orch, 1887, lost; Marche funèbre d'Ophélie, 1887, inc.; Prélude pour le troisième acte de Phèdre, tragédie de J. Racine, 1888, inc.; Première étude symphonique: Chant de triomphale délivrance, 1889; Fantaisie contrapuntique sur un cramignon liégeois, ob, cl, bn, hn, str, 1890 (1925); Seconde étude symphonique: 1 Hamlet, 1890 (1980), arr. pf, 1890; 2 Ophélie, 1890; Adagio, str qt, str orch, 1891 (1908); Epithalame, str qnt/str orch, 3 trbn, org, 1891; Fantaisie sur deux airs populaires angevins, 1892 (1908), arr. pf 4 hands, 1892; Introduction et adagio, tuba obbl, brass, 1892 (Huntsville, TX, 1992); Larghetto, 1 vc, str qnt/str orch, 2 hn, bn, 1892; Poème, inc., vn, orch; Tancrède, inc.

CHAMBER

Str qt: Méditation, 1887; Menuet, 1887; Molto adagio sempre cantante doloroso, 1887; f, 1887; d, 1887; 1887, lost; Lento, 1888; Prélude, 1888; G, 1888

Trios: Trio en sol majeur, 2 vn, vc, op.3 nos.1 and 2; Adagio molto espressivo e cantabile, 2 vn, vc, 1887; Tempo di minuetto, vn, va, vc, 1887; Moderato ma non troppo, vn, va, vc, 1888; Thema con variazioni, vn, va, vc, 1888 (1984); Piano Trio, c, 1891 (1908); Adagio, inc., vn, va, vc; Allegretto moderato, inc., vn, vc, pf

Vn: Andante varié, vn, pf, op.1 no.1, 1885; Choral, 2 vn, pf, op.2 no.1, 1885; Grande marche triomphale, 2 vn, pf, op.2 no.2, 1885; Choral, vn, pf, op.3, 1885; sonata, inc., d, op.3, 1885; Fuguetta, 2 vn, pf, 1885; Andante serioso, vn, pf; Canon, 2 vn, 1887; Poco allegro, vn, pf, 1887; Tempo di minuetto, 2 vn, pf, 1887; Adagio molto espressivo, 2 vn, pf, 1888; Andante più tosto adagio, vn, pf, 1888; Minuetto, 2 vn, 1888; sonata, G, 1892 (1894); Premier duo, 2 vn

Quatuor contrapuntique, 1887, lost; Trois morceaux, vc, pf, 1887, lost; sonata, inc., vc, f, 1888 (1923), completed by d'Indy; Piano Quartet, inc., b, 1893 (1895), 2nd mvt completed by d'Indy; Andante grazioso e cantabile molto, 2 vc

PIANO

Allegro marcato, 1887; Andantino semplice e molto espressivo, 1887; Morceaux égoïstes: 1st ser.: Lamento, 1887, lost, 2 Chant pastoral, 1887, lost, 3 Moderato poco allegro più tosto allegretto, 1887, 4 Lento doloroso, 1887, 2nd ser.: 1 lost, 2 Andante, 1887, 3 Andante malinconico, ma non lamentoso, 1888, 4 lost, 5 Andante, 1888; Tempo di Mazurka, 1887 (Poitiers, 1888); Andante, 1888; Andante sostenuto, pf 4 hands, 1889; Etude, 1889; Fuga a 4 voci, 1889; Sonata, g, 1891 (1899); Berceuse, 1892; Trois pièces, 1892 (Liège, 1892): 1 Chansonnette sans paroles, 2 Valse oubliée, 3 Danse joyeuse; Adagio religioso col più grand' espressione; Andante; Andante cantabile; Berceuse et valse (pot-pourri/intermède comique); Moderato maestoso, inc.; Moderato quasi largo; Moderato sempre molto espressivo e appassionato; 3 untitled pieces, D, G, g

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Lorrain: Guillaume Lekeu, sa correspondance, sa vie et son oeuvre (Liège, 1923)

M.O. Maus: Trente années de lutte pour l'art–Les XX–La libre esthétique 1884–1914(Brussels, 1926/R)

R. Stengel: Guillaume Lekeu (1870–1894): Un musicien belge mort à 24 ans (Brussels, 1944)

P. Prist: L'enfant de génie de la musique contemporaine: Guillaume Lekeu (1870–1894) (Brussels, 1946)

L. Vallas: Vincent d'Indy, i: La Jeunesse (1851–1886) (Paris, 1946), ii: La maturité – la vieillesse (Paris, 1951)

L. Vallas: La véritable histoire de César Franck (1822–1890) (Paris, 1955)

P.G. Langevin: 'Guillaume Lekeu le "Rimbaud" de la musique', ReM, nos. 324–6 (1979), 29–72

M. Kahane and N.Wild, eds.: Wagner et la France (Paris, 1984)

L. Verdebout: 'Guillaume Lekeu et son temps', Cahiers du CACEF, no.115 (1984), 19–42

L. Verdebout ed.: Guillaume Lekeu: Correspondance – Introduction, chronologie et catalogue des oeuvres (Liège, 1993)

P. Vendrix, ed.: Guillaume Lekeu et son temps [Liège 1994] (Liège, 1995)

S. Dado, C. Pirenneand L. Verdebout: 'Quelques documents inédits relatifs à Guillaume Lekeu', Revue de la société liégeoise de musicologie, no.5 (1996), 33–68

CHRISTOPHER PALMER/LUC VERDEBOUT (text), LUC VERDEBOUT (work-list, bibliography)

Lelarge, Jacques-George (b Liège, bap. 15 April 1713; d ?Liège, after 1793). Flemish composer and organist. His godfather, Jacques-Georges Schepers, canon of St Paul, entered him as a choirboy at the collegiate church of St Paul, Liège, where he would have been a pupil of Corneille de Tiège. On 4 June 1734 he was appointed organist at St Martin, replacing Henri Plasman and working alongside Hubuert Renotte, the then succentor. On 7 July 1745 he left St Martin to succeed Renotte as organist at St Lambert; his vacant post was then filled by Nicolas-Léonard Pennas. Lelarge was famous not only for his interpretative abilities as an organist, but also as an expert on the instrument and an excellent teacher, as shown by his manuscript tutor Traité d'harmonie par demandes et réponses. On 5 March 1784 he asked to be released from his duties in favour of J.-P.-V. Lhoest. He died towards the end of 1793 or the beginning of 1794. None of his compositions survives.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AudaM; VannesD

A. van der Linden: 'Sur un manuscrit inédit: le Traité d'harmonie de J.G. Lelarge, organiste de la Cathédrale de Liège, 1782', Association française pour l'avancement des sciences (1939), no.63, p.1436

A. van der Linden: 'Note sur l'abbé Lelarge', RBM, iv (1950), 72–3

J. Quitin: 'Orgues, organiers et organistes de l'église cathédrale Notre-Dame et Saint-Lambert à Liège aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles', Bulletin de l'Institut archéologique liégeois, lxxx (1967), 5–58

PHILIPPE VENDRIX

Lelei, Georg Simon. See LÖHLEIN, GEORG SIMON.

Leleu, Jeanne (b Saint Mihiel, 29 Dec 1898; d Paris, 11 March 1979). French pianist and composer. Her father was a bandmaster, her mother a piano teacher. At the age of nine she began studying at the Paris Conservatoire, where her teachers included Marguerite Long, Cortot and Widor. In 1923 she won the Prix de Rome with her cantata Béatrix. This was followed by two other prizes (Georges Bizet and Monbinne). She became a professor at the Paris Conservatoire in 1947, first for sight-reading, then for harmony. In style her compositions belong to no school. Clear, rhythmically alive, adventurous in harmony, her Suite symphonique caused a sensation in Rome, where it was first heard. In 1937 she played her own Piano Concerto with success in Paris, at the Concerts Lamoureux. Her Transparences, with its imaginative orchestral textures, was described by Florent Schmitt as 'a marvel of freshness, finesse and feminine grace', showing a high degree of invention, sensibility, richness and knowledge. Her ballets, Un jour d'été and Nautéos, have been praised for their grace, wit and invention, and both have enjoyed considerable success in the theatre.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Le cyclope (incid music, Euripides), 1928; Un jour d'été (ballet), Paris, Opéra-Comique, 1940; Nautéos (ballet), Monte Carlo, 1947

Orch: Esquisses italiennes, 1926; Suite symphonique, wind, 1926; 2 danses, 1927; Transparences, 1931; Pf Conc., 1935; Femmes, suite, 1947; Virevoltes, suite, 1950

Other works: Pf Qt, 1922; Béatrix (cant., J. Gandrey-Réty), 1923; pf pieces, songs

Principal publishers: Heugel, Leduc

DAVID COX

Leleu, Jehan [Jennot]. See LUPI, JOHANNES.

Lelio. See RICCOBONI, LUIGI ANDREA.

Lemacher, Heinrich (b Solingen, 26 June 1891; d Cologne, 16 March 1966). German teacher and composer. From 1911 to 1916 he studied at the Cologne Conservatory, as well as at the University of Bonn with Schiedermair. After military service (1916–18) he lived in Cologne as a composer, critic and private teacher. In 1924 he founded the Seminar für Privatmusiklehrer within the Reichsverband Deutscher Tonkünstler und Musiklehrer, which he led until 1933. From 1925 until his retirement in 1956 he taught composition, theory and history at the Cologne Hochschule für Musik, where he was made professor in 1928. During this time he also taught at the Rheinische Musikschule and at the University of Cologne. Co-founder of the Gesellschaft für Neue Musik, Cologne (1921), the Internationale Gesellschaft für Neue Katholische Kirchenmusik (1927) and the Deutscher Komponisten-Verband (1954), he was one of the leading composers of Catholic church music in Germany from the 1920s to the 1960s. His ambition, as composer and as teacher, was to overcome the stylistic constriction of the 'music within walls' supported by the Cecilian movement, and re-establish the links between sacred and secular music by means of good Gebrauchsmusik. His instrumental music was composed above all with music education and domestic music-making in mind. Hermann Schroeder and Bernd Alois Zimmermann were among his pupils.

WORKS
(selective list)

for detailed list see Dahlberg

INSTRUMENTAL

14 orch works, incl. Rheinische Suite, op.86; AGFA-Variationen, op.145; Bn Conc., op.164
Chbr music, incl. Quadriga, op.199, 4 hn
Music for pf, 2 pf, org

VOCAL

40 Masses, incl. 17 for mixed chorus; 6 for mixed chorus, org; 6 for male chorus; 1 for high vv; 4 for 2vv, org; 1 for v, org; 2 for chorus, congregation, org; 2 for double chorus
Other sacred pieces: 34 mass propers, 2 requiems, *c*300 motets, 20 cants.
Secular vocal: many works for mixed chorus and male chorus, lieder, cants., melodramas
Arrs. of Palestrina, Lassus, Haydn, Mozart, Bruckner [collab. Fellerer/Mies]

Principal publishers: Böhm, Coppenrath, Gerig, Schwann, Tonger

WRITINGS

Zur Geschichte der Musik am Hofe zu Nassau-Weilburg (diss., U. of Bonn, 1916; Bonn, 1916)
'Einzelunterricht Arbeitsgemeinschaften', Handbuch der Musikerziehung, ed. E. Bücken (Potsdam, 1931), 326–72
'Die Lehre von der Erfindung und Gestaltung in der Vokalmusik', Hohe Schule der Musik, ed. J. Müller-Blattau (Potsdam,1935)
Handbuch der Hausmusik (Graz, 1948)
ed., with K.G. Fellerer: Handbuch der katholischen Kirchenmusik (Essen, 1949) with H. Schroeder: Lehrbuch des Kontrapunktes (Mainz, 1950)
125 Jahre Gürzenichchor Köln (Cologne,1953)
with H. Schroeder: Generalbassübungen (Düsseldorf, 1954, 7/1977)
ed., with W. Kahl and J.Schmidt-Görg: Studien zur Musikgeschichte des Rheinlandes: Festschrift L. Schiedermair (Cologne, 1956) with H. Schroeder: Harmonielehre (Cologne, 1957) with H.W. Schmidt: Almanach der Hausmusik (Cologne, 1958) with H. Schroeder: Formenlehre der Musik (Cologne, 1962, 2/1968/R; Eng. trans., rev., 1967, by R. Kolben)
Spasso ostinato (Cologne, 1964)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (P. Mies)
P. Mies: 'Heinrich Lemacher: über das Verhältnis von Wort und Ton in seinen Werken', ZFM, Jg.95 (1928), 146–8
P. Mies: 'Grundprinzipien der Messekomposition bei H. Lemacher', Cäcilienvereinsorgan/Musica sacra, lxii (1932), 340–45
P. Mies: 'Heinrich Lemacher: sein Werk und seine Stellung in der Musik', Sinfonia sacra, ii (1948), 86–91
F. Oberborbeck: 'Heinrich Lemacher: zu seinem 60. Geburtstag am 26. Juni', ZfM, Jg.112 (1951), 299–302
W. Hammerschlag and A.Schneider: Musikalisches Brauchtum: Festschrift für Heinrich Lemacher (Cologne, 1956)
W. Thomson: Review of Eng. trans. of Formenlehre, Notes, xxiv (1967–8), 713–14
J. Dahlberg: Studien zur geistlichen Chormusik Heinrich Lemachers (Regensburg, 1983)

JOSEF DAHLBERG

Lemacherier, Guillaume. See LEGRANT, GUILLAUME.

Le Maire, Jean (b Chaumont-en-Bassigny, Haute-Marne, *c*1581; *d c*1650). French mathematician, engineer and inventor. He lived in Toulouse and Paris. His widespread interests led to the development of novelties in such diverse areas as architecture, language, mnemotechnics and typography. In music he is credited with devising an equal-tempered scale, with adding a seventh syllable (za) to the hexachordal solmization system, with constructing a new type of lute (the ALMÉRIE – an anagram of his name), and with proposing a novel musical notation ('musique almérique'). Although Mersenne (Mersenne HU, and in his correspondence) strongly supported Le Maire's ideas, others did not, and controversy regarding his inventions spread throughout France and elsewhere in Europe.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Pirro: 'Jean le Maire et l'Almérie', BSIM, iv (1908), 479–82
C. de Waard, ed.: Correspondance du P. Marin Mersenne (Paris, 1932–), esp. ix (1965), 563–9
A. Cohen: 'Jean Le Maire and La Musique Almérique', AcM, xxxv (1963), 175–81
J.R. Knowlson: 'Jean Le Maire, the Almérie, and the "musique almérique": a Set of Unpublished Documents', AcM, xl (1968), 86–9

ALBERT COHEN

Lemaire (de Belges), Jean (b Bavai, Hainaut, *c*1473; d after 18 March 1514). French poet and historiographer. He may have been a choirboy at Notre Dame-la-Grande, Valenciennes, since he wrote that there, 'en ma premier jeunesse j'avoie chanté "Benedicamus"' (Oeuvres de Jean Lemaire de Belges, ed. J. Stecher, Paris, 1882–91, iv, 489). Between 1498 and 1503 he was employed by Duke Pierre II de Bourbon and then by Pierre's brother-in-law, Count Louis de Ligny. In June 1504 Lemaire took up a position at the court of Margaret of Austria, and in 1512 he entered the service of Anne of Brittany and Louis XII. The last surviving document relating to his life is a letter of 18 March 1514.

La plainte du désiré (ed. D. Yabsley, Paris, 1932), lamenting the death of Louis de Ligny on 23 December 1503, invokes several composers including Josquin, Agricola, Hilaire Penet, Evrart, Conrad and Pregent, calling for the alliance of music and poetry. Lemaire's allegory on the spiritual harmony between France and Italy, La concorde des deux langages (ed. J. Frappier, Paris, 1947; facs. with commentary by M. Françon, Cambridge, MA, 1964), abounds in musical imagery, mingling old and new – monochords, psalteries and guitars, Sapphic odes and virelais – and includes the names of Amphion, Arion, Orpheus, Ockeghem, Josquin, Agricola and Compère. Not only did he use technical terms like 'pedal points' and 'alternating verses', but he attempted to characterize the different styles of contemporary composers with such phrases as 'entrebriser musicque' for Agricola, 'verbes coulourez' for Josquin, 'armonie tres fine' for Ockeghem and 'termes doulx' for Compère. A four-voice chanson, Mille regretz de vous abandonner, is ascribed to 'J. Lemaire' in Attaingnant's Vingt et sept chansons musicales desquelles les plus convenables à la fleuste (RISM 1533[1]). Later sources, however, attribute it to Josquin, who is generally accepted as being its composer. Josquin also set Lemaire's Plus nulz regretz for four voices; a setting of Soubz ce tumbel qui est dur conclave in one of the chanson albums of Margaret of Austria (B-Br 228) has been attributed to Josquin (Picker, 1965), while the French text of the motet-chanson Cueurs desolez/Plorans ploravit (in the same manuscript, which contains settings by Josquin, Appenzeller and an anonymous composer) may also be by Lemaire.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Doutrepoint: Jean Lemaire de Belges et la Renaissance (Brussels, 1934)

M. Picker: The Chanson Albums of Marguerite of Austria (Berkeley, 1965)

M. Picker: 'Josquin and Jean Lemaire: Four Chansons Re-examined', Essays presented to Myron P. Gilmore, ed. S. Bertelli and G. Ramakus (Florence, 1978), ii, 447–56

F. Dobbins: Music in Renaissance Lyons (Oxford, 1992), 17, 27–31

FRANK DOBBINS

Lemaire, Louis (b 1693 or 1694; d Tours, *c*1750). French composer. Trained as a chorister at Meaux Cathedral and taught by Sébastien de Brossard, who was organist there, Lemaire became well known in Paris as a composer of vocal music. His name first appeared in an anthology of airs published by Ballard in 1712, followed two years later by a volume devoted to his own. A more substantial work, Les quatre saisons, appeared in 1724. This was a collection of four cantatas and his only contribution to the genre, for he preferred to cultivate the cantatille, a form best described as the Rococo version of the Baroque French cantata. Lemaire was the most prolific of all cantatille composers, publishing 66 of them between 1728 and 1750 and, together with Mouret and Lefebvre, he lifted this form to the height of its popularity. Between 1728 and 1736, 21 of his cantatilles were heard at concerts in the Tuileries, and many were included in the various anthologies of this kind of work that appeared frequently after 1730. Most of Lemaire's cantatilles were written for high voice with instrumental accompaniment, usually for violins and flutes and occasionally for musette and for vielle (or hurdy-gurdy). He also composed two books of motets (or saluts) which were sung at the Concert Spirituel between 1728 and 1733.

WORKS

published in Paris

Airs à chanter (1714–19); 8 vols. mentioned in Le Clerc catalogue of 1742, only 6 extant

Les quatre saisons (4 cants.): Le printemps, S, vns, fls, obs, bc; L'été, S, vns, fls, bc (incl. bns); L'automne, S, B, vns, fls, bc (incl. bns); L'hyver, B, SAB, b viol obbl, bc (1724/R in the Eighteenth-Century French Cantata, xvii (New York, 1991))

Suite pour la vielle et la musette (*c*1725)

Recueils d'airs sérieux et à boire, vaudeville et ronde de table, 6 vols. (1725–30)

Motets, 1–2vv, some with insts, 2 vols. (*c*1728)

Concerts spirituels ou Recueil d'airs sur toutes sortes de sujets de piété (1729)

Recueil d'airs sérieux et à boire, mêlez de vaudeville, ronde de table, duo, récit de basse, airs tendres et chansons à danser (1738)

Recueil d'airs sérieux et à boire, mêlez de brunette, ronde de table, duo, récit de basse, musette et vaudeville (1740)

Fanfares ou Concerts de chambre, vn, fl, ob, musette, vielle, bn, tpt, perc (1743)

66 cantatilles (1728–50, some R in the Eighteenth-Century French Cantata, xvii (New York, 1991), 5 lost

Airs in Ballard's Recueil d'airs sérieux et à boire (1712–24), Nouveau recueil de chansons choisies (1723–36) and other anthologies

Sacred contrafacta in Nouvelles poésies spirituelles et morales (1730–37)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Tunley: The Eighteenth Century French Cantata (London, 1974, 2/1997)

A.C. Eastwood: Stylistic Development and melodic Transmission in some Secular Song Books Published in Paris (1695–1740) (diss., U. of W. Australia, 1987)

DAVID TUNLEY

Le Maistre [Meistre, Maystre], Matthaeus (b ?Roclenge-sur-Geer, Liège, *c*1505; d Dresden, before April 1577). Flemish composer. Kade's early hypothesis that he had at one time been active in Milan, and was identical with Mathias Hermann Werrecore, also known as Mathias Fianergo, was refuted by Haberl. A manuscript (A-Gu 13), which was apparently taken to Graz from Munich in 1573, supports Sandberger's conjecture that the 'Mathesz Nidlender' reported in the Munich court chapel is Le Maistre. Furthermore, two Munich choirbooks are unique sources for several masses and motets by him. In 1554 he succeeded Johann Walter as Kapellmeister of the Dresden Kantorei, then consisting of 40 musicians. Since he had lost the patrimony of his old home on his conversion to Protestantism, the elector compensated him in 1565 with a grant for life. Additional income came from compositions dedicated to the authorities of Zwickau. He suffered from illness for some years before his retirement in June 1568, when he was given a pension of 195 florins; his successor, Antonio Scandello, had already taken over his duties five months previously. In January 1577 he wrote the foreword to his last work to be printed. His son, Valerian, was a musician in the imperial chapel.

Le Maistre was a conservative musician. On his conversion to Lutheranism he adopted the Protestant style of Johann Walter and Georg Rhau. Their approach, however, was somewhat old-fashioned and seemed to confirm Le Maistre's own Renaissance idea of music as 'ars'. Understandably therefore his works met with little appreciation in his lifetime, although musically and intellectually they were far above average standard. His masses were predominantly influenced by elements of post-1500 Netherlandish style, and most are parody or cantus-firmus masses. Not until his old age did he make a valuable contribution to the Protestant mass with his Missa super 'Ich weiss mir ein fest gebauets Haus', which also makes use of O du Lamm Gottes, das der Welt Sünde trägt in the 'Qui tollis'. Most of the motets, too, show characteristics of an earlier style. The Catechesis numeris musicis inclusa, consisting of seven motets in simple three- to four-part form, is intended primarily for didactic purposes and is a musical memorial to the Protestant relatinization of texts in the second half of the 16th century.

Le Maistre's most important compositions are his sacred and secular songs in German. They are a late echo of the tradition of the German partsong, which had reached its peak in the works of Ludwig Senfl. Le Maistre's pieces, however, could not give any new impetus to the genre, which was already regarded as out of date by mid-century. The Geistliche und weltliche teutsche Geseng (1566) owed much to the example of the fine collection Neue deudsche geistliche Gesenge, edited by Georg Rhau (RISM 1544[21]). In his sacred pieces he made use of a wide range of compositional techniques, from simple homophonic songs to the great motets using cantus firmus and imitation. The texts of the more 'modern' compositions of his second collection (1577) were addressed more to the youth of his day. Didactic, declamatory texts, many of which were translated back into Latin, reveal his humanistic, pedagogic tendencies. In the secular songs he followed the earlier tradition of setting the cantus firmus in the tenor; however, some madrigalian influences can be seen in the part-writing of individual love-songs. He also composed two ingeniously constructed quodlibets.

WORKS

Editions: Handbuch der evangelischen Kirchenmusik, i–iii, ed. K. Ameln (Göttingen, 1933–40) [contains 13 pieces] [H]
Luthers Kirchenlieder in Tonsätzen seiner Zeit, ed. K. Ameln (Kassel, 1934) [contains 6 pieces] [L]

Magnificat octo tonorum (Dresden, 1557), lost, listed in WaltherML
Catechesis numeris musicis inclusa, 3vv (Nuremberg, 1559) [7 motets]
Geistliche und weltliche teutsche Geseng, 4–5vv (Wittenberg, 1566) [91 pieces]; 2 ed. O. Kade in AmbrosGM, v, 421, 424 [p.nos. refer to 1882]; H i, 2, 234–5, 336
Liber primus [15] sacrarum cantionum, 5vv (Dresden, 1570)
Officia de nativitate et ascensione Christi (Dresden, 1574); ?lost, listed in WaltherML
Schöne und auserlesene deudsche und lateinische geistliche Gesenge (Dresden, 1577) [20 German and 4 Latin pieces]; H i, 2, 249, 252, 275, 277, 279; L 6, 27, 39, 44, 91, 100

Missa super 'Ich weiss mir ein fest gebauets Haus', 5vv, 1568[1]; motets in 1554[11], 1564[1], 1568[21], 1571[17]
Mass, 4vv, D-Mbs 43; Missa 'Doulce memoire', 6vv, inc., Z 100, 4; Missa 'Pis ne me peult', 5vv, Mbs 43; Missa 'Praeter rerum seriem', 6vv, Mbs 43; Missa 'Regnum mundi', vv, ed. in MAM, xiv (1965); Missa 'Wo der Herr nicht bauet das Haus', 5vv, inc., Z 100, 4
5 motets, Mbs 43; 22 proper motets, Mbs 28
Further masses and motets in libraries in Ansbach, Dresden and Zwickau

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BlumeEK; BoetticherOL; WaltherML
O. Kade: Mattheus le Maistre (Mainz, 1862) [contains edns of 20 pieces]
F.X. Haberl: 'Matthias Hermann Werrecorensis', MMg, iii (1871), 197–210
A. Sandberger: Beiträge zur Geschichte der Bayerischen Hofkapelle unter Orlando di Lasso (Leipzig, 1894–5) [1st and 3rd vols. only]
D.C. Gresch: Mattheus Le Maistre: a Netherlander at the Dresden Court Chapel (diss., U. of Michigan, 1970)
R. Caspari: Liedtradition im Stilwandel um 1600 (Munich, 1971)
D.C. Gresch: 'Mattheus Le Maistre's Polyphonic Officia', MQ, lx (1974), 94–113
W. Steude: Untersuchungen zur mitteldeutschen Musiküberlieferung und Musikpflege im 16. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1978), 120
H. Pottie: 'Mattheus Le Maistres Motettenbundel van 1570', RBM, xliii (1989), 197–210

LOTHAR HOFFMANN-ERBRECHT

Lemare, Edwin (Henry) (b Ventnor, Isle of Wight, 9 Sept 1866; d Hollywood, CA, 24 Sept 1934). English organist and composer. He was a chorister and organ pupil under his father at Holy Trinity, Ventnor. He spent three years under Steggall at the RAM and in 1892 became an organ professor and examiner for the Associated Board of the RAM and the RCM. By this stage he had already made his reputation by playing more than 100 recitals (two a day) in 1884 on the one-manual Brindley & Foster organ in the Inventions Exhibition. In 1886 he started giving bi-weekly recitals at the Park Hall, Cardiff, and was appointed organist of Sheffield parish church. In 1892 he returned to London as organist of Holy Trinity, Sloane Street, following his vicar to St Margaret's, Westminster, in 1897.

Lemare was one of the most brilliant players of his day and a gifted extemporizer. A 100-recital tour of the USA and Canada during 1900–01 led to his engagement as organist of the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh (1902–5). In 1917 he became municipal organist in San Francisco and until 1929 held further appointments in Portland, Maine, and in Chatanooga; he also made 24 player rolls for the Aeolian company and 96 for Welte in Freiburg. His compositions include about 100 organ works, notably the popular Andantino in D♭. He also made several hundred organ transcriptions of orchestral repertory, including many of Wagner's works. He wrote an autobiography, published in Organs I have Met: the Autobiography of Edwin H. Lemare, 1866–1934, together with Reminiscences by his Wife and Friends (Los Angeles, 1956, 2/1992).

PAUL HALE, WILLIAM OSBORNE

Lemaure, Catherine-Nicole (b Paris, 3 Aug 1704; d Paris, 1786). French soprano. Entering the Paris Opéra chorus in about 1719, she sang Astraea then Libya in the 1721–2 revival of Lully's Phaëton. She quickly came to sing such principal parts as Hippodamie in the première of Mouret's Pirithoüs and the title role in Lacoste's Philomèle (both 1723). Her temperament was capricious and volatile, however, and she left the Opéra without warning in 1725 after a performance of A.C. Destouches and M.-R. Lalande's Les élémens. She returned in 1726, but her rivalry with Mlle Pélissier caused disputes among 'les politiques de l'Opéra' and she disappeared again in 1727–30, returning to sing in Campra's Hésione. She sang Oriane (Lully's Amadis, 1731) with triumphant success, created Iphise (Montéclair's Jephté, 1732) and sang the title role in Destouches' Issé (1733 revival). She sang Iphigenia in the 1734 revival of Desmarets' Iphigénie en Tauride. Threatened with imprisonment if she did not appear in the 1735 revival of Jephté, Lemaure deliberately sang poorly and when she refused to continue, was escorted (still in costume) to Fort l'Evêque, where she was detained overnight before returning the following day to take up her role with better grace. Her 1740 performances of Iphise and Oriane were greeted with enthusiastic ovations, and in 1744 she supplanted Pélissier as Iphise in Rameau's Dardanus, a role Pélissier had created. Lemaure retired in 1744, but was still cited with admiration well into the 1760s and 70s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ES (E. Borrel); GroveO (P. Weller) [incl. further bibliography]
J.-B. de la Borde: Essai sur la musique ancienne et moderne (Paris, 1780), iii, 521–2

PHILIP WELLER

Lemberg (Ger.). See L'VIV.

Lemene, Francesco de. See DE LEMENE, FRANCESCO.

Le Menu. French firm of music publishers. Christophe Le Menu de Saint-Philbert (b c1720; d Paris, 16 Sept 1774), known as Le Menu, published privately from 1741 issuing his Méthode de musique, motets 'avec simphonie' and cantatilles. He established himself as a music publisher in 1758 in the rue du Roule 'A la clef d'or', publishing vocal music (cantatilles, ariettes, operas), symphonic or concerted music and chamber music. Like his contemporaries, Le Menu also published a music periodical, the Journal de pièces de clavecin de M. Clément (1762–74). Among the names found in his catalogues, which appeared between 1763 and 1774, are Alexandre, Cambini, J.-B. Cardonne, Cramer, J.A. Lorenziti, Mozart, Roeser and Vanhal.

After his death, his widow and daughter (who in February 1775 married CHARLES-GEORGES BOYER) ensured his succession: the names 'Dames Lemenu et Boyer', associated between 1776 and 1783, are found on a considerable number of publications of chamber music, symphonies, concertos and comic opera overtures. Madame Le Menu had transferred the ownership of the firm to her son-in-law on 21 January 1779 as a wedding gift but it was only in 1783, after Boyer had established himself on his own account, that she finally ceased publishing under her own name. After July 1790, Madame Le Menu retired to her property in Saint-Germain-en-Laye and in August 1790 the publisher Louis Lobry moved into her premises to manage his own stock.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DEMF; HopkinsonD; JohanssonFMP

ANIK DEVRIÈS

Lemeshyov, Sergey (Yakovlevich) (b Knyazevo, Tver′ province, 27 June/10 July 1902; d Moscow, 26 June 1977). Russian tenor. He studied at the Moscow Conservatory and with Stanislavsky at the Bol′shoy Opera Studio. He made his début in 1926 in Sverdlovsk (now Yekaterinburg). In 1931 he joined the Bol′shoy Theatre. Lemeshyov's lyrical voice, with its individual tone, and the integrity of his characterizations imbued his performances with special charm, and they were noted for their intelligence, fastidious detail and fine acting. His repertory included Lensky, Bayan (Ruslan and Lyudmila), Vladimir (Prince Igor), Berendey and Levko (The Snow Maiden and May Night), Vladimir Dubrovsky in Nápravník's Dubrovsky, Gounod's Faust and Romeo, the Duke of Mantua and Almaviva. As a director he produced La traviata at the Maliy Theatre, Leningrad, and Werther at the Bol′shoy, both in 1951. He published Put′ k iskusstvu ('The Path to Art', Moscow, 1968). He was made People's Artist of the USSR in 1950.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. L′vov: S.Ya. Lemeshyov (Moscow and Leningrad, 1947)
Ye. Groshyova: Sergey Yakovlevich Lemeshyov (Moscow, 1960)

I.M. YAMPOL′SKY

Lemière [Le Mière, Le Mierre, Lemierre] de Corvey, Jean-Frédéric-Auguste (b Rennes, 3 Aug 1771; d Paris, 24 April 1832). French composer. Educated at the cathedral school in Rennes, he wrote his first compositions (including the opera Constance) before receiving formal musical training. On moving to Paris in 1792 he studied harmony with H.-M. Berton and composed, in quick succession, a number of opéras comiques. His military career, however, led him to participate in many European campaigns and caused long breaks in his musical activities: between 1798 and 1818 he wrote only two stage works and very little chamber music. When Lemière returned to Paris in 1817 to resume a theatrical career he found that this had lost much of its impetus; he was obliged to supplement his military pension by proofreading music and died, of cholera, in a state of relative poverty.

Lemière's chamber works include romances praised for their simple but stylish character and descriptive compositions for the piano (then in vogue) evoking the dramatic effects of revolution and war. His opéras comiques, which were mainly in one act, proved less popular than those written by Boieldieu, Dalayrac and Berton. A number were praised for their spirited, melodious qualities, their elegant orchestration and comic situations; Andros et Almona (1794) was particularly noted for its large-scale choruses imitating the religious worship of Muslims and Brahmins and was considered the composer's most successful work. At times, however, Lemière lacked inspiration, and a review of Les rencontres (1828) in the Mercure de France suggested that his musical style had become outdated. Towards the end of his career he arranged two operas by Rossini for the French stage.

WORKS

printed works published in Paris unless otherwise stated

STAGE

opéras comiques, first performed in Paris unless otherwise stated

Constance (?oc, 1), ? Rennes, 1790
Les chevaliers errants (1), Montansier, 20 March 1792
Crispin rival (1), Montansier, 1793
Le poëme volé (1), Montansier, 1793
La reprise de Toulon par les Français (fait historique, 1, A.-V.P. Duval), OC (Favart), 21 Jan 1974, ov. and 1 air (Paris, *c*1794)
Andros et Almona, ou Le Français à Bassora (3, L.B. Picard and Duval), OC (Favart), 5 Feb 1794
Le congrès des rois (cmda, 3, Desmaillot [A.F. Eve]), OC (Favart), 26 Feb 1794, collab. Dalayrac, Grétry, Méhul and 8 others
Les suspects (1, Picard and Duval), 19 May 1795
Babouc (4), Feydeau, 1795
La blonde et la brune (1), Feydeau or Louvois, 1795
La moitié du chemin (3, Picard and Duval), Louvois, 1796
La paix et l'amour (1), Lille, 5 Dec 1797
Les deux orphelines (1, C.-A. de Bassompierre [Sewrin]), Molière, 26 May 1798
Les deux crispins (1, Lemière de Corvey), Molière, 16 June 1798
La maison changée (1), Molière, 1798
Le porter d'eau (1), 'en provence', 1801
Henri et Félicie (3, Lemière de Corvey), 'en provence', 1808
Les rivaux de village, ou La cruche cassée (1, J.B.R. Viollet d'Epagny), OC (Feydeau), 24 Dec 1819 (Paris, ?*c*1819), arrs. pubd separately
La fausse croisade (2, Le Poitevin de Saint-Alme and Viollet d'Epagny), OC (Feydeau), 12 July 1825
Les rencontres (3, J.B.C Vial and Mélesville [A.-H.-J. Duveyrier]), OC (Feydeau), 11 June 1828, F-Pc, collab. G. Catrufo
Arrangements: La dame du lac (after Rossini), Odéon, 31 Oct 1825 (*c*1825); Tancrède (after Rossini), Odéon, 1827 (1827)
Spurious: L'écolier en vacances (1, Picard, M.F. Loraux), OC (Favart), 13 Oct 1794 [by L.E. Jadin]

OTHER WORKS

Orch: Hymne funèbre, orch, chorus, perf. Montansier, 25 Aug 1792 (1794); Chant de guerre (scène patriotique à grand orchestre, C.J. Trouvé), op.15 (1794); La grande bataille de Jéna gagnée sur les prussiens, symphonie militaire, orch, op.36 (?1806), arr. pf (1806)
Chbr: Le tombeau de Mirabeau le patriote, pf (*c*1791); 2 pf sonatas, opp.3, 8 (n.d.); Sonata, pf 4 hands, op.9 (n.d.); La révolution du 10 août, potpourri national, pf, op.11 (*c*1793); 6 romances tirées de Gonzalve de Cordoue, acc. fortepiano/hp, op.12 (1794); Seconde suite de 6 romances tirées de Gonzalve de Cordoue, acc. fortepiano/hp, op.13 (1794); 7 romances de différents auteurs, acc. pf/hp, op.14 (*c*1795); 6 romances tirées de Rosalie et Gerblois, acc. fortepiano/hp, op.17 (1795); La révolution du 9 thermidor, potpourri national, pf, op.20 (1795); 3 duo concertants, hp, pf, opp.23–4, 28 (?1805); Trio, hp, hn, bn (n.d.); 3 vn sonatas (n.d.); other romances in Le porte-feuille du troubadour, ed. Lemière de Corvey (1821), and pubd separately; other chbr and pf works, contredanses, studies

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; Grove6 (J. Cooper); MGG1 suppl. (G. Bourligneux)
L. Michaud, ed.: Biographie universelle (Paris, 1843–65)
C. Pierre: Les hymnes et chansons de la Révolution (Paris, 1904)
H. Gougelot: Catalogue des romances françaises parues sous la Révolution et l'Empire, i (Melun, 1937)
H. Gougelot: La romance française sous la Révolution et l'Empire, i (Melun, 1938)
G. Favre: La musique française de piano avant 1830 (Paris, 1935)

ELISABETH COOK

Lemlin [Lemblin, Lemlein], Lorenz (b Eichstätt, *c*1495; d after 1549). German composer. He probably attended the cathedral school in Eichstätt, receiving his first music instruction from the Kapellmeister Bernhard Adelmann. In 1513 he entered Heidelberg University, where he received the bachelor's degree on 13 November 1514. He was a priest, and active in the Heidelberg court chapel, where he became Kapellmeister under Elector Ludwig V (d 1544). As the teacher of the choirboys Jobst vom Brandt, Georg Forster, Caspar Othmayr and Stephan Zirler he was at the head of the 'Heidelberger Liedmeister', who were still in close contact in later years. Forster's song publications included the works of his colleagues and in 1549 he dedicated to Lemlin Der dritte Teyl, schöner, lieblicher, alter, und newer deutscher Liedlein (RISM 1549[37]).

Lemlin's creative powers were too limited for him to be considered the leader of a school of songwriting. Certainly the 'Liedmeister' were indebted to their teacher for many suggestions about composition, but these did not result in a homogenous style. Lemlin's output was relatively small and was not widely circulated in the first half of the 16th century. The 15 surviving secular songs are conservative in their imitative pairing of parts at the beginning and in their rigid cantus firmus treatment. Such a technique shows appreciation of the considerably more inspired examples by Paul Hofhaimer and Heinrich Finck. Lemlin's most popular work, the six-voice Der Gutzgauch auf dem Zaune sass, has in its imitation of the cuckoo's call the lightheartedness of a real folksong. His motets are more homophonic with shorter phrases, reflecting the influence of the humanist ode compositions and the new stylistic tendencies of the late Netherlands masters.

WORKS

SACRED

Converte nos Deus, 2vv, 1545[6]; Deus adiuva me, 3vv, 1541[2]; Deus in adiutorum, 4vv, 1542[6]; Grates nunc omnes, 8vv, 1564[1]; In convertendo Dominus, 4vv, 1542[6]; In manus tuas, Domine, 4vv, 1538[1]; Memento mei, 5vv, 1540[7]; Nisi Dominus, 4vv, 1542[6]; Oramus Domine, 8vv, D-Kl 4° Mus.38, no.4; Vivo ego dicit Dominus, 3vv, 1542[8]

SECULAR

Edition: Georg Forster: Frische teutsche Liedlein (1539–1556), I–II, ed. K. Gudewill and H. Siuts, EDM, 1st ser., xx (1942/R), lx (1969) (G i–ii]

Ach höchster Hort, vernimm mein Wort, 4vv, G i, 76; Ach höchste Zir, auff all mein Gir, 4vv, G i, 20; Der Gutzgauch auf dem Zaune sass, 6vv, G ii, 42; Der Mey wil sich mit Gunst beweisen, 4vv, G i, 66; Des Spilens ich gar kein Glück nit han, 4vv, G i, 121; Ein Beumlein zart, 4vv, G i, 37; Ernstliche Klag, 4vv, G i, 155; Ich Armer klag, 4vv, G i, 38; Ich gwahrts noch gut, 4vv, G i, 162; Lust und Freud tet mich umbgeben gar, 4vv, 1549[37]; Mich jammert sehr, 4vv, G i, 128; Tag, Nacht ich ficht, 4vv, G i, 82; Von Herzen gern, on all Beschweren, 4vv, G i, 131; Was sterblich Zeyt, mir Freuden geyt, 4vv, 1549[37]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ReeseMR
C.P. Reinhardt: Die Heidelberger Liedmeister des 16. Jahrhunderts (Kassel, 1939)
H. Albrecht: Caspar Othmayr: Leben und Werk (Kassel, 1950)
G. Pietzsch: Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte der Musik am kurpfälzischen Hof zu Heidelberg bis 1622 (Mainz, 1963)
H. Haase: Jobst vom Brandt (1517 bis 1570) (Kassel, 1967)

LOTHAR HOFFMANN-ERBRECHT

Lemmens, Jaak Nikolaas [Jacques Nicolas] (b Zoerle-Paarwijs, Antwerp, 3 Jan 1823; d Zemst, nr Mechelen, 30 Jan 1881). Belgian organist. He studied first with his father and then with Christian Girschner and Fétis at the Brussels Conservatory, which he entered in 1839. After winning first prizes for piano (1842) and organ and composition (1846), and embarking upon a career as an organist at Diest, he was awarded a government bursary to complete his studies with Adolf Hesse in Breslau (1846). He won second prize in the Prix de Rome competition in 1847 with his cantata Le roi Lear, and was appointed professor of organ at the Brussels Conservatory in 1849. After marrying the English soprano Helen Sherrington in 1857 (see LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, HELEN), he paid frequent visits to London, and settled there in 1869. He returned to Belgium in 1878 and founded the Ecole de Musique Religieuse at Mechelen, which became the Lemmens Institute in 1879. With Canon Van Demme, he also founded the Société de Saint-Grégoire for the improvement of church music.

As a pupil of Hesse, who himself had studied with Rinck (a direct line of descent can be traced back through Kittel to J.S. Bach), Lemmens was one of the best organists of his time, and was highly regarded as a teacher. The perfection of his legato and his pedal technique, evidence of which survives in his Ecole d'orgue (1862), ensured his success both in Belgium (his pupil Alphonse Mailly was considered one of the best exponents of the Belgian school) and abroad, particularly in France, where the recital he gave at St-Vincent-de-Paul on 25 February 1852 was a lesson to all the French organists present, including Boëly, Benoist, Franck, Alkan, Lefébure-Wély and Fessy. No doubt the idea that Lemmens inherited the tradition of Bach and passed it on directly to his successors (Guilmant, Widor, Loret and then Dupré) should be regarded with caution, since only the second of the two distinct pedal techniques (toe alone, and heel and toe) described in records from the end of the 18th century survived into the second third of the 19th century. As an organist, however, Lemmens made a great contribution to the introduction of the works of Bach into both Belgium and France.

As a composer, Lemmens wrote for the taste of his time. His organ music was sometimes meditative (among his early organ pieces are several entitled Prière) and sometimes more demonstrative (his Fanfare), and his fugues derived from the revival of interest in the music of Bach (an example followed by his pupil Guilmant). His tendency to base many of his works on Catholic plainsong, in particular three sonatas with the sub-titles 'Pontificale', 'O filii', and 'Pascale' (the last-named on the theme of the Victimae paschali), may in turn have influenced Widor.

WORKS

Oeuvres inédites (Leipzig, 1883–7) [4 vols. of motets, hymns, works for org incl.: 20 préludes diatoniques, 12 morceaux faciles, 12 pièces d'orgue (vol.1); Messe des doubles et des fêtes solennelles, Messe de requiem (vol.2)]
Vocal: Te Deum, 4vv, orch; motets, acc. org; Le roi Lear (cant., A. Pujol), 1847; songs, 1v, pf
Orch: 2 symphonies
Org: 10 improvisations (Brussels, 1848); Scherzo symphonique, Fanfare (pubd in Ecole d'orgue, 1862); Four Organ Pieces in the free style (London, 1866); 3 sonatas: no.1, D, 'Pontificale', no.2, E, 'O filii', no.3, A, 'Pascale' (Paris, 1876); offertories; studies; other pieces
Hmn: 4 morceaux de salon: Fughette, Nocturne, Romance sans parole, Invocation (1865); 3 morceaux: Hélène-Polka, Mélodie, Cantabile (1865); Berceuse et rêverie (1867); Marche des volontaires (1878)
Pf: 2 sonatas, mentioned in FétisB
Pedagogical: Ecole d'orgue basée sur le plain-chant romain (Brussels, 1862)

WRITINGS

Du chant grégorien, sa mélodie, son rythme, son harmonisation (Ghent, 1886)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Duclos: Introduction to J.-N. Lemmens's Du chant grégorien (Ghent,1886), pp.xv–xlix
N. Dufourcq: 'La pénétration en France de l'oeuvre d'orgue de J. S. Bach', ReM, no.131 (1932), 27–39

E. Closson: 'Lemmens et l'école française de l'orgue', Musica sacra [Bruges], xl (1933)
N. Dufourcq: 'A propos du cinquantenaire de la mort de Cavaillé-Coll: Lemmens et Cavaillé-Coll, publication de lettres', L'orgue, nos.53–68 (1949–53)
F. Douglass: Cavaillé-Coll and the Musicians (Raleigh, NC, 1980)
F. Sabatier: 'Jacques Nicolas Lemmens', Guide de la musique d'orgue, ed. G. Cantagrel and others (Paris, 1991), 509–11

FRANÇOIS SABATIER

Lemmens Institute. Belgian institute of church music. Founded by JAAK NIKOLAAS LEMMENS, it opened in Mechelen in 1879. See also LOW COUNTRIES, §5.

Lemmens-Sherrington [née Sherrington], Helen (b Preston, 4 Oct 1834; d Brussels, 9 May 1906). English soprano, wife of Jaak Nikolaas Lemmens, whom she married in 1857. She came of a family who had lived for several generations at Preston. Her mother was a musician. In 1838 they emigrated to Rotterdam, and there Helen Sherrington studied with Verhulst. In 1852 she entered the Brussels Conservatory and took first prizes for singing and declamation. On 7 April 1856 she made her first appearance in London and soon rose to the position of leading English soprano, both in sacred and secular music; after the retirement of Clara Novello in 1860 she had no rival. She appeared in English opera from 1860 to 1865, and at Covent Garden in 1866, but found her place more in concert and oratorio. During the 1870s she formed part of the vocal quartet most in demand for festivals, with Janet Patey, Sims Reeves and Charles Santley. After her husband's death in 1881 she retired to Brussels, but continued to sing occasionally in England. Her last appearance was in 1894.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (H. Davey)
Obituary, MT, xlvii (1906), 395

GEORGE GROVE/BRUCE CARR

Lemnitz, Tiana (Luise) (b Metz, 26 Oct 1897; d Berlin, 26 Jan 1994). German soprano. She studied with Anton Kohmann in Frankfurt and made her début at Heilbronn in 1920 in Lortzing's Undine; from 1922 to 1928 she sang at Aachen. She became leading lyric soprano at Hanover (1928–33) and then, after a year in Dresden, joined the Berlin Staatsoper in 1934, remaining there until she retired in 1957. In Berlin her roles ranged from Mimì and Micaëla to Aida and Desdemona, from Pamina and Mařenka to Sieglinde. Later she sang the Marschallin, Milada (Smetana's Dalibor), Jenůfa, and Nastas'ya (Tchaikovsky's The Enchantress).

Lemnitz made her Covent Garden début in 1936 as Eva and returned for Octavian, Elsa, Pamina and Sieglinde; her career was otherwise mostly confined to central Europe. She was also a distinguished singer of lieder. Her warm, appealing voice and presence made her an ideal interpreter of the lyric roles of Mozart, Weber, Wagner and Strauss. Among the best of her many recordings are the arias from Der Freischütz and Lohengrin, her exquisite Pamina in Beecham's classic recording of Die Zauberflöte and her Octavian in Kempe's Die Rosenkavalier.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Seeliger: 'Tiana Lemnitz', Record Collector, xv (1963–4), 29–43 [with discography by R. Seeliger and B. Park]
A. Blyth: Obituary, Opera, xlv (1994), 427–8

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/ALAN BLYTH

Lemoine. French family of music publishers. Antoine-Marcel Lemoine (b Paris, 3 Nov 1763; d Paris, 10 April 1816), a guitarist, author of a guitar method, violist, theatre orchestra director and composer, founded a firm in Paris in 1796; his publications included Méhul's Messe solennelle, composed for Napoleon's coronation (1804). His eldest son, François (1782–1839), published independently under the name Lemoine aîné (1812–39, succeeded by his widow, 1839–49). Another son, Henry Lemoine (b Paris, 21 Oct 1786; d Paris, 18 May 1854), succeeded him in 1816. A successful piano teacher and a harmony student of Reicha, he published most of Chopin's music and firmly established the company's production of educational materials with Berlioz's Traité d'instrumentation (1844) and his own methods for piano, harmony and solfège.

Achille-Philibert Lemoine (b Paris, 15 April 1813; d Sèvres, 13 Aug 1895), son of Henry Lemoine, became a partner in 1850 and was director from 1852 to 1895. In 1858 he added engraving and printing to the business and began publication of Le Panthéon des pianistes (about 600 compositions). He acquired Schonenberger's catalogue (1875) and in 1885 inaugurated a branch in Brussels with Le chant classique, edited by Gevaert. His son Henry-Félicien (b Paris, 8 April 1848; d Paris, 24 April 1924) became a partner in 1871 and was director from 1895 to 1924. The three other sons joined in 1885: Gaston Lemoine (1852–1930); Léon Lemoine (b Paris, 1855; d Paris, 1916), who left the firm in 1900; and Achille Lemoine (1857–1948).

Henry-Jean Lemoine (b Paris, 10 April 1890; d Paris, 20 Nov 1970), son of Gaston and successor to Henry-Félicien, entered the firm in 1907. He became a partner (1920) and director (1924–70). He acquired the extensive theatrical and symphonic catalogue of Lucien Grus in 1933. André Lemoine (b Paris, 5 April 1907), son of Henry-Félicien, became a partner (1946) and later co-director. Max Lemoine (b Paris, 27 June 1922), son of Henry-Jean, became a partner (1955), later also a co-director and finally sole director from 1979. Max Lemoine retired in 1987 when his son Pierre took over.

Composers published by Lemoine include Donizetti, Franck, Gounod, Offenbach and Vierne, and, from the 20th century, Emmanuel, Le Flem, Tailleferre, Henri Tomasi, Damase and Piazzolla. Among the younger composers are José Luis Campana, Durieux, Jarrell, Redgate and Jean-Marc Singier. An important collection of original guitar compositions has been built up, and Le Panthéon des pianistes is being revised as an Urtext edition. Pedagogy continues to be an important part of Lemoine's activity. (DEMF, ii)

ROBERT S. NICHOLS/JEREMY DRAKE

Le Moine, Estienne (b ?1640s; d ?Paris, late 1715 or before 10 Jan 1716). French theorbo player. A number of musicians and painters named Le Moine are known from the reigns of Louis XIII and Louis XIV. It is not clear that Estienne was the one listed as a singer at the coronation of Louis XIV in 1654, or who took part in court ballets in the 1650s alongside Louis Couperin, Germain Pinel and others. He probably is the Le Moine praised by Charles Robinet as part of a group comprising harpsichord, theorbo and viol (1668). The first definite reference to him is his warrant as theorbo player in the musique de la Chambre du roi, dated 26 March 1680. Thereafter he is mentioned in court accounts as one of the half-dozen musicians of the Chambre, initially with Louis de Mollier and Pierre de la Barre (lutes), Jean Henry D'Anglebert (harpsichord), and Marin Marais (viol), until 1715. He is generally listed as viol player, though that may simply reflect the original title of his post. Both Le Gallois and Titon du Tillet place him first among theorbo players. In view of the small number of surviving pieces by him (8 in F-B 279.152, F-Pn Rés.1106, Vm 76265, D-Bsb 40601, US-BEm 775), his strength may have been primarily in accompaniment.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BenoitMC

Y. de Brossard: 'La vie musicale en France d'après Loret et ses continuateurs 1650–1688', RMFC, x (1970), 155, 188

M. Benoit: Versailles et les musiciens du roi, 1661–1733 (Paris, 1971)

D. Ledbetter: Harpsichord and Lute Music in Seventeenth-Century France (diss., U. of Oxford, 1985), i, 207–8; ii, p.xxxii, 163

DAVID LEDBETTER

Lemoyne, Gabriel. French pianist and composer, son of JEAN-BAPTISTE LEMOYNE.

Lemoyne [Moyne], Jean-Baptiste (b Eymet, Dordogne, 3 April 1751; d Paris, 30 Dec 1796). French composer. He was brought up by his uncle, the maître de chapelle at Périgueux. In 1770 he went to Berlin with a theatre company, and he held a minor appointment with the Crown Prince of Prussia while he studied under J.G. Graun, Kirnberger and J.A.P. Schulz. He then obtained a post in Warsaw, where his opera Le bouquet de Colette was produced with his pupil Antoinette Clavel (Mme de Saint-Huberty) in the cast; she was later to contribute much to his first Parisian success, Phèdre, by her performance in the title role. Lemoyne was in Paris by about 1780. His first serious opera, Electre, was dedicated to Marie-Antoinette with flattering references to Gluck, whose methods he claimed to follow. The work was poorly received; Gluck dissociated himself from Lemoyne, and the latter accordingly took Piccinni as a model for Phèdre. In 1787 he visited Italy, presumably to study the musical style then rapidly coming into vogue in Paris.

In spite of its universal critical rejection, Electre is Lemoyne's most interesting work. It makes striking use of free, short and abbreviated musical forms, and in the heroine's role uses a highly expressive recitative, seasoned with musical repetitions akin to the technique of leitmotif. The orchestration is frequently crude, but the quiet ending, as Orestes is pursued off the stage by the Furies, is noteworthy; Lemoyne repeated the effect, with more subtlety, in Phèdre and Nephté. The weakest parts of Electre are those in which purely musical invention is required, rather than declamation and orchestral effects; the dances are poor, and the longer arias weak in melody and design. Phèdre contains only a residue of the leitmotif technique, and although Lemoyne improved in aria writing and his operas became less uneven in quality, his originality became diluted. Nephté contains some fine scenes, and was his greatest success in tragedy – he was called on to the stage after the first performance, a favour then quite unusual at the Opéra – and it gave rise to the Abbé Toscan's pamphlet in which Lemoyne is considered to have surpassed Gluck by adding melodic sweetness to dramatic power. Lemoyne had less talent for comedy, but the slight charms of Les prétendus, enhanced by the unusual orchestral use of the piano, kept it in the repertory for 294 performances until 1827. Lemoyne's later works, including some with Revolutionary themes, are of decreasing interest and aroused little enthusiasm.

Lemoyne's son, Gabriel Lemoyne (b Berlin, 14 Oct 1772; d Paris, 2 July 1815) was a pianist and composer. He went to Paris as a boy with his father and studied the piano under C.-F. Clément and J.-F. Edelmann. About 1800 he undertook a concert tour in France and the Netherlands with the violinist Lafont; but he lived chiefly by teaching the piano in Paris. He also edited a journal for the publication of rondeaux, romances, and similar small-scale compositions. He wrote three opéras comiques, one (L'entresol, 1802) in collaboration with L.A. Piccinni. His output consists mainly of vocal romances and instrumental music, which includes some chamber works, two piano concertos (Paris, 1813) and, for solo piano, sonatas, caprices, fantasias and a toccata. Tasteful rather than adventurous, his music is typical of a prolific and complicated period in the development of piano music.

WORKS

PO – Paris, Opéra

PFE – Paris, Théâtre Feydeau

Le bouquet de Colette (op, 1), Warsaw, 1775

Electre (tragédie, 3, N.F. Guillard, after Voltaire: Oreste), PO, 2 July 1782 (Paris, n.d.)

Phèdre (tragédie lyrique, 3, F.-B. Hoffman), Fontainebleau, 26 Oct 1786 (Paris, n.d.)

Nadir, ou Le dormeur éveillé, 1787, unperf., F-Po

Les prétendus (comédie lyrique, 1, M.A.J. Rochon de Chabannes), PO, 2 June 1789 (Paris, n.d.)

Nephté (tragédie lyrique, 3, Hoffman, after T. Corneille: Camma), PO, 15 Dec 1789, Po (Paris, n.d.)

Les pommiers et le moulin (comédie lyrique, 1, N.J. Forgeot), PO, 20 Jan 1790 (Paris, n.d.)

Louis IX en Egypte (op, 3, Guillard and F.-G.J.-S. Andrieux), PO, 15 June 1790, Po, Pc

L'ivrogne vertueux, *c*1791 (oc, 2, L.-A. Beffroy de Reigny), unperf., Po

Elfride [Elfrida] (drame héroïque, 3, Guillard), Paris, OC (Favart), 17 Dec 1792

Silvius Nerva, ou La malédiction paternelle, 1792 (Beffroy de Reigny), unperf., Po

Miltiade à Marathon (op, 2, Guillard), PO, 5 Nov 1793, Po

Toute la Grèce, ou Ce que peut la liberté (tableau patriotique, 1, Beffroy de Reigny), PO, 5 Jan 1794, Po

Le compère Luc (oc, 2, Beffroy de Reigny), PFE, 19 Feb 1794

Le batelier, ou Les vrais sans-culottes (tableau patriotique, 1, Rézicourt), PFE, 12 May 1794

Le mensonge officieux (1, Forgeot), PFE, ?13 March 1795

L'île des femmes, 1796 (opera, 2), unperf.

Other stage works: Storm scene for Gossec: Toinon et Toinette, Berlin, 1772; many airs de ballet for productions at PO, Po; many excerpts from above operas pubd separately; Ode sur le combat d'Ouessant, perf. Paris, Concert Spirituel, 1778; airs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB

G.L.G. Toscan: De la musique et de Nephté: aux mânes de l'abbé Arnaud (Paris, 1790)

F.M. Grimm: Correspondance littéraire, philosophique et critique (Paris, 1812–14); complete version, ed. M. Tourneux (Paris, 1877–82/R)

J. Rushton: 'An Early Essay in "Leitmotiv": J.B. Lemoyne's "Electre"', ML, lii (1971), 387–401

JULIAN RUSHTON

Lemper, Ute (b Münster, 4 July 1963). German singer, actress and dancer. She began to study music in her home town at the age of nine, and later took acting classes at the Max Reinhardt Seminary in Vienna. In 1986 she played in the Vienna production of Lloyd Webber's Cats, subsequently appearing in Berlin in Peter Pan and then toured as Sally Bowles in Cabaret to Lyons, Düsseldorf, Rome and Paris. She also began to give recitals of songs by Kurt Weill and to record his music. Although her style seemed classical, she used transpositions, and her interpretations aroused controversy among Weill critics. Her recordings, however, were bestsellers. A close collaboration with the composer Michael Nyman includes his Songbook and Six Celan Songs as well as contributions to his music for Peter Greenaway's film Prospero's Books. With the conductor Robert Ziegler, Lemper revived songs from the 1920s Berlin cabaret repertory by Hollaender, Spoliansky, Nelson and others. In 1997 she played Velma in the London production of Chicago, subsequently transferring to the Broadway production, and in 2000 appeared in Weill's Die sieben Todsünden at the Covent Garden Festival, London. A performer of remarkable physical energy and charisma, Lemper has developed her voice from a somewhat 'white' tone to a fuller, more dramatic sound.

PATRICK O'CONNOR

Le Munerat, Jean (b ? Bourges, *c*1430–40; d ?Paris, 1499). French singer and scholar. He was the author of two tracts on verbal accentuation in plainchant. His early years seem to have been spent in Bourges, where he became a canon of Notre Dame de Sales (his familiarity with the Bourges chant tradition is clear from his writings). Later he was in Paris at the Collège de Navarre, where he enrolled in the 1450s as a student in the arts faculty and from 1465 in theology. He described himself as a 'scholastic theologian', that is, engaged in religious studies, and as a concentor, probably the associate of the cantor or precentor in singing the soloist portions of chant in the collegiate chapel services. In 1497 he was appointed rector of the University of Paris, though his tenure lasted only five months.

Of his 12 known publications, five are editions of liturgical books and five relate to various religious topics. In two others on music (ed. in Harrán) he countered the attacks, within the Collège, of certain 'humanists' (i.e. grammarians), who contended that music played havoc with the sacred texts. Le Munerat used every argument he could to refute their assertions and demonstrate that music, on the strength of its long tradition preserved in the chant books, could rightly ignore grammatical quantity in items subject to musical as against verbal logic. In the first treatise, De moderatione et concordia grammatice et musice (Paris, 1490), he reviewed the respective roles of music and grammar in determining the accentuation of words in plainchant, with a view to coordinating them in celebrating the liturgy, referring for examples to chants from the uses of Paris, Bourges and Sens (to which the Parisian church was subordinate). He continued the argument in the very brief Qui precedenti tractatu nullam adesse rationem vel demonstrativum (Paris, 1493).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Mother Thomas More [M. Berry]: 'The Performance of Plainsong in the Later Middle Ages and the Sixteenth Century', PRMA, xcii (1965–6), 121–34

G. Ouy: 'Le Collège de Navarre, berceau de l'humanisme français', Enseignement et vie intellectuelle, IXe–XVIe siècle (Congrès national des sociétés savantes, XCV/1: Reims 1970) (Paris, 1975), 276–99

D. Harrán: In Defense of Music: the Case for Music as Argued by a Singer and Scholar of the Late Fifteenth Century (Lincoln, NE, 1989)

DON HARRÁN

Lenaerts, René Bernard (Maria) (b Bornem, 26 Oct 1902; d Leuven, 27 Feb 1992). Belgian musicologist. He trained for the church and was ordained priest in 1927 and canon in 1955. While he was at the theological seminary at Mechelen he also studied at the Lemmens Institute, and took the doctorate in Germanic philology at Leuven in 1929 with a dissertation on Netherlandish polyphonic song in the 16th century. He pursued further musicological studies under André Pirro in Paris (1931–2), and began his teaching career in secondary schools at Geel and Antwerp. He then taught at the Catholic University of Leuven, as junior lecturer (1944), lecturer (1946) and as full professor of musicology (1949–73); his great achievement there was to develop an excellent department of musicology. In 1953 he was visiting professor at Columbia University and the University of California, Berkeley. From 1958 to 1971 he was reader in Renaissance music history at Utrecht University (in succession to Smijers).

In 1955 he became a member of the committee of the IMS and an active member of the Royal Academy of Belgium. For a number of years he also served on the committees of the Belgian and Dutch associations for music history and was on the editorial staff of Revue belge de musicologie. In 1959 he became editor of Monumenta Musicae Belgicae. His numerous travels in Germany, England, Italy and Spain in search of unknown Netherlandish polyphonic music in 15th- and 16th-century manuscripts resulted in several articles and editions and in the compilation of catalogues of old Netherlandish polyphony. His perceptive and fluently written contributions, substantial despite their habitual brevity, to congress reports, Festschriften, periodicals and encyclopedias, are based on a thorough study of musical source material, long experience as a teacher and a wide knowledge of cultural history.

WRITINGS

Het Nederlands polifonies lied in de zestiende eeuw (diss., U. of Leuven, 1929; Mechelen and Amsterdam, 1933)

'Notes sur Adrien Willaert', Bulletin de l'Institut historique belge de Rome, xv (1935), 107–17, 236

Oude Nederlandsche muziek (Brussels, 1937)

'La chapelle de Saint-Marc à Venise sous Adriaen Willaert (1527–1562)', Bulletin de l'Institut historique belge de Rome, xix (1938), 205–55

'Van Monteverdi tot Bach', Algemene muziekgeschiedenis, ed. A. Smijers (Utrecht, 1938, 4/1947), 169–244

Johann Sebastian Bach (Diest, 1943)

'The 16th-Century Parody Mass in the Netherlands', MQ, xxxvi (1950), 410–21

'Contribution à l'histoire de la musique belge de la Renaissance', RBM, ix (1955), 103–21

Belangrijke verzamelingen Nederlandse muziek uit de zestiende eeuw in Spanje (Brussels, 1957)

De Nederlandse muziek uit de vijftiende eeuw (Leuven, 1959)

'Erasmus en de muziek', Erasmus plechtig herdacht op 30 april 1969 (Brussels, 1969), 75–88

'Musical Structure and Performance Practice in Masses and Motets of Josquin and Obrecht', Josquin des Prez: New York 1971, 619–26

'Die Kirchenmusik der Niederländer', Geschichte der katholischen Kirchenmusik, ed. K.G. Fellerer, i (Kassel, 1972), 438–48

'De componist Philippus de Monte en de nieuwe uitgave van zijn werk', Academiae analecta, lxiv (1983), 25–39

'Philippus de Monte als Motettenkomponist', KJb, lxvi (1984), 49–58

EDITIONS

with J. Robijns: Pierre de la Rue: Drie missen, MMBel, viii (1960)

Nederlandse polyfonie uit Spaanse bronnen, MMBel, ix (1963)

Die Kunst der Niederländer, Mw, xxii (1962; Eng. trans., 1964) with others: Philippi de Monte opera: New Complete Edition (Leuven, 1975–88)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AMe

J. Coppens and M.-L. Stockman: 'Lenaerts, René', Bibliographia Academica [Katholieke U. of Leuven], x [1957–63] (1964), 417–18 [incl. list of pubns]

J. Robijns and others, ed.: Renaissance-Muziek 1400–1600: donum natalicium René Bernard Lenaerts (Leuven, 1969) [incl. J. Robijns: 'Professor Dr. René Bernard Lenaerts bij zijn 65ste verjaardag', 7–11; 'Bibliographie van Professor Dr. R.B. Lenaerts', 13–19]

H. Willaert: 'Lenaerts, René Bernard', Winkler Prins encyclopedie van Vlaanderen, ed. R.F. Lissens and others, iv (Brussels, 1974), 159–60

J. Robijns: 'In memoriam Mgr. René Lenaerts (26 oct. 1902 – 27 fev 1992)', Jb: Koninklijke Academiae voor Wetenschappen, Letteren en Schone Kunsten van België (1992), 320–26

GODELIEVE SPIESSENS/SYLVIE JANSSENS

L'Enclos [Lenclos, Lanclos, Lauclos, la Douardière], Henri de (b ?Touraine, 1592–3; d 1649). French lutenist and composer. Of minor gentry, he married Mlle de Raconis from a noble family from Orléans. He became skilled in arms and horsemanship as well as at music, and played the lute. As an officer he was attached to the household of the Duke of Elbeuf and later to that of the Marshal of S Luc. Following his conversion to the ranks of the freethinkers he soon came to scorn music. In 1632 he killed a nobleman of the royal household in a duel and was obliged to go into exile. Mersenne spoke highly of him as a lutenist and ranked him equal to the Gaultiers and Blancrocher. Ennemond and Denis Gautier were his friends and Denis composed Tombeau de L'Enclos in his memory. There are pieces by him in Lord Herbert of Cherbury's Lutebook (GB-Cfm) and in L. de Moy: Le petit bouquet de frise orientale (MS dated 1631, D-ROu). He also contributed to Suittes faciles pour une flute ou un violon et basse continue (Amsterdam, 1703). His daughter was Ninon de L'Enclos, celebrated leader of Parisian society, to whom he taught singing and the lute.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MersenneHU

T. Dart: 'Lord Herbert of Cherbury's Lute-Book', ML, xxxviii (1957), 136–48

T. Dart: 'Miss Mary Burwell's Instruction Book for the Lute', GSJ, xi (1958), 3–62

F. Lesure: 'Recherches sur les luthistes parisiens à l'époque de Louis XIII', Le luth et sa musique, ed. J. Jacquot (Paris, 2/1976), 209–23

D. Poulton: 'The Dolmetsch Library, Haslemere, MS II B I', The Consort, xxxv (1979), 327–41

JOËL DUGOT/DAVID LEDBETTER

L'Enclos, Ninon de. French singer and lutenist, daughter of HENRI DE L'ENCLOS.

Lendvai, Ernő (b Kaposvár, 6 Feb 1925; d Budapest, 31 Jan 1993). Hungarian musicologist. He studied the piano at the Liszt Academy, Budapest (1945–9). He was appointed director of the Szomrbathely Music School (1949) and the Győr Conservatory (1954) as well as professor at the Szeged Conservatory (1957); he also lectured on musical analysis at the Liszt Academy (1954–6 and from 1973). After serving as a music producer for Hungarian radio (1960–65) he concentrated on music research.

Lendvai was an outstanding Bartók scholar who through his radical methods and searching analyses transformed the previously accepted view of Bartók's style. His writings show a preoccupation with melodic, harmonic and formal structure and describe the synthesizing character of Bartók's music, in which the traditions of European art music and eastern folk music are assimilated. Defining the proportions of its construction, he based his analysis on the golden section, the proportionate relationship found in natural objects and used particularly in classical architecture. Lendvai's first papers (in Zenei szemle, xx, 1947–8), published while he was a student, were analyses of Bartók's Improvisations, Night Music and Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion, which he followed with a general study, 'Bevezetés a Bartók-művek elemzésébe', and a book on Bartók's style with detailed analyses of the Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion and Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta. He then turned to Bartók's stage works and Cantata profana and subsequently analysed nearly all Bartók's major works. In The Poetic World of Bartók (1971), intended for the general reader, Lendvai discussed the Two Portraits, Two Images, Four Orchestral Pieces, Dance Suite, Violin Concerto, Divertimento and the six string quartets. He also undertook some research into Kodály's compositions, and specialized in interpretative analysis; in 1967 he published a book on Toscanini's interpretations of Beethoven.

WRITINGS

'Bevezetés a Bartók-művek elemzésébe' [Introduction to the analysis of Bartók's works], ZT, iii (1955), 461–503; Fr. trans. in Bartók: sa vie, son oeuvre (Budapest, 1956, 2/1968), 88–136; Ger. trans. in Bartók: Weg und Werk (Budapest, 1957, 2/1972), 95–137

Bartók stílusa [Bartók's style] (Budapest, 1955)

'Bartók und die Zahl', Melos, xxvii (1960), 327–31

'A Kékszakállú herceg vára' [Prince Bluebeard's Castle], Magyar zene, i/1–6 (1960–61), 339–87

'Der wunderbare Mandarin', SMH, i (1961), 363–431

'Bartók pantomimja és táncjátéka' [Bartók's pantomime and ballet], ZT, x (1962), 69–187

'Duality and Synthesis in the Music of Béla Bartók', New Hungarian Quarterly, no.7 (1962), 91–114; enlarged in Module, Proportion, Symmetry, Rhythm (London, 1966), 174–93

Bartók's Dramaturgy: Stage Works and Cantata Profana (Budapest, 1964; Hung. orig., 1993)

'A műalkotás egysége Verdi Aidájában' [The unity of the composition in Verdi's Aida], Magyar zene, v (1964), 490–522; Ger. trans. in 'Verdis Formgeheimnisse', Studi verdiani: Venice 1966, 157–71

'Bartók und der goldene Schnitt', ÖMz, xxi (1966), 607–15

Toscanini és Beethoven (Budapest, 1967); Eng. trans. in SMH, viii (1966), 217–90

'Über die Formkonzeption Bartóks', SMH, xi (1969), 271–80

Bartók költői világa [The poetic world of Bartók] (Budapest, 1971)

Béla Bartók: an Analysis of his Music (London, 1971)

'Allegro barbaro', Mosonyi Mihály és Bartók Béla emlékére, ed. F. Bónis (Budapest, 1973), 257–78

Bartók és Kodály harmóniavilága [The harmonic world of Bartók and Kodály] (Budapest, 1975)

'Modalitás, atonalitás, funkcio', Kodály Zoltán emlékére, ed. F. Bónis (Budapest, 1977), 57–122

The Workshop of Bartók and Kodály (Budapest, 1983)

Verdi és a 20. század (Budapest, 1984)

Verdi and Wagner (Budapest, 1988)

'Sulla concezione formale in Bartók', Danubio: una civiltà musicale, ed. C. de Incontrare and A. Zanini (Trieste, 1993), 317–28

Symmetries of Music: an Introduction to Semantics of Music, ed. M. Szabó and M. Mohay (Kecskemét, 1993; Hung. orig., 1994)

MÁRTA PAPP

Lendvay, Kamilló (b Budapest, 28 Dec 1928). Hungarian composer. At the Budapest Academy of Music (1949–57) he studied composition with Viski and conducting with László Somogyi. He was musical director of the State Puppet Theatre (1960–66) and the Hungarian Army Ensemble (1966–8), and subsequently of the Capital Operetta Theatre (1972–4) after working there as conductor (from 1970). In 1973 he was appointed professor and head of theory at the Budapest Academy. He has received the Erkel (1962, 1964, 1978), Bartók-Pásztory (1989) and Kossuth (1998) prizes, and in 1996 named Outstanding Artist of the Hungarian Republic. Lendvay's output demonstrates an admirable assimilation of his earlier Bartók-influenced style and concepts of the Polish and Second Viennese Schools. The first works to adopt the latter were the Four Duos for flute and piano and the orchestral Quattro invocazioni of 1965. His sensitivity towards instrumental colour is particularly notable in the Concertino and in A csend harmóniája ('Harmony of Silence'), scored for orchestra and prepared piano. His use of the Renaissance crumhorn, his neo-Baroque cantata Jelentek ('Scenes', 1978–81) and the Chaconne, with its quotations of Bach, all recall the humanism of a lost age.

WORKS

(selective list)

Stage: A bűvös [The Magic Chair] (TV op, 1, F. Karinthy and G. Devecseri), 1972; A tisztességtudó utcalány [The Respectful Prostitute] (op, 1, Lendvay, after J.-P. Sartre), 1976–8

Orch, band: Mauthausen, 1958; Tragikus nyitány [Tragic Ov.], 1958; Concertino, wind, pf, hp, perc, 1959; 3 farsangi maszk [3 Carnival Masks], concert band, 1960; A rendíthetetlen ólomkatona [The Indomitable Tin Soldier] (H.C. Andersen), nar, orch, 1961; Vn Conc. [no.1], 1961–2; 4 invocazioni, 1965; Kifejezések [Expressions], str orch/11 str, 1974; Pezzo concertato, vc, orch, 1975; A csend harmóniája [Harmony of Silence], prep pf, orch, 1980; Festspiel Ov., concert band, 1984; Vn Conc. no.2, 1986; Chaconne, 1987–8; Conc. tpt, wind orch, 1990; Double Conc., vn, hpd, str, 1991; Conc., s sax, 12 female vv, orch, 1966; Rhapsody, 1997

Vocal: Kocsiút az éjszakában [A Ridge at Night] (E. Ady), A, ens, 1970; Pro liberate (Z. Kőháti), T, Bar, male chorus, orch, 1975; Jelentek [Scenes] (cant., T. Mann), S, B-Bar, 1978–81; Via crucis, SATB, 10 insts, 1988–9; Stabat mater, Mez, SATB, org, orch, 1992

Chbr and solo inst: Str Qt, 1962; 4 Duos, fl, pf, 1965; Disposizioni, hpd, 1975; Fifthmusic, vc, 1978–9; Senza sordina, tpt, pf, 1983; As you like it, 2 pf, 1984; 24 Duos, 2 vn, 1985; Conc. semplice, hpd, str, 1986; Respectfully yours, Mr Goodman, cl, 1988; 3 Movts, bn, pf, 1994

Principal publishers: Editio Musica Budapest, Akkord

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Kárpáti: 'Hungarian Composers Today: some Trends among Younger Composers', Tempo, no.88 (1969), 11–13, 40

M. Hollós, ed.: Az életmű fele: zeneszerzőkportrék beszélgetésekben [Half a life's work: portraits of composers in conversation] (Budapest, 1997)

RACHEL BECKLES WILLSON

Lenear. See LANIER family.

Lenepveu, Charles Ferdinand (b Rouen, 4 Oct 1840; d Paris, 16 Aug 1910). French composer. He abandoned a projected legal career in 1862 and entered Ambroise Thomas' composition class at the Conservatoire, where he won the Prix de Rome in 1865. His stage career began in 1867–8, when he won a competition organized by the Académie des Beaux-Arts for a comic opera. Lenepveu had to fight hard to hold the Opéra-Comique to a performance of the piece, Le Florentin, which finally received its première in 1874. Its comparative lack of success may have been due to lack of encouragement by the Opéra-Comique management: it enjoyed more success in French provincial theatres. Saint-Arroman detected the influence of Gounod, Verdi and Meyerbeer in both Le Florentin and the larger-scale Velléda (1882), after which Lenepveu turned to a more meditative, religious mode of self-expression. He seems to have been diffident about promoting his stage works – Velléda was performed at Covent Garden mainly through the efforts of Adelina Patti, its dedicatee.

Lenepveu taught harmony at the Paris Conservatoire from 1880 to 1894 and composition from 1894, and published Cent leçons d'harmonie (1896–8). He was made Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur in 1887, and elected to the Institute in 1896.

WORKS

printed works published in Paris unless otherwise stated

Stage: Le Florentin (oc, 3, J.-H. Vernoy de Saint-Georges), Paris, OC (Favart), 25 Feb 1874, vs (?1874); L'anniversaire (oc, 1, A. Bisson), unperf., vs (1876); Le retour de Jeanne (oc, 1, Bisson), unperf., vs (1881); Velléda (4, A. Challamel and J. Chantepie, after Chateaubriand: Les martyrs), London, CG, 4 July 1882, vs (London, 1883)

9 choral and orch works, incl.: 2 requiems, 1871, 1893; Scene from Hernani (V. Hugo), Act 5 (1881); Hymne funèbre et triomphale (Hugo), Rouen, 1889 (1895); Ode triomphale à Jeanne d'Arc (P. Allard), Rouen, 1892 (1895)

Other works for orch and for solo pf (1869–97)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. de Saint-Arroman: Charles Lenepveu: étude biographique (Paris, 1898) [orig. pubd as a series of articles in Le journal musical, iii (1898)]

H.R. Cohen, ed.: Les gravures musicales dans L'illustration (Quebec, 1982) [incl. picture of the mise en scène for Le Florentin at the Opéra-Comique, 1874]

JOHN WAGSTAFF/R

Léner Quartet. Hungarian string quartet. Its members all studied at the National Hungarian Royal Academy of Music in Budapest. Jenö Léner, the leader, Joseph Smilovits, the second violinist, and Sandor Roth, the viola player, were pupils of Jenő Hubay; Imre Hartman, the cellist, was a pupil of David Popper. At the outbreak of revolution in 1918 the four musicians, by this time members of the Budapest Opera orchestra, retired to a remote Hungarian village to study chamber music. A year later they made their début in Budapest. In 1920 they appeared in Vienna before an international gathering of musicians, among them Ravel, who invited them to Paris the following year. Within a few years they had established themselves throughout Europe and, after their New York début in 1929, in the USA, as one of the world's most distinguished ensembles. Their frequent recitals in London between 1922 and 1939 included complete performances of the Beethoven quartets, one of which formed part of the centenary celebrations in 1927, and a series illustrating the historical development of the string quartet. The quartet was disbanded in 1948.

Their playing was remarkable above all for rich and mellow tone-quality combined with an unusually homogeneous blend of the four instruments, finesse and beauty of phrasing, and immaculate ensemble. The extraordinary smoothness and finish of their performances were universally acknowledged; but there were critics who found them over-sophisticated at times – particularly in works demanding rugged strength. Their playing of Mozart won the most consistently high praise. Among their many recordings are the complete quartets of Beethoven, and works by Brahms, Debussy, Dvořák, Haydn, Mozart (including a famous recording of the Oboe Quartet with Leon Goossens), Ravel, Schubert, Schumann and Wolf. Works dedicated to them include Respighi's Quartetto dorico (1924), as well as a quartet by Eugene Goossens and a trio by Casella which, with other papers, were lost at the beginning of the war. Léner was the author of Technique of String Quartet Playing (London, 1935). The original ensemble dissolved in 1939 and, after a spell in South America, in 1942 Jenö Léner started a new group with László Steinhardt, Gábor Rejtö and Ralph Hirsch in the USA. The quartet failed to regain its former eminence and Léner's death in 1948 brought its end.

ROBERT PHILIP/TULLY POTTER

Leng, Alfonso (b Santiago, 11 Feb 1894; d Santiago, 11 Nov 1974). Chilean composer. In 1905 he enrolled as a piano student at the Santiago National Conservatory, but he remained there for less than a year. He then joined a group of self-taught musicians of the same generation, among them García-Guerrero, Lavin, Bisquertt and Cotapos, and together they began studying music. During this time he was invited to join Los Diez, a group of outstanding writers, painters and musicians. Concurrently he studied dentistry at the University of Chile, graduating in 1910, and subsequently established himself as an odontologist of international repute. His Piano Preludes (completed 1906) pointed to the development of a style deeply rooted in German late Romanticism, a style which reached a high level of individuality and maturity in the Doloras for piano (1914) and in La muerte de Alsino (1920). Throughout his life he wrote a number of songs with Spanish, German and French texts, developing a freer harmonic idiom leading to atonality, as in the piano sonatas of 1950 and 1973. He was awarded the National Arts Prize in 1957.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: La muerte de Alsino, sym. poem, 1920; Canto de invierno, 1933; Fantasia, pf, orch, 1936

Vocal: Ps lxxvii, chorus, orch, 1967; *c*20 songs (J.W. von Goethe, P. Verlaine, R.M. Rilke and others)

Pf: Preludes, completed 1906; 5 doloras, 1914; 2 sonatas, 1950, 1973

Principal publisher: Instituto de Extensión Musical

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Salas Viú: La creación musical en Chile, 1900–1951 (Santiago, 1952)

Compositores de América/Composers of the Americas, ed. Pan American Union, xv (Washington DC, 1955–72)

RMC, no.98 (1966) [Leng issue]

R. Escobas and R. Yrarrázaval: Música compuesta en Chile (Santiago, 1969)

S. Claro and J. Urrutia Blondel: Historia de la música en Chile (Santiago, 1973)

JUAN A. ORREGO-SALAS

Lengnick. English firm of music publishers. It was founded in 1893 by Alfred Lengnick (d 1904) in London. Lengnick had been appointed the British agent for the Simrock catalogue, and the company expanded quickly. After his death the company was acquired by Schott and was incorporated as a limited company in 1924; during the 1930s it was acquired by Bernard de Nevers. Although it was sole British agent for several European publishers, its main success lay with the promotion of the Simrock catalogue, especially the works of Brahms and Dvořák. But it did maintain its own publishing programme, first specializing in educational music and later expanding to include symphonic and chamber works by contemporary British composers, including Alwyn, Arnold, Maconchy, Reizenstein, Rubbra, Simpson and Wordsworth. Alfred Lengnick & Co. eventually bought the complete Simrock catalogue up to and including 1954. In 1964 it moved to South Croydon. It was acquired in 1989 by Filmtrax, which purchased the copyrights of University College Cardiff Press. Complete Music Ltd purchased Lengnick in 1991; by the late 1990s the firm was based in Beaconsfield. Other composers published by Lengnick include Hoddinott, George Newson, Adam Gorb and Richard Dubugnon.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

'Alfred Lengnick & Co', MO, xxxv (1911–12), 805–7

ALAN POPE

Leningrad. See ST PETERSBURG.

Lenja, Lotte. See LENYA, LOTTE.

Lenners, Claude (b Luxembourg, 11 May 1956). Luxembourg composer. After pursuing courses in computing, he studied music in Luxembourg (with Alexander Müllenbach) and Strasbourg. In 1989 he won an award from the Académie de France which enabled him to work at the Villa Médicis in Rome until 1991. While there, he completed his octet Durch kühle Nacht which won the Prix Henri Dutilleux in 1990. In 1992 he won a prize at the Darmstadt Summer Course. In 1993 he began teaching composition and music analysis at the Luxembourg Conservatory and, from 1999, also acoustic and computer music. His works display a notable sensitivity to musical colour, and are mostly written for chamber ensembles or for orchestra. Euphonia I for 16 instruments (string quartet, wind quartet, brass quartet and a 'Bartók Quartet' of two pianos and two percussionists) was given its first performance by the Ensemble InterContemporain at IRCAM in 1996. Lenners also had an interest in jazz and composed works for small jazz groups. In 1999 he founded the Luxembourg association 'Pyramide' for electro-acoustic music.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Pentagramma, ob, cl, bn, sax, perc, hp, kbds, 2 str orch, 1985; Songs between Star-Light and Earth-Night (L. Welch), Mez, orch, 1988; Nachtschattengesänge, 1990; Das Buch der Unruhe, 1997; Unter fremden Sternen, vc, orch (1998); Paeton, pf, str (1999)

Chbr and solo inst: Dialog I, 2 perc, 1984; Dialog II, trbn, perc, 1984; Les insectes (L. Schlechter), S, cl, gui, 1984; Brush & Trunks, S, 4 cl, perc, 1986; Melisma, sax qt, 1986; Frammenti fuggitive, s sax, 2 gui, 1988; Quaderno romano, fl, pf (1988–96); Pulsations, perc qt, 1989; Durch kühle Nacht, fl, ob, cl, hn, perc, vn, va, vc, 1990; Zenit, fl, ob, s sax, 1990; Hinter der Blitzen rot, str trio, 1991; Alba, pf, 1992; Dialog III, pic, glock, 1992; Monotaurus, a sax, 1992; Amalagama, wind qnt, 1993; Found in a Bottle, cl, hn, bn, str qnt, 1994; Langue de feu, S, cl, db, pf, 2 perc, 1994; Tête-à-tête I, fl, vn, 1994; Gruppenlied mit Dame, S, fl, cl, gui, db, pf, 2 perc, 1995; Klagelied, S, fl, cl, gui, pf, db, vib, perc, 1995; Vol de nuit, fl, cl, db, pf, perc, 1995; Dialog V, cl, perc, 1996; Euphonia I, 16 insts, 1995; Hetaera Esmeralda, S, 2 hp, perc (1997); Octopus, perc (1997); Apollo, vn solo (1999); works for jazz trio or qt

Principal publishers: Lemoine, Leduc

LOLL WEBER

Lennon, John (Winston) [John Winston Ono] (b Liverpool, 9 Oct 1940; d New York, 8 Dec 1980). English pop and rock singer, guitarist, pianist and songwriter and member of the BEATLES. He was abandoned as a child by his father and then his mother, and while in his teens began playing the guitar. His first group the Quarry Men co-opted another local boy, Paul McCartney, developed into the Beatles and became the most successful pop act of all time. By temperament their most restless member, Lennon launched his solo career even before the Beatles' dissolution in 1970. He met his future wife, the Japanese artist Yoko Ono, in 1966, at the height of the group's success; inspired by her avant-garde leanings, the couple made experimental recordings such as Two Virgins (Apple, 1968). By 1969 Lennon had an ad hoc group of his own, the Plastic Ono Band, whose singles included the anthemic anti-war chant Give Peace a Chance and Cold Turkey, a harrowing depiction of his fight with heroin addiction (both Apple, 1969). A series of media stunts, most notably the 'bed-in for peace', confirmed his taste for high-profile protest, yet his music was often stark and characterized by self-lacerating introspection. His second album of post-Beatles songs, Imagine (Apple, 1971), revisited the blues influenced rock and roll of his youth, but is best known for the melodic craftsmanship of its idealistic title track. Lennon moved to New York in 1971, where his erratic enthusiasms led his work through left-wing activism, mystical passivity and Fifties nostalgia. A short estrangement from Ono in 1973 inspired his fraught but compelling album Walls & Bridges (Apple, 1974), the prelude to a five-year spell of domestic seclusion. His return to public life in 1980 was marked by a new album, Double Fantasy (Geffen), but was curtailed by his assassination outside his home. While little of Lennon's solo music has equalled that of the Beatles in mass appeal, the later recordings sealed his enduring reputation for wit, artistic honesty and a passionate engagement with world affairs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Wenner: Lennon Remembers (New York, 1972)
R. Coleman: John Lennon (London, 1984)
J. Wiener: Come Together: John Lennon in his Time (New York, 1984)
A. Goldman: The Lives of John Lennon (New York, 1988)
J. Robertson: The Art and Music of John Lennon (London, 1990)
P. Du Noyer: We All Shine On: John Lennon Songs 1970–1980 (London, 1997)

PAUL DU NOYER

Lennon, John Anthony (b Greensboro, NC, 14 Jan 1950). American composer. He studied at the University of San Francisco (BA 1972) and the University of Michigan (MM 1975, DMA 1978), where his composition teachers included William Albright, Eugene Kurtz, George Wilson and Leslie Bassett. He has taught at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville (1977–94), and Emory University (1994–). Among his awards are the Prix de Rome (1980), a Guggenheim Fellowship (1981), a Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst residency (1986) and grants from Meet the Composer (1982–7) and the Fromm Foundation (1986). His works have been commissioned by the Boston Symphony Players, the Pittsburgh SO, the Kronos Quartet and the Mannes Trio.

Lennon's music exhibits the influence of both 19th-century Romanticism and French Impressionism in its lyricism and sensitivity to atmosphere and timbre. Although rooted in tonality, his work eschews the overt use of functional harmony. Voices (1981), recorded by the Kronos Quartet, features pitch repetition, pedal points and melodic 5ths as points of tonal reference; melodic lines, however, are rarely diatonic, employing considerable chromaticism and dissonance.

WORKS

Orch: Metapictures, chbr orch, 1981; Sym. Rhapsody, conc., a sax, orch, 1984; Spectra, 1986; Far from These Things, chbr orch, 1987; Suite of Fables, nar, orch, 1990; Zingari, gui, orch, 1991; Elegy, hp, str, 1996; Sonatina, 1997

Chbr and solo inst: Distances within Me, a sax, pf, 1979; Death Angel, pf, 1980; Another's Fandango, gui, 1981; Voices, str qt, 1981; 6 Aphorisms, gui, 1985; Echolalia, fl, 1985; Ballade Belliss, vn, pf, 1987; Sirens, pf trio, 1992; Spiderdance, cl, pf, 1995; Aeterna, s sax, 1996; Gigolo, gui, 1996; Thirteen, gui, 1996; Sonatina, gui, 1997

Vocal: Colors where the Moon Never Could (Lennon), S, vn, va, vc, cel, perc, 1975; Ghostfires (J. Joyce), Mez, chbr ens, 1983; 7 Translations (M. Tatsuji, T. Shigeji, Ausonius, K. Hakushu, Alcuin of York, anon. trans. H. Waddell, G. Bownas, A. Thwaite), S, chbr ens, 1988; Cor prudentis, SATB, 1995

Principal publishers: Peters, E.C. Schirmer

JAMES CHUTE

Leno, Antonio [Antonius] de. See ANTONIUS DE LENO.

Le Noble. See SCHWARTZENBERG, JEAN-LOUIS.

Lenormand, René (b Elbeuf, 5 Aug 1846; d Paris, 3 Dec 1932). French composer. The son of an industrialist, he studied the rudiments of music with his mother and soon showed a gift for composition. To meet his father's wishes he underwent training in business, but abandoned it in 1868 to devote himself to music and went to Paris to work with Berthold Damcke, the intimate friend of Berlioz. His first works, published from 1869 onwards, were well received and performed under the aegis of the Société Nationale de Musique, in the foundation of which in 1871 he played a part. Dividing his time between composition and teaching, Lenormand founded and directed the Société de Musique d'Ensemble (1885) and, even more importantly, the Lied en Tous Pays (1907). The purpose of the latter society was to make modern mélodies and lieder better known in France and abroad by way of concerts in which Lenormand also took part, giving spoken introductions and accompanying the singers on the piano.

Lenormand composed in a wide variety of genres but excelled in the mélodie, where he paid equal attention to melodic technique and to prosody and exercised the greatest care in choosing poems (verse or prose) to set. Unusually for a French composer, until about 1911 he showed the influence of the German lied, but from 1909 onwards a taste for the East and Africa led him to write a considerable number of mélodies marked by exoticism. Taking texts by Arab, Persian, Chinese and Indian poets, he steeped himself in the formal, rhythmic and modal characteristics of the folk music of each of these cultures and created an imaginary folk music, without direct quotation, in a very personal style. Although this area of his output, in particular, has been neglected, Lenormand was one of the most engaging exponents of the French mélodie.

He was the father of the playwright Henri René Lenormand.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Le cachet rouge (drame lyrique, 2, H.R. Lenormand, after A. de Vigny), op.53, *c*1900, Le Havre, 1925; La nuit de Juillet (mimodrame, 1, P. Veber), op.47, 1892, Paris, 1926

Inst: Sonata, c, op.4, vn, pf (1874); Sonata, F, op.6, vc, pf (1875); Pf Trio, op.30 (1882); Au courant de la plume, op.15, pf, *c*1887; Valses sérieuses, op.42, pf (1895); Le voyage imaginaire, op.41, orch, 1895; Pf Conc., pf, orch, *c*1900; Nouvelles valses sérieuses, pf: op.82 (1907), op.83 (1911); Pièces exotiques, op.92, pf (1911); Rythmes à danser, pf, op.110 (1925); De ci, de là, op.109, pf, *c*1925; Pf Qnt, op.112, *c*1925

Songs (1v, pf): 6 mélodies, op.1 (G. de Nerval, A. Brizeux, De la Renaudière), 1867; 15 mélodies, op.14, *c*1875; Les fleurs du mal (C. Baudelaire), op.33, (1891); 4 mélodies (P. Veber), op.36 (1891); Mélodies tristes (A. le Braz, P. Verlaine, E. Beaufils, Lenormand), op.39 (1893); 7 mélodies (E. Fouinet, A. Oeris, E. Beaufils, H.F. Amiel), op.44 (1896); 4 mélodies (H.R. Lenormand), op.66 (1901); Mélodies exotiques, op.90 (1909); Soleil, op.101, 102, 103 (Georgian, Daghestan and Arab texts), opp.101–3 (1923); Instants (H. Spiess), op.107 (1931); 15 rubaiyat (O. Khayyam), op.117 (1926); Couleurs (Serb, Arab, Berber and African texts), opp.118–19, 121, 123 (1931)

Other vocal: 3 choruses, op.32, children's chorus, pf, *c*1881; Chansons d'étudiants, op.80, S, T, Bar, male chorus ad lib (1910); 3 Duos (P. Verlaine, F. Gregh, Lenormand), op.77, *c*1905

Principal publishers: Hamelle, Heugel, Senart

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (G. Ferchault)
R. Lenormand: Etude sur l'harmonie (Paris, 1913)
H. Woollett: Un mélodiste français: René Lenormand (Paris, 1932)

JACQUES TCHAMKERTEN

Lenot, Jacques (b Saint-Jean d'Angély, 29 Aug 1945). French composer. Trained as a school teacher, a profession to which he belonged for ten years, he participated in the 1966 Darmstadt summer courses, attending lectures given by Stockhausen, Ligeti and Kagel. Messiaen was instrumental in arranging the premières of one of his works at the 1967 Royan Festival. After a brief visit to Rome, during which he studied with Bussotti, he gave up teaching in order to devote his time exclusively to composition. In 1974, on Donatoni's invitation, he attended the courses of the Accademia Chigiana in Siena. In 1997 he settled near the Strait of Dover in the village of Groffliers.

As a composer, Lenot has remained outside of prominent contemporary musical movements and groups. The elegance of his music often derives from personal experience, such as memories of landscapes, and from other arts (i.e. cinema, literature); many of his works bear descriptive titles. Influenced by serialism (after hearing his Symphony (1975–6) Fleuret wrote that he was 'the natural heir of Boulez and Bussotti'), Lenot's style is notable for its diversity of sound organizations, its contrasts and its attention to timbre. His instrumental economy sometimes produces the sense of a 'secretly elegiac mood' (M. Fleuret), which, like the subtle shifts of his echoic writing, is particularly evident in his chamber music (Paysages avec figures absentes, 1994). His rigorous compositional manner is sustained by his concern with precision and solid formal organization. Although he has composed in many genres, he has concentrated particularly on works for the piano (Etudes, 1985–6; Preludes, 1991–6) and the organ (Trois livres, 1991–5).

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Avventi (ballet), 1973, rev. 1974; Un déchaînement si prolongé de la grâce (caprice, 3 tableaux, J.-P. Derrien), 12 solo vv, str qt, 1986, Paris, 1986: 1 Le prologue de la grâce, 2 Trois Liebesliederwalzer, 3 Un enchaînement si prolongé de la grâce, 4 A propos de la grâce, 5 Le soliloque de la grâce
Orch: Diaphanéis, 55 str, 1966; Figurations, va, vn, vc, orch, 1970; Pf Conc. no.1, 1975; Sinfonia, 1975–6; Epitaphe (Allégorie d'exil no.2), wind, perc, 1977; Epilogue (Allégorie d'exil no.10), 1978; Pour mémoire III, str, 1980; Dans le tumulte des flots II, vn, 2 str trios, ens, 1982; Nuit d'été, 5 interludes, vc, orch, 1984; Utopia, 1985; In lieblicher Bläue . . ., 1987; Au bord des fleuves de Babylone, org, orch, 1992–3; Intermezzo, hn, orch, 1995; Hommage à Schubert, 1996; Al ol, 1998; La vie éternelle rayonne sur les feuilles du jardin, vc, orch, 1998–9
Vocal: 5 sonnets (L. Labbé), S, Ct, 7 insts, 1971–3; Karl exultate, S, orch, 1974; Allégories d'exil (G. Trakl), S, fl, cl, vn/va, vc, 1975; Sablier noir (C. Vachon), 17 songs, Mez, pf, 1979; Pour mémoire II (F. Farel), S, orch, 1980; D'autres Belvédères (Lenot), SATB, pf, orch, 1981; Dal dolce pianto al dolorose riso (Michel-Ange), Bar, pf, 1981–91; L'ere du vaisseau (J.-M. Buffarot), mixed chorus, orch, 1981; Stabat mater, 2 Ct, T, Bar, B, ens, 1983; Lied 5b, S, hn, str qt, pf, 1985–96; Celui qui est couronné . . . (Derrien), Ct, 24 insts, 1987; Le tombeau de Henri Ledroit (J. de La Fontaine), S, solo vv, mixed chorus, ob d'amore, vc, org, 18 insts, 1988; Incidents lyriques (G. Pesson), 1v, a fl, A-cl, vn, va, vc, 1992
Chbr: Barbelés intérieurs, 2 pf, wind ens, perc, 1968; Immer, trio pour 7 claviers, 2 pf, glock, xyl, vib, mar, cloches, 1972; Per Versant II, vc, org, 11 str, 1972; Et incarnatus est, fl, ob, cl, 15 insts, 1974; Sette Framenti, quatuor à cordes, 1976; Comme au loin, 10 wind insts, 1976–7; Dolcezze ignote all'estasi (Allégorie d'exil no.4), 26 insts, 1977; Exergue (Allégorie d'exil no.1), vc, 17 insts, 1977; Un grand principe de violence commandait à nos moeurs, 16 insts, 1980; A l'aube, le rivage (from L'esprit des lieux, bk II), fl, eng hn, cl, bn, 2 hn, trbn, 1981; Bientôt le soleil retrouvera ses antiques disciples (from L'esprit des lieux, bk I), hp, 16 insts, 1981; Célébration (Allégorie d'exil no.6), str trio, 1978, rev. 1984; Comme de ce pur instant de mer qui précède la brise, 3 cl, 1981 [from L'esprit des lieux, bk II]; Im fröhlichen Ton, 12 vc, 1982–3, rev. 1990; Utopia glossa quinta, a fl, A-cl, vn, va, pf, 1982; Lied 2 'Dryades et Pan', vc, pf, 1985 [after K. Szymanowski]; Lied 3 'Ruhe, meine Seele', cl, vc, pf, 1985 [after R. Strauss]; Lied 4 'Aiguillettes en ariettes', fl, vn, ob, bn, 1985 [after M. Lambert]; Lied 5 'Soave sia il vento', ob, hn, str sextet, pf, 1985 [after W.A. Mozart]; Conc., 13 insts, 1987; Lied 9 'L'Archange', cl, 9 insts, 1987; Aux rives ultérieures, vn, 10 insts, 1988; Trio, hn, vc, pf, 1989; Livre de viole 'Nous allons, mal rêveur, dans le bague des fables', 4 viols, 1990; Maurice Fleuret: In Memoriam, org, 8 wind insts, 1990; Paysage avec figures absentes, fl, cl, pf, vn, vc, 1994; 3 Pieces, va, pf, 1995; Distant Voices, s sax, pf, 1996; In Lovely Blueness, vc, pf, 1996; Le sylphe, fl, hn, hp, 1997; Wie aus der Ferne, vc, 11 insts, 1998; Quasi sospeso, pf trio, 1998; Str Qt no.1, 1998; Vogel als Prophet, a fl, cl, vib, hn, hp, 1998; La nuit venue, fl, hp, 1999
Solo inst: Beau calme nu, fl, 1973; E anela l'alba, cl, 1974; Piangendo (Allégorie d'exil no.3), pf, 1977, rev. 1978; Enclaves, vc, 1978; D'obscures étoiles, pf, 1978; Sonata no.2, pf, 1978; Sonata no.3, pf, 1979; Sonata no.4, pf, 1980; L'ange au sourire, bn, 1981; Livre d'orgue no.1, 1982–3; Utopia glossa quarta, b fl, 1982; 12 études, pf, 1985–6; Cir(c)é, ob d'amour, 1986; De la mélancolie, va, 1987; Preludes I, pf, 1991–6; Livre d'orgue no.2, 1993; Preludes II, pf, 1996

Principal publishers: Amphion, Ricordi, Salabert, Suvini Zerboni

Principal recording companies: Accord, Adda, Harmonia Mundi, Salabert

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Gueit: 'Un compositeur français d'aujourd'hui: Jacques Lenot', La musique française contemporaine, Revue internationale de musique française, no.30 (1989), 79–92 [incl. work-list]
R. Fleuret: '"Symphonie": allégories d'exil no.4', Chroniques pour la musique d'aujourd'hui (Paris, 1992), 163–7

PIERRE MICHEL

Lenox. Town in Massachusetts, USA, site of the annual BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL. The Lenox Arts Center, a laboratory for experimental music-theatre, was founded there in 1971. See also TANGLEWOOD.

Lentando (It.: 'becoming slower'). See RALLENTANDO. See also under TEMPO AND EXPRESSION MARKS.

Lento (It.: 'slow'). One of the earliest tempo marks to be used in music. Mentioned in passing by Zarlino ('movimenti tardi e lenti'), it was used by Praetorius (Polyhymnia caduceatrix, 1619; Puericinium, 1621), Thomas Selle (1636) and Schütz. Praetorius (1619) gave the equation lento vel adagio: tardè: mit langsamen Tact, and in Syntagma musicum, iii (2/1619/R) equated adagio: largo: lento: langsam. The word never achieved the same popularity as adagio, largo and grave; but in French music from Lully onwards it became one of the major tempo marks in its adverbial French form lentement. Sans lenteur was a particular favourite of François Couperin. Rousseau (1768) gave the French adjective lent and its adverb lentement as being the same as the Italian largo, which he considered the slowest of all tempos; but there is no evidence that his opinion was generally held and he may well simply have been avoiding the dangers of translation by cognate. In the Polonaise of his B minor orchestral suite J.S. Bach marked lentement in the violin part but moderato e staccato in the flute part: even if this is an oversight it strongly suggests that he thought of lentement and moderato in the same way.

For bibliography see TEMPO AND EXPRESSION MARKS.

DAVID FALLOWS

Lenton, John (? bap. London, 4 March 1657; d London, May 1719). English violinist, singer and composer. He was possibly the John Linton baptized on 4 March 1657 at St Andrew's, Holborn, and the John Leciton who married Judeth How, possibly a daughter of William Howes, on 19 February 1673 at St George's Chapel, Windsor. He was sworn into a place in the Twenty-Four Violins on 2 August 1681, and retained it under James II and subsequent monarchs. His suites to celebrate William III's return to London (?1697) and the New Year 1699 show that he contributed to the court orchestral repertory. He was sworn in as a Gentleman Extraordinary of the Chapel Royal on 10 November 1685, and eventually became Groom of the Vestry in 1708. However, he probably spent most of his time after 1688 in the theatre rather than at court. He wrote at least 12 suites for plays produced between 1682 and 1705, mostly for Betterton's company at Lincoln's Inn Fields.

Lenton seems to have turned in later life to writing, editing and publishing. A Consort of Musick of Three Parts (1692) and its sequel (1697) were a joint venture with Thomas Tollett. The Gentleman's Diversion (1693), known from a single, incomplete copy (GB-CDp), seems to be the earliest extant violin tutor; Lenton must have played regularly with Henry Purcell for some years, so the rules that it gives for holding the violin, bowing, fingering and ornamentation have a special interest. Most of the book is taken up with duets 'made purposely upon this occasion' by the author and 14 of his contemporaries, including 'Mr. P' [?Purcell]. He engraved part of it himself and probably acted as publisher. He also 'carefully Corrected' Wit and Mirth, iv (London, 1706) and performed the same service for The Dancing-Master (London, 1710). Lenton's music deserves more attention than it has received; his theatre suites are well written, with lively tunes and some passages of expressive harmony, though he lacks Purcell's contrapuntal skill. Some suites probably have missing viola parts.

WORKS

STAGE

incidental music for plays; performed at London, Lincoln's Inn Fields, unless otherwise stated, for sources see Price, unless otherwise stated

The Royalist (T. D'Urfey), a 3, Dorset Garden, 1682, US-NH
Venice Preserv'd (T. Otway), a 4, revival *c*1696, *GB-Lbl
Heroic Love (G. Granville), a 3–5, 1698
The Pretenders (T. Dilke), a 3, a 4, 1698
The Fate of Capua (T. Southerne), a 3, a 4, 1700
The Ambitious Stepmother (N. Rowe), a 4, 1700
Tamerlane (Rowe), a 4, 1701
The Royal Captive, a 3, *c*1702
The Fair Penitent (Rowe), a 4, 1703
Abra-Mule (J. Trapp), a 4, 1704
Liberty Asserted (J. Dennis), a 4, 1704
The Gamester (S. Centlivre), a 4, 1705
Suite, a 3, US-NH
Suite, vn pt, *GB-Lbl

OTHER WORKS

A Consort of Musick of 3 Parts (London, 1692), with T. Tollett, inc. (b pt only)
A 3 Part Consort of New Musick (London, 1697, 2/1699), with Tollett, inc. (tr pt only) [? as Les Trios pour toutes sortes d'instruments (Amsterdam, 1699–1700)]
Tunes played before the King at his Returne, ?1697, vn pt, GB-Lbl
Instrumental Musick for New Yeares Day, 1699, vn pt, see Lubrano
5 pieces, vn, bc, 4 pieces, 2 vn, in The Gentleman's Diversion
Suite, d, a 2, Cfm; Suite, B♭, vn pt, Lbl; Round O Gloucester, g, a 2, Lcm; air, B♭, a 3, US-NYp; Hunmanby, air, vn, GB-Lbl; 2 pieces, vn, 1693[5]
11 songs and catches, 1685[4], 1685[5], 1685[7], The Catch Club or Merry Companions (London, 1720), Lbl, see Day and Murrie
Awake, fair Venus, dialogue, *Lbl

THEORETICAL WORKS

The Gentleman's Diversion, or the Violin Explained (London, 1693, 2/1702 as The Useful Instructor on the Violin) [incl. 5 pieces, vn, bc and 4 pieces, 2vn]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AshbeeR, i, ii, v, viii; BDA; BDECM; HawkinsH
C.L. Day and E.B. Murrie: English Song-Books 1651–1702 (London, 1940)
C.A. Price: Music in the Restoration Theatre (Ann Arbor, 1979)
M. Boyd and J. Rayson: 'The Gentleman's Diversion: John Lenton and the first Violin Tutor', EMc, x (1982), 329–32
C. Sharpe: A Re-Evaluation of English Violin Tutors Published in the Late 17th and Early 18th Centuries (thesis, U. of Birmingham, 1991)
J. and J. Lubrano: Rare Printed and Manuscript Music, catalogue 46 (Great Barrington, MA, 1993)
P. Holman: Four and Twenty Fiddlers: the Violin at the English Court 1540–1690 (Oxford, 1993, 2/1995)

PETER HOLMAN

Lentz, Daniel K(irkland) (b Latrobe, PA,10 March 1942). American composer. He studied music and philosophy at St Vincent College (BA 1962), music history and composition at Ohio University (MFA 1965) and composition with Arthur Berger, Lucier and Shapero at Brandeis University (1965–7); as a composition fellow at the Berkshire Music Center (1966) he worked with Sessions and Rochberg. From 1966 to 1968 Lentz was visiting lecturer in composition at the University of California, Santa Barbara, and was a Fulbright fellow in electronic music (the first of its kind) in Stockholm in 1967–8. In 1991 he joined the staff at Arizona State University West. In addition to composing, recording and teaching, he has toured regularly as a solo performer and has founded and directed several ensembles. His numerous honours include First Prize at the Gaudeamus International Composers' Competition in the Netherlands (1972); awards from the University of California at Berkeley and from Arizona State, Brandeis and Brown universities; several NEA grants and an award from the Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst to work in Berlin (1979–80). He has received numerous commissions.

During the 1970s and early 80s Lentz worked primarily with his own ensembles, such as the California Time Machine, the San Andreas Fault and the Daniel Lentz group. His first groups performed highly theatrical, multimedia and conceptual music; with these groups he developed techniques for live multi-track recording. Compositions for his later groups often make extensive use of synthesizers, computers and sound technology. Works composed since the late 1980s, particularly An American in LA, WolfMASS and Apologetica, contain a more elaborate, expressive style of writing for voices, chamber ensembles and orchestra. His use of technology is deeply interwoven with his compositional structures, treatment of texts and conceptions of performance. In works such as Missa Umbrarum and The Crack in the Bell the text is reduced and fragmented – sometimes to the level of phonemes – and then repeated and layered with each new section. The composer has described this procedure as 'spiral form' (see Hitchcock). In other works Lentz employs a cascading echo system and electronic delay and replay devices aimed at creating sonic shadows or, in the case of Zeitghosts, 'digital ghosts'. His chosen texts are often darkly comic or spiritually exalted. His music evolves through a myriad of tensions, oppositions and soaring changes. In The Crack in the Bell and WolfMASS, the use of electronic delays, layering and echoing produces a colour to tones that subtly shift and shimmer. Lentz here employs multiple rhythms that alter rapidly bar by bar; this creates a sense of heightened rhythmic tension. WolfMASS, which incorporates traditional American melodies in the context of a Latin Mass, is also slyly humorous. In later works such as Apologetica and Temple of Lament the themes are more sombre and searching; in the latter work portamento evokes a sense of longing, while the beauty of its sound suggests redemption.

WORKS

Theatre and multimedia pieces: Ecumenical Council, 1965; Gospel Meeting, 1965; A Piano: Piece, 1965; Paul and Judy Meet Startrek, 1966; Paul and Judy Meet the Time Tunnel, 1966; Hi-yo Paint, 1968; Air Meal Spatial Delivery, conceptual piece, 1969; Work of Crow, 1970

Orch: 10 Minus 30 Minutes, str, 1970; Topanga Tango, chbr orch, 1985; An American in LA, 1989; Apache Wine, chbr orch, 1989

Pfmrs, echo delay: Canon and Fugue (Canon and Fugle), 1971; King Speech Songs, 1972; You can't see the forest ... Music, 1972; Missa umbrarum, 1973; Song(s) of the Sirens (Les sirènes), 1973; 3 Pretty Madrigals, 1976; Dancing on the Sun, 1980; Music by Candlelight (Love and Death), 1980; Uitoto, 1980; Is it Love, 1984; Bacchus, 1985

Vocal: I, a Double Conc. (Senescence sonorum), amp body sounds, chorus, orch, 1970; Fermentation Notebooks: 1 Kissing Song, 2 Rising Song, 3 Drinking Song, 28–48 unacc. vv, no.3 with wine glasses, 1972; O-Ke-Wa (N. American Eclipse), 12 solo vv, bells, rasps, drums, 1974; Sun Tropes, 7 solo vv, recs, kalimbas, 1975; Composition in Contrary and Parallel Motion, 16 solo vv, perc, 4 kbd, 1977; The Elysian Nymph, 8 solo vv, 8 mar, 1978; Wolf is Dead, vv, perc, 1979, rev. 6 solo vv, 8 kbd, 1982; On the Leopard Altar (Aztec Altar), 1v, 2 kbd, 1983; Wail Song, 1v, 5 solo vv, 8 kbd, 1983; 9 other works, 1965–76; Lullaby, vv, hp, 3 kbd, 1978; Adieu, vv, hp, 3 kbd, 1983; The Dream King, 1v, variable chbr ens, 1985; The Crack in the Bell, vv, 3 kbd, opt. chbr orch, 1986; La tache, 69, spkr, wine glass, 1986; WolfMASS, 1v, chorus, 3 MIDI kbd, 2 perc, 1987; Abalone, blues B, variable chbr ens, 1988; OrgasMASS, 1v, 3 MIDI kbd, elec wind inst, 1988; Cathedral of Ecstasy, 1v, elec wind inst, 3 MIDI kbd, 1990; Talk Radio, 1v, fl, cl, perc, kbd, vn, va, vc, tape, 1991; b.e. coming(s), S, Bar, cl, perc, 2 kbd, 1991–3; White BEE, 1v, tape, 1993; Apologetica, A, Ct, chorus, str orch, 2 perc, 2 MIDI kbd, 1996

Chbr: 3 Episodes from Exodus, org, perc, 1962; Pf Piece for Little Kids with Big Hands, 1962; 3 Haiku in 4 Movts, str qt, 1963; 8 Dialectics 8, 18 insts, 1964; Fünke (Rhapsody), fl, vib, drums, db, pf, 1964; Point Conception, 9 pf, 1981; Lascaux (Chumash Tombs), wine-glasses, 1984; Time's Trick, ens, 1984; Bacchus, wine-glasses, live multi-tracking, 1985; Wild Turkeys, 3 kbd, 1986; A California Family (Group Portrait), vn, pf, perc, tape, 1989; Blues for Mary J., fl, tpt, hn, va, vc, pf, 1996; Apparitions of JB, perc + digital perc, 1997; Zeitghosts, cl, s sax, 2 perc, kbd, 1997

El-ac: No Exit, tape, 1963; Montage Shift, tape, 1963; Eleison, tape, 1965; Medeighnia's, tape, 1965; Sermon: Saying Something with Music, str qt, elecs, 1966; The Last Concert, in 3: Love and Conception, Birth and Death, Fate and Death, pf, elecs, 1968; Pastime, str inst, elecs, 1969; Temple of Lament, S, 2 MIDI kbd, digital orch, 1996

Recorded interviews in US-NHoh

Principal publishers: Soundings, Source

Principal recording companies: EMI, Fontec, New Albion

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Wiley Hitchcock: Music in the United States: an Historical Introduction (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1969, 3/1988)
D. Cope: New Directions in Music (Dubuque, IA, 1971, 3/1981), 65
D. Lentz: 'Music Lib', Soundings [Berkeley], nos.3–4 (1972), 24–35
G. Eister: 'Dan'l Lentz: Words and Music', Soundings [Berkeley], no.10 (1976), pt 4
J. Dilibeto: 'Daniel Lentz', Down Beat, lii/6 (1985), 38–9
J. Schaefer: New Sounds: a Listener's Guide to New Music (New York, 1987)
G. Smith and N.W. Smith: New Voices: American Composers Talk about their Music (Portland, OR, 1995)

ARTHUR J. SABATINI

Lentz, Johannes Nicolaas [Johann Nicolaus] (b Gau-Bickelheim, nr Bad Kreuznach, 1719/20; d Rotterdam, 31 Jan 1782). Dutch composer of German birth. The first known record of him is in Rotterdam in 1749, the year of his marriage. He was a wine merchant, but was closely associated with musical circles in Rotterdam. One of his daughters married the violinist Cornelis Antoni Steger, a leading figure in the city's cultural life. Lentz was buried in Antwerp. His works are in a light-textured, pre-Classical style full of Empfindsamkeit.

WORKS

Concerto, hpd, 2 vn, va, vc, with Sonata, vn, obbl hpd (Amsterdam and Rotterdam, 1753), hpd pt only survives

II. concerti, B♭, C, obbl hpd, 3 vn, va, vc (Rotterdam, n.d.)

THIEMO WIND

Lenya [Lenja], Lotte [Blamauer, Karoline Wilhelmine] (b Vienna, 18 Oct 1898; d New York, 27 Nov 1981). American singing actress of Austrian birth. After studying dance in Zürich (1914–20) she moved to Berlin to embark on a dancing career. Two years later she turned to the spoken theatre, where by the end of the decade she had established a brilliant reputation in plays by, among others, Wedekind, Marieluise Fleisser and, above all, Brecht and his outstanding musical collaborator, Kurt Weill. Her marriage to Weill in 1926 was followed by a striking appearance at the 1927 Baden-Baden Festival in his and Brecht's one-act 'Songspiel' Mahagonny. With her creation of Jenny in Die Dreigroschenoper (1928, Berlin) and her subsequent recordings and film version of that role, her international reputation was assured. While continuing a noteworthy career as an actress, she sang the part of Jenny in the Berlin version of Weill's Aufstieg und Fall der Stadt Mahagonny (with new material specially composed for her) and created three further roles in works by Weill: Anna I in the ballet chanté Die sieben Todsünden (1933, Paris), Miriam in The Eternal Road (1937) and the Duchess in The Firebrand of Florence (1945), the latter two receiving their premières in New York where the couple had emigrated in 1935.

Soon after Weill's death in 1950 Lenya began to devote much of her time to the revival of some of his important works from the German years, most notably through her re-creation, in Blitzstein's English translation, of Jenny in the long-running New York production of Die Dreigroschenoper (from 1954). Her live and recorded performances won for her and for Weill a new or renewed reputation in many lands, and established a 'classical' and much imitated Weill singing style whose abrasive timbre and low tessitura (generally requiring transposition down a 4th) were markedly different from those of Lenya's Berlin years, when she sang with an almost boyish soprano. What had survived from those years, and most remarkably matured, was a combination of dramatic insight and musical instinct, of intelligence, wit, coolness and passion, which arose from a strictly inimitable empathy with Weill's music. Although her tastes in both popular and classical music were broad and she enjoyed a critical succès d'estime in the Broadway production of Cabaret (1966), as a performer she confined herself almost entirely to the songs of her husband and to the one extended work he composed especially for her, Die sieben Todsünden; this was enough to establish her as one of the outstanding diseuses of her time.

Lotte Lenya with Kurt Weill, 1929

No less important to Weill's later reception was Lenya's role in creating the Kurt Weill Foundation for Music (1962), a non-profit organization richly endowed by Weill's posthumous royalties (the couple was childless) and dedicated to the study and propagation of his music. Much information on Lenya's career and personality can be found in the holdings of its Weill-Lenya Research Center in New York and the pages of its biannual newsletter. Her papers are now housed in the Weill-Lenya Archive at the Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library of Yale University.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Marx, ed.: Weill-Lenya (New York, 1976)
D. Spoto: Lenya: a Life (New York, 1989)
L. Symonette and K. Kowalke, eds.: Speak Low (when you Speak Love): the Letters of Kurt Weill and Lotte Lenya (Berkeley, 1996)
D. Farneth, ed.: Lenya the Legend: a Pictorial Autobiography (New York, 1998)

DAVID DREW/J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Lenz, Wilhelm von (b Riga, 20 May/1 June 1809; d St Petersburg, 7/19 Jan 1883). Russian official and writer on music of German descent. He was educated in Riga until 1827. The next year he continued his musical studies in Paris as a pupil of Liszt, to whom he claimed to have introduced the piano music of Weber, an idea now discredited; he also met Chopin and became friendly with Berlioz. He went to London for lessons with Moscheles, and, after further travels, he was appointed an Imperial Russian Councillor of State in St Petersburg, where he developed his writing on music, particularly on Beethoven.

Lenz's most important book was Beethoven et ses trois styles, in which he severely attacked Ulïbïshev for the latter's denunciatory judgment on the late works of Beethoven, which he had expressed in the 'Aperçu' to his book on Mozart. More importantly, he elaborated the idea, orginally suggested by Fétis, that Beethoven's works may be divided into three periods: early, middle and late. Lenz's tripartite division is made on the arbitrary and unreliable order of opus numbers rather than solely on stylistic grounds. Lenz's biographical writing is based on Ries, Wegeler, and above all Schindler (to Schindler's disgust). His uncritical enthusiasm for Beethoven as both man and musician, along with his romantic bias towards portraying Beethoven as an artistic martyr, provides an example of the kind of writing against which Thayer reacted in his monumental biography. Less recognized, however, is the remarkable thoroughness of Lenz's 'Kritische Katalog' of Beethoven's collected works, including editions and revisions.

WRITINGS

Beethoven et ses trois styles: analyses des sonates de piano suivies de l'essai d'un catalogue critique chronologique et anecdotique de l'oeuvre de Beethoven (St Petersburg, 1852/R); ed. M.D. Calvocoressi (Paris, 1909/R)
Beethoven: eine Kunststudie, i–ii (Kassel, 1855); iii/1–2, iv–v: Kritische Katalog sämtlicher Werke Ludwig van Beethovens mit Analysen derselben (Hamburg, 1860); ed. A. Kalischer (Berlin, 1908, 4/1922/R)
Die grossen Pianoforte-Virtuosen unserer Zeit aus persönlicher Bekanntschaft: Liszt, Chopin, Tausig, Henselt (Berlin, 1872; Eng. trans., 1899/R) [Eng. trans. also in MMR, viii (1878), nos.88–91]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Schindler: Biographie von Ludwig van Beethoven (Münster, 1840, 3/1860/R; ed. E. Klemm (Leipzig, 1970); Eng. trans., ed. D.W. MacArdle, as Beethoven as I Knew him) (London, 1966/R)
A. Schmitz: Das romantische Beethovenbild (Berlin and Bonn, 1927/R), 18
V.V. Stasov: 'Liszt, Schumann i Berlioz v rossii', Izbrannïye sochineniya[Selected works], ed. Ye.D. Stasova and others, iii (Moscow, 1952), 409–84; Eng. trans., as Vladimir Stasov: Selected Essays on Music (London, 1968/R), 117–94

ELLIOT FORBES/EDWARD GARDEN

Leo, Magister (fl late 12th century). Composer. He was described by Anonymus 4 (Reckow, i, 22) as one of the 'antiqui' who had used the ordines and colores of rhythmic modal notation in their music as a means of ordering long and short note values. In all likelihood Anonymus 4 was referring to none other than LEONINUS, whom he discussed and at one point (i, 46) specifically called by that name ('a tempore Leonis'). If so, 'Magister Leo' is probably to be identified with Magister Leonius, a priest and canon of Notre Dame, Paris, active from the 1150s until about 1201. The title 'Magister' suggests that he was licensed to teach the liberal arts in the schools out of which the University of Paris would emerge. The attribution of a 'lost' treatise to this Magister Leo rests on a misreading (see Dittmer; for correction see Waite).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L.A. Dittmer: A Central Source of Notre-Dame Polyphony, Publications of Mediaeval Musical Manuscripts, iii (Brooklyn, NY, 1959)

W.G. Waite: 'The Abbreviation of the Magnus Liber', JAMS, xiv (1961), 147–58

F. Reckow: Der Musiktraktat des Anonymus 4 (Wiesbaden, 1967)

For further bibliography see LEONINUS and ORGANUM AND DISCANT: BIBLIOGRAPHY.

IAN D. BENT/EDWARD H. ROESNER

Leo X, Pope. Patron of music and a member of the MEDICI family.

Leo, Leonardo [Lionardo] (Ortensio Salvatore de [di]) (b San Vito degli Schiavoni [now San Vito dei Normanni], 5 Aug 1694; d Naples, 31 Oct 1744). Italian composer and teacher. He was one of the leading Neapolitan composers of his day, especially of theatre and church music.

1. LIFE. The son of Corrado de Leo and Rosabetta Pinto, he went to Naples in 1709 and became a pupil of Nicola Fago at the Conservatorio S Maria della Pietà dei Turchini. At the beginning of 1712 his S Chiara, o L'infedeltà abbattuta, a dramma sacro, was performed at the conservatory; from the fact that it was performed again in the viceroy's palace on 14 February it would seem that Leo's work attracted unusual attention. On finishing his studies he was appointed supernumerary organist in the viceroy's chapel on 8 April 1713 and at the same time was employed as maestro di cappella in the service of the Marchese Stella; he is also said to have been maestro di cappella of S Maria della Solitaria.

As early as 13 May 1714 his first opera, Il Pisistrato, was staged. There followed commissions for opera arrangements, intermezzos and serenatas, and in 1718 a second opera, Sofonisba. From Caio Gracco (1720) the list of his opera commissions continues without a break up to his death. In 1723 he wrote his first opera for Venice, and in the same year, with La 'mpeca scoperta, he turned for the first time to the developing genre of Neapolitan commedia musicale; from then on he was regarded as one of the leading composers of comedy.

On Alessandro Scarlatti's death in 1725 Leo was promoted to first organist of the viceregal chapel. In the following years he lost his supremacy as a composer of serious opera in Naples to his rivals Vinci and Hasse, and between 1726 and 1730 he apparently received no commissions for opera at the Teatro S Bartolomeo in Naples. He did however write serious operas for Rome and Venice, and in Naples he pursued his career as a composer of comic operas. After Hasse's departure and Vinci's death in 1730, Leo became the dominant figure in Neapolitan musical life. He succeeded Vinci as pro-vicemaestro and on Mancini's death in 1737 he became vicemaestro of the royal chapel. He was repeatedly given leave to fulfil commissions for operas elsewhere (1737 Bologna, 1739 Turin, 1740 Turin and Milan), and through the family connections of the Neapolitan royal family he received commissions from the Spanish court. Even greater than his reputation as an opera composer was the esteem he acquired as a composer of oratorios with his settings of Metastasio's S Elena al Calvario and La morte di Abele.

Leo also became prominent as a teacher: from 1734 to 1737 he taught as vicemaestro at the Conservatorio S Maria della Pietà dei Turchini, in 1739 he succeeded Feo as primo maestro at the Conservatorio S Onofrio and in 1741 he also took over the duties of primo maestro at the S Maria della Pietà dei Turchini in succession to his own teacher, Fago. The Miserere for double choir in eight parts and organ (March 1739) appears to be the first of his works aimed at the reform of church music, closely connected with his activities as a teacher. In both respects he was in competition with Francesco Durante, who taught at the two other conservatories in Naples. On Domenico Sarro's death (25 January 1744) Leo at last became maestro di cappella of the royal chapel. He immediately composed a series of a cappella compositions (with continuo) for the use of the royal chapel during Lent and reformed the orchestra of the royal opera, but he died after only nine months in office.

2. WORKS. Leo was the most versatile and technically the most accomplished among the Neapolitan composers of his time. But he lacked both the genius of Pergolesi and the facility of his rivals Vinci and Hasse (a guard once had to be posted outside his door to force him to finish an opera in time). New versions of his own works play an important part in his output.

Leo's early works are comparatively conservative in character: chamber cantatas, mostly with only continuo accompaniment, still occupy an important place among them, and it was only gradually that he came to favour Metastasio's librettos for his operas. Leo helped to raise the musical standards of both commedie musicali and intermezzos. His opera overtures, whose opening movements are in the tradition of the march rather than that of the instrumental concerto, represent an important stage in the development of the pre-Classical symphony.

Leo's works, even those for the stage, reflected more than those of others of his generation the academic side of his training, to the extent that his ecclesiastical style is echoed even in his opere buffe (albeit with parodistic intent). There was considerable rivalry in the Neapolitan school between the 'Leisti', the supporters of Leo, and the 'Durantisi', those of Francesco Durante, the first characterized by their 'scientific', almost cerebral, approach, with counterpoint to the fore, and the second by a more instinctive approach allied to a tendency to harmonic and melodic simplicity, free of the contrapuntal artifice of Leo's adherents. In opera, Leo was a great deal more conservative and bound by tradition than his contemporaries Hasse, Vinci and Porpora; the choral episodes of L'olimpiade and Il Ciro riconosciuto, for example, are closer to the motet style than to the celebratory choruses of contemporary opera seria. His comic operas likewise show a solid compositional technique, above all in the ensembles at the ends of acts; Leo is credited with having conferred on comic opera a musical dignity equal to that of opera seria, whose salient characteristics it borrowed. A typical example is the celebrated aria of the leading character, Fazio Tonti, in Amor vuol sofferenza, 'Io non so dove mi sto', accompanied by two orchestras in dialogue; its academic and pompous structure, as well as mocking the whole Metastasian style, ironically echoes Leo's ecclesiastical manner.

Tradition, inadequately supported by evidence (as so often with the biographies and teaching careers of musicians of the Neapolitan school), has it that Leo, besides being a pupil of Scarlatti in Naples, studied with Ottavio Pitoni in Rome (particularly 1726–31, when Il trionfo di Camilla and Il Cid were performed at the Teatro Capranica, and Evergete at the Teatro delle Dame); certainly his earliest operas (at least up to 1730) are characterized by elements clearly derived from the older style, including figured bass and ostinato typical of late Baroque opera and the use of strict contrapuntal techniques, including canon. This assiduous use of counterpoint provided a firm basis for his melodic phrase structure, and certainly Leo showed an innate gift for melody, with numerous borrowings from popular song, especially in comic operas. His buffo works show a care over form and technique, in melodic structure and in the management of ensembles, that hitherto had been the preserve of serious opera.

Of particular interest for the history of the diffusion of Leo's operas is that a manuscript of Catone in Utica (in Gb-Lam) bears notes in Handel's handwriting and was used for a performance of the pasticcio Catone (London, King's Theatre, 1732) directed by Handel himself and including music by Hasse, Porpora, Vivaldi and Vinci as well as Leo.

Leo's reforming activities in sacred music in his last years are seen both in the composition of a cappella works (with organ) for the church's times of penance (which, however, are by no means written in the 'old style') and in his use of choral cantus firmi and scholarly contrapuntal techniques in church music with orchestral accompaniment. It is clear that his Istituzioni o regole del contrappunto and Lezioni di canto fermo were also produced in his last years. Among his most important pupils were Piccinni, Cafaro and Jommelli. Towards the end of the 18th century his Miserere played an important role in the rediscovery of the 'church music of the old Italians' and was widely rated as comparable to the works of Palestrina.

WORKS

presumed lost unless source given

OPERAS

NB – Naples, Teatro di S Bartolomeo
NF – Naples, Teatro dei Fiorentini
NC – Naples, Teatro di S Carlo
NN – Naples, Teatro Nuovo
dm – dramma per musica

Il Pisistrato (dm, 3, D. Lalli), NB, 13 May 1714, I-MC

Eumene (dm, 3, A. Zeno), Reggio nell'Emilia, Pubblico, [May] Fair 1714, collab. F. Gasparini and others [prol, arias and comic scenes by Leo]

Sofonisba (dm, 3, F. Silvani), Naples, Palazzo Reale, 22 Jan 1718; NB, carn. 1718

Caio Gracco (dm, 3, S. Stampiglia), Naples, Palazzo Reale, 19 April 1720; rev., NB, 18 Nov 1720, 1 aria F-Pc

Arianna e Teseo (dm, 3, P. Pariati), NB, 26 Nov 1721 [perf. inc.]; Naples, Pace, carn. 1729, arias in I-Mc, PLcon and Rc, 1 duet Nc

Bajazete, imperador de' Turchi (dramma tragico, 3, B. Saddumene, after A. Piovene), Naples, Palazzo Reale, 28 Aug 1722, 2 arias D-MÜs, collab. others

Timocrate (dm, 3, Lalli), Venice, S Angelo, carn. 1723, 1 aria and 1 duet MÜs; 1 aria ed. in Strohm (1976)

La 'mpeca scoperta (commedia per musica, 3, F. Oliva), NF, 11 Nov 1723

L'ammore fedele (favola sarvateca, 3, Oliva), NF, 18 April 1724

Lo pazzo apposta (commedia per musica, 3, Oliva), NF, aut. 1724

Turno Aricino (dm, 3, Stampiglia), NB, 3 Dec 1724, 4 arias MÜs, collab. Vinci [recits in Acts 2 and 3 by Leo]

Le fente zingare (commedia, 3, F.A. Tullio), NF, wint. 1724 [rev., with new arias, of 1717 opera by A. Orefice]

Zenobia in Palmira (dm, 3, Zeno and Pariati), NB, 13 May 1725, I-Nc

Il trionfo di Camilla, regina de' Volsci (dm, 3, Stampiglia), Rome, Capranica, 8 Jan 1726, A-Wn, D-Dl, arias in MÜs, I-Bc and PEsp [music for ints also by Leo]

Orismene, ovvero Dalli sdegni l'amore (dm, 3, C. de Palma), NN, carn. 1726 MC

La donna violante (commedia, 3, Tullio), NF, aut. 1726, lib TAc

La semmeglianza de chi l'ha fatta (commedia per musica, 3, D. Senialbo), NF, aut. 1726, MC, Act 2 *Nc

Il Cid (dm, 3, G.G. Alborghetti), Rome, Capranica, 10 Feb 1727, arias in D-MÜs, I-Rc and Rvat

Lo matrimonio annascuso (commedia per musica, 3, S. de Maltrano), NF, spr. 1727

Argene (dm, 3, Lalli), Venice, S Giovanni Grisostomo, 17 Jan 1728, GB-Lam; NB, 28 Aug 1731, Acts 2 and 3 I-MC, arias in D-MÜs, GB-Cfm and I-Vc

La pastorella commattuta (chelleta ridicola, 3, T. Mariani), NN, aut. 1728, 1 aria Mc

Catone in Utica (tragedia per musica, 3, P. Metastasio), Venice, S. Giovanni Grisostomo, carn. 1729, B-Bc, GB-Lam (facs. in IOB, lxx, 1983), US-Wc, arias in GB-Lcm, I-Mc and MAC; as Catone, arr. Handel with addl arias by Hasse, Porpora, Vinci and Vivaldi, London, King's, 4 Nov 1732, D-Hs (facs. in IOB, lxxi, 1983), GB-Lam

La schiava per amore (commedia per musica, 3, Mariani), NN, aut. 1729, arias I-Rc

Semiramide (dm, 3, Metastasio), ?2 Feb 1730, 1 aria Bc

La Rosmene (commedia per musica, 3, Saddumene), NN, sum. 1730, arias Mc, Nc, Rsc

Evergete (dm, 3, Lalli and Silvani, after P. Corneille: Héraclius empereur d'Orient), Rome, Dame, 20 Jan 1731, MC, arias in Rc and Rsc

Il Demetrio [1st version] (dm, 3, Metastasio), NB, 1 Oct 1732, *F-Pc (Act 1), I-Mc, arias in Mc Nc and Vc

La vecchia trammera (commedia per musica, 3, Tullio), NN, 1732, collab. A. Orefice

Amore mette sinno [Amor dà senno] (commedia per museca, 3, Saddumene), NN, spr. 1733, collab. 1 other

Nitocri, regina d'Egitto (dm, 3, Zeno), NB, 4 Nov 1733, MC

La Rosilla (tragicommedia, 3, Tullio), NN, aut. 1733, collab. Orefice [rev. of Orefice: La Locinna, 1723]

Il castello d'Atlante (dm, 3, Mariani), NB, 4 July 1734 [ints by Feo], arias Rc

Il Medo (dm, 3, O. Frugoni), Palermo, 1734, B-Bc, collab. Vinci

Demofoonte (dm, 3, Metastasio), NB, 20 Jan 1735, GB-Lbl (attrib. entirely to Leo in catalogue), I-MC, Acts 1 and 2 Nc, arias in Bc, Mc and Nc, 1 duet CATc, collab, F. Mancini, Sarro and Sellitto

La clemenza di Tito (dm, 3, Metastasio), Venice, S Giovanni Grisostomo, 29 Jan 1735, Nc

Emira (dm, 3), NB, 12 July 1735 [ints by I. Prota], GB-Bu (dated 1736, Acts 1 and 3), I-MC, Nc, arias Mc; sinfonia ed. G.A. Pastore (Milan, 1957)

Il Demetrio [2nd version] (dm, 3, Metastasio), Castello di Torremaggiore, 10 Dec 1735

Lucio Papirio (dm, 3, S. Salvi), NB, 19 Dec 1735, 1 Act B-Bc

Onore vince amore (melodrama, 3), NF, aut. 1736

Farnace (dm, 3, Lalli), NB, 19 Dec 1736, A-Wn, F-Pc; sinfonia ed. in The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. A, i (New York, 1983)

L'amico traditore (dm, 3), NF, carn. 1737

Siface (dm, 3, Metastasio), Bologna, Malvezzi, 11 May 1737, I-MC, arias in Bas, Bc, CAS, Mc, Nc, PAc and PLcon; rev. as Viriate, Pistoia, sum. 1740, incl. music by others

La simpatia del sangue (dm, 3, P. Trinchera), NN, aut. 1737, F-Pc

L'olimpiade (dm, 3, Metastasio), NC, 19 Dec 1737, B-Bc, D-Bsb, Dl, F-Pc, I-Mc (facs. in IOB, xxxvi, 1978), Nc, Vc, Vnm, arias in Bas, CAS, Gl, Ls, Mc, Nc, PAc and PLcon; sinfonia ed. G.A. Pastore (Padua, 1960)

Il conte (dg per musica, 3, G. Federico), NF, spr. 1738

Sesostri re d'Egitto (Pariati), Lisbon, Trindade, 1738, lib P-Cug

Il Ciro riconosciuto (dm, 3, Metastasio), Turin, Regio, carn. 1739, D-Bsb, F-Pc, I-Mc, MC, Nc, arias in Bc, Ls, Mc, Nc and PAc; sinfonia ed. in The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. A, i (New York, 1983)

Amor vuol sofferenza [La frascatana; Il cioè] (commedia per musica, 3, Federico), NN, aut. 1739, A-Wgm, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, I-Mc Nc (Act 1), arias in Bc and Mc, ed. G.A. Pastore (Bari, 1962); rev. with addns by M. Capranica as La finta frascatana (ob), NN, Nov 1744; sinfonia ed. in The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. A, i (New York, 1983)
Achille in Sciro (dm, 3, Metastasio), Turin, Regio, carn. 1740, D-Bsb, Tu, I-Mc, MC, Nc, arias in Bc, Mc and Nc
Scipione nelle Spagne (dm, 3, Zeno), Milan, Ducale, carn. 1740, arias in CATc, Mc and Nc
L'Alidoro (commedia per musica, 3, Federico), NF, sum. 1740, MC
L'Alessandro (commedia per musica, 3, Federico), NF, aut. 1741
Il Demetrio [3rd version] (dm, 3, Metastasio), NC, 19 Dec 1741, F-Pc, I-Mc
L'impresario delle Isole Canarie (intermezzi comici musicali, Metastasio), Venice, S Angelo, 1741
L'ambizione delusa (commedia pastorale, 3, D. Canicà), NN, spr. 1742, F-Pc
L'Andromaca (dm, 3, Salvi, after J. Racine), NC, 4 Nov 1742, D-LEm (facs. in IOB, xxxix, 1979, *I-Nc), arias in Bc and PAc; sinfonia ed. in The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. A, i (New York, 1983)
Il giramondo (commedia per musica, 3, G. Palomba), Florence, Cocomero, aut. 1743, lib Bc; rev. as I viaggiatori (int per musica, 3), Paris Opéra, 1754, F-Po
Il fantastico, od Il nuovo Chisciotte (commedia per musica, 3, Federico, after M. de Cervantes), NN, 1743
Vologeso re de' Parti (dm, 3), Turin, Regio, carn. 1744, I-Tci, Tf, arias in Mc and Nc
La fedeltà odiata (commedia per musica, 3, Palomba), NF, spr. 1744
La caduta di Germanico (dm, 3), ?unperf., BRc

Arias for Naples perfs. of Gasparini: Sesostri, re d'Egitto, 1717; Handel: Rinaldo, 1718; Ristori: Temistocle, 1738; Perez: Siroe, re di Persia, 1740, B-Bc; Hasse: Issipile, 1742, arias in I-Bc, Mc, Nc
Music in: Il Demetrio, 1738; Andromeda, 1750, A-Wn
Arias in B-Bc, D-MÜs, F-Pn, GB-Cfm, Lam, I-Mc, Nc, Nf and Plcon

Doubtful: Venturina e Sciarappa (int, Saddumene), 1722; Lo Simmele (commedia, 3, Saddumene), NN, 15 Oct 1724, collab. Orefice [possibly all by Orefice]; Carlo in Alemagna, Milan, Ducale, Jan 1740 (see StiegerO); Tiridate, NC, 19 Dec 1740 (see Marinelli Roscioni, 1987, p.8)

SERENATAS, PROLOGUES, FESTE TEATRALI
see complete list in Pastore (1994)

Il gran giorno d'Arcadia (serenata), Naples, Palazzo Reale, 1716
Diana amante (serenata), Naples, Palazzo Reale, 4 Dec 1717, I-Nc
Le nozze in danza (serenata), Naples, Palace of the Prince of San Nicandro, 1718
Serenata commissioned by Nicola Grimaldi in praise of his admiral and officers, Naples, Grimaldi Palace, Jan 1719
Onore e Virtù (prol to Baiazete, imperator dei Turchi), Naples, S Bartolomeo, 1722
Serenata [characters: Speranza, Apollo, Dora, Lacone], for the birthday of Empress Elisabeth, Rome, Ambassador's Palace, 19 Nov 1733
Le nozze di Psiche con Amore (festa teatrale, G. Baldassare), for the wedding of Carlos III of Naples and Maria Amalia of Saxony, Naples, S Carlo, 23 June 1738, D-Bsb, I-Nc; introduction ed. G.A. Pastore (Padova, 1960)
Festa teatrale for the wedding of Prince Philip, Madrid, 1739
Decebalo (festa teatrale), ? on birth of Princess Maria Elisabeth, 1743, F-Pc (inc.), I-Mc (untitled score), arias Nc
Serenata del felice parto della regina di Napoli, 1743, collab. G. Manna and N. Logroscino, unperf.
La contesa dell'Amore e della Virtù (prol), Aug 1774, *F-Pc
Peloro, I-Rvat
Le nozze di Jole ed Ercole, D-MÜp
Flavio e Domizia (componimento pastorale), *D-Bsb (inc.)

CHAMBER CANTATAS, ARIAS, DUETS

A complete list is not yet possible; see the catalogues (which differ) in Leo (1905) and Pastore (1957 and 1994). The principal sources are A-Wgm, D-Bsb, Dl, KA, Mbs, SWl, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, I-Bc, CATc, Gl, Mc, Nc, PAc. Numerous songs, including some from the operas, were published in 18th- and 19th-century anthologies.

SACRED DRAMAS AND ORATORIOS

S Chiara, o L'infedeltà abbattuta, Naples, Conservatorio di S Maria della Pietà dei Turchini, carn. 1712; Royal Palace, 16 Feb 1712
Il trionfo della castità di S Alessio (C. de Petris), Naples, S Maria della Pietà dei Turchini, 4 Jan 1713, F-Pc (?frag.), I-MC
Dalla morte alla vita di S Maria Maddalena, Atrani, nr Amalfi, 22 July 1722
Oratorio per la SS Vergine del Rosario, Naples, Cloisters of S Caterina a Formiello, 1 Oct 1730, D-MÜp
S Elena al Calvario (Metastasio), Bologna, 1734 [? Naples, 1732], A-Wn, B-Bc, D-Bsb, Dl, GB-Cfm, I-Fc, Mc, MC, Nc, Nf, Vlevi; sinfonia ed. R. Engländer (London, *c*1955), G.A. Pastore (Milan, 1957)
La morte di Abele (Metastasio), Bologna, 1738 [? Naples, 1732], A-Wn, B-Bc, D-Bsb, Dl, Mbs, I-Bc, Nc, Nf, OS, Vgc, arias in Nc, choruses in Mc; sinfonia ed. G.A. Pastore (Milan, 1957), choruses ed. G. Piccioli (Milan, 1959)
S Francesco di Paola nel deserto, Lecce, S Maria degli Angeli, 1738
Il verbo eterno e la religione (C.F. Taviani), Florence, 1741
Oratorio . . . per il S Natale, Nf (pts)
Santa Geneviefa, Nc; sinfonia ed. G.A. Pastore (Milan, 1957)
Saul et Gionata, *c*1774, doubtful
Choruses for Sofronia (sacred tragedy), in A. Marchese: Tragedie cristiane, ii (Naples, 1729)

OTHER SACRED VOCAL

See complete list in Pastore (1957 and 1994) and Krause (1987); principal sources: A-KR, Wgm, Wn, B-Bc, D-Bsb, Dkh, Dl, DS, Mbs, GB-Cfm, Lbl, I-Ad, Bc, BGc, Bsf, Fc, Ls, Mc, Nc, PESd, Rsc; several pieces in The Fitzwilliam Music (London, 1825)
Masses: 6 Neapolitan masses (Ky–Gl), 4 for SSATB, insts, 1 for SATB, insts, 1 for SATB a cappella; miscellaneous mass movts, incl. 5 Crs, vv, insts, 3 Cr–San–Ag, vv, insts
Ints, incl. Introit pel Dì delle Ceneri, 1744, SATB, bc, org; others for Holy Week
Grads, incl. Laudate Dominum, SATB, insts; Benedicta et Venerabilis es, Virgo Maria, 2vv, choir, insts, I-Mc; Laudate pueri (Alleluia verse), double choir; others for Holy Week
Offs and comms for Holy Week
2 Mag, 1 for SATB, insts, 1 for SSATB, insts, Mc, Nc
TeD, SATB, insts
*c*22 ants, incl. Alleluja, 4vv; 4 Christus factus est, S, insts; 7 Dixit Dominus, 4–10vv, insts, 1 ed. in Opera omnia di Giovanni Battista Pergolesi, xiii (Rome, 1942); 2 Gl, 2vv, insts; Haec regina virginum, S, orch, Mc; 4 Miserere, 4–8vv, insts/org; Miserere, 1739, double choir, org; Salve regina, S, insts, ed. in Die Kantate, iv (Cologne, 1958)
Vesper pss, incl. Confitebor tibi, Domine (Ps cx), 5vv
5 lessons, 1 resp, for Holy Week
Lit, 4vv, viol, bc
*c*10 motets (Nc), incl. 2 Heu nos miseros, 1 ed. R. Ewerhart (Altötting, 1958); Praebe virgo, S, org, ed. in Cantio sacra, xv (Altötting, 1957); 1 for double choir
2 hymns, Pange lingua, double choir, *Mr, BGc, Mc, Nc; A solis, 3vv, bc
Cantata per il miracolo di S Gennaro, 5vv
5 fugues, incl. Tu es sacerdos, SATB, bc, org

INSTRUMENTAL
see complete list in Pastore (1994)

Ov. in 6 ouverture a più stromenti composte da vari autori, op.5 (Paris, *c*1759)
Sinfonia a 6, 2 vn, 2 ob, 2 hn, hpd, in 1er recueil de sinfonies de différens auteurs italiens (Paris, *c*1760)
Sinfonia concertata, vn, vc, I-Mc
6 concs., vc, str orch, bc, 1737–8, Mc, Nc (incl. 1 as Sinfonia concertata, autograph); 1 in D, ed. F. Cilea (Milan, 1922), 1 in A, ed. E. Rapp (Mainz, 1938), 1 in c, ed. C. Gatti (Milan, n.d.), 3 ed. in SEM, vii (1973), 1 in f, ed. U. Rapalo (Milan, 1987)
Conc., D, 4 vn, bc, D-Bsb, ed. M. Abbado and E. Polo (Milan, 1939), ed. in Musikschätze der Vergangenheit, xxiv (Berlin, 1952)
Duet in Scielta di 6 duetti ... composte da vari autori, 2 fl/vn/bn (Paris, n.d.)
Trios in 6 Trios, fl, vn, bn/vc (London, *c*1795)
14 toccatas, hpd, I-Mc, Nc, ?1 pubd in The Lady's Entertainment or Banquet of Music, bks 1–2 (London, 1708): ed. A. Longo, Composizioni per clavicembalo ordinate in forma di suite (Milan, n.d.); some ed. M. Maffioletti, 6 Toccate per cembalo (Milan, 1926); 3 ed. in Antologia di musica antica e moderna per pianoforte, xii (Milan, 1932); ed. A. Bassi (Milan, 1988); ed. C. Prontera (Rome, 1996)

Aria con variazioni, hpd, ?D-Dl, I-Nc, ed. G. Azzoni (Florence, 1906)

DIDACTIC WORKS

for complete list see Pastore (1994)

Solfeggi, Partimenti, A-Wn, D-Bsb, MÜp, I-Bc, Mc, Nc, PAc PESc, Ria, Rsc; some pubd in Solfèges d'Italie avec la basse chiffrée (Paris, 1772); also in Nouveaux solfèges d'Italie avec la basse (Paris, *c*1784); 6 ed. G.F. Malipiero, 6 solfeggi di Leonardo Leo (Milan, n.d.)
Esercizi sulle mutazioni, Nc
Fugues, 4, 6, 8vv, Mc
Istituzioni o regole del contrappunto, 1739, Nc
Istituzioni del contrappunto, 1792, Nc
Lezioni di canto fermo, Nc

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; FlorimoN; GiacomoC; RosaM; SartoriL
J.F. Reichardt: 'Leonardo Leo', Musikalisches Kunstmagazin, i (1782), 39–41
[G.B.G. Grossi]: 'Leonardo Leo', Biografia degli uomini illustri del regno di Napoli ornata de' loro rispettivi ritratti, compilata da diversi litterati nazionali, vi (Naples, 1819)
V. Leo: Leonardo Leo e la sua epoca musicale (Brindisi, 1894)
G. Leo: Leonardo Leo celebre musico del sec. XVIII ed il suo omonimo Leonardo Leo di Corrado (Naples, 1901)
G. Leo: I signori Leo e Di Leo ricchi e poveri nel secolo XVII e XVIII in S. Vito de' Normanni ed il celebre musicista Leonardo Leo (Naples, 1901)
G. Leo: Leonardo Leo musicista del secolo XVIII e le sue opere musicali (Naples, 1905/R)
E.J. Dent: 'Leonardo Leo', SIMG, viii (1906–7), 550–66
F. Piovano: 'A propos d'une récente biographie de Léonard Leo', SIMG, viii (1906–7), 70–95, 336 only
E. Faustini-Fasini: 'Leonardo Leo e la sua famiglia', NA, xiv (1937), 11–18
F. Walker: 'Cav. Giacomo Leo and his Famous "Ancestor"', MR, ix (1948), 241–6
F. Schlitzer: 'Notizie di Leonardo Leo', Tommaso Traetta, Leonardo Leo, Vincenzo Bellini: note e documenti, Chigiana, ix (1952), 55–60
G.A. Pastore: Leonardo Leo (Galatina, 1957)
G. Roma: Il brindisino Leonardo Leo (Fasano, 1966)
D. Green: 'Progressive and Conservative Tendencies in the Violoncello Concertos of Leonardo Leo', Studies in Eighteenth-Century Music: a Tribute to Karl Geiringer, ed. H.C. Robbins Landon and R. Chapman (London, 1970), 261–71
H.C. Wolff: 'Leonardo Leo's Oper "L'Andromaca" (1742)', Studi musicali, i (1972), 285–315
H.C. Wolff: 'Un oratorio sconosciuto di Leonardo Leo', RIM, vii (1972), 196–213
G. Hardie: Leonardo Leo (1694–1744) and his Comic Opera 'Amor vuol sofferenza' and 'Alidoro' (diss. Cornell U., 1973)
G. Hardie: 'Gennaro Antonio Federico's Amor vuol sofferenza (1739) and the Neapolitan Comic Opera', SMA, x (1976), 62–6
R. Strohm: Italienische Opernarien des frühen Settecento, AnMc, no.16 (1976)
F. Degrada: 'L'opera napoletana', Storia dell'opera, ed. G. Barblan and A. Basso, i (Turin, 1977), 237–332
B. Cagli and A. Ziino, eds.: Il Teatro di San Carlo 1737–1987, ii: La cronologia, ed. C. Marinelli Roscioni (Naples, 1987) [incl. F. Degrada: '"Scuola napoletana" e "Opera napoletana": nascita, sviluppo e prospettive di un concetto storiografico', 9–20; H. Hucke: 'L'"Achille in Sciro" di Domenico Sarri e l'inaugurazione del teatro di San Carlo', 21–32; G. Morelli: 'Castrati, primedonne, e Metastasio nel felicissimo giorno del nome di Carlo', 33–60]
R. Krause: Die Kirchenmusik von Leonardo Leo (1694–1744): ein Beitrag zur Musikgeschichte Neapels im 18. Jahrhundert (Regensburg, 1987)
M. de Santis: 'Musica sacra a Napoli: i responsori della Settimana Santa di Leonardo Leo', De musica hispana et aliis: miscelánea en honor al Prof. Dr. José López-Calo, ed. E. Casares and C. Villanueva (Santiago de Compostela, 1990), i, 555–92
F. Cotticelli and P. Maione: Le istituzioni musicali a Napoli durante il viceregno austriaco (1707–1734): materiali inediti sulla Real Cappella ed il Teatro di San Bartolomeo (Naples, 1994)
G.A. Pastore: Don Lionardo: vita e opere di Leonardo Leo (Cuneo, 1994)
P. Pellegrino, ed.: Amor sacro e amor profano: Leonardo Leo e la cultura musicale napoletana del '700 (Lecce, 1996)

HELMUT HUCKE/ROSA CAFIERO

Leo da Modena. See MODENA, LEON.

Leodiensis, Iacobus de. See JACOBUS OF LIÈGE.

Leo Hebraeus. See GERSONIDES.

León, Argeliers (b Havana, 7 May 1918; d Havana, 23 Feb 1991). Cuban musicologist, ethnomusicologist and composer. He obtained a doctorate in education at the University of Havana (1943) and studied with Pérez Sentenat, Domingo Fontón and Antonio Mompó at the Havana Conservatory. In 1937 he started teaching at the conservatory, where he later formed part of the Grupo de Renovación Musical, set up by Ardévol with his composition students (1944–8). In 1957 he studied with Nadia Boulanger at the Paris Conservatoire. He trained as an ethnomusicologist with Fernando Ortiz (1942) and subsequently became one of his main collaborators. It was then that he started researching into Cuban folk music, with special emphasis on music with African roots. He taught summer courses at the University of Havana and was invited by a number of academic institutions abroad. He has been at the helm of various cultural institutions in Cuba, including the folklore department of the National Theatre of Cuba (1959), the music department of the José Martí National Library (1961–7), the Institute of Ethnology and Folklore of the Cuban Academy of Science (1961–73) and the Casa de las Américas. From these institutions he attended with equal interest to traditional Cuban music and the historical concert repertory, with special emphasis on that of Latin America. He was the director of specialized journals such as Etnología y folklore and the Boletín música of the Casa de las Américas. In 1976 he organized the Instituto Superior de Arte, and remained there as its head until 1990. He carried out research in Africa, especially Nigeria, applying the procedures of structural linguistic analysis to musicological analysis.

As a composer, he tackled several techniques. In works like the Sonatas para la Virgen del Cobre (1946) he applied neo-Classical aesthetics to concepts of a national character, while in Cánticos de homenaje (1958) he used 12-note techniques, being one of the first Cuban composers to do so. His musical language underwent transformations which took him from conventional procedures to aleatorism, neo-serialism and electro-acoustics.

WORKS

(selective list)

Orch: Sinfonia, str, 1946; Sonatas para la Virgen de Cobre, pf, str, 1946; Suite cubana, str, 1946; Sym. no.1, 1946; Concertino, fl, pf, str, 1948; Cánticos de homenaje, 1958; Sym. no.2, 1962; Y cuajó el aire en lanza, gui, orch, 1988
Choral: Elegía a Jesús Menéndez, cant., solo v, nar, chorus, orch, 1961; Creador del hombre nuevo, cant., solo vv, nar, chorus, ww, perc, 1969
Chbr: Str Qt no.1, 1957; Wind Qnt, 1959; Str Qt no.2, 1961; Qnt no.2, fl, ob, cl, bn, gui, 1963
Solo inst: Akorin, pf, 1956; 3 canciones lentas, gui, 1959; Sonata, gui, 1969
El-ac: En homenaje a un amigo, pf, tape, 1977; Saturnalia, tape, 1982

Principal publishers: Biblioteca Nacional José Martí (Havana), Editora Musical de Cuba

WRITINGS

'Las obras para piano de Amadeo Roldán', Revista de música [Havana], i (1960), 112–23

Música folklórica cubana (Havana, 1964)
'Música popular de origen africano en América latina', América indígena, xxix (1969), 627–64
'La música como mercancía', América Latina en su música, ed. I. Aretz (Mexico City, 1977), 238–54
Introducción al estudio del arte africano (Havana, 1980)
Del canto y el tiempo (Havana, 2/1984)
'A lápiz de Manuel Enríquez', Pauta [Mexico City], iii/9 (1984)
'Para leer las firmas abakuá', Revista Unión [Havana], x/3 (1990)
'Notes towards a Panorama of Popular and Folk Music', Essays on Cuban Music: North American and Cuban Perspectives (Lanham, MD, 1991), 1–23
'Of The Axle and the Hinge: Nationalism, Afro-Cubanism and Music in Pre-Revolutionary Cuba', ibid., 267–82

VICTORIA ELI RODRÍGUEZ

Leon, Bayani Mendoza de (b Manila, 24 Nov 1942). Filipino composer. He took the BPhil at the University of Santo Tomas (1963), studied at the Centro Escolar University (BMus in composition) and held a scholarship of the Music Promotion Foundation of the Philippines (1971) and the Fulbright Hays music scholarship (1979–81). He received the MA in Music at the University of California in San Diego in 1982. Among the various posts he has held as a teacher, writer (he is a gifted poet) and administrator are those of chairman of the Concert Philippines Society (1966–70), resident composer of the Kalinangan Ensemble of the Philippine Educational Theatre Association (1968), music director of SAMAHAN Philippine Dance Company and PASACAT Performing Arts Company, San Diego (1981–4) and lecturer in Asian Music Studies at the University of California, San Diego (1981–4). He also became music director of two rondallas (plucked string orchestras): the Paaralong Pilipino Rondalla in 1990 and the Foundation for Filipino Artists Rondalla in 1995.

WORKS
(selective list)

Dramatic: The Golden Earth (dance drama), 1966; Ako [I Am] (zar, 3), 1971; Anting-anting (ballet, 1), 1973; Atlantis (ballet, 1) 1978; Villa Mariquita (zar, 3), 1985; film music
Orch: The Legend of the Sarimanok, 1968; Pag-asa [Hope], 1969; Batong Buhay [Live Stone], sym. poem, 1970; Vertigo, concertino, cl, orch, 1970; Pagkamulat, sym. poem, 1974; Mulawin, 1978
Vocal orch: Alamat ng lupa [Legend of the Land], choral drama, 1968; Sisa, choral fantasy, 1968; Be Still my Heart, S, orch, 1971; Los penitentes, choral poem, 1971; Regina Coeli, 1977
Chbr: Essay, fl, pf, 1972; Perlas, vc, pf, 1972; Arok-Diwa, cl, trbn, 2 vn, 2 gui, timp, 1975; Bahay-Bata, cl, banduria, laud, hp, perc, 1975; Okir, fl, hp, db, 1980; Pandagguhan, fl, vn, vc, pf, 1981; Atmospheres, gui, pf, indigenous ww, perc, 1983; Silay-Parnaso, vn, vc, gui, 1990; Krokis, cl, tpt, trbn, 1991; Lulay, 3vv, 2 vc, gui, 1992; 7 Diversions, vc, pf, 1996

LUCRECIA R. KASILAG

Leon, Felipe Padilla de (b Penaranda, Nueva Ecija, 1 May 1912; d Manila, 2 Dec 1992). Filipino composer and conductor. He studied at the Conservatory of Music at the University of the Philippines, where he received a teacher's diploma in composition and conducting (1939), and where he remained as a teacher of theory and composition. Thereafter he was director of the music school at Union College, Manila, and then, during the war, he founded his own music academy; later he lectured on Philippine music in many parts of the country. Formerly music critic for the Manila Times and Taliba, he was director of cultural affairs for the city of Manila; he also held appointments as state cultural adviser (1972), president of the National Music Council of the Philippines (until 1973) and president of the Filipino Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Among the many honours he received are the Republic Cultural Heritage Award (1971) and the Araw ng Maynila Cultural Award (1972); he was posthumously named National Artist for Music in 1997. An intensely nationalist composer, he employed native features in an impressionist style.

WORKS
(selective list)

Ops: Noli me tangere (3), 1957; El filibusterismo (3), 1970
Orch and vocal-orch: Banyuhay [New life], sym. poem, 1v, orch, 1947; Cry of Balintawak, sym. poem, 1949; Manila Sketches, 1949; Rosa encantada, sym. poem, 1950; Muntawit [Short songs], 1v, orch, 1950; Concertstück, vn, orch, 1952; Divertimento filipino, 1967; Awit ng buhay [Song of life], sym. drama, Bar, orch, 1969; Rhapsodietta, tpt, perc, 1972; Bataan, sym. poem; Maynila Ov., 1976; Tatlong Tunog-Larawan, 1976; fl conc., 1980; Orchestertuk, 1981
Chbr: Night Dreams, vn, vc, pf, 1939; Serenade, vn, pf, 1944; Rhapsodietta, tpt, perc, 1972; Fantasy, 4 fl, perc, 1975
Pf: Music Time, 61 educational pieces

LUCRECIA R. KASILAG

Leon, J. [?Juan] de (fl ? 1480–1514). Spanish composer. One song, Ay, que non sé rremediarme, is attributed to him in songbooks from the time of the Catholic Monarchs. He may well be identifiable with Juan de León, who was appointed maestro de canto at Santiago Cathedral on 30 August 1480. In January 1487 he became a canon, but the following month he was stripped of his charge of the musicians, probably because of absence. By September 1499 he was a singer at Málaga Cathedral, where he stayed until 1514 (apart from a short period in Granada). He must thus have known Diego Fernández and Juan del Encina, who both worked at Málaga Cathedral during that period. In 1501 the cathedral chapter granted him a dispensation allowing him to dedicate several hours each morning to the study of music; some time before March 1510 he was appointed precentor but was still allowed to sing in the choir. In 1512 he was granted permission by the chapter to go to Rome to be ordained, but it is not known whether he undertook the journey. In the chapter acts for February 1514 he is referred to as a bass singer ('contrabaxo'), but this is the last reference to him and he may have died soon afterwards.

His one extant song, a three-voice canción on the theme of courtly love, is found in three sources (E-Mp 1335, ed. in MME, v, 1947; E-Sc 7-I-28, ed. in MME, xxiii, 1971; I-Bc 109); it is possible that it was transmitted to the court repertory through his contacts with musicians connected with that circle. It is relatively unusual for its use of triple metre and displays a transitional style in its use of homophonic declamation for the first part of a phrase and extended melismas on the penultimate syllable before each cadence.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

StevensonSM
A. López Ferreiro: Historia de la santa a.m. iglesia de Santiago de Compostela, vii (Santiago de Compostela, 1905/R), 333–4
R. Mitjana: 'Nuevas notas al "Cancionero musical de los siglos XV y XVI" publicado por el maestro Barbieri', Revista de filología española, v (1918), 113–32
T.W. Knighton: Music and Musicians at the Court of Fernando of Aragon, 1474–1516 (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1984), i, 275

TESS KNIGHTON

León, Tania (Justina) (b Havana, 14 May 1943). Cuban-American composer and conductor of mixed descent (French, Spanish, African, Chinese). A graduate of the Peyrellade's Conservatorio de Música in Havana (BA 1963, MA 1964), she began her career as a pianist. After moving to the USA in 1967, she studied composition with Mamlok at New York University (BS 1971, MS 1975) and began a long and productive association as pianist, conductor and composer with the Dance Theatre of Harlem. Since her conducting début, she has fulfilled numerous engagements in the USA, Europe and South Africa, and in 1992 became associate conductor of the Brooklyn PO, whose Community Concert Series she founded in 1977. She has taught at Brooklyn College (from 1985) and served as new music adviser to various organizations, notably the New York PO (1993–6). Among her commissions are several for American orchestras and an opera commission from the city of Munich for Scourge of Hyacinths, first performed by New Music Theatre at the 1994 Munich Biennale.

With her involvement as musical director for The Wiz on Broadway, Godspell and the music theatre works of Robert Wilson during the late 1970s and early 80s, León's compositional style absorbed American influences such as jazz and gospel. In the 1980s she began to incorporate textual and rhythmic elements from her African and Cuban cultural heritage alongside contemporary classical techniques, for example in De-Orishas (1982) and A la par (1986). Carabalí (1991), which draws on Cuban rhythms, is typical for its rhythmic energy and use of polyrhythm and irregular accents. Her works are technically demanding, and characterized by dense textures, angular melodies, dissonant harmonies and colourful orchestration.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: The Beloved (ballet), fl, ob, cl, bn, pf, vc, db, 1972, collab. J. Hamilton; Tones (ballet), pf, chbr ens, 1972, collab. A. Mitchell; Dougla (ballet), 2 fl, perc, 1974, collab. G. Holder; La ramera de la Cuena (musical, M. Peña), 1974; Maggie Magalita (W. Kesselman), fl, cl, vc, 2 perc, pf, gui, 1980; Belé (ballet), wind, perc, pf, str, 1981; The Golden Windows (R. Wilson), fl + pic + a fl, ob + eng hn, tpt, perc, 1982; Scourge of Hyacinths (chbr op, 2, T. León, after W. Soyinka), Munich, 1 May 1994

Orch: Latin Lights, 1979; Conc. criollo, pf, 8 timp, orch, 1980; Pet's Suite, orch, 1980, also version for fl, pf; Batá, 1985; Kabiosile, pf, orch, 1988; Carabalí, 1991; Indigena, 1991; Para viola y orquesta, 1994

Chbr: Haiku, fl, bn, 5 perc, 1973; Pet's Suite, fl, pf, 1980; Ascend, 4 hn, 4 tpt, 3 trbn, tuba, 3 perc, 1983; Permutation 7, fl, cl, tpt, perc, vn, vc, 1985; A la par, pf, perc, 1986; Parajota Delaté (From T to J), fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1988, rev. fl, ob, cl, bn, pf, 1990; Latin File, fl, cl, tpt, gui, pf, 1989; Arenas d'un tiempo, cl, vc, pf, 1992; Son sonora, fl, gui, 1992; Crossings, hn, 4 tpt, 4 trbn, tuba, 1992; sin normas ajenas, fl + pic, ob, cl, 2 perc, pf, str qt, 1994; Hechizos, fl + pic, ob, cl, b cl + s sax + t sax, hn, tpt, trbn, 2 perc, pf + cel + hpd, gui, vn, va, vc, db, 1995; De color, vn, mar, 1996–7; Saóko, brass qnt, 1997

Solo inst: Ensayos sobre una Toccata, pf, 1966; Preludes nos.1–2, pf, 1966; Sonata, vc, 1981; 4 Pieces, vc, 1983; Momentum, pf, 1984; Paisanos semos! (We's Hillbillies!), gui, 1984; Rituál, pf, 1987

Vocal: Namiac Poems, solo v, mixed chorus, orch, 1975; Spiritual Suite, nar, S, S, mixed chorus, ens, 1976; I Got Ovah, S, pf, perc, 1980; De-Orishas (Yoruban texts and B. Neals), S, S, Ct, T, T, B, 2 perc, 1982; Pueblo mulato: 3 Songs (N. Guillén), S, ob, gui, db, perc, pf, 1987; Heart of Ours: a Piece (R. Sandecki), T, men's chorus, fl, 4 tpt, 2 perc, 1988; Batéy (León, M. Camilo), S, S, Ct, T, T, B, 6 perc, 1989, collab. Camilo; To and Fro, 1v, pf, 1990; Journey, 1v, fl, hp, 1990; Or Like a … (J. Ashbery), Bar, vc, perc, 1994; 7 Spirituals (D. Ryan, León), Bar/B, orch, 1995; Drume negrita (León, after E. Grenet), 12 solo vv, 1996; El manisero (León, after M. Simons), 12 solo vv, 1996; Singin' Sepia (R. Dove), 5 songs, S, cl, vn, pf 4 hands, 1996; Sol de doce (P. Mir), 12 solo vv, 1997

El-ac: Voices and Piccolo Flute, tape; Carmen and José (incid music)

Principal publishers: Iroko, Peer-Southern

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D.A. Handy: Black Women in American Bands and Orchestras (Metuchen, NJ, 1981, 2/1998), 66–7
A. Lundy: 'Conversations with Three Symphonic Conductors', BPM, xvi/2 (1988), 213–25, esp. 217–20
A. Olivier and K. Weingartz-Perschel: Komponistinnen von A–Z (Düsseldorf, 1988)
J.M. Edwards: 'North America since 1920', Women and Music: a History, ed. K. Pendle (Bloomington, IN, 1991), 211–57, esp. 247, 250
R.K. Schwarz: 'Black Maestros on the Podium, but No Pedestal', New York Times (11 Oct 1992)
H. Walker-Hill: Piano Music by Black Women Composers: a Catalog of Solo and Ensemble Works (New York, 1992), 53–6

J. MICHELE EDWARDS

León (Ortega), Tomás (b Mexico City, 21 Dec 1826; d Mexico City, 18 March 1893). Mexican pianist and composer. He studied music from an early age and by the age of 14 was organist at the church of La Profesa in Mexico City. He first appeared in public as a pianist in 1854 with the violinist Franz Rooner and the pianist Ernest Lubeck (with whom he played some duets), and was compared favourably with his European colleagues. In that same year he became a member of the jury in charge of selecting the Mexican national anthem, and from then on played a prominent role in Mexican musical life.

León was considered to be the best pianist and teacher in Mexico City, and became the centre of an important musical circle. The informal musical gatherings which were held at his house were particularly well known and it was here that his best pupils, such as Melesio Morales and Julio Ituarte gave the first performances in Mexico of pieces by Chopin and duet arrangements of Beethoven's symphonies. These gatherings resulted in the foundation of the Sociedad Filarmónica Méxicana, which in turn led to the establishment of the Conservatorio Nacional de Música in 1866, at which León taught without payment from its founding until 1872. During the Franco-Austrian occupation of Mexico, León gave concerts in honour of the Habsburg Emperor Maximilian and was even appointed pianist to the imperial court.

León was considered to be the first great Mexican virtuoso. His repertory, which included works by Hummel, Liszt, Thalberg, Dohler and Gottschalk, as well as Chopin, Beethoven and Bach, serves as evidence of an unusually broad musical sensitivity. His own compositions, almost all for the piano, reflect his own technical abilities and European Romantic influences (for example that of Chopin in his nocturnes). The great majority of his works are salon pieces written with a delicate sense of harmony and a surprising melodic freshness. Some of León's compositions, and in particular his Jarabe nacional, were important as the first nationalist pieces of the Mexican repertory. He was also one of the first Mexican composers to have music published in Europe (by Schonenberger and Schott).

RICARDO MIRANDA-PÉREZ

León Antiphoner (E-L 8). 10th-century Mozarabic antiphoner. See SOURCES, MS, §II, 9.

Léonard, Hubert (b Bellaire, nr Liège, 7 April 1819; d Paris, 6 May 1890). Belgian violinist, composer and teacher. He studied the violin with his father and with August Rouma (1802–74), a pupil of Pieltain active in Liège, and made his début at the Grand Théâtre, Liège, on 13 March 1832. He entered the Brussels Conservatory in 1832, where he studied briefly with François Prume and perhaps with Pieltain. Financial support from the Francotte-Pieltain family enabled him to go to Paris, where he was a pupil of Habeneck at the Conservatoire (1836–9) and played the violin at the Théâtre des Variétés, the Opéra-Comique and the Académie Royale de Musique (until 1844). He became a friend of Henry Vieuxtemps in 1841.

From 1845 to 1848 Léonard made extensive concert tours throughout Europe, in particular Germany. He married Antonia Stiches de Mendi, a Spanish singer, in 1849 and toured with her in 1852. The following year he succeeded Bériot at the Brussels Conservatory; he remained there until 1866, when he moved to Paris and established himself as a virtuoso, chamber music player, composer and teacher. Except for a brief return to Liège, where he taught at the conservatory, during the Franco-Prussian War, he remained in Paris until his death.

As a virtuoso, Léonard lacked the temperament of Vieuxtemps and the bravura technique of Sivori. But his critics and pupils praised his intonation, his singing tone and his classical and noble style that made him an ideal chamber music player. He was among the first to play the chamber music of Brahms in Paris, and was an ardent champion of Saint-Saëns, Fauré, Lalo and d'Indy. His compositions, which include five violin concertos, fantasias on opera melodies, duos and salon pieces, are not original and did not survive their time; his editions of Baroque and Classical works and his cadenzas to concertos by Beethoven and Viotti were more lasting. His didactic works, highly praised during his lifetime, reveal the intellectual and musical gifts that made him a successful teacher; in the words of his pupil Ovide Musin: 'a great, if not the greatest of all pedagogues . . . whose method was designed to develop equally and with uniformity the bowing, [left-hand] technique, style, musical knowledge and comprehension necessary to make a complete artist'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; PazdirekH [incl. list of works]
O. Musin: My Memories (New York, 1920)
E. van der Straeten: The History of the Violin (London, 1933/R), ii
J. Quitin: 'Hubert Léonard', Bulletin d'information de la vie musicale belge, viii/6 (1969)

ALBERT MELL

Leonarda, Isabella [Leonardi, Anna Isabella]. See ISABELLA LEONARDA.

Leonardo, Luísa (b Rio de Janeiro, 22 Oct 1859; d Salvador, Bahia, 12 June 1926). Brazilian composer and pianist. She made her début at the age of eight playing the piano in a concert before Pedro II, Emperor of Brazil, who was both her godfather and patron. In France she studied with A.F. Marmontel and Anton Rubinstein at the Paris Conservatoire (1873–9), where she was awarded a premier prix for piano. She also studied harmony and composition with Albert Lavignac and performed her Grande marcha triunfal with the Pasdeloup Orchestra conducted by Lavignac at the Salle Herz in 1877. Upon her return to Rio de Janeiro in 1879, she gave a number of highly successful concerts, but left the following year to take up an appointment in Portugal as chamber music pianist at the court of Luís I. After two years she returned to Rio, and in 1885 abandoned her career as a pianist for that of a touring company actress. She nevertheless continued to compose, contributing incidental music to the theatre revues in which she took part. In 1901 she retired from the theatre and moved to Salvador, where she taught the piano and singing.

WORKS
(selective list)

Vocal (all for 1v, pf): Solitude, 1873; Ma mère, 1873; 2 barcarolles, 1873; Innocence, 1873; Mes vers fuiraient vers vous (V. Hugo), 1877; Ave Maria, 1919
Orch: Grande marcha triunfal, pf, orch, 1877; Pietosa, 1889; Marcha fúnebre, 1892; Hino a Carlos Gomes, 1903, orchd Sant'Ana Gomes, 1903
Pf: Prière à la mémoire de Thalberg, 1869; Loin de la patrie 1872; Dans la calme de la nuit, 1879; Appassionato, 1879; Un rêve du bal, 1879; Souvenir, 1879; Flor da noite, 1897; Teu sorriso, 1903; Poema do espaço (Suite de 6 morceaux caractéristiques), 1904; Plainte belge (Chopiniana), 1917

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Boccanera jr: Autores e atores dramáticos (Salvador [Bahia], 1923), 355–87
Enciclopédia da música brasileira, i (São Paulo, 1977), 411

IRATI ANTONIO

Leonardo da Vinci (b Anchiano, nr Vinci, 1452; d château of Cloux, nr Amboise, 2 May 1519). Italian artist and scientist. He was also profoundly occupied with music. In addition to performing and teaching music, he was deeply interested in acoustics and made many acoustical experiments with immediate bearing on music. He wrestled with the concept of musical time and invented a considerable number of ingenious musical instruments and improved existing ones. Leonardo also had some highly original ideas about the philosophy of music that were intimately connected with his philosophy of painting. It is characteristic that in his paragone, which forms an introduction to his treatise on painting, he accorded music the highest place, after painting, among the arts.

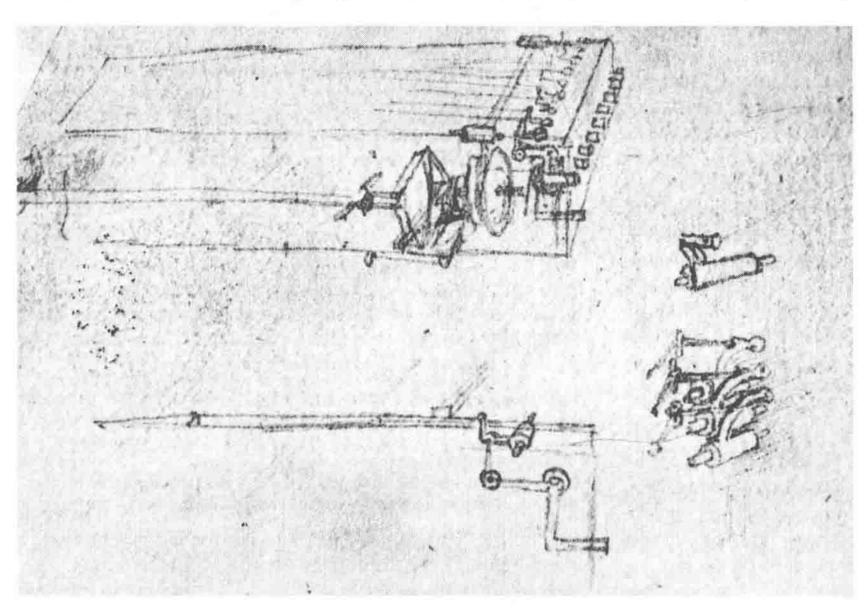
No details are known about Leonardo's musical education in Florence, but it is significant that Andrea del Verrocchio, in whose workshop he grew up, was also a musician. One of the earliest biographical sources, the so-called Anonimo Gaddiano (I-Fn Magl.XVII) of the early 16th century, mentions Leonardo as a musician:

> he was an elegant speaker and an outstanding performer on the lira, and he was the teacher of Atalante Migliorotti, whom he instructed on this instrument. From Lorenzo il Magnifico, he was sent to the Duke of Milan, together with Atalante Migliorotti, to present to him a lira, for he was unique in playing this instrument.

The 'lira' was the lira da braccio, then fashionable among improvisers. Vasari, whose famous biography of Leonardo in his Le vite de' più eccellenti pittori, scultori ed architetti (Florence, 2/1568) is partly based on the Anonimo Gaddiano, recorded that Leonardo 'devoted much effort to music; above all, he determined to study playing the lira, since by nature he possessed a lofty and graceful mind; he sang divinely, improvising his own accompaniment on the lira'. Vasari also noted that after Lodovico Sforza became Duke of Milan, Leonardo, already famous, was brought to play for him:

> since the duke had a great liking for the sound of the lira; and Leonardo brought there the instrument which he had built with his own hands, made largely of silver but in the shape of a horse skull – a bizarre, new thing – so that the sound ['l'armonia'] would have greater sonority; with this, he surpassed all the musicians who met there to play. In addition, he was the best improviser of rhymes of his time.

The mathematician Luca Pacioli, for whose De divina proportione Leonardo drew geometric illustrations, also described him as a musician. The Milanese painter



Giovanni Paolo Lomazzo extolled Leonardo as one of the outstanding masters of the lira. Among Milanese musicians, Gaffurius had close contact with Leonardo, lent him books and is probably the subject of Leonardo's painting Portrait of a Musician, in the Pinacoteca Ambrosiana, Milan. In a comparison between wind instruments and the larynx, Leonardo referred to a book 'delli strumenti armonici', possibly Gaffurius's De harmonia musicorum instrumentorum.

Leonardo's ideas about music are scattered through many of his numerous notebooks; they range from passing thoughts, notes and marginal remarks to ideas for planned research, results of experiments or hypotheses in various degrees of verification. Many of his remarks permit interpretation only on the basis of sufficient familiarity with the natural sciences and technology of his time. A systematic examination and correlation of the enormous amount of material he left reveals an intensive occupation with music.

Leonardo, who regarded himself as 'uomo sanza lettere', was neither a humanist nor a philosopher in the strict sense. Of ancient theories of music only some echoes of Pythagoras and Boethius appear in his notebooks. He inquired into the origins of sound ('What is the nature of a sound produced by a blow?') and examined the sonorous impact of bodies upon bodies, expanding the age-old Pythagorean notions. He studied the phenomenon of vibration and sympathetic vibration, noting that the percussion of a body makes it oscillate and communicate its oscillation to the surrounding air or to other liquid or solid matter. He studied the propagation of sound waves as differing from that of light waves, the reflection and refraction of sound waves and the phenomenon of echo, the speed of sound and the factors that determine degrees of loudness. Especially characteristic of his approach in this context is his establishment of what can be called a 'perspective of sound', that is, the fading of sound in exact ratio to the distance of the ear from the source of sound, paralleling the laws of optical and pictorial perspective that were so important to him as a painter. His ideas about proportions in music go far beyond the traditional theory of intervals and the Pythagorean patrimony. Also, as a musician, he was naturally occupied with the factors that determine musical pitch and experimented with vases of different shapes and apertures. He anticipated by three centuries Chladni's discovery of the geometrical figures produced by setting the edge of a sanded plate in vibration with a fiddle bow.

Leonardo's studies of anatomy and physiology, based on his own dissections, enabled him to examine the structure and function of the musician's hand. His dissection of the respiratory organs of animals gave him interesting ideas about voice production, although, lacking the preserving chemicals, he could not have had the necessary knowledge of the vocal cords. Probably for similar reasons he gave no description or discussion of the inner ear. He discussed the peripheric phonetic organs, such as the facial muscles, the lips and the tongue, and their impact on pronunciation. His study of the tongue led him to an investigation of vocal pitch, comparing the function of the trachea to that of wind instruments such as organ pipes and the slide trumpet. His alleged authorship of a treatise on the voice, De vocie, is controversial.

Leonardo's universal command of technology enabled him to imagine novel musical instruments, and to alter existing ones radically. In his notebooks there are numerous drawings of such instruments, from rapid sketches, often not easily decipherable, to exact blueprints for their execution in the workshop. They reveal his systematic efforts to realize some basic aims: automation of certain instruments and the wider use of various types of keyboard to facilitate playing technique; increasing the speed of playing; extension of tonal range to play, for instance, melodies on drums; and overcoming the quickly fading sound of plucked strings. Among other instruments, he constructed glissando flutes, flutes with key systems anticipating Boehm's invention more than three centuries later, bells with variable pitch, drums of which the pitch could be changed during performance or which could produce chords, and above all, the 'viola organista' (see illustration), a keyboard instrument the strings of which were set into vibration by an endless friction band, and which permitted polyphonic playing with dynamic gradation – a virtual string orchestra under the control of ten fingers. Here, as in other cases, Leonardo tried to obtain from one instrument what could normally be produced only by several or by a whole set of instruments.

Sketch by Leonardo da Vinci for his 'viola organista' with its endless bow (F-Pi MS H, f.45v)

The sensational reappearance in 1967 at the Biblioteca Nacional, Madrid, of two of Leonardo's notebooks, comprising 700 pages, substantially enriched our information about his novel ideas for the construction of musical instruments. The notebooks include drawings of new types of bellows for organetti and chamber organs, another drawing for the viola organista, and one for the viola a tasti, a keyed string instrument operated by segments of cogwheels.

The depth and originality of Leonardo's meditations on music can be perceived by his definition of music as the 'figurazione delle cose invisibili' ('shaping of the invisible').

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.P. Richter, ed.: The Literary Works of Leonardo da Vinci (London, 1883/R, rev. 2/1937/R by J.P. and I.A. Richter)
G. Panconcelli-Calzia: Leonardo als Phonetiker (Hamburg, 1943)
A. Marinoni: I rebus di Leonardo da Vinci raccolti e interpretati (Florence, 1954)
E. Magni-Dufflocq: 'Da Vinci's Music', Leonardo da Vinci (London, 1957), 227
E. Winternitz: 'Leonardo's Invention of the Viola Organista', Raccolta Vinciana, xx (1964), 1–46
E. Winternitz: Leonardo da Vinci as a Musician (New Haven, CT, 1982)
M. Tiella: 'Leonardo da Vinci's "Viola Organista"', Studia instrumentorum musicae popularis IX: Orta San Giulio 1986

EMANUEL WINTERNITZ/LAURENCE LIBIN

Leonardus Athesinus. See LECHNER, LEONHARD.

Leonardus Nervius. See NERVIUS, LEONARDUS.

Leonati, Carlo Ambrogio. See LONATI, CARLO AMBROGIO.

Leoncavallo, Ruggero (b Naples, 8 March 1857; d Montecatini, 9 Aug 1919). Italian composer and librettist. The son of a well-to-do family in Naples – his father, Vincenzo, was a magistrate – he began his musical studies at the Conservatory in 1866. There he studied the piano with Beniamino Cesi and composition with Lauro Rossi, one of the best known opera composers of the day in the French tradition. He also studied composition under Serao until 1876. Formative in his development were the courses of the poet Giosuè Carducci, an enthusiastic Wagnerian, at Bologna University, which Leoncavallo followed from the autumn of 1876, breaking off, however, the following year without obtaining a degree. At the same time he was fired by the controversy over the art and aesthetic of Wort–Ton–Drama which led to the revival of the new version of Boito's Mefistofele and the Italian premières of Rienzi (1876) and Der fliegende Holländer (as Vascello fantasma, 1877), conducted by Mancinelli. Influenced by Wagner and grand opera, Leoncavallo wrote both the libretto and the music of his first opera, Chatterton, at about that time, although it was not performed until much later.

Encouraged by an uncle who was employed in the Italian Foreign Ministry, he then tried his fortune in Egypt, but on the outbreak of the Anglo-Egyptian War in 1882 he made his way to Marseilles and thence to Paris, where he lived a bohemian life, earning his living by giving music lessons and playing the piano at café-concerts. Thanks to the support of the baritone Victor Maurel, he received a commission for an opera from the publisher Giulio Ricordi. Leoncavallo had already decided to write a trilogy, to be entitled Crepusculum, which would be the Italian answer to Wagner's Ring cycle, as he claimed to have expounded to Wagner himself in 1876 when Rienzi received its first Italian performance in Bologna. His work on the project was erratic and he either could not or did not want to complete the task; the first opera, I Medici, took him a long time to write and caused serious difficulties with the publisher that continued until 1899. In spite of the technical proficiency of the orchestration and the choral writing, the opera had little success, and never became part of the repertory. Meanwhile he made himself known in Paris with the performance of extracts from his symphonic poem La nuit de mai, after a poem by Alfred de Musset. After marrying the singer Berthe Rambaud he returned to Milan and became involved in the artistic life of the city, making a living by writing and occasional musical activity; he collaborated on the libretto for Puccini's Manon Lescaut (1893).

A decisive event for Leoncavallo's musical future was the success of Mascagni's Cavalleria rusticana in 1890. An acute analyst of market requirements, he recognized its significance and especially the potential of realism in opera as the quickest way to win popularity, but as with Mascagni, his fame was to rest on one opera into which he poured all his talent. Pagliacci takes the technique of verismo to its limits. Leoncavallo's patient reconstruction of his subject is necessarily less immediate than Mascagni's, but he gained from his study of precedents a refinement of detail, a more significant and shrewd use of orchestration, and a more original and expressive harmony. Hanslick rightly defined Leoncavallo as a less original but better musician than Mascagni. A continuity with the late works of Verdi can be found in the transformation of a peaceful strolling player into a truculent and violent man. The difference lies in the moral perspective: Otello degrades himself by murder, but Canio recovers his dignity. Leoncavallo understood the connection between social values and the market for entertainment. While its effect is perhaps obvious and at times overemphatic, it is a necessary and original feature of the opera, whose vitality is still applauded by audiences all over the world. Pagliacci was immediately successful with the Milanese audience at the Teatro Dal Verme in 1892 and paved the way for performances of his two earlier operas: I Medici was performed at the same theatre in the following year, and Chatterton, based on Alfred de Vigny's poem, was performed at the Teatro Argentina in Rome in 1896.

He completed his version of Murger's Scènes de la vie de Bohème, on which he had been working since 1892, and its first performance was carefully supervised by his new publisher Sonzogno in Venice in 1897. The long period of composition during which he sought to convey the realities of life in the Latin Quarter of Paris was preceded by fierce controversy with Puccini and the Ricordi publishing house. It was Leoncavallo who first had the idea of making it into an opera, but his Bohème, although it has pages full of vitality, is much more a social document of the period, and after the first years in which the two operas were performed almost side by side, it was Puccini's version that survived in the repertory. Zazà, on the other hand, the favourite role of Emma Carelli, first performed at the Teatro Lirico in Milan in 1900, was another opera with a theatrical setting and was an international success. But Leoncavallo's fortunes in Italy gradually declined, not least because being litigious by nature he frequently quarrelled with his publishers.

Although it became difficult for Leoncavallo to have his works performed in Italy they were very successful in Germany, where audiences were favourably inclined to works of the Giovane Scuola. After the success of Pagliacci (given in German as Der Bajazzo) and I Medici, Wilhelm II commissioned an opera from him to celebrate the Hohenzollern dynasty. The story chosen as subject, Der Roland von Berlin, had to be translated into Italian for Leoncavallo to dramatize it, and the result was then translated back into German, in which language it received great acclaim in 1904, with almost 40 performances.

This favourable episode gave him fresh confidence. His awareness of public media led him to the recording companies as early as 1904, and to compose his celebrated Mattinata, which Caruso recorded for the G & T Company. This was soon followed by La jeunesse de Figaro, his first operetta, for the American market. He returned to opera in 1910 with Maià at the Teatro Costanzi in Rome, based on a story by Paul de Choudens, who had written Amica for Mascagni (1905). This was followed by a return to the verismo of Pagliacci (as Mascagni was to do with Il piccolo Marat a few years later) with Zingari (1912, London).

The final phase of his career was concerned mainly with operettas, whose titles indicate their superficiality, from Prestami tua moglie to A chi la giarrettiera?. His last finished opera, Goffredo Mameli (1916), was a grand patriotic work, based on outmoded forms of expression and of little musical interest. More seriously, Leoncavallo had accepted a commission from the artistic director of the Chicago Lyric Opera, Cleofonte Campanini. The task of adapting as operas the plays of Edipo re (to a libretto by the experienced dramatist Giovacchino Forzano) and Prometeo were the most ambitious projects of his career, but his death in 1919 prevented him from completing them.

Leoncavallo also left unfinished an opera on a Sardinian subject, La tormenta, which he had begun in 1914. Edipo re was performed in Chicago the year after his death, with Titta Ruffo in the title role. D'Annunzio described Leoncavallo's death as 'an excellent finale for that prolific composer of melodramas and operettas whose name combined two noble beasts and who died suffocated by melodic adiposity'.

WORKS

all printed works published in Milan

STAGE

Chatterton, *c*1876 (melodramma, 4, Leoncavallo, after A. de Vigny), unperf.; rev. (dramma lirico, 3), Rome, Argentina, 10 March 1896, vs (1896)

Pagliacci (dramma, prol., 2, Leoncavallo), Milan, Dal Verme, 21 May 1892 (1893)

Crepusculum (poema epico in forma di trilogia storica, Leoncavallo): I Medici (azione storica, 4), Milan, Dal Verme, 9 Nov 1893 (1893); pts 2, 3 not comp.

La bohème (commedia lirica, 4, Leoncavallo, after H. Murger), Venice, Fenice, 6 May 1897 (1897); rev. as Mimì Pinson (3), Palermo, Massimo, 14 April 1913, vs (1913)

Zazà (commedia lirica, 4, Leoncavallo, after P. Berton and C. Simon), Milan, Lirico, 10 Nov 1900 (1900); rev. R. Bianchi (1947)

Der Roland von Berlin (historisches Drama, 4, Leoncavallo, after W. Alexis; Ger. trans. G. Droescher), Berlin, Städtische Oper, 13 Dec 1904, vs (1904)

La jeunesse de Figaro (ob, 3, after V. Sardou and M. Vaucaire: Les premières armes de Figaro), ? New York, Nov 1906

Maià (dramma lirico, 3, A. Nessi, after P. de Choudens), Rome, Costanzi, 15 Jan 1910 (1908)

Malbruk (fantasia comica medioevale, 3, A. Nessi, after Boccaccio), Rome, Nazionale, 19 Jan 1910, vs (1910)

La reginetta delle rose (operetta, 3, Forzano), Rome, Costanzi, and Naples, Politeama Giacosa, 24 June 1912, vs (1912)

Zingari (dramma lirico, 2, E. Cavicchioli and G. Emanuel, after A.S. Pushkin), London, Hippodrome, 16 Sept 1912, vs (1912)

Are you There? (farce, 3, A. de Courville and E. Wallace), London, Prince of Wales, Nov 1913

La candidata (operetta, 3, Forzano), Rome, Nazionale, and Turin, Politeama Chiarella, 6 Feb 1915

Goffredo Mameli (azione storica, 2, Leoncavallo and G. Belvederi), Genoa, Carlo Felice, 27 April 1916

Prestami tua moglie (operetta, 3, E. Corradi), Montecatini, Casino, 2 Sept 1916

A chi la giarrettiera? (operetta, 3), Rome, Adriano, 16 Oct 1919

Edipo re (grand op, 1, G. Forzano, after Sophocles), Chicago, Opera, 13 Dec 1920, completed by G. Pennacchio

Il primo bacio (operetta, 1, L. Bonelli), Montecatini, Salone di Cura, 29 April 1923

La maschera nuda (operetta, 3, L. Bonelli and F. Paolieri), Naples, Politeama, 26 June 1925, completed by S. Allegra

Prometeo, unperf., unpubd

Tormenta (3, Belvederi), not completed

Librettos for other composers: Mario Wetter, A. Machado, 1898; Redenzione, G. Pennacchio, 1920

SONGS

Album Stecchetti: 4 poesie delle 'Postuma' (Olindo Guerrini) (1880): 1 October, fantasia, 2 Un organetto suona per la via, pensiero, 3 Donna vorrei morir, melodia, 4 Era d'inverno, pensiero; At Peace (Mrs A. Roberts) (1884); Lost Love (Roberts) (1884); 10 Songs (1893): 1 Dietro le nubi, 2 Addio, 3 Nulla so, 4 Suzon, adieu Suzon!, 5 Un sogno, 6 Non dirmi chi sei, 7, 8, 9 = Album Stecchetti nos. 1, 2, 3, 10 Chitaretta (Leoncavallo); Déclaration (A. Silvestre) (1893); Tonight and Tomorrow (F.E. Weatherly) (1893); Serenata (1893)

Rapsodia primaverile (1893); Canzone della nonna (1894); A Summer Idyll (1895); Invocation à la Muse (1896); A Ninon: Si je vous le disais (1896); Vorrei dirvi che v'amo, serenatella (1897); C'est l'heure mystérieuse (Leoncavallo), serenade (1897); Aprile (1897); C'est bien toi (1898); Nuit de décembre (1900); Les deux sérénades (1903): Sérénade française, Sérénade napolitaine; La chanson de Don Juan (1904); Mattinata (Leoncavallo) (1904); Ninna nanna (Leoncavallo) (1904); Ave Maria, T, hp, hmn ad lib (1905)

Barcarola, 1v, pf, vn (1905); Mai fleuri, rapsodie printanière (1905); Brise de mer (1906); Et nunc et semper (1906); Mandolinata (Leoncavallo) (1907); Se! (Leoncavallo) (1907); Vieni, amor mio (1907); Canzone d'amore (1912); Lasciate amar (1913); For I do love you so (A. De Courville) (1919); Ruit hora: frammento dell'ode barbara di Giosuè Carducci; Napuletana

PIANO SOLO

Pantins vivants, danse de caractère (?1898); La joyeuse, waltz (?1898); Valse mélancolique (1901); Cortège de Pulcinella, petite marche humoristique (1903); Flirt-Walzer (1905); Papillon, scherzo (1906); Sarabande, danse ancienne (1906); Viva l'America, march (1906); Airs des ballets espagnols (?1904); Sevillana, Gitana-tango, Playeras ancienne, Granadinas; Nights of Italy, intermezzo (1914)

Undated: Romanesca, morceau de style ancien; Sous les palmiers; Valse coquette; Valse mignonne; Serenata d'Arlecchino; Tarantella

OTHER WORKS

Chorus, orch: Nuit de mai, *c*1895, not perf., Requiem, for Umberto I, 1900, not perf., Inno alla Croce rossa (1901); Inno della Lega nazionale (1913); Inno franco-italiana (1915)

Orch: Séraphitus-Séraphita, sym. poem after Balzac, Milan, 1894, programme pubd (Milan, 1894); La vita di una marionetta, ballet, *c*1900

Principal publishers: Sonzogno, Choudens

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO ('Pagliacci', M. Girardi)

R. Giani and A.Engelfred: 'I Medici', RMI, i (1894), 86–116

E. Hanslick: 'Der Bajazzo von Leoncavallo', Die moderne Oper, vii: Fünf Jahre Musik (1891–1895): Kritiken (Berlin, 1896), 96–104

E. Hanslick: 'Die Bohème von Leoncavallo', Die moderne Oper, viii: Am Ende des Jahrhunderts (1895–1899): musikalische Kritiken and Schilderungen (Berlin, 1899, 3/1911), 123–32
N. Tabanelli: 'La causa Ricordi-Leoncavallo', RMI, vi (1899), 833–54
W. Pastor: 'Leoncavallos Roland von Berlin: Uraufführung im Berliner Opernhaus', Die Musik, xiv/2 (1904–5), 45–6
J. Korngold: 'Ruggiero Leoncavallo: Zazà, 1909', Die romanische Oper der Gegenwart (Vienna, 1922), 103–6
A. de Angelis: 'Il capolavoro inespresso di Leoncavallo? Tormenta: opera di soggetto sardo', RMI, xxx (1923), 563–76
G. Fauré: 'Leoncavallo', Opinions musicales (Paris, 1930), 64–7
R. de Rensis: Per Umberto Giordano e Ruggiero Leoncavallo (Siena, 1949)
A. Holde: 'A Little-Known Letter by Berlioz and Unpublished Letters by Cherubini, Leoncavallo, and Hugo Wolf', MQ, xxxvii (1951), 340–53
J.W. Klein: 'Ruggero Leoncavallo (1858–1919)', Opera, ix (1958), 158–62, 232–6
M. Morini: 'Ruggero Leoncavallo: la sua opera', La Scala, no.113 (1959), 51–6
J.W. Klein: 'The Other "Bohème"', MT, cxi (1970), 497–9
T. Lerario: 'Ruggero Leoncavallo e il soggetto dei Pagliacci', *Chigiana*xxvi–xxvii, new ser. viii (1971), 115–22
R. Mariani: Verismo in musica (Florence, 1976)
J.R. Nicolaisen: Italian Opera in Transition, 1871–1893 (Ann Arbor, 1977)
L'avant-scène opéra, no.50 (1983) [Pagliacci issue]
A. Csampai and D.Holland, eds.: Pietro Mascagni, Cavalleria rusticana/R. Leoncavallo, Der Bajazzo: Texte, Materialen, Kommentare (Reinbek, 1987)
J. Maehder: 'Il libretto patriottico nell'Italia della fine del secolo e la raffigurazione dell'Antichità e del Rinascimento nel libretto prefascista italiano', IMSCR XIV: Bologna 1987, iii, 451–66
J. Maehder: 'Paris-Bilder: zur Transformation von Henry Murgers Roman in den Bohème-Opern Puccinis und Leoncavallos', JbO, ii (1987), 109–76; It. trans., NRMI, xxiv (1990), 402–55
M. Sansone: 'The "verismo" of Ruggero Leoncavallo: a source study of "Pagliacci"', ML, lxx (1989), 342–62
J.-H. Lederer: Verismus auf der deutschprachigen Opernbühne 1891–1926 (Vienna, 1992)
J. Maehder and L.Guiot, eds.: Ruggero Leoncavallo nel suo tempo (Milan, 1993)
L. Guiot and J. Maehder, eds.: Letteratura, musica e teatro al tempo di Ruggero Leoncavallo (Milan, 1995)
L. Guiot and J. Maehder, eds.: Nazionalismo e cosmopolitismo nell'opera fra '800 e '900 (Milan, 1998)

MICHELE GIRARDI

Leon de Bagnols, Magister. See GERSONIDES.

Leonel [Leonelle, Leonellus] (Power). See POWER, LEONEL.

Leonetti, Giovanni Battista (fl 1604–17). Italian composer and organist. He was a pupil of G.B. Caletti at Crema. He became an Augustinian monk and was organist of S Agostino, Crema, in 1617. Three six-part madrigals by him appear in an anthology (RISM 1604[19]). He published two collections of his own at Venice in 1617, Il primo libro de' madrigali a 5 voci (RISM 1617[15]), with harpsichord continuo and including two pieces by Caletti, and Missarum octonis vocibus liber primus, with organ continuo and consisting of three masses and an Elevation motet, all conventionally scored for double choir.

JEROME ROCHE

Leonhardt, Gustav (Maria) (b 's Graveland, 30 May 1928). Dutch harpsichordist, organist and conductor. After a classical education, he studied the organ and harpsichord with Eduard Müller at the Schola Cantorum in Basle from 1947 to 1950. He made his début in Vienna in 1950, performing Bach's Art of Fugue on the harpsichord. After a year of musicological study in Vienna, he served as professor of harpsichord at the Vienna Music Academy from 1952 to 1955. From 1954 to 1988 he occupied a similar post at the Amsterdam Conservatory, and was also organist of the Waalse Kerk there with its superb Christian Müller organ of 1733. In 1967 he acted the part of J.S. Bach and played both the organ and the harpsichord in Jean-Marie Staub's biographical film, Die Chronik der Anna Magdalena Bach. In 1969–70 he was visiting professor at Harvard University, which awarded him an honorary doctorate in 1991.

As a solo harpsichordist and organist, Leonhardt performs an extensive repertory encompassing a catholic selection of music from the early 16th century to the late 18th. His interpretations of the great 17th-century composers, above all Frescobaldi, Froberger and Louis Couperin, have won a wider audience for their music and set a standard of interpretative style. Tasteful ornamentation, subtle rubato nuances within a firm rhythmical pulse, and stylistic authority characterize his harpsichord playing, while his performances on the organ tend to be rather more sober, even severe. Disliking the consciously 'modern' type of harpsichord, he prefers those constructed on historical principles, often performing and recording on properly restored antique instruments linked to the music of specific periods and national schools. He has recorded more extensively than any other harpsichordist.

He has gained equal distinction as a chamber player, notably with the Leonhardt Consort, which he founded in 1955. As a conductor of Baroque choral and instrumental music he displays the same stylistic authority as in his solo playing, as can be heard in the complete recorded cycle of Bach's church cantatas he shared with Harnoncourt. Leonhardt was awarded the Erasmus Prize in 1980 and holds a number of honorary doctorates. He edited Sweelinck's keyboard fantasias and toccatas in the complete critical edition issued by the Vereniging voor Nederlandse Muziekgeschiednis (Amsterdam, 1968).

WRITINGS

The Art of Fugue: Bach's Last Harpsichord Work (The Hague, 1952)

HOWARD SCHOTT

Leoni, Franco (b Milan, 24 Oct 1864; d London 8 Feb 1949). Italian composer. He studied at the Milan Conservatory with Dominiceti and Ponchielli. His first opera, Raggio di Luna, was produced at Milan in 1890. Two years later he emigrated to England, where his operas Rip van Winkle (1897) and Ib and Little Christina (Savoy Theatre, 1901) were produced. His best-known work, the one-act L'oracolo, was produced at Covent Garden in 1905 conducted by Messager, and with Scotti as the opium dealer Chim-Fen. However, the piece – in the mode of Puccini but dramatically less cogent – did not achieve popular success until it was produced at the Metropolitan in 1915, when Scotti proved it an apt vehicle for his vocal and dramatic abilities. He chose it for his farewell at that house in 1933, after which the work seems to have fallen out of the repertory. There were however revivals at the Curtis Institute (1949) and Philadelphia Opera (1952) and a recording appeared with Gobbi as Chim-Fen in 1977, when the 'Puccini-and-water' description of a contemporary critic seemed apt. His later operas were composed after he returned to Italy in 1917; from that date he appears to have shared his time between his own country, France and England. He also wrote several oratorios, among them Golgotha (1909), and light songs, many of them settings of English texts. Golgotha was first given at the Queen's Hall by the Queen's Hall Choral Society, of which Leoni was the conductor.

WORKS
(selective list)

OPERAS

Raggio di Luna (C. Zanoni), Milan, 5 June 1890
Rip van Winkle, London, 4 Sept 1897
Ib and Little Christina (after H.C. Andersen), London, Savoy, 14 Nov 1901
L'oracolo, LCG, 28 June 1905
Tzigana (E. Moschini), Genoa, 3 Feb 1910
Francesca da Rimini (M. Crawford), POC, 1914
Le baruffe chiozzotte (after C. Goldoni), Milan, 10 Jan 1920
Falene (C. Linati), Milan, 1920
La terra del sogno, Milan, 1920
Massemarello, ?unperf.
Other works: Sardanapalus (orat), 1891; The Gate of Life (orat), 1891; The Prayer of the Sword (incid music, J.B. Fagan), 1904; Golgotha (orat), 1909

BIBLIOGRAPHY

LaMusicaD
G. Kobbé: The Complete Opera Book (New York and London, 1919, 11/1998)
A. Loewenberg: Annals of Opera (Cambridge, 1943, 3/1978)

ALAN BLYTH

Leoni, Giovanni Antonio (b ?late 16th century; d ?Rome, after 1651). Italian composer, violinist and teacher. For many years he enjoyed the patronage of Cardinal G.B. Pallotta in Rome, composing and playing music for the vocal and instrumental concerts promoted by the cardinal in S Maria di Loreto, Rome. By 1625 his reputation was such that a motet by him was included in Francesco Sammaruco's collection of Sacri affetti (RISM 1625[1]) by 'eccellentissimi autori', among them Frescobaldi and Monteverdi. He had many pupils, and his sonatas and sinfonias circulated widely in manuscript. So widespread, indeed, was the anonymous circulation with unauthentic alterations, ornamentations and arrangements that he felt obliged to print 31 solo violin sonatas that he had written some years before. Although its contents are by no means the first printed sonatas for solo violin and continuo, the Sonate di violino a voce sola … libro 1 op.3 (Rome, 1652) is the first publication devoted entirely to this scoring. Leoni's two earlier prints appear to be lost.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M.G. Fiorentino: Le sonate per violino di Giovanni Antonio Leoni (ca.1600–post.1670) (diss., U. of Padua, 1990) [incl. transcrs.]
E. McCrickard: 'The Roman Repertory for Violin before the Time of Corelli', EMc, xviii (1990), 563–73 [incl. edn of 1 sonata]

JOHN HARPER

Leoni, Leone [Leo] (b Verona, *c*1560; d Vicenza, 24 June 1627). Italian composer. He trained as a priest, probably at the Scuola degli Accoliti, Verona. In his youth he was associated with the ridotto of Count Maria Bevilacqua in Verona. In 1586 he composed the choruses for the tragedy Tamar, performed at the Teatro Olimpico, Vicenza (the music is lost). On 30 April 1588 he petitioned the bishop and canons of Vicenza for the chaplainship of S Giacomo. On 29 June he was ordained as a priest, and on the same day he was named maestro di cappella of Vicenza Cathedral; on 4 October he was formally awarded a salary of 4 ducats. He remained in this post until his death, despite some attempts to find employment elsewhere. In Bella Clori (1591) he described himself as a member of the Accademia Olimpica. In 1593 he became a member of the confraternity of Divine Love. In 1610 he was elected maestro della musica of the newly formed Pia Opera dell'Incoronata.

In his madrigals, Leoni paid particular attention to the relationship between text and music; some of the up-to-date expressive devices experimented with in his madrigals later found their way into his sacred works. His church music is Leoni's most significant contribution. The motets of his Aurea corona (declared to be written 'in praise of the Most Holy Incoronata of Vicenza') make use of the stile concertante, in which the instrumental parts are conceived autonomously and not as mere doublings of vocal lines. These pieces are characterized by alternations between solo and tutti sections: the former frequently virtuosic, the latter short and often homorhythmic. The popularity of his few-voiced motets can be gauged from the frequency with which they were reprinted, both in Italy and north of the Alps; Schadaeus's anthology Promptuarii musici (1611[1], 1612[2], 1613[2]) contains no fewer than 16 of his motets and the series of the same title by Donfridi (1622[2], 1623[2], 1627[1]) includes ten.

WORKS

SACRED

Penitenza, primo libro de [21] madrigali spirituali, 5vv (Venice, 1596)
Sacri fiori, [20] mottetti [1 Magnificat], libro primo, 2–4vv, org (Venice, 1606)
[20] Sacrarum cantionum liber primus, 8vv, 2 org (Venice, 1608)
Sacri fiori, secondo libro de [31] mottetti con una messa a quattro qual si può cantar a voci pari ed a chori divisi, 1–4vv, org. (Venice, 1612)
Omnium solemnitatum psalmodia, 8vv (Venice, 1613) [15 psalms, 2 Magnificat]
Aurea corona ingemmata d'armonici, concerti a 10, 4vv, 6 insts (Venice, 1615; survives only in MS copy in D-F) [25 motets]
Sacri fiori, quarto libro de [25] mottetti, 1–4vv, org (Venice, 1622), inc.
Missa 'Ab austro veniet', 12vv, A-Wn 16707b; Falsobordone, 4–5vv, I-VId, lost
Sacred works, 1592[3], 1612[2], 1620[2], 1624[3]
Sacri fiori, [terzo libro], lost; MischiatiI VII:297
A collection of motets pubd in 1602 appears to be lost. (The latter is cited in an early 17th-century inventory; see G. Turrini: Atti e memorie … di Verona, 5th ser., xviii, p.205.)

SECULAR

Il primo libro de [21] madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1588)
Bella Clori, secondo libro de [22] madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1591)
Il terzo libro de [21] madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1595), 3 repr. in 1605[7], 2 repr. in 1606[5]
Il quarto libro de [20] madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1598)
Bell'Alba, quinto libro de [21] madrigali, 5vv (Venice, 1602)
Secular works found only in anthologies: 1592[11] (Latin contrafact text in 1613[13]), 1594[6], 1598[6], 1600[12], 1605[7]
Chorus to Tamar, Vicenza, Teatro Olimpico, 1586, lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Mantese: Storia musicale vicentina (Vicenza, 1956)
H. Wing: The Polychoral Motets of Leone Leoni (diss., Boston U., 1966)
V. Bolcato and A. Zanotelli: Il fondo musicale dell'Archivio capitolare del Duomo di Vicenza (Turin, 1986)
V. Bolcato: 'Un nuovo capitolo della storia musicale del Seicento a Vicenza: la cappella dell'Incoronata nella Cattedrale', Musica, scienza e idee nella Serenissima durante il Seicento: Venice 1993, 43–51
V. Bolcato: Leone Leoni e la musica a Vicenza nei secoli XVI–XVII: catalogo tematico (Venice, 1995)

SERENA DAL BELIN PERUFFO

Leoni, Michael [Lyon, Myer] (b Frankfurt or Berlin, *c*1750; d Kingston, Jamaica, 6 Nov 1796). English male alto. He was apparently brought to London to sing in the Duke's Place Synagogue and as a child had two seasons on stage from December 1760, singing in J.C. Smith's The Enchanter 'with great applause'. In 1770 and 1771 he appeared on stage and at Finch's Grotto Gardens as Master Leoni (Lion, Lyon or Lyons), and then had a season in Dublin. After the rebuilding of the synagogue he was appointed singer at a salary of £40 and he is said to have composed tunes for use at the High Festivals. In November 1774 Horace Walpole heard him sing Handel at a concert and admired the 'full melancholy melody in his voice, though a falsetta'. At Covent Garden in April 1775 he sang Arbaces in Arne's Artaxerxes, a part originally written for the castrato Tenducci, and in November he created the role of Don Carlos in Linley's The Duenna; this was his great success, to the extent that the theatre did not schedule performances on Friday evenings, when he could not take part. He appeared regularly on the London stage until 1782 but was no actor and his career did not develop. In 1783 he and Tommaso Giordani started an English Opera Company in Dublin but they quickly became bankrupt. He gave a few further performances of Arbaces and Carlos at Covent Garden, and appeared at the ill-fated Royalty Theatre and in the provinces. Sylas Neville heard him at Norwich in 1784: 'his voice always feigned, is not so good as it was'. He taught the young John Braham, who first appeared on stage at Leoni's benefit in 1787. Soon after this Leoni fled to Jamaica to escape his creditors and became the respected Reader of the synagogue at Kingston until his death.

The hymn tune 'Leoni' (The God of Abraham praise) is an old Hebrew yigdal melody transcribed by Leoni at the request of the methodist preacher Thomas Olivers; the words are Olivers', inspired by the original text.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDA; FiskeETM; LS

A. Pasquin [J. Williams]: The Children of Thespis, ii (London, 1786, 13/1792)

C.H. Wilson: The Myrtle and Vine (London, 1802)

T. Gilliland: The Dramatic Mirror, ii (London, 1808)

R. Humphreys, ed.: The Memoirs of J. Decastro, Comedian, (London, 1824)

J. Julian: A Dictionary of Hymnology (London, 1892)

B. Cozens-Hardy, ed.: The Diary of Sylas Neville (London, 1950)

T.J. Walsh: Opera in Dublin 1705–1797 (Dublin, 1973)

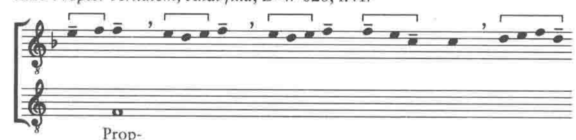
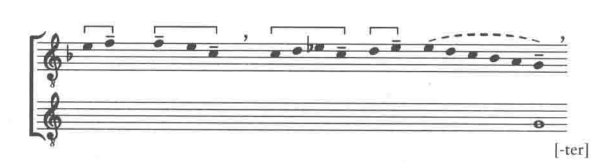
OLIVE BALDWIN, THELMA WILSON

Leoninus [Magister Leoninus; Magister Leonius, Leo, Léonin] (fl Paris, 1150s–*c*1201). Composer of polyphony, including organum and, probably, conductus. He is credited by the theorist Anonymus 4 with perhaps the single greatest achievement in the development of early polyphony, the creation of the so-called Magnus liber. This collection is believed to constitute the matrix in which polyphony was transformed from performance practice into 'composition' in the modern sense of the word. In its repertory appeared a system of consonance and dissonance that would dominate polyphonic composition for the next three centuries, and also a coherent rhythmic language that, for the first time in Western music, expressed itself in its notation. No works are ascribed to Leoninus in musical sources or by contemporaneous theorists.



The identity of Leoninus has been the subject of much conjecture. Wright (1986), however, has convincingly identified him with a Magister Leonius affiliated with the cathedral of Notre Dame, Paris, during the second half of the 12th century. From the 1150s until the end of the century, Leonius acted for the cathedral as administrator of the collegiate church of St Benoît, on the Left Bank of the Seine. He must have enjoyed some standing at the cathedral for more than a decade before the construction of Notre Dame got underway, in about 1163. By 1192, he was referred to in cathedral documents as 'magister Leonius presbyter', indicating that he had been ordained as a priest. He had also become a canon of Notre Dame and an affiliate of the Augustinian monastery of St Victor; the position he held in the cathedral hierarchy was just below that of the eight dignitaries, next in importance after the chancellor. Leonius last appeared in a document dated 1201 and he probably died in that year or shortly thereafter. The obituaries of Notre Dame and St Victor give conflicting death dates, 24 March and 26 December, respectively. The title 'magister', used in documents from Notre Dame and by Anonymus 4, indicates that Leoninus had achieved the rank of magister artium, undoubtedly in Paris, and that he was licensed to teach. In addition to his musical activity, he was the author of several poetic works, including a long Hystoria sacre gestis ab origine mundi (a verse paraphrase of the first eight books of the Old Testament) and four subtly crafted letters in verse to such contemporaries as Popes Adrian IV (1154–9) and Alexander III (1159–81).



The only information concerning Leoninus's musical activity is found in the treatise of the English theorist Anonymus 4, written late in the 13th century or early in the 14th. In a parenthetical aside within his discussion of the rules of mensural notation, Anonymus 4 observed:

> These rules are used in many books of the antiqui, and this from the time of the great Perotinus, . . . and likewise from the time of Leo, for his part . . . And note that Magister Leoninus, so it has been said, was the best worker with organum [optimus organista] who made ['fecit'] the great book of polyphony [magnus liber organi] on the gradual and antiphonary to embellish the divine service. This was in use up to the time of the great Perotinus, who made a redaction of it ['abbreviavit eundem'] and made many better clausulas, or puncta, he being the best worker with discant ['discantor'], and better [at discant] than Leoninus was. But the same cannot be said regarding the subtlety of organum [purum], etc. (ed. Reckow, i, 46)

Several manuscripts transmit versions of the great Parisian liber organi described by Anonymus 4 (ed. Reckow, i, 46, 82; see SOURCES, MS, §IV, 4), but none of them can be shown to preserve Leoninus's Magnus liber in anything like the state in which he fashioned it. Consequently, there has been much speculation about what Leoninus's liber contained. It is widely accepted that it included two-voice organa for the responsorial chants of the Mass and Office – the gradual, alleluia and great responsory, and also for certain processional antiphons and the formula for the Benedicamus Domino. But Husmann's attempt (1963) to identify the organa belonging to the liber in its original state is not convincing (see Wright, 1989, chap.7). We do not know which of the surviving two-voice organa it included, or which of the extant versions (or parts of versions) of those organa are the work of Leoninus. Given the characterization 'optimus organista', Leoninus is often thought of in connection with organum purum, sustained-note composition, and Anonymus 4's comment implies that he was especially known for that idiom. It is for this reason that the two-voice organa in D-W 628, which make prominent use of organum purum, have been thought to preserve Leoninus's work before its recasting by Perotinus and others. But Anonymus 4 probably used the word 'organum' in reference to Leoninus's collection in the sense of organum generale, musica mensurabilis or polyphony in general. If so, there is nothing to suggest that Leoninus's work was limited to organum, or to music for two voices. His liber probably also included the conductus, and perhaps also organa and conductus for three voices. (Leoninus's older contemporary at Notre Dame, Albertus cantor (Albertus Parisiensis), d 1177, is the author of a conductus that survives with three voices.) It is virtually certain that Leoninus wrote not only in organum purum, but also in DISCANT, an idiom in which both (or all) of the voices are rhythmically active. Whatever the genres and idioms he cultivated, his music was composed for the liturgy of Notre Dame; the surviving copies of the Magnus liber conform closely to the liturgical practice of that cathedral.

Ex.1 Propter veritatem, Audi filia, D-W 628, f.41*r*

Leoninus's Magnus liber undoubtedly originated in an essentially improvisatory polyphonic tradition. Exactly why, when and how that tradition was fixed in writing and then subjected to reworking remains unclear. A dynamic, rhythmically charged polyphonic line, along with a feeling for balanced phrases and for the structure of a larger span, was clearly emerging in music at this time. Leoninus's role in 'making' the Magnus liber may have entailed wedding the new aesthetic sensibility that arose alongside the new 'gothic' scholasticism and architecture with a cantorial practice that could have dated back decades, if not centuries. The style generally associated with Leoninus is one of freely flowing melismatic organum, with an extensive use of stock melodic formulas that are repeated, developed and varied in the upper voice, as in ex.1.

Ex.2 Iudea et Iherusalem, Constantes, D-W 628, f.17*r*

Ex.3 Hec dies, Confitemini, D-W 628, f.31*v*

The impulse towards rhythmic organization that is manifest in this music was noticed by Anonymus 4, who devoted his treatise to 'the measurement of [melodic lines] according to length and shortness, as the antiqui formulated it, and as Leo and many others thoroughly organized them according to rhythmic patterns [ordines] and melodic units [colores]' (ed. Reckow, i, 22). The style that emerged from that impulse manifests the patterned flow of the rhythmic modes. Whether modal rhythm is present in the organum purum melismas of Leoninus's organum, however, is a matter of controversy. Waite (1954, p.8) said: 'It was Leonin's incomparable achievement to introduce a rational system of rhythm into polyphonic music for the first time, and, equally important, to create a method of notation expressive of this rhythm'. On the other hand, Reckow (1967, ii, pp.49f) maintained that whatever the position of Anonymus 4 and other theorists may have been, and however later generations of singers may have performed this music, it is by no means the case that Leoninus conceived his organum purum in modal rhythm. But in spite of the ambiguity of passages such as ex.1, other music in the Magnus liber that is likely to be the work of Leoninus does exhibit clear modal patterning. This is true of passages of COPULA (in which modal phrases occur in the upper voice over sustained tenor notes) and of many passages in discant (where the two voices move together in measured values). Most of these passages are in the first rhythmic mode (long–short–long), the intrinsically 'trochaic' flow of which was probably the starting-point for the development of the whole modal system. Passages in copula and discant such as those in exx.2 and 3, respectively, probably co-existed in the same piece alongside music similar to that of ex.1, the choice of idiom reflecting specifically musical constraints within the piece rather than different stages in the evolution of the Magnus liber.

Further study of the Notre Dame liturgy is needed before it will be possible to separate out Leoninus's music from that of other 'organistae' involved with the Magnus liber, and to assess the full scope of his achievement. In particular, scholars must identify those elements in the surviving copies of the liber that hark back to the original improvisatory practice, analyse their use in the music, and come to understand the circumstances under which this music came to be transmitted in writing.

See also CONDUCTUS, MAGNUS LIBER, ORGANUM, PEROTINUS and RHYTHMIC MODES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (H. Husmann)

F. Ludwig: 'Die liturgischen Organa Leonins und Perotins', Riemann-Festschrift (Leipzig, 1909/R), 200–13

F. Ludwig: Repertorium organorum recentioris et motetorum vetustissimi stili, i/1 (Halle, 1910/R), 15–22

J. Handschin: 'Zur Leonin-Perotin Frage', ZMw, xiv (1931–2), 319–32 [reply to Schmidt, below]

H. Schmidt: 'Zur Melodiebildung Leonins und Perotins', ZMw, xiv (1931–2), 129–34

H. Tischler: 'New Historical Aspects of the Parisian Organa', Speculum, xxv (1950), 21–35, esp. 31

W.G. Waite: The Rhythm of Twelfth-Century Polyphony: its Theory and Practice (New Haven, CT, 1954/R) [contains edn of Magnus liber in D-W 628]
G. Birkner: 'Notre Dame-Cantoren und -Succentoren vom Ende des 10. bis zum Beginn des 14. Jahrhunderts', In memoriam Jacques Handschin, ed. H. Anglès and others (Strasbourg, 1962), 107–26
H. Husmann: 'The Origin and Destination of the Magnus liber organi', MQ, xlix (1963), 311–30
F. Reckow, ed.: Der Musiktraktat des Anonymus 4 (Wiesbaden, 1967), i, 46, 98; ii, chap.2
F. Reckow: 'Das Organum', Gattungen der Musik in Einzeldarstellungen: Gedenkschrift Leo Schrade, ed. W. Arlt and others (Berne and Munich, 1973), 434–96
C. Wright: 'Leoninus: Poet and Musician', JAMS, xxxix (1986), 1–35
C. Wright: Music and Ceremony at Notre Dame of Paris, 500–1550 (Cambridge, 1989), 281–8

EDWARD H. ROESNER

Leonova, Dar′ya Mikhaylovna (b Vïshniy Volochok, Tver′ province, 9/21 March 1829; d St Petersburg, 25 Jan/6 Feb 1896). Russian contralto. Some authorities give 4/16 March 1834 as her date of birth, but this is unlikely. She studied at the St Petersburg Theatre School, sang in theatrical shows and vaudevilles from 1850, and made her operatic début in 1852 as Vanya in A Life for the Tsar, having prepared the part with Glinka himself. After further lessons with Glinka and Andrey Lodiy in St Petersburg, she travelled to Europe in 1856 and studied briefly with Meyerbeer and Auber. While abroad she performed Russian folksongs and arias, earning praise from some European critics. Returning to Russia in 1858, she rejoined the Russian opera troupe and sang in St Petersburg and Moscow until 1873, when she was forced to leave the company because of differences with the chief of the repertory division, Pavel Fyodorov.

Leonova had strong dramatic instincts, clear diction and a powerful, ringing voice with a range of two and a half octaves (g to c‴). Throughout her career she championed Russian music, and her best-known roles included Vanya, the Princess in Dargomïzhsky's Rusalka, and Spiridonovna in Serov's Vrazh′ya sila ('Hostile Power'), the latter two of which she created. She sang the Innkeeper at a partial performance of Boris Godunov in 1873, but had left the company by the time the entire work was given its première a year later. She was also praised for her interpretation of Azucena (Il trovatore) and Ortrud (Lohengrin). Between 1873 and 1876 she toured western Europe, Russia, Japan, China and the United States. In 1879 she went to southern Russia and the Crimea where, with Musorgsky as her accompanist, she gave a series of concerts. She helped Musorgsky greatly during his last years, engaging him to supervise studies at her private singing academy (opened in 1880) and providing him, for a time, with a home at her dacha where he could continue to compose. At his memorial concert in November 1881 she sang two of his songs. She taught at the Moscow Theatre School from 1888 to 1892 and from 1893 gave private lessons in St Petersburg. Her teaching was said to have been most valuable 'where one had to "act out" a song or aria, especially our "Russian" classics: here her every remark was precious' (Shkafer, 1936).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Leonova: 'Vospominaniya artistki imperatorskikh teatrov D.M. Leonovoy', [Recollections of the artist of the Imperial Theatres D.M. Leonova], Istoricheskiy vestnik (1891), no.1, pp.120–44; no.2, pp.326–51; no.3, pp.632–59; no.4, pp.73–85
V. Shkafer: Sorok let na stsene russkoy operï: vospomonaniya 1890–1930 [40 years on the Russian opera stage: recollections 1890–1930] (Leningrad, 1936)
V. Yakovlev: D.M. Leonova (Moscow, 1950)
A. Orlova, ed.: Musorgsky Remembered (Bloomington, IN, 1991)
A. Pruzhansk′y: Otechestvennïye pevtsï, 1750–1917; slovar′ [Native singers, 1750–1917: a dictionary], i (Moscow, 1991), 278–80

ROBERT W. OLDANI

Leontovych, Mykola Dmytrovych (b Selevynzi (now Monastyrok), Podillya (now Vynnyt′sa) province, 1/13 Dec 1877; d Markivka, near Tyl′chyn, 25 Jan 1921). Ukrainian composer, ethnomusicologist and conductor. After graduating from the theological seminary in Kamyanets-Podils′kyi in 1899, he worked as a teacher at various primary and middle schools and also as an organizer and director of amateur choirs and orchestras. He then attended, as an external student, classes at the St Petersburg court chapel choir (1903–04) and later, on the recommendation of Sergey Taneyev, had sporadic lessons with Boleslav Yavorsky in Kiev (1909–14). In spite of the early popularity of his compositions, Leontovych received general recognition when he was brought to Kiev in 1918 to teach at the conservatory and at the Lysenko Institute of Music and Drama; there, he was also one of the organizers of the First Ukrainian State Cappella. In 1919 he returned to Tyl′chyn. He died under tragic and mysterious circumstances. According to official accounts, he was shot by a criminal burgling his parents' home. Unofficially, rumors persist that he was killed on orders of Cheka, the secret police. In 1922, the Leontovych Musical Society was established; it functioned in Kiev until 1928 when it was forced to hand over its activities to the chief political education committee of the commissariat of education because – or so the authorities claimed – it was propagandizing contemporary Western musical styles such as expressionism. The society was duly renamed the All-Ukrainian Society of Revolutionary Musicians (VUTORM) and this association functioned until the establishment of the Union of Composers of Ukraine in 1932.

Leontovych was undeniably the most brilliant and original exponent of the Lysenko school in Ukrainian music. His musical legacy consists primarily of more than 150 compositions written for unaccompanied choral ensembles and inspired by the texts and melodies of Ukrainian folk songs. With such works as Shchedryk ('Epiphany Carol', commonly known as 'The Carol of the Bells'), Dudaryk ('The Duda Player') and Hra v zaichyka ('Playing Rabbit') he created a distinct genre: the folklore poem miniature. In them he developed a unique text-based strophic variation form. Leontovych gradually dispensed with Lysenko's aesthetic (a choral-harmonic style based in part on the traditions of the 17th- and 18th-century choral kant), and began to compose in a vividly expressive and figuratively rich fusion of Ukrainian improvisational polyphony, sophisticated imitative counterpoint, Impressionist harmonic subtleties and dramatic complexity, all firmly rooted in folk traditions. He further experimented with this style in a series of choral poems on texts of contemporary poets; these works include L′odolom ('Icebreaker') and Litni tony ('Summer Tones') to words by H. Chuprynka and Lehenda ('Legend') to words by M. Vorony. Leontovych also wrote several religious works (among them a setting of the liturgy and a number of cantatas), and at his death left an unfinished opera based on B. Hrinchenko's fairy tale Na rusalchyn velykden ('The Water Nymph's Easter', or 'Rusalka's Easter'), which appears to pioneer the genre of ritual opera which was to achieve its apotheosis in Stankovych's The Fern's Bloom (1977). With its harmonic sophistication, complexity and immediacy of expression, Rusalka's Easter established a standard for Ukrainian composers to follow. It was edited and orchestrated by Skoryk in 1972 and was first performed in Kiev in 1977. Leontovych's work proved to be a major influence on composers as diverse as Kolyada, Lyatoshyns'ky and Revuts'ky and played an important role in the development of the Ukrainian choral tradition. His works were internationally popularized by Oleksandr Koshets and his Ukrainian Republican Kapelle and are the foundation repertory of many contemporary choral ensembles in Ukraine.

WORKS

Narodni pisni [Folksongs] (Kiev, 1921)
Ukrains'ki narodni pisni (Lips'k, 1923)
ed. P. Kozyts'ky: Muzychni tvory [Musical Works] (Kiev, 1925)
ed. Ya. Yurmas: Muzychni tvory (Khar'kiv and Kiev, 1930)
Khorovi tvory [Choral Works] (Kiev, 1970)
Povnyy zbirnyk narodnikh pisen' [Complete Collection of Folksongs] (Sask, n.d.)

WRITINGS

Praktychnyi kurs navchannia spivu v serednikh shkolakh Ukrainy [Practical course for teaching singing in middle schools of Ukraine] (Kiev, 1920, 2/1989)
Zbirka statey ta materialiv [Collection of articles and materials] (Kiev, 1947)
Tvorchist' Leontovycha: zbirka statey [Works of Leontovych: collection of articles] (Kiev, 1977)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Dovzhenko: M.D. Leontovych: zbirka statei ta materialiv (Kiev, 1947)
M. Hordiychuk, ed.: M.D. Leontovych: narys pro zhyttia i tvorchisyt' (Kiev, 1956)
V. Ivanov, ed.: Mykola Leontovych: spohady, lysty, materialy [Leontovych: recollections, letters and materials] (Kiev, 1982)
V. Dyachenko: M.D. Leontovych (Kiev, 1985)

VIRKO BALEY

Leopardi, Venanzio [Venantio] (b Camerino, Marche; d ? after 1675). Italian singer, instrumentalist and composer. In 1629, and again in 1648, he tried unsuccessfully to join the Cappella Sistina as an alto, and in the interim served Cardinal Colonna in Bologna, some German princes and the Collegio Germanico in Rome (May to October 1646). He is listed, along with the boy sopranos Marc'Antonio Sportonio and Domenico del Pane from the Collegio Germanico in the service of the Duke of Modena in the cast of the 1647 Paris production of Luigi Rossi's L'Orfeo, in which he sang the minor tenor role of Charon. In the early months of that year Leopardi sent a number of interesting letters from Paris to the duke, in Rome, about their sojourn at French court (now in I-MOe, ed. in Prunières, 378–82). He was soon back on the circuit of the Roman churches, and was a salaried tenor at S Luigi dei Francesi in Rome from 1653 to 1664, and possibly until after 1675. In 1656 he was in the service of the Empress Eleonora in Vienna, but his name reappears on Roman payrolls at the Collegio Germanico and at the French church in 1657.

A document of 1645 (in I-MOs; pr. in Culley, 237, 275) states that Leopardi had composed theatre, church and chamber music, but few of his compositions have survived. The cantata Di già dato il tributo, which exists in four contemporary copies (GB-Och, I-MOe, Nc, Rc; transcr. in Prunières, appx, 7–12), is an extended solo lament in several contrasting sections characteristic of the mid-century style. Declamatory and decorated recitative sections with arioso closures surround a brief aria in triple metre. Two other solo cantatas are Le mie cose vanno male (I-Bc) and Voi volete ch'io canti (A-Wn, GB-Och). A motet for three sopranos is also extant (in I-TE).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Prunières: L'opéra italien en France avant Lulli (Paris, 1913/R)
H. Knaus: Die Musiker im Archivbestand des kaiserlichen Obersthofmeisteramtes (1637–1705), i (Vienna, 1967), 68–9, 129
T.D. Culley: Jesuits and Music, i: A Study of the Musicians Connected with the German College in Rome during the 17th Century and of their Activities in Northern Europe (Rome, 1970), esp. 237–8, 275
J. Lionnet: La musique à St-Louis des français de Rome au XVIIe siècle (Venice, 1985)
G. Ciliberti: A.M. Abbatini e la musica del suo tempo (1595–1679): documenti per una ricostruzione bio-bibliografica (Selci-Umbro, 1986)
M. Murata: 'Singing about Singing, or The Power of Music Sixty Years After', In cantu et in sermone: for Nino Pirrotta on his 80th Birthday, ed. F. Della Seta and F. Piperno (Florence, 1988), 363–82

MARGARET MURATA

Leopold I, Holy Roman Emperor (b Vienna, 9 June 1640; d Vienna, 5 May 1705). Austrian composer and patron of music. He was the second son of Emperor Ferdinand III. A member of the house of Habsburg, he received a broad humanistic education under the tutelage of the Jesuit Neidhard to prepare him for intellectual and spiritual pursuits rather than for the succession to the throne. His training included extensive instruction in playing various instruments (notably the harpsichord, violin and recorder) and in composition, probably at the hands of Antonio Bertali and Markus and Wolfgang Ebner, the last of whom kept a collection of his early works, Spartitura compositionum sacrae regiae maiestatis Hungariae, Leopoldi I, composed and copied between 1655 and 1657.

When the first son and chosen successor to Ferdinand III died, however, Leopold succeeded to the royal thrones of Hungary (1655) and Bohemia (1656) and on the death of his father was crowned Holy Roman Emperor on 18–19 July 1658. To ensure the succession he entered into three marriages: in 1667 to Margarita Teresa of Spain (1651–73), in 1673 to Claudia Felicitas of Tyrol (1653–76) and in 1676 to Eleonora Magdalena Theresia of the Palatinate (1655–1720), who gave birth to his successors, Joseph I and Charles VI.

Contemporary accounts of Leopold I stress the following aspects of his personality and habits: his deep religiosity, reflected in his tenacious defence of the Roman Catholic Church and penetrating the entire life of the court; his love of outdoor activities such as hunting and open-air entertainments of various kinds; his knowledge of at least four languages and skill in Italian poetry; and his love of, and excellence in, music. As a politician he relied heavily on the advice of his counsellors and was strongly influenced by the court clergy. Kann, comparing him with Louis XIV, characterized him as > irresolute in action but tenacious in the defense of the status quo, narrow and yet with an artistic mind, impecunious and splendour-loving, homely, unheroic, and unmartial, he was indeed the true antithesis of his more brilliant opponent and cousin.

For the history of music, Leopold I is significant both as a major patron and as a composer. Considering the severe internal as well as external political problems during his reign (including the siege of Vienna by Ottoman forces in 1683 and subsequent campaigns to alleviate the Turkish threat, the attempts to secure the western frontiers of the empire against French invasions, the artificially prolonged Counter-Reformation and the great plague of 1679–80), it is surprising to find an unprecedented cultural growth at the Habsburg court and in the heartland of the empire in general. Building on the foundations laid by his predecessors (especially Ferdinand III), Leopold considerably expanded the court musical establishment – the imperial Hofkapelle – by continuing to employ Italian musicians, among them the composers Antonio Bertali, G.F. Sances, Antonio Draghi, Giovanni Bononcini, M.A. Ziani and Francesco Conti, but also by drawing on native talent, including the composers J.H. Schmelzer, J.K. Kerll, F.T. Richter and J.J. Fux. Although he did not neglect church music or independent instrumental music, his main interest was in dramatic music. Outside the court this interest can be seen in his encouragement of Jesuit drama, probably for religious as well as artistic reasons. At court, secular and sacred dramatic music flourished. Generous financial support for opera productions, including the extravagant expenditure of about 300,000 florins for the performance of Antonio Cesti's Il pomo d'oro (as opposed to an average of about 20,000 florins per opera production and the average yearly salary of 2000 florins for the Kapellmeister); the judicious hiring of librettists, composers and stage designers, among them the dominating collaborators Nicolò Minato, Draghi, Schmelzer and L.O. Burnacini; participation in performances by members of the imperial family; the emperor's personal interest and support: these all resulted in a theatrical life at court not equalled at any other court during his reign. Thus, between 1658 and 1705 more than 400 dramatic compositions were presented there: operas and shorter secular dramatic works during Carnival and as celebrations of birthdays and name days of members of the imperial family as well as on other important occasions at court; and oratorios and sepolcri mainly in Lent, notably to commemorate the Passion on Maundy Thursday and Good Friday.

As a composer, Leopold I contributed a large number of works to the repertory performed at court. In style they follow the Venetian tradition as seen especially in composers active in Vienna, such as Bertali and Draghi. His sacred and secular Italian dramatic compositions evince a careful attention to the text, skilful manipulation of recitative and arioso sections, and a preference for a simple and deeply felt melodic style. By contrast his ballet music and his contributions to the developing German-language comedy – mainly short songs and arias – are light and extremely simple and use folk music idioms; they are clearly influenced by Schmelzer. Leopold's most successful compositions are without question his liturgical works. In them he combined polychoral techniques, the concertato style, and effective melodic writing influenced by characteristics of monody to produce substantial works – especially the Missa angeli custodis, the requiem for his first wife, and the three lections for the burial of his second wife – that proclaim him as no mere aristocratic dilettante, but as a talented and successful composer. He also conducted a private performance of Draghi's Chi più sa manco l'intende from the harpsichord in 1669.

WORKS

Edition: Musikalische Werke der Kaiser Ferdinand III., Leopold I., und Joseph I., ed. G. Adler (Vienna, 1892–3) [A] performed in Vienna, unless otherwise stated; principal source A-Wn (for catalogue see Brosche)

OPERAS

?La simpatia nell'odio overo Le amazoni amanti (op tragicomica, 3, G.P. Monesio), ?18 Nov 1664, only 1 aria extant
Apollo deluso [?Act 2] (dramma per musica, 3, A. Draghi), 13 June 1669; collab. G.F. Sances; excerpts in A ii
Creso (dramma per musica, N. Minato), 9 and 10 Jan 1678
Recitatives and arias, incl. those in works by A. Draghi, A. Cesti, G.F. Sances and J.H. Schmelzer; some in A ii

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

Fineza contra fineza (P. Calderón), 22 Dec 1671; excerpts in A ii
Die vermeinte Brueder- und Schwesterlibe (C. Schlegel), Linz, 19 Nov 1680; excerpts in A ii
Der thoreichte Schäffer, 1 March 1683, arias in A ii
Die Ergetzungstund der Sclavinnen aus Samien, 1685
[Comedy], 1686
[Festa], 1695; excerpts in A ii
[Comedy], 19 Feb 1697; excerpts in A ii

ORATORIOS, SEPOLCRI

Il sacrifizio d'Abramo (Conte Caldana), 26 March 1660; scene in A ii
Il lutto dell'universo (F. Sbarra), Wiener Neustadt, 29 March 1668; excerpts in A ii
Il figlio prodigo (G.P. Monesio), between 1674 and 1685
L'ingratitudine rimproverata (Minato), 12 April 1675, music lost
L'amor della redentione, oratorio delli sette maggiori dolori della vergine (Minato), 9 April 1677
Die Erlösung dess menschlichen Geschlechts (J.A. Ruedolf), 30 March 1679; 2 scenes in A ii
Il transito di Giuseppe (Minato), Prague, 1680
Sig des Leydens Christi über die Sinnligkeit (Ruedolf), 26 March 1682; excerpts in A ii; ed. V. Keldorfer (Vienna, 1918)
S Antonio di Padova, Linz, 1684; 4 scenes in A ii

Recitative, 2 arias in A. Draghi: La virtù della croce, A ii

SACRED VOCAL

Missa angeli custodis, 4vv, insts, A i; Missa pro defunctis, 5vv, insts (dated 1673); 3 lections, 5vv, insts (dated 1676), A i; 2 offs, 4, 6vv, insts (1 dated, 1662); Mag, 5vv, insts; Dies irae, 4vv, insts (1673); Stabat mater, 4vv, insts; 5 Marian ants, 1–5vv, insts, 1 in A i; 1 other ant, 5vv, org, A i; 3 lits, 4–6vv, insts; 6 motets, 1–5vv, insts, 1 in A i; 5 pss, 1–4vv, insts, 2 in A i; 12 hymns, 2–6vv, insts, 3 in A i; masses and Stabat mater ed. M. Dietz (Vienna, 1891)

SECULAR

Giudizio d'amore (dialogo musicale)
Del silenzio profondo (serenata)
Rimbomba mia tromba (serenata)
4 canzonettas, 1–3vv, insts, 1655–7; madrigal, 3vv, bc
Sonata, 4 va, bc, 1656; ritornello [sonata] (bc only extant); 102 dances [incl. 16 suites] (melody and bc only extant), 28 in A ii

Lost works, incl. 2 masses, Dies irae, Stabat mater, Compline, 2 Mag, 11 ants, lit, 2 Miserere, 20 motets, cited in Distinta specificatione dell'archivio musicale per il servizio della cappella e camera cesarea, A-Wn, catalogue of Leopold's private collection

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KöchelKHM; ScheringGO
G. Adler: 'Die Kaiser Ferdinand III., Leopold I., Joseph I., und Karl VI. als Tonsetzer und Förderer der Musik', VMw, viii (1892), 252–68
A. von Weilen: Zur Wiener Theatergeschichte: die vom Jahre 1629 bis zum Jahre 1740 am Wiener Hofe zur Aufführung gelangten Werke theatralischen Charakters und Oratorien (Vienna, 1901)
G. Adler: 'Zur Geschichte der Wiener Messkomposition in der zweiten Hälfte des XVII. Jahrhunderts', SMw, iv (1916), 5–45
E. Wellesz: 'Die Opern und Oratorien in Wien von 1660–1708', SMw, vi (1919), 5–138
P. Nettl: 'Die Wiener Tanzkomposition in der zweiten Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts', SMw, viii (1921), 45–175
Z. Kalista, ed.: Leopold I: Korespondence … Humprechten Janem Černínem z Chudenic (Prague, 1936)
N. Eisenberg: 'Studien zur Historiographie über Kaiser Leopold I.', Mitteilungen des œsterreichisches Instituts für Geschichtsforschung, li (1937), 359–413

G. Tauschhuber: Kaiser Leopold I. und das Wiener Barocktheater (Mühldorf am Inn, 1947)
H.V.F. Somerset: 'The Habsburg Emperors as Musicians', ML, xxx (1949), 204–15
F. Hadamowsky: 'Barocktheater am Wiener Kaiserhof, mit einem Spielplan (1625–1740)', Jb der Gesellschaft für Wiener Theaterforschung 1951–2, 7–117; pubd separately (Vienna, 1955)
R.A. Kann: A Study in Austrian Intellectual History (New York, 1960)
O. Wessely: 'Kaiser Leopolds I. "Vermeinte Bruder- und Schwesterliebe"', SMw, xxv (1962), 586–608
C.D. Harris: Keyboard Music in Vienna during the Reign of Leopold I, 1658–1705 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1967)
H. Knaus: Die Musiker im Archivbestand des kaiserlichen Obersthofmeisteramtes (1637–1705) (Vienna, 1967–9)
H. Seifert: 'Die Festlichkeiten zur ersten Hochzeit Kaiser Leopolds I.', ÖMz, xxix (1974), 6–16
G. Brosche: 'Die musikalischen Werke Kaiser Leopolds I: ein systematisch-thematisches Verzeichnis der erhaltenen Kompositionen', Beiträge zur Musikdokumentation: Franz Grasberger zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. G. Brosche (Tutzing, 1975), 27–82
J.P. Spielman: Leopold I of Austria (London, 1977)
H. Seifert: Die Oper am Wiener Kaiserhof im 17. Jahrhundert (Tutzing, 1985)

RUDOLF SCHNITZLER (with HERBERT SEIFERT)

Leopold, Silke (b Hamburg, 30 Nov 1948). German musicologist. She studied singing and the flute at the Hamburg Conservatory (1969–72) and musicology with Dadelsen at Hamburg University (1969–75), taking the doctorate in 1975 with a dissertation on Stefano Landi. For three years she was a research fellow at the Deutsches Historisches Institut in Rome and an editor of Analectica musicologica; in 1980 she was made Dahlhaus's assistant at the Technische Universität in Berlin. In 1987 she completed the Habilitation with a study on poetry and music in early 17th-century Italian solo song, and she was made lecturer at the Technische Universität in 1990. In 1991 she was appointed professor of musicology at Detmold University (and Paderborn Musikhochschule, which is affiliated with the university), and in 1996 she became chair of the music department at the University of Heidelberg. She has also been a visiting lecturer at Harvard (1986) and a visiting professor at the universities of Regensburg (1988), Basle (1990) and Berne (1992–3). She was awarded the Dent medal in 1986, and she was made a member of the Zentralinstitut für Mozartforschung in Salzburg in 1992 and vice-president of the Gesellschaft für Musikforschung in 1993.

Leopold is one of the leading German music scholars of her generation. Her examinations of vocal music, particularly opera, from the 17th to the 19th century address a wide range of topics, including the investigation of sources, the history of genres and sociological issues relating to this repertory. Her work is informed by a profound knowledge of the wider cultural contexts within which the music was composed. A prolific author, she has contributed important articles to the Neues Handbuch der Musikwissenschaft (from 1985), Pipers Enzyklopädie des Musiktheaters and the second edition of Musik und Geschichte und Gegenwart; she is also editor of the series Bärenreiter Studienbücher zur Musik (from 1992) and writes frequently for German radio stations.

WRITINGS

Stefano Landi: Beiträge zur Biographie: Untersuchungen zur weltlichen und geistlichen Vokalmusik (diss., U. of Hamburg, 1975; Hamburg, 1976)
'Das geistliche Libretto im 17. Jahrhundert: zur Gattungsgeschichte der frühen italienischen Oper', Mf, xxxi (1978), 245–57
'"Quelle bazzicature poetiche, appellate ariette": Dichtungsformen in der frühen italienischen Oper (1600–1640)', HJbMw 1978, 101–41
'Madrigali sulle egloghe sdrucciole di Jacopo Sannazzaro: struttura poetica e forma musicale', RIM, xiv (1979), 75–127
'Chiabrera und die Monodie: die Entwicklung der Arie', Studi musicali, x (1981), 75–106
'Die Hierarchie Arkadiens: Soziale Strukturen in den frühen Pastoralopern und ihre Ausdrucksformen', Schweizer Jb für Musikwissenschaft, new ser., i (1981), 71–92
Claudio Monteverdi und seine Zeit (Laaber, 1982, 2/1993; Eng. trans., 1991, as Monteverdi: Music in Transition)
'Haydn und die Tradition der Orpheus-Opern', Musica, xxxvi (1982), 131–5
'Remigio Romano's Collection of Lyrics for Music', PRMA, cxi (1984–5), 45–61
'Jenseits der Gattungen: Händels "Apollo und Dafne"', Basler Jb für historische Musikpraxis, ix (1985), 9–24
'Lyra Orphei', Claudio Monteverdi: Festschrift Reinhold Hammerstein, ed. L. Finscher (Laaber, 1986), 337–45
'Kontrapunkt und Textausdruck: Studieneinheit Nr. 8', Funkkolleg Musikgeschichte: Studienbegleitbrief, no.4 (1987), 11–45
'"Semele" von John Eccles und Georg Friedrich Händel', Händel auf dem Theater, ed. H.J. Marx, ii (Laaber, 1988), 29–37
'Wahnsinn mit Methode: die Wahnsinnsszenen in Händels dramatischen Werken und ihre Vorbilder', Opernheld und Opernheldin im 18. Jahrhundert: Münster 1989, 71–83
'Mozart, die Oper und die Tradition', Mozarts Opernfiguren, ed. D. Borchmeyer (Berne, 1992), 19–34
ed.: Musikalische Metamorphosen: Formen und Geschichte der Bearbeitung (Kassel, 1992) [incl. 'Von Pasteten und Don Giovannis Requiem: Opernbearbeitungen', 86–93; 'Sang als Klang und Klang als Sang: Vokale Bearbeitung von Instrumentalmusik und instrumentale Bearbeitung von Vokalmusik', 137–46; 'Bearbeitung ohne Ende: die Interpretation: einige Gedanken zum Schluss', 108–83]
ed., with J. Steinheuer: Claudio Monteverdi und die Folgen: Detmold 1993
'Händels Geist in Mozarts Händen: über das "Qui tollis" in der c-moll-Messe', MJb 1994, 89–111
Al modo d'Orfeo: Dichtung und Musik im italienischen Sologesang des frühen 17. Jahrhunderts, AnMc, no.29 (1995) [enlarged version of Habilitationsschrift, Technical U., Berlin, 1987]
'Darius Milhauds Streichquartette oder: von der Ernsthaftigkeit des Spielerischen', Studien zur Musikgeschichte: eine Festschrift für Ludwig Finscher, ed. A. Laubenthal and K. Kusan-Windweh (Kassel, 1995), 727–36
'Von der Allgewalt vollsten Hingebungseifers: Weibs-Bilder in Wagners Ring', Richard Wagner: 'Der Ring des Nibelungen': Ansichten des Mythos, ed. U. Bermbach and D. Borchmeyer (Stuttgart, 1995), 59–74
'"Er ist der Vater, wir sind die Buben": über Mozarts schöpferische Auseinandersetzung mit Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach', Festschrift Christoph-Hellmut Mahling, ed. A. Beer, K. Pfarr and W. Ruf, i (Tutzing, 1997), 755–69
'Die Vanitas-Idee in der Musik des frühen 17. Jahrhunderts', 'Aspekte der Gegenreformation', Zeitsprünge: Forschungen zur Frühen Neuzeit, i/3–4 (1997), 645–69 [special issue] with R. Maschka: Who's Who in der Oper (Kassel, 1997)
ed., with U. Scheideler: Oratorienführer (Stuttgart, 1999)
Georg Friedrich Händel und seine Zeit (Laaber, forthcoming)
Handbuch der musikalischen Gattungen: die Oper im 17. Jahrhundert (Laaber, forthcoming)
'Sprezzatura, Cirimonie, Dissimulazione: drei zentrale Begriffe der barocken Verhaltenslehre und ihre musikalischen Ausdrucksformen', Studi musicali (forthcoming)

CHRISTIAN BERGER

Leopolita [Lwowczyk, ze Lwowa], Marcin [Leopolitanus, Martinus] (d Lwów [now L'viv], 1589). Polish composer and ?poet. What little is known about him derives from Starowolski and Zimorowicz and is otherwise undocumented. He is said to have studied under Sebastian z Felsztyna and Jan Jeleń of Tuchola, and to have been a student at Kraków Academy; he was not, as has been claimed, organist at the court of King Sigismund II Augustus, but he has been identified with a 'Marcin' who was engaged in 1560 as a 'compositor cantus' at this court. His extant works are the Missa Paschalis (formerly in PL-Kk; ed. in Monumenta musicae sacrae in Polonia, iii, Poznań, 1889, and WDMP, xxxv, 1957), which is based on melodic material deriving from four Polish Easter hymns, four five-part motets, which survive only in organ transcriptions (in PL-WRu; two, one in a reconstruction of the original version, ed. M. Perz in Muzyka w dawnym Krakowie, ed. Z.M. Szweykowski, 1964; one, also reconstructed, ed. M. Perz in Muzyka staropolska, ed. H. Feicht, 1966; one ed. in AMP, xv, 1968), and another motet of which only two vocal parts are extant; two other masses, Missa Rorate and Missa de Resurrectione, were known as recently as the end of the 19th century (then in PL-Kk) but have since disappeared.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SMP

S. Starowolski: Scriptorum polonicorum hekatontas (Frankfurt, 1625, 4/1733; Pol. trans., 1970, as Setnik pisarzów polskich)

B. Zimorowicz: Viri illustres civitatis Leopoliensis (Lwów, 1671); ed. K. Heck (Lwów, 1890)

A. Chybiński: Słownik muzyków dawnej Polski do roku 1800 [Dictionary of early Polish musicians to 1800] (Kraków, 1949)

H. Feicht: 'O mszy wielkanocnej Marcina Leopolity' [Concerning Marcin Leopolita's Easter mass], KM, no.6 (1929–30), 109–57; repr. in Opera Musicologica Hieronymi Feicht, iii (Kraków, 1980), 7–86

M. Perz: 'Motety Marcina Leopolity', Studia Hieronymo Feicht septuagenario dedicata, ed. Z. Lissa (Kraków, 1967), 155–89

M. Perz: 'Rękopiśmienne partesy olkuskie' [Manuscript partbooks from Olkusz], Muzyka, xiv/2 (1969), 18–44

E. Głuszcz-Zwolińska: Muzyka nadworna ostatnich Jagiellonów [The court music of the last Jagiellonians] (Kraków, 1988)

ELŻBIETA GLUSZCZ-ZWOLIŃSKA

Leotsakos, George (b Athens, 9 Aug 1935). Greek music critic, musicologist and composer. Although he studied music privately with Kostas Kydoniatis and later with Papaioannou at the Hellenic Conservatory, Athens (graduating in 1964), he considers himself largely self-taught. As a student he began writing music criticism for the Athens morning newspaper, Kathimerini, succeeding Dounias as full-time critic in 1962. Subsequently he worked for several daily papers in Athens, including Messimvrini (1961–3), Ta nea (1965–75), To vima (1975), Proini (1979–80), Eléftheri Gnomi (1983–4), and Epikaerotita (1990–91), as well as the fortnightly Anti (1975–82). In 1999 he became a music critic for Ekti Iméra, the weekly cultural issue of Imerissia. He also served as music editor for the Greek encyclopaedia Papyros-Larousse-Britannica (vols.i–xiii, 1981–3) and the Ekpaedeftiki Helliniki Encyclopedia (vols i–ix*b*, biographical section), introducing to the latter new materials on dozens of Greek composers, especially those of the 19th and 20th centuries. He was also a producer of Greek art music programmes for Hellenic Radio (1975–6, 1983–7) and in 1975 he was responsible for introducing programmes of traditional Asian music to the Greek public.

However, in the early 1970s, he had already abandoned ethnomusicology, which occupied him from the late 1950s, devoting himself exclusively to research in the history of Greek art music, mostly inspired by his experience of Greek musical life as a critic. He was the first Western musicologist (after the ethnomusicologist A.L. Lloyd in the 1960s) to enter socialist Albania, where in 1981 he began recording its art music. Between that year and 2000 he returned 13 times to gather material and to assist in festivals of Albanian art music. This experience has had a decisive influence on his overall musical philosophy and, partly, on his approach to Greek art music as well. He has composed a small number of instrumental works in a free atonal style interspersed with modal structures; these include 24 Japanese Haiku (1961) for soprano and piano and Khmer (1964–6) for solo flute, which echo his aural impressions from traditional Japanese music and from his 1963 journey to Japan, Thailand and Cambodia, as well, as the triptych Dulciamer (1991) for solo cimbalom.

WRITINGS

'Music', Südostoeuropa Handbuch, iii: Griechenland, ed. K.-D. Grothusen (Göttingen, 1980), 544–58

'Elliniko lyriko théatro: 100 hronia, 1888–1988' [Greek lyrical theatre: 100 years, 1888–1988] YP 4–6 L/L 14564 66 (Athens, 1988)

'Emilios Riadis (1880–1935)', O paratiritis, nos.6–7 (1988), 147–91

'Nikolaos Halikiopoulos Mantzaros (1795–1872): ya éna mikro tou engolpio', [Mantzaros: for a short guidebook on the composer], Mousikologia, no.5–6 (1988), 228–71

'O Manolis Kalomiris se diskous 78 strofon (aformi ya mia proti érevna sta mavra hronia tis zois tou)' [Kalomiris on 78 rpm records (an opportunity for research on the dark years of the composer's life)], Mousikologia, no.7–8 (1989), 169–91

'Dimitrios Lalas, o Makedonas mathitis ke oikeios tou Richard Wagner (1844–1911)' [Lalas, the Macedonian disciple and family friend of Wagner (1844–1911)], O Wagner ke i Ellada (Athens, 1992), 207–45

'I haménes ellinikés operes i o afanismos tou moussikou mas politismou' [Lost Greek operas or the annihilation of our musical civilization], Epilogos '92 (Athens, 1992), 398–428

'Orakel und Drama: Christou, 2. Symphonie', Jani Christou: Hamburg 1993, 51–60

'Italy as the 'Alma Mater' of 19th Century Greek Music and as a Vast Field of Future Historical Research on it', Mediterraneo Musica: Palemo 1995, 66–79

'Spyridon-Filiskos Samaras', Pangosmio Viografiko Lexiko, ixa (1988), 171–2

Lychnos ypo ton modhion [Light under a bushel] (Athens, 1999) [incl. CD]

ed.: Paylou Carrer 'Apomnimonévmata' ke Katalogos érgon ke moussikon heirographon [The 'memoirs' of Pavlos Carrer and a Catalogue of his works and musical manuscripts] (Athens, 2000)

Éntechni Alvaniki moussiki: historia kai katagrafi enos monadhikou phaenoménou [Albanian art music: the history and recording of a unique phenomemon] (forthcoming)

Spyros Samaras, o megalos adhikiménos: zoi kai dhimiourghia [Samaras, the great injustice: his life and creation] (forthcoming)

DIMITRI CONOMOS

Leoz, Jesús García (b Olite, Navarre, 10 Jan 1904; d Madrid, 25 Feb 1953). Spanish composer. Born into a family of musicians, he began his career as cantor in his native village and then studied in Pamplona, where he was a member of the Orfeón Pamplonés. When he was 17 he went to Argentina, earning his living as a teacher and pianist. On his return to Spain he studied composition with del Campo and the piano with Balsa; later he was the favourite pupil of Turina, whose nationalist style he followed in his own music while keeping his individuality. He had many popular successes and was twice winner of the National Music Prize.

WORKS

(selective list)

Stage: La duquesa del Candil (zar), 1947; La alegre alcaldesa (zar), 1949; La zapatera y el embozado (ballet), 1950; Primavera del portal (retablo lírico navideño), 1952; Barataria (op), inc.

Orch: 3 danzas, 1934; Homenaje a Manolete, gui, str, 1948; Sinfonia, 1950

Chbr: Sonata, vn, pf, 1932; Str Qt, 1940; Pf Qt, 1946

Pf: Giga en rondó, 1931; Sonatina, 1933, orchd

Many songs (Lorca, Machado etc.), film scores

Principal publisher: Unión Musical Española

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Fernández Cid: Jesús Leoz (Madrid, 1953)

T. Marco: Historia de la música española: siglo XX (Madrid, 1983; Eng. trans., 1993)

CARLOS GÓMEZ AMAT

Lepescheur. See PESCHEUR family.

Le Petit, Johannes. See NINOT LE PETIT.

Le Picard [Le Picart]. French and Flemish family of organ builders. Philippe Le Picard (i) (b 1620–30; d Noyon, 1701) built a new organ at Montdidier in 1667 and restored that in Amiens Cathedral in 1671. With his son Antoine (fl 1685–1716) he enlarged the organ at Liessies in 1693–5 and restored that in Noyon Cathedral in 1698. Antoine constructed a new organ with three manuals and 36 stops at Saint Hubert Abbey in 1685 (case survives) and repaired that at Amiens Cathedral early in the 18th century. Philippe Le Picard (ii) (b Noyon, 1650–68; d Liège, 15 May 1729), another son, married Marie-Anne Delaplace before 1701. A fine builder, he worked on the organs at St Pierre, Liège (1702); St Lambert's Cathedral, Liège (1705; with French pedals) and Ste Croix, Liège (1716). The only surviving example of his work is the organ in Gronsveld, near Maastricht (1711). He provided the upkeep and the restoration of many organs in Liège, and is considered as the founder of the school of organ building there.

Jean-Baptiste Le Picard (bap. Liège, 23 May 1706; d Metz, 18 May 1779), son of Philippe (ii), spent his whole life in Liège. Also a fine builder in the French style, he made organs with short compass divisions (Récit, c′, and Echo, c) and pedal pull-downs. His instruments include those at the Dominicanerkerk, Maastricht (1734–5), in collboration with his brother Jean-François Le Picard (bap. Liège, 18 Oct 1711; d Metz, 21 April 1784); the Benedictine abbey at Liège (1736–7); Vlierbeek Abbey (1737–8); Beaufays Abbey, near Liège (1741–2; extant); Nunhem, near Roermond (1742; two manuals, with pull-downs; the Positif survives as the choir organ in the Martinikerk at Groningen); Houtain-l'Evêque (*c*1745); Roermond (*c*1745; now in the Gereformeerde Oosterkerk, Utrecht); Roermond, Groot-Seminarie (1745; case and seven stops survive); Thorn Abbey (1745); Hodimont (1747); Roermond Cathedral (1750–52; three manuals, with pull-downs); St Loup, Namur; St Pierre, Liège (1739–41; case survives); Herkenrode Abbey, Kuringen (1744–6); Onze Lieve Vrouwbasiliek, Tongeren (1750–52; case survives); St Truiden Abbey (1753–6), Chênée (1756). Joseph Le Picard, another son of Philippe (ii) (bap. Liège, 14 July 1704), was an organ builder at Metz.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Dufourcq: Esquisse d'une histoire de l'orgue en France (Paris, 1935), 311

M. Waltmans and M. Smeets: Kerkorgels te Roermond (Heythuysen, 1957)

T.J. Gerits: 'De Luikse orgelbouwer Jan-Baptist Le Picard: een bijdrage tot zijn leven en werk', Het oude Land van Loon, xxv (1970), 101–45

G. Schumacher: 'La facture d'orgues au XVIIIe siècle: la dynastie des Picard et Robustelly', Bulletin de la Société Liégeoise de Musicologie, xxviii (1980), 1–22

M. Haine and N. Meeùs: Dictionnaire des facteurs d'instruments de musique en Wallonie et à Bruxelles du 9e siècle à nos jours (Liège, 1986), 258–9 [with list of works in Belgium]

G. Quaedvlieg: 'Jean-Baptiste le Picard en het orgee van de voormalige Predikherenkerk te Maastricht', Het orgel, xciv (1998), 21

GUY OLDHAM/JEAN-PIERRE FÉLIX

Le Picq [Le Picque, Lepic, Le Pichi, Picq, Pick, Pich, Pik], Charles [Carlo] (b Naples, 1744; d St Petersburg, 1806). French choreographer and dancer. As a youth he was influenced by the Noverrian form of ballet en action. His initial contract as figurant at Stuttgart from February 1760, shortly before Noverre's arrival, was extended in 1761 for six more years, with the additional clause that he be given special instruction by Noverre in 'Serieux-Tanzen'. By 1766 he was a leading dancer. After Noverre's departure in 1767 Le Picq transferred to Vienna, where in 1765 he had already come into contact with Hilverding, an early exponent of dramatic dance. He may also have appeared in Warsaw. When Noverre took over at Vienna in late 1767 Le Picq became principal dancer. In 1769 he moved to Italy and, apart from two short visits to Paris to dance under Noverre (1776, 1778), remained until early 1782. He choreographed his first work, a Noverre revival, at Padua in June 1769, thereafter alternating as director of ballets at the S Benedetto in Venice and the Regio Ducal in Milan, briefly working also at the Pergola in Florence. At Milan he staged the first ballet in Hasse's last opera, Il Ruggiero (1771); on 26 December 1772, in Mozart's Lucio Silla, he both choreographed the opera's closing ciaccona and, after Act 1, revived Noverre's Les jalousies du sérail. Mozart made souvenir sketches of its music (mainly by Joseph Starzer).

For two periods, May 1773 to January 1776 and May 1777 to November 1781, Le Picq was chief choreographer at the S Carlo in Naples. There he staged the internal dances for the revival of Gluck's Orfeo ed Euridice (4 November 1774). In between these two contracts he made his Parisian début, dancing under Noverre's direction at the Opéra in Gluck's Alceste (1776), and worked as choreographer at the S Benedetto in Venice. Afterwards at Naples he became acquainted with the young Martín y Soler, who provided the music for most of his original ballets from 1780 onwards as well as a new setting to replace Gluck's original for a revival of Angiolini's Semiramide (13 August 1780). Le Picq moved to London in 1782. At the King's Theatre he was first dancer, again under Noverre, and then director of ballets (December 1782 to April 1785). His initial successes there led Catherine II to instruct the Russian ambassador in May 1783 to engage him for her court ballets, but prior contracts did not permit his acceptance until 1786. He was ballet-master at St Petersburg until his retirement in 1799, collaborating on several occasions with Martín y Soler, court composer since 1790. Le Picq was instrumental in promoting an Italian translation of Noverre's Lettres sur la danse, but only two of the original 15 chapters were published (as Due lettere scritte a diversi soggetti, Naples, 1774). In a final expression of gratitude to the master who had promoted his own career, he issued a lavish edition of Noverre's works at St Petersburg in 1803–4.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MooserA

M.H. Winter: The Pre-Romantic Ballet (London, 1974)

R. Cafiero: 'Aspetti della musica coreutica fra settecento e ottocento', Il Teatro di San Carlo 1737–1987, ed. B. Cagli and A. Ziino, ii (Naples, 1987), 309–31

K.K. Hansell: 'Il ballo teatro e l'opera italiana', SOI, v (1988), 214–42

KATHLEEN KUZMICK HANSELL

L'Epine [Lépine, Lespine, Picart]. French family of organ builders. Adrian L'Epine (fl Bordeaux, 1711–31) worked on the organs of Bordeaux Cathedral (1711), St Jean-de-Luz (1724) and St Michel, Bordeaux (1731). Jean-François L'Epine (i) (b Abbeville, *c*1682; d Toulouse, 1762), brother of Adrian, settled in Toulouse about 1725 and worked at Albi, Rodez and Lodève. His son Jean-François L'Epine (ii) l'aîné (b Toulouse, 1732; d Pézenas, 1817) was a pupil and colleague of Bédos de Celles. He built the organs at Pézenas (1755–6; with an early example of a Hautboy on the Récit) and Montpellier Cathedral (in collaboration with Dominique Cavaillé-Coll). He worked for a long time with Isnard at Béziers and at Narbonne (1776–80). Another son of Jean-François L'Epine (i), Adrien (b Toulouse, 1735; d Montargis, 1795), was trained by his father and then in Paris by L.-A. Clicquot. In 1758 he married Clicquot's daughter, Marie Catherine, and worked in partnership with his brother-in-law whilst gradually establishing his own organ building business. In 1765 he built instruments at the cathedrals of Nantes and Auxerre (where François Callinet was his apprentice); he also worked at Nogent-sur-Seine, Arpajon, and at Notre Dame de Bonne Nouvelle, Paris. He sold a piano organisé to Beaumarchais. Adrien's masterpiece is the organ at the Ecole Militaire, Paris (1772–3; three manuals, 31 stops including two Dessus de flûte), an instrument which won him a position as one of the two 'facteurs d'orgue du Roi'. Adrien built two small organs for the Marquis de Brunoy, and the organ for Brunoy's church at a cost of 14,000 livres. After his wife's death and the reconstruction of the organ at St Médard, Paris (1778), whose bellows had failed, Adrien retired to Montargis. He was ruined by the Revolution.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. VidaL: 'Jean-François L'Epine, facteur d'orgue (1732–1817)', Fédération historique (Montpellier, 1976), 283–330

J.-L. Bergnes: Jean-François L'Epine, facteur d'orgues languedocien (Béziers, 1983)

J.-C. Tosi: Le grand orgue de l'église Saint-Jean Baptiste de Nemours (Courlay, 1993)

GUY OLDHAM/PIERRE HARDOUIN

L'Epine, (Francesca) Margherita [Françoise Marguérite] de (*b c*1680; d London, 8 Aug 1746). Italian soprano, active in England. Of possible Huguenot extraction, she sang at Venice in 1698–1700, and was described as a virtuoso of the court of Mantua. She arrived in London in 1702, probably from Tuscany with the German composer Jakob Greber, whose mistress she was (the poet laureate Nicholas Rowe satirized her as 'base Greber's Peg'), and her sister Maria Gallia, also a singer. L'Epine sang at Lincoln's Inn Fields in a play called The Fickle Shepherdess, for which she received 20 guineas on 27 May 1703. She appeared twice with Greber at the same theatre in June, in works of his composition, and was singing at Southborough near Tunbridge Wells in the summer. She was courted by more than one peer of the realm and lived with Daniel Finch, Earl of Nottingham, at his seat, Burley, during the autumn and early winter of 1703. In these early years she danced as well as sang in public. From January 1704 she was employed regularly at Drury Lane until January 1708, when she moved with the rest of the opera company to the Queen's Theatre, remaining there until December 1714. At first her repertory was confined to songs and cantatas in Italian and English, and included many by Purcell, Giovanni Bononcini and Alessandro Scarlatti. She enjoyed the usual benefit each spring. It was at this period that the rivalry between her partisans and those of the English soprano Catherine Tofts grew notorious: on 5 February 1704 a former servant of the latter created a disturbance in the theatre by throwing oranges and hissing when L'Epine was singing. L'Epine's extramural activities inspired many an unheroic couplet in the press and more exalted circles; on 13 July 1706 an anti-theatrical writer in The Observator asked: 'Can we help Laughing and Weeping the same time, to see a Secretary retiring from the Great Affairs of State to an Allcove with Donna Margaritta de la Pin, alias Pegg Thorn, to hear her Sing "Colly my Cow", and "Uptails all"?'.

L'Epine returned to the Continent for a time late in 1704; during the following summer Greber, with whom she lived in Suffolk Street, left England. She sang occasionally at Chelsea College, York Buildings and Hickford's Room and on 5 February 1706 at court. On 13 April she introduced at Drury Lane a new English cantata 'written and compos'd after the Italian manner'. The first London opera in which she is known to have appeared was Haym's adaptation of Bononcini's Camilla at Drury Lane; she replaced Mrs Tofts as the heroine at the fourth performance (23 April 1706) and sang the part probably until 4 June. On 1 April 1707 she sang in the Pepusch pasticcio Thomyris, and from then until 1714 was in almost all the operas, most of them pasticcios, produced in London: a revival of Camilla (December 1707, in a male part), Love's Triumph (February 1708), A. Scarlatti's Pirro e Demetrio (December 1708 and later), Clotilda (March 1709), Almahide (January 1710 and later), Mancini's Idaspe fedele (March 1710 and later), Gasparini's Antioco (December 1711) and Ambleto (February 1712), Galliard's English opera Calypso and Telemachus (in which she played Calypso, May 1712), Ernelinda (February 1713 and later), Dorinda (the revival of January 1714), Creso (January 1714) and Arminio (March 1714 and later). In several of these L'Epine played male parts. At her benefit in Arminio on 1 May 1714 she inserted additional songs and played 'an Instrument of Invention entirely New, imitating the Harp and Lute'. She sang Goffredo in the revivals of Handel's Rinaldo on 23 January 1712 and 6 May 1713 and created the parts of Eurilla in his Il pastor fido (22 November 1712), Agilea in Teseo (10 January 1713) and probably Flavia in Silla (2 June 1713).

Early in 1715 L'Epine joined Pepusch at Drury Lane, only returning to the King's for a royal command performance of Idaspe fedele on 27 August. She had sung in odes by Pepusch as early as 1707, and they gave a concert together at the Great Room, Peter's Court, on 14 June 1710; she was associated with him for the rest of her life. The date of their marriage, generally given as 1718, is uncertain; they had a son John (baptized at St Clement Danes, 9 January 1724), 'a child of very promising parts' according to Hawkins, who died prematurely, probably late in 1738. L'Epine sang in several masques by Pepusch at Drury Lane, including the popular Venus and Adonis (March 1715 and later), Myrtillo (November 1715), Apollo and Daphne (January 1716) and The Death of Dido (April 1716). In the first three she played leading male parts, as she did in English revivals of Camilla, Calypso and Telemachus and Thomyris early in 1717. Many of Pepusch's cantatas, especially those with Italian words, were probably written for her. The following season she made a single concert appearance at York Buildings on 5 March 1718, but the next winter was back with Pepusch at the rebuilt Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre. She sang several of her old parts and in the first performance of Galliard's Circe (11 April 1719); five days later she introduced 'a new Trumpet Song' in Camilla. She retired at the end of this season and took up teaching; several of her pupils gave concerts in the next few years. In June 1720 she came out of retirement to replace Mrs Turner Robinson in one performance each of Domenico Scarlatti's Narciso, Handel's Radamisto and Porta's Numitore during the Royal Academy's first season at the King's. She sang once at Drury Lane by special request as late as 21 May 1733.

'The Rehearsal of an Opera': painting by Marco Ricci, c1709 (private collection); Nicolini and Catherine Tofts (dressed in white) sing a duet, accompanied by Haym at the harpsichord, Margherita de L'Epine (with a muff) stands to their right talking to Pepusch (extreme right), while her mother stands behind holding a fan; other characters include Heidegger (seated extreme right)

L'Epine was the leading female singer in the years just before and after the introduction of Italian opera to London, and the first Italian to establish a lasting reputation there. She was immensely popular; Downes in 1708 estimated that she had received 'by Modest Computation ... by the Stage and Gentry above 10,000 Guineas', though this may be an exaggeration (her salary at the opera in 1707–8 and 1712–13 was £400). About 1710 she received £40 for singing in a private concert at the Duchess of Shrewsbury's house in Kensington. Burney was impressed by the difficulty of some of her songs: 'Indeed, her musical merit must have been very considerable to have kept her so long in favour ... Our galleries would have made her songs very short, had they not been executed in such a manner as to silence theatrical snakes, and command applause'. The compass of the parts Handel composed for her is d′ to a″, though others take her down to c′ and up to b♭″. She was tall, with a fine stage presence, but according to Hawkins 'remarkably swarthy, and so destitute of personal charms, that Dr Pepusch, who afterwards married her, seldom called her by any other name than Hecate, which she answered to very readily'. She was a fine harpsichordist, and her performance of pieces from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, then owned by Pepusch, was much admired. She appears with her mother, Nicolini, Tofts, Pepusch, Heidegger and others in a conversation piece by Marco Ricci (see illustration).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDA; BurneyH; HawkinsH

E.L. Moor: 'Some Notes on the Life of Françoise Marguerite de L'Epine', ML, xxviii (1947), 341–6

D.F. Cook: 'Françoise Marguérite de L'Epine: the Italian Lady?', Theatre Notebook, xxxv (1981), 58–73, 104–13

WINTON DEAN

Leppard, Raymond (John) (b London, 11 Aug 1927). English conductor. He studied at the University of Cambridge from 1948 to 1952, where Hubert Middleton and Boris Ord were among his teachers. He made his London début as a conductor at the Wigmore Hall in 1952 and soon became known particularly for his lively interpretations of 17th- and 18th-century music and his inventive continuo playing. In 1957 he returned to Cambridge as lecturer in music and Fellow of Trinity College, remaining there until 1967. By then he had appeared at the leading English opera houses: he made his Covent Garden début in 1959 in the bicentenary production of Handel's Samson and first appeared at Glyndebourne in 1962 and at Sadler's Wells three years later. He also frequently conducted orchestral concerts, notably with the English Chamber Orchestra, specializing to some extent in 18th-century music: works by Handel, Haydn and Mozart were prominent in his programmes. From 1973 to 1980 he was principal conductor of the BBC Northern SO. He later moved to the USA and in 1987 was appointed conductor of the Indianapolis SO, which has flourished under his direction.

In 1962 Leppard conducted his own edition of Monteverdi's L'incoronazione di Poppea at Glyndebourne, inaugurating an important and influential series of revivals there and elsewhere of 17th-century Italian operas, among them Monteverdi's L'Orfeo and Il ritorno d'Ulisse in patria and works by Cavalli. Leppard's versions of these operas, particularly Cavalli's L'Ormindo and La Calisto, while successful with a wide public, and important for the interest they stimulated in early music, have been criticized for their free attitude to the original texts, especially in such matters as transposition of voice parts, rich orchestral writing, cuts and insertions, and remodelling of the librettos. Leppard's attitude, defined in his paper 'Cavalli's Operas', PRMA, xciii (1966–7), p.67, and in several shorter essays, is essentially an empirical one, based on his keen sense of theatrical timing and effect. Several of his editions have been published (Faber) and a number of recordings have been made which originate from his Glyndebourne performances.

As a harpsichordist and pianist, Leppard's most marked qualities are his liveliness of rhythm and crispness of articulation. Light, dance-like rhythms, polished phrasing and a keen sense of colour characterize his conducting and lend a special charm to his readings of music by Couperin, Rameau and their contemporaries. His Handel performances are notable more for vitality, shapeliness of line and precision of detail than for rhythmic breadth. His recordings include Monteverdi madrigals, music by Bach and his sons, Handel concertos and many rare works by 18th- and early 19th-century composers.

STANLEY SADIE

Le Prince, Louis (fl mid-17th century). French composer. Nothing is known about his life, and his only surviving work is a Missa sex vocum ad imitationem moduli 'Macula non est in te', published by Ballard in 1663. The fly-leaf indicates that he was then maître de chapelle at Lisieux Cathedral, but there is nothing in the archives there to confirm this. The title refers to the feast of the Immaculate Conception, and the work is typical of French 17th-century pieces in this genre: there are no instrumental or continuo parts, the melodic lines are simple and the counterpoint is skilful with a bias towards tonality. The work is fully discussed in F. George: La messe 'a cappella' en France au 17ème siècle: l'exemple de Louis Le Prince (thesis, U. of Tours, 1993).

JEAN-CHARLES LÉON

Le Quointe [Le Quoynte, Le Quoint, Le Coincte], Louis (b Ypres, 19 Oct 1652; d Saint Omer, 9 June 1717). Flemish composer and organist. He was a chorister at St Maarten, Ypres, from 8 October 1665. After his voice broke he enrolled in the seminary at Ypres and became a Jesuit on 30 September 1675. He spent the rest of his life in various houses of the Jesuit order in the southern Netherlands and northern France, notably at Saint Omer, generally as director of music and organist. He appears to have written a good deal of music, but only the set of Psalmi concertati (1704) and the Bouquet de fleurs seem to survive. The psalm collection suggests that he was a competent composer. The themes are often instrumental in nature, and the rhythms are well varied. There is also a wide range of vocal and instrumental textures, though there are too many duets in thirds.

WORKS

Psalmi concertati, 1–5vv, 4, 5 insts, op.6 (Antwerp, 1704)
Bouquet de fleurs, presénté aux âmes dévotes (14 songs), 1v, bc (Paris, 1722)

LOST WORKS

Psalmi breves pro omnibus . . . vesperis, 1–4vv, 3, 4 insts, op.1
Airs spirituels nouveaux, 1–3vv . . . pour les violons, les flûtes, les hautbois, le clavecin et l'orgue en forme de duo, et de trio, op.2 (Valenciennes, 1696)
Pièces en trio . . . à la manière italienne et . . . française, vn, fl, ob, op.2 (Valenciennes, 1696) [presumably inst. arr. of Airs spirituels]
Psaumes, 1–5vv (Antwerp, 1704)
Missae, litaniae, motetti et Tantum ergo, 5vv/insts, op.3a
Sonates, 2 vn, va, b viol, bc, op.3a [sic]
Missa brevis, motetta, Te Deum et litania, 5vv/insts, op.5
Motetti, 1v, bc, op.7
Motetti, 1v, 3 insts, op.9
Compositione sacre de diversi, 1–5vv, op.11

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vander StraetenMPB, i; VannesD
R. Monseur, ed.: Catalogue de la bibliothèque du Conservatoire royal de musique de Liège, Fonds Terry: musique religieuse (Liège, 1959)

JOSÉ QUITIN

Le Rat (fl 1549–57). French composer. He contributed seven four-voice chansons to anthologies published mostly by Du Chemin at Paris between 1549 and 1557 (RISM 1549^{27}, 1550^{11}, 1550^{12}, 1551^{9}, 1553^{20}, 1557^{10}). The texts are all amorous épigrammes typical of the preceding generation (one is by Clément Marot and another by François I); they are set schematically in the homophonic manner of Sandrin, Certon and Arcadelt, but often alternating duple and triple mensuration.

FRANK DOBBINS

Lerchenfels, Johann Sixt von [Lerchenfelsu, Jan Sixt z]. See SIXT Z LERCHENFELSU, JAN.

Lerdahl, Fred [Alfred] (Whitford) (b Madison, WI, 10 March 1943). American composer and theorist. He studied at Lawrence University (BM 1965) and Princeton (MFA 1968), where his teachers included Kim and Babbitt. On a Fulbright scholarship in 1968–9 he attended the Freiburg Hochschule für Musik, where he was a pupil of Wolfgang Fortner. He has received many other awards, among them the Koussevitzky Composition Prize (1966), two National Institute of Arts and Letters Awards (1971, 1988) and a Guggenheim Fellowship (1974–5); in 1981, 1984 and 1991 he was composer-in-residence at IRCAM in Paris. He has had works commissioned by, among others, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation (Eros, 1975), the Orpheus Chamber Orchestra (Waves, 1988) and the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center (Marches, 1992). Lerdahl has taught at the University of California, Berkeley (1969–71), Harvard (1971–9), Columbia University (1979–85) and the University of Michigan (1985– 91); in 1991 he was appointed Fritz Reiner Professor of Musical Composition at Columbia University.

Lerdahl's early music, post-Schoenbergian in style, is well exemplified by Wake (1968), in which lines and phrases from Joyce's Finnegans Wake are assembled so as to echo the novel's major themes and structure. Instrumentation, melodic design, rhythm and texture are used to elaborate and interpret the text. With Chords (1974, rev. 1983) and Eros (1975), tonal elements were incorporated into his musical language, and his treatment of form became more strict. Eros consists of 21 continuous variations, each 20 bars long. The text, 'Coitus', from Lustra (1915) by Ezra Pound, serves as a point of departure: it is intoned in its entirety only once, in the first variation, and is thereafter varied along with the music. A rigorous underlying structure governs the unfolding of all melodic, rhythmic and harmonic details.

From the variation technique of Eros spring Lerdahl's string quartets (1978–82). Written in 'expanding variation' form each variation in the First Quartet is half as long again as the preceding one; thus the initial variation lasts seconds, the final one six minutes. The Second Quartet, an intense sequel to the more inward First, continues this variation procedure with its two parts, nine and thirteen minutes in length. With the Fantasy Etudes (1985) Lerdahl creates a constantly evolving polyphony by overlaying expanding variations. In Quiet Music (1994), based on an almost cyclic variation process, he develops the pianissimo orchestral material to form a seamless sonic excursion much like looking at the same object from changing perspectives.

Lerdahl has also been productive as a theorist. During the 1970s he and the linguist Ray Jackendoff developed an innovative theory of tonal music deriving from generative linguistics and cognitive science; their monograph, A Generative Theory of Tonal Music, appeared in 1983. Lerdahl has continued to explore areas of musical cognition, and has pursued interests in computer-assisted composition. In a series of articles beginning in 1988 he has developed a theory of tonal pitch space and set a theoretical groundwork for late 20th-century composition and analysis. In 'Timbral Hierarchies' he posits a hierarchical structure for the organization of timbre based on the grammatical model, while in 'Cognitive Constraints on Compositional Systems' he scrutinizes the perceptual reality under which organizational methods of composition purport to work. His work in theory serves as a foundation for his own creative activity as a composer.

WORKS
(selective list)

Pf Fantasy, 1964; Str Trio, 1965–6; Wake (J. Joyce), Mez, vn, va, vc, hp, perc ens, 1968; Chromorhythmos, orch, 1972; Aftermath (cant., Lerdahl), S, Mez, Bar, chbr ens, 1973; Chords, orch, 1974, rev. 1983; Eros: Variations (E. Pound: Coitus), Mez, a fl, va, hp, pf, elec gui, el db, perc, 1975; Imitations, fl, va, hp, 1977, rev. 1992; 2 str qts, 1978, 1982; Waltzes, vn, va, vc, db, 1981; Beyond the Realm of Bird (E. Dickinson), S, chbr orch, 1981–4; Episodes and Refrains, wind qnt, 1982; Fantasy Etudes, chbr ens, 1985; Cross-Currents, orch, 1987; Waves, chbr orch, 1988; Marches, chbr ens, 1992; Without Fanfare, wind, perc, 1994; Quiet Music, orch, 1994

Principal publisher: Boelke-Bomart

Recorded interviews in US-NHoh

NOEL B. ZAHLER

Lerdo de Tejada, Miguel (b Morelia, 29 Sept 1869; d Mexico City, 25 May 1941). Mexican conductor and composer. He studied music at seminaries in Morelia and Mexico City. Although his formal music education was still limited, he composed a number of salon pieces under the influence of Ernesto Elorduy Medina, Manuel Ponce and Felipe Villanueva Gutiérrez. His song Perjera (with text by Fernando Luna y Drusina) achieved great popularity. After gaining a better command of notation, he composed the zarzuelas Las luces de Los Ángeles and Las dormilonas, whose first performances were enthusiastically acclaimed at the Teatro Principal in Mexico City. In 1901 he organized his own orchestra, which toured the United States and performed at the Panamerican Exposition in Buffalo in 1913. In this same year he completed studies in harmony, orchestration and conducting with Alfredo Pacheco. Other conducting assignments led to his creation of a police orchestra that still bears his name. He toured extensively with this group in the United States and South America and made his last appearance with it in Havana before his death. In addition to the numerous arrangements of traditional songs he made for this ensemble, he composed many songs of his own, including Consentida, Lolita, Tú bien lo sabes, Vas diciendo, and Ya soy feliz. His piano music includes Caracteres (tres danzas): 'Bulliciosa', 'Expresiva' and 'Retobada'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Mayer-Serra: Música y músicos de Latinoamerica (Mexico City, 1947), 268–9

M. Talavera: Miguel Lerdo de Tejada: su vida pintoresca y anecdótica (Mexico City, 1958)

WALTER AARON CLARK

Lerescu, Emil (b Piteşti, 26 Jan 1921). Romanian composer. After studying with Jora at the Bucharest Academy (1941–6) he became a music teacher in schools in Piteşti (1946–52), Craiova (1952–4) and at the Popular School of Arts in Bucharest (1954–83). Lerescu made his name as a composer through his songs and choral works, which are marked out by their melodiousness and frenetic energy. To a post-Romantic style laced with folk references he gradually added modal and chromatic elements to create a personal compositional language. His operas are imbued with a particularly intense passion.

WORKS
(selective list)

Ops: Ecaterina Teodoroiu (1, N. Tăutu), 1964, rev. 1969, Bucharest, Română, 10 May 1971; Peneş curcanul [Peneş the Foot Soldier] (op-ballad, 1, after V. Alecsandri), 1977, Iaşi, Română, 30 Dec 1981; D-ale carnavalului [Carnival People] (comic op, 3, after I.L. Caragiale), 1978, Bucharest, Orchestra Radio, 17 June 1982; Steaua fără nume [The Star with no Name] (lyric op, 3, after M. Sebastian), 1981; Patima [The Passion] (op, 3, after M. Sorbul), 1995, Bucharest, Palatul Cotroceni, 4 April 1995

Other works: Poeme corale [Choral Poems], 1967; Fântâni şi stele [Fountains and Stars] (song cycle, I. Brad), 1973; Inscripţii corale [Choral Inscriptions], 1975; Toccata, pf, 1987; Gândind la Eminescu [Thoughts on Eminescu], ens, 1988; Terţinele luminii, sonata, pf, 1988; Suita eminesciană, chorus, 1991–6

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Cosma: Muzicieni români (Bucharest, 1970)

D. Popovici: Muzica corală românească (Bucharest, 1970)

OCTAVIAN COSMA

Lerescu, Sorin (b Craiova, 14 Nov 1953). Romanian composer. After studying composition with Olah and Vieru at the Bucharest Academy (1975–9) he attended classes in Darmstadt (1984) and at IRCAM in Paris. In Bucharest Lerescu taught in the Popular School of Arts (1982–5) then the Popular University, and in 1991 became a teacher at the George Enescu Lyceum. In 1982 he founded and became director of the contemporary music ensemble Traiect. Lerescu employs a wide range of modern compositional techniques in his works. Repetition and consonance feature prominently in the symphonies. His chamber works contain passages that suggest a modal language, despite their apparent random and improvised nature, and later works are notable for an increased exploration of timbral resources.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Modalis I, 1979; Sym. no.1, 1984; Modalis II, conc., fl, orch, 1986; Sym., str, 1986; Sym. no.2, 1988; Sym. no.3, 1994

Chbr: Legende, chbr ens, 1977; Str Qt no.1, 1978; Actio, 1980; Music for Sax and Perc, 1980; Phonologos I, kbds, trbn, db, perc, tape, 1983; Sunet – Formă – Culoare [Sound – Form – Colours], insts, tape, 1983; Configuraţii (Str Qt no.2), 1988; Sonata, fl, pf, 1988; Phonologos IV, 6 pfmrs, 1991; Suono-Tempo, 9 insts, 1991; Reflex-Quarto, sax qt, 1992; Eikona, 7 pfmrs, 1993; Phonologos V, 7 pfmrs, 1993; Les jeux sont faits, ens, 1995; Reflex 5, perc groups, 1996

Solo inst: Divertisment, cl, 1977; Piano-Canto, 1980; Solo-Multiplii, cl/perc/trbn/db/vc, 1983–6; Phonologos III, org/pf, 1984; Proportions, fl, 1984

Vocal: Cant. I, T, Bar, vocal ens, 1979; O oră de iubire [An Hour of Love] (G. Tomozei), song cycle, 1982; Cant. II, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1988

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Tartler: Melopoetica (Bucharest, 1984)

I. Anghel: Orientări, direcţii, curente ale muzicii româneşti în a doua parte a secolului XX [Trends, directions and currents in Romanian music in the second half of the 20th century] (Bucharest, 1997)

OCTAVIAN COSMA

Lerethier, Isaac. See LHÉRITIER, ISAAC.

Le Riche, Antonius. See DIVITIS, ANTONIUS.

Lerman, Richard (b San Francisco, 5 Dec 1944). American composer. He studied at Brandeis University (BA 1966, MFA film/theatre arts 1970) with Shapero, Lucier and others. He has taught at the Boston Museum School (1973–95) and Arizona State University West (from 1994). His compositions develop unexpected textures from natural phenomena and materials, collected with his own specially constructed microphones and transducers. In Travelon Gamelon (1979–), loudspeakers mounted on bicycle handlebars amplify the sounds of the bicycles in motion; these are blended with sounds made by striking the spokes with metal or wood. Concert versions of the work use rhythmic and melodic gamelan instruments rather than bicycles. Eight Pieces from the Sonoran Desert (1997) features sounds made by ants, bees and cactus thorns. Other works allude to social and political themes. Visual and sonic images in Incident at Three Mile Island address the seductiveness and dangers of technology. Threading History: the Japanese-American Experience (1994–5), a collaboration with Mona Higuchi, explores the experience of Japanese-Americans interned in the USA during World War II. Later works involve computer and MIDI techniques. Lerman's honours include fellowships from the NEA and the Guggenheim Foundation.

WORKS
(selective list)

Installations: Hand-Built Microphones, 1983–9; A Footnote from Chernobyl, 1987; Metal Mesh Pieces, 1987; News Filters &' 20″ × 24″ Pacific Transducer Series, 1988; Polaroid Photographs, 1988; Los desaparecidso for Amnesty International, 1989–90, collab. M. Higuchi; Kristallnacht, 1991–8, collab. Higuchi; Sado Island Rice, 1991; Hesselt Corn, 1993; Threading History: the Japanese-American Experience, 1994–5, collab. Higuchi; TRACES, 1997, collab. Higuchi [4 pieces from Eight Pieces from the Sonoran Desert]

Other works: Incident at Three Mile Island, amp tuning forks, lasers, 1979; Travelon Gamelon, concert version for 3 amp bicycles, promenade version for 25 amp bicycles with riders, 1979–; A Matter of Scale, 1986; Audio Transducer Series, music for radio, 1986–98; Music for Plinky & Straw, small amp insts, straws, scissors, 1988; Changing States, transducers, small blowtorch, 1989 [rev. with perc, 1997]; Hawaii Transducer Series, 1989; Changing States Three, 1991, collab. Higuchi, Y. Fukunaga, A. Nakamura and others; Takuhon, 1991, collab. Higuchi, Fukunaga, Nakamura and others; Eight Pieces from the Sonoran Desert, video, sax, cptr, elecs, 1997; Border Fences, 1998; Sounds from the Southern Hemisphere, 1998, collab. D. Quin; Transducer Series Films, 1982–9; many works for 1 pfmr

Principal recording companies: Artifact, Apollohuis, Folkways

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. van Peer: Interviews with Sound Artists Taking Part in the Festival ECHO, the Images of Sound II (Eindhoven, 1993)

ARTHUR J. SABATINI

Lermontov, Mikhail Yur′evich (b Moscow, 3/15 Oct 1814; d Pyatigorsk, 15/27 July 1841). Russian poet and novelist of Scottish descent. A visit to the Caucasus when he was nine left a lasting impression on him. In 1834 he became a Guards officer. His first published poem Hajji Abrek (1835) had a Caucasian setting; it attracted little attention. He became widely known for a poem attacking society in connection with the death of Pushkin (1837), which was circulated clandestinely; he was consequently expelled from the Guards and transferred to a regiment of the line in the Caucasus. He was pardoned and reinstated (1838) but, as a result of a duel, was again posted to the Caucasus in 1840, where he was killed in a duel.

A typical Romantic in life as in art, Lermontov was influenced by such Western writers as Byron, Goethe and Schiller, yet his own Romanticism is specifically Russian, and his work also contains elements of realism which foreshadow Tolstoy and Chekhov. His rhythmically complex poetry, extremely mellifluous and rich in visual imagery, defies translation. His best-known poem Demon (1829–41) is a version of the Lucifer legend in a Caucasian setting. His fastidious prose also loses much in translation and is little appreciated outside Russia; yet his novel Geroy nashego vremeni ('A Hero of our Time', 1840) is one of the masterpieces of Russian fiction.

Many composers have been attracted both by Lermontov's lyric poetry and by the exotic element in much of his work. There are innumerable settings of his short poems, especially by Russian composers; operas, ballets and symphonic poems by such composers as Asaf′yev, Balakirev, Rachmaninoff and Ippolitov-Ivanov have also been based on his works, as well as Glinka's Prayer (1855) for solo voice, chorus and orchestra.

WORKS SET TO MUSIC

Geroy nashego vremeni [A Hero of our Time]: Krepost′ u kamennogo broda, op by V. Gaygerova, 1941; Knyazhna Mèri [Princess Mary], op by V.A. Dekhterev, Moscow, 1941; op by A.N. Aleksandrov, Moscow, 1946, rev. 1948; ballet by V.M. Deshevov, 1940; Knyazhna Mèri, film score by L.A. Schvarts

Boyarin Orsha [The Nobleman Orsha]: op by Kashperov, 1880; op by K.D. Agrenev-Slavyansky, Tiflis, 1910; ops by G. Fistulari, P. Krotov

Demon [Satan]: op by A.G. Rubinstein, 1875; Tamara, op by Baron Vietinghof-Scheel, St Petersburg, 1886; lyric scenes by A.S. Yur′yevich, St Petersburg, 1891; Thamara, op by L.A. Bourgault-Ducoudray, 1891; Tamara, op by L. Rogowski, 1918; Tamara, sym. poem by Balakirev, 1864; cant. by P.I. Blaramberg, 1869; orat by P. Gilson; Sym. no.3, op.18, and Tamara, 1v, orch, by E. Nápravník; ballet by S.F. Tsintsadze

Maskarad [The Masked Ball]: lyric-dramatic scenes by N.A. Kolesnikov, 1890s; incid music by Glazunov, 1913, perf. 1917; incid music by V.Ya. Shebalin, 1939; op by A.V. Mosolov, 1940;

op by V.N. Denbsky, 1941; incid music by A. Khachaturian, 1941; op by Bunin, 1944; op by B.A. Zeidman, 1945; op by Nersesov, 1948; op by A.P. Artamanov, Khar′kiv, 1957; ballet by Yu. Lamputin, ?1960

Mtsïri: sym. poem by Catoire, 1899; sym. poem, op.8, by V.A. Senilov, 1906; sym. poem by O.V. Taktakishvili, 1956; ballet by A. Balanchivadze, Tbilisi, 1964; sym. poem, op.54, by Ippolitov-Ivanov, 1923–4

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (R. Taruskin)
M.Yu. Karatïgin: 'Lermontov i muzïka', Sovremennik (1914), nos.17–20, p.148
E. Kann: M.Yu. Lermontov i muzïka (Moscow, 1939)
I. Eiges: M.Yu. Lermontov v romansakh i pesnyakh sovetskikh kompozitorov (Moscow, 1951)
H. Troyat: L'étrange destin de Lermontov (Paris, 1952, 2/1979)
B. Glovatsky: Lermontov i muzïka (Moscow, 1964)

APRIL FITZLYON

Lerner, Alan Jay (b New York, 31 Aug 1918; d New York, 14 June 1986). American librettist and lyricist. Born into a wealthy family of dress retailers (the Lerner Shops), he was educated at Choate, Harvard and Oxford. While at Harvard he contributed to the Hasty Pudding shows and after graduation he chose not to go into the family business but instead took a job writing scripts for radio. He met composer Frederick Loewe in 1942 and their first Broadway collaboration was the unsuccessful What's Up? (1943). As he would throughout his career, Lerner wrote both libretto and lyrics. After a few short-lived efforts, the team had a hit with Brigadoon (1947), followed by Paint Your Wagon (1951), My Fair Lady (1956) and Camelot (1960). Lerner and Loewe also scored the popular film musical Gigi (1958).

Lerner also collaborated with other composers, writing the experimental Broadway musical Love Life (1948) with Kurt Weill and the Hollywood musical Royal Wedding (1951) with Burton Lane. After Loewe's retirement in 1960, Lerner collaborated with a variety of composers on a series of commercial failures. His last film score was The Little Prince (1974), with Loewe briefly coming out of retirement, and his last Broadway musical was Dance a Little Closer (1983) with Charles Strouse. Lerner's unique talent lay in his ability to write romantic lyrics that were also filled with intelligence and wit. His libretto and lyrics for My Fair Lady remain one of the most expert pieces of craftsmanship in the American musical theatre and several of his works are continually revived.

WORKS
(selective list)

composers in parentheses

STAGE

dates are those of the first New York performance

What's Up? (F. Loewe), 11 Nov 1943 [collab. A. Pierson]
The Day Before Spring (Loewe), 22 Nov 1945
Brigadoon (Loewe), 13 March 1947 [incl. The Heather on the Hill, Almost like Being in Love, Come to me, bend to me]; film 1954
Love Life (K. Weill), 7 Oct 1948 [incl. Green-Up Time, Here I'll stay]
Paint Your Wagon (Loewe), 12 Nov 1951 [incl. I talk to the trees, They call the wind Maria]; film 1969
My Fair Lady (Loewe), 15 March 1956 [incl. On the Street where you Live, The Rain in Spain, I could have danced all night, Get me to the church on time, I've grown accustomed to her face]; film 1964
Camelot (Loewe), 3 Dec 1960 [incl. If Ever I could Leave you, Camelot]; film 1967
On a Clear Day You Can See Forever (B. Lane), 17 Oct 1966 [incl. Come back to me, On a Clear Day]; film 1970
Coco (A. Previn), 18 Dec 1969
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue (L. Bernstein), 4 May 1976
Gigi (Loewe), 13 Nov 1973 [see FILM]
Carmelina (Lane), 8 April 1979 [collab. J. Stein; incl. One More Walk around the Garden]
Dance a Little Closer (C. Strouse), 11 May 1983 [incl. There's always one you can't forget, Dance a little closer] those not mentioned above; unless otherwise stated, both lyrics and screenplays by Lerner

FILM

Royal Wedding (Lane), 1951 [incl. You're all the world to me]
An American in Paris (G. Gershwin, screenplay only), 1951
Gigi (Loewe), 1958 [incl. Thank heaven for little girls, I remember it well, The Night they Invented Champagne, Gigi]
The Little Prince (Loewe), 1974

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A.J. Lerner: The Street Where I Live (New York, 1978)
A.J. Lerner and B. Green: A Hymn to Him: the Lyrics of Alan Jay Lerner (New York, 1987)
G. Lees: Inventing Champagne: the Worlds of Lerner and Loewe (New York, 1990)
S. Citron: The Wordsmiths: Oscar Hammerstein II and Alan Jay Lerner (New York, 1993)

THOMAS S. HISCHAK

Lerner, Edward R(obert) (b New York, 19 April 1920). American musicologist. After taking the PhD in musicology at Yale University, where he studied under Leo Schrade, he taught at Columbia University (1958–62). He was on the faculty at Queens College, CUNY (1962–92); he later became professor of music (1969). Lerner's writings concentrate on the music of the Renaissance and Middle Ages, particularly the sacred music of these periods and the works of Alexander Agricola. In addition he has edited the Study Scores of Musical Styles, an annotated anthology of pieces illustrating the course of music history from plainchant to Bach as an aid to undergraduate instruction.

WRITINGS

The Sacred Music of Alexander Agricola (diss., Yale U., 1958)
'Richard Wagner's Apostle to America: Anton Seidl (1850–1898)', Columbia Library Columns, viii (1959), 24–32
'The "German" Works of Alexander Agricola', MQ, xlvi (1960), 56–66
'Some Motet Interpolations in the Catholic Mass', JAMS, xiv (1961), 24–30
'The Polyphonic Magnificat in 15th-Century Italy', MQ, l (1964), 44–58
'Historical Anthologies of Music: a Review and Critique', College Music Symposium, x (1970), 123–33
'The Music of Noel Bauldewen', JAMS, xxvii (1974), 525–7

EDITIONS

Alexander Agricola: Opera omnia, CMM, xxii/1–5 (1961–70)
Study Scores of Musical Styles (New York, 1968)
Opera omnia Henrici Isaac, CMM, lxv (1974–)

PAULA MORGAN

Le Rochois, Marie ['La Rochois'] (b Caen, *c*1658; d Paris, 9 Oct 1728). French soprano and singing teacher, commonly but incorrectly known as Marthe Le Rochois. She may have studied with Michel Lambert, who brought her to the attention of his son-in-law, Lully. She entered the Paris Opéra in 1678 and retired in 1698. Lully chose her to create the major female roles in his Persée, Amadis, Roland, Armide and Acis et Galathée; she was best known for her performance of Armide, the memory of which caused Le Cerf de la Viéville to 'shiver' with delight. After Lully's death in 1687 she sang the main female roles in works by Collasse, Marc-Antoine Charpentier, Desmarest, Marais, André Campra and A.C. Destouches. Titon du Tillet called her the 'greatest actress and the best model for declamation to have appeared on the Stage' (Le parnasse françois, Paris, 1732/R). He also wrote:

Although she was of mediocre height, dark complexioned and possessed a rather ordinary figure as seen off-stage, ... On stage she made one forget all the most beautiful Actresses; she had the air of a Queen or Goddess, her head nobly placed, with an admirable sense of Gesture; all her actions were correct and natural. She knew what to do during the Ritournelle which played while an Actress came on-stage, and she was a master of pantomime.

But according to Raguenet 'she was a wretched actress and sang insufferably out of tune'. On her retirement she received a 1500-livre pension which was augmented by the Duke of Sully. She then purchased a small country house in Certrouville-sur-Seine (now Sartrouville), outside Paris, where she received important musicians, actors and actresses who profited from her 'pleasant conversation, her knowledge and her good taste' (Titon du Tillet). Among her students were Marie Antier and Françoise Journet. She died in an apartment in Paris on rue St Honoré and was buried at St Eustache.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Raguenet: Paralèles des italiens et des françois (Paris, 1702, 3/c1710; Eng. trans., 1709/R)
J.-B. Durey de Noinville and L. Travenol: Histoire du théâtre de l'Académie royale de musique en France (Paris, 2/1757/R)
S. Pitou: The Paris Opera: an Encyclopedia of Operas, Ballets, Composers and Performers (Westport, CT, 1983)

JAMES R. ANTHONY

Lerolle, Jacques. See ROUART-LEROLLE.

Le Rouge, G(uillaume) [Rouge, W(illelmus) de] (fl *c*1450–65). Franco-Flemish composer. He is known from the ascriptions of a three-voice Missa 'So ys emprentid' (I-TRmp 90, 'W. de Rouge'; Rvat S Pietro B80, anon.; ed. in DTÖ, cxx, 1970), on Frye's song, and the three-voice virelai Se je fayz deuil (US-NHub 91, 'G. le Rouge'; D-Mbs Cgm 810, anon.; ed. L.L. Perkins and H. Garey, The Mellon Chansonnier, New Haven, 1979, i, 117). Tinctoris (CSM, xxii/2a, 1978, p.47) attributed to 'Lerouge' an unknown Missa 'Mon cuer pleure', perhaps on the chanson by Pierre Fontaine. The composer is almost certainly the Guillaume le Rouge who was a singer in the chapel of Charles d'Orléans in 1451–65, as he was mentioned by ELOY D'AMERVAL (who sang in Charles' chapel in 1464–5) in a list of outstanding composers with whom Eloy had had direct contact; Tinctoris too was active in Orléans in the early 1460s. However, Guillaume Ruby [Rubi], organist of Rouen Cathedral in 1399 and singer and scribe in the Burgundian court chapel in 1415–16 and 1431–50, who was assimilated to the singer of Charles d'Orléans by Wright, is never called 'Le Rouge' in the documents and seems to be another man altogether. Ruby is mentioned among other Burgundian singers in Binchois' motet Nove cantum melodie (1431). A Guillermus (de) Rosa sang soprano in S Pietro in Vaticano, Rome, in 1462–5 (so he too cannot be the same as Le Rouge) and in the papal chapel in 1469–75/6 (he is listed again at S Pietro as a tenor in 1472); he was a resident canon of St Donatian, Bruges, from 1476 until his death on 28 July 1489. The 'Rubinus' recorded as a singer in S Pietro in 1447–8 is likely to be distinct from all three – Rubinus was probably his first name – though Reynolds has suggested he might be identified with Le Rouge.

Le Rouge's Missa 'So ys emprentid' is distinguished by its treatment of the cantus firmus, which is given a different rhythmic treatment at each appearance, although the pitches are unaltered. The virelai Se je fayz dueil is of great interest in several respects. It is one of a very few chansons for three voices of equal range, and it also is one of an even smaller group of works that eschew the F-, C- and G-clefs in favour of using flat signs (claves minores) to indicate the position of the semitones. The resulting tonality is that of the A-mode, as yet unrecognized in theory and very uncommon as early as about 1450, when the chanson was probably composed. Perkins and Garey have proposed that Se je fayz dueil may have been conceived originally as a rondeau cinquain and extended for use as a virelai, on the grounds of the extreme contrast between the musical styles of the refrain (imitative counterpoint) and the short strophe (declamatory homophony) and of the unusual signum congruentiae over the strongly-marked medial cadence of the refrain. Strohm (1989) has suggested that the ascription of the rondeau Entre Peronne et Saint Quentin to 'Rubinus' in the Glogauer Liederbuch (Berlin, Preussische Staatsbibliothek, Mus.ms.40098 [now in PL-Kj]; anon. in six other sources; ed. in EDM, 1st ser., iv, 1936, p.86) may refer to Le Rouge, but the melodic and rhythmic style of this chanson is so different from that of Se je fayz deuil that the conjecture cannot be confirmed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F.X. Haberl: Die römische 'Schola cantorum' und die päpstlichen Kapellsänger bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts, Bausteine für Musikgeschichte, iii (Leipzig, 1888/R), 42–3, 49
J. Marix: Histoire de la musique et des musiciens de la cour de Bourgogne sous le règne de Philippe le Bon (Strasbourg, 1939/R), 174
E. Reeser: 'Een "iso-melische mis" uit den tijd van Dufay', TVNM, xvi/3 (1942), 151–76, 312–13
L.L. Perkins and H. Garey: Commentary to The Mellon Chansonnier (New Haven, 1979), ii, 10, 317–21
C. Wright: Music at the Court of Burgundy, 1364–1419 (Henryville, PA, 1979), esp. 178, 231–2
R. Strohm: Music in Late Medieval Bruges (Oxford, 1985, 2/1990), esp. 158
P. Higgins: Antoine Busnois and Musical Culture in Late Fifteenth-Century France and Burgundy (diss., Princeton U., 1987), 251
R. Strohm: 'Instrumentale Ensemblemusik vor 1500: das Zeugnis der mitteleuropäischen Quellen', Musik und Tanz zur Zeit Kaiser Maximilian I.: Innsbruck 1989, 89–106, esp. 95
C.A. Reynolds: Papal Patronage and the Music of St Peter's, 1380–1513 (Berkeley, 1995), esp. 35–6, 116–18, 303, Table 9
D. Fallows: A Catalogue of Polyphonic Songs, 1415–1480 (Oxford, 1999), 150, 359, 718

JEFFREY DEAN

Le Roux, François (b Rennes, 30 Oct 1955). French baritone. He studied with François Loup, then at the Opéra-Studio in Paris with Vera Rozsa and Elisabeth Grümmer. In 1980 he joined the Lyons Opéra, remaining with the company for the following five years. His repertory there included the major Mozart baritone roles – Don Giovanni, Papageno, Guglielmo, Count Almaviva and Figaro – but perhaps his most significant role there was Pelléas, which he first sang in 1985 and repeated to acclaim at La Scala, Covent Garden (where he made his début in 1989 as Papageno) and the Vienna Staatsoper. He appeared as Ramiro in L'heure espagnole at Glyndebourne in 1987, and in 1991 created the title role in Birtwistle's Gawain at Covent Garden. He has sung many new works in concert, including Casken's My Way of Life (1990) and Still Mine (1994). Le Roux is also a notable interpreter of mélodies, showing an exact understanding of music and text, as his recording of Hahn songs confirms. Among his other notable recordings are Gawvain and his vulnerable, ardent Pelléas with Abbado. Although Le Roux's voice is not voluminous, he uses it with consistent subtlety and imagination.

ALAN BLYTH

Le Roux, Gaspard (d Paris, ?1707). French harpsichordist and composer. The earliest mention of him is in March 1690, when the Mercure de France published the opening of a translation of the hymn Veni creator, referring to a figured bass supplied by Le Roux. He was cited merely as a music teacher, but when it was mentioned six years later, he was elevated to 'famous music teacher'. He was indeed listed with other prominent Parisian organists and harpsichordists in Blegny du Pradel's Livre commode, contenant les adresses de la ville de Paris (Paris, 1692), and he was in the highest tax bracket for such musicians in 1695. He took a privilege for a book of harpsichord pieces 'and other music of his composition', and his Pièces de clavessin appeared the same year (Paris, 1705/R). The inventory of his belongings at the time of his death is cited in a notary's index for 17 June 1707, but the document itself is lost, and it is not known how long before that date he died (Hardouin).

In the preface to his harpsichord book Le Roux complained of the faulty manuscript copies of his music that were circulating, which forced him finally to acquiesce to the requests of connoisseurs to publish them. Their style bears out the supposition that they were composed at least a decade earlier than their publication, but surviving manuscripts do not indicate any widespread traffic in his works. The volume was reprinted by Roger in Amsterdam (1707/8), however, and that edition came to the attention of J.G. Walther in Germany; he copied out almost half its contents, and he included Le Roux in his Musicalisches Lexicon of 1732.

The book contains 47 pieces, 41 of which are grouped in seven suites (not so named). Le Roux was much indebted to D'Anglebert's 1689 book of harpsichord pieces, from which he copied directly 15 of the 18 ornament signs, along with their explanations. Four of the suites begin with unmeasured preludes, using the traditional notation of undifferentiated whole notes rather than the mixed note values used in virtually all published preludes by French composers (those in Dandrieu's third book being the only other exceptions). What distinguishes this collection from all other French harpsichord music is the provision of alternative versions of the pieces. All but two of the dance movements are presented in a second version consisting of two treble lines and figured bass, and the book concludes with second harpsichord parts for five of the pieces and one additional gigue in two-harpsichord score. Le Roux stipulates three performance options in addition to solo harpsichord. The first is the most extraordinary: before struggling to read the full texture the harpsichordist can sing the melody (the top line of the trio score) while providing an accompaniment from the figured bass. The second option is to play the pieces as instrumental trios (Dieupart preceded Le Roux in this idea by providing treble-bass versions of his harpsichord suites in 1701). The third possibility is to create a second harpsichord part based on the second treble line and bass, using the composer's fully notated examples as models. While the outer voices of the trio versions are derived quite literally from the solo versions, the second treble line is not. Le Roux does not create contrapuntal textures, however, as the added voice often lacks melodic individuality. The composer's greatest accomplishment was in providing such a large body of sumptuous music for two harpsichords.

One air, in a Recueil d'airs sérieux et à boire (Paris, 1701; ed. in Tessier), and a motet, Thuris odor, are attributed with certainty to Le Roux; two other motets in the same manuscript bear tentative 18th-century attributions to him.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Tessier: 'Un claveciniste français: Gaspard Le Roux', ReM, v/3–5 (1923–4), 230–46

P. Hardouin: 'Notes sur quelques musiciens français du XVIIe siècle', RdM, xxxviii (1956), 62–7

A. Fuller: Preface to Gaspard Le Roux: Pieces for Harpsichord (New York, 1959)

B. Gustafson and D. Fuller: A Catalogue of French Harpsichord Music, 1699–1780 (Oxford, 1990)

BRUCE GUSTAFSON

Le Roux, Maurice (b Paris, 6 Feb 1923; d Avignon, 19 Oct 1992). French composer and conductor. He studied with Nat (piano), Fourestier (conducting) and Messiaen (analysis) at the Paris Conservatoire (1944–52), as well as with Leibowitz and Mitropoulos. Precociously gifted, Le Roux composed numerous works for piano, voice or orchestra from the early 1930s onwards. The popularity of Marche de la 2e division blindée, first performed anonymously, set the tone for a career divided between the composition of concert works indebted to the serial avant garde (1946–56) and a significant output of film and ballet scores in a musical language accessible to the general public; as a conductor he performed several works which were then unfamiliar, such as Monteverdi's Orfeo and Vespers, the original version of Boris Godunov, Messiaen's Turangalîla-symphonie (of which he made the first recording in 1961), and works by Xenakis, Varèse and the Second Viennese School. He also produced the successful television series 'Arcana', introducing music to a wider public.

Le Roux was musical director of the Orchestre National de l'ORTF (1961–8), musical adviser to the Paris Opéra (1969–73), and inspector-general of music for the Ministry of Culture (1973–88). A richly gifted artist, he found it difficult to concentrate his energies in one area alone.

The scandal unleashed at the Aix-en-Provence Festival in 1953 by Le cercle des métamorphoses, which starts in a rather aggressive style, but quickly evolves into a spare, intense lyricism, was followed by the popular success of several film scores, especially Albert Lamorisse's Ballon rouge (1955). Le Roux also worked in the theatre, writing incidental music for the Renaud-Barrault Company productions of Kafka's Das Schloss (1957) and Shakespeare's Julius Caesar (1960). Le Roux returned to concert music with Un koan (inspired by the mysteries of Zen Buddhism), a work of powerful vigour first given at the La Rochelle Festival in 1973. The striking thing about all his works, from Cahiers d'inventions onwards, is the essentially dramatic nature of the musical discourse.

WORKS

(selective list)

Marche de la 2e division blindée, 1944; Pf Sonata, 1946; Cahiers d'inventions (à 2 voix), pf, 1948; Deux mimes, orch, 1948; 3 psaumes (La Tour du Pin), 1948; Le petit prince (ballet), 1949; Au pays de la magie (H. Michaux), Bar, pf, 1951; Le cercle des métamorphoses, orch, 1953; Divertissement pour Mozart, orch, 1956; Sable (ballet), 1956; Un koan, orch, 1973

25 film scores incl. Crin blanc (dir. A. Lamorisse), 1953; Les mauvaises rencontres, 1955; Ballon rouge (dir. Lamorisse), 1955; Amère victoire, 1957; Vu du pont (dir. S. Lumet), 1961; Martin

soldat, 1966; La bien aimée, 1967; La chamade, 1968; Contes immoraux, 1975

Principal publishers: Choudens, Salabert

WRITINGS

Introduction à la musique contemporaine(Paris, 1947)
Claudio Monteverdi (Paris, 1951)
Boris Godounov (Paris, 1980)

GÉRARD CONDÉ

Leroux, Philippe (b Boulogne, 25 Sept 1959). French composer. He attended the Paris Conservatoire (1978–83), where he studied composition with Malec, analysis with Ballif and electro-acoustic music with Schaeffer and Reibel, gaining three premiers prix. From 1993 to 1995 he was resident at the Académie de France, Rome. He received the Hervé Dugardin prize of the SACEM in 1994, and a second prize from that organization in 1996 for the violin concerto (d')ALLER.

Leroux's approach to colour and harmonic organization owes something to SPECTRAL MUSIC. But in its instrumental writing and its emphasis on rhythmic movement his music owes more to Ligeti. Leroux makes frequent use of repetition, but within a framework of continuous variation, playing on oppositions between continuity and discontinuity, proximity and distance, developmental logic and random association. The works of his later period have shown a greater playfulness in their exploration of musical procedures, together with an ongoing concern for clarity and elegance in the presentation of ideas. He has written in a wide variety of genres from pedagogical pieces to electro-acoustic works such as M, produced at IRCAM, in which live electronics prolong and expand a dialogue between two pianos and two sets of percussion.

WORKS
(selective list)

Vigiles, orch, 1979; Intercession, elecs, 1981; Hommage à Andrei Roublev, elecs, 1982; 6 variations sur la légende de Saint-Nicolas, 8vv, 1983; Un corps de louange, orch, 1984; Anima Christi, 4 solo vv, 1985; Le jardin ouvert, ob, bn, hn, tuba, 1985; L'entourage intime, 12vv, 1986; Le vide et le vague, elecs, 1986; Veni Sancte, 3 S, 1987; Fleuve, 14 insts, 1988; Tournoi, elecs, 1989; Ial, Celtic hp, gui, 1990; Je brûle, dit-elle un jour à un camarade (E. Jabès), S solo, 1991; On a crié (orat., after M. Duras), 16 solo vv, chorus, 18 insts, 1991; Phonie douce, ob, a sax, vc, 1991; Air-Ré, vn, mar/vib, 1992; La guerre du faire, elecs, 1992; Histoire préhistorique, chorus, orch, 1992; Air, cl, mar/vib, 1993; PPP, fl, pf, 1993; CONTINUO(ns), fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1994; (d')ALLER, conc., vn, 16 insts, 1995; Images à Rameau, 4 synth/elecs, 1995; AAA, fl, cl, vn, va, vc, pf, perc, 1996; Souffles, wind qnt, 1996; M, 2 pf, 2 perf, elecs, 1997; Plus loin, orch, 1999; teaching pieces for gui, hp, perc

Principal publisher: Billaudot

WRITINGS

'Analyse des "Intégrations" op.49 d'Ivan Wyschnégradsky', Cahiers Wyschnégradsky, no.1 (1985)
'Brèves', Cahiers de la Villa Médicis, ix/1 (1995)
'Musique contemporaine: une solution de continuité', La création après la musique contemporaine (Paris, 1998)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

'La part de l'inouï', Barca!, no.10 (1998) [interview]
M. Vilella: Proessus et invention dans 'CONTINUO(ns)' de Philippe Leroux (diss., IRCAM, Paris, 1998)

DOMINIQUE DRUHEN

Leroux, Xavier (Henry Napoléon) (b Velletri, Italy, 11 Oct 1863; d Paris, 2 Feb 1919). French composer. His father was a musical director in the army, his mother Italian. According to several of his contemporaries, Leroux was proud of his fiery Italian blood and would easily rise to an argument, especially when it concerned making cuts to his operas which were initially far too long. A near contemporary of Dukas and Debussy, Leroux appears in several photographs with young composers of that generation, but the path he was to follow was conservative rather than adventurous. He was strongly influenced by the traditional harmony teaching of his professors at the Conservatoire, Dubois and Massenet, and in 1885 he won the Prix de Rome with the cantata Endymion. He continued using a similar harmonic style well into the 20th century.

Leroux was almost exclusively a vocal composer, and it was with his operas that he gained the most recognition. Astarté, given at the Paris Opéra under Taffanel in 1901, achieved a modest success; it was followed in 1903 by La reine Fiamette, which was staged in many countries up to World War II, as was Le chemineau (1907), widely considered his finest work. 1814, a drame lyrique set in the Napoleonic wars, includes elaborate effects (Napoleon dreaming of a Te Deum for example) and choral representations of the voices of Joan of Arc. Eschewing harmonic and rhythmic complexity and untinged by Wagner, Leroux is at his best when using relatively simple musical devices. The pastoral naturalism of Le chemineau has caused some critics to place him with other French verismo composers but this rather ignores the more imaginative side of his work. His contribution to the French mélodie was substantial at least in quantity; his songs include settings of a number of the best symbolist poets. Most celebrated, however, was his early oriental vocalise Le Nil, which was not only reprinted many times, but also orchestrated and arranged for different combinations of instruments. In 1896 Leroux was appointed professor of harmony at the Conservatoire, a post he held until his death; at one time he counted André Caplet among his pupils.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE
first performed in Paris unless otherwise stated

Cléopâtre (incid music, V. Sardou and E. Moreau), Paris, Porte St Martin, 28 Oct 1890; Evangéline (légende acadienne, 4, L. de Gramont, G. Hartmann and A. Alexandre, after H.W. Longfellow), Brussels, Monnaie, 18 Dec 1895; Les Perses (incid music, Aeschylus, trans. A.-F. Hérold) (1896); Vénus et Adonis (scène lyrique, 2, de Gramont), Opéra, 24 Jan 1897; Astarté (4, de Gramont), Opéra, 15 Feb 1901; La reine Fiamette (conte dramatique, 4, C. Mendès), OC (Favart), 23 Dec 1903; William Ratcliff (tragédie musicale, 4, de Gramont, after H. Heine), Nice, 22 Jan 1906; Théodora (drame musical, 3, Sardou and P. Ferrier), Monte Carlo, 19 March 1907; Le chemineau [The Vagrant] (J. Richepin), OC (Favart), 6 Nov 1907; Xantho chez les courtisanes (incid music, J. Richepin) (1910)

Le carillonneur (pièce lyrique, 3, Richepin, after G. Rodenbach), OC (Favart), 20 March 1913; La fille de Figaro (oc, 3, M. Hennequin and H. Delorme), Apollo, 11 March 1914; Les cadeaux de Noël (conte héroïque, 1, E. Fabre), OC (Favart), 25 Dec 1915; 1814 (drame lyrique, 1, L. Augé de Lassus and A. Gandrey), Monte Carlo, Casino, 6 April 1918; Nausithoé (oc, 1, M. de Magre), Nice, Casino municipal, 9 April 1920; La plus forte (drame lyrique, 4, Richepin and P. de Choudens), OC (Favart), 11 Jan 1924; L'ingénu (ob, 3, C. Méré and R. Gignoux, after Voltaire), Bordeaux, Grand, 13 Feb 1931

VOCAL
1v, pf unless otherwise stated

Endymion (cant., A. de Lassus), chorus, orch, 1885; L'oublier (P. Gille) (1887); Le solitaire (A. Renaud), 3 chansons persanes (1887); Le Nil (Renaud), chanson persane (1890), orchd H. Busser; La nuit (T. de Banville) (1890); Ninon, Ninette (A. Alexandre) (1892) [after J.S. Bach]; Recueillement (P. Verlaine)

(1892); Simple villanelle (Alexandre) (1892); Devant la mer (A. Silvestre) (1893); Roses d'octobre (Silvestre) (1893); A un enfant (A. Lenéka) (1894); Chrysanthème (Silvestre) (1894); Le jour (Banville) (1894); Madrigal, Rondeau archaïque, Sérénade (L. de Gramont) (1894)

Les pervenches (A. Mayrarques) (1894); Les anges gardiens (P. Collin) (1895); Offrande (P. Ronsard) (1895); Pluie d'automne (L. de Gramont) (1895); Les estampes (L. de Gramont), 10 songs (1896); Poèmes de Bretagne (Alexandre), 4 songs (1896); Rêve bleu (P. Gillain) (1896); Les ailes inutiles (C. Fuster) (1897); Les cerises (A. de Gramont) (1897); Le flambeau vivant, Hymne (C. Baudelaire) (1897); Pensée de printemps (Silvestre) (1897); La nuit consolatrice (F. Hérold) (1898); Le Rosier d'amour (L. Hettich) (1898); Vieilles choses et jeune amour (C. Fuster) (1899)

Villanelle pour le printemps (L. de Gramont) (1899); Les enfants pauvres (V. Hugo) (1902); 3 mélodies dans le style ancien (L. Besnard) (1903); Nouveaux lieds de Frances: par les chemins de France (C. Mendès), 10 songs (1903); Les sérénades (C. Mendès) (1903); Ton âme (R. Vivien) (1903); La Marguerite (E. Noël) (1905); Plainte d'amour (P. Gravollet) (1905); Chanson (C. Mendès) (1906); La sabretache (Noël) (1908); L'amour d'aimer (J. Mendès), 10 songs (1913); settings of sacred texts acc. org and other insts, incl. Ave Maria, Panis angelicus, Salutation angélique

INSTRUMENTAL

Scherzo fantastique, pf (1884); Les petits violons du roy, divertissement, orch (1888); Préambule, pf (*c*1892); 6 pièces, pf (1892); Scherzando, pf (*c*1893); 2 romances, fl, pf (1897), arr. pf (1898); Sonata, hn, pf (1897); Les cendres du passé, orch (1926)

MSS in F-Pn

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (R. Langham Smith) [incl. further bibliography]
A. Jullien: 'Astarté', Le théâtre, no.61 (1901), 3–14
A. Sardoux: 'La reine Fiamette', Le théâtre, no.124 (1904), 3–24
D.C. Parker: 'Xavier Leroux', Musical Standard, ix (1917), 198
M. Cooper: French Music from the Death of Berlioz to the Death of Fauré (1869–1924) (London, 1951/R)
R. Dumesnil: 'Réalistes et naturalistes', Histoire de la musique, iv (Paris, 1958)
R. Delage: 'Concours préparatoire pour le Prix de Rome de 1905: notes de Xavier Leroux', SMz, cxvii (1977), 92–3
M. Kelkel: Naturalisme, vérisme et réalisme dans l'opéra (Paris, 1984)
G. Favre: 'L'opéra de Monte-Carlo à Berlin en 1907', Annuaire monagasques: revue d'histoire de Monaco, x (1986), 95–104

RICHARD LANGHAM SMITH

Le Roy, Adrian (b Montreuil-sur-Mer, *c*1520; d Paris, 1598). French music printer, lutenist and composer. He was born into a wealthy merchant family from northern France. As a young man he entered successively the service of two members of the aristocracy close to the French throne, Claude de Clermont and Jacques II, Baron de Semblançay and Viscount of Tours. In March 1546 he became acquainted with the editor Jean de Brouilly in Paris, bought some properties from him in St Denis and married his daughter Denise (d before 1570). He moved to Brouilly's house at the sign of Ste Geneviève (later the sign of Mount Parnassus) in the rue St Jean-de-Beauvais – an address which was to become famous for being the home of one of the greatest of the French music printing establishments.

On 14 August 1551 Le Roy and his cousin Robert Ballard obtained a privilege from Henri II to print and sell all kinds of music books. Their first publication appeared at the end of the same month. On 16 February 1553, the king gave Le Roy & Ballard the title of royal music printer, which had been vacant since Attaingnant's death in 1552; it was renewed in 1568 and 1594. The association flourished, and Ballard's heirs continued to dominate French music printing until the middle of the 18th century (see BALLARD). Le Roy acted as artistic director, while Ballard handled the business side.

Some of the printing firm's success can be attributed to the access both Le Roy and Ballard had to court circles, including the Valois monarchs Henri II, Charles IX and Henri III. Le Roy was a regular member of the salon of Catherine de Clermont, Countess of Retz. There he met artists, musicians and the poets Ronsard, Baïf and Melissus, who wrote dedicatory verses for some of his collections. Le Roy himself wrote a few dedications to Charles IX and the Count of Retz.

Greater artistic success came to Le Roy, however, as a composer of chansons and music for lute, guitar and cittern, instruments on which he was an accomplished virtuoso. He wrote instruction books for the lute (Instruction ... de luth, ?1557, Eng. trans., 1568; Instructions pour le luth, 1574) and guitar (Briefve et facile instruction, 1551) as well as several books of tablature for lute (at least six), guitar (five) and cittern containing arrangements of four-voice chansons and psalms, plus several dances and two fantasias. The lute books include highly ornate versions of songs by Arcadelt, Certon, Sandrin and other contemporaries, following the virtuoso style of Albert de Rippe in ornamentation by diminution, arpeggiation and an incipient style brisé. As Le Roy explained in his Instructions of 1574, the technique of arrangement may be simple intabulation (as in his arrangements of chansons by Lassus) or more ' finely handled' divisions with ornate variation and diminution. His five books for four-course guitar include preludes, two 'fantasies' and several dances (some followed by more ornate divisions), as well as arrangements of Latin psalms, chansons and voix de ville (two books presenting a separate fully texted vocal line which is doubled in the tablature). The vocal line is doubled too in his Livre d'airs de cour (Paris, 1571) for solo voice and lute, the first publication in which the term air de cour was used (see AIR DE COUR); many of these airs offer more declamatory monodic arrangements of four-voice strophic chansons or voix de ville by La Grotte and others, while some songs are followed by alternative more ornate versions. Le Roy's own surviving four-voice songs are limited to two chansons (O que d'ennuis, RISM 1554[26], and En un chasteau, RISM 1556[16]), one strophic air (Quel feu par les vens animé, RISM 1576[3]) and a Premier livre de chansons en forme de vau de ville (Paris, 1573) containing 23 chansons, most of which reharmonize melodies from Certon's Premier livre de chansons (1552) with the tenor part transposed to the superius. In addition Le Roy left a treatise, Traicté de musique (1583), with chapters on the rules of counterpoint, consonance, dissonance, syncopation, cadences and modes.

Le Roy's friendship with musicians helped assure the firm's pre-eminence. Certon, Arcadelt, Le Jeune, Costeley and Goudimel were personal acquaintances. The most valuable friendship of all was that with Orlande de Lassus, who stayed in Le Roy's house during a visit to Paris and whom Le Roy introduced at court. A letter dated 14 January 1574, from Le Roy to Lassus, describes the delight that Charles IX took in Lassus's music and tells him that the king wanted to make him composer of the royal chamber and had urged Le Roy to print his music as soon as possible for fear that it otherwise might be lost. Le Roy & Ballard were chiefly responsible for making Lassus's older music well known in France and for disseminating his newest works to the rest of the musical world.

After Ballard's death in July 1588 the firm did not publish anything until 1591, when three books of songs appeared under Le Roy's name alone. After another pause publishing began again in 1593 and continued until Le Roy's death. During this period 15 more books were printed, this time under the name of Adrian Le Roy and the widow of Ballard. Le Roy died childless, turning over his interest to Ballard's heirs.

Le Roy was respected as a pedagogue, but perhaps his most lasting contribution to music history is the influence he exercised as a publisher on French musical taste.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. de Juvigny, ed.: Les bibliothèques françoises de La Croix du Maine et de Du Verdier (Paris, 1772–3), i, 8; iii, 25

A. Sandberger: 'Roland Lassus' Beziehungen zu Frankreich', SIMG, viii (1906–7), 353–401

L. de La Laurencie, A. Mairy and G. Thibault, eds.: Chansons au luth et airs de cour français du XVIe siècle, PSFM, 1st ser., iv–v [recte iii–iv] (1934/R), pp.xxi–xxxii

F. Lesure and G. Thibault: Bibliographie des éditions d'Adrian Le Roy et Robert Ballard (1551–1598) (Paris, 1955; suppl., RdM, xl, 1957, pp.166–72)

D. Heartz: 'Parisian Music Printing under Henry II: a propos of Four Recently Discovered Guitar Books', MQ, xlvi (1960), 448–67

J. Cain and P. Marot, eds.: Imprimeurs & libraires parisiens du XVIe siècle ... d'après les manuscrits de Philippe Renouard, ii (Paris, 1969)

SAMUEL F. POGUE/FRANK DOBBINS

Le Roy [Roi], Bartolomeo. See ROY, BARTOLOMEO.

Leroy, Jehan. See REGIS, JOHANNES.

Le Sage de Richée, Philipp Franz (*fl c*1695). German lutenist and composer of French birth. In early sources he is stated to have been a pupil of Charles Mouton. In 1695 he seems to have been in the service of Baron von Neidhardt in Breslau. He was an aristocrat and must have travelled in a number of countries, gaining a broad knowledge of the lute repertory in Bohemia, Austria and France. One publication of his has survived, Cabinet der Lauten, in welchem zu finden 12 neue Partien, aus unterschiedenen Tonen und neuesten Manier so aniezo gebräuchlich' (n.p., n.d.; it must have appeared in Breslau and the copy formerly in Riemann's possession bore the date 1695). It contains 98 pieces engraved in French lute tablature and arranged in 12 suites. The preface mentions Dufaut, Mouton, Losy and Gaultier (though which one is unspecified). The following types of piece occur: praeludium, allemande, courante, sarabande, gigue, gavotte, minuet, bourrée, chaconne, passacaglia, ouverture and rondeau (with echo). One piece is attributed to 'Graf Logi' [Losy]; presumably Le Sage de Richée composed all the others himself. Surprisingly, he is seldom mentioned in manuscripts, but the sumptuous appearance of his volume bears witness to the outstanding esteem in which he was held.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Wortmann: Philipp Franz Le Sage de Richée und sein Cabinet der Lauten (diss., U. of Vienna, 1919)

W. Boetticher: Studien zur solistischen Lautenpraxis des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts (Berlin, 1943), 169ff

E. Pohlmann: Laute, Theorbe, Chitarrone (Bremen, 1968, rev., enlarged 5/1982)

E. Vogl: 'Loutnová hudba v Čechách' [Lute music in Bohemia], Časopis národního musea, cxxxiii (1964), 11–20 [incl. Ger. summary]

WOLFGANG BOETTICHER

Lésbio, António Marques (b Lisbon, 1639; d Lisbon, 21 Nov 1709). Portuguese writer and composer. He added Lésbio (after the island Lesbos) to his family name. He spent his life in Lisbon. Seeing one of his juvenile compositions in 1653, João Soares Rebelo prophesied that he would become one of the best Portuguese contrapuntists. In 1660 he began publishing vilhancico texts in the annually printed booklets for the church festivals of 8 and 25 December and 6 January, remaining a frequent contributor until 1708. On 9 December 1663 and on 5 February 1665 he presided over the seventh and 34th of the 36 sessions of the Academia dos Singulares, and in 1665 and 1668 published two orations in Portuguese and 49 Spanish and Portuguese poems in the proceedings of the academy. On 10 October 1668 he became master of the royal chamber musicians. An ardent supporter of King Pedro II, he published in the following year an 80-octave panegyric, Estrella de Portugal, on the birth of Princess Isabella. On 3 November 1679 he was appointed master of the boys in the choir school of the royal chapel; on 18 July 1670 he was given a sinecure doubling his previous salary. He became curator of the royal music library on 2 November 1692 and royal choirmaster on 15 January 1698. His last publication – Vilhancicos que se cantarão na Igreja de N. Senhora de Nazareth das Religiosas Descalças de S. Bernardo em as Matinas, e Festa do glorioso S. Gonçalo (Lisbon, 1708) – crowned a lifetime spent writing festival verse for which he himself supplied the music. The music of only 16 Spanish villancicos and Portuguese vilhancicos by him has survived (in P-EVp and Ln; two ed. in Stevenson). They range from the delightful Ayreçillos manços for four voices (Christmas 1681) and Es flor del campo el infante for eight, to the imposing eight-part Quem vio hum menino bello, which calls for both harp and organ accompaniment; all show that he was a composer of much grace and polish. In his ten surviving complex-structure villancicos (all but one with Spanish text) he favours buoyant rhythms, but constantly induces variety with oppositions between as many as eight voices and soloists, sudden pauses and harmonic riches that are enhanced on occasion with overt chromaticisms. His accompaniments veer from violins to harp and organ, but always additionally require continuo. In his two extant four-voice accompanied secular songs (tonos), his usual radiant happiness gives way to grief suitably expressed with sudden descending diminished 4ths to herald the word 'noche' ('night').

Apart from his vernacular works (all at P-EVp) his apparently single extant Latin composition is a double-choir Easter sequence with organ, Victimae paschali laudes (P-Em), again in his frequently favoured high clefs that require downward transposition for performance.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBP

D. Barbosa Machado: Bibliotheca lusitana, i (Lisbon, 1741/R), 321ff

F.M. de Sousa Viterbo: A livraria de musica de D. João IV e o seu index (Lisbon, 1900), 6 only

R.E. Horch: Vilancicos da Coleção Barbosa Machado (Rio de Janeiro, 1969), 130f

D. Damesceno, ed.: Vilancicos seiscentistas (Rio de Janeiro, 1970), 186f

R. Stevenson, ed.: Vilancicos portugueses, PM, ser. A, xxix (Lisbon, 1976), 49ff

J.A. Alegria, ed.: António Marques Lésbio (1639–1709): villancicos e tonos, PM, ser. A, xlvi (Lisbon, 1985)

M.C. Brito: História de música portuguesa (Lisbon, 1992), 94 only

ROBERT STEVENSON

Lesch, Albrecht (b ?Munich, ?1340–45; d Munich, 1393 or 1394). German Meistersinger. His identity is still somewhat uncertain: Petzsch in particular (Grove6) argued for an Albrecht Lesch who lived in Munich but in the 15th century (d 1478 or 1479); most scholars, however, tend towards the Albrecht Lesch who lived about 80 years earlier. His profession is unsure, but he may have been a baker. He gained great wealth (he bought a house in 1385) and reputation, as a member of the greater council (1381). Beheim mentioned him in one of his poems (no.428, 54) and his Töne found a firm place in the repertory of the Meistersinger until the 17th century.

Lesch's songs have so far not been thoroughly investigated. Like Beheim, he tended to restate part of a melody at the end of a stanza, unlike the non-repeating, line-by-line setting of most Meisterlieder. He also occasionally rounded off a melody with a more expansive shapely phrase which encompasses perhaps the last two or three lines of the text. He used formal elements with greater consistency than Beheim. His Ton Goldener Reihen, like other examples of the medieval Reien or Reigen (see REIGENLIED), is a medium for the expression of joy – the basic emotion of its text. Yet it does not exhibit certain other features – regularity of structure, frequency of repetition – as consistently as do other Reien. Lesch still used lai technique (Tagweise), but modified it by inserting an additional line of text and melody from time to time in order to stress a point of Christian ideology.

WORKS

Text edition: Albrecht Lesch: ein Münchner Meistersinger des 15. Jahrhunderts, ed. L. Koester (Schloss Birkeneck, 1937)

Die kleineren Liederdichter des 14. und 15. Jahrhunderts, ed. T. Cramer (Munich, 1979), ii, 178–265

Music editions: Die Sangesweisen der Colmarer Handschrift und die Liederhandschrift Donaueschingen, ed. P. Runge (Leipzig, 1896/R) [R]

Das Singebuch des Adam Puschman, ed. G. Münzer (Leipzig, 1906/R) [M]

Die Colmarer Liederhandschrift: Faksimile-Ausgabe ihrer Melodien, ed. F. Gennrich, SMM, xviii (1967)

Die Töne der Meistersinger, ed. H. Brunner and J. Rettelbach (Göppingen, 1980)

TÖNE

fuller details in Brunner and Wachinger

Feuerweise [Mühlweise], Gekrönter Reihen, Gesangweise, Goldener Reihen, Goldenes Schloss, Hofton, Süsser Ton, Tagweise, Zirkelweise

Kurzer Reihen, attrib. Lesch in D-Dl, is spurious

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Petzsch: 'Folgen nachträglich eingeführter Text- Form-Korrespondenz für Text und Lai-Technik', Mf, xxviii (1975), 284–7

F. Schanze: Meisterliche Liedkunst zwischen Heinrich von Mügeln und Hans Sachs (Munich, 1983), 274–86

F. Schanze: 'Lesch, Albrecht', Die deutsche Literatur des Mittelalters: Verfasserlexikon, ed. K. Ruh and others (Berlin, 2/1985)

H. Brunner and B.Wachinger, eds.: Repertorium der Sangsprüche und Meisterlieder des 12. bis 18. Jahrhunderts, iv (Tübingen, 1988), 229–47

For further bibliography see MEISTERGESANG.

CHRISTOPH PETZSCH/MARTIN KIRNBAUER

Leschenet [Lachenet], Didier (d Paris, *c*1603). French composer. In 1559 he became the assistant maître de chapelle at the royal chapel and in 1578 canon at St Quentin. Two years later he received another canonry at Meaux. Although he held the position of singer and composer-in-ordinary of the king's chapel in 1582, he resigned and moved to Meaux in 1584, accepting an additional canonry at Langres at this time. Two years later he became a member of the choir at the Ste Chapelle and was chosen as a cantor on 20 May 1589.

WORKS

Edition: Didier Leschenet: Complete Chansons, ed. J.A. Bernstein, SCC, xviii (1990) [B]

Magnificat, 4vv, 1557[8]

A dieu gentil corsaige, 4vv, 1553[20], B; En te contemplant je te prise, 4vv, 1553[20], B; Est-il douleur cruelle, 5vv, 1572[2], B; Gris et tanné me faut porter, 5vv, 1572[2], B; Helas, pourquoy ne suis-je mariée, 6vv, 1572[2], B; Je m'y plain fort qu'amours, 6vv, 1572[2], B

Le cueur est mien, 6vv, 1572[2], B; Les mesdisantz par leur, 4vv, 1553[20], B; Pour vous ami tousjours, 4vv, 1553[20], B; Pour vous servir jusques à ce qu'il meure, 1557[15], B; Puis que j'ai belle amie, 5vv, 1572[2], B; Si par souffrir on peult, 6vv, 1554[27]; Si vous me donnez jouissance, 1554[24], B; Souspirs ardens parcelles, 6vv, 1554[27]; Vous desirez et cherchez ma presence, 1554[24], B

RUTH K. INGLEFIELD

Leschetizky, Theodor [Leszetycki, Teodor] (b Łańcut, Galicia, 22 June 1830; d Dresden, 14 Nov 1915). Polish pianist, teacher and composer. His father held the position of music teacher to a minor branch of the Potocki family at Łańcut in Austrian Poland, and was his son's first teacher. Leschetizky made his début at the age of nine in Lemberg playing a Czerny concertino (the conductor was Franz Xaver Mozart) and shortly after this the family moved to Vienna, where he became a pupil of Czerny himself. From 1842 to 1848 Leschetizky undertook tours as a virtuoso, but also studied law and had lessons in counterpoint from Sechter. In September 1852 he went to St Petersburg and played before Nicholas I, and then lived in the city for the next 26 years. Having been a piano teacher from his teenage years, he greatly expanded this activity during his sojourn in Russia, while not neglecting his career as a pianist. He became director of music at the court of the Grand Duchess Helen, sister-in-law of the Tsar, and it was under her patronage that Anton Rubinstein founded the St Petersburg Conservatory in 1862, with Leschetizky as head of the piano department. He held the post until 1878, when he returned to Vienna.

His home rapidly became a focus both for aspiring pianists and for various visiting musicians of the day, many of whom would be persuaded to play at the famed fortnightly group classes. In 1878, following the end of an unhappy 22-year marriage to a Russian singer, Leschetizky married his pupil Anna Esipova, and she became the first of his students to make a European reputation. Paderewski began studying with him in 1885, and it was his success, particularly in the USA, that established Leschetizky as the pre-eminent teacher of his day. Many young ladies crossed the Atlantic with the hope of having lessons with him, but were mostly passed on to his assistants and would only have the chance of playing to him very occasionally. Leschetizky was divorced from Esipova in 1892 and successively married two other pupils. His activity as a pianist effectively terminated with a performance of Beethoven's Fifth Piano Concerto at Frankfurt in 1887.

During a career that lasted 75 years, in excess of 1200 pianists are known to have studied with him. Horszowski, who had been his pupil, gave his last recital in 1991, so that from Esipova's successes in the 1880s, Leschetizky's students were active on the concert stage for almost all of the 20th century. Other major figures who were his pupils were Schnabel, Gabrilovich, Ney, Moiseiwitsch,

Theodor Leschetizky

Friedman, Hambourg, Brailowsky, Bloomfield-Zeisler and Goodson. Safonov, Vengerova, Esipova and Langenhan-Hirzel themselves all became well-known teachers.

The impact of having heard the salon composer Julius Schulhoff play in Vienna during the 1840s led Leschetizky to develop a special attention to tone quality, both in his playing and teaching. He considered Schulhoff's ability to put a beautifully phrased quasi-vocal melodic line into bold relief above a subordinated accompaniment to be a simply effective and modern style of playing that revealed new expressive possibilities. His assimilation of this influence, together with a concern that virtuosic passages should always be integrated within the overall structure of the music, enabled him to develop a style that, while retaining the elegance of the Czerny school, consolidated the substance and intended impact of a work. In matters of repertory, Leschetizky concentrated much on Beethoven, with whose music he felt a special affinity owing to his study with Czerny, although the Romantics, particularly Chopin, Schumann and Liszt, also featured highly. It was undoubtedly Leschetizky's advocacy of the Schubert piano sonatas that resulted in these largely forgotten works being introduced into the repertory, most notably by Schnabel.

His inventive and flexible approach to teaching arose from a deep-felt commitment to developing the potential of each student. This extended to him taking a genuine interest in their personal lives. He was a man of unflagging energy and emotional gusto, and it was typical of his personality that much of the advice given was in the form of metaphor and anecdote, yet always specific to the case in point. It was chiefly Leschetizky's assistants (at the height of his fame he employed four) who were responsible for establishing the myth of the 'Leschetizky Method', which, as a specific schedule of technical training, did not exist. 'As far as method is concerned', Leschetizky said, 'I teach exactly as Czerny taught me; I have added nothing, changed nothing'. Unlike many teachers of the day he did not insist on long hours of repetitive practice, but encouraged pupils to prepare the music mentally, so that they should have a clear idea of what they wished to achieve. It was the combination of Leschetizky's profound musicality, his wealth of experience in teaching and his ability, through sheer force of personality, to communicate with the pupil that led to his unassailable status as having been the greatest piano teacher of the modern era.

His compositions, which include an early single-movement Piano Concerto in C minor op.9 and a comic opera Die erste Falte (1867, Prague), consist for the main part of well-crafted virtuoso works for piano, mostly in a light vein.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Unschuld von Melasfeld: Die Hand des Pianisten (Leipzig, 1901; Eng. trans., 1903)
M. Brée: Die Grundlage der Methode Leschetizky (Mainz, 1902/R, 4/1914; Eng. trans., 1902)
M. Prentner: Die Leschetizky Methode (London, 1903) [Eng. and Ger.]; also pubd as The Modern Pianist/Der moderne Pianist (Philadelphia, 1903)
A. Potocka: Theodor Leschetizky (New York, 1903)
A. Hullah: Theodor Leschetizky (London, 1906)
E. Newcomb: Leschetizky as I Knew him (New York, 1921/*R*1967 with work-list and bibliography)
O. Gabrilowitsch: 'A Great Master at the Piano', Musical Courier, ci/26 (1930), 6
F. Trumbull: 'Leschetizky as I Knew him', The Etude, xlix (1931), 87–8
A. Shattuck: His Memoirs (Neenah, WI, 1961)
E. Hughes, B. Moiseiwitsch and others: 'Leschetizky Heritage', Leschetizky Association Bulletin (1963), 12–17
F. Merrick: 'Memories of Leschetizky', Recorded Sound, no.18 (1965), 335–9
R.R. Gerig: 'The Leschetizky Influence', Famous Pianists and their Technique (Washington DC, 1974/R), 271–86

JAMES METHUEN-CAMPBELL

Lescot, C. François (*b c*1720; *d c*1801). French composer and violinist. He worked as a maître de musique at Auch Cathedral from 1747 to 1764, and at Nantes Cathedral probably from 1764 to 1768. His first three stage works, for which he wrote both librettos and music, were performed at the Théâtre d'Auch during the 1760s, and his motet, Exaltabo te, was twice performed at the Concert Spirituel in Paris in 1764. He moved to Paris and joined the orchestra of the Comédie-Italienne in autumn 1768; there he played in the first violin section until 1774 and second violin until 1785. His name is omitted from orchestral lists for the years 1786–7, but from 1788 he held the position of principal second violin until his retirement with a pension in 1790.

The first stage work Lescot presented in Paris was La négresse (1787), originally in two acts but reduced to one after the first performance. It achieved a limited success, there being little depth to the plot, but the Mercure de France observed that 'The airs, which are very well arranged by M. Lescot, were chosen with great intelligence and taste'. Vaudevilles also formed the basis of Lescot's next stage work, Les solitaires de Normandie (1788), a vastly more popular piece which enjoyed an initial run of nearly 40 performances and remained in the active repertory of the Comédie-Italienne for three years. Though the melodies, based on pithy repetitive motives, were short, the harmonic language unadventurous and the forms mainly strophic, the music was deemed to enhance the natural simplicity of the tableaux depicted within the work in a manner suited to French taste. The airs and chansons included in Lescot's various recueils embody similar musical characteristics.

WORKS

printed works published in Paris unless otherwise stated

STAGE

L'amour et l'hymen (prol, 1, Lescot), Auch, 1761 (Auch, 1761)
La fête de Thalie (pastorale, 1, Lescot), Auch, 1761 (Auch, 1761)
La fête de Thémire (pastorale with vaudevilles and ariettes, 1, Lescot), Auch, 1767
La négresse, ou Le pouvoir de la reconnaissance (comédie with vaudevilles and divertissements, 1, P.-Y. Barré and J.-B. Radet), Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 15 June 1787 (*c*1787)
Les solitaires de Normandie (oc with vaudevilles, 1, A.-P.-A. de Piis and Barré), Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 15 Jan 1788 (*c*1788)
Candide marié, ou Il faut cultiver son jardin (comédie with vaudevilles, 2, Barré and Radet), Paris, Comédie-Italienne, 20 June 1788 (*c*1788)

OTHER WORKS

Sacred: Exaltabo te, motet, 1764; Requiem, 1766; De profundis, motet, 1766; other masses, lost
Other vocal: L'absence et le retour de Flore, cantatille, 1759, F-Pn; Iris, cantatille (?1759); L'été, cantatille (n.d.); L'amitié, cantatille, acc. 2 vn, b, 1764, lost; Recueil portatif de chansons, airs, ariettes, et duo (1765); 2 collections of ariettes, duos, romances, acc. bc (*c*1775, *c*1782); Recueil d'airs, romances, et duo, acc. 2 vn, bc (*c*1782); other cantatilles, lost
Inst: 6 duos, 2 vn, op.1 (*c*1777); 6 trios, 2 vn, b, op.2 (*c*1781)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB
Spectacles de Paris, xviii–xxxix (1769–90)
Almanach musical/Calendrier musical universel, vii–x (1782–9)
Babault: Annales dramatiques, ou Dictionnaire général des théâtres (Paris, 1808–12/R)
C.D. Brenner: A Bibliographical List of Plays in the French Language 1700–1789 (Berkeley, 1947, 2/1979)
D. Tunley: The Eighteenth-Century French Cantata (London, 1974, 2/1997)

ETHYL L. WILL/ELISABETH COOK

L'Escurel, Jehannot de. See JEHANNOT DE L'ESCUREL.

Lesina (It.). See HVAR.

Leslie. A tremulant loudspeaker for use with electronic organs, designed by Donald J. Leslie (*b c*1911) and manufactured from 1940 by the Electro Music Co. in Pasadena, California. Since 1965 the company has been bought by CBS Musical Instruments, the Hammond Organ Co. (1980), Noel Crabbe (1985; licensed to Calo Corp., Batavia, near Chicago, in 1988) and Hammond Suzuki USA (1992); it is now based in Addison, near Chicago. The firm has marketed many models, originally intended only for Hammond organs but subsequently also for other types, in addition to licensing individual manufacturers (including Baldwin, Conn, Gulbransen, Kawai, Kimball, Kinsman, Lowrey, Thomas and Wurlitzer organs, as well as the Rhodes electric piano). In the digital age, several companies have manufactured electronic Leslie simulators, including Dynacord, Korg and Voce, and equivalent circuitry is also built into various electronic organs. Since the 1960s musicians have also used Leslie loudspeakers with other instruments, particularly electric guitars; special preamplifiers were manufactured for this.

The Leslie is normally housed in a separate cabinet, controlled remotely from the organ console, but in some instruments it is incorporated into the console. The sound is diffused from fixed loudspeakers, through a treble unit with rotating twin horns (one is a dummy, for balance) and a rotating curved reflector for the main loudspeaker (itself rotated in several models); both have two speeds, slower for 'chorus' and faster for vibrato.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Vail: 'Don Leslie: the Whirl to Success', Keyboard, xvi/4 (1990), 121–2; continued as 'The Leslie Speaker, Part 2', xvi/6 (1990), 87–9; rev. in The Hammond Organ: Beauty in the B (San Francisco, 1997), 12–15, 130–59

HUGH DAVIES

Leslie, Henry (David) (b London, 18 June 1822; d Llansantffraid-ym-Mechaim, nr Oswestry, 4 Feb 1896). English choral conductor and composer. He was a pupil of Charles Lucas, and played the cello at the Sacred Harmonic Society and other concerts. From 1847 he was associated with the Amateur Musical Society, first as honorary secretary and later as conductor. In 1855 he took charge of what became known as the Henry Leslie Choir; this celebrated a cappella ensemble – originally 35 in number, but later augmented as occasion demanded – first heard at the Hanover Square Rooms on 22 May 1856, gained first prize in an International Choral Competition held at the Paris Exhibition in 1878. It was dissolved in 1880, but re-formed in 1882 under Alberto Randegger, with Leslie as conductor from 1885 to 1887. Leslie's London concert programmes were notable for the large amount of English choral music they contained, though they also featured well-known foreign composers. In 1864 Leslie became principal of the National College of Music (dissolved in 1866). From 1863 to 1889 he conducted the Herefordshire Philharmonic Society, and in 1874 founded the Guild of Amateur Musicians. While living in the West Country he interested himself in the training of village choirs; he was a founder of the Oswestry School of Music and the Oswestry Festival. Leslie's own compositions include symphonies, oratorios, operas, cantatas and partsongs; he edited Cassell's Choral Music (London, 1867) and other collections intended to popularize partsongs from earlier periods. His work with local choral groups was continued by his son, W.H.P. Leslie (1860–1926), an able business man and a Master of the Musicians' Company (1924).

WORKS

(selective list)

all printed works published in London

STAGE

Romance (operetta, J.P. Simpson), 1857, London, CG, 2 Feb 1860, ov., arr. pf, songs (1860); as Bold Dick Turpin, London, St James's, 1878
Ida, or The Guardian Storks (legendary op, 3, Simpson), op.22, London, CG, 15 Nov 1865, vs (1864)

VOCAL

Orats: Immanuel, op.8, London, 2 March 1854, vs (1854); Judith (H.F. Chorley), Birmingham, 1858, vs (1859)
Other sacred: TeD and Jub, D, 1846; Let God arise, festival anthem, solo vv, chorus, orch, op.5, 1849, vs (1850); Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, anthem (1876); The First Christian Morn (biblical-pastoral cant.), 1880; O have mercy upon me, anthem, 1883; other works
Secular: cants., incl. Holyrood (Chorley), op.17, 1860, vs (1860); The Daughter of the Isles (A. Matthison), 1861 (1862); madrigals, incl. Charm me asleep (R. Herrick), 6vv, op.24 no.3 (1869); My love is fair (G. Peele) (1869); O let me play the fool (W. Shakespeare), 6vv (1885); partsongs, duets, songs, many pubd

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Sym., F, 1847; The Templar, ov., 1852; 1 other sym.
Chbr: Qnt, str; Qnt, pf, wind insts; other works, incl. pf pieces

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Obituary, The Year's Music 1897 (London, 1897), 318–19

J.J. Silantien: The Part-Song in England, 1837–1914 (diss., U. of Illinois, 1980)

H.C. COLLES/E.D. MACKERNESS

Les Musiciens du Louvre. French period instrument orchestra based in Paris, founded in 1984 by MARC MINKOWSKI to perform Baroque and Classical repertory. The orchestra's main sphere of activity lies in opera and oratorio, and it performed Lully's Phaëton for the official opening of the Lyons Opéra in 1993. Among its recordings are Lully's Phaëton and Acis et Galatée, Charpentier's Le malade imaginaire, Rameau's Hippolyte et Aricie and Dardanus, Handel's Teseo, Amadigi and Ariodante and Stradella's S Giovanni Battista, which won a Gramophone Award.

NICHOLAS ANDERSON

Lesne, Gérard (b Montmorency, 15 July 1956). French countertenor. Mainly self-taught, he joined the Clemencic Consort in Vienna in 1979 and since then has appeared with many of the leading European early music ensembles, including the Ensemble Clément Janequin, La Grande Ecurie et la Chambre du Roy, the Chapelle Royale, Hesperion XX and Les Arts Florissants. In 1985 he founded his own vocal and instrumental ensemble, Il Seminario Musicale, with which he has appeared in concerts and festivals throughout Europe. Although he has sung a number of operatic roles, he shows closer affinity with sacred music of the 17th and 18th centuries, for which his lightly textured, pure-toned voice is particularly well suited. His recordings include Stradella's S Giovanni Battista, Charpentier's David et Jonathas, Handel's Poro, Vivaldi's L'incoronazione di Dario, Leçons de ténèbres by Charpentier and Couperin, cantatas by Alessandro Scarlatti, Caldara, Bach, Handel and Bononcini, and sacred music by Monteverdi, Vivaldi, Pergolesi and Jommelli.

NICHOLAS ANDERSON

Lesotho, Kingdom of. Country in southern Africa. It has an area of 30,355 km² and a population of 2·29 million (2000 estimate), 98% of whom are Basotho. Basotho music is stylistically similar to that of the other indigenous peoples of southern Africa, including the Xhosa, some of whom live in south-central Lesotho. The Basotho have strong historical, cultural and linguistic links with the Tswana of Botswana and the Sotho (Pedi) of South Africa's Northern province, but corporate and geographical separation of these peoples since the 18th century have differentiated their musical styles, especially those connected with social identity, rituals of the life-cycle and economic pursuits.

1. Main musical types. 2. Instruments. 3. Songs and dances. 4. Modern developments.

1. MAIN MUSICAL TYPES. Music is an integral part of Basotho social education and traditionally links hearing with the understanding of the natural and social worlds. The temporal arts (lipapali: 'games') of the Basotho are clearly separated from the graphic and plastic arts. Their four basic types include one connected with speaking (ho bua), two with (instrumental) sound-making (ho letsa) and one with singing (ho bina). The contemporary category of 'music' is called mmino (literally, 'song', from ho bina).

All these types of Basotho music are performed with specific objectives and derive their cultural significance more from the social contexts in which they occur than from their musical form or style. Many forms are found in more than one context; for example the mokorotlo and mohobelo dances, with a change of text, also provide the songs for communal work. In addition to these specific uses, many lipapali occur as forms of competition: this is especially so with the tunes called linong played on the lesiba stick zither, the mohobelo and mokhibo dances, school choir singing and the sefela songs of the migrant workers. These periodic competitions help to maintain the common musical traditions and at the same time define and maintain the social, regional and individual identities of performers and social groups.

2. INSTRUMENTS. There are two kinds of instrument: those sounded by the hand (liletsa tsa matsoho) and those sounded by the mouth (liletsa tsa molomo). Each group contains idiophones, chordophones and aerophones, but only those sounded by the hand include membranophones. All the instruments are played solo or in the accompaniment of songs, dances and other activities; ensemble performances rarely occur. While there is not a large variety of musical instruments, a wide range of game and topical songs can be performed on any one instrument, in addition to its characteristic songs. All the instruments have been described in detail by Percival Kirby (1934).

Hand-sounded instruments include both a single- and a double-headed drum, the moropa and the sekupu. Both drums are small, not more than 70 cm in length. The moropa is used to accompany girls' initiation songs and women's dancing, while the sekupu is used by certain healers. These healers (mathuela) use dance and song as an integral part of their therapy; historically most have been women. In addition, the sekupu is played to accompany an increasingly popular dance celebration, called litolobonya or pitiki, which is held for the mother of a newborn child and performed exclusively by and for groups of women who are mothers themselves (Coplan, 1994; Wells, 1994). Traditional hand-drumming has thus been almost exclusively a female activity. The hand-sounded group also includes the sevuvu (bullroarer), morutlhoana (shaken rattles), setjoli (rubbed rattles) and the manyenenyene (metal bells). The principal string instruments in this group are the two monochord musical bows: the thomo, which is beaten with a small stick and has a gourd resonator with a hole in the back that is stopped against the body; and the sekhankula or 'mamokhorong, which is bowed with a small horsehair bow and which has a large, closed tin resonator at the upper end. A third important string instrument is the masholo-sholo, a bowed trough zither made of bamboo (Koole, 1952).

Mouth-sounded instruments include all that are blown, vocalized or mouth-resonated; mouth-resonance is an important feature in the Basotho classification of instruments and is regarded as a part of the instrument and not solely as a performing technique. These include aerophones (lekhitiane), megaphones (liphala), animal-horn trumpets (phalana) and flutes (lekolilo), chordophones (lekope and setolotolo, simple and compound mouth-resonated bows) and idiophones (sekebeku, a jew's harp; and lesiba, a mouth-resonated stick zither sounded by blowing, on a feather quill affixed to one end of the single string). The lesiba was adapted from the Korana who call it gora (figs.1 and 2).

1. Lesiba (mouth-resonated stick zither); detail showing placement on the lips

Basotho musical instruments are used with specific functional objectives, e.g. the primary use of the lesiba is in cattle-herding: birds' sounds and actions are seen to affect cattle; these sounds can be imitated on the lesiba and the instrument used to control the animals' behaviour.

3. SONGS AND DANCES. Songs are divided into those that are performed standing still (ho engoe) and those involving coordinated movement and therefore 'sung with the feet' (ka maoto). The former are used in girls' and boys' initiation ceremonies. The education of boys for initiation (lebollo) consists to a considerable extent of likoma (secret instructional songs). The texts of these songs, which have a special linguistic structure, are of two types. There are myth-like historical songs that trace origins and migrations, cite hardships and punishments and establish the general continuity of the present with the past. Other song texts are concerned with customs, moral principles and with the dangers of life (Guma, 1967). Closely related, conceptually and musically, to the instructional songs are mangae, songs learnt by the initiates to be presented publicly upon their return from isolation. The texts of these songs are a combination of farewells to the past, self-praises and the construction of a poetic image of one's identity and personality. As each initiate sings and recites praises, his fellow initiates respond in chorus, and the audience comes forward with gifts that mark their acceptance of the boy as a man. The instructional songs impress the significance of their ideas on the initiate, while he learns to express what he has absorbed through mangae.

Since the 1840s, the 'standing still' song type has also included religious hymns (sefela) of the Christian churches as well as the songs of spiritualist and prophetic churches. By the 1870s, the term sefela was further extended to refer to a form of lengthy sung poetry performed solo by Basotho workers employed in the new mines of South Africa (Coplan, 1988; 1994; Wells, 1994). The term sefela originally referred to solo verses sung by initiates during mangae initiation graduation songs, and the link with the song forms to which it has been applied appears to be emotional fervour (Coplan, 1987). Other songs in this group are lullabies, responsorial laments for the dead sung by women (koli ea malla), songs of school choirs (monyanyako), a responsorial prayer for rain (thapelo) and songs sung during the arrangements preceding a marriage.

Songs that involve coordinated actions include work-songs for threshing, tanning, grinding and hoeing. Herd-boys sing mouse-hunting songs that praise mice and frighten them into being trapped and killed (Mokhali, *c*1970). Most work-songs are responsorial and iterative, with texts that refer to the tasks performed and the hardships they involve (Guma, 1967).

Songs that serve as the motive force in dramatic dances are central to this type. The mokhibo, a group dance, is performed by women who dance on their knees while gesturing with the upper half of the body. They are supported by a group of singers who encourage them and explain the dance through topical and mundane song texts. The songs, sung by both men and women, are polyphonic and responsorial and are accompanied by a single drum and hand-clapping. The mokorotlo (pl. mekorotlo) is a men's dance associated with warfare, and its stamping gestures dramatize the strategy and tactics of battle; long responsorial songs describe the fate of men who fall. The dance is performed to highlight the special activities of chiefs, to accompany the ritual hunting of wild animals, during boys' initiation, and in preparation for other dance performances. Mokorotlo performances are individualistic and competitive, and, like mangae, they are interspersed with praises. At country race meetings, mekorotlo are performed on horseback and individual mounts are praised. At harvest, village work teams sing mekorotlo as they cut and thresh, urged on by a solo praiser.

Mohobelo is another men's dance supported by responsorial songs and characterized by uniform movements of the dancers punctuated by solo dancing. As in the mokhibo women's dance, these songs are topical and in combination with the dancing serve to maintain group cohesion and social solidarity. There were originally two basic styles of mohobelo, identified with the historical division between high chiefs of northern Lesotho (Ha-Molapo) and those of the south (Matsieng), that of the former being more energetic and faster in tempo than the latter; each style had its own corpus of songs. Just as popular with males of all ages is the ntlamo 'stamping' dance, adapted from a Zulu workers' dance of the same name (ndhlamu) encountered in the South African mines. Ntlamo is but one of the many examples of choreological exchange among neighbouring southern African cultures that have occurred since well before European colonization.

There are few occasions when young men and women participate in the same dance. In one version of a dance

2. Lesiba (mouth-resonated stick zither); the instrument is normally played solo called moqoqopelo or motjeko, boys and girls dance in a circle while one girl sings of her affection for a boy who responds by dancing (Mokhali, *c*1970). In another version, young men dance and respond with a short refrain to witty and amusing texts sung by a leader (Guma, 1967). Men and women participate equally in the possession dances of the mathuela healing cult, which was imported from Zulu-speaking regions to the south-east of Lesotho.

4. MODERN DEVELOPMENTS. Traditionally there was no professionalism in Basotho music, though this has developed in response to changes in Basotho culture and as a result of the rise of patronage and a popular market. Broadcasting and commercial recording have also been changing Basotho music. The exposure of traditional styles to a wider mass audience and the influence of imported song styles and instruments have given rise to both syncretized and entirely new forms of musical expression, especially those of instrumental groups. The sefela songs of the migrants were taken up by both male and female tavern singers, put into the rhythmic, strophic form proper to instrumental backing by pedal organ or German concertina, and called famo after the dance they accompanied. Since the 1960s, these bar songs have been backed by duos comprised of piano accordion (koriana) and a new form of the meropa drum made from a 20-litre tar can, a rubber inner tube head and a row of manyenenyene (consisting of bottle tops), which is beaten with sticks or flexible lengths cut from bus tyres.

There have been extensive resultant changes in interpretation and losses among some of the more restricted and specialized types of music. Still, the music played and sung in the taverns and recorded on cassettes remains unmistakably Basotho in rhythm, melody and other musical characteristics. Other factors that have contributed to change include the market that has emerged for popular music played on Western instruments, as well as new opportunities given to professional composers and performers.

In 1969 Huskisson listed over 40 Basotho composers whose works spanned the Western classical, Basotho traditional and current popular fields. One of these composers, the late J.P. Mohapeloa, published a collection of 92 choral partsongs in three volumes entitled Meloli le lithallere tsa Afrika ('Melodies and decorated songs of Africa', 1935–75). These are in Tonic Sol-fa notation, and they provided the first new Basotho school music since the hymnbook Lifela tsa Sione ('Hymns of Zion'; see Huskisson, 1969) was published in 1844. Another collection of composed songs, which includes a few transcriptions of traditional children's songs, is Binang ka thabo: lipina tsa Sesotho tsa likolo le lihlopha tsa libini ('Sing with joy: Sesotho songs for schools and choirs', 1963). While composition of partsongs arranged in Western harmonization has declined, new composers are now increasingly active, and the old songs of Mohapeloa and others are found in a multitude of modern performance contexts.

Recordings of Basotho music are held at the International Library of African Music, Grahamstown, South Africa. More easily available are the cassettes of koriana and meropa tavern songs recorded in studios in South Africa and now released internationally on a number of record labels.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Casalis: The Basutos, or Twenty-Three Years in South Africa (London, 1861)
W.A. Norton: 'Sesuto Songs and Music', South African Journal of Science, vi (1910), 314
W.A. Norton: 'African Native Melodies', South African Journal of Science, xii (1916), 619
N. Scully: 'Native Tunes Heard and Collected in Basutoland', Bantu Studies, v (1931), 247–51
P.R. Kirby: The Musical Instruments of the Native Races of South Africa (London, 1934, 2/1965)
J.P. Mohapeloa: Meloli le lithallere tsa Afrika [Melodies and decorated songs of Afrika] (Morija, Lesotho, 1935–75)
H. Ashton: The Basuto: a Social Study of Traditional and Modern Lesotho (London, 1952; rev., enlarged 2/1967)
A. Koole: 'Report on an Inquiry into the Music and Instruments of the Basutos in Basutoland', IMSCR V: Utrecht 1952, 263–70
H. Tracey: 'Sotho Folk Music', Basutoland Notes and Records, ii (1960), 37
H. Tracey: 'Folk Music in Basutoland', Basutoland Notes and Records, iii (1962), 26
Binang ka thabo: lipina tsa Sesotho tsa likolo le lihlopha tsa libini ['Sing with joy: Sesotho songs for schools and choirs'] (Mazenod, Lesotho, 1963)
S.M. Guma: The Form, Content and Technique of Traditional Literature in Southern Sotho (Pretoria, 1967)
Y. Huskisson: The Bantu Composers of Southern Africa/Die Bantoe-komponiste van Suider-Afrika (Johannesburg, 1969)
A.G. Mokhali: Basotho Music and Dancing (Rome, *c*1970)
D. Coplan: 'Eloquent Knowledge: Lesotho Migrants' Songs and the Anthropology of Experience', American Ethnologist, xiv (1987), 413–33
D. Coplan: 'Musical Understanding: the Ethnoaesthetics of Migrant Workers' Poetic Song in Lesotho', EthM, xxxii (1988), 337–68
D. Coplan: In the Time of Cannibals: the Word Music of South Africa's Basotho Migrants (Chicago, 1994)
R. Wells: An Introduction to the Music of the Basotho (Morija, Lesotho, 1994)

CHARLES R. ADAMS/DAVID B. COPLAN

Lespine. See L'EPINE family.

Lespine, Charles de (b Paris, ?1580s; d ?Turin, after 1627). French lutenist, composer, poet and dramatist. He first came to notice for his verses for ballets (Ballet des Mores, perf. 1609). Towards the end of 1610 he travelled to England, where he so impressed Queen Anne, wife of James I, with his playing and skills as courtier that she provided handsomely for his stay. After touring Scotland and Ireland he was in Frankfurt in 1612. In early 1618 he accompanied a diplomatic mission from Vienna to the Sultan Osman II, arriving in Constantinople in February. By May he was back in Vienna where, during a ballet at court, news came of the Second Defenestration of Prague. In July he accompanied the Archduke Charles, Bishop of Breslau, to Prague and thence to his residence at Neisse (now Nysa) in Silesia. Following the election of Frederick, Elector Palatine, as King of Bohemia in August 1619 and the consequent upheavals, Lespine took refuge in Warsaw at the court of Sigismund III. After a brief tour of Sweden and Copenhagen he was back in France in 1621. By 1627 he had moved to Turin at the behest of his friend Antoine Boileau, violinist to Chrestienne de France, sister of Louis XIII and wife of Victor Amadeus of Piedmont.

Lespine's literary works (Les Oeuvres de Lespine, Turin, 1627) include occasional poems, texts for three ballets, a verse tragedy and an account of his travels. His lute works are preserved in sources (*c*1615–*c*1635) outside France, notably England and Sweden. They represent the style of the generation of Robert Ballard, mostly in vieil ton but also in the newer tunings of the 1620s, and include early moves towards the semi-measured prelude.

WORKS

28 (?27) pieces, in vieil ton: 15 courantes, 5 ballets, 3 voltes, 2 preludes, 1 fantasia, 1 bergamasque, ?1 passamezzo, A-KR, CZ-Pnm, D-Hs, LEm, GB-Cfm, HAdolmetsch, Lbl, Lspencer, RUS-SPan, S-N, SK, US-NYp, R; N. Vallet: Het tweede boeck van de luyt-tablatuer (Amsterdam, 1616), L. de Moy: Le petit boucquet de frise orientale (n.p., 1631), R. Mathew: The Lutes Apology (London, 1652)

25 pieces, in 3 accords nouveaux: 8 courantes, 6 sarabandes, 5 ballets, 4 allemandes, 2 gavottes, GB-En, S-N

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Lachèvre: Charles de Lespine (Paris, 1935)
D. Poulton: 'The Dolmetsch Library, Haslemere, MS II B 1', The Consort, no.35 (1979), 327–41
K. Sparr: 'French Lutenists and French Lute-Music in Sweden', Le luth et sa musique II: Tours 1980, 61–2
D. Ledbetter: 'French Lute Music 1600–1650: Towards a Definition of Genres', The Lute, xxx (1990), 25–47
J. Craig-McFeely: 'A Can of Worms: Lord Herbert of Cherbury's Lute Book', The Lute, xxxi (1991), 20–48

DAVID LEDBETTER

Lessard, John (Ayres) (b San Francisco, 3 July 1920). American composer. As a child he had composition lessons with Cowell. He went on to study with Boulanger, Dandelot and Cortot at the Ecole Normale de Musique, Paris (1937–40); he continued his work with Boulanger at the Longy School of Music (1940–41). After serving in the US Army, he settled in New York. His honours include two Guggenheim fellowships (1946, 1953) and awards from the Alice M. Ditson Fund (1946) and the American Academy of Arts and Letters (1952). In 1962 he joined the music department at SUNY, Stony Brook, where he taught until his retirement in 1990.

Lessard's compositions evolved from a neo-classical idiom into a style influenced, particularly in the domains of texture and sonic design, by serial procedures. Other notable characteristics include strong linear and contrapuntal structures, coloured in the late works by small tone clusters. Among his early works, the Piano Sonata (1940) received critical acclaim from Virgil Thomson and wide public recognition.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Vn Conc. 1942; Box Hill, ov., 1946; Cantilena, ob, str, 1947; Little Concert, 1947; Conc., wind, 1949; Conc. (fl, cl)/(2 ob, hn), 2 ob, hn, bn, str, 1952; Serenade, str, 1953; Serenade, 1957; Suite, 1959; Sinfonietta concertante, 1961; Hp Conc., 1963; Pastimes and an Alleluia, 1974

Vocal: Ariel (W. Shakespeare), 1v, pf, 1941; Orpheus (Shakespeare), 1v, pf, 1943; Full Fathom Five (Shakespeare), 1v, pf, 1948; When as in Silks my Julia Goes (R. Herrick), 1v, pf, 1951; Don Quixote and the Sheep, Bar, B, orch, 1955; 2 Madrigals, SSATB, 1955; 12 Songs from Mother Goose, 1v, str trio, 1964; Fragments from the Cantos of Ezra Pound (cant.), Bar, chbr ens, 1969; Stars, Hill, Valley, S, pf, 1983; The Pond in a Bowl (Han Yu), S, pf, perc, 1984; The Seasons, S, pf, perc, 1992; 4 Songs (C.N. White), S, pf, 1995; *c*35 other songs

Chbr and solo inst: Wind Octet, 1952; Sonata, vc, pf, 1956; Trios of Consanguinity, fl, va, vc, 1957; Trio in sei parti, 1966; Quodlibets I–III, 2 tpt, trbn, 1967; Wind Qnt no.2, 1970; Brass Qnt, 1971; Movts I–VIII, tpt, other inst(s), 1976–9; Concert Duo, va, gui, 1981; Divertimento, gui, 1981; Music nos.1–3, gui, perc, 1983; Concert Duo, 2 gui, 1984; Album, gui, 1986; Drift, Follow, Persist, hn, pf, perc, 1988; An Assembled Sequence, perc, 1989; Qnt, fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1993; Gather and Disperse, fl, cl, tpt, trbn, 2 perc, pf, 2 vn, 2 vc, 1994; 5 Pieces, hn, perc, 1997; other duets, trios, qnts

Kbd: Sonata, pf, 1940; Mask, pf, 1946; Little Concert, pf, 1947; Toccata in 4 Movts, hpd, 1951; Threads of Sound Recalled, pf, 1980; other pf and hpd works

Principal publishers: ACA, Joshua

STEVEN MACKEY

Lessel, Franciszek (b Warsaw, *c*1780; d Piotrków Trybunalski, 26 Dec 1838). Polish composer and pianist, son of WINCENTY FERDYNAND LESSEL. He studied first with his father and at the end of 1799 went to Vienna, where he studied with Haydn. They apparently became close friends and Lessel remained in Vienna until Haydn's death in 1809. Lessel gave at least one concert in Vienna, and some of his compositions were well received there. During his stay in Vienna he made four return visits to Poland, each lasting several months: he gave concerts in Kraków and was also a court musician at Prince Lubomirski's castle at Łańcut. After his return to Poland in 1809 he settled in Warsaw, where he gave concerts of his own music and was for some time musical director of the Amateur Music Society. In the early 1820s, as a result of a personal tragedy, he withdrew from active musical life and undertook non-musical work, including (from 1837) that of inspector of the gimnazjum (grammar school) at Piotrków, where he worked until his death.

Lessel was among the most distinguished Polish composers of the early 19th century and is the chief representative of the mature Classical style in Polish music. He was mainly influenced by Haydn. This influence is most evident in Lessel's choice of genres, his structuring of forms and in his harmony and orchestration. He used polyphony in a manner similar to that of Haydn, including polyphonic passages both in sacred works with orchestra and in instrumental compositions, especially in the finales of multi-movement works. Mozart's influence is evident in the piano pieces, where there is a strong virtuoso element. His piano concerto in C displays characteristics of the 'style brillant', especially in the shaping of the sonata-form Allegro. Both themes are in a cantilena style and they are linked by virtuoso passages; the solo instrument dominates and is followed by the orchestra. Lessel's works often contain Polish features, such as the rhythmic patterns of Polish dances (mainly in cyclic works) and popular melodies used as thematic material on a larger scale.

Lessel's creative career falls into two periods. The first spans the years in Vienna and the early years after his return to Poland, when he concentrated on instrumental works, while from about 1815 he composed mainly sacred works with instrumental accompaniment and some chamber pieces. Most of Lessel's works were not published. Many of them are lost, and it is likely that his output was much greater than it appears.

WORKS

STAGE

Cyganie [The Gypsies] (op, F.D. Kniaźnin), unfinished, lost
La dancomanie [The Balletomane] (ballet), lost

VOCAL

Sacred: Kantata do Świętej Cecylii [Cantata to St Cecilia] (B. Kudlicz), perf. Warsaw, 1812, PL-CZ; Msza polska [Polish Mass] (F. Wężyk), B♭, 1813, CZ, 4 other masses (3 lost), incl. 1, C major, A-Wm; 2 requiem settings, lost; Graduale Benedictus et Venerabilis, solo vv, orch, PL-CZ; Ave regina, off, 3 solo vv, orch, CZ; 3 motets, lost

Songs: 10 songs (J.U. Niemcewicz), in Śpiewy historyczne (Warsaw, 1816)

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Adagio and Rondeau à la polonaise, pf, orch, op.9, 1807 or earlier (Leipzig, ?1807); Potpourri, pf, orch, op.12 (Leipzig, ?1812) [also for vn, pf, entitled Caprice and Variations, op.10, PL-Kc]; Pf Conc., C, op.14 (Leipzig, *c*1813); Ov., C, op.10 (Leipzig, n.d.); Variations, fl, orch, arr. fl, pf (Kraków, 1953); 6 syms., lost, except no.5, g, Finale, copy in A-Wgm, PL-Wtm (reproduced); 2

concs., hn, orch, Variations, hn, orch, Capriccio, D, 'clarino', orch, all lost

Chbr: Str Qt no.1, A, 1800, 1st movt Wtm; 3 Concert Duets, 2 fl, op.1 (Vienna, 1802); Duo and Variations on a theme from Cherubini's Faniska, 2 fl, op.7 (Vienna, 1805); Qt, fl, vn, va, vc, op.3 (Vienna, 1806); Fantaisie caractéristique, pf, vn, va, vc, op.31, 1822, pf pt. Wtm; Str Qt no.8, B♭, op.19, 1824, F-Pn; Pf Qnt, f, op.25, perf. 1834, lost; 3 Parthiae, 2 cl, 2 bn, 2 hn, A-Wgm, CZ-Pnm; Str Qt no.6, D, va pt. PL-Wtm; Pf Trio, E, op.5 (Leipzig, n.d.); 5 other str qts, Trio, 2 cl, bn, Duet, 2 fl, all lost

Pf: 3 Sonatas, op.2 (Vienna, *c*1800); 12 Ländler (Vienna, 1806); 2 Fantasias: C, op.8 (Leipzig, *c*1810), e, op.13 (Leipzig, 1813); Adagio and Fugue, d, pf 4 hands, op.11 (Warsaw and Leipzig, *c*1813); Variations on the Ukrainian song Jichaw kozak zza Dunaju [Jichaw, the Cossack from the Danube], op.15 no.1 (Warsaw, after 1817); Nowy polonez na fortepian [New Polonaise for the Piano], in Terpsychora, no.8 (Warsaw, 1821); Variations, op.15 no.2, ed. Z. Drzewiecki (Warsaw, 1934); other polonaises, lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Ernemann: List of Lessel's works, NZM, xii (1840), 67–8

T. Strumiłło: 'Śpiewy historyczne do słów J.U. Niemcewicza: ich historia i problematyka' [The Historical Songs to words by J.U. Niemcewicz: their history and the problems which they present], Studia muzykologiczne, iv (1955), 105–40

Franciszek Lessel w 200 rocznicę urodzin [Lessel on the 200th anniversary of his birth] (Gdańsk, 1980) [pubn of the Pánstwowa Wyższa Szkota Muzyczna Gdańsk]

C. Erber: 'Inwentarz notarialny Franciszka Lessla' [Inventory of everything belonging to Lessel], Muzyka, xxxiv/2 (1989), 37–58

A. Nowak-Romanowicz: Historia muzyki polskiej, iv: Klasycyzm [History of Polish music, iv: Classicism] (Warsaw, 1995)

E. Talma-Davous: 'VIII Kwartet Lessla odnaleziony' [The Eighth String Quartet by Lessel is rediscovered], RM, xl/12 (1996), 34–7

ZOFIA CHECHLIŃSKA

Lessel, Wincenty Ferdynand [Lesselt/Lössel, Vinzenz Ferdinand] (b Jílové, nr Prague, *c*1750; d Puławy or Warsaw, after 1825). Polish composer of Bohemian descent. The son of a burgrave, he received his musical education in Germany, where his family settled in 1762. He studied composition, the keyboard, violin and viola in Dresden under J.G. Schürer and from 1762 to about 1776 played the viola in the Dresden royal orchestra. By 1780 he was in Warsaw, and the following year he took the post of piano teacher at Prince Adam Kazimierz Czartoryski's establishment in Puławy. In 1787 he was appointed court Kapellmeister of the theatre at Puławy, for which he composed several operas, and by 1812 he was also music director of the theatre at Sieniawa (the other Czartoryski residence). From 1814 he directed and taught at the organists' school at Puławy founded by Czartoryski. In 1825 he was living at Puławy and was a singing teacher. His works show technical competence and, like those of many of his contemporary compatriots, are characterized by elements of Polish folk music.

WORKS

STAGE

first produced at Puławy and all lost, unless otherwise stated

Cyganie [The Gypsies] (op, F.D. Kniaźnin), 1787

Dwaj strzelcy i mleczarka [Two Huntsmen and the Milkmaid] (operetta, L. Anseaume, trans. J. Baudouin), 1787; rev. version (trans. A. Hoffman), 1804; duet frag., PL-Wtm

Matka spartanka [The Spartan Mother] (op, Kniaźnin), 1787

Troiste wesele [Triple Wedding] (op, 5, Kniaźnin), 1787

Piast (melodrama, J.U. Niemcewicz), 1800; rev. version (L.A. Dmuszewski), Sieniawa, 27 Jan 1820

Pantomima, 1805

I plotka czasem się przyda [Even Gossip is Sometimes Useful] (idyll, I. Tański), 1805; sequel [same title], Sieniawa, 1818

Domek na gościńcu [Little House in the High-Road] (1, Dmuszewski), Sieniawa, 1818

Pielgrzym z Dobromila [The Pilgrim from Dobromil] (2, A. Kłodziński), Sieniawa, 31 March 1819

Przyjazd pożądany [Wished-for Arrival] (2, Kłodziński), Sieniawa, 31 March 1820

OTHER WORKS

Cant. for the consecration of the Protestant church, Warsaw, 30 Dec 1781, lost

Sym. for his son's birthday, sinfonias, marches, polonaises, orch, all lost

Nuta z odmianami z Weledy [Melody of Weleda with Variations], pf 4 hands, vn, lost

3 polonaises: pf, B♭, PL-Wtm; pf, E♭, ed. in Prosnak; vn, D; Ariette ... variée, pf, 1797, A-Wgm: all ed. in Rudnicka-Kruszewska

Sonatas, polonaises, pf; preludes, org: all lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DlabačžKL; PSB

T. Mikulski, ed.: F.D. Kniaźnin: listy [Kniaźnin: letters] (Wrocław, 1951)

J. Prosnak: Kultura muzyczna Warszawy XVIII wieku (Kraków, 1955)

H. Rudnicka-Kruszewska: Wincenty Lessel (Kraków, 1968)

S. Durski: 'Zabawy teatralne w Sieniawie' [Theatre amusements in Sieniawa], Pamiętnik teatralny, xix (1970), 28–48

ALINA NOWAK-ROMANOWICZ/R

Lesser, Wolfgang (b Breslau, 31 May 1923; d Hennigsdorf, nr Berlin, 27 Sept 1999). German composer and music functionary. In 1938 he studied at the Berlin Conservatory. For political reasons he emigrated to London in 1939, and in 1940 he was interned on the Isle of Man. In 1942 he became a member of the Communist Party of Germany. From 1943 to 1947 he served in the British Army, after which he returned to Berlin and studied composition with Wagner-Régeny, Eisler and Kochan at the East Berlin Hochschule für Musik (1950–4). From 1954 to 1961 he was a teacher and composer with the GDR's State People's Art Ensemble, and then established himself as a freelance composer. In 1964 he became vice-secretary of the East German Union of Composers and Musicologists, in 1968 first secretary (until 1978), and in 1985 president (until 1989). In 1971 he became a member of the Kulturkommission within the Central board of East Germany's state party, and also a member of the East German parliament. In addition, he was general secretary of the East German Music Council (1968–79) and chairman of the board of the East German performing rights association (1983–5). His awards include the Vaterländischer Verdienstorden and the National Prize. He is best known for his strongly emotional songs which, in their concise and heavily optimistic expression, recall Eisler; there is an equally lyrical expressiveness in the concertante works. All of Lesser's music is marked by a striving after simplicity and freedom of form.

WORKS

(selective list)

Vn Conc., 1962; Sonata, vn, 1964; Ein Tag in unserer Stadt (M. Streubel), 1v, pf, 1967; Str Qt, 1979–80; Plattdeutsches Liederbuch, mixed chorus, female chorus, male chorus, 1986–7; Str Qt, 1992; 4 Pieces, pf, cl qnt, 1994; Sonata, vc; Sonata, cl; Das Jahr, children's chorus, insts; Liederzyklus (G. Maurer), 1v, pf; Im Vogelflug (Streubel), 1v, pf; Oktoberkinder (children's op); mass songs, scores for theatre, cinema, radio, TV

Principal publishers: Deutscher Verlag für Musik (Leipzig), Internationale Musikbibliothek

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Markowski: 'Wolfgang Lesser', MG, xiii (1963), 296–9

H. Schaefer: '. . . gesellschaftlich konkret: Bemerkungen zum Violinkonzert von Wolfgang Lesser', MG, xiv (1964), 331–5

ECKART SCHWINGER/LARS KLINGBERG

Lessmann, Otto (b Rudersdorf, nr Berlin, 30 Jan 1844; d Jena, 27 April 1918). German critic, pianist and composer. Although he was best known as the owner and editor of the influential Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung (1882–1907), Lessmann had earlier studied the piano with Bülow and composition with Friedrich Kiel in Berlin. In 1866 he became a piano teacher at the Stern Conservatory and the following year joined the faculty of the Klavier-Schule Tausig, a position he held until Tausig's death in 1871. From 1872 he was head of the music department of the Kaiserin Augusta Stiftung, in Potsdam, and he also taught at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory. The relationship with Bülow and Tausig was important in bringing him into personal contact with both Liszt and Wagner, and he became a staunch supporter of the New German School.

Lessmann was widely respected as a critic. His prose was judicious and tempered, and it was informed by many years of practical music-making. Generally speaking he championed the new and unusual in music. This made him the polar opposite of his older contemporary Eduard Hanslick, who was seen as representing the more conservative musicians of the time. Lessmann was a regular visitor to Bayreuth and gave generous coverage to the festivals of the Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein, of which Liszt was the lifetime president. Liszt thought well of him as a composer and transcribed his three 'Tannhäuser' songs for solo piano. He also wrote a monograph on Liszt (Franz Liszt: eine Charakterstudie, Berlin, 1881).

ALAN WALKER

Lesson (i) (from Lat. lectio; Fr. leçon). A formal reading (often so called) from a scriptural text at a liturgical service (the form 'lection' is an alternative). The word may be regarded as appropriate in this sense outside the Western Christian tradition (see EKPHONETIC NOTATION; ISLAMIC RELIGIOUS MUSIC, §I, 3; JEWISH MUSIC, §III, 2(ii)); this article is concerned only with common origins and the Latin tradition.

The reading of scriptural texts was inherited by the early Church directly from the synagogue of its day and applied from early times to the core writings of the Church itself, the incipient New Testament, as well as to the existing scriptures, the Old Testament, both initially in their Greek form (Justin Martyr, *c*150 CE). It is not known when such texts were first given a musical inflection according to their grammatical structure (see CANTILLATION). Signs held to be indicative of this may go back as early as the 7th century in Syrian manuscripts (see EKPHONETIC NOTATION, §1), but it is impossible to be certain whether these indicate a properly musical inflection or merely mark pauses, stress and the like in reading. It would be safer to conclude that from the 9th century in the East and from the 10th in the West, on the evidence of theoretical sources and the signs themselves, lessons were being sung to simple formulae.

In the Christian tradition as in the Jewish, distinctions came to be made according to the function of the text (e.g. as between the Old Testament lesson in the Office, the EPISTLE and the GOSPEL) and the solemnity of the occasion. While many Western manuscripts do no more than indicate the grammatical structure with signs for pauses, others manage to convey a specifically musical element, as for example in the 15th-century manuscripts GB-Ctc B.11.12 and Trinity College, Oxford, MS c.77 (epistles), and Ctc B.11.13 and Trinity College, Oxford, MS c.23, c.76 (gospels: see Fenlon, 90–94). Theoretical sources (ordinals and the like) indicating the formulae in staff notation to go back to the 12th century, though they are commoner later (Bohn; Wagner, 38–52).

Some lessons called for more elaborate chants; these include passages from the LAMENTATIONS of Jeremiah for TENEBRAE and the genealogies from the gospels of St Matthew and St Luke sung during the Christmas season (see e.g. AS, 51–2, St Matthew, Christmas Matins; 88–9, St Luke, Epiphany Matins). The recitations of the PASSION during Holy Week were sung by three deacons to a special tone, and parts of their texts (especially those from St Matthew and St John) were frequently set in polyphony thereafter.

Lessons were sometimes troped, either in Latin or in the vernacular, the trope in the latter case offering a translation of the Latin text (Wagner, 513–14, with a Latin gospel and a French epistle; Gennrich, nos.5, 6: epistles in Occitan). Wagner's French example, for the Holy Innocents (28 December), is from a manuscript (F-CHRm 520) that contains similar epistles for St Stephen (26 December), St John the Evangelist (27 December), St Thomas of Canterbury (29 December) and St Nicholas (6 December). The Occitan examples (F-MOf 120, ff.13*r*, 17*r*) are both for St Stephen, but unlike the French ones their troping insertions are stanzaic and do not repeat the elaborate special melody of the Latin text: the second, indeed, is a contrafactum of the hymn Veni creator spiritus. Gennrich (p.14) refers to six Catalan versions of the same trope. There is a series of nine epistles for various feasts in F-Pn lat.1139, all but two troped in Latin. The Sarum Use, among others, called for a troped lesson at Midnight Mass before the epistle (Missale ad usum … Sarum, ed. F.H. Dickinson, Burntisland, 1861–83, cols.50–51): there are 3 polyphonic settings in GB-Cmc Pepys 1236 (see Harrison, AnnM, p.104): the same manuscript includes a monophonic mensural setting of the Lamentations by John Tuder and a curiosity of English parochial rites, a monophonic 'Propheta' trope (an acted troped lesson for Palm Sunday, not the same as the continental Ordo prophetarum: Harrison, AnnM, 124–8).

The sphere of the lesson is enlarged by consideration of ancillary forms such as the conductus before a lesson, the 'Jube domne benedicere' formula before a lesson, and the 'Haec dicit dominus' and 'Tu autem' formulae afterwards (cf. 'Jerusalem, Jerusalem' at the conclusion of the Lamentations). These are sometimes troped, and may be given polyphonic settings, like the lessons themselves. An example of the latter is the Leccio libri sapiencie (Epistle for the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary) in F-Pn lat.1139 (ff.44*v*–45*v*, as a later addition to this section of the manuscript). The same manuscript has a monophonic Occitan trope to the 'Tu autem' ('Be deu hoi mais finir', f.44*r*; Gennrich, no.3). Göllner offers a virtually complete edition of 'primitive' polyphonic settings of lessons and ancillary forms, excluding Lamentations and Passions, based on over 50 sources mainly from the Teutonic sphere.

Liturgical lessons in the Renaissance period (excluding of course motets based on epistle and gospel texts, which can hardly have been intended for liturgical use) are confined largely to Lamentations. An exception must be made for the polyphonic lessons of Lassus, in a severe style: there are two sets of nine lessons each for the Office of the Dead (from the Book of Job), and three for Christmas Matins (first Nocturn, from the Book of Isaiah), as well as two sets of Lamentations.

While polyphonic lessons (apart from Passions and Lamentations) do not seem to have been in use beyond 1600, their monophonic cantillation persisted in the Latin rite until the adoption of vernacular readings in 1970; even so, they may still be heard occasionally, in Latin and the vernacular. Lutheran and Anglican churches have also adopted the sung lesson at times. It is curious to find the accentus (i.e. lesson-tones) of Ornithoparcus (Micrologus musice actiue, 1517) surfacing in the translation by Dowland (1609), the more so as overtly Catholic allusions were mostly eliminated in his version. Whether they ever formed the basis of Anglican practice, however, seems very doubtful.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

HarrisonMMB
P. Bohn: 'Das liturgische Recitativ und dessen Bezeichnung in den liturgischen Büchern des Mittelalters', MMg, xix (1887), 29–36, 45–52, 61–8, 78–80
P. Wagner: Einführung in die gregorianischen Melodien (Leipzig, 1921/R), iii: Gregorianische Formenlehre
F. Gennrich: Der musikalische Nachlass der Troubadours (Darmstadt, 1958–60)
F.Ll. Harrison: 'Music for the Sarum Rite: MS. 1236 in the Pepys Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge', AnnM, vi (1958–63), 99–144
T. Göllner: Die mehrstimmige liturgischen Lesungen (Tutzing, 1969)
I. Fenlon: Cambridge Music Manuscripts, 900–1700 (Cambridge, 1982)

JOHN CALDWELL

Lesson (ii). A term originally used in England to denote an exercise in performance or composition but eventually extended to cover almost the entire field of domestic keyboard music as well as some kinds of instrumental chamber music. The last meaning came into use as early as 1599 with Morley's First Booke of Consort Lessons for treble viol, flute in G, bass viol, lute, cittern and pandora, which was followed by Rosseter's Lessons for Consort for the same instruments (London, 1609). The word appears on the title-page of the second English version (London, 1574) of Le Roy's (now lost) Instruction for the lute of 1567 ('with a briefe instruction how to play on the lute by tablature, to conduct and dispose thy hand unto the lute, with certaine easie lessons for that purpose'). This clearly pedagogic meaning was quickly expanded, and in due course the word appeared as part of a main title, for example in Robert Dowland's Varietie of Lute Lessons (London, 1610). It does not occur on the title-page of Parthenia (London, 1613[14]), the first collection of keyboard music to be printed in England, though it is used in George Chapman's introductory sonnet. The earliest known application of the word to a single piece occurs in My Ladye Nevells Booke (1591), a manuscript collection of keyboard music by Byrd, no.29 of which is A Lesson of Voluntarie. An early 17th-century source (GB-Lbl Add.30485) contains 'A lesson of Mr Tallis: two partes in one'; but this wording may not be original, and the piece appears as 'Canon in subdiapente ... with a running Base' (attrib. Bull), in Lbl Add.31403 (MB, xiv, 1960, no.51).

The word is not found extensively in early 17th-century sources, but it must have continued in use, for after the Restoration it came to denote almost any kind of domestic keyboard piece. The keyboard suite had originated during the Commonwealth: such groups of dances, unified by key, became known as suites of lessons, and a published 'collection of lessons' might consist entirely or partly of such suites. Thus we have, for example, Locke's Melothesia ... with a Choice Collection of Lessons (London, 1673); Purcell's posthumous A Choice Collection of Lessons (London, 1696), which consists of eight suites and some separate movements; and two collections of Suits of ... Lessons edited by William Babell (London, *c*1715 and 1717). Towards the end of the 18th century the educational connotation reappears in such phrases as 'lessons for beginners', 'progressive lessons' and so on, more ambitious works being labelled 'sonata'. The most frequent use of the term thus coincides with the era of the keyboard suite, roughly from 1660 to 1750; but the word normally applies to an individual movement. 'Lesson' was preferred to 'sonata' for solo, as opposed to accompanied, keyboard music.

The French word 'leçon' is found comparatively rarely in this sense – in works such as Couperin's Leçons de ténèbres the reference is of course to the liturgical lesson. The normal French equivalent is simply 'pièce', as in the numerous collections of 'suites de pièces' published during the 18th century (including Handel's Suites de pièces, London, 1720, which, however, uses the word 'lesson' in its English preface). The 1re leçon in Rameau's second collection (Paris, 1724) is merely an exercise for the five fingers, and most uses of the word are of this type. Italy had no generic name for a single keyboard piece other than the word 'sonata' when used in this sense. (30 of Domenico Scarlatti's sonatas were published, apparently in London (in 1738 or early 1739), as Essercizi per gravicembalo; subsequent English editions of his sonatas naturally used the title 'lessons'.) There is a closer parallel in the German word 'Übung', though this is a collective noun (as in Johann Krieger: Anmuthige Clavier-Übung, Nuremberg, *c*1698, and Bach: Clavier-Übung, 4 pts, 1731–*c*1742).

The use of the word 'lesson' in its educational sense was eventually superseded by 'study', derived from the French 'étude', and 'exercise'. The latter generally corresponded to the stricter use of 'leçon', while 'étude' or 'study' came to mean a freer kind of instructive piece, culminating in the masterpieces of Chopin; but the use of the terms was subject to a good deal of variation.

JOHN CALDWELL

Lessoth, Troilus à. See TROILUS À LESSOTH, FRANCISCUS GODEFRIDUS.

L'Estocart, Paschal de (b Noyon, Picardy, ?1539; d after 1584). French composer. From 1559 he is known to have been in Lyons, where he married in 1565; nothing more is known of his youth other than that he visited Italy several times. On 15 September 1581 he received a ten-year privilège from Henri III to publish his works: these were printed at Geneva by Jean de Laon and are exclusively religious in character. L'Estocart seems to have had connections with certain leading Protestant nobles (Guillaume de La Marck, Duke of Bouillon, his brother Jean, Count of La Marck, and the King of Navarre, who became Henri IV). He was also very friendly with Simon Goulart, a Protestant minister, as well as with a small Genevan literary circle of Huguenot refugees; all this indicates that L'Estocart adhered to the ideals of the Reformation. In 1581 he matriculated at the University of Basle and in the following year he went to the court at Nancy, where on 4 April 1582 he received a gratuity of 60 écus from Duke Charles III as a reward for the dedication of his Quatrains du sieur de Pibrac. In 1583 he was again in Basle. He is next heard of as a member of the Abbot of Valmont's chapel in the Catholic setting of the Puy d'Evreux, which organized an annual competition for composers. L'Estocart won the prize of the Harpe d'Argent for a five-part Latin motet, Ecce quam bonum et quam jucundum.

One of the hallmarks of L'Estocart's style is his daring harmony, and this is particularly marked in his Octonaires de la vanité du monde. He liked harmonies that were used very little by his contemporaries, such as augmented 5ths and augmented 6ths in discords and unusual sequences, and he enlivened his melodic lines with many intervals that are difficult to pitch. His concern was to convey as vividly as possible the sense of the words and to evoke precise ideas. He was one of the most thoroughly italianate of French composers in the second half of the 16th century; however, in that his works are exclusively religious L'Estocart remains an essentially Huguenot composer, and his music has a strength and austerity that well accords with this.

WORKS

Premier livre des octonaires de la vanité du monde, 3–6vv (Geneva and Lyons, 1582); ed. in MMFTR, x (1929)
Second livre des octonaires de la vanité du monde, 3–6vv (Geneva and Lyons, 1582); ed. in MMFTR, xi (1958)
126 quatrains du sieur de Pibrac, 2–6vv (Geneva and Lyons, 1582)
Sacrae cantiones, 4–7vv (Lyons, 1582)
150 pseaumes de David mis en rime françoise par Clément Marot et Théodore de Besze, 4–8vv, avec la mélodie huguenote (Geneva and Lyons, 1583/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Albrecht: 'Musikdrucke aus den Jahren 1576–1580 in Wilster (Holstein)', Mf, ii (1949), 204–9
E. Droz: 'Jean de Sponde et Pascal de L'Estocart', Bibliothèque d'humanisme et Renaissance, xiii (1951), 312–26
J. Chailley and M.Honegger: Introduction to Paschal de L'Estocart: Second livre des octonaires, MMFTR, xi (1958)
S. Fornaçon: 'L'Estocart und sein Psalter', Mf, xiii (1960), 188–91
L. Guillo: Les éditions musicales de la Renaissance lyonnaise (Paris, 1991)

MARC HONEGGER

L'Estrange [Le Strange; Lestrange]. English family of amateur musicians and music patrons. The family account books show that Sir Hamon L'Estrange (1583–1654) encouraged his whole family to make music. Resident musicians at their home in Hunstanton, Norfolk, included John Jenkins and Thomas Brewer, and two of Sir Hamon's sons deserve special mention as amateur musicians. One of them, Sir Nicholas L'Estrange (1603–55), amassed a music library, several volumes from which still survive (in GB-Lbl, Lcm, Och, US-Cn). Apart from copying pieces himself, he fastidiously collated his music with other copies belonging to his acquaintances, provided indexes, commissioned scores and annotated the partbooks with directions for performance and other valuable information. His work has been of inestimable value to 20th-century scholars. The other son, Roger L'Estrange (1616–1704), taught by Thomas Brewer, was noted for his skill as a player of the bass viol: an anecdote in his Truth and Loyalty Vindicated (London, 1662) shows that he was able to play at sight with professional musicians such as John Hingeston. As Licenser of the Press he wrote commendations for the publications of Christopher Simpson.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P.J. Willetts: 'Sir Nicholas Le Strange and John Jenkins', ML, xlii (1961), 30–43
P.J. Willetts: 'Sir Nicholas Le Strange's Collection of Masque Music', British Museum Quarterly, xxix (1965), 79–81
J.T. Johnson: 'How to "Humour" John Jenkins' Three-Part Dances: Performance Directions in a Newberry Library MS', JAMS, xx (1967), 197–208
A. Ashbee: 'A Further Look at Some of the Le Strange Manuscripts', Chelys, v (1973–4), 24–41

ANDREW ASHBEE

Le Sueur [Lesueur], Jean-François (b Drucat-Plessiel, nr Abbeville, 15 Feb 1760; d Paris, 6 Oct 1837). French composer and writer on music. He was one of the most prominent French musicians during the Revolution, the Empire and the Restoration, distinguishing himself primarily as a composer of operas and religious music.

1. Life. 2. Achievements and influence.

1. Life. He came from a background of modest Picardy peasants and seems to have had no family connections (despite his own claims) with the 17th-century French painter Eustache Le Sueur. He showed musical talent at an early age, which led his family to send him to the choir schools of Abbeville and Amiens. He left Amiens in 1776 and spent the next ten years as a choirmaster at various provincial choir schools. While in Sées, he was summoned to Paris for a few months as assistant choirmaster at the church of the Holy Innocents. It was during his stay in the capital that he had lessons in harmony and composition with the Abbé Nicolas Roze, who remained one of his closest friends.

Le Sueur's first appointments were as choirmaster of St Etienne in Dijon, St Julien in Le Mans and St Martin in Tours. He aroused the hostility of the chapter in Tours by attempting to introduce novel musical practices in the church; shortly afterwards this involved him in still more serious difficulties at Notre Dame in Paris. During this time he made his mark as a composer with performances of his grands motets at the Concert Spirituel, 1782–6. He returned to the church of the Holy Innocents as choirmaster in 1784, and two years later became choirmaster of Notre Dame. He was to remain there only a year, time enough to cause a great stir by presenting what he called his 'reform of sacred music'. By introducing 'imitative' (i.e. essentially theatrical) music into church and by taking great liberties with Latin texts, including the Ordinary of the Mass, he incurred the wrath of the clergy. All his scores of this period are lost, but the young composer subsequently published several treatises that provide a good idea of his intentions.

At about the same time Le Sueur, who had hitherto restricted himself to sacred music, turned to opera. With the help and advice of Sacchini, then in Paris, he undertook the composition of Télémaque. The work was not performed until 1796, and then in a modified and adapted version with additional spoken dialogue.

After spending a number of years in seclusion not far from Paris, Le Sueur reappeared on the scene during the Revolution. He made his début as an opera composer at the Théâtre Feydeau in 1793 with La caverne. Its success placed him, together with Méhul and Cherubini, firmly in the public's attention during the Revolution. At the same time he became equally well known for his ten hymns, performed at the great festivals of the Revolution. His contemporaries, most notably Napoleon, particularly admired his Chant du Ier vendémiaire an IX, performed at the Hôtel des Invalides by four orchestras and four choirs, a work in which the composer made remarkable use of the effects of acoustic spatialization. There followed two more operas, Paul et Virginie and Télémaque, which were also given successful performances at the Théâtre Feydeau. Le Sueur was associated with the Institut National de Musique (the forerunner of the Paris Conservatoire) from 1793; when the Conservatoire opened in 1795 he became one of the inspectors of teaching. After a disagreement with the Conservatoire's director, Bernard Sarrette, he left in 1802, though not before he had eloquently defended himself in his Lettre en réponse à Guillard.

1. Jean-François Le Sueur: engraving

In a difficult situation both materially and morally, Le Sueur was saved by Napoleon, who in 1804 appointed him Paisiello's successor as director of the Tuileries Chapel, which had been restored in 1802. He held this position on his own during the Empire; during the Restoration he shared it first with Martini (until his death in 1816) and then with Cherubini until 1830, when the royal chapel was closed down. It was at the start of this new period in his life that he gained his greatest triumph with Ossian, ou Les bardes. Although it is an uneven work certain scenes undoubtedly brought a breath of fresh air to the French musical stage, foreshadowing the birth of the Romantic sensibility. In this sense the piece, which did not long survive the Napoleonic era (it was last performed in 1817), provides an important date in the history of French opera. Another opera, La mort d'Adam, adapted from Klopstock's play, failed at the Opéra in 1809. He also collaborated (no doubt to a very minor degree) in two occasional works of musical drama at the Opéra in 1807, L'inauguration du temple de la victoire and Le triomphe de Trajan, most of the music being written by the composer Louis-Luc Loiseau de Persuis. The second work, wholly devoted to an apologia for the ruler and his regime and conjuring up Roman antiquity, with processions of chariots on stage, was an outstanding success and remained popular even under the restored monarchy. His last opera, Alexandre à Babylone, was never performed.

From 1 January 1818 until his death Le Sueur taught composition at the Conservatoire. After the Tuileries Chapel was closed in 1830 he devoted himself to long labours of erudition and compilation, covering innumerable folios with his delicate, cramped handwriting; a few of these have survived, including numerous works on the history of ancient and medieval music, interspersed with moral, religious and philosophical thoughts. At this time, too, he resumed work on his vast Histoire de la musique, which had been announced as early as 1810 but was never published; the manuscript is lost.

2. ACHIEVEMENTS AND INFLUENCE. The substance of Le Sueur's ideas on theory and history is found in his four-volume Exposé d'une musique (1787). Here the young musician gave evidence of a resolute and sometimes bold intellect, showing himself a true successor to the great 18th-century theorists, above all Rousseau. He took up some of the major aesthetic problems of imitation. For Le Sueur, the essential aim of music is imitation of nature or human passions; divorced from a literary text, music loses nearly all its meaning. The function of imitation is not, he considered, to make a literal copy of an object, but to evoke in the soul of the listener what he called 'the sensations which one experiences in looking at an object' (following along these lines, Rousseau had claimed that 'even silence could be depicted by sounds'). Thus in the 'Hymn of the Indian Savages' in Act 1 of Paul et Virginie, the depiction of the sunrise is achieved by a passage consisting almost exclusively of simple triads that produce a curious, almost religious effect of freshness and peace. This theory of imitation, when interpreted strictly, implies a condemnation of instrumental music which affected many French composers and may explain Le Sueur's exclusive interest in vocal music.

The discussion of Greek music in the Exposé went no further than the views of the 18th-century theorists, but Le Sueur attempted to discover the rhythms of ancient poetry in French versification, thus reviving an old idea of the poets of the Pléiade. He also claimed to have introduced Greek rhythms into his music (particularly in Télémaque), for instance hexameters, in which a crotchet was equivalent to a long syllable and a quaver to a short.

Of Le Sueur's three operas performed at the Théâtre Feydeau, La caverne is undoubtedly the most original. A modern work for its period, it breaks with the then sacrosanct principle whereby the stylistic features of different genres were kept separate: in the middle of a sombre and violent drama there are several ariettes in the purest opéra comique tradition. The work was extremely successful at the time of the Terror (fig.2), and was subsequently produced in translation in several European countries.

In some ways Paul et Virginie, and above all Télémaque, originally intended for the Opéra on the eve of the Revolution, are more traditional, but they still display several characteristic features of Le Sueur's musical style: harmonic asperities, and jarring and rather harsh melodies, together with an expressive tremor and constant tension which prove his incontestable dramatic talent. Ossian, ou Les bardes triumphed as much through circumstance (the presence of the Emperor Napoleon at its second performance, the current taste for things

2. Title-page of the full score of Le Sueur's 'La caverne' (Paris: Jean-Henri Naderman, 1793)

'Ossianic', the magnificence of the stage designs; fig.3) as through the musical quality of the work itself, which is somewhat frigid and conventional. La mort d'Adam, however, failed at the Opéra in 1809 and was subsequently ignored. Despite its static dramatic action, the opera contains several great passages of a remarkable religio-dramatic character. Among them is the finale of the third act, entirely of Le Sueur's invention, conjuring up a grand epic vision of the struggle between Satan and God for Adam's soul. Alexandre à Babylone was never produced, despite the composer's efforts and, after his death, those of his wife. Some historians have even described it as lost. In fact Le Sueur's widow had the score engraved after his death, though only a few copies are still extant. In this last opera the composer's style broadened out; the orchestral writing is both more brilliant and more refined, and the choruses have a new musical and dramatic importance. Le Sueur was obviously influenced by Spontini's great French masterpieces, La vestale and in particular Fernand Cortez. Alexandre à Babylone easily bears comparison with Spontini's later work, Olimpie.

For 25 years Le Sueur was considered one of the masters of French church music. At a time when opera was suffering a period of decline, the Tuileries Chapel, as even foreign writers agreed, shone with exceptional brilliance, owing to the work of Le Sueur and Cherubini. Le Sueur's sacred music is extremely simple in style. There are few modulations (he claimed that frequent modulations could not be distinctly perceived in cathedral acoustics), few fugues, and a deliberate use of simple, sometimes barren harmonies, with the voices often doubled at the octave. Nevertheless, there is enormous power and skill in his choral writing and much charm in his melodies; it is music which was not designed to be studied, but to be heard in the surroundings for which it was intended. Between 1826 and 1841, 17 volumes of Le Sueur's church music were published; unfortunately, these scores do not accurately reflect the form in which the works were performed at the Tuileries Chapel. In preparing these volumes, he combined several of his own works, and recomposed by stringing the works together end to end. The manuscripts of his works, in their original form, are extant, however, and reveal that there were 29 major sacred works (masses, oratorios, motets) and 30 shorter pieces, including some sections not in the printed volumes.

Le Sueur's musical influence on his pupils was less than has sometimes been maintained, certainly by Fouque as far as Berlioz is concerned. That his effect was certainly strong, however, is shown in the fact that between 1822 and 1839, 12 of the 18 winners of the Prix de Rome were, or had been, his pupils; these included Berlioz, Ambroise Thomas and Gounod. His support and encouragement of

3. Costume designs by Jean-Simon Berthélémy for the original production of Le Sueur's 'Ossian, ou Les bardes', Paris Opéra, 1804; pen and ink with wash (Bibliothèque et Musée de l'Opéra, Paris)

Berlioz in the early years was received gratefully and always remembered, but once Berlioz had matured and gained command over his talent, he seems to have been vividly conscious of his former teacher's limitations and the weaknesses of his instruction: Le Sueur, in fact, played only a modest part in forming Berlioz's musical personality.

Although Le Sueur was not a prolific composer and limited himself virtually to opera and sacred music, he was able to forge a strong personal style. He had been a modernist in his youth, before the years of the Revolution, but subsequently allowed himself to become confined within unduly narrow principles. Persuaded by Berlioz to hear Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, he was on his own admission 'moved and disturbed'; by the next day he had recovered the balance that he regarded as a fundamental artistic canon and declared that 'music like that ought not to be written'. He remained essentially untouched by the Romantic movement, except in its early and specifically French aspect, and suspected little of the vast musical revolution that had already been set in motion in Germany.

WORKS

Catalogue: J.-F. Le Sueur: a Thematic Catalogue of his Complete Works, ed. J. Mongrédien (New York, 1980)

STAGE

all first performed and published in Paris

La caverne (drame lyrique, 3, P. Dercy [Palat], after A.-R. Le Sage: Gil Blas de Santillane), OC (Feydeau), 16 Feb 1793, *F-Pim, *Po; (1794/*R*1986 in FO, lxxiv)

Paul et Virginie, ou Le temple de la vertu (oc, 3, A. du Congé Dubreuil, after B. de Saint-Pierre), OC (Feydeau), 13 Jan 1794 (1796)

Télémaque (tragédie lyrique, 3, Dercy), OC (Feydeau), 11 May 1796 (*c*1796–1802)

Ossian, ou Les bardes (opéra, 5, Dercy, rev. J.-M. Deschamps), Opéra, 10 July 1804, *D-Bsb, *F-Po; (*c*1804–5/*R*1979 in ERO, xxxvii)

Le triomphe de Trajan (tragédie lyrique, 3, J. Esmenard), Opéra, 23 Oct 1807, Po, collab. L.-L. de Persuis

La mort d'Adam (tragédie lyrique religieuse, 3, N.-F. Guillard, after F.G. Klopstock), Opéra, 21 March 1809, *Po; (1822)

Alexandre à Babylone, 1814 (opéra, 3, Baour-Lormian), unperf., Pn; (*c*1859–60)

OTHER WORKS

*c*60 sacred pieces, incl. orats, masses, motets, psalms and cants., 17 bks pubd (Paris, 1826–41), other works, F-Pn

*c*10 hymns and odes for Revolutionary celebrations, 1794–1802

A few songs and solfège exercises

WRITINGS

Exposé d'une musique une, imitative et particulière à chaque solemnité (Paris, 1787)

Lettre en réponse à Guillard sur l'opéra de La mort d'Adam (Paris, 1801)

'Observations sur les grandes parties de la musique et de la poésie chantée', Odes d'Anacréon, trans. J.-B. Gail (Paris, 3/1799)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BerliozM

F. Lamy: Jean-François Le Sueur (1760–1837) (Paris, 1912)

W. Buschkötter: 'Jean François Le Sueur', SIMG, xiv (1912–13), 58–154

M. Herman: The Sacred Music of Jean-François Le Sueur: a Musical and Biographical Source Study (diss., U. of Michigan, 1964)

J. Coutts: Jean-François Le Sueur: a Study of the Composer and Five of his Operas (diss., U. of Cardiff, 1966)

W. Dean: 'Opera under the French Revolution', PRMA, xciv (1967–8), 77–96

J. Mongrédien: 'La musique du sacre de Napoléon', RdM, liv (1968), 137–74

J. Mongrédien: 'La musique aux fêtes du sacre de Charles X', RMFC, x (1970), 87–100

O.F. Saloman: Aspects of 'Gluckian' Operatic Thought and Practice in France: the Musico-Dramatic Vision of Le Sueur and La Cépède (1785–1809) in Relation to Aesthetic and Critical Tradition (diss., Columbia U., 1970)

O.F. Saloman: 'The Orchestra in Le Sueur's Musical Aesthetics', MQ, lx (1974), 616–24

O.F. Saloman: 'La Cépède's "La poétique de la musique" and Le Sueur', AcM, xlvii (1975), 144–54

D. Charlton: 'Ossian, Le Sueur and Opera', SMA, xi (1977), 37–48

J. Mongrédien: Jean-François Le Sueur: contribution à l'étude d'un demi-siècle de musique française (1780–1830) (Berne, 1980)

C. Keith: The Operas of Jean-François Le Sueur (diss., U. of Cincinnati, 1981)

T. Hirsbrunner: 'Zur Dramaturgie der Oper La caverne von Jean-François Lesueur', Aufklärungen: Studien zur deutsch-französischen Musikgeschichte: Saarbrücken 1981 [with Fr. summary], 128–30

H. Smither: 'The Concept of Oratorio in the Music and Writings of Jean-François Le Sueur', IMSCR XIII: Strasbourg 1982, 602–21

G. Buschmeier: Die Entwicklung von Arie und Szene in der französischen Oper von Gluck bis Spontini (Tutzing, 1991)

D. Charlton: French Opera 1730–1830: Meaning and Media (Aldershot, 1999)

JEAN MONGRÉDIEN

Lesung (Sundanese lisung). Javanese term (Sundanese: lisung), also found in Sulawesi, for a long rice-stamping trough beaten with heavy poles of coconut palm or other wood by women who make music while stamping the husks off rice grain. In Minangkabau, West Sumatra, it is called a lasuang and in Burai, South Sumatra, a cintuk. The trough is usually made of wood, such as jackfruit wood, which produces a clear tone when beaten. By striking the edges and bottom of oblong or round holes cut in the trough, sounds of varying pitch and timbre are produced in complex interlocking rhythms. In Java, these rhythms are distinguished by three stamping pressures: light, medium and heavy. The pieces are given picturesque and evocative titles. The lesung was formerly used in Java in the gamelan kethoprak. Since World War II rice-husking machines have increasingly replaced traditional methods, and round-the-clock rice-stamping parties at harvest-time, during solar and lunar eclipses and for circumcision celebrations have died out. In Minangkabau lasuang troughs often had seven holes, and seven women used to play lasuang music, but the only remnant of this tradition is the gandang lasuang ensemble, which comprises a lasuang, talempong jao and drum (e.g. a dol). In Aceh province, a small round trough resembling those of mainland South-east Asia is used by each rice-stamper. In Burai, South Sumatra, cintuk have two holes played by four women; low-pitched sounds are produced inside the holes and high-pitched ones on top of the trough.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Kunst: De toonkunst van Java (The Hague, 1934; Eng. trans., rev. 2/1943, enlarged 3/1973)

M.J. Kartomi: 'Music and Trance in Central Java', EthM, xvii (1973), 201–7

MARGARET J. KARTOMI

Lesur, Daniel Jean Yves. See DANIEL-LESUR.

Lesure, François(-Marie) (b Paris, 23 May 1923). French musicologist and librarian. He took a degree in history at the Sorbonne (1946) and also studied at the Conservatoire, at the Ecole Nationale des Chartes (diploma as an archivist-palaeographer, 1950), and at the Ecole Pratique des Hautes-Etudes (diploma, 1948). He was a librarian in the music department of the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris for 20 years before becoming its head keeper in 1970, and was responsible for arranging a number of exhibitions at the Bibliothèque Nationale (Mozart, 1956; Debussy, 1962; Berlioz, 1969) and in Lisbon and Rome. He was professor of musicology at the Free University of Brussels (1964–77), and in 1973 he succeeded Solange Corbin as director of studies at the Ecole Pratique des Hautes-Etudes.

Lesure's research has been concerned principally with historical musicology, the sociology of music, 16th-century French music, Debussy and bibliography in all periods; he is co-author (with G. Thibault) of the bibliographies of the 16th-century musical editions brought out by the French publishers Du Chemin and Le Roy & Ballard, and author of the bibliography of the 18th-century musical editions of the publishers Estienne Roger and M.-C. Le Cène. He was in charge of the secretariat of RISM (1953–67) and edited the volumes devoted to printed collections of the 16th and 17th centuries, the printed collections of the 18th century and printed writings about music. He is editor of Le Pupitre, a collection of music published by Heugel (Paris, 1967–), and of Domaine Musicologique, a collection of monographs (Paris, 1986–). All his work bears the mark of his training both as a historian and as an archivist, a training which ensures his punctiliousness with documents and the value of his research. He was president of the Société Française de Musicologie from 1971 to 1974 and from 1988 to 1991, and is editor-in-chief of Debussy's Oeuvres complètes. The Festschrift Musiques, signes, images: liber amicorum François Lesure, ed. J.-M. Fauquet (Geneva, 1988) was published to mark his 65th birthday.

WRITINGS

'Claude Goudimel, étudiant, correcteur et éditeur parisien', MD, ii (1948), 225–30 with D.P. Walker: 'Claude Le Jeune and musique mesurée', MD, iii (1949), 151–70
'Pierre Attaingnant: notes et documents', MD, iii (1949), 33–40
'Réflexions sur l'origine du concert parisien', Polyphonie, v (1949), 47–51
'La guitare en France au XVIe siècle', MD, iv (1950), 187–95
'Autour de Clément Marot et de ses musiciens', RdM, xxx (1951), 109–19
'Clément Janequin: recherches sur sa vie et son oeuvre', MD, v (1951), 157–93 with G. Thibault: 'Bibliographie des éditions musicales publiées par Nicolas du Chemin (1549–1576)', AnnM, i (1953), 269–373; iv (1956), 251–3; vi (1958–63), 403–6
'La communauté des joueurs d'instruments au XVIe siècle', Revue historique de droit français et étranger, 4th ser., xxxi (1953), 79–109
'Eléments populaires dans la chanson française au début du XVIe siècle', Musique et poésie au XVIe siècle: Paris 1953, 169–84
'Marin Marais: sa carrière, sa famille', RBM, vii (1953), 129–36
'Musicologie et sociologie', ReM, no.221 (1953), 4–11
'La facture instrumentale à Paris au seizième siècle', GSJ, vii (1954), 11–52
'La musique religieuse française au XVIe siècle', ReM, no.222 (1954), 44–61
'Les orchestres populaires à Paris vers la fin du XVIe siècle', RdM, xxxvi (1954), 39–54
ed.: La Renaissance dans les provinces du nord: Arras 1954 with G. Thibault: Bibliographie des éditions d'Adrian Le Roy et Robert Ballard (1551–1598) (Paris, 1955); suppl., RdM, xl (1957), 166–72
'Danses et chansons à danser au début du XVIe siècle', Recueil de travaux offert à M. Clovis Brunel, ii (Paris, 1955), 176–84
Musicians and Poets of the French Renaissance (New York, 1955)
'Le recueil de ballets de Michel Henry (vers 1620)', Les fêtes de la Renaissance [I]: Royaumont 1955, 205–19
'Le traité des instruments de musique de Pierre Trichet', AnnM, iii (1955), 283–387; iv (1956), 175–248; pubd separately (Neuilly-sur-Seine, 1957, 2/1978; Eng. trans., 1973)
'Mozartiana gallica', RdM, xxxviii (1956), 115–24
'Un musicien d'Hippolyte d'Este: Pierre Sandrin', CHM, ii (1956–7), 245–50
Introduction to G. Morlaye: Psaumes de Pierre Certon réduits pour chant et luth, ed. R. de Morcourt (Paris, 1957)
'Recherches sur les luthistes parisiens à l'époque de Louis XIII', Le luth et sa musique: Neuilly-sur-Seine 1957, 209–23 with R. de Morcourt: 'G.P. Paladino et son "Premier livre" de luth (1560)', RdM, xlii (1958), 170–83
'La musicologie en France depuis 1945', AcM, xxx (1958), 3–17 with N. Bridgman: 'Une anthologie "historique" de la fin du XVIe siècle: le manuscrit Bourdeney', Miscelánea en homenaje a Monseñor Higinio Anglés (Barcelona, 1958–61), 161–72 ed.: Recueils imprimés, XVIe et XVIIe siècles, RISM, B/I/1 (1960)
'Une querelle sur le jeu de la viole en 1688: Jean Rousseau contre Demachy', RdM, xlvi (1960), 181–99
'Pour une sociologie historique des faits musicaux', IMSCR VIII: New York 1961, i, 333–45
ed.: Claude Debussy: textes et documents inédits (Paris, 1962) [incl. 'Debussy de 1883 à 1885 d'après la correspondance de Paul Vidal à Henriette Fuchs', 98–101; 'Bibliographie debussyste', 129–43]
Introduction to M. Mersenne: Harmonie universelle (Paris, 1636) (Paris, 1963) [facs. edn]
ed.: Recueils imprimés, XVIIIe siècle, RISM, B/II (1964)
Musica e società (Milan, 1966; Eng., trans., 1968, as Music and Art in Society)
